GENERAL HOP REPORT.

ENGLISH MARKETS AND PROSPECTS

The Kentish country, of Sept. 20 said: The hop harvest now is reported to be practically over. In East Kent and the Weald the picking will be entirely completed by Friday or the latest by Saturday. In the Farnham district the work may be extended until the early part of next week, but generally speaking the ingathering is finished. A few planters in Sussex have enough hops stalking the poles to keep their pickers employed until the end of next week, but if hops continue to be off at the rate they have done the whole lot remaining will not be picked. In the Worcester district the pickers will finish up by the end of the present week. There is very little more to be said with regard to the crop. In some places the late sorts have kept wonderfully well coming perfectly green to the last and down to yesterday; while in others they have gone off very brown, that is, as we said would be the case, the brown hops where there was no disease, have been harvested, and will become the worse for ordinary brewing purposes by reason of their bad color. It is the diseased hops and the "flyers" that have been left on the poles; these constitute some thousands of hundred-weights, but nothing like the enormous quantity arrived at, without apparently any data whatever, by a Canterbury contemporary. We still adhere to our last estimate of the total yield throughout the country—namely, between 615,000 and 650,000 cwt.—the higher figure being the more probable.

It is found now that the whole crop is practically gathered in that the bulk of Worcester hops consists of medium quality only, the proportion of choice being smaller than was expected. In regard to the Farnham district there is a very large proportion of brown and diseased hops, but there are some splendid samples here and there.

We can report no improvement in the trade. Merchants will only entertain good medium to choice samples, and for these they decline to give more than £3 10s. to £5 5s. per cwt. There are already nearly 100,000 pockets in the Borough, and of these, it is stated by the best judges, the bulk is made up of inferior quality. The largest growths of East Kent are now being sent to the market, and these, it is believed, will show much better quality and condition. Most growers appear to be anxious to keep over their bright colory ones to see whether the prices improve. A planter near Canterbury on Friday sold 100 pockets of his growth—not the best portion—at an average of nearly £5 per cwt. We have heard of one lot of East Kents (Wingham district) being sold the other day at an average of £5 7s. 6d. per cwt., but generally speaking the top average price is £5 5s. Low and inferior hops are being pressed for sale, but it is difficult to find buyers for them. A report is current that less than £1 per cwt. has been accepted for discolored samples in the Borough. On Monday a whole growth of East Kent ("wild hops") were sold at £5 5s. per cwt., and yesterday a large and successful planter from the Canterbury district went up to the Borough with his samples and a mind definitely made up to ask £5 12s. per cwt. all round.

Don't trifle with any Throat or Lung Disease. If you have a Cough or Cold, or the children are threatened with Croupor Whooping Cough, use Acker's English Remedy and prevent further trouble. It is a positive cure, and we guarantee it. Price 10 and 50c. F. H. Coggeshall, Druggist.

A Chinese "Church" in New York.

Pedestrians up and down Chatham street, or, as it is now known, Park row, have noticed an unusually large number of Chinamen arrayed in holiday attire passing in and out of the narrow hallway of 202 Mott street. It bears the name of "Joss," and tells the devoutly inclined Celestials that the temple is up-stairs. The altar is of carved ebony, practically a large frame for the picture of Joss and his attendant deities, executed on satin in the most elaborate style of Chinese art, and a heavy table for holding the incense burners and votive offerings. The chairs and tables are in the same style of rich Oriental carving and the room is lighted by carved lanterns hanging from the ceiling. The walls are hung with Chinese mottoes, the air is heavy with incense and it is hard to believe that we are in New York and not in Cathay.

I noticed a large proportion of the worshipers would come in, make their obeisance to the altar, burn a few prayer-sticks and go out. Some, however, remained a longer time and gave the priest sums varying from 25 cents to $1.00. In response to my inquiry the old priest said: "A man can say all that he wants to in three minutes, so he have three minutes for nothing; if he have a good deal to say he pay 25 cents for next three minutes, 50 for next three, and so on. No good to pray too long." Then he added after a moment's reflection: "In Melican church man talks an hour and everybody pray two hours or two hours and half, then make collection beg to pay minister. Chinese way, 500 or 600 people pray two hours; we make $3,000 or $3,000." The system strikes me as a good one. It pays the expenses of the temple and discourages garrulity. With its dingy exterior the Chinese of New York have now one of the most richly furnished places of worship in the city.—Allan Forman in Chicago Tribune.

A Novel Feminine Freak.

A late feminine freak has the merit of being strictly novel and deliciously absurd. There is a young English miniature painter in this city who has gained a great reputation among fashionable women, not for making their charming faces immortal upon ivory; not for sending them down as precious heirlooms of loveliness to admiring great-grandchildren, who will believe firmly in the rose bloom of their pictured skins and wonder at their quaint coiffures and picturesque gowns. He reproduces them piecemeal.

In his study are ovals of ivory upon which is a mass of crinkled auburn hair for example, or a Cupid's bow of a mouth of smooth scarlet loveliness, or a satiny, crumpled pink ear, and best and most beautiful of all, eyes of hue, shape and expression. These are not combined, but are separate pictures. A woman who has some exquisite feature goes to him and has it preserved for her lover or her husband. Eyes are the favorites, however, and among those of well-known women he has in his collection is that of Mrs. Barrios, the widow of the late president of Guatemala. They do not have the pair painted even, but just the one melting eye with the fringes surrounding it and the arch above. Mme. Barrios' eye is large, almond-shaped and of velvety blackness, with a thick fringe of lashes and a brow as clear and fine as if drawn with a pen.—New York World.

A Great Victory

A Terrible Case of Scrofula Cured by

Hood's Sarsaparilla

"In the winter of 1879 I was attacked with Scrofula in one of the most aggravating forms. At one time I had no less than thirteen large abscesses over and around my neck and throat, continually oozing an offensive mass of bloody matter disgusting to behold, and almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible to fully describe my sufferings, as the case was complicated with Chronic Catarrh. After three years of misery, having been treated by three physicians, I was worse than ever. Finally, on the recommendation of W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. And now, after having taken twelve bottles, within the last twelve months, the scrofulous eruptions have entirely ceased, and the abscesses have all disappeared, except the unsightly scars, which are daily becoming smaller by degrees, and beautifully less. I do not know what it may have done for others, but I do know that in my case, Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved an effective specific indeed. As an evidence of my gratitude I send these facts unsolicited, and I am ready to verify the authenticity of this cure, by personal correspondence with any one who doubts it." CHARLES A. ROBERTS, East Wilson, N. Y.

This statement is confirmed by W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, N. Y., who calls the cure a great victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Send for book giving statements of many cures.

QUEER POCKET-PIECES.

The Pieces Which Most People Have for Odd or Historic Coins.

"If I had the value of the odd coins that are worn as ornaments and carried as pocket-pieces by New Yorkers I'd be a rich man." So said an old and well-known numismatist to a New York reporter. Producing a pencil and paper he revealed the fact that fully $300,000 worth of gold and silver, minted into coin by the various governments of the earth, are used as jewels and lucky pieces. An element of poetry, the dealer said, there was in the old superstitions ideas. Young girls however, are the best customers. There was a time, when the bangle craze was at its height, when a great deal was done in small pieces, many dimes and quarters. Italians, Frenchmen and Spaniards wear as mementos and souvenirs the most valuable coins. Americans keep pennies and another piece of less value. Numbers of Italian fruit-pickers wear a golden coin of value suspended around the neck. Many quaint looking coins are kept by business and professional men as absolutely none of its fortunate of some extent this idea. I could name some men and for that matter some women, whom you would be surprised to learn carried pocket pieces."

"Who?"

"For one, A. T. Stewart. During his life he carried for at least thirty-five years an old Spanish dollar. I heard that it was the first piece of money he ever earned in trade. Mrs. Stewart has the piece now, and keeps it sacredly.

The late Mrs. Morgan, also as the coin dealer averred, was fond of wearing gold coins as ornaments. At one time she had in her possession an elegant necklace made of Spanish coins, the dates of which ranged from 1700 to 1700. Among her customers were a number of Wall street men, bankers and brokers. One of the best known members of the Stock Exchange wears a twenty-dollar gold piece on his watch-chain, two ten-dollar pieces on his cuff-buttons, and three eight-dollar pieces as shirt-studs.

"A short time ago," said the dealer, laughing, "a funny thing happened. I was sitting in my office when a foreigner, apparently a Frenchman, entered. He took a large gold coin from his pocket, and, dropping it on the counter, asked its value. I examined it critically, sounded it and found it was perfect, except a trifle light. He laughed at my perplexity, took it, and, snap! opened it like an oyster. In the coin were two photographs. I offered him $50 for it, but he refused.

REVERSE.

The coin had, as the dealer said, been skillfully sawed in two, dug out and put together so closely that the cut could not be seen. Springs of the most delicate steel held it together.

A well-known merchant who is a prominent figure in the dry-goods trade, wears a ten-dollar gold piece that once saved his life. He was Lieutenant in the war, and fought in many battles. When the Union army was led into the terrible struggle known as the Battle of the Wilderness the young Lieutenant, in charge of a company, followed. In the second day's fight a bullet struck him squarely in the left side. He reeled, fell and jumped to his feet. A stinging sensation directly over his heart made him fear that he was mortally wounded. He ripped open his vest and examined the spot. Between the vest and suspender he found a half eagle, bent almost double. The coin he had placed in the small leathern pocket-book just before the fight. It saved his life, and was too much battered to be used as a legal tender.

The heavy gold piece that Mr. Morosini has worn for many years on his watch-chain is also said to have a history. It is an Italian coin, much defaced with wear, and almost as large as a $20 piece. It is said to be an heirloom in the Morosini family.

TOLD ABOUT SHERIDAN SHOOK.

Pen Picture of a Power in Politics Drawn by Ames J. Cummings.

Sheridan Shook applies business methods to politics. He remains under cover sometimes for years, watching the situation like a Wall street speculator. When he does come to the front he usually wins. He backs his judgment with his money, and has won large sums in election wagers. He always keeps his head. No tidal wave of enthusiasm ever carries him from his feet. He rarely opens his mouth, and when he does open it, opens it only to tried and intimate friends. He has ideas of his own and frequently impresses them upon the party organization without reference to the plans of putative leaders. In making political deals he equals Thurlow Weed. He makes no mistake in his men and he is never cheated. He has held office twice, once as Supervisor and again as Collector of Internal Revenues in the richest districts in the United States. From this he was ousted through the machinations of Joshua F. Bailey, a phariasical reformer, who conceded him. Within a year afterwards Bailey fled to Brazil, a defaulter to the extent of $800,000. This was under Grant's administration. Shook has a long memory and he never forgets his friends. He turned up in Chicago in 1880 dead against the third-term men, and the defeat of Grant was partly due to his effort.

When in the city, Shed, as his friends call him, puts up at the Morton House. The Union Square Theatre, which he built and which he retains, is in the same building. In summer he spends much of his time on a magnificent farm near Kinderhook. He manages the farm himself and is as good a farmer as he is a politician. His farm is the gem of Columbia county. His business interests frequently call him to the city. At such times he may be seen at night seated at a little table in the barroom of his hotel, surrounded by friends. All talk but Shook. He listens with a chip hat squarely planted on his head and answers in monosyllables. Occasionally he smiles, but never laughs outright. He is bald-headed, and he wears a heavy black moustache. His portly figure and keen, black eyes would attract attention almost anywhere. He is even more deliberate in movement than he is in speech. His friends idolize him, and he implicitly trusts them. How he reposes his trust in a business was shown recently. For fifteen years he has been a partner of one of the largest breweries in the city. His percentage of the profits was sent to him regularly every month. Repeatedly his partner urged him to visit the establishment, but he never found time. The other day, however, he was out driving with a friend. Their cigars went out. Neither of them had a match. Shook looked up. They were passing his brewery.

"Wait a moment," he said, handing the reins to his companion. "I'll go in and get one."

He stalked into the office and went behind the railing. The old Scotch clerk, who had kept the books for years, was dumbfounded.

"I want a match," Shed said in a quiet tone.

"Weel, dom it, go to a grocery and get one," was the indignant reply, "and clear out of here, or I'll call the police, I never saw such assurance."

Shed never changed a muscle. He quietly said, I'm Mr. Shook," and the Scotchman nearly fell of from his seat in terror. He supplied him with matches and profuse apologies, and asked him whether he would not like to be shown over the brewery.

"Not now," was the answer. "I haven't time." And he lighted his cigar and rejoined his friend.

John Morrisey greatly appreciated Shook's friendship and sound judgment. One night Shed, in talking with him, referred to his brewing business.

"What do you know about your business?" John asked. "I'll bet you a basket of wine that you can't tell where the brewery stands."

"The bet is taken," Shook replied, in a quiet tone. "The brewery is on the corner of Nineteenth and Greenwich streets. Open the basket, John."

"Hold on," said Morrisey. "What's the street number?"

Shed was nonplussed. He confessed his ignorance without smiling, and ordered the wine for all present. Yet he had received fully half a million profits from that same brewery.
