Clippings.

Utica, N. Y., Oct. 11, 1906—What will possibly result in a young girl passing through life deprived of sight occurred Monday, when Miss May Lewis of 72 Francis st., an operator of the Home Telephone Co., while sitting at her work, received a severe electric shock which rendered her unconscious for a time and left her totally blind. Miss Lewis says she had the receiver at her ear and was holding a connecting plug in the right hand when there suddenly passed before her eyes a flash and she knew no more until she regained consciousness sometime later. A sad phase of the case is that the girl's mother is a widow, whose husband died less than a year ago, leaving her with two children, of which the injured girl is the elder, and with scarcely any means, and their daughter, although very young, was striving by her labor to assist the mother in gaining the sustenance of life.

The List of Books is a complete index to the Books as published to this time. New Books will be added from time to time as new branches of the Lewis family are found. As soon as Books are proved parts of others they will be merged into the Books to which they belong. Each name is numbered when first printed and whenever the name is repeated this number follows in brackets. The abbreviations commonly used in genealogical work are used.

Book XXIV.

GEORGE LEWIS, England to Mass.
Chapter CDXI.

From Columbia's Mission.

IDA LEWIS.

Brave Woman! Noblest of your sex!
Your brave deeds known from shore
to shore,
By saving many precious lives,
Since then to enter Eden's door.
'Tis not in grandeur, nor in wealth,
To dare to die for short lived fame,
But 'mong the lowly, brave of heart,
We find some great, heroic name.
Our Ida Lewis dared to die
To save some mother's boy alone;
Her bosom heaving as the waves,
In pity for some helpless one.
Another Florence Nightingale, —
No thought her own dear life to save,
To live or die, the deed is done,
She minded not for blame or praise.
She launched the boat upon the waves,
Like Christian offered sacrifice,
For weal or woe defied the storm,
Unlike the coward soul that flies.
So Ida thought not of herself,
The rising waves nor howling storm;
Know all mankind the wide world o'er,
Great hearts in gentlest forms are born.
Grace Darling like, she braved the gale,
On mercy's errand swiftly sped,
Brave in life's storms or in the home,
And by a sterling nature led.
Ten thousand tongues repeat this tale,
Heroic souls her praise proclaim,

Where'er her honored name is known,
 Admiring people sound her fame.
 Now all true hearts her praises sound,
 Who modestly pursues her way,
 Well earned she bears unsought for fame,
 Moves in her sphere with gentle sway.
 Her star is upward and the meed
 Of praise for courage to none she yields,
 As sweet birds sing in morning time,
 So brave souls sing in elysian fields.

Chapter CDXII.

From The Outing Magazine.

"The Grace Darling of America," they have called her for nearly half a century, and many a gray-haired man and woman whose youthful blood was thrilled at the telling of her deeds has dimming recollections now, and would place Ida Lewis with the storied heroism of another day than this. But in the little living rooms of the light-house that overlooks the gay harbor of Newport an elderly woman of sweet and placid face, wrinkled though it is, knits through the long, long days, and tends her shining lamp, and tells the visitor of the commonplace incidents of her later years.

The row-boat in which she pulled to the rescue of so many drowning soldiers and sailors hangs in the boat-house by the light but she will launch it into no more winter seas and deadly ice-packs.

There was a time when as many as three thousand visitors invaded this little home of hers in one month, but now the visitors are few and far between, and she is contented to be left alone with her family and her duties. Her light-house home has been fairly rifled of souvenirs, her scrap-books and photographs and other fragmentary mementoes have been borrowed by reporters and other seekers after "material," who swore on their hearts they would bring them back, and then failed to keep their word.

The disposition of the gray-haired woman in the tower dwelling has not been soured by these penalties of notoriety, but it is only fair to say it has been slightly ruffled, and her faith in human nature at large is not quite as generous as it once was. If you can persuade her to talk of her younger days, while the waves on the rocks outside her walls lap, lap a monotone of accompaniment, it will soon be perceived that the borrowed title of "Grace Darling" is not adequate. It was not one feat of splendid heroism that made Ida Lewis famous. Her vigils and her rescues made years of her life continually lustrous.

She showed her pure metal when she was a slip of a girl of sixteen, living in the light with her father, the keeper. In a deadly blow of midwinter she forced her little boat to where she had heard the cries of drowning men, and brought to safety four men who had gone adrift and were fast perishing. It was a rare and shining deed, and young Ida Lewis was famous over-night.

It was no lucky endeavor, no flicker of courage, for shortly after she saved two boatmen, at imminent risk of her own life. Later came the rescue of two soldiers crossing the ice from Fort Adams, who had broken through the rotten footing, and were helpless logs of humanity when she reached them. How this young girl managed to get them into her boat when they could not help themselves is one of the feats that rise above explanation. But she did it.

Through her youthful years, on into middle age, the calls came, now from four hapless derelicts foundering in a sail-boat, again from other soldiers recklessly trying short cuts across the harbor, until the glorious tally has come to be more than a score. Nor did Ida Lewis ever fail to save whom-ever she went after, except in one instance.

Twenty years ago the Massachusetts Humane Society gave her the only medal of honor it has ever awarded outside its own state. In 1879 she received more substantial appreciation from the government in her appointment as keeper of the light in whose stone hollow her life has been spent.

It is not a great reward, but it sufficed, and no greater contrast in human lives could well be imagined than the simple home and the illumined life of this elderly woman, and the gorgeous homes and the staid and unprofitable ives of the dwellers in the gilded acres of summer Newport. Her little candle has thrown its beams into the whole world, and made men and women stronger and nobler for what she has done at the call of duty.

After their return they resided for several years on the farm which was divided from that of her father, and adjoining that of her brother John (150). After the marriage of their daughter Rebecca to John Lewis, Jonathan visited Indiana with a view of purchasing land for her and her husband to settle upon. As he was walking over the ground in the vicinity of Fall Creek, in Madison co., a strong impression came upon his mind. "Here thee shall build a meeting house, and here thy bones shall lie." Heeding the impression, he bought land there gave the ground for a meeting-house, and settled himself and his daughter on farms which are still in the family. Several members of Pikeland Meeting followed his example, among them three of his cousins by the name of Rodgers, and three of the Fussell family. The meeting grew and the descendants intermarried, until now there is a large and flourishing settlement of Friends belonging to Fall Creek Meeting. The community is largely composed of the families of Lewis, Thomas, Rodgers, Fussell and those with whom they have intermarried, along with others who were of the original settlers or who have since moved there. The post-office is Pendleton, Madison co., Ind.
