Dear Bernice and Jack,

Bernice, you're pretty fast on the typewriter for only one week--heck, I can't even think that many words per minute, let alone type them.

Boy! Sure hope we are to be invaded by researchers, students and the McGee's. I think it would be wonderful and Stoney said, "Hell, yes! I'd would be glad to guide, especially for money." Besides that, we felt our visit was too short.

This note is going to be short also, we are getting ready to return to the ranch. Went on my Cowbelle ride again, it was held at Hannegan's Meadows up in the White Mts, the same weekend it stormed everywhere. We like to froze our fannies--it snowed, sleeted, rained, and the wind blew. But noone wanted to be first to say "lets Quit" so--went to ride and did. Am really just getting thawed out. Everyone laughed when I put rocks in the fire to warm for my bed, but when I went to get the three I had put in, there wasn't but one left and the second night that fire looked like a rock cairn.

Mr. Roeser's name is the one who gave me a copy of the one stone with the heart on it. He said Charlie Miller said he helped brush dirt out of it; however, Charlie could have exaggerated. Mr. Roeser did have a copy and asked Charlie why he didn't copy the figures down on the heart--but Charlie said he figured he knew just where to look, and was sure he didn't need them.

I have a wild hunch about Mr Marlow, just tell me if I'm right or wrong--Is he dark haired and eyed, with smooth complexion and rather round face. One black eye rolls way back--his left, I think--and does he have a grey weimariner dog? Never met the man, but have seen him twice in two widely separated places--The doctor's office in Scottsdale and at Apache Jct. Don't ask me why I picked him, except you said he had a noticeable affliction.

Back to your talk to us about the stone maps and Mr. Marlow--me, and my big mouth--would have loved to hear whatever you could have related about their finds--think it extremely interesting.

Have to take Susan to town for an accordion I think I just bought--may even learn to play the thing.

will gather up your other letter and write a more concise and collected answer later. Not today, this week maybe.

Sincerely
