He did not believe one man could take another man's life, and be doing the will of his Heavenly Father whom he served. Therefore he was opposed to war or drilling men for war. One illustration of this: There was a time in the state when all men over twenty-one years of age were expected to meet at the county seat or some stated place to take military training. When he lived in Hendricks County the time came for him to meet for training. He did not go. After some time the sheriff came to collect the fine for his not appearing, and took a new axe for the fine."

Robert Tomlinson and his sons were enterprising men They supplied apples to the workers on the National Road, transported sugar to Indianapolis, and used the profits to buy an improved plow 1849 the boys helped Robert to build the first successful steam sawmill the lumber from that sawmill was used to construct the White River Bridge at Noblesville. - [Note 40: page 250: Tomlinson, "A Biographical Sketch of the Life of Noah Tomlinson (1824-1918)," 5. This places the Tomlinsons in the supply network of the first major railroad boom in Indiana. According to Richard E. Wood ("Evangelical Quaker Acculturation in the Upper Mississippi Valley, 1850-1875," Quaker History 76:2 [Fall 1987]: 129), the decade between 1850 and 1860 saw a jump from 228 to 2,163 miles of railroad track in Indiana.]

Milton and Noah best known as road builders helped to built the road that is now US 31 through a swamp

1860s Milton and Noah helped to extend a gravel road from Westfield to Indianapolis

By the 1880s Milton and Noah had been a part of the construction of roads and railroads that connected Westfield to markets throughout the country

Milton and Noah remained farmers but they were far more than that simple title.

"As prominent members of their local congregation, the Westfield Monthly Meeting, it was perhaps inevitable that Robert and Lydia Tomlinson would find themselves embroiled in the abolition controversy, which sharply divided Indiana Quakers. The Indiana Yearly Meeting condemned slavery and endorsed abolition unequivocally, but grave differences arose over the means by which a devout Quaker might acceptably pursue that noble end. The Yearly Meeting insisted that, while Friends should continue to be above all friends of the 'colored man.' They should not compromise their commitments to peacemaking or separation from the world in doing so."

"In early 1843 an influential block of abolitionist Quakers, rather than separating themselves from the world of mainstream abolitionism, separated themselves instead from the main body of the Society of Friends."

They Organized a rival group The Indiana Yearly Meeting of Anti-slavery Friends The regular Yearly Meeting would have no choice but to disown them. [Note 10, page 248 Minutes of the Westfield Monthly Meeting, 3d month, 1843]

Robert and Lydia Tomlinson joined the Anti-Slavery Society "along with several of their relatives and children, and shared the fate of their fellow activists. [Note 11, page 248 Westfield Monthly Meeting of Anti-slavery Friends, 2d month, 1843; 10th month, 1843; 5th month, 1846 IHS]

"In 1840 there was a separation in the Society of Friends known as the "Anti-Slavery Separation." Grandfather and Grandmother joined in this separation, and from that time on to the time that the Civil war broke out in 1861 marked the greatest activities of our family in this great cause. We might stop here and mention that the only land mark of the location of the Anti-Slavery meeting house at Westfield is the grave yard at the north part of town, as that was laid out by Anti-Slavery Friends." - "Grandmother had decided by this time that she would not use any clothing material that was produced by slave labor. This decision caused much inconvenience to the family, and some privations. One instance we might mention on this line: The nearest Free Labor store was at Greensborough, Henry County, Indiana, a distance of forty miles, very poor roads and no bridges across the streams, but one day in the latter part of winter Noah was sent on horseback to that store to get a few pounds of spun cotton. In the morning when he had to start home it was raining some, and by noon it was both raining and snowing. When he arrived home he was so nearly frozen that he could not get off his horse neither could he walk to the house."

69. Robins, R G, A. J. Tomlinson: Plainfolk Modernist, page 248, note 12.

"The meeting felt it far better to "confine ourselves within our own limits, and let our adorning be that of a meek and quiet spirit which in the sight of God is of great price." Robert and Lydia Tomlinson were formally disowned the 4th month, 1844. Lydia was charged with "manifesting disunity with friends, neglecting the attendance of our religious meetings, and attending those set up and maintained out of the order of our society." Their daughter Martha faced the additional charge of

"assisting in setting up and holding meetings contrary to discipline" (see Minutes of the Westfield Monthly Meeting, 2d~4th months, 1844). Robert Tomlinson's testimony of disownment read as follows: "Robert Tomlinson who has had a right of membership in the Society of Friends has manifested disunity therewith, neglected the attendance of our religious meetings and attended those set up and maintained out of the order of our society contrary to our discipline for which he has been treated with without the desired effect we therefore disown him from being a member with us."

Unfortunately, the Antislavery Quakers were out of step with the general population of Indiana at the time. Blacks had been deprived of attending schools, voting and making contracts. "Whatever else Robert and Lydia Tomlinson may have been doing, they certainly were not conforming to the 'World' of greater Indiana." "As it turned out, the demise of the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Antislavery Friends came not by assimilation into the world but by reassimilation into mainstream Quakerism." Not long after the split in 1843, the regular yearly meeting changed its position on abolitionism. Robert and Lydia having been among the first to depart were among the first to return. [page 70] - They rejoined Westfield mm in 1850 [Note 17, page 249: Minutes of the Westfield mm, 5th month, 1850].

Tomlinson Pageant - September 1927 - (Acc000902, Doc0274.pdf)

"...staged those events [John Rhodes story] in dramatic form for their annual family reunion. The 'Grand Pageant' made headlines in the county paper, which gushed about the crowd of 400 people and , more wondrous still, their 125 automobiles." [Note 23, page 249: Noblesville Daily Ledger, September 9 and 12, 1927] - "All in all the pageant told as much about the Tomlinson family as it did about Westfield's abolitionist past. The family legend and the pageant itself each conveyed a moral. The moral of the legend was the ethical heroism at the core of Tomlinson family values. The moral of the pageant - hosted by pillars of the local community, covered by the local news, and attended by neighbors and relatives, decked out in finery and transported by their new automobiles - was the family's relative affluence and social status, past and present. A Tomlinson's place, the story and the pageant together suggested, lay at the social and religious fore of he community."

Extract: Milton's departure from the church did not hurt his fortunes - he seemed to prosper - [Note 34, page 249: A search of Hamilton County Deed Records revealed the following transactions between 1840 and 1890: forty acres from father, 1844; fifteen acres purchased and eighty acres co-purchased with Noah Tomlinson, 1853; thirty-five acres purchased, 1865 (the year of Ambrose's birth); forty acres purchased, 1881; a complex transaction that netted ten acres, 1886; and twenty acres purchased, 1887.] - of the Tomlinson boys, Milton was the wealthiest and had the most land - Noblesville Ledger remarked on an addition to his already spacious barn [Note 35, page 249: See Noblesville Ledger (September n, 1874): 3; Ambrose would have been nine years of age. Estimated percentages are based on a spot-check of census records. According to the tax records, by 1864 Milton Tomlinson was taxed on 170 acres of land; by 1880, on 215 acres; and from 1886 to 1895, on 235 acres (Hamilton County Tax Records, Hamilton County Courthouse, Noblesville, Ind.). At various points during this period both Noah and Alien paid tax on as many as 220 acres but never on as many acres as Milton did for the same year. The census reports (both agricultural and general) are more ambiguous. While Milton was listed as the most prosperous of Robert Tomlinson's children in 1860, Noah and Alien had the edge in 1870 and 1880. But these data seem questionable. For instance, Milton listed no land on the 1880 census report, although he paid taxes on 215 acres. It may be that he was less than forthcoming with the census takers.

"A Civil Ceremony, though forbidden by their church, was not uncommon among young Quakers of the time... a steady stream of nuptial inclined Quakers (including all of the Tomlinson brothers save Noah) forsook the meetinghouse for the courthouse.

In the eyes of the Westfield Monthly Meeting, however, a sin's popularity was no grounds for its toleration. The young couple drew a complaint of misconduct for their peccadillo and was charged with marriage 'contrary to our discipline,' [Note 29, page 249: For a disposition of their case see: Minutes of the Westfield Monthly Meeting (Women's), 7th-10th month, 1842 and Minutes of the Westfield Monthly Meeting, 6th - 9th months, 1842]

Westfield mm attempted several times to get Milton and Hannah to repent and come back to the church, but the church moved very slowly in this effort the matter dragged on for months in fall 1842, the meeting voted to accept the couple back into the fold. By this time Hannah was 7 months pregnant.

Hannah gave birth to Abigail on 19 Dec 1842 One month later on 25 Jan 1843 Hannah died most likely from complications of childbirth.

Milton seemed to hold the church responsible for Hannah's death because of their harassment of the couple during the better part of her pregnancy.

The October, 1842 meeting that had accepted Hannah's offering of repentance had also received the membership of Delilah Hiatt [Note 30, page 249: Minutes of the Westfield mm (Womens), 10th Month, 1842].

The John Rhodes story -

[Note 22, page 249: On Westfield and the underground railroad, see Roberts, Our Westfield page 13] - "John Rhodes, a former slave, had settled near Westfield after absconding from his owner in Missouri. In 1844, slave hunters finally tracked him down and persuaded the county court to summon him to Noblesville, beyond the reach of Westfield Quakers. When authorities tried to escort Rhodes out of town under the cover of darkness, however, the Quakers blocked their path, and in the ensuing confusion someone spirited Rhodes away. For the next several days he was shuttled between safe houses, finally landing at the Tomlinson farm. Unfortunately, Rhode's pursuers discovered his whereabouts and descend on their prey. To the rescue came young Milton Tomlinson, twenty-four years of age, who led Rhodes on a perilous flight through a forbidding swamp and to safety at last. That breathless night would be sculpted into a centerpiece of Tomlinson family history."

Extract: Milton was part of several lawsuits - from 1875-1885, he was involved in at least seven lawsuits, as many as five at a time - usually he lost - [Note 45, page 250: Civil Court Docket, Hamilton County Courthouse, Noblesville, Ind.: Charles White e]John C. Pfaff v. Milton Tomlinson e[ Nathan C. Clark (July 22, 1875); Willis G. Cook v. Milton Tomlinson (November 1875); Valentine Amett v. Milton Tomlinson et al. (November 5, 1876); S. M. Smith v. Milton Tomlinson (September 5, 1876); James Wilson v. Winifred Stilwell et al. (including Milton Tomlinson) (March 5, 1878); Nehemiah Briles v. Noah Tomlinson, Milton Tomlinson, et al. (1884). (Case history: jury finds for plaintiffs and awards damages of $436.87 in dispute over grading of a railroad bed; defendants request appeal; request denied; defendants appeal to State Supreme Court; State Supreme Court declines to hear case and affirms judgment of lower court.) Hamilton County Deed Records: Jasper N. Davidson, Administrator v. William Zion, Milton Tomlinson, et al. (September 22, 1877). White and Pfaff v. Tomlinson and Clark and Briles v. Tomlinson, Tomlinson, et al. were appealed to the State Supreme Court. This search was restricted to Hamilton County courts and therefore is not exhaustive. It did not follow changes of venue except insofar as they returned to Hamilton County.

Some of this litigation may have derived from financial troubles alluded to by Homer Tomlinson: "Three Tomlinson brothers ... as contractors built large sections of what is now the New York Central Railroad through Hamilton County.... [T]he parent company went bankrupt, leaving the Tomlinson brothers in very great debt to sub-contractors and hundreds of employees" (The Shout of a King [Queens Village, N.Y.: Church of God (Queens), 1968], 16). Homer insisted that the Tomlinson brothers, as a matter of principle, paid their inherited debts "to the uttermost penny," a conclusion that would seem to be at variance with the court record.]

Milton took two of his cases to the Indiana Supreme Court - [Note 46, page 251: Just such a dispute, in just such a losing cause, provides convincing evidence of the social standing of the Tomlinson family. In the Davidson v. Zion, Tomlinson, et al. case, the court handed down a $200.00 judgment against Milton Tomlinson. He apparently refused to pay, and a parcel of his land went on the auction block. When the property came up for auction, however, no one bid. Finally, Noah bid a pittance and purchased the property, which he promptly conveyed to Delilah, thereby returning it into his brother's hands. Bidder collusion of this kind only occurred on behalf of individuals who elicited strong communal sympathy and support.]

"The picture of Milton Tomlinson that emerges from the court records is of a relatively prominent, competitive, even stubborn businessman, with an aversion to compromise matched only by his deep desire to win."

This is confirmed by Joe Roberts, attorney at law (letter to Roger Robins, May 25, 1994), who also noted a partition decree issued October 13, 1900, setting off two tracts of land, one seven and one twenty-four acres to "Ambrose [sic] J. Tomlinson.] "Milton Tomlinson may not have approved of his son's ambitions, but his possessions would now go to support them."

Tomlinson Pageant - September 1927 - (Acc000902, Doc0274.pdf)

"...staged those events [John Rhodes story] in dramatic form for their annual family reunion. The 'Grand Pageant' made headlines in the county paper, which gushed about the crowd of 400 people and , more wondrous still, their 125 automobiles." [Note 23, page 249: Noblesville Daily Ledger, September 9 and 12, 1927] - "All in all the pageant told as much about the Tomlinson family as it did about Westfield's abolitionist past. The family legend and the pageant itself each conveyed a moral. The moral of the legend was the ethical heroism at the core of Tomlinson family values. The moral of the pageant - hosted by pillars of the local community, covered by the local news, and attended by neighbors and relatives, decked out in finery and transported by their new automobiles - was the family's relative affluence and social status, past and present. A Tomlinson's place, the story and the pageant together suggested, lay at the social and religious fore of he community."

This places the Tomlinsons in the supply network of the first major railroad boom in Indiana. According to Richard E. Wood ("Evangelical Quaker Acculturation in the Upper Mississippi Valley, 1850-1875," Quaker History 76:2 [Fall 1987]: 129), the decade between 1850 and 1860 saw a jump from 228 to 2,163 miles of railroad track in Indiana.]

Milton and Noah best known as road builders helped to built the road that is now US 31through a swamp

1860s Milton and Noah helped to extend a gravel road from Westfield to Indianapolis

By the 1880s Milton and Noah had been a part of the construction of roads and railroads that connected Westfield to markets throughout the country

Milton and Noah remained farmers but they were far more than that simple title.

"A Civil Ceremony, though forbidden by their church, was not uncommon among young Quakers of the time... a steady stream of nuptially inclined Quakers (including all of the Tomlinson brothers save Noah) forsook the meetinghouse for the courthouse.

In the eyes of the Westfield Monthly Meeting, however, a sin's popularity was no grounds for its toleration. The young couple drew a complaint of misconduct for their peccadillo and was charged with marriage 'contrary to our discipline,' [Note 29, page 249: For a disposition of their case see: Minutes of the Westfield Monthly Meeting (Women's), 7th-10th month, 1842 and Minutes of the Westfield Monthly Meeting, 6th - 9th months, 1842]

Westfield mm attempted several times to get Milton and Hannah to repent and come back to the church, but the church moved very slowly in this effort the matter dragged on for months in fall 1842, the meeting voted to accept the couple back into the fold. By this time Hannah was 7 months pregnant.

Hannah gave birth to Abigail on 19 Dec 1842 One month later on 25 Jan 1843 Hannah died most likely from complications of childbirth.

Milton seemed to hold the church responsible for Hannah's death because of their harassment of the couple during the better part of her pregnancy.

The October, 1842 meeting that had accepted Hannah's offering of repentance had also received the membership of Delilah Hiatt [Note 30, page 249: Minutes of the Westfield mm (Womens), 10th Month, 1842].

Robert Tomlinson and his sons were enterprising men They supplied apples to the workers on the National Road, transported sugar to Indianapolis, and use the profits to buy an improved plow 1849 the boys helped Robert to build the first successful steam sawmill the lumber from that sawmill was used to construct the White River Bridge at Noblesville. - [Note 40: page 250: Tomlinson, "A Biographical Sketch of the Life of Noah Tomlinson (1824-1918)," 5. This places the Tomlinsons in the supply network of the first major railroad boom in Indiana. According to Richard E. Wood ("Evangelical Quaker Acculturation in the Upper Mississippi Valley, 1850-1875," Quaker History 76:2 [Fall 1987]: 129), the decade between 1850 and 1860 saw a jump from 228 to 2,163 miles of railroad track in Indiana.]

Milton and Noah best known as road builders helped to built the road that is now US 31 through a swamp

1860s Milton and Noah helped to extend a gravel road from Westfield to Indianapolis

By the 1880s Milton and Noah had been a part of the construction of roads and railroads that connected Westfield to markets throughout the country

Milton and Noah remained farmers but they were far more than that simple title.

189. Robins, R G, A. J. Tomlinson: Plainfolk Modernist, page 77, 78.

Ambrose was slight of build, so small at birth he had to be carried on a pillow - Ambrose more resembled his uncle Noah rather than his father in stature [Note 3, page 251: Homer Tomlinson listed his father's stature as 5'7" tall, 168 lbs. (The Diary of A J Tomlinson, II). Noah Tomlinson was 5'5", 160 lbs. (Asher Kellum Tomlinson, "A Biographical Sketch of the Life of Noah Tomlinson...]

Tomlinson Pageant - September 1927

"...staged those events [John Rhodes story] in dramatic form for their annual family reunion. The 'Grand Pageant' made headlines in the county paper, which gushed about the crowd of 400 people and , more wondrous still, their 125 automobiles." [Note 23, page 249: Noblesville Daily Ledger, September 9 and 12, 1927] - "All in all the pageant told as much about the Tomlinson family as it did about Westfield's abolitionist past. The family legend and the pageant itself each conveyed a moral. The moral of the legend was the ethical heroism at the core of Tomlinson family values. The moral of the pageant - hosted by pillars of the local community, covered by the local news, and attended by neighbors and relatives, decked out in finery and transported by their new automobiles - was the family's relative affluence and social status, past and present. A Tomlinson's place, the story and the pageant together suggested, lay at the social and religious fore of the community."
