THE WATERMAN'S ARMS

This Public House was built next door to the Bulls Head around 1845. In this house lived the only local Waterman of his era, named William Hill. Hill let out boats for hire and went every day to London in a ferry to carry goods backwards and forwards for the inhabitants of the Parish. The waterman's trade was materially diminished through the carriers carts which used to do runs between Richmond and Mortlake. On Hill's death no one took up his business, which had really died out. In the 17th and 18th centuries a number of Barnes men are recorded as Bargemasters or Watermen. The Waterman's Arms is a reminder of this one-time important local occupation, standing opposite the position of a former landing stage.
