I highly recommend this website to find early, beautiful, hand-drawn maps of many, many locales. This tiny image on the front cover does not do justice to the wonderful detail found in the original. If you haven't been using maps in your genealogical research, please reconsider the many advantages that they provide.

First, it is quite simple to acquire a modern national road atlas, such as the produced by Rand McNally. These are updated every year, so you might want to look for last year's atlas, which can generally be found deeply-discounted at the beginning of the following year. Remember that as you use a modern map, that many county lines may have changed and cities have grown since your ancestor may have lived there in (for example) the 19th century.

Using Maps in Genealogical Research

Maps can be essential to your research. They provide clues to where your ancestors may have lived and where to look for written records about them. Both old and new maps can be useful. Normally birth, marriage, death, land, probate, and other records are kept by county governments in the United States. If you know where an ancestor lived, new or old maps of that place may also show the county seat where useful data about your kinfolk may be found.

Old maps can be particularly useful because ascertaining the name of the place where your ancestor lived can be like trying to hit a moving target. Numerous towns, counties, cities, and even countries have experienced name and boundary changes over the years. Some of these places may be found on old maps, even if their names have changed. The location of others may be found in lists of abandoned post offices, local histories, government records, microfilm records, or clippings from old newspapers, old city directories, gazetteers or old county atlases.

When you encounter an unfamiliar place name during your search, the US Geological Survey can help. The Geographic Names Information System (GNIS) is the government's official data base of place names. The GNIS is maintained by the U.S. Geological Survey (USGS). The database contains two million entries, including the names of places that no longer exist, as well as variant names for existing places. It includes the names of every type of feature except roads and highways. It is especially useful for genealogical research because it contains entries for communities, as well as for churches and cemeteries - even those that no longer exist.

Geography and Map Division, Library of Congress.

LOC holds almost four million maps, 51,000 atlases, 8,000 reference works, and a large number of related materials in other formats.

LOC provides cartographic and geographic information to Federal and local governments, to the scholarly community, and to the general public. No single catalog includes all of their total holdings, but card and book catalogs provide access to its collections.

The atlas collection includes volumes from all significant publishers of atlases over the past five centuries. The atlases cover individual continents, countries, states, counties, cities and other geographic regions, as well as the entire world.

Letter from the Editor

Well, it's time to look at another New England state to feature in a volume of FFRU. In the past several years we've done Alabama, Pennsylvania, Missouri, South Carolina, then Missouri (again)... So, it's time for another New England state, thus New York!

Who would have thought that a lot of Franklins lived there? Just because it has a huge population doesn't mean that there are a lot of Franklins there - but there certainly were. In fact, as you can see and feel by the size and weight of this volume, the Franklins in the first seven censuses take 87 pages to enumerate! That is by far the biggest Franklin population that I have listed up to this time.

Because there are so many pages devoted to just these census, I'm sorry to say that I don't have room for either more census records, or for any of the other many, many Franklin records that I have for New York. I'll have to get to that in the future. In the past I've published two volumes in successive years to deal with this challenge. However, in this case, I think it will take at least 3-4 more volumes to cover all of the New York Franklins, so I should come up with another alternative, rather than devoting a full year to just one state.

As with previous census volumes, this is not just a raw listing of the census. I hope you will find it very well indexed. You will also note that I have done a good bit of cross-checking on the Franklins who have people with other surnames living in their midst, and that I have compared much of the 1850 to the 1860, thus there are over 180 footnotes in this volume. These footnotes refer to other census records, sometimes in other states, and other research. This is what is called an "annotated" census, adding value beyond what is found in other indexes or enumerations. I hope you will find it useful.

75. Fellows Cemetery - Chili, New York

This cemetery is located on the west side of Union St. about 1/2 mile south of Morgan Road. A list of tombstone inscriptions was published in the Rochester Post Express on July 22, 1911. That list was compiled by Anah B. Yates. Another list of inscriptions was compiled in July 1934 by Mary Douglas and Myrte Rice Haynes and it says on the top of that list that it adds to Mrs. Yates list but it leaves off some of the inscriptions in Mrs. Yates list. In July 1939 a list of inscriptions was prepared by Mary Moulthop and Myrte Rice Haynes. Each of these three lists has some inscriptions that are not on the other two lists. This list was prepared by combining the three previous lists and then a visit was made to the cemetery on July 20, 1991 by Richard T. Halsey to make corrections to the master list. Five inscriptions that were not on any of the three previous lists were added with this list. The tombstones for the infant of J. & P. Auten and Polly Ann Cole could not be found during the 1991 visit.

The House of Refuge is situated on the southern part of Randall's Island opposite This institution is designed to furnish a home for juvenile delinquents, where they will be free from the contaminating influence of the old and depraved offenders in our penitentiary, and where they can be taught useful trades and encouraged to habits of industry and self-reliance, and thus saved from a life of infamy and crime. A building well adapted to the purposes has been erected, in which are commodious school-rooms, a chapel, rooms for exercise, sleeping-rooms, &c. There are large play-grounds attached to the building. A thorough course of mental and religious instruction is pursued, and perfect order reigns throughout the establishment. The average number of boys is about two hundred and fifty, and of girls about seventy-five, who are here detained until their minds are imbued with correct principles, and good homes can be obtained for them by a committee of the institution. None are admitted over sixteen years of age. Route by Second and Third avenue railroads to One hundred-and-seventeenth-street; thence by rowboat to the island, free. Visitors are admitted each day, Sundays excepted."
