Introduction

The first British census was taken in 1801, immediately following the Act of Union of England and Scotland. English statistician John Rickman, a Clerk to the House of Commons, is generally credited with the idea of introducing the ten-yearly census, and indeed it was he who was chiefly responsible for the administration of the first four of these, from 1801 to 1831.

Among the reasons which he gave to promote his idea were that it would ascertain the number of men eligible for conscription into the militia and of seamen available for defence, at this period of the Napoleonic wars. There were also fears that the growth in population would outstrip food production, leading to “the need to plan the production of corn and thus to know the number of people who had to be fed”.

From 1801 to 1831, the census was the responsibility of the Overseers of the Poor and of the clergy; the Farnborough household returns seem to have been initialled V.C., the only householder with these initials being Valentine Cannon. However, as he was by all accounts an ordinary labourer, it seems unlikely that Valentine was entrusted with the task. The enumerator’s arithmetic does not appear to have been perfect, 33 males under five years of age being recorded, but totalled as 32: however, the grand total given is correct at 179. As regards females, sixteen were recorded as being between 40 and 50 years of age, but the total was given as fourteen. This was not adjusted as with the males, so the grand total of 178 would appear to be two short if the numbers for the individual households are correct.

The recorded total of 357 (359 in reality?) was also subject to some inaccuracy when published. Lewis’s Gazetteer of 1831 gives a figure of 356, while White’s 1850 Directory of Warwickshire (p.719) has 350. Whatever the exact figure, it is considerably higher than the 1801 and 1811 populations noted on the reverse of the 1821 sheet, at 241 and 250 respectively (again, White has 214 for 1801). The 43% increase from 1811 to 1821 is double the county figure: in the same decade, the Warwickshire population as enumerated increased by 20.2%, to 274,392.

The 1821 census, taken on the night of Monday 28th May, was the first British population count to request information about ages, and just under half of the population proved to be under twenty. Unfortunately, most of these early censuses have disappeared, Farnborough being one of only about 300 parishes for which such records survive. As regards the village results, 185, or 52%, of the inhabitants were under 20, which means that the Farnborough statistics are close to country-wide figures. No fewer than 98 (over one in four) were children under 10, nearly one in six being under five years old. For a typical example of high infant mortality, see Thomas Griffin in the “identifications” tables. At the other end of the scale, it is notable that there was not a single female over 70, while there were five men, just one of whom was over 80.

Of the 63 households recorded, by far the most populous was that of William Holbech, Esq. A twelfth of the population (30 souls) were recorded in residence at his seat, Farnborough Hall, the 21 females among these no doubt including a large number “below stairs”. Exactly two thirds of the remaining households had between 4 and 7 members. The full results excluding the Hall are: 14 members/1 household; 10/4; 9/3; 8/1; 7/7; 6/9; 5/8; 4/17; 3/7; 2/3; 1/2. Of the householders whose area of work was stated, 28 were employed in agriculture and 16 were in trade.

Additional names and information noted on the reverse of the census enumeration

It is probable that none of these persons was a householder. Contemporary sources (see Introduction) give the population of Farnborough as under 360, which it should not have been if these eleven people had been additional to those included in the tabulated census statistics. It may be that they were heads of families within enumerated households. Seven are identified as being employed in Agriculture, two were in Trade, and three are shown as lodgers.

(1)	Head of household (2)	(3)	Age in 1821#	Notes
T	John Eycott		50-60	There is a John Eucott, Farnborough, in WAR freeholders' list 1820. Maybe bur. Farnborough 26 November 1825 aged 64.
T	William Fessey		40-50	A namesake appears in the WAR freeholders' list 1820. The William Fessey of the 1851 census at Middle Tysoe, WAR, occupier of an orchard of one acre, widower, 71, may be this man, and also the namesake buried at Farnborough 3 Dec 1851, aged 71.
T	George Goodman		30-40	1841 census – a carrier, aged 57. 1851: grocer, aged 68.
T	Richard Griffin *	X	30-40	The eldest male in the household is aged 70-80: could this have been an elderly relative, for example Thomas Allen, who was bur. Farnborough 8 Aug 1833 aged 86? The maiden name of Richard's wife Elizabeth was Allen and this could have been his father-in-law. The other ages given fit those of Richard's wife, a schoolmistress in the 1841 census; the only survivor of his (first four) children born before the census, Maria, bapt 1 Oct 1815; and Richard himself, bapt. Farnborough 4 Apr 1787 and bur. there 2 Sept 1836.
A	Thomas Griffin *		60-70	Thomas was of the third generation of his family to farm land at Farnborough and Avon Dasset, the adjoining parish. Early in the 18th century, the Griffins had moved from Fenny Compton, where they settled in the 16th century, descendants of a family which held land in Braybrooke NTH and in Dingley and Gumley (Golmondely) LEI, back to at least the 13th century. The others enumerated were probably his wife Elizabeth, née Shearby, (1767-1836), and the youngest two of his four (out of 10) children to survive infancy: Sarah, bapt. 18 July 1800, and John (1802-1876).
