COOPER, James Fenimore, author, was born in Burlington, N. J., Sept. 15, 1789; son of William and Elizabeth (Fenimore), grandson of James and Hannah (Hibbs), great-grandson of William and Mary (Groome), and great-great grandson of James and Hester Cooper of Stratford-on-Avon, England, who arrived in America about 1679. On Nov. 10, 1790, William Cooper removed with his family to his land at the head of the Susquehanna river near Ostego lake and started a settlement which afterward became Cooperstown, N.Y. Here James passed his early childhood watching the almost unbroken wilderness grow slowly into civilization. In 1795 a schoolhouse was built, and after exhausting its meagre educational advantages he went to Albany, where he received private instruction from the rector of St. Peter's church, a graduate of an English university. On the death of his brother in 1802, Cooper entered Yale college, then at its lowest ebb of scholarship, and the fun-loving boy paid less attention to his studies than to play. A frolic engaged in during his third year led to his dismissal from college and it was decided that he should enter the navy. There being at the time no naval school he went before the mast, sailing from New York, Oct. 16, 1806, in the ship Sterling. After a stormy passage of forty days they reached London, where the young sailor improved his opportunity to look about the metropolis. The cargo being discharged and a new one taken on they proceeded to the Straits of Gibraltar, returned to England, and again sailed for America, reaching Philadelphia on Sept. 18, 1807. On Jan. 1, 1808, he was commissioned midshipman, U.S. navy, and in the following February was ordered to report to the commanding officer in New York. After serving for a while on the Vesuvius he was sent with a party under the command of Lieutenant Woolsey to Lake Ontario for the purpose of building at Oswego a brig of sixteen guns to command the lake. In the spring of 1809 when the brig was launched, the danger of war with Great Britain, which had been considered imminent, had passed, and Cooper visited Niagara Falls with Lieutenant Woolsey. On June 10, 1809, he was left in charge of the gunboats on Lake Champlain, and on September 27 he was granted a furlough for the purpose of taking a trip to Europe, but the plan was abandoned. On Nov. 13, 1809, he was ordered to the Wasp, and served on that vessel until May 9, 1810, when a twelve months' furlough was granted him. He was married on Jan. 1, 1811, to Susan Augusta, daughter of John Peter De Lancey of Mamaroneck, Westchester county, N.Y. His wife's ancestors were Huguenots, who fled from France at the close of the 17th century and settled in Westchester county. They sympathized with the king during the Revolutionary War, and several of them were British officers. Cooper resigned his commission in the navy, May 6, 1811, and after living with his father-in-law at Heathcote Hall, Mamaroneck, N.Y., for about eighteen months he rented a cottage near by and lived there for a year. Returning in 1814 to his childhood home at Cooperstown he began to erect a large stone dwelling, but in 1817 was persuaded by his wife to return to Westchester and the unfinished structure was destroyed by fire in 1823. He made his home on the old Argevine farm at Scarsdale until about 1822. There six children were born, five daughters and one son, the first child dying in infancy. Cooper showed no signs of adopting literary work at this time. His first attempt at writing was made in his thirtieth year, and was due wholly to chance. One evening when following his custom of reading aloud to his wife he suddenly stopped, expressed his dissatisfaction with the book and added, "I believe I could write a better story myself." Mrs. Cooper laughingly advised him to do so, and he began his task. On Nov. 10, 1820, a two volume novel on English high life was published under the title "Precaution." The book, full of crudities and written about people of whose life he knew little or nothing, was a failure, but his friends encouraged him to try again, and advised him to depict the people and scenes with which he was familiar. Accordingly "The Spy," a novel founded on fact, was published on Dec. 22, 1821, and in a few weeks had met with the largest sale of any American book up to that time. A third edition was published in March, 1822, and in the same month the story was dramatized and played to crowded houses. It achieved an equal success on its publication in England and the young writer was referred to by eminent English critics as "a distinguished American novelist." In the summer of 1822 "The Spy" was translated into French, and later into all the modern European languages. In 1822 he removed to New York city where in August, 1823, his youngest child, Fenimore, died, and the affliction completely prostrated Mr. Cooper. In 1824 his son Paul was born in New York city, and Mr. Cooper resumed his writing, producing thereafter at least one book a year. The sale of his works was phenomenal and public interest increased with each new volume. The first of the five "Leather-Stocking Tales" appeared in 1823, under the title "The Pioneers." Despite their great popularity his books did not escape adverse comment, and, says a biographer, "the extent to which Cooper was affected by hostile criticism is something remarkable. He manifested under it the irascibility of a man not simply thin-skinned, but of one whose skin was raw." He persisted not only in reading but in replying to the charges made against his books, using the preface of one to abuse the reviewers of its predecessors. Of the ten books published by him between the years 1820 and 1830 but one, "Lionel Lincoln," proved a failure, and "The Last of the Mohicans" which followed close upon it so far surpassed all that had gone before that "Lionel Lincoln" was allowed to sink into oblivion. While in New York he founded the "Bread and Cheese Lunch," or, as it was sometimes called, the "Cooper Club," enrolling among its members Chancellor Kent, the jurist; Verplanck, the editor of Shakespeare; Jarvis, the artist; Durand, the engraver; DeKay, the naturalist; Wiley, the publisher; Morse, the inventor; and Halleck and Bryant, the poets. This club met weekly and flourished until the death of its founder. On June 1, 1826, he sailed with his family for Europe and remained there, principally in France, until 1833. He was appointed by Henry Clay, then secretary of state, consul at Lyons, his commission dating from May 10, 1826, but he gave up the position in less than three years. He travelled throughout Great Britain and continental Europe, meeting the distinguished men of all countries and receiving warm welcome as the chief of American novelists. In 1831-32 he was forced by circumstances to take part in a dispute which marked the decline of his popularity in his own country. He was residing in France at the time of Louis Philippe's attempted separation from the liberal party represented by Lafayette. In a discussion in the chamber of deputies as to a means of reducing government expenses, Lafayette cited the system adopted by the United States as a model of cheap and satisfactory government. M. Saulnier, editor of the Revue Britannique, at once published an article in direct denial of Lafayette's assertion to which Cooper was asked to reply. He at first declined, but finding that the article had been written for the express purpose of injuring Lafayette, his loyalty to the friend of his country induced him to publish a pamphlet in which he gave a detailed account of government expenses in the United States. This gave rise to contradictions from M. Saulnier and replies by Mr. Cooper. Then the matter was taken up by Mr. Leavitt Harris who had once been left as chargé d'affaires at St. Petersburg during the absence of John Adams at the peace negotiations at Ghent. Mr. Harris took exceptions to Mr. Cooper's statements, and the fact that he had been an official gave his communication added weight. To this Cooper replied and closed his part of the discussion, French liberals claiming that he had utterly demolished his antagonists. This would have ended peaceably had not American newspapers seen fit to accuse Cooper of "overstepping the reserve imposed upon foreigners, attacking the administration of a friendly country, and flouting his Americanism throughout Europe," accusations so manifestly unjust that to those understanding the matter it is not surprising that Cooper became embittered toward his country. He decided to return to the United States but to abandon literary work. In November, 1833, he reached New York and in 1834 he renovated his old home at Cooperstown, where for a few years he spent his summers, and later remained there throughout the year. He decided to resume his writing, and his resentment of America's injustice to him led him to criticise rather harshly the changes which had taken place [p.375] during his residence in Europe. His countrymen became more and more antagonistic, and a local quarrel aggravated the matter. This dispute concerned the ownership of a part of the Cooper estate known as "Three Mile Point," which had been considered public property. Cooper came out victorious but with increased unpopularity. A biographer says "by the end of 1837 Cooper had pretty sedulously improved every opportunity of making himself unpopular. His criticisms had been distributed with admirable impartiality. Few persons or places could complain that they had been overlooked." In 1837 he began to institute libel suits, and one newspaper after another became a defendant. He gained a verdict in almost every case, and by 1843 he had fairly succeeded in silencing the press. In 1839 he published his "History of the United States Navy," which he had long contemplated. It was at first favorably criticised, but later called forth the most bitter condemnation, which was afterward reported by unprejudiced critics to be both causeless and malicious. The criticisms did not reduce the sale of the book for three editions were exhausted before the author's death. His last novel, "The Ways of the Hour," was published after he was sixty years old. In April, 1851, his health began to give way. A few months after his death a meeting was held in the city hall, New York City, in honor of his memory, Daniel Webster presiding, and a eulogy was delivered by his intimate friend, William Cullen Bryant. After his death Otsego Hall at Cooperstown was allowed to fall into decay, and the five acre lot surrounding it became dilapidated. In 1897 a movement was started to turn the old home into a park, the owners of the estate contributing several hundred thousand dollars for improvements, to include a suitable statue of the novelist. His principal writings are: Precaution (1820); The Spy (1821); The Pioneers (1823); The Pilot (1823); Lionel Lincoln (1825); The Last of the Mohicans (1826); The Prairie (1827); The Red Rover (1828); Notions of the Americans (1828); The Wept of Wish-ton-Wish (1829); The Water-Witch (1830); The Bravo (1831); The Heidenmauer (1832); The Headsman (1833); The Monikins (1835); Sketches of Switzerland (1836); Gleanings in Europe (1837-38); The American Democrat (1827); Homeward Bound (1838); Home as Found (1838); The History of the Navy of the United States of America (1839); The Pathfinder (1840); Mercedes of Castile (1840); The Deerslayer (1841); The Wing-and-Wing (1842); The Two Admirals (1842); Wyandotte (1843); Ned Myers (1843); Afloat and Ashore (1844); Miles Wallingford (1844); The Chainbearer (1846); Lives of Distinguished Naval Officers (1846); The Redskins (1846); The Crater (1847); The Oak Openings (1848); The Islets of the Gulf (1848); The Sea Lions (1849); and The Ways of the Hour (1850). See James Fenimore Cooper by Thomas R. Lounsbury (1890). He died in Cooperstown, N.Y., Sept. 14, 1851.

COOPER, William, representative, was born in Burlington, N. J., in 1754; son of James and Hannah (Hibbs) Cooper. He removed to Otsego county, N.Y., in 1790 and founded Cooperstown. He practised law and on Dec. 17, 1791, became first judge of the Otsego court of common pleas. He was a representative in the 4th and 6th congresses, 1795-97 and 1799-1801. He was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Fenimore of Burlington county, and their son was James Fenimore Cooper, the novelist. Judge Cooper died in Albany, N.Y., Dec. 22, 1809.
