Mr. Draper received such limited education as the country districts afforded and worked on his father's farm until he went to Abingdon, when a youth, where he learned shoemaking. At the age of twenty he went to Mobile and was in the produce business, and then returned home and worked at his trade in Wrentham. In April, 1849, he started for California, via Cape Horn in the ship "Aretus," Capt. James Woolley, and was six months in making the voyage. He returned in 1850, and went back in 1852, remaining until about 1855, when he again came home. He met with success in mining, paid all his indebtedness, and had sufficient to make a start in life. He went to Foxboro, where he engaged in the manufacture of soap, and in 1858, in company with his brother-in-law, Abner Atwood, of Pawtucket, engaged in that business in Bedford, Mass. They removed to Pawtucket in 1861, where the business was carried on under the firm name of Draper & Atwood until 1867, when his nephew, Arthur W. Stanley, was admitted as a partner, under the firm name of J. O. Draper & Co. The establishment is one of the largest of its kind in this country, and the varieties of soaps manufactured include textile soaps of the highest grades. Mr. Draper was a public-spirited citizen, and contributed willingly to all worthy enterprises. In politics he was a strong Republican, with temperance proclivities. He died Oct. 14, 1891, at his home in Pawtucket, Rhode Island.

Th children of Mr. Draper were: Bradford, born Sept. 18, 1841, died in infancy; Mary Elizabeth, born April 25, 1843, married John W. Clarke, of Roxbury, Mass., and died at that place, leaving five children—William, Alice, Beulah, Susan and Mary George; Miss Anna A., born Oct. 26, 1844, lives in Cambridge, Mass.; James A., born July 5, 1855, a soap manufacturer, now deceased, married Harriet Randall, and had nine children, three of whom are still living—Florence, Ida and LeRoy; Galen C., born Feb. 10, 1858, a soap manufacturer, died in Pawtucket, unmarried, aged twenty-four years; and George Bradford, born Dec. 29, 1859.

(VII) George Bradford Draper, youngest child of James O. and Mary G. (Carpenter) Draper, was born Dec. 29, 1859, in Bedford, Mass. He received his education in the public schools of Pawtucket, R. I., whither his parents had removed when he was an infant. Leaving the grammar school when sixteen years of age, young Draper began an apprenticeship as a wood engraver with John C. Thompson, of Providence, in whose employ he remained for four years, and he then opened a wood engraving establishment on his own account on Westminster street, in which business he continued for three or four years, or until the electroplate supplanted the wood engraving. In 1882 Mr. Draper entered the employ of the J. O. Draper Company, and by close application learned thoroughly all the details of the business. In 1904, when the firm was incorporated, Mr. Draper became secretary and general manager of the company, a position he has since held.

Mr. Draper is a member of the Masonic organization, holding membership in Union Lodge No. 10, A. F. & A. M.; Pawtucket Chapter No. 4, R. A. M.; and Pawtucket Council No. 2, R. & S. M. He is also a member of Enterprise Lodge No. 22, I. O. O. F., of Pawtucket. Mr. Draper is connected with the Business Men's Association of Pawtucket, and in his political views is a Republican, although he has never been an office seeker.

On Nov. 30, 1882, Mr. Draper was united in marriage with Miss Sarah M. Phinney, of Pawtucket, daughter of Squire Z. and Sarah Niles (Gray) Phinney, of Pawtucket, and to this union there have been born children as follows: George Bradford, Jr., born Oct. 29, 1884, began his education in the schools of his native city, Pawtucket, supplemented by a two years course at Brown University, Providence, giving particular attention to chemistry, and he is now associated with the J. O. Draper Company; and Frederick Z., born March 21, 1886, in Pawtucket, passed through the public and high schools and made a study of optics, but preferring an occupation out of doors, he engaged in scientific poultry raising and located on the Draper homestead farm at North Attleboro, Massachusetts.

CHARLES WILLIAM BOWEN, of Providence, R. I., is a descendant in the eighth generation from Richard Bowen, who emigrated from near Swansea, in Wales, in 1639, landing in Weymouth in the Colony of Massachusetts with his wife, Ann, and seven children: William, Obadiah, Alice, Richard, Thomas, Sarah and Ruth.

(I) Richard Bowen, in 1643, with his as one of the forty families under the leadership of Rev. Samuel Newman, left Weymouth. They founded a new settlement which they named Rehoboth. His wife Ann died there soon after, and he married in 1648 Mrs. Elizabeth Marsh, widow of George Marsh, of Hingham. He died at Rehoboth Feb. 4, 1674, and his widow died in 1676 and was buried at Rehoboth. In his will, which may be found in the Colonial records of Plymouth, probated June 4, 1675, he bequeathed to his wife Elizabeth, and children, William, Obadiah, Richard, Alice Wheaton, Sarah Fuller and Ruth Leverich.

Richard Bowen was one of the first purchasers of the lands of the town in 1643, and an inhabitant, the value of his allotment being £270. He was one of the first board of selectmen, chosen on the 9th of 10th month (December), 1644. His name appears on the register as a land owner in 1645, and on the freeman's list of 1651. He was a large proprietor of lands along the fresh-water tributary of the river flowing south from Seekonk, later known as Runens river. Bowen's bridge across this stream is referred to in the records. Here on both sides of the river and about Hundred Acre Cove were extensive fresh and salt water meadows which were largely sought by the early settlers of Rehoboth to furnish food for the cattle and horses in the winter. His name and others of Rehoboth, and with Myles Standish and others representing the Sowams lands, are associated together in a conference regarding the boundary line between Rehoboth and Sowams.

Richard Bowen was a man of high character, thrifty habits, and one of the most prominent and highly esteemed citizens of his community. He filled many important positions of honor and trust in the affairs of Rehoboth. He represented the town in 1651 as a deputy to the Plymouth Colony, and from 1654 to 1658 held the office of town clerk. He was elected grand juror and constable and served the town in other responsible positions from 1658 to 1670. Although too old at the outbreak of King Philip's war against the white settlers to take up arms in their defense, he gave freely of his means for the support of the sufferers in that bloody war.

(II) Obadiah Bowen, son of Richard, was born in Wales Sept. 1, 1627, and died in Swansea, Mass., Sept. 10, 1710. He married about 1649 Mary

Chas. W. Bowen

Clifton, who died Feb. 18, 1697. (She was probably a daughter of Thomas Clifton of Weymouth, Mass., afterward of Newport, R. I.). Their children were: (1) Obadiah, born Sept. 18, 1651, died July 11, 1699, married July 11, 1673, Abigail Bullock. (2) Mary, born June 18, 1653, died Aug. 20, 1678, married Isaac Allen. (3) Sarah, born Nov. 6, 1654, married (first) John Savage and (second) Joseph Brayman. (4) Samuel, born July 16, 1659, married May 26, 1684, Elizabeth Wood Wheaton. (5) Joseph, born June 16, 1662, died Dec. 28, 1737, married Elizabeth Round. (6) Thomas, born Aug. 3, 1664, is mentioned further on. (7) Hannah, born May 3, 1665, married Nov. 10, 1685, Timothy Brooks, Jr. (8) Lydia, born April 23, 1666, died March 25, 1758, married Sept. 4, 1686, Joseph Mason. (9) Mercy was born March 18, 1672. (10) Isaac was born Sept. 30, 1674.

Obadiah Bowen was a deputy to the Colonial Assembly in 1681-82. He was one of the dissenting company who caused Parson Newman and his church much discomfort on account of their opposition to infant baptism. These dissenters finally succeeded in having a portion of the town of Rehoboth set off and organized into a new town, which they named Swansea after Swansea, Wales, whence the Bowens and some others had emigrated. He was prominent in the new town of Swansea, one of the founders and active members of the Baptist Church said to be the first of this name established in Massachusetts. He was one of the signers (Feb. 22, 1669) of the "Willett proposals."

(III) Thomas Bowen, son of Obadiah, was born Aug. 3, 1664, and died in 1743. He married June 17, 1689, Thankful, daughter of Sampson and Mary (Butterworth) Mason, and she survived him. Their children were: (1) Josiah, born Oct. 1, 1691, married Dec. 4, 1718, Margaret Child. (2) Isaac, born Nov. 3, 1695, married March 7, 1721, Hannah Wheaton. (3) Stephen, born Jan. 16, 1697, married, Oct. 17, 1723, Phebe Slade. (4) Marcy, born in 1700, married, in 1727, Nathan Luther. (5) Samuel, born Feb. 28, 1702, married (first) Sarah Smith and (second) May 11, 1749, Widow Martha Fowler. (6) Nathaniel, born Jan. 1, 1703, married Esther Bardine. (7) Richard was born Jan. 21, 1705. (8) Mary, born Aug. 11, 1708, married July 13, 1730, Gilbert Seaman. (9) Catharine married Sept. 18, 1728, Samuel Curtis. (10) Hannah, born Feb. 1, 1710, married Feb. 14, 1730, Charles Seaman. (11) Constant was born Oct. 10, 1712. (12) John, born Feb. 22, 1717, married May 6, 1745, Abigail Wood.

(IV) Stephen Bowen, son of Thomas and Thankful (Mason) Bowen, was born Jan. 16, 1697, and died Oct. 4, 1778. On Oct. 17, 1723, he married Phebe Slade, and their children were: (1) Sybil, born Sept. 8, 1725, married Oct. 24, 1745, Samuel Reed. (2) Phebe was born Feb. 7, 1727. (3) Stephen, Jr., born July 15, 1729, married De-linda. (Vital records of Warren say that he married Mrs. Mary Lee, of Rehoboth, April 1, 1762). (4) Sarah, born April 11, 1731, married Dec. 19, 1748, Benjamin Cranston. (5) Martha was born Dec. 3, 1733. (6) Jonathan, born Dec. 18, 1736, married Nov. 7, 1759, Mrs. Elizabeth Monroe. (7) Lydia, born Sept. 3, 1739, married Feb. 7, 1762, Oliver Saulsbury.

(V) Jonathan Bowen, son of Stephen and Phebe (Slade) Bowen, was born Dec. 18, 1736, and died Oct. 4, 1778. On Nov. 7, 1759, he married Mrs. Elizabeth Monroe, who died April 19, 1816, aged seventy-seven years. Their children were: (1) Jonathan, Jr., born Nov. 14, 1760, died May 17, 1800, married Oct. 7, 1787, Betsy Taylor. (2) Haile, born Dec. 30, 1762, died Sept. 7, 1799. (3) Pardon, born June 7, 1764, died Aug. 17, 1797, married Mary Thurber. (4) Mary, born Sept. 20, 1768, married Nov. 30, 1788, William Hoar. (5) Sally was born May (?) 28, 1769.

(VI) Haile Bowen, son of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Monroe) Bowen, was born Dec. 30, 1762, and died Sept. 7, 1799. On Oct. 16, 1790, he married Mary Tyler, born Feb. 18, 1768, died Aug. 16, 1802, daughter of Moses and Elizabeth Tyler. Their children were: (1) Jonathan, born Aug. 7, 1792, who died Aug. 1, 1817, at Matanzas, Cuba. (2) Haile, Jr., born April 7, 1794, who died Aug. 4, 1876. (3) Mary T., born Oct. 25, 1795, who died Feb. 13, 1809. (4) Pardon, born Oct. 10, 1797; and (5) Moses, born in 1799. With his brothers he was a large owner of land and shore lots in Warren, and they also owned a wharf and pursued the coasting trade from the town of Warren for many years.

(VII) Haile Bowen, Jr., son of Haile and Mary (Tyler) Bowen, was born in Warren, R. I., April 7, 1794, and died Aug. 4, 1876. He married (first) Dec. 2, 1817, Elizabeth Johonnot, who was born Jan. 9, 1796, and died March 28, 1853, daughter of Daniel Johonnot, a direct descendant of Daniel Johonnot, a Huguenot, who fled from La Rochelle, France, in 1686, landing in Boston, later residing at Oxford, Mass., but because of serious Indian troubles affecting that settlement, he returned in 1695 to Boston, where he died. Mr. Bowen married (second) Mrs. Hannah Beebe, daughter of William Hubbard, of Warren. To the first marriage came the following children: (1) Laura Maria, born Sept. 14, 1818, died Feb. 15, 1863, married Sept. 11, 1842, John C. Hall; (2) Henry Augustus, born Oct. 14, 1820, died Sept. 6, 1889, married June 15, 1845, Deborah L. Bushee; (3) Mary Tyler, born July 7, 1823, died Jan. 29, 1861, married March 9, 1842, Capt. John Jay Allin; (4) John Haile, born April 6, 1826, died May 12, 1874, married Dec. 13, 1856, Betsy G. Peck; (5) Charles Edward, born Oct. 10, 1828, died Dec. 13, 1831; (6) George Saunders, born Jan. 17, 1831, married (first) Jan. 5, 1852, Betsy Franklin, and (second) March 23, 1868, Elizabeth D. Thomas; (7) Betsy-

Johonnot, born March 26, 1833, died May 27, 1902, married Dec. 22, 1868, Roland T. G. Russell; (8) Charles William, born June 18, 1836, married Jan. 3, 1861, Mary T. Richardson; (9) Albert Hall, born Nov. 15, 1838, died Sept. 4, 1895, married Nov. 6, 1870, Alice R. Collamore.

In 1812, when eighteen years of age, Haile Bowen volunteered in the war of 1812 enlisting under the State. Before his enlistment he had pursued the coasting trade in the employ of his father and uncles. In 1818, soon after his marriage to Elizabeth Johonnot, he built the home in Warren in which all of his children were born. In this house he lived the remainder of his life and there died in 1876. In his latter years he was employed by the shipping merchants of Warren as a stevedore, having charge of the loading of many vessels leaving that harbor. He subsequently retired. He had no active part in public affairs, either in the church or in civil matters, but he lived an honorable and upright life, reared and educated quite a large family, and was most highly respected and esteemed by all who knew him. He was a man of most excellent education for his time, a wide reader and an exemplary penman. His esteemed wife, Elizabeth Johonnot, was a woman of culture and refinement, a Huguenot descended from Daniel Johonnot, of France. She was a most efficient collaborer of her husband in the rearing and educating of their family, and a superior woman of Christian character.

(VIII) Charles William Bowen, born June 18, 1836, and one of the most successful men who has gone from the little town of Warren to Providence, received from his parents in a large measure, by inheritance and instruction, those qualities which early manifested themselves in his business life and which provided the foundations for the superstructure of a more than usually successful business life. He was educated in the public schools of Warren, receiving, however, much of private instruction and assistance from his father and mother. Upon leaving school he came to Providence, in 1856, when twenty years of age, and took a position with the wholesale dry-goods firm of L. D. Anthony & Co. In this firm he worked industriously and persistently for twenty-two years, taking up the work of a boy in such an establishment and working up through all the different grades, becoming so valuable to his firm that he was taken into partnership and given an interest in the business. He remained until 1878, when he retired to engage in the cotton goods business, which he followed for a number of years, and in which he enjoyed a large degree of success. He has now lived retired for some years, looking only after his real estate interests. He has held no political offices, though urged to do so from time to time. On national questions he has always been a stanch Republican, although independent in local politics. Mr. Bowen has always taken great interest in the institutions that administer to the needs of the aged. For many years he has served on the board of directors of the "Home for Aged Men" in Providence, one of the best institutions of the kind in New England. He is a well-read man, quick and keen to grasp the fundamental truths in the problems of life, and to apply them wisely to the task in hand. A man of good judgment and foresight, he has been able to accomplish much for himself and to assist others who have been less fortunate. His life, public and private, has been above reproach. He is an attendant of the First Congregational Church of Providence.

Mr. Bowen married Jan. 3, 1861, Mary Thomas Richardson, only daughter of George Richardson, a manufacturing jeweler of Providence. They have two surviving daughters: Florence Haile, who married Francis E. Brownell, of Atlanta, Ga.; and Leila Pearson. Two children died in early childhood: Minnie Louise, born March 15, 1872, who died April 6, 1873; and Howard Russell, born June 17, 1878, who died March 7, 1879.

GLADDING (Line of Jonathan of Providence). The Gladdings are, perhaps, properly speaking, a Bristol family, that town being the home of the earlier generations and the continuous home of many of the descendants of John Gladding, one of the founders of that ancient town, two hundred and more years ago. Many bearing the name in that town and also in the city of Providence have been among the most substantial men and women and successful business men of those communities; and they, too, have allied themselves by marriage to many others of the first families of the State.

It is the purpose of this article, however, to treat particularly of some of the posterity of the late Timothy Gladding, whose father early located in Providence, among whom were several of the sons of George W. and the latter's brother Timothy Gladding (2); the late Henry B. Gladding, and his brother Royal P. Gladding, who were associated as the heads of what was perhaps the leading bookstore of the city. These gentlemen were descendants in the sixth generation from the emigrant New England settler. The successive generations follow, the Roman characters indicating each generation from the settler.

(I) John Gladding (or Glading) is of record at Newbury, Mass., in 1666, as marrying on July 17th of that year Elizabeth Rogers, and their children of record in Newbury were: Susanna, born Oct. 6, 1668; John, Oct. 11, 1670; William, July 25, 1673; Elizabeth, Sept. 15, 1676; Mary, Jan. 14, 1679; and Hannah, born Nov. 8, 1681. Additional children, of record in Bristol, of John Gladding and his wife were: Joshua, born May 6, 1685; Daniel, Nov. 8, 1687; and Sarah, Nov. 20, 1691. According to family manuscript Mr. Gladding died April 27, 1726, aged eighty-four years.

(II) John Gladding (2), born Oct. 11, 1670, married Alice, born Oct. 31, 1663, daughter of Uzell Wardwell. Their children were. Mary, born Nov. 30, 1693; John, Sept. 8, 1694; William, Oct. 13, 1698; Jonathan, Jan. 5, 1700-01; Ebenezer, Dec. 8, 1702; Joseph, Oct. 2, 1704; Alice, March 24, 1705-06; Elizabeth, Sept. 13, 1708; Nathaniel, Dec. 16, 1709; Sarah (died May 27, 1712, aged eight days); and Sarah (2), born May 2, 1715. The mother of these children died March 3, 1720.

(III) Jonathan Gladding, born Jan. 5, 1701, of Bristol, R. I., married in 1726 (intentions published July 2, 1726) Sarah Carey, and to the marriage came children as follows: Sarah, born Sept. 1, 1727; Elizabeth, Sept. 22, 1729; Priscilla, April 29, 1733; Nathaniel, Oct. 6, 1735; Jonathan, Oct. 12, 1737; Timothy, Nov. 18, 1740; Benjamin, Jan. 22, 1743. The father of these lived and died in Bristol, his death occurring Oct. 27, 1743. The mother died Dec. 26, 1786, aged eighty-three years.

(IV) Timothy Gladding, born Nov. 18, 1740, was a merchant tailor in Providence. His shop was probably located at the corner of Westminster and Orange streets. On Oct. 9, 1768, he married Anne Jacobs, and to them were born children as follows: Nathaniel, Nathaniel (2), Timothy, Nancy, John, Betsey (married D. Pitts), Sarah G., Sylvia, Lydia (married Lowel Adams), George W., Nicholas, Sylvia (2), and Harriet.

(V) George W. Gladding, of Providence, born Sept. 9, 1787, married Sept. 20, 1814, Rebecca Hill, of that city, born Sept. 18, 1796, died July 21, 1884. Mr. Gladding was for years a prosperous and substantial man of Providence, a merchant in North Main street, associated in business with Mr. Watson, under the firm name of Watson & Gladding. Later on Mr. Gladding continued the business alone, and after his death, Aug. 1, 1839, the business was carried on by two of his sons. The old Gladding homestead—the estate of his father—was on the corner of Westminster and Orange streets. The children of George W. Gladding were: George F., Rebecca A., Benjamin H., Jane H., John H. (has a son Nelson A.), James W., Lydia Ann J. (born Oct. 29, 1823, died April 21, 1893), Harriet L., Nathaniel I., Munroe H., Melvin A. (lives in Brooklyn, N. Y.) and Charles W.

(V) Timothy Gladding (2), of Providence, son of Timothy and brother of George W., married April 3, 1805, Betsey Perin, and to them came children as follows: Millicent P., Mary Ann, Elizabeth, Mary, John P. (died at Constantine, Mich.), Henry B., Royal P., Benjamin O., Susan P., Almira D., and Olney D. (killed at the first battle of Bull Run).

(VI) Henry B. Gladding, of Providence, born Jan. 17, 1817, son of Timothy (2), married (first) in 1857 Mary E. (Ruggles) Huntington, daughter of Samuel and Elethea Ruggles, of Bolton, Conn. She died Jan. 26, 1872, and on April 15, 1874, he married (second) Louise C., daughter of John and Sally Deming, of Bolton, Conn. She died Feb. 7, 1900. By the first marriage were born children as follows: Elizabeth E., born July 5, 1859; Howard Ruggles, born March 16, 1861, now a traveling salesman, of Detroit, Mich.; Harriet Ruggles, born Feb. 1, 1863, who died Jan. 26, 1865; and Royal H., born May 19, 1869. To the second marriage came one daughter, Grace Deming, born March 14, 1875, who is now deceased.

Mr. Gladding was educated in the public schools at Providence, which he attended until he was fifteen years of age. About that time he became a clerk in a grocery store, but later went to Blackstone, Mass. After a few years he returned to Providence, and with his brother Royal P. established a book store. Of this firm "King's Handbook of Providence" has the following to say: "This long established house in the book selling and stationery trade occupied a site which for upwards of half a century had been occupied by the same business. Before the estuary of the Narragansett was solidly built over, at the present Market Square, a three-story wooden dwelling stood on the site of the Gladding Bros. store at No. 21 Westminster street (now No. 15) near Market Square. In 1830 the dwelling began to be utilized as the book store, printing office and bindery of William Marshall & Co.; in 1837 Mr. Marshall retired and was succeeded by John Edwin Brown, who in 1838 sold out to Isaac P. Cody, who associated with him Mr. Brown's brother, William Brown. In 1842 the building came into the possession of Gladding & Proud, whose successors were successively Gladding Bros., Gladding Bros. & Co., Gladding Bros. & Tibbitts, Tibbitts & Randall, Tibbitts & Shaw, and finally Tibbitts, Shaw & Co." This is now the Preston & Rounds Company of No. 64 Westminster street. No. 15, spoken of in the foregoing, is where the Rhode Island Hospital Trust building now stands. Mr. Gladding was a director in the old Jackson National Bank. In his church relations he was a member of the Beneficent Congregational Church. In his politics he was always a strong Republican, but took no active part in such matters. He was fond of his books and possessed an excellent library, and was much attached to his home.

(VII) ROYAL H. GLADDING, son of Henry B. and Mary E. (Ruggles) Gladding, was born May 19, 1869. He received his primary education in the Providence public schools, graduating from the high school in 1888. In the fall of that year he entered Brown University, and graduated therefrom with the degree of A. B. in 1892. In his work at the University he took honors in German and Rhetoric. He is a member of the Phi Beta Kappa fraternity. He began his legal training in Harvard Law School, spending one year there, and then entering the office of C. Frank Parkhurst, under whose guidance he continued his studies, and he was admitted to the Bar in 1894. From that time he was associated in practice with his former preceptor until 1905, since when he has been alone in practice. In 1898 he was elected ninth representative from the city of Providence to the General Assembly of the State. Fraternally he is a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. and A. M. He belongs to the Beneficent Congregational Church, in which he holds the office of clerk.

On Oct. 18, 1904, Mr. Gladding was married to Miss Anna Carpenter Spicer, daughter of William A. and Anna Eliza (Carpenter) Spicer. They have a daughter, Anna Spicer Gladding, born Dec. 7, 1906.

(VI) Royal P. Gladding, son of Timothy (2), was born in Providence Feb. 9, 1820, and died at Bolton, Conn., Aug. 21, 1877. He also obtained his education in the public schools of Providence, and at an early age entered business, later, with his brother Henry B. Gladding, establishing the firm of Gladding Brothers, booksellers. The history of that firm is outlined in the sketch of Henry B. Gladding.

On Oct. 8, 1856, he married Emily M. Ruggles, daughter of Samuel and Elethea Ruggles, of Bolton, Conn., a sister of the first wife of his brother Henry. She died June 24, 1894. Their children were: M. Louise, born March 18, 1865; Charles R., born July 11, 1867, died Nov. 19, 1873; and William A., born Sept. 5, 1869, died Nov. 13, 1871.

Not only were the two brothers very closely associated in business, but both were of similar tastes and had similar interests. Royal P. Gladding was a "home body," in politics a Republican but never holding public office. In his church relations he, also, was a member of the Beneficent Congregational Church. He likewise served on the board of directors of the Jackson National Bank.

ALBRO. The Albros are one of this Commonwealth's ancient families—one of approximately 270 years' standing here. Their progenitor, John Albro, in 1634, when a boy still in his teens, came to New England in the ship "Francis" from Ipswich, England, under the care of William Freeborn, whom he accompanied to Rhode Island in 1638. The following year, being an inhabitant of Portsmouth, he was granted a lot provided he would build within a year. Mr. Albro soon became one of the prominent public men of his town. He rose from a corporal to lieutenant, captain and major. He served in the town council and was often moderator of town meetings. With little exception, he was assistant from 1671 to 1686, and his name is of record as serving in various other public capacities. He married Dorothy Potter, who was born in the same year as he, 1617, and she died in 1696, he passing away in 1712.

Their children were: Samuel, Elizabeth, Mary, John and Susannah.

Of the foregoing children Samuel Albro became a resident of North Kingstown, where he held a number of public offices of trust and responsibility, being treasurer, overseer of the poor, selectman, etc. He married Isabel Lawton, and both were baptized at Trinity Church, Newport; Mr. Albro was warden of the Episcopal Church at Narragansett. He was one of the purchasers of a large tract of land in Narragansett and as well in East Greenwich. His only son, John Albro, was twice married, lived in North Kingstown, and died leaving quite a numerous posterity, as he was the father of thirteen children.

John Albro, the second son of the immigrant, married Mary Stokes, and lived in Portsmouth. Of his two sons, John married Abigail Ballou and became a resident of North Kingstown, and some of his six children settled in the town of Exeter; and the other son, Samuel, lived in Portsmouth. He married Ruth Lawton, and their children were: Samuel, Mary, John, Daniel, Jonathan, David, James, Ruth, Elizabeth, Josiah and Sarah.

This article has to deal especially with the late James Albro, an esteemed citizen of Newport, and his children, particularly his son, the late Stephen Stedman Albro, also of that city.

James Albro was married to Rhoda Gladding, daughter of Henry and Susan Gladding, who died in Newport, May 22, 1873, aged ninety-three years, two months, seven days. To Mr. and Mrs. Albro were born children as follows: Mary, who married Charles Howard; Susan, who married (first) Sherman Barker and (second) Joseph Nason; Julia, who married Henry Barker; Fannie, who married William D. Southwick; Sarah, who married Henry Hubbard; Rhoda, who married Whitman Dawley; Joseph G., who married Eliza Rundall, was a tailor by trade, and died in Attleboro, Mass.; James G., a boat builder by trade, who married Ann Spooner; Benjamin, a cooper by trade, who died in Warren, R. I., and who married Elizabeth Barton; Stephen Stedman; and David, a carpenter, who married Phebe Cooke, and died in Newport.

STEPHEN STEDMAN ALBRO, son of James and Rhoda (Gladding) Albro, was born Dec. 5, 1816, in Newport, and received his early training in the common schools of his native city. Upon leaving school he became apprenticed to the mason's trade, and after gaining a thorough knowledge of same engaged in business on his own account as a mason contractor, at which vocation he continued all of his life. He was recognized as a careful, capable business man, and in all matters pertaining to his work was upright and straightforward. He was quiet and unostentatious in his manner, but possessed a sociable, genial nature which won for him hosts of true friends.

In early manhood Mr. Albro allied himself with the church, being first a member of the First Baptist Church and later of the Central Baptist, and throughout life was active in religious and charitable movements. He served as deacon for a number of years, and for many years was superintendent of the Sunday-school. He was a staunch supporter of the cause of temperance. In his political views he was a Republican, and as such served his city as a member of the board of aldermen for several years. For many years Deacon Albro was a director of the National Exchange Bank, serving in that capacity at the time of his death.

In 1838 Mr. Albro was married (first) to Caroline Seattle, who died in 1871, the mother of three children, as follows: Stephen Lovell, a mason by trade and associated for some years in business with his father, resides in Newport, unmarried; Mary C. is unmarried and resides at home; Ellen Elizabeth died at the age of nine months. Deacon Albro was married (second) in 1872 to Emma McKenney, of Lewiston, Maine, who died in 1880, without issue. His third marriage, which occurred in 1881, was to Julia A. Barker, eldest child of the late Benajah and Mary C. (Barker) Barker, formerly of Middletown, R. I., but later of Lebanon, Conn. Mrs. Albro passed away at her home in Newport Nov. 22, 1907, in the seventy-ninth year of her age. She was a direct lineal descendant in the seventh generation—through Benajah (VI), Peleg (V), Peter (IV), Peter (III) and William (II)—of James Barker (I), who sailed from Harwich, County of Essex, England, and arrived at Plymouth, Mass., in 1626, later becoming a prominent figure in the settlement of Newport, Rhode Island.

In business circles Mr. Albro was regarded as a man of good judgment and clear insight, while as a citizen and as a neighbor he was held in the highest esteem. He died in Newport, Sept. 9, 1895.

BOWEN (Providence family). The Bowens of Providence and of the neighboring Massachusetts town of Rehoboth, whence came the Providence branch of the family, have been one of the first families of the city from the Colonial period. Since 1643, a period of 260 and more years, the name has been a continuous one in the section named. The forerunner of the family was a large land owner in Rehoboth, a portion at least of his possessions lying in what is now Barrington, R. I. A grandson of the settler, a physician by profession, of Seekonk, extended his practice into Providence in the latter quarter of the seventeenth century, and continued it for perhaps twenty years before Providence had a settled physician. This was the beginning of the long line of physicians in Providence of the Bowen name, a number of whom have risen to distinction and eminence in the profession. There was Dr. Thomas Bowen, of Rehoboth; and Dr. Jabez, of Providence; and in the succeeding generation was Dr. Ephraim Bowen, two of whose sons, Drs. William and Parndon Bowen, like their father gained great celebrity. In the next generation came Dr. William Corliss Bowen, who has been credited with being the most thoroughly educated physician of his time in the State. As is here foreshadowed, some of the early Providence Bowens were liberally educated men—several being graduates of Yale—and by talent and acquirement occupied high and commanding stations in life; a number, too, were graduates from Brown University. Few characters in the State of his time were more influential and commanding figures than Colonel and Judge Jabez Bowen, LL. D., an officer of the Revolution, lieutenant-governor of the Colony, and chief justice. Then of more recent generations have been Hon. Henry Bowen, of the legal profession, attorney-general of Rhode Island, and for some thirty years secretary of State; and another of that generation was a professor of Brown University. Among the Bowens of Providence, too, have been many men of commercial importance. The Bowens of Providence, too, have allied themselves by marriage and are connected with many of the first and wealthy families of the State, among them the Browns, the Corlisses, the Amorys, the Iveses, the Howes, the Whipples, the Olneys, the Gammells, and the Potters.

In what follows the Roman characters used designate the generations remote from the immigrant settler and American ancestor of the family.

(I) Richard Bowen, of Rehoboth, Mass., 1643, was a large land proprietor along the river "running under the bridge," called Bowen's Bridge now, the fresh-water tributary of Barrington river south from Seekonk. Mr. Bowen was a town officer June 4, 1645. He was admitted a freeman June 5, 1651. He married, March 4, 1648, Esther Sutton, and was buried Feb. 4, 1675. In his will, probated June 4, 1675, he bequeathed to his wife, Elizabeth (or Esther?), and children, Thomas, Obediah, Richard, William, Alice Wheaton, Sarah Fuller and Ruth Leverich.

(II) Thomas Bowen, of Salem, Mass., 1648, and of New London, Conn., 1657-60, removed to Rehoboth, Mass., where he died in 1663. His will of April 11th, of that year, made his wife Elizabeth, who in 1669 was the widow of Samuel Fuller, of Plymouth, Mass., executrix, and in the will he names his child, Richard, and Brother, Obediah.

(III) Dr. Richard Bowen (2), son of Thomas, born in 1658, married Jan. 9, 1683, Mercye Titus. He died in 1736. Their children were: Elizabeth, born Nov. 11, 1684; Abiah, April 10, 1687; Thomas, Aug. 20, 1689; Damaris, April 26, 1692; Jabez, Oct. 19, 1696; Ebenezer, Aug. 23, 1699; and Urania, Sept. 23, 1707. Richard Bowen as early as 1680 was engaged in the practice of medicine in Seekonk, Mass., within two miles of Providence, whose sick he attended more than twenty years before it had any settled physician within its own limits. He educated two sons to be physicians, Drs. Thomas and Jabez.

(IV) Dr. Thomas Bowen, son of Richard (2), born Aug. 20, 1689, in Rehoboth, Mass., married Aug. 8, 1710, Sarah Hunt, born in 1690, daughter of Ephraim Hunt and granddaughter of Peter of Ephraim Hunt and granddaughter of Peter of Ephraim Hunt. Mr. Bowen was a physician of Rehoboth, when he died July 17, 1774. His widow died Aug. 31, 1777. Their children were: Sarah, born June 26, 1711; Huldah, Feb. 16, 1712-13; Thomas, Oct. 3, 1714; Ephraim, Oct. 3, 1716; Oliver, Feb. 3, 1718-19; Hannah, April 30, 1721; Lucy, July 3, 1723; Benjamin, March 8, 1724; Lydia, June 18, 1727; Betty, April 1, 1729; and Mollie, Nov. 8, 1731. Thomas Bowen, as stated, was prepared by his father for the medical profession, and located with his father in Seekonk.

(V) Dr. Ephraim Bowen, son of Dr. Thomas, born Oct. 3, 1716, in Rehoboth, married Feb. 9, 1737, Mary Fenner, daughter of Thomas, and a descendant of Thomas, through Arthur and Thomas Fenner, and his wife Mary (Abbott), daughter of Daniel and granddaughter of Daniel Abbott. She died Aug. 16, 1744, and he married (second) June 10, 1746, Lydia Mawney, daughter of Col. Peter Mawney. Three children—Jabez, born June 2, 1739, Oliver, born Nov. 17, 1742, and Mary, born in July, 174—(died Aug. 23, 1844)—came to the first marriage; and the following named children came to the second: William, born March 8, 1747; Mary, Oct. 20, 1748; Sarah, July 26, 1750; Lydia, Jan. 3, 1752; Ephraim, Aug. 29, 1753; Benjamin, Oct. 17, 1755; Pardon, March 26, 1757; Benjamin (2), Nov. 9, 1759; Nancy, June 9, 1762; Betsey, March 4, 1765; and Frances, March 29, 1768. Ephraim Bowen lived in Providence with his uncle, Dr. Jabez Bowen, from the the age of nine years, and finally studied medicine with him. He settled on the site of the "Franklin House," where he died Oct. 26, 1812. Two of his seven sons, William and Pardon, became physicians. Dr. William lived opposite his father, and practiced his profession until 1832; he died at the age of eighty-six. Dr. Pardon died in 1826. These two physicians, with their father, gained great celebrity.

(VI) Jabez Bowen, LL. D., son of Dr. Ephraim, born June 2, 1739, married Dec. 19, 1762, Sarah Brown, born Sept. 24, 1742, daughter of Obediah and Mary (Harris) Brown, the former a son of James and Mary (Harris) Brown (she a daughter of Andrew and granddaughter of William Harris, who came in the ship "Lyon," from Bristol, England, to Boston, in company with his brother and Roger Williams, in 1630), grandson of John Brown and great-grandson of Chad Brown, who landed in Boston from the ship "Martin," in 1638; and the latter—Mary (Harris) Brown—a daughter of Toleration, granddaughter of Andrew and great-granddaughter of William Harris (above). Mrs. Bowen died March 17, 1800, in her fifty-eighth year, and he married (second) May 21, 1801, Peddy, daughter of Judge George Leonard, of Norton, Mass. She died in Norton Sept. 17, 1850, aged ninety years.

Jabez Bowen was prepared for college in his native town, entered Yale, and was graduated therefrom in 1757. He settled in Providence, where he was married as stated, his wife being a first cousin of the eminent merchants for whom Brown University is named. During his earlier public life he was known as Jabez Bowen, Jr., in distinction from his great-uncle, Col. and Dr. Jabez Bowen, of Providence, who died in August, 1770; a half-brother was graduated at Yale in 1766.

Although a devoted Congregationalist Mr. Bowen was an early friend of Brown University, and became one of its Fellows in 1768, and in 1785 he was promoted to the place of Chancellor (or presiding officer of the board of trustees), which he held until his death. He was one of the largest donors to the building of the first college, and a President's House, in 1770. The honorary degree of Master of Arts was given him at the first commencement, in 1769, and that of Doctor of Laws by Dartmouth College in 1800. He had an interest in science, and assisted in observing the transit of Venus in June, 1769; a letter from him with reference to these observations is preserved in President Stiles's papers in Yale library. As the struggle with Great Britain grew on, his large business interests inclined him to conservatism, but his patriotism determined him to put forth unsparingly all his commanding influence on the American side. Mr. Bowen was a member of the town council in 1773-75, and a representative in the General Assembly in 1777. He held the rank of major in the militia in 1774, was made lieutenant-colonel in 1775, and in May, 1776, was appointed colonel of the First Regiment of Providence County and served actively with that regiment in 1777. Meantime he had been placed on the Superior Court Bench, in August, 1776, of which court he became chief justice in February, 1781. He was also, in May, 1778, elected deputy governor, and with the exception of the year 1780-81 he served in that capacity until 1786, when the triumph of the disgraceful paper money party, which he had strongly opposed, relegated him to private life. Throughout the whole of the Revolutionary contest Colonel Bowen was an efficient member of the Council of War, and he repeatedly represented the Colony in Congresses of importance. He was active in providing for the needs of the French allies at Newport in 1780, and came into intimate social relations with the principal officers among them.

In 1786 Judge Bowen was appointed a delegate to the convention held at Annapolis that year to promote a commercial union of the Colonies; and was a member of the State Convention which adopted the constitution of the United States in May, 1790. Under President Washington he held the office of loan commissioner of the State. He died in Providence, May 7, 1815, in his seventy-sixth year. The children of Judge Bowen, all born to his first marriage, were: Obadiah, born Oct. 5, 1763; Oliver, April 21, 1767; Mary, June 28, 1772; Jabez, Jan. 29, 1774; Henry, Feb. 8, 1776; Horatio Gates, June 13, 1779; a son, Sept. 10, 1782; and Henry (2), Jan. 5, 1785. Of these the eldest son was graduated from Yale College in 1782, and died in 1793; two died in infancy; the daughter died in 1792; and three were graduated from Brown University in 1788, 1797 and 1802, respectively; one was professor and librarian there; and the youngest became secretary of State.

(VI) Dr. William Bowen, son of Dr. Ephraim, born March 8, 1746-47, in Providence, R. I., married Dec. 6, 1769, Sarah, daughter of Capt. George Corliss, of Providence, R. I. Mr. Bowen was educated at Harvard and Yale Colleges, passing one or two years of his college life in the former institution. He was graduated from Yale in 1766. He was familiarly known in college, as appears by his classmate Wadsworth's diary, as "Doctor Bowen," and after graduation he studied medicine with his father, and also attended medical lectures in the Medical School in Philadelphia. He settled in his native town, where he became a very popular and respected physician. Here he practised his profession until within a short time previous to his death, covering a period of more than sixty years. Dr. Bowen seemed fitted by nature for the profession he adopted. His very presence inspired hope. He combined in a remarkable degree affability and dignity in his intercourse with others. He was a polished gentleman of the old school, of most affable and winning manners, in social life singularly easy and perfectly at home. Possessing the characteristics which distinguished him, he was welcomed as a friend full of tenderness and sympathy in the families where he practised. In his religious belief Dr. Bowen was a Congregationalist, and one of the original incorporators of the First Congregational Society in Providence, in 1770. He educated a large number of pupils, among them Drs. Wheaton, Fiske and Carpenter. He avoided surgical practice, but in diseases of women and children he excelled; and he was particularly skillful in the treatment of fevers, and a close observer of nature. His dress was a drab coat, vest and shorts, with yellow topped boots; his hair combed back and sometimes powdered, and curled on the temples, and a queue behind. He died at Providence Jan. 17, 1832, aged nearly eighty-five years. To Dr. Bowen and his wife were born children as follows:

(1) Elizabeth married in 1799 Thomas Amory, and to them came: Mary; Harriet, who married Robert H. Ives; John; Julia, who married Rt. Rev.

Bishop Mark Antony DeWolfe Howe; Louise; Anna; Helen, who married William Raymond Lee; and Thomas.

(2) Sarah married in 1816 William S. Skinner.

(3) Maria married Hon. John Whipple, and there came to them: John; Maria, who married Rev. Dr. Francis Vinton; Elizabeth, who married Prof. William Gammell, of Brown University; Sarah C., who married (first) Robert P. Swann, of Virginia, and (second) William H. Potter, of Kingston, R. I.; Samuel, who died young; Harriet, wife of William S. Slater; and William.

(4) Harriet married in 1815 Commodore Charles Morris, U. S. N., whose children were: Charles; Harriet, who married Rev. Dr. Coolidge; Louise, who married Dr. W. W. Corcoran, of Washington; Elizabeth, who married Dr. John L. Fox; Helen; R. Murray; Dr. William B.; Maria, who married Rev. Mr. Duncan; George; Julia, who married Dr. Addison.

(5) William Corliss, of whom more presently.

(VI) Dr. Pardon Bowen, son of Dr. Ephraim, born March 26, 1757, in Providence, married Dec. 10, 1780, Elizabeth Ward. Dr. Bowen was graduated from Brown University in 1775. After the usual preparatory course of study under his brother, Dr. William Bowen, he in 1779 embarked as surgeon of a privateer, fitted out for the destruction of British commerce. The ship was soon captured and carried into Halifax, where during an imprisonment of seven months he endured no common privations and suffering. After being regularly exchanged he returned home, but soon after engaged in repeated enterprises of the kind, with similar results, until, after a hard-fought battle of two hours, his vessel gained a signal victory over the enemy, and his prize money made some amends for his suffering and privations.

Resolved to establish himself in his native town, he in the year 1788 attended lectures in Philadelphia, and subsequently commenced practice in the various branches of his profession. His progress, though slow at first, gradually acquired speed, until he attained the highest eminence, both as a physician and surgeon, in the State. His kind and conciliatory manner and warm-hearted benevolence won the esteem and admiration of all persons.

Dr. Bowen contributed occasionally to the medical journals of the day, and in the fourth volume of Hosack's and Francis's Register may be found an account, from his pen, of the yellow fever as it prevailed in Providence in the year 1805. Desirous to keep pace with the progress of the profession, he was diligent in reading those periodicals which were calculated to keep one informed in all that related to discoveries and improvements.

Dr. Bowen was an active member of the Rhode Island Medical Society, and for seven years its presiding officer. He was also a Fellow of the American Antiquarian Society, and a member of the board of trustees of Brown University. In the winter of 1820 the professional usefulness of the eminent and beloved physician was terminated by an attack of hemiplegia, which seized him without premonition, and threatened the immediate extinction of life. The worst fears of his friends were not, however, thus suddenly realized. He partially recovered the use of his limbs, and not long afterward retired to the residence of his son-in-law, Franklin Greene, Esq., of Warwick, R. I. It was his favorite retreat from the toils of professional life, and was destined to receive his last sigh in the bosom of an affectionate family on the 25th of October, 1826.

"By his friends Dr. Bowen was a man, indeed, to be ardently loved, for they daily witnessed the benignity of his nature, the engaging suavity of his manners, the variety and richness and clear intelligence of his conversation, the generous expansion of his sensibilities, and the inflexible rectitude of his principles; the pressure of business never made him careless of the feelings and interests of others. Indeed, he was remarkable for that moral cultivation which respects the rights of all; and few showed a nicer discernment of the essential peculiarities which distinguish one being from another, and a more benevolent and delicate adjustment of all in every class. Notwithstanding his elevated reputation as a physician, and the opulence of his intellectual attainments, he was on all occasions a pattern of engaging modesty, seeking rather to support the happiness of others than to win their applause. Singularly exempt from the feverish thirst for distinction which is allayed by the cheap honors of society, he was happy in his walk of revered but unobtrusive usefulness, ministering to the comforts of his fellow creatures, when bereaved of health or oppressed by poverty, or sinking in death. Though for nearly half a century engaged in the active discharge of professional duty, his heart retained its original purity, uncorrupted by an undue attachment to wealth or fame. His fortune was never ample, but the stream of his benevolence flowed with an equal and unchecked current. Such were some of the prominent characteristics of Dr. Pardon Bowen. He had high capacities and he exerted them for the good of his kind. His life, in all its stages, was a beautiful exhibition of the virtues, and, at its close, an example of Christian holiness. His pure spirit while on earth took a wide and lofty range, and now that it has ascended to its Maker the belief is not presumptuous that it is gladdened by the joys of Heaven, and sublimed by the contemplation of immortality."

(VII) HON. HENRY BOWEN, son of Hon. Jabez, born Jan. 5, 1785, in Providence, R. I., married in 1808 Harriet Amanda Munro, daughter of Captain Munro, of Providence, who died in 1857. Mr. Bowen was prepared for college in the schools of Providence, and entered Brown University, from which he was graduated in 1802. After his graduation he commenced the study of law in Schenectady, N. Y., and completed his preparation for the profession under the direction of Hon. Levi Lincoln, at Worcester, Mass., then attorney-general of Massachusetts. He was admitted to the Bar and in 1806 located in Providence, R. I., in the practice of law.

Mr. Bowen was elected as an anti-Federalist attorney-general of Rhode Island in 1817, and in 1819 he became secretary of State. After a service of thirty years in that relation to the State he retired from office, in 1849, this owing to defective hearing. "His term of office with two exceptions is the longest in the annals of Rhode Island [1880] and his influence was very largely felt in shaping the forms of legislation in the State." Mr. Bowen died April 26, 1867. To the marriage of Mr. Bowen and Miss Munro were born children as follows: Harriet, who married Charles Cheney, of South Manchester, Conn.; Henry L., who married Elizabeth Whiting Gordon, of Norwich, and has Caroline and Charlotte W.; William H.; and Charles, who married Miss Gilman, daughter of Rev. Mr. Gilman, of Charleston, S. C., and has two children, Lillian and Gilman Bowen, of Tiverton, Rhode Island.

(VII) Dr. William Corliss Bowen, son of Dr. William, married March 25, 1812, Rebecca Olney, born in 1788, daughter of Col. Christopher and Jemima (Potter) Olney, he a descendant of Thomas Olney, who came from England in the ship "Planter," in 1635, to Salem, through Epenetus, James and Jonathan. Col. Christopher Olney was a manufacturer, the village of Olneyville taking its name from him, his mills being located at that point. During the Revolution he was a patriot, held a colonelcy and was in command at the island of Rhode Island in 1781. The only child born to Dr. William Corliss Bowen and his wife was William Corliss.

Dr. Bowen studied in Brown University, then in Union College, at Schenectady, N. Y., from which latter institution he was graduated in 1803. For three years following his graduation he studied medicine under the direction of his uncle, Dr. Pardon Bowen, at Providence, R. I. He went abroad in 1806, and furthered his medical studies at Edinburgh. He received his degree in 1807, and for four years thereafter continued to perfect himself by study in Europe. He passed some time in Holland and Paris, and for nearly three years was a private pupil of Sir Astley Cooper, in London. Returning to the United States in 1811, he located in the practice of medicine in Providence. For some two years he was professor of chemistry in Brown University, and while there he engaged in making a course of experiments from the inhalation of noxious vapors and gas. He died April 23, 1815. Dr. Bowen was perhaps the most thoroughly educated physician of his time in the State. In his death the profession lost a most promising member.

(VIII) WILLIAM HORATIO BOWEN, son of Hon. Henry, born Jan. 7, 1824, on College street, Providence, married (first) Oct. 13, 1847, Edna B. Goodhue, and (second) April 30, 1857, Cordelia James, daughter of Gen. Charles T. James. Mr. Bowen in boyhood attended the public schools of Providence, and for a time pursued a course in Brown University, not graduating however. He began a business career as an agent for sailing vessels carrying freight between Providence and New York. Following this work he became a flour merchant on South Water street, Providence. Still later he became identified with the manufacturing business, as agent for the mills at Lymanville, and as such continued throughout the remainder of his active business life.

Mr. Bowen took an active interest in the public affairs of his native city, and served it officially in a number of capacities, and for a long period of years. For twelve years he was an efficient alderman from the Second ward, and for nearly as long he served the city as license commissioner. He passed away at the old home, No. 70 College street, May 6, 1897. His widow and four children survive, three of them born to the first marriage. The first Mrs. Bowen passed away Dec. 26, 1855, aged twenty-seven years. The children are: (1) Henry Bowen was born Aug. 5, 1852. (2) Edna G. was born Nov. 30, 1849. (3) Joseph Tilton, born April 1, 1854, lives in Chicago. He married Louisa Haddock de Coven June 1, 1886, and has children: John de Coven, born June 16, 1887; Joseph Tilton, born Sept. 19, 1888; Helen Haddock, born June 24, 1890; Louise de Coven, born June 7, 1892. (4) Frank, born Nov. 6, 1864, is unmarried. William H. Bowen was a man of the old school, with courteous manner and genial way, and he was much loved and respected by all who knew him.

(IV) Dr. Jabez Bowen, son of Dr. Richard, born Oct. 19, 1696, married Dec. 27, 1727 (perhaps his second wife), Jeanna Salisbury, and his children were: Dr. Benjamin; Nathan, who died in 1814; Obediah; Levi, who was drowned; Merriam, who married Samuel Goff; Jemima, who married Stephen Bowen and Johanna, who married Nathan Bliss.

(V) Dr. Benjamin Bowen, son of Dr. Jabez, born Sept. 17, 1727, in Providence, R. I., married the widow of Peter Simons, of Newport, R. I. Dr. Bowen succeeded to his father's practice.

(VI) Dr. Joseph Bowen, son of Dr. Benjamin, born in 1755 or 1756, in Providence, married Dec. 8, 1782, Hannah Simons. Dr. Bowen lived to advanced age, dying in Glocester, R. I., Aug. 12, 1832. He served as a surgeon in the Revolution on the privateer "Chance." In 1835 Congress ordered published a list of all the soldiers of the Revolution who were on the pension roll, with full particulars of the service rendered. The list was furnished, and on it appears the name of "Joseph Bowen, surgeon, mate, Providence county, allowance per year, $368.66; total so far received, $542.99; R. I. Navy, placed on the roll Oct. 27, 1832; commencement of pension March 4, 1832; age 77; died Aug. 12, 1832."

(VII) CLOVIS HILDOVIS BOWEN, son of Dr. Joseph, born May 9, 1801, at the old Bowen homestead, corner of North Main and Bowen streets, Providence, married (first) April 30, 1840, Sarah S. Congdon. She died March 2, 1842, and he married (second) Aug. 1, 1849, at Killingly, Conn., Nancy W. Steere, she a descendant of John Steere, of Providence, 1660, whose wife was Hannah, daughter of Rev. William Wickenden, and they the founders of the Steere family of Rhode Island, from whom her descent is through Samuel and Hannah (Field), Anthony (1716-1802) and Rachel Comstock (1711-1816), and Enoch (1748-1826) and Zerviah (Mowry).

Clovis H. Bowen was for thirty-two consecutive years town clerk of the town of Glocester, R. I. His death occurred Jan. 15, 1875, when he was aged seventy-three years. His widow passed away Dec. 3, 1902. One child was born to the first marriage, Hannah Robinson, April 16, 1841, who died April 16, 1842. The children born to the second marriage were: Edward Steere, born May 9, 1850; Clovis Henry, April 23, 1853; Helen Norton, Nov. 21, 1854; Hannah Simon, Aug. 7, 1857; and Herbert Anthony, Aug. 25, 1861.

(VIII) EDWARD S. BOWEN, son of Clovis H., born May 9, 1850, in the village of Chepachet, town of Glocester, R. I., married in September, 1887, Elma S. Brown, daughter of Joseph F. Brown, of Providence. Their children, Edith, Joseph Brown, Faith and Harold Clovis, are all at home.

Mr. Bowen was liberally educated, pursuing his studies first in the public schools, then took a partial course at the noted Connecticut Literary Institute, at Suffield, Conn. He began his business career in the capacity of bookkeeper in the Glen River Woolen Mills at Pascoag, R. I. After two years' service with this company he went to Pawtucket, where he entered the employ of Smith Grant & Co., and has ever since continued with that concern and its successor, the Newell Coal & Lumber Co., of which corporation he has been treasurer since its incorporation, in 1888. In politics Mr. Bowen is a Democrat. He is a member of the Franklin Society of Providence. He is a director in the Slater Cotton Company and the Slater Trust Company, and was of its predecessor, the old Slater National Bank. He is a member of the Pawtucket Congregational Church.

(VIII) To the marriage of Mr. Clovis Henry Bowen, son of Clovis Hildovis, born in Glocester, R. I., April 23, 1853, married Sept. 6, 1877, Mary

E., daughter of Samuel S. Collyer, of Pawtucket, R. I., came one child, Edward C., born Dec. 5, 1884.

Mr. Bowen was educated in the schools of Franklin, Mass., and at the Military Academy at West Point. He began his business career as a clerk for Smith Grant & Co., of Pawtucket, and after a year's service with that establishment entered the employ of C. H. George & Co., of Providence. Subsequently he was a bookkeeper for the Barstow Stove Company, resigning this position to take charge of the affairs of N. S. Collyer & Co. This company was later reorganized as the Collyer Machine Company, of which Mr. Bowen became general manager and treasurer, and still sustains such relations to it. Mr. Clovis Henry Bowen was the organizer of the Collyer Insulated Wire Co., of Pawtucket, R. I., in 1890, has been its treasurer and general manager since that time and has built up a flourishing institution. He is one of the directors of the Slater Trust Company and a director of the United Wire & Supply Company, of Providence, Rhode Island.

Mr. Bowen's political affiliations are with the Republican party. He is a member of the Pawtucket Business Men's Association and is both active and prominent in Masonic circles, being a Mason of the thirty-second degree. Mr. Bowen has been a member of the order of the Royal Arcanum for twenty-five years and has taken an active and special interest in its insurance features. He has been for the last seven years a member of the National Body of this order, being now the elective member of the Executive Council, this position being the fourth highest office in the national organization. He is also past grand regent of the Royal Arcanum of the State of Rhode Island. The national organization has over 300,000 members, and has paid out to its policy-holders on death losses over $90,000,000. He is a member of the Pawtucket Congregational Church.

BRAYTON (Cranston-Providence families in line of Lodowick 1st). The Brayton family has been one of the strong, forceful families of Rhode Island since along in the middle of the seventeenth century, and some branches of it especially conspicuous in public affairs, Hon. Francis Brayton, the ancestor, of Portsmouth, serving several years as commissioner and a number of years as deputy in the Colonial Assembly. His grandson, Hon. Thomas Brayton, of Portsmouth and East Greenwich, also was a member of the Assembly from each town. Then in still a later generation and all in the same line, that indicated in the foregoing, is the present Hon. Walter Francis Brayton, an agriculturist and horticulturist, of Cranston, who for many years has represented his town in the lower branch of the Assembly and as well in the Senate, and is yet most active and useful in citizenship, and only a little beyond the prime of life.

Again in this same line, that of Lodowick Brayton (1), of Cranston, and in an earlier generation, was the late Hon. Lodowick Brayton, of Cranston and Providence, long one among the most prominent business men of Providence and largely interested in enterprises in various parts of the State, and a most successful and capable business man who figured in and about the capital city for approximately forty years, one who rose to positions of large responsibility both in municipal government and in corporations, bank president, street railway president, etc. And two of the latter's sons, one but recently deceased and the other still active in business life, have worthily sustained the father's reputation. Reference is made to the late Robert E. Brayton of Riverpoint and Providence, who for years was associated with his father and brother, the present William E. Brayton, now active and prominent in the business life of Providence, Riverpoint and the State. These brothers were associated together in the foundry business at Riverpoint and interested in other enterprises.

The family history and genealogy in the line indicated in the foregoing, beginning with the American progenitor of the family and in chronological order, follows:

(I) Francis Brayton was early at Portsmouth, R. I., where he was received as an inhabitant, gave his engagement unto the government and propounded for a lot of land. He was made a freeman in 1655, was a commissioner in 1662-63, and deputy in 1669, 1670, 1671, 1679 and 1684. Mr. Brayton was born in 1612, and died in 1692. The Christian name of his wife was Mary. The children of this Mr. Brayton were: Francis, Mary and Stephen.

(II) Francis Brayton (2), son of Francis, was also of the town of Portsmouth, R. I., where he was made a freeman in 1672. He married March 18, 1671, Mary, daughter of Thomas and Mary Fish. The death of Mr. Brayton occurred Jan. 30, 1718, and that of his widow April 4, 1747. His children were: Mary, born Jan. 1, 1676; Thomas, born June 14, 1681; Francis, born March 17, 1684; Martha; Elizabeth; and Sarah.

(III) Thomas Brayton, son of Francis (2), born June 14, 1681, married Aug. 23, 1704, Mary Freeborn, born Aug. 24, 1679, daughter of Gideon and Mary (Bromer) Freeborn. Mr. Brayton was of Portsmouth and East Greenwich, R. I. He was deputy in 1719 and 1721 from Portsmouth, and from East Greenwich in 1725 and 1727. He died in 1728, and his widow passed away in 1761. His will was proved in 1728. His children were: Mary, born July 1, 1708, Hannah, born March 28, 1711; Thomas, born July 21, 1713; Francis, born Sept. 21, 1715; Gideon, born Jan. 27, 1718; and Francis (2), born March 30, 1721.

(IV) Thomas Brayton (2), son of Thomas, born July 21, 1713, married Jan. 17, 1732, Mary Phillips, of Portsmouth, R. I., and they were residents of Washington village in the town of Coventry, R. I., where he owned a large waterpower which he improved, erecting mills. Mrs. Brayton died Dec. 18, 1771. Their children were: Thomas, born Feb. 17, 1733; Rebeckah, March 16, 1734-35; David, May 31, 1737; William, Jan. 24, 1738; Mary, Feb. 24, 1739 (died Feb. 28, 1739); Gideon, May 26, 1742; Jonathan, Oct. 9, 1745.

(V) Jonathan Brayton, son of Thomas (2) and Mary (Phillips) Brayton, born Oct. 9, 1745, married Nov. 20, 1763, Freelove Brayton, born June 29, 1743, and their children were: Rufus, born Jan. 18, 1765; Samuel, Oct. 16, 1766; Lodowick, May 25, 1770; Rebecca, Aug. 30, 1772; Phebe, March 14, 1775; and Elizabeth, Dec. 21, 1780. Mr. Brayton came into possession of a large part of his father's estate. His death occurred in 1816. He resided the latter part of his life with his son, Samuel Brayton, at Nicholas Corner, near Wickford.

(VI) Lodowick Brayton, son of Jonathan, born May 25, 1770, in Washington village, married (first) Nov. 21, 1793, Hannah Burton, daughter of George Burton, of Cranston, and sister of Judge Burton, of that same town. One son, William, was born to this marriage, March 23, 1795, and died May 10, 1848. Mr. Brayton married (second) Elizabeth Knight, daughter of Deacon Stephen Knight, of Scituate. Their children were: Robert, born May 5, 1800, died Oct. 19, 1802; Robert (2), born July 27, 1802, went to western New York; Alfred K., born Sept. 8, 1804, died in 1860; Hannah, born Aug. 21, 1806, died in 1871; Philip F., born Aug. 23, 1809, died in 1850; Jonathan and Stephen, twins, born June 12, 1811 (the latter deceased in infancy); Stephen (2), born Nov. 6, 1813, died in 1833; Lodowick, born Sept. 28, 1815; Samuel H., born Oct. 13, 1817, has children), Augusta, Lillis (married George O. Gorton), Hebert and Henrietta M.; Nehemiah, born April 21, 1820; Edward, born July 9, 1822, died in infancy; Edward W. and Francis E., twins, born Dec. 10, 1823, the latter deceased in 1843, while the former went to California, lived around and at San Jose, and died there. The father of these children resided in Washington village, then took up his residence in Cranston, near what is now Oak Lawn.

(VII) Lodowick Brayton (2), son of Lodowick, born in 1815 in Cranston, R. I., married (first) Ruth Sweet, daughter of Matthew Sweet, and (second) Laura N. Turner, daughter of Stukley Turner, a well known citizen of Cranston, R. I. Six children were born to the first marriage and two to the second, as follows: William E., born Feb. 17, 1841, is mentioned below; Robert E., born June 11, 1843, is also mentioned further on; Mary Elizabeth died young; Emma F. married Herbert N. Fenner, president of the New England Butt Company of Providence, and has had two sons, Harry Brayton (born June 3, 1871), deceased, and Herbert Lodowick (born Feb. 14, 1891); Clara

Leroy; and Julia. By the second marriage: Clara T., who married G. Richmond Parsons; and Laura, who married Gardner C. Sims.

Mr. Lodowick Brayton was one of the very prominent and successful men of Providence and of the State of Rhode Island. He was reared on a farm, his father being a well-to-do farmer of Cranston, this State. Along in the middle fifties, or a little earlier, Mr. Brayton became identified with the interests of the city of Providence, of which and its vicinity he was ever afterward a prominent character. As the years passed his business was enlarged and his interests increased until he became financially one of the solid and substantial men of the city; he, too, was ever alive to the city's interests, enterprising and progressive. In 1868 he was elected an alderman from his ward—the Eighth—and he was re-elected to that body in 1870, 1871 and 1872. From October, 1876, to November, 1880, he was water commissioner. He was trustee under the mortgage of the Providence & Springfield railroad from August, 1872, until the time of his death. Mr. Brayton was also one of the commissioners appointed in December, 1883, for building the bridge over the Seekonk river. He had holdings in the New England Butt Company, of which corporation he was president at the time of his death. He also dealt largely in real estate. He was second president of the Union Horse Railway Company, Providence. He, too, was one of the firm of S. Colvin & Co., machinists, at Riverpoint, R. I. He was the principal stockholder in the L. Brayton Company, also located at Riverpoint. He was elected a director of the Union Railway Company March 5, 1874, and president May 1, 1876. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and purchased the old Quaker Meeting House in Oak Lawn and gave it to the Baptists.

It goes without saying that Mr. Brayton was a most capable business man, one of far-sighted and sound judgment. He was a commanding figure, tall and large, possessing a genial nature. His loss to the city and State was keenly felt. His death occurred at his home on High street, Providence, June 21, 1884.

(VIII) William E. Brayton, son of Lodowick (2), born in Warwick, married May 17, 1864, Ellen M. Brown, daughter of Nelson Brown. They have two children: Nellie E., born Aug. 5, 1866, married Frank C. Blake, of Providence; and Ruth, born June 6, 1876, married Walter C. Nye, of Providence.

(VIII) ROBERT E. BRAYTON, son of Lodowick (2), born in Cranston, R. I., June 11, 1843, married Dec. 12, 1866, Lavina Elsbree, daughter of William Elsbree, Jr. They have no children.

Robert E. Brayton was sent to the East Greenwich Academy as soon as he was able as a boy to leave home. He was a pupil in that most excellent school for several terms, and then took a course in bookkeeping and penmanship at Scholfield's Business College in Providence. Thus well equipped and his school days over, he became identified with his father in many of the latter's business enterprises in and about Providence. He took entire charge of the foundry at Riverpoint in about 1864, assuming the duties of supervision and management which had heretofore rested on his father's shoulders. In all his business relations with his father and vice versa, there was always a strong interdependence, and throughout their lives a rare comradeship of father and son existed. Prior to the removal of the machine shop to Riverpoint he and his father were sole owners of the foundry, but after that he became interested in the machine shop and his brother William acquired an interest in the foundry. The machine shop was owned by the corporation of Stephen Colvin & Co., the other actively interested parties being his brother, William E., Stephen Colvin and Horatio N. Remington. Mr. Brayton was a good business man, and was known as a man possessed of the best of business judgment, and his counsel was much sought after by his friends and associates at Riverpoint. He was one of the substantial men of Providence, in which city he had made his place of residence for fifteen or twenty years before his death, his home being on Broadway. He had previously lived for a number of years in the handsome residence adjoining that of Henry L. Greene, at Riverpoint, and which on his removal to Providence he sold to Stephen A. Colvin. His whole business life of twenty-two years was spent in the interest of Riverpoint, and no single individual, his father excepted, did more to promote its welfare. After the death of his father he became largely interested in real estate. He was formerly a director of the Globe Bank of Providence, and at the time of his death and for many years prior a director of the Centreville Bank. He was of a retiring disposition, but genial and social to those who knew him well. He was a great reader, especially of French history and of biography. In politics he was a strong Republican. He was essentially a domestic man, and a great lover of good horses. His death, March 4, 1902, was the result of an accident; he was struck by a train on the Consolidated railroad tracks a short distance from his foundry, between that and the station at Riverpoint. He was on a business errand and was taking a short cut, as he had many times before, and was instantly killed by a passenger train. He was a man highly respected and esteemed for his many public and private virtues. Descending from an excellent ancestry and inheriting those qualities which made the performance of a duty a primary and binding obligation, Mr. Brayton's life was in all its relations most exemplary.

WILLIAM ELSBREE, father of Mrs. Brayton, was born in Blackstone, Mass., Dec. 12, 1823, son of William and Lavinia (Place) Elsbree, and grandson of Ephraim and Ruth (Boomer) Elsbree, of Fall River, Mass. William Elsbree married Hannah P. Cudworth, daughter of Barnabas Cudworth, a soldier of the Revolution, and granddaughter of ——— Cudworth, also a soldier in the Revolutionary army.

William Elsbree was reared in Blackstone, Mass., and he lived some years in Albion. When about twenty-five years of age he removed to Providence, and there made his home until after the Civil war, when he moved to Cranston, and purchased what was known as the Dr. Greene farm, and there he spent the remainder of his life. He was a contractor, and one of the largest in Providence, where he carried on his business. He built a section of the Providence & Worcester Railroad and finished others. In his business he used from forty to sixty horses, and gave employment at times to an hundred men. He widened Broadway, and planted the shade trees which are now standing on either side of it. With Governor Sprague he organized the First Rhode Island Battery, furnishing all the horses necessary for its equipment. From this time on it became his work to organize the batteries sent out from the State, and in this work he did most efficient service. In politics he was a Democrat, and he was a natural leader of men. For ten years he was a member of the town council of Cranston, and was such at the time of his death. For a number of years he was a member of the school committee, and he took a deep interest in the welfare of the schools. He represented Cranston for a number of years in both the Senate and the House of the Rhode Island General Assembly. Large-hearted and generous to a fault, he responded to the call of need from whatever source it came, but particularly was he kind to his own employes when in need. In his unselfish devotion to the best interests of the town and in his patriotic devotion to his country in the Civil war, when, though not in the enlisted service, he gave unsparingly of his means and time, he left a heritage to his children, the memory of a well spent life and of duty well done. He died in 1880, at the age of fifty-seven years. His two children were: Lavinia, who married Robert E. Brayton; and William S.

ANDREWS (Providence family, line of Capt. Ebenezer). Through the greater part of the last one hundred years there have figured quite prominently in the business of Providence several generations of the Andrews family, descendants of John Andrews, of Boston, Mass. We refer especially to Capt. Ebenezer Andrews and some of his descendants, among whom was the late Stephen Decatur Andrews and the latter's son, the late Clarence Carroll Andrews, all of whom, either together or in turn, were largely and successfully engaged in the hay, grain and salt business, becoming men of means, substantial and influential citizens of Providence.

Wm. H. Hunt

There had been here at Providence, however, earlier members of this same Massachusetts Andrews family, one Zephaniah Andrews settling here in 1756 and living here the remainder of his life. There follows in chronological order from the earliest known American ancestor the antecedents of this Providence race of Andrews and something of the lives of those active in the business and social world of Providence.

(I) John Andrews appears in Boston as early as 1656, a cooper by occupation. A family Bible has recorded in it that he was "a sea-cooper, and came from Wales to America." Mr. Andrews married Hannah, daughter of Edmond Jackson, of Boston, and their children were: John, born Nov. 21, 1656 (died when young); Hannah, born Feb. 20, 1658; Susanna, born Aug. 12, 1659; Martha, born Dec. 5, 1660; Mary, baptized Feb. 4, 1661; John, born Sept. 20, 1662; James, born Dec. 1, 1664, (died when young); Edmond, born Nov. 4, 1665; James, born March 17, 1667; and Samuel, born May 18, 1668. The father died June 25, 1679, at Boston.

(II) Capt. John Andrews, son of John, the settler, born Sept. 20, 1662, in Boston, married (first) Alice, born July 6, 1666, daughter of John and Alice Shaw, of Weymouth; she died Feb. 1, 1735, and he married (second) Mary, widow of Jacob Barney and daughter of Rev. Samuel Danforth, fourth minister of Taunton, Massachusetts.

Captain Andrews was a housewright. He purchased in 1692 several tracts of land and a dwelling-house in what is now Bristol, R. I., then "New Bristol," Mass., and resided there for a period. In 1701 he sold this property and purchased a farm in Taunton, Mass., including a water privilege, on the bank of Three-Mile river, where, with Nathaniel Linkon, he built a gristmill and sawmill, the location then taking the name of Andrews' Mills, which it retained about one hundred years, and is now Westville. Here Captain Andrews resided the remainder of his life, a man highly esteemed. He held various town offices, was chairman of the board of selectmen four years, and also deputy sheriff. He died July 25, 1742, aged eighty years. The children born to Captain Andrews and his wife Alice were: Alice; John, born in 1686; Edmond; Samuel; Seth; Hannah; Martha, and Susanna.

(III) Samuel Andrews, son of John, married (first) Elizabeth Emerson; she died March 14, 1724, and he married (second) Mary, daughter of Ebenezer Pitts, of Dighton, Mass. It appears by Bible record his children born to Elizabeth were: Samuel, Elizabeth and Ruth. His children born to his wife Mary, all in Dighton, were: Ebenezer, born Jan. 10, 1726; John, born March 13, 1729; Elkanah, born March 4, 1731; Stephen, born Dec. 22, 1734; Mary, born Nov. 30, 1736; Zephaniah, born Feb. 9, 1738; Mary, born Aug. 2, 1741; and Job, born April 2, 1744.

(IV) Ebenezer Andrews, born Jan. 10, 1726, in Dighton, Mass., settled in Bristol, N. Y., in 1795, and died there May 21, 1808. He married (first) Elizabeth, daughter of Abraham and Anna Shaw, of Dighton, who was born Sept. 15, 1726, and who died May 3, 1767. On Dec. 24, 1768, he married (second) Mary Francis, of Dighton, who died in 1808. His children were: Ebenezer, born June 4, 1752; Melicent, born April 5, 1754; Stephen, born April 4, 1756 (died Oct. 5, 1756); Stephen (2), born Aug. 26, 1757; Lydia, born Sept. 3, 1759; Sabrina, born Feb. 4, 1762; Caroline, born March 14, 1765. To the second marriage were born: Samuel, born July 12, 1771; Benjamin, born Feb. 28, 1775; Mary; Sally, born in October, 1781; Betsey, born in Dighton; and Joseph.

(V) Stephen Andrews, born in Dighton, Mass., Aug. 26, 1757, son of Ebenezer, died there April 10, 1805. He married (first), Sept. 30, 1782, Deborah Williams, of Dighton, who died in 1787, and (second) Hannah Williams, sister of his first wife. She died Sept. 8, 1848. To the first marriage were born: Stephen, born at Dighton, Aug. 11, 1783, and Capt. Ebenezer born May 30, 1785. To the second marriage three children were born: Nancy, born April 9, 1793; Joseph, born Jan. 22, 1795; and Polly Williams, born Aug. 12, 1798.

(VI) Capt. Ebenezer Andrews, son of Stephen, born May 30, 1785, was of Dighton, Mass. He was an old East India sea captain and in company with John and Jesse Eddy, of Fall River, had built the brig "Columbia" near Berkeley bridge, whence it was launched in 1830, his son, the late Stephen D. Andrews, of Providence and Dighton, being on her at the launching. Captain Andrews was also commissioned to purchase the whaleship "Gold Hunter," in 1832, the first whaling craft to be sent from Fall River, which vessel was then known as the "Troy." He moved his family to Providence in 1837, and established there the hay, grain and salt business which he, his son and grandson in turn so successfully conducted. Captain Andrews retired from this business in 1848. He then moved to Dighton, Mass., where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred in 1858. On March 10, 1814, he married Susan, daughter of Ephraim Hathaway, of Dighton.

(VII) STEPHEN DECATUR ANDREWS, son of Capt. Ebenezer, was born Feb. 23, 1822. He married Rebecca W. Stone, of Philadelphia, born March 11, 1824. His primary education was received in the Broad Cove school, and in a building which stood on the site of the present school-house in Dighton. His parents removing when he was a small boy to Fall River, he attended the public schools of that city. He later furthered his studies in the Kingston (R. I.) Academy, and in the Middleboro (Mass.) Academy, spending three years in the former and one in the latter institution. Still later he was for a period a student in a private school on Greene street, Providence, R. I., of which Mr. Hiram Fuller was principal and Miss Margaret Fuller, afterward Countess D'Ossoli, was assistant. At the age of sixteen years young Andrews entered the office of Manton & Fisher, cotton merchants, as clerk, where he remained for ten years, and on the retirement of his father, in 1848, succeeded him in the business above described. In time he became one of the largest importers of salt in New England, and he went into the hay business extensively, and was very successful. At that time the business was located on Long Wharf, where the Vaughn building now stands. The site of Custom House street was then Water. Later the business was removed to a building at the corner of Dyer and Custom House streets, and after that to the building now occupied on Dyer street.

Mr. Andrews became agent for a line of sailing vessels running to Philadelphia; afterward agent for the Keystone Line of steamers, and then for the Clyde Line, running between Providence and Philadelphia. He retired from active business Jan. 1, 1894, and then took up his residence in Dighton, making frequent visits to his children in Providence and in the West. On his retirement he was succeeded in business by his son, Clarence C. Andrews, the firm name being S. D. Andrews' Son.

Stephen D. Andrews belonged to the Providence Marine Society for many years, and at the time of his death was its oldest member. He traveled extensively, his business taking him to several of the West Indies. In 1885 he went to Idaho, visiting several cattle ranches, afterward continuing to San Francisco and southern California. In 1886 business called him to Caracas, Venezuela, La Guayra, Trinidad, and several of the Windward Islands. In 1888 he took a trip to St. Croix, one of the Danish West Indies, spending three months there, and visiting a number of other islands. In 1894 he visited New Orleans and Florida, and in 1896 made another trip to the latter State, where he purchased an orange grove. He made numerous trips South and West, and attended the Crystal Palace, Centennial, Columbian and Atlanta Expositions.

While still employed as a cotton broker's clerk Mr. Andrews was married to Miss Rebecca A. Stone, of Hollidaysburg, Pa., who died in 1898. Their five children were: Ada Alice (Mrs. Charles L. Stafford), Helen MacFarland (Mrs. George A. Dodge), and Clarence Carroll (the latter now deceased), all of Providence; Marion S., Mrs. Fred B. Spelman, of Duluth, Minn., and Fannie, Mrs. Harry W. Emerson, of Lafayette, Indiana.

For thirty-one years Mr. and Mrs. Andrews resided in a house on Angell street which Mr. Andrews built in 1862. After his retirement from business this home was given up and they spent much time visiting their daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews in 1895 celebrated their golden wedding at the home of their eldest daughter, Mrs. Stafford, when all the children and grandchildren, numbering thirty-one, were present.

(VIII) CLARENCE CARROLL ANDREWS, only son of Stephen D., was born Dec. 10, 1852, in Providence, R. I. He received his education in the University Grammar School and at Brown University, entering the latter institution with the class of 1873. He did not graduate, however, as after pursuing his studies in the University for two years he decided upon a commercial career and with this end in view dropped out of school and became associated with his father, who was then conducting an extensive business in the hay, grain and salt line. The senior member of the firm retired Jan. 1, 1894, and the business was thereafter carried on by the son under the name of S. D. Andrews' Son. This was one of the best known business houses in Providence, it having been established by the grandfather in 1842. In February, 1905, it was incorporated as the Andrews & Spelman Company, under which name it is now conducted. Mr. Andrews was a man of quiet disposition, very domestic in his habits, caring little for club or political life. He was a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

On Oct. 31, 1883, Mr. Andrews was married to Adelaide L., daughter of the late Edwin B. and Lydia Ann (Hardy) Miller, of Woonsocket, R. I. Mr. Andrews died at his residence on Keene street, Providence, June 2, 1904, and was buried in Swan Point cemetery.

BARKER. The Barker family of Tiverton, represented in Newport county by many prominent citizens, is one of the earliest settled families of New England. The first of the name of whom there is authentic record was Robert Barker, born in 1616, who came to New England at a very early date with John Thorp. In 1641, with others, he bought from Jonathan Brewster, son of Elder Brewster, a ferry and 100 acres of land at Marshfield. Later he located at Duxbury, where for several years he served as a surveyor. His death occurred about 1691. He married Lucy Williams, who died March 7, 1681 or 1682. Their children were: Robert, born Feb. 27, 1630, died Sept. 25, 1729; Francis, died in 1720; Isaac; Abigail died in May, 1718; and Rebecca, died in 1697.

Isaac Barker, third son of Robert, was a surveyor of Duxbury in 1674, and a constable in 1687. On Dec. 8, 1685, he married Judith, daughter of Gov. Thomas and Mary (Collier) Prince. After the death of Mr. Barker, in 1710, his widow married William Tubbs, of Pembroke. To Isaac Barker and wife were born: Samuel (born Sept. 2, 1667, died Feb. 1, 1738-9), Isaac (2), Robert (born in 1673, died Sept. 6, 1765), Jabez, Francis, Rebecca, Mary, Lydia, Judith, Martha and Bathsheba.

Isaac Barker (2), son of Isaac, seems to have been a man of great business ability as he was interested in numerous enterprises, owning a grist mill on the Herring Brook, engaging in merchandising, also in farming, and in laying out of roads, and erecting waterworks. He was also a great student for his day. He was a member of the Society of Friends. His death occurred May 7, 1754. On Oct. 23, 1707, he married Elizabeth Slocum, of Dartmouth, born Feb. 12, 1689, daughter of Peleg and Mary (Holden) Slocum. She died Aug. 18, 1774, the mother of children as follows: Mary, born Aug. 1, 1708, died in 1788; Sylvester, born in May, 1710, died March 5, 1801; Peleg, born in August, 1712, died about 1788; Prince, born Feb. 9, 1716; Elizabeth, born Dec. 9, 1719, died April 10, 1780; and Lydia, who died Aug. 13, 1754.

Prince Barker, born Feb. 9, 1716, son of Isaac, was married Nov. 6, 1746, to Abigail Keen, of Pembroke, born Feb. 6, 1721, daughter of Benjamin and Deborah (Barker) Keen; she died Sept. 2, 1790. Prince Barker was a man who lived up to his name, being noted for his honesty and his great hospitality. His children were: Prince, born Oct. 26, 1747, died June 24, 1781; Isaac, born May 1, 1749, died in December, 1825; Abigail, born Jan. 29, 1751, died Jan. 7, 1788; Deborah, born Jan. 29, 1753; and Benjamin, born Nov. 30, 1756. Prince Barker died Jan. 27, 1784.

Benjamin Barker, born Nov. 30, 1756, son of Prince, was a man of prominence and wealth. In 1773 he took half of the Barker Fulling Mill near the homestead, and later in life he bought the homestead and farm in Scituate. In addition he acquired considerable property in the town of Tiverton, and at the time of his death, June 19, 1837, he was a wealthy man. On Jan. 31, 1785, he married (first) Ann Barker, born Aug. 29, 1750, daughter of Abraham and Susannah (Anthony) Barker, of Tiverton. She died Aug. 16, 1789, and on June 23, 1791, he wedded (second) Rebecca Partridge, of Boston, born in 1752, who died Aug. 11, 1835, daughter of Capt. Samuel Partridge. Of his children Abraham (born Nov. 16, 1786, died Feb. 24, 1855) and Susan Ann (born April 27, 1788, died March 5, 1861), were both by the first marriage, while Samuel Partridge (born Aug. 2, 1792, died in the far West) was born to the second.

Abraham Barker, born Nov. 16, 1786, son of Benjamin, was married Jan. 7, 1819, to Margaret Buffum, born at Newport, R. I., Aug. 27, 1785, daughter of David and Hepsibah (Mitchell) Buffum. She died Nov. 4, 1839, while he survived until Feb. 24, 1855. Their children were: Eleanor, born Dec. 4, 1820; Benjamin, born Sept. 24, 1822; Abraham Thomas, born July 7, 1824, died Nov. 29, 1869; Elizabeth Huntington, born Aug. 11, 1826, died May 8, 1900; Margaret Buffum, born April 9, 1829; and Anne, born July 20, 1832, died Dec. 15, 1857.

Benjamin Barker, born Sept. 24, 1822, son of Abraham, made his home at Tiverton. He was extensively engaged in the lumber business, and was a man well and most favorably known. He died April 14, 1897. He married, Dec. 1, 1847, Catherine Jackson Dennis, of Cranston, R. I., born Dec. 7, 1829, daughter of James and Hannah (Jackson) Dennis, and their children were: Richard Jackson, born Jan. 27, 1849; William Herbert, born Oct. 4, 1855, died Jan. 20, 1857; Benjamin, born July 19, 1858; Catherine Wheaton, born Jan. 25, 1863, married Effingham C. Haight, of Fall River.

RICHARD JACKSON BARKER, born Jan. 27, 1849, son of Benjamin, was educated at the Friends' school, Providence, at the Eaglewood Military Academy at Perth Amboy, N. J., and the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute at Troy. He was but eighteen years old when he was appointed Judge Advocate of the First Brigade, Rhode Island Militia, by the late Gen. Burnside, and was a member of his staff. During the entire period of his business life he had been extensively engaged in the lumber business, his son Richard J. Barker, Jr., being at present associated with him at Fall River, Mass. Mr. Barker was the founder and also the first president of the Warren Trust Company, and has long been very prominent in the financial world, and is known as a most successful wholesale lumber dealer. In politics he is a Democrat, and has served as a member of the Tiverton town council, being president of the board, and on two occasions was the choice of his party for the State Senate from Warren, Rhode Island.

On Oct. 9, 1873, Mr. Barker was married at Tiverton, to Miss Eliza Harris Lawton, of Tiverton. To this union has been born one child: Richard Jackson, born May 22, 1875. He was educated in a private school at Fall River, also at Atlanta, Ga., and the English and Classical school, Providence, where he graduated with honor prior to entering Brown University. Since then he has been associated with his father in the lumber business at Fall River, Mass. He is associated with the Masonic fraternity there, and is also a member of the Quequechan Club, "Sons of Brown," and the University Club.

Mrs. Barker is a descendant of one of the oldest families of Rhode Island, which was established by George and Thomas Lawton at Portsmouth. A complete history of this family will be found in the sketch of Hon. George R. Lawton, who is a brother of Mrs. Barker. Mrs. Barker completed her education at Vassar College. Probably no lady in the community is better known in many of the educational activities and in literary circles. She has always been deeply interested in the public school system, and was elected twenty years ago a member of the School Committee of the town of Tiverton, and for fourteen years has been chairman of the board. She is Historian of the Colonial Dames, and is an active member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and is vice-president general of the National Society, to which exalted office she was elected by a large majority at the National Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution which was held at Washington, D. C., in April, 1906. For fourteen years previous she had been an active officer of Gaspee Chapter of Providence, resigning the office of Regent to accept the one she now fills so graciously and competently. The chapter presented her with a beautiful silver mounted gavel made from wood taken from the old Gaspee room. She is Honorary State Regent of Rhode Island, and has been made an honorary member of several Rhode Island and Massachusetts chapters. In the National Society she holds an honored and prominent place; is chairman of the Magazine Committee, one of the most valued positions in the society; is chairman of the Furnishing Committee; on the Auditing Committee; on the Continental Hall Committee; and was a member of the Jamestown Committee, having been chairman for New England of the D. A. R. exhibit at the Exposition. Mrs. Barker having been honored by her State by being made hostess at the Rhode Island State Building by the Commissioners of Rhode Island, represented her State at the Rhode Island State Building at the Jamestown Exposition. For four years she was State Historian of the D. A. R., and was thirteen years chairman of the Gaspee Prize Committee. She is State Regent of the Pocahontas Memorial Association, and Vice-President of the Rhode Island Institute of Instruction. She was one of the chairmen of the Rhode Island Sanitary Relief Association during the Spanish war, and during the Atlanta Exposition was a commissioner. All these honors have proved that Mrs. Barker is admirably equipped to fill the various social and executive offices. Mr. Barker has erected a magnificent Colonial mansion called "The Outlook," an appropriate name, as it is located on a high elevation which commands one of the grandest views of Narragansett Bay, and the surrounding country for many miles. Mr. and Mrs. Barker have always been appreciative patrons of art, and among the many beautiful and costly adornments of this stately home are over 11,000 book plates, collected by Mrs. Barker, which were sent by the State of Rhode Island to the Atlanta Exposition.

BACHELLER. The Bacheller family (the name being variously spelled) is one of the oldest of New England, and is likewise ancient in England, the name being found prior to 1600 in Kent, Surrey, Sussex, Wilts, Hants, Bucks, and other counties in the southeastern part of England. Seven immigrants of the name came to New England, as follows: Alexander of Portsmouth, N. H.; Rev. Stephen of Lynn, Mass., and Hampton, N. H.; Henry of Ipswich, Mass.; Joseph of Salem, Mass. (now Wenham); John of Salem, Mass.; William of Charlestown, Mass.; and John of Watertown, Dedham and Reading. The posterity of several of these have made their homes in Rhode Island.

For one hundred or more years Newport, in this Commonwealth, has been the home of a family bearing the name of Bacheller, the earliest of the vital records of the town being that of the family of James Gould Almy Bacheler and his wife, Martha Matilda (Bowles) Bacheler, whose marriage is of record as occurring Aug. 4, 1792. Their children of Newport town record were: Leonard Rostal, born Sept. 2, 1793; Katherine Matilda, born Sept. 29, 1795 (died Nov. 9, 1796); and James Gould, born July 2, 1798.

John Bacheller, the ancestor of the branch of the family with which this article has to treat, was born in Newport, R. I., where he followed his trade of baker. He married Martha Stanhope, of Newport, and to them were born these children: William S.; Sarah, who married John Groff, of Newport; Hannah, who married Philip Caswell, of Newport, and John, Jr., who married Emiline Read, of Newport.

William Stanhope Bacheller, son of John, was born in Newport, April 13, 1803, and early learned the trade of rope-maker, which he followed the greater part of his life. For over sixteen years he was foreman of the ropewalk owned by the late William Tew Tilley. He was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was class-leader of the same for many years. William S. Bacheller married Ann Andem Barrett, daughter of Joshua Barrett, of Boston, Mass., and she died in Newport, in October, 1859. Mr. Bacheller died in Somerville, Mass., July 18, 1866, aged sixty-three years, and was buried beside his wife in Newport. To them were born four children who died in infancy and seven who grew to maturity, the latter being: (1) William Stanhope, Jr., is mentioned further on. (2) Ann Barrett married James H. Sweet, of Newport, and died in South Dartmouth, Mass. (3) Sarah Hannah married John Caswell, of Middletown, and died in Newport. (4) John Warren is mentioned below. (5) Henry C., born Feb. 4, 1843, in Newport, is a carpenter by trade. In 1895 he opened "The Faisneau," a first-class boarding house on Washington street, which he has since successfully conducted. He married Hannah E. Faisneau, of Newport, a direct descendant of Nicholas Easton, one of the early settlers of Newport, and to this union were born two children, Sarah Cornell, the wife of William S. Rogers, of Newport, and Henry, who died young. (6) Joshua B., born May 25, 1845, in Newport, is engaged in wagon-making and blacksmithing in Newport. He married Susan T. Crabbe, of that city, and they have three children, Susan B. (the wife of Frederick A. Clarke of Newport), Dudley P. (who married Daisy May Barker), and Nellie H. (at home). (7) George W., who is a cabinet-maker and upholsterer, married Annie Frances Popple, of Newport, where they reside. Their children are as follows: Annie B., who is at home, unmarried; William P., recorder for the New England Navigation Company, at Newport, married to Tillie Anhorn Bacheller; Charles E., who married Ann Lathrop, of Newport; Benjamin Franklin, who died when eight years old; George H., who died in infancy; George W., who married Lillie Greenman, of Newport; and Frederick S., who married Edna Thomas, of Newport.

WILLIAM STANHOPE BACHELLER, JR., son of William S. and Ann Andem (Bartlett) Bacheller, was born Oct. 6, 1831, in Boston, Mass. In early life he came to Newport, where he later engaged in business, opening a meat and provision market at the corner of Thames and Bridge streets. In this business he continued for many years. After closing out Mr. Bacheller was appointed superintendent of the Newport City Asylum, and with the assistance of his wife, as matron, continued efficiently in that capacity for about eight years, or up to the time of his death, which occurred at that institution Nov. 3, 1892, at the age of sixty-one years.

In political faith Mr. Bacheller was a stalwart Republican and as such served as a member of the Newport city council for eight years, during a portion of this time being president of that body. For a number of years he was a member of the Knights of Honor. Mr. Bacheller was married Nov. 6, 1853, to Elizabeth Southwick Caswell, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Southwick) Caswell, of Newport, and to this union were born children as follows: Robert C. is mentioned below; William S., born July 22, 1858, died at the age of three years; Harriet Jane, born Feb. 7, 1861, married Samuel McComb, of Providence, where he is engaged in the grocery and meat business, and they have two children, Howard B. and Helen M. McComb.

ROBERT CASWELL BACHELLER, son of William S. and Elizabeth Southwick (Caswell) Bacheller, was born Aug. 20, 1855, in Newport, and in his native city had his early educational training, this being supplemented by four terms as a student in the East Greenwich (R. I.) Academy. Leaving school at the age of nineteen years, he became apprenticed to the carriage painter's trade with the firm of Edward Landers & Co., on Sherman street, in whose employ he remained until 1890, when he purchased the business of his former employers, and he has since successfully conducted the same, giving employment to from six to twelve men, as the occasion requires. Since acquiring this business Mr. Bacheller has broadened the scope of its operations, now engaging in all branches of carriage building. In July, 1906, he removed to his present commodious quarters at No. 365 Thames street.

Mr. Bacheller is a member of various fraternal and benevolent organizations, holding membership in St. Paul's Lodge, No. 14, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master; Newport Council, No. 2, R. A. M., in which he has served as captain of the hosts; DeBlois Council, No. 5, R. & S. M., of which he is captain of the guard; and Washington Commandery, No. 4, Knights Templar. He and his wife are members of Aquidneck Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star. He is also connected with Ocean Lodge, No. 7, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and is past master workman; with Weenat Shassit Tribe, No. 6, Improved Order of Red Men; and the Senior Order of American Mechanics, through the chairs of which he has passed. For several years he was a member of the Knights of Honor.

In political faith Mr. Bacheller is a staunch adherent to the principles of the Republican party. For ten years he served his native city as a member of the school committee, and in 1906, at the first election held under the new charter granted the city of Newport, he was re-elected a member of that committee for the three-year term. Mr. Bacheller is a consistent and devoted member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is also a member, and he has served efficiently as a member of the board of trustees for a number of years. He has also served as assistant superintendent of the Sabbath-school for several years, has been class-leader, and in fact has served in nearly every position pertaining to the work of the church.

On June 13, 1877, Robert Caswell Bacheller was united in marriage with Miss Helen Kilfoyl Forbes, the estimable daughter of Thomas and Isabelle (Cantly) Forbes, of New Glasgow, Nova Scotia. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bacheller, as follows: (1) William Stanhope, born April 22, 1879, is a draftsman in the employ of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, with headquarters at Seattle, Wash. He is unmarried. (2) Robert Forbes, born June 9, 1881, is employed by his father in the painting business, and is also unmarried. (3) Chester Caswell, born May 8, 1885, is a draftsman in the employ of Creighton Withers, the architect of Newport. He, too, is unmarried.

Mr. Robert C. Bacheller is an enterprising and straight-forward business man, as well as a representative citizen of Newport. He is widely known in business, church and fraternal circles, and is very popular in all.

JOHN WARREN BACHELLER, son of William S. and Ann Andem (Barrett) Bacheller, was born Nov. 25, 1838, in Newport, and in the common schools of his native city received his early educational training. After leaving school he took up the business of seed raising, under the instruction of the late Joseph Anthony, in whose employ he remained for several years. Mr. Bacheller was then appointed janitor of the public schools of Newport, and until his death acted in that capacity satisfactorily and efficiently, his services covering a period of forty-three years. He built the first fire for steam heating of the schools of Newport. As the school buildings of the city became more numerous and scattered, requiring the services of others, Mr. Bacheller was given the care of the Willow street and Potter school buildings, which he was tending at the time of his death, Feb. 17, 1905, caused from injuries received by a fall on the ice.

Mr. Bacheller was a devoted and consistent member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, to which he gave his liberal support. For a number of years he was a member of the Knights of Honor. In his political views he was a Republican. He never cared for nor sought office, possessing a quiet, unostentatious manner, but was of a sociable nature, and kindly and genial. On May 23, 1878, Mr. Bacheller married Rebecca Somes, daughter of John G. and Mary A. E. (Downe) Somes, of Charlestown, Mass., and their family consists of one daughter, Tillie Anhorn Bacheller, who was married June 19, 1902, to William Popple Bacheller, son of George W. Bacheller, of Newport. Mr. Bacheller was graduated from Harvard University in the class of 1904, with the degree of A. B., and taught in the public schools of Newport for some time, resigning to accept the position of recorder of the marine department of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, at Newport, in connection with his position being also engaged as a private tutor of languages.

CLARKE. This family, represented ably at Scituate in the persons of Dr. Charles K. Clarke and his brother, Daniel A. Clarke, has been resident in Rhode Island since about 1679. They are descendants of

(I) Abraham Clarke, a tailor by trade, who was an inhabitant of Bristol, Mass., not far from 1675, that territory then being a part of Plymouth Colony. He died prior to 1679. There are strong indications that he was closely related to some of the Clarke families who settled in Plymouth and Massachusetts Bay Colonies, and that he probably came to Bristol about 1675; at all events, no trace of his relationship to any of the other Clarke families of Rhode Island is found. Abraham Clarke had children: Jacob and Bridget.

(II) Jacob Clarke, son of Abraham, born in 1668, married Ethalannah, daughter of William and Isabel (Potter) Burton, who was born in 1672, and they were residents of Providence and Cranston, R. I., respectively. On July 4, 1679, Mr. Clarke, then fatherless, was bound out by indenture to William Harris, of Pawtuxet. His name was on the poll-tax list of July 14, 1688. Two years later, Nov. 1, 1690, Mr. Arthur Fenner and his wife, Howlong, heirs of William Harris, deeded to Mr. Clarke twenty-four acres of land on the west side of the Pocasset river, and in December, 1722, they also deeded him forty acres adjoining the tract alluded to above. Mr. Clarke's name appears on a jury list of 1712-13. In about 1740 he settled in the town of Cranston, R. I., where he owned a farm west of the Pocasset river, near Park avenue, perhaps one mile north of what is known as the King farm. The remains of himself and his wife were buried on the farm, and the inscriptions on their tombstones read respectively as follows: "In memory of Jacob Clarke, who emigrated from England to the State of Rhode Island in 1679. Died Oct. 28, A. D., 1754, aged 86 years and about one month." "In memory of Ethelana Clarke, relict of Jacob, who died March 5, 1757, in the 85th year of her age." The children born to Jacob and Ethalannah Clarke were: John, born in 1710; William; Isabel, who married July 1, 1764, Benjamin Connor, of Scituate, R. I.; and Patience, who married June 1, 1746, William Harris.

(III) William Clarke, son of Jacob, married Mary, and they lived in the town of Providence, R. I. Their children of Providence town record, according to Arnold, were: Elizabeth, born Oct. 6, 1739; Daniel, July 31, 1741; William, Dec. 9, 1743; Benjamin, Feb. 16, 1746; Mary, March 28, 1748, and Amey, Oct. 27, 1751.

(IV) Daniel Clarke, son of William, born July 31, 1741, early settled in Foster, R. I., where he became a man of much importance. His sister Dorothy married Daniel Howard, and Mary married Elder John Westcott, from both of whom there have descended many men and women of usefulness and prominence in Rhode Island and adjoining States. His son Daniel was also a man of much distinction, and of him further mention follows. Daniel Clarke was a man of more than ordinary strength of character and of jovial, genial temperament. It is related in the manuscript left by one of his descendants that "he lent character to any enterprise with which he was connected; was a man of great tenacity of purpose, candid in his opinions and forceful in giving expression to them." As an instance of his vigor, his active and industrious disposition, it may be mentioned that in 1815, then at the age of seventy-four years, he desired to visit his sister Nancy, who lived at Paris, Oneida Co., N. Y., and made the entire journey on foot and alone. At that time such an undertaking was attended with no little danger. He reached his destination in safety, and some six or seven years later died there, at the age of eighty years.

(V) Daniel Clarke, son of Daniel, was born Feb. 7, 1782, in the town of Foster, and there grew to manhood. In youth he learned the trade of a toolmaker. Sharp edge-tools were then made by hand, and to turn out a good product, expert workmanship was required and a knowledge of metal most necessary. That Mr. Clarke possessed exceptional ability is attested by the fact that there are in existence at this time tools (axes) of his workmanship, and bearing his stamp, "D. C." During his early manhood he traveled extensively in various States, particularly in New York, plying his trade, as did the old-time shoemaker, tailor, etc. At one time smallpox was prevalent throughout a large area, and Mr. Clarke voluntarily exposed himself to infection and successfully withstood the disease. He was then enabled to travel in the infected communities and because of his immunity was able to render much service to the afflicted, as well as ply his vocation where his services were needed. Besides being expert in the making of edge-tools he was possessed of a natural mechanical turn, which enabled him to make many implements of utility. He was endowed by nature with a splendid physique, perfect health, an active and retentive mind, and a social, genial and kindly temperament. As he aged his voice became mellow, his appearance venerable. He passed his later years in practical retirement, though he gave some attention to farming after the introduction of machine-made tools rendered his vocation no longer profitable. He had many interesting experiences in his travels, and delighted those so fortunate as to hear his reminiscences. He reached a good old age, and died after a long life, well lived, Oct. 31, 1859.

Mr. Clarke married Betsey Allen, who was born Jan. 9, 1786, and to them were born six children, as follows: (1) Jeremiah, born July 31, 1807, died Sept. 1, 1888. He married Amy Tucker, but left no descendants. (2) William, born May 9, 1806, died Feb. 13, 1858. He married Alice Ellis, and their children were Olney, Emeline, Sariah, and Jeremiah. (3) Joseph, born Jan. 6, 1809, died May 30, 1877. He married Mary Arnold, and their children were Albert and Emily, the latter now the wife of Dr. Richardson, of Burrillville. (4) Deborah A., born Jan. 6, 1812, married Daniel Tucker. (5) Stephen, born April 4, 1814, died Feb. 7, 1876. He married Joanna Aldrich and their children were Albert and Elizabeth. (6) Daniel A. was born May 3, 1818.

(VI) DANIEL A. CLARKE, son of Daniel, was born May 3, 1818, in the State of New York, where his parents were living at that time. In 1820 the family removed to and settled in Rhode Island, and here he was reared. In boyhood he attended the schools of Gloucester, where the family was then living, and later he learned the trade of a mule spinner in the cotton mills. This calling he followed for a number of years, until ill health, occasioned by the confinement of the calling, obliged him to discontinue it. He then engaged in farming until 1866, when he embarked in mercantile pursuits, first establishing himself at Rockland, then in Ponaganset, and later in North Scituate. By close application to business and by methods of honesty and fair dealing he was successful. He continued the business founded by his son Harrison, who died in 1865, and associated with him his son Daniel A., Jr., in the Scituate establishment, the business being conducted under the firm name of Daniel A. Clarke & Son. In about 1890 he retired from active pursuits, though he was interested in farming for some years previous to his death, which occurred Jan. 19, 1900.

In 1839 Mr. Clarke married Mary Emily Harrington, who was born Sept. 5, 1815, daughter of Simeon and Waity (Angell) Harrington, and died March 8, 1891. Mrs. Clarke descended from Thomas Angell, the ancestor of the Rhode Island family of that name, and of which extended mention will be found elsewhere. She was a woman of energy and intelligence, and a large share of her husband's success was justly attributed to her. Both are buried in the Scituate cemetery. Four children were born to them: (1) Harrison, born June 16, 1840, died Oct. 28, 1865. He married Almeda Bennett, but left no children. He was employed upon the farm of his father until he reached the age of about fourteen years, when he became a clerk in the store of John Barden, at Ponaganset. Even at that youthful age he displayed marked ability as a business man, and had he lived he would doubtless have become a man of unusual prominence. He worked his way through Hillsdale College, at Hillsdale, Mich., and later attended East Greenwich Academy for three years, also completing a commercial course at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He established himself in business, and was rapidly acquiring a patronage of excellent prospects at the time of his demise. Harrison Clarke was quite prominent in the affairs of his town, held the office of justice of the peace, was quite interested in military affairs and captain of the local company, and served as superintendent of schools in Scituate. (2) Zilpha Ann, born March 28, 1842, died Oct. 30, 1847. (3) Daniel A., Jr., was born Oct. 13, 1848. (4) Charles Kendall was born Jan. 9, 1851.

Daniel A. Clarke, the father of the foregoing family, was active in local public affairs, and filled most creditably numerous offices in his town, serving at different times as a member of the town council, tax collector, etc. His affiliation was with the Republican party, but he was in no respect a politician, and it was only his retiring disposition that kept him from attaining high official position, for he possessed eminent qualifications for such responsibility. He was a Christian and a strong advocate of temperance, absolutely clean in his morals and especially strict in that respect. He was much attached to his home life, and with the able assistance of his estimable wife reared his children in an atmosphere of refinement, culture and high moral influences. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and a stanch believer in its principles and doctrine, aiming to live up to them most rigidly. His valuation of the really worthy things of life was particularly keen, and no inducement could deviate him from principle and right when he was convinced of his position. He was equally quick to appreciate a favor or resent a wrong, and was sincere to the core.

(VII) DANIEL A. CLARKE, JR., was born in Scituate, Oct. 13, 1848, and after attending the local schools finished his education at the Lapham Institute, at North Scituate, then under the charge of Prof. Thomas L. Angell. For some ten years he assisted his father in the latter's commercial enterprises, as a clerk, and in 1876 became a member of the firm of Daniel A. Clarke & Son, taking charge of the store at North Scituate, which he conducted successfully for twelve years, at the end of that period retiring from business for the sake of his health. After that he carried on a popular summer hotel at Buttonwoods, his establishment being frequented by the best class of patronage. In fact, it was more a resort for Mr. Clarke and his friends than a source of profit.

Mr. Clarke married, Dec. 15, 1881, Miss Gertrude Randall, of Scituate, and they are identified prominently with the social life of the community, both being also well known in Providence, where they have numerous friends and acquaintances. Mr. Clarke is a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to St. John's Commandery, and he is also affiliated with the Masonic Veteran's Association. In politics he is a Republican, and he has held various important public offices, including those of justice of the peace, town sergeant, and member of the council. In 1888 he was a deputy sheriff of Providence county.

Practically all of Mr. Clarke's life has been passed in the immediate vicinity of his present home and he is regarded as a man thoroughly honest and honorable in all of his dealings and possessed of excellent judgment. His courteous social ways, his genial disposition, his appreciation of those he trusts, are all commendable traits which help to make him popular. He is exemplarily moral, of strong domestic tendencies, an intelligent and pleasant associate, and all in all a good citizen.

(VII) CHARLES KENDALL CLARKE, M. D., physician and surgeon, was born Jan. 9, 1851, in the town of Scituate. His father was a man who met Solomon's distinctive tribute as one who for many years was "known in the gates" and "sitting among the elders of the land." His mother well deserved to rank among the ideal class whose price is far above rubies. During his earlier years his employments were such as were common to country boys of his day. He attended the district school in winter, made progress in study and books, and laid a few foundation stones upon which some parts of his life structure yet rest. To those early years, under the tutelage of father and mother, whose chief ambitions were to impress upon the minds of their children such principles as would make possible lives of usefulness and honor, Dr. Clarke, like myriads of others, is indebted for that probity of character, and those justifiable aspirations, that prominently characterize him as a citizen in all the relations of life. It was amid such influences that Dr. Clarke grew to manhood. For four years he studied in the famous Lapham Institute, then under the late Prof. Ricker. For some time after 1871 he studied medicine with Dr. W. H. Bowen, a somewhat noted physician of his day, and then entered Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, from which famous institution he was graduated with the class of 1874, with the degree of M. D. In January, 1875, immediately after his graduation, he located at Fiskeville, removing to his present location in the village in about 1878-79. Here he continues, in the enjoyment of a large practice, extending over a wide area—the result of his eminent learning, his skill, his ever-present interest in the condition and welfare of his patients, his zeal, indefatigable energy, and withal an industry which seems to be unceasing.

In addition to his professional duties Dr. Clarke has found time to lend his ability and attention to the affairs of his community, and though in no respect a politician he has served as superintendent of schools in Scituate, president of the school board, assessor of taxes, member of the town council and president of that body. While he was president of the council the expenditures, under his leadership, were kept within the amount received, an achievement unparalleled within recent years. For many years Dr. Clarke has been a member of the Rhode Island State Medical Society as originally organized, and he is now president of the Kent County Medical Society. Dr. Clarke is a man of affable and courteous personality, and his wide reading in the field of general literature, a familiar knowledge of the best authors of poetry and prose, as well as a vast fund of general information about the topics of the day, make him a fluent and interesting conversationalist. He is held in the highest regard wherever known, both for his mental attainments and high character. Dr. Clarke and his family are members of the Christian Church.

On Jan. 8, 1876, Dr. Clarke married Elizabeth M. Manter, daughter of Rev. Zebulon C. Manter, of Maine, and descended from a long line of distinguished New England ancestry. Two children have been born to this union: Mary M., who died at the age of five years and eleven months; and Daniel A. (3), now an instructor in botany and landscape at Harvard University. The latter was born April 28, 1878, graduated from Providence Classical High School, from Brown University (1901), after a four years' course, and from Harvard (1904), after a three years' course, with the degree of B. A. S. He early manifested an aptitude for his chosen profession, forestry and plant culture, and he has already gained much renown for his wide learning upon those subjects. He has been tendered positions with several of the most famous landscape architects, but has preferred to continue his studies and at the same time his work as an instructor at Harvard. He has written various articles upon subjects of his profession which have attracted much favorable comment. Like his father, he has taken a great interest in the educational affairs of his native town, and served for three years on the school board.

BICKNELL. The Massachusetts and Rhode Island family bearing this name is one of the oldest in the Massachusetts-Rhode Island territory—Zachary Bicknell, the progenitor of the family under consideration, coming to New England in 1635. This family, too, has been among the first since the early Colonial period. Allying itself with many of the first families of the Pilgrim Commonwealth, it has played a conspicuous part in its social, civil, and military history. A number of the name served in all the Colonial wars. Of the Barrington Bicknells, Asa, Joshua, and Winchester Bicknell were among the patriots of the Revolution, honored names in the annals of that time. Of a later period, in Barrington were Judge Joshua and his son, Hon. Allin Bicknell, and of a succeeding generation, Hon. Thomas Williams Bicknell, LL. D., one of the leading educators of New England, Edward Joshua, the Providence merchant, and James and Joseph Bicknell, of Barrington; some of whose sons and grandsons are yet active in the business and social life of their communities.

(I) Zachary Bicknell, aged forty-five, with Agnes, his wife, aged thirty-seven, their son John, aged eleven, and servant John Kitchen, aged twenty-three, were among the passengers, mostly from the Counties of Dorset and Somerset, in the southwestern part of England, who came to America in the spring of 1635. This company of 106 emigrants, under the ministerial care of Rev. Joseph Hull, settled at Weymouth, Mass., in the summer of 1635. Mr. Bicknell, it is probable, died in 1636; Alice, his widow, remarried, and died in Braintree, July 9, 1643.

(II) John Bicknell, the only son of Zachary, married Mary —, and their three children were: John, born in 1653-54; Mary; and Naomi, born June 21, 1657. The mother of these died March 25, 1658, and Dec. 2, of that year he married (second) Mary Porter, daughter of Hon. Richard Porter, of Weymouth, and to their marriage came eight children, namely: Ruth, born Oct. 26, 1660; Joanna, March 2, 1663; Experience, Oct. 20, 1665; Zachary, Feb. 7, 1668; Thomas, Aug. 27, 1670; Elizabeth, April 29, 1673; Hannah, Nov. 15, 1675; and Mary, March 15, 1678.

John Bicknell became an important and useful man in Weymouth. He served as selectman for many years, and was a deputy to the General Court for 1677 and 1678. He died in 1679.

(III) Zachariah (Zachary) Bicknell, born Feb. 7, 1668, married Nov. 24, 1692, Hannah Smith, sister of Joshua Smith, of Swansea. They resided at Weymouth, and about 1705, removed to that part of Swansea, which is now Barrington, R. I., where he died. Their children were: Zachariah, born Jan. 9, 1695; Joshua, 1696; Hannah, March 16, 1698; James, May 13, 1702; Mary, Aug. 21, 1703 (all in Weymouth, Mass.); and Peter, in 1706 (in Barrington, R. I.).

Zachariah Bicknell was a leading man in Swansea. He was one of the petitioners in 1711, for the formation of the new town, which was created in 1717, and called Barrington. Mr. Bicknell's home stood near the location of the Remington tavern, north of the Congregational Church, and fronting on the Barrington river. Town meetings were held at his house, and the town records show him to have been a valuable citizen in civil and religious affairs.

(IV) Joshua Bicknell, born in 1696, married (first) March 29, 1721, Hannah Lyon. She died Jan. 27, 1737, aged forty, and he married (second) Aug. 29, 1739, Abigail, daughter of Thomas and Anne Allin. The children to the first marriage were: Joshua, born in 1723; Hannah, in 1724; Olive; and Molly, baptized Jan. 11, 1736. One child, Allin, born July 19, 1743, came of the second marriage.

Joshua Bicknell probably lived in the house occupied by his father, with his large estate on the west and south of his residence. He gave to the Congregational Church in Barrington the land on which the church now stands, and was instrumental in the erection of the new meeting house about 1735-40. He died Feb. 6, 1752, and his widow passed away Nov. 26, 1772, in the sixty-fourth year of her age.

(V) Joshua Bicknell, born in 1723, in Barrington, R. I., married (first) in 1745, Ruth Bicknell, born in 1728, probably daughter of James and Ruth Bicknell. She died Sept. 18, 1756, and he married (second) in 1758, Mrs. Jerusha Heath, widow of Rev. Peleg Heath, and daughter of Joseph and Rebecca (Brown) Peck; she was born Nov. 18, 1724, and died April 9, 1763. The children born to the first marriage were: Thomas, born Feb. 11, 1747; James, Feb. 2, 1749; Hannah, Sept. 4, 1750; Ruth, Oct. 29, 1752; and Olive, Nov. 11, 1754. Those born to the second marriage were: Joshua, born Jan. 14, 1759; Winchester, March 31, 1761; Jerusha and Joseph (twins), born Jan. 20, 1763. Mr. Bicknell was married again, in 1764, the Christian name of his wife being Hannah, who, with her infant child, died Aug. 11, 1765. He married (fourth) Freeborn Miller, and to this union came: Freeborn, born Jan. 9, 1768; and Wait, Nov. 9, 1771. Joshua Bicknell died suddenly Nov. 30, 1781.

(VI) Joshua Bicknell, born Jan. 14, 1759, at the home known as the "Kinnicutt tavern," in Barrington, R. I., married April 18, 1782, Amy Brown, born Aug. 1, 1762, at the Ferry House, in Barrington, opposite Warren. To the marriage came children as follows: Jerusha, born March 5, 1783; Mary, Nov. 19, 1784; Allin, April 13, 1787; Amy, Aug. 15, 1789; Freeborn, Nov. 5, 1791; Joshua, Nov. 19, 1792; James, Nov. 4, 1795; Elizabeth, Feb. 22, 1799; and Joseph Peck, April 19, 1801.

Joshua Bicknell in youth had only limited educational advantages, such as were afforded by the neighboring district schools, in which were taught reading, writing, spelling and arithmetic. As a boy he was a member of Capt. Thomas Allin's company, of Barrington's militia, enlisting in 1775. He joined the company at the Alarm in Bristol in April, 1776. He enlisted in his country's service for a period of fifteen months in Capt. Allin's Company, Col. Crary's regiment, which performed service in Bristol and Newport counties. On June 4, 1777, he again enlisted for fifteen months in Col. C. Smith's Regiment. He served as a private in Capt. Thomas Allin's company, Col. Crary's regiment, from March 1, to June 16, 1778, and he also enlisted as an express rider, in the Quartermaster-General's Department, and was stationed at Tiverton, R. I., Oct. 15, 1779.

Young Bicknell, born and bred to a farmer's life, made good use of his limited school privileges, and, possessed of fine natural abilities, he early developed into a capable and useful man, and as well became an honored citizen. He entered a public career when but a youth, and for the rest of his life served the town, county and State in various official positions, both honorably and successfully. He was a deputy in the General Assembly of Rhode Island in 1787, 1789, 1794, 1796-98, 1802-04, 1807-08, and 1823-25, and survived all who were members when he first took his seat, except two. He served as an associate justice of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island from 1794 to 1810, and from 1811 to 1818. He also filled various other public offices by special appointment with distinguished ability. The purity of his life, the integrity of his motives, and the justice of his opinions and decisions, gave him the merited sobriquet of "Old Aristides." He was simple in his domestic habits, and when unoccupied with public affairs, devoted himself to his farm, and especially to fruit culture, in which he took great satisfaction. He united with the Congregational Church in Barrington in 1805, and held the office of deacon until his death. He was one of the Corporate members of the United Congregational Society of the town, and served as its treasurer for forty years. He died Dec. 16, 1837, in the seventy-ninth year of his age.

On the death of Judge Bicknell, the Providence Journal, in an issue of December, 1837, in an obituary notice, thus justly sums up his life and character: "But few men have been better known through the State, and perhaps none survived him who possessed more historical and statistical knowledge of the State from the commencement of the Revolution to the present time. Of no man may it be more justly said, he has lived devoted to the best interests of Rhode Island. No man more ardently loved his country. Respecting his talents and acquirements—he read much; but perhaps the most wonderful trait in his character was his extraordinary power of discrimination. In these particulars he has left few superiors, even among those more fortunate in opportunities for improvement; but that which adds the highest lustre to his character is that his latter days have especially adorned the Christian life. The Church of which he was a member, and in which he had long sustained important offices, has great reason to mourn that a good and distinguished man in Israel has fallen."

(VII) Allin Bicknell, born April 13, 1787, in Barrington, R. I., married (first) Dec. 23, 1817, Harriet Byron Kinnicutt, of Barrington. She was born Sept. 1, 1791, and died Dec. 15, 1737. He married (second) Elizabeth W. Allin, of Barrington, who lived to be eighty-one years of age, dying Oct. 16, 1868. (See Allin). The children, all born to the first marriage were: Joshua, born Oct. 29, 1818, died in 1885; George Augustus, born June 30, 1822, died June 21, 1861; Daniel Kinnicutt, born Sept. 24, 1829, died Aug. 26, 1851; and Thomas Williams, born Sept. 6, 1834.

Mr. Bicknell was reared a farmer and he followed in the footsteps of his father in useful and honorable citizenship. He united with the Barrington Congregational Church in 1820, and maintained a consistent Christian character for more than fifty years; succeeded his honorable father as a deacon of the Church; was captain of the Barrington Infantry and Lieutenant-Colonel of the Bristol County Regiment; member of the town council; was in the Lower house of the General Assembly in 1842, 1846, 1849, and in the Senate in 1850 and 1854. He was an industrious man and one of generous impulses. He died Aug. 22, 1870, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. The life of Mr. Bicknell is thus referred to by his biographer, Dr. Babcock: "For several years he was chosen to represent the people in both branches of the Legislature, and performed these duties in a manner highly acceptable and useful. But public life was by no means his choice. His honest integrity, and his quiet unobtrusive tone of life rendered him the admiration and delight of the private circle where, without ostentatious parade or pretentiousness of any kind, he won the full confidence and esteem of those most intimate with him. His prudent and temperate care in the exercise of godly virtues, bore him on the even tenor of his way, and carried him beyond the bounds of four-score years."

(VIII) THOMAS WILLIAMS BICKNELL, son of Allin, born Sept. 6, 1834, in Barrington, R. I., married Sept. 5, 1860, Amelia D. Blanding, daughter of Christopher and Chloe Blanding, and to the marriage came a daughter, Mattie, who was born in 1862, in Barrington, R. I., and who died in 1867.

Mr. Bicknell received his elementary education in the schools, both public and private, of his native town, and at fifteen he entered Thetford Academy in Vermont, from which he was graduated with high honors in 1853, delivering the Greek oration on Grecian mythology. In September following he entered Dartmouth and Amherst Colleges as a Freshman, and in that year for a time taught school in Seekonk, Mass., which was the beginning of his career as an educator. From 1854 to 1858, young Bicknell was out of school, leaving in the former year to recruit his health and funds. He had received a mark of honor in being selected at the close of his freshman year as a prize debater, and at this period became a member of the Greek letter fraternity of the Phi Delta Theta. In 1854-55, Mr. Bicknell was principal of the public and high school in Rehoboth, Mass., and in 1855 of the Elgin (Illinois) Academy. In the following year he was one of the Chicago emigration company to settle in Kansas. This was in the summer of 1856. He was made a prisoner by the Border Ruffians on the Missouri river, and sent back to St. Louis, under escort of Col. Bufford's South Carolina and Virginia sharpshooters. Returning to the East after his Western experience Mr. Bicknell was again, from September, 1856, to December, 1857, principal of the Rehoboth (Mass.) high school. Entering Brown University in February, 1858, he was graduated therefrom in 1860, receiving the degree of A. M. Through the following decade he continued his teaching, being principal of the Arnold street grammar school, in Providence, from 1863 to 1867, in which latter year the school was closed, and of the Bristol (R. I.) high school, from 1867 to May, 1869.

Mr. Bicknell had by this time arrived at a period in his life when his reputation as a teacher and fitness for advanced work in educational lines were known and recognized. Resigning in May, 1869, the principalship of the Bristol high school, he entered in June, upon his new duties as Commissioner of Public Schools of Rhode Island, receiving the appointment at the hands of Gov. Padelford. To this office he gave earnest and intelligent, energetic work until in January, 1875. During this period he secured a State Board of Education, of which he was secretary; re-established the State Normal School, at Providence; re-established the Rhode Island Schoolmaster, of which for nearly a decade he was editor; secured town school superintendents in each town in the State; dedicated more than fifty new school houses; advanced the school year from twenty-seven to thirty-five weeks average throughout the State; and school appropriations were nearly trebled during his administration.

After re-establishing the Rhode Island Schoolmaster, Mr. Bicknell became quite active in editorial work in educational lines, and there has hardly been a time from boyhood to the present when he has not in some manner also been identified with work in historical, religious and literary lines. While at the Thetford (Vt.) Academy he united with the Congregational Church, and engaged in religious work as early as 1851. From 1861 to 1864 he was superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Congregational Church at Bristol, R. I., of the Sunday-school of the church of that denomination at Barrington, R. I., from 1864 to 1875, and of the Second Church Sunday-school, at Dorchester, Boston, from 1876 to 1880. He aided in the formation of the Boston Congregational Sunday-school Superintendents Union, and was elected its president in May, 1880. That same year he was a delegate to attend the Raikes Sunday-school Centenary at London, England. Mr. Bicknell aided in the revival of the American Institute of Instruction, and in the establishment of the New England Journal of Education, and, as joint proprietor and publisher with Mr. C. C. Chatfield, edited the Journal, which united the several monthly magazines in one paper, issued weekly in Boston, Mass. Mr. Bicknell, too, established and edited the Primary Teacher, a monthly magazine, in 1876. In 1880 he established and became conductor of Education, a bi-monthly review on the Science, the Art, the Philosophy, and the History of Education, continuing the editorship of the Journal and the presidency of the New England Publishing Company, founded in 1875. In 1881, Drury College, Missouri, conferred upon Mr. Bicknell the honorary degree of LL. D.

Dr. Bicknell has given many addresses and delivered many lectures in various parts of the country, and has prepared a number of papers. His published works are: "A Memorial of William Lord Noyes," 1868; "A History of Barrington, Rhode Island," 1870; a number of genealogical pamphlets; Reports as Commissioner of Public Schools, 1870, '71, '72, '73, '74; an address on School Supervision, 1876; and editorial and other articles in the Rhode Island Schoolmaster, Journal of Education, and other publications. On June 17, 1870, Mr. Bicknell delivered the oration at the Centennial of his native town, Barrington, Rhode Island.

In his earlier life, while a resident of Barrington, Mr. Bicknell was active in the duties of citizenship. He was for several years a member of the school board, was superintendent of schools, and a member of the town council. While he was yet a junior in Brown University, he was chosen a member from Barrington of the General Assembly of the State. In that body he made an elaborate speech in favor of the union of the colored and white schools in the State. Dr. Bicknell is a member of various societies and associations, and his prominence and qualifications have been shown in various official relations with them. He was president of the Rhode Island Institute of Instruction in 1867-68; president of the American Institute of Instruction in 1877-78, when the meetings were held at Montpelier, Vt., and at Fabyan's, White Mountains, New Hampshire. As a result of the latter meetings, a fund of one thousand dollars was created, called the Bicknell Fund, and money was raised to build a mountain path up Mt. Carrigan, New Hampshire. Dr. Bicknell was first to advocate the formation of the National Council of Education, and was elected its first president at Chautauqua, in July, 1880, holding the presidency until 1883, when he was elected president of the National Educational Association. The meeting at Madison, Wis., in July, 1884, was attended by several thousand teachers and was the first great awakening of the educators of the United States to a consciousness of their united strength and the great possibilities growing out of united action. The following resolution, unanimously adopted, recognized President Bicknell's great services to this Association:

"RESOLVED, that the unparalleled success of this meeting is chiefly due to the energy, devotion and organizing ability of Hon. Thomas W. Bicknell, the President of this Association, whose wise and comprehensive plans, enthusiastic and self-sacrificing efforts and directing hand have inspired and guided the great undertaking from its inception to its present triumphant close, and no formal words can properly express our thankful appreciation."

Dr. Bicknell is a member of the Massachusetts Historic Genealogical Society, a corresponding member of the Rhode Island Historical Society, a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, of the American Social Science Association, and an honorary member of the Pennsylvania Historical Society. He was elected president of the Bicknell Family Association, in Bristol, in December, 1879. In 1872 he was chosen an honorary member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, and received the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Amherst College in 1880. From 1872 to 1875 he was president of the Rhode Island Sunday-school Union, and first vice-president of the Rhode Island Temperance Union. He was a delegate from the Rhode Island Conference to form the National Congregational Council, and a delegate from the Suffolk South Conference, Massachusetts, to the Triennial Council held in Detroit, Mich., in October, 1877.

Dr. Bicknell has traveled quite extensively both in this country and abroad. In 1873 he was appointed by Gov. Padelford commissioner from Rhode Island to the Universal Exposition at Vienna, Austria, and in 1878 was a member of the Postal Congress, held in New York, to form the Postal Code, adopted by Congress in 1879. He has made three trips to Europe. In 1873 he traveled through Scotland, England, France, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, Greece, Turkey, Austria and Bavaria. In 1879 he re-visited England, France, Belgium and Holland.

Casting his first presidential vote in 1856 for John C. Fremont, Dr. Bicknell has since held fast to the principles of that party. For some years following 1875 he was a resident of Boston, and served as a representative from his district in the Massachusetts General Court for the years 1880 and 1890. He was chairman of the committees on Education and Woman's Suffrage.

In 1893, Dr. Bicknell removed to Providence,

R. I., where he has led a busy life as editor, publisher and business man. Among the enterprises in which he has had an active part are the founding of the Municipal League of Providence, of which he was secretary for six years; of the magazine called the Leader, of which he was editor and publisher; of the Leader Silk Company, of which he was president and treasurer; of the Bristol County Historical Society, of which he is president; and the American Institute of Business, Commerce and Finance, of which he is president. In 1897 he wrote and published "The History of Barrington, R. I.," one of the most complete town histories ever written. He is now engaged on "Sowams, Its History and Records," and "The Genealogy of the Bicknell Family." Other works from his pen are "The Michael Pierce Fight, 1676," "The Governors of Rhode Island, and their Administrations," "A Century of Old Providence," and "Heroes of New England in the Civil War." He spends his summers on the coast of Maine, where he has established a reputation as a skillful yachtsman. His strength, vigor and ambition are those of a man of middle life, and his plans reach out to larger fields of usefulness, in the good hope of rounding out a century of active service for mankind. He has a library of more than 5,000 standard works, and his home and office are the centers of social and business activities, common to few men of his age. As relaxation, he enjoys the presidencies of the Rhode Island Citizens Historical Association, the Bristol County Historical Society and the Barrington Historic-Antiquarian Society.

JOSEPH S. ALLAN (deceased). In writing of Newport's citizens and of the families which have figured prominently in the development of the city, none are more deserving of mention than that of the above named gentleman, now deceased, but who was for many years intimately connected with Newport's business interests. The name he bore has been an honorable one in business circles for many years, the different representatives having been men of sterling integrity and great worth of character.

The first authentic information of the family we have concerns the great-grandfather of Joseph S., William Simon Newton Allan, Esq., who was born Sept. 18, 1758, in Newport, dying in the same city March 29, 1830. He conducted a grocery and liquor business, and also owned a line of vessels which plied the waters in the mercantile trade between Newport and the West Indies. He lived with his family for a time in Jamaica, but later returned to Newport. His wife before her marriage was Abigail Westgate, and to this union were born three children, as follows: John J., born Sept. 5, 1789, died Jan. 7, 1861; Erastus P., born Oct. 12, 1793, died Jan. 29, 1848; Edward T., born Feb. 12, 1808, died July 20, 1887.

Joseph P. Allen

first president of the Association, July, 1880, holding the position until his death, when he was elected president of the International Association. The magazine of the A. W. S., in July, 1884, was dedicated to the teachers and was the first to have a large number of educators of the United States to recognize the value of their united strength and the great possibilities growing out of united action. The following resolution, unanimously adopted, recognized President Bicknell's great services to this Association:

RESOLVED, that the unparalleled success of this meeting is chiefly due to the energy, devotion and organizing ability of Hon. Thomas W. Bicknell, the President of this Association, whose wise and comprehensive plans, enthusiastic and self-sacrificing efforts and directing hand have inspired and guided the great undertaking from its inception to its present triumphant close, and no formal words can properly express our thankful appreciation."

Dr. Bicknell is a member of the Massachusetts Historic Genealogical Society, a corresponding member of the Rhode Island Historical Society, a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, of the American Social Science Association, and an honorary member of the Pennsylvania Historical Society. He was elected president of the Bicknell Family Association, in December, 1879. In 1872 he was chosen honorary member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, and received the honorary degree of Master of Arts from Brown College in 1883. From 1872 to 1875 he was president of the Rhode Island Sunday-school Association, and first vice-president of the Rhode Island Historical Society. He was a delegate from the Rhode Island Society to the National Conference of the American Sunday-school Union, held at the Suffolk Hotel, Boston, in 1875. He was also a delegate to the Triennial Convention of the American Sunday-school Union, held at the same hotel, in 1877.

Dr. Bicknell has been both a student and a teacher. He was appointed to the position of professor of natural history at the University of Rhode Island, in 1870. He has since 1873 he traveled in Holland, Belgium, Turkey, Austria, Hungary, and France, and has since 1875 for the purpose of collecting specimens for the Rhode Island Museum. He has since 1875 been a member of the Rhode Island Historical Society, and has since 1875 been a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Dr. Bicknell was born in Massachusetts in 1800. He was educated in the common schools of his native State, and in the University of Rhode Island. He was a member of the Rhode Island Historical Society, and has since 1875 been a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

In 1893, Dr.

R. I., where he has led a busy life as editor, publisher and business man. Among the enterprises in which he has had an active part are the founding of the Municipal League of Providence, of which he was secretary for six years; of the magazine called the Leader, of which he was editor and publisher; of the Leader Silk Company, of which he was president and treasurer; of the Bristol County Historical Society, of which he is president; and the American Institute of Business, Commerce and Finance, of which he is president. In 1897 he wrote and published "The History of Barrington, R. I., one of the most complete town histories ever written. He is now engaged on "Sowams, Its History and Records," and "The Genealogy of the Bicknell Family." Other works from his pen are "The Michael Pierce Fight, 1676," "The Governors of Rhode Island, and their Administrations," "A Century of Old Providence" and "Heroes of New England in the Civil War." He spends his summers on the coast of Maine, where he has established a reputation as a skillful yachtsman. His strength, vigor and ambition are those of a man of middle life, and his plans reach out to larger fields of usefulness, in the good hope of rounding out a century of active service for mankind. He has a library of more than 5,000 standard works, and his home and office are the centers of social and business activities, common to few men of his age. As relaxation, he enjoys the presidencies of the Rhode Island Citizens Historical Association, the Bristol County Historical Society and the Barrington Historic-Antiquarian Society.

JOSEPH S. ALLAN (deceased). In writing of Newport's citizens and of the families which have figured prominently in the development of the city, none are more deserving of mention than that of the above-named gentleman, now deceased, but who was for many years intimately connected with Newport's business interests. The name he bore has been an honorable one in business circles for many years, the different representatives having been men of sterling integrity and great worth of character.

The first authentic information of the family we have concerns the great-grandfather of Joseph S. William Simon Newton Allan, Esq., who was born Sept. 18, 1758, in Newport, dying in the same city March 20, 1830. He conducted a grocery and liquor business, and also owned a line of vessels which plied the waters in the mercantile trade between Newport and the West Indies. He lived with his family for a time in Jamaica, but later returned to Newport. His wife before her marriage was Abigail Westgate, and to this union were born three children, as follows: John J., born Sept. 1772, died Jan. 7, 1861; Erastus P., born Oct. 1773, died Jan. 20, 1848; Edward T., born Feb. 1775, died July 20, 1887.

Joseph P. Allan

John J. Allan, the grandfather, was also a native of Newport, born Sept. 5, 1789. He died Jan. 7, 1861. He continued the business of his father, and also ran a ship chandlery store in Newport for a number of years. His wife, who was Sarah Rogers Gates before her marriage, the daughter of Asa Gates, was born in Newport Aug. 31, 1790, and died March 1, 1869. To this union came the following children: John, born May 10, 1810, who died Nov. 3, 1885; Elizabeth, born Aug. 9, 1817, who died May 15, 1830; Sarah, born Oct. 13, 1818; William, born April 12, 1820, who died Sept. 12, 1823; Robert, born Sept. 4, 1822; William (2), born Feb. 11, 1824, who died Jan. 4, 1894; James, born Nov. 8, 1825, now living in Taunton, Mass.; Horace, born Feb. 6, 1828, who died March 11, 1887; Abigail, born Sept. 24, 1829, who died Aug. 10, 1867; and Andrew, born March 6, 1831, who died April 29, 1897. Of these children, William (2) was our subject's father.

William Allan was also engaged in the grocery business and was a man of affairs in his day in his native city. To his marriage with Jane Rae Sharpe, of Newport, were born the following children: Sarah Stanton, who became the wife of Philip Caswell, of Newport; John, who married Mary Kesson, of Newport; Joseph S.; William Russell, a tinsmith in Boston, who married Katie Logan, of Providence, R. I.; and Lizzie Cooper and John (1), both of whom died young.

Joseph Sharpe Allan was born Dec. 1, 1862, in Newport, where he passed all of his comparatively short life, dying in his forty-second year, on Oct. 31, 1904. Joseph S. Allan began his business career as a clerk in the grocery store of his father, after having acquired a common school education in the public schools of his native city. He later learned the tinsmith's trade with Langley & Sharpe, in the employ of which firm he remained for a period of some twenty years. In February, 1894, he and his brother, William R. Allan, engaged in the tinsmith business on their own account, their store and shop being located at the corner of Spring and Stone streets. At the end of the first year our subject purchased the interests of his brother in the business, which he thereafter conducted alone until his death. Joseph S. Allan was a successful business man largely because of his penchant for hard work, and had he lived he would, no doubt, have acquired a very comfortable fortune.

In disposition Mr. Allan was most happy and jovial, a "hail fellow well met" with a large following of friends. These he met most frequently in the different social and fraternal organizations with which he was affiliated, among them being St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; Newport Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M.; DeBlois Council, No. 5, R. & S. M.; Washington Commandery, No. 4, Knights Templar, of Newport; Palestine Temple, Order of the Mystic Shrine, of Providence; Redwood Lodge, No. 11, Knights of Pythias; Newport Lodge, No. 104, B. P. O. Elks; and Weenat Shassit Tribe, No. 6, Improved Order of Red Men. In the line of his business Mr. Allan was a member of the Builders' and Merchants' Exchange, of which he was one of the directors. He was also a member of the Newport Horticultural Society, and of the Red Men's Club. In political faith he was a staunch Republican, but never sought nor cared for public office. He attended the Methodist Episcopal Church, giving liberally to its support.

Mr. Allan was married Dec. 1, 1899, to Miss Johanna F. Waegle, daughter of Valentine and Katherina (Dekantsreiter) Waegle, of New York, who survives to mourn the untimely death of her devoted and kindly husband. It is but the truth to say that "death loves a shining mark" in this case, for he was a popular and deserving citizen, and his death was a distinct shock to the community, and a source of deepest regret and grief to his family and many friends.

NORRIS (The Capt. John Norris family). As evidenced by the town records of Bristol the town has been the home of the Norrises since early in the eighteenth century, the earliest records revealing the family of Samuel and Rebecca Norris, whose children, Rebecca, Samuel, Thomas, Abigail and John, were born between 1719 and 1731. However, the Bristol branch of the New England Norris family of which this article is to treat—that of the family of the late Capt. John Norris—is of less than a hundred years' standing in the town. But through the greater part of the last century it has been one of the leading families of Bristol, one of marked individuality and force, which has given its members position and influence in the community and State. Reference is made to Capt. John Norris himself, to his sons, one of whom, the late Samuel Norris, was long conspicuous in this as well as foreign countries in connection with the manufacture and sale of improved fire-arms, and to the latter's son, Samuel Norris, Jr., a prominent member of the Rhode Island Bar.

According to the author of a work on the descendants of Nicholas Norris, who was early at Hampton, N. H., and whose descendants are numerous in that State, the Norris family is an ancient one in England. For many centuries it flourished in Sutton and Lancashire. One branch of the family of Armagh, Ireland, claim descent from Sir Henry Rvecote, Berkshire. It is a tradition that Nicholas Norris, born about 1640, who early settled at Hampton, N. H., was born in Ireland, a son of an English settler there, and that he came to America when fourteen years of age. The first record of him in Hampton is his marriage in 1663 to Sarah Cox.

Rev. Edward Norris, a non-conformist minister, born in England in 1570, resided at Tedbury and at Horseigh, Gloucestershire, and was a great deal in Bristol. He came to America; joined the church in Boston in 1639; was at Salem the next year; married Elenor ——— and died in Salem in 1659.

Thomas Norris, son of Samuel and Rebecca Norris, was born in Bristol May 14, 1729. He married Patience Harlock, daughter of Thomas Harlock, of Martha's Vineyard, and a descendant of Governor Thomas Harlock.

Samuel Norris, son of Thomas and Patience, was born Nov. 28, 1753, and died March 4, 1822. He married Lucy Shaw, who died March 27, 1844.

CAPT. JOHN NORRIS, son of Samuel and Lucy, was born Aug. 28, 1791, in Tisbury, Martha's Vineyard, where his boyhood and early years were passed. He became a sea-faring man, a master of vessels, and for a number of years engaged in the merchant service from the port of Boston, chiefly in the Russian and West Indian trade. In this occupation he was very successful. He gave up this pursuit in 1835 and with his family located in Bristol, R. I. Here he at once engaged actively in business, in the manufacture of sperm oil and candles, in which he continued to prosper, and at the same time engaged extensively in the whaling and West Indian trade. Subsequently he was largely interested in the manufacture of cotton goods, was one of the original proprietors of the Pocanoket steam mill in Bristol, and was superintendent and treasurer of the company operating it until the mill's destruction by fire in 1856. In 1861 he was appointed inspector of customs for the port of Bristol, an office he held until the time of his death. Throughout his residence in Bristol he was a very useful and honored citizen, often called to positions of trust and responsibility, the duties of which he performed with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the public.

Captain Norris possessed a warm and generous heart and gave freely to worthy charities, also supporting such enterprises as appealed to him for the good of the town and community. He and his wife were zealous Baptists and his means he contributed liberally to the support of that church and also gave to the work of other religious societies. A recent writer of past days in Bristol thus referred to Captain Norris: "There was one gentleman of 'ye olden time'—Capt. John Norris, who never failed to give the boys good advice whenever he passed us. Captain Norris was a sedate, quiet man, never seen without his silk hat and a heavy walking stick. He was the chief owner, I believe, of the Pocanoket Cotton Mill, then known as the down town mill."

Captain Norris was married to Harriet B. Luce, born May 24, 1796, in Martha's Vineyard, and to them came children as follows: Samuel, John, Harriet Byron, Charles and Lucius. Captain Norris died at his home in Bristol, Feb. 6, 1866. His widow died Oct. 27, 1879.

SAMUEL NORRIS, son of Capt. John, was born July 26, 1827, in the city of Boston, Mass., and when eight years old came to Bristol. In early manhood he became associated with the late Horace M. Barns, who afterward married his sister, the two engaging actively in the shipping trade under the firm name of Norris & Barns, Bristol then being an important and busy port. This firm in about 1850 became interested in the sugar refinery at Bristol, which was operated by C. R. Dimond & Co., and later, on the failure of this concern, the business relation between Mr. Barns and Mr. Norris terminated.

Mr. Norris was possessed of a good mechanical turn of mind, or at least possessed that mechanical knowledge and judgment which enabled him to see and appreciate merit in machines, and later he devoted his energies to the development of improvements along these lines. Soon after the Civil war broke out his attention was called by the master armorer of the Springfield Arsenal to the great need of the government for small arms, and he then conceived the idea of manufacturing arms by having the various parts made inter-changeable, producing them in different factories and then assembling them. He was thus enabled, without any factory of his own, to manufacture large quantities of small arms, the parts of which were made by fifty-seven different establishments, and assembled at a workshop at Middletown, Conn.; the arms so produced were all accepted by the Government as first-class in every respect. He filled large orders in this way, which was a complete departure in manufacturing methods. About this time his attention was called to a gun which was being made by E. Remington & Sons, and which was subsequently known as the Remington gun. He appreciated its merits and entered into a contract under which he manufactured a number of these guns for the United States Government. Subsequently this relationship developed into his appointment as representative of E. Remington & Sons in Europe, where he went in 1865, remaining there until 1878. During these years was the period of his greatest activity and success in business. He secured very important contracts for the Remington gun from Egypt, Spain, Denmark, and other countries, which orders brought very large business to this country.

Wherever there were wars or rumors of wars Colonel Norris, or his brother John, who became associated with him in this business, would be on hand, and in this way he had many interesting experiences and came in contact with many of the most prominent people in Europe at that time. He was presented to the Emperor of Austria in Vienna on the occasion of the trial of the Remington gun. He concluded one contract with the government of Egypt at Buckingham Palace, where the Viceroy of Egypt was then visiting. Just before the Franco-Prussian war he had an audience with Napoleon III. and the Empress Eugenie, at which interview the Empress herself fired the Remington gun and showed herself to be an expert in handling firearms. During that war, when he was at the Hague, standing in front of the "Paulez" hotel, King William, of Holland to whom he had previously been presented, rode up on horseback, and, greeting him pleasantly shook hands and said: "This is a good time for you, Mr. Norris." To this Mr. Norris replied: "Possibly, your Majesty, but I regret the cause." This proved indeed a good time for Mr. Norris and his brother, who did an extensive business with the French government in various military supplies.

The Carlist rebellion in Spain also brought important orders and Mr. Norris spent much time there, taking many perilous journeys through the Carlist country. Traveling by diligence, with samples of arms for the Spanish government in his baggage, it was only his pleasant, genial manner which prevented search, which in those times of violence might have led to his being shot, as happened even to newspaper correspondents at that time. He received from King Amadeus a decoration of the Order of Isabella Catholica.

During the Russo-Turkish war Mr. Norris spent much time at Constantinople, Athens, Belgrade and Bucharest, and thus was brought in touch with both sides at this exciting time. Not long before the French war Mr. Norris, when in Austria, learned of a gun invented by the Mauser Brothers, who were employed at a government factory at Oberndorf, Wurtemberg. He at once appreciated the merits of this gun and went to Oberndorf, where he met the two brothers. They had received but scant encouragement from the government officials and they gladly entered into an arrangement with Mr. Norris in regard to their invention, one of the brothers remarking to the other, on the occasion of this first meeting, "Paul, I believe that our man has come." For two years he assisted them in the development of their arm, but later, through various causes, his interest in this remarkable gun was lost, and yet he always took pride in having been the first to appreciate the real merit of one of the most marked improvements made in small arms.

About this time Col. Norris became interested in an invention made by B. B. Hotchkiss of a revolving cannon and invested the first money that went to develop this cannon. Its exploitation was slow and before its final success was assured Mr. Norris and his brother had parted with their interest in this great invention. Through Mr. Hotchkiss he became interested in the Nicholson Wood Pavement and introduced it in London, Paris, Buda-Pesth and other cities, in most cases at his own expense, and ultimately organized in London the Improved Wood Pavement Company. This pavement, after some years, came into general use in London and elsewhere in Europe. The noiseless streets which are now enjoyed in that great metropolis are chiefly due to the earnest efforts of Mr. Norris in the introduction of this pavement.

In 1878 Colonel Norris returned to the United States and in 1879 his family followed him to their home in Bristol. He afterward made a number of trips to Europe on various matters pertaining to inventions in a wide diversity of arts, his tireless activity and devotion to work never ceasing until the serious illness which he had in 1895. After that time, with some slight exceptions, he gave up active connection with business, living quietly at his home.

Mr. Norris's life was marked by untiring energy, by constant unselfish devotion to his family, generosity and kindness to all, courage in adversity, uprightness in all his dealings, and the deepest religious faith. He died at his home on Hope street Nov. 17, 1902.

In 1846, at the age of nineteen years, Mr. Norris was married to Julia Griswold Holmes, daughter of Dr. Jabez Holmes. One child, a daughter, was born to them, and both mother and daughter died in 1847. On April 22, 1850, Mr. Norris was married to Isabella Eustis Dimond, daughter of Francis More Dimond [see Dimond family], of Bristol, R. I., who subsequently became governor of Rhode Island. Three children were born to them, namely: Maria Dimond, Isabella Eustis (who died young) and Samuel.

SAMUEL NORRIS, JR., born in Bristol July 23, 1862, was three years of age when the family went to Europe, where his father was engaged in selling fire-arms. They remained there until 1879, and when they came back to America young Samuel entered Harvard University, and was graduated in 1883 with honors in history and the general course also. He spent the next two years at the Harvard Law School, and was admitted to the Bar in Rhode Island in the summer of 1885. While abroad he remained mostly in England and France, and matriculated at London University just before leaving. His preparation for Harvard was made while abroad. He was elected to the Legislature in 1897 and 1898 from Bristol. In July, 1897, he was appointed attorney for the United States Rubber Company, which position he continues to hold. In 1901 he was elected secretary of the company, and since then he has spent the greater part of his time in New York City. His first association in law was with Colonel Colt, in whose office he finished his study preparatory to admission to the Bar, and he remained with him as long as Colonel Colt continued to practice law. Mr. Norris has been active in the reorganization of some important lumber companies in South Carolina and West Virginia and is now president of one of these companies. He has delivered several orations on the 4th of July in Bristol and addresses on Memorial Day and on other occasions. Mr. Norris was for many years an active member of the school committee.

Mr. Norris is genial in manner, careful and painstaking in his business, and combines in a large degree those elements which go to make up the successful lawyer of to-day.

ALDRICH. The Aldrich and Winsor families are among the oldest and most prominent in Rhode Island, and extensive mention is made of both throughout this work.

(I) George Aldrich, the progenitor of the Aldrich family, came from Derbyshire, England, in 1631, and after arrival in New England was at Dorchester, Boston, Braintree and Mendon, Mass. He was a freeman at Dorchester in 1636, was granted land at Boston in 1640, was an inhabitant of Braintree from 1644 to 1663, and in the latter year was among the first settlers of Mendon, Mass. Here he lived the rest of his life, excepting a year or two at Swansea, Mass. (1669 and 1670), and a brief stay at Braintree, perhaps during the Indian war of 1676.

Joshua Winsor, the ancestor of the Winsor family, is of record in Providence as early as 1637, in which year he was one of the twelve signers of the compact of obedience to the orders, etc., of the town, and he also was one of the thirty-nine signers of the agreement of 1640 for a form of government.

George Aldrich (above) married 3d of 9th month, 1629, Catherine Seald, and their children were: Abel, Joseph, Mary, Meriam, Experience, John, Sarah, Peter, Mercy, Jacob and Martha.

(II) Joseph Aldrich, son of George, born June 4, 1635, was of Braintree, Mass., and Providence, R. I. In 1662 he married Patience Osborne. He was taxed in Providence in 1687. His death occurred in 1701. The children born to Joseph and Patience were: Joseph, of Providence; Samuel, of Providence and Smithfield; Ephraim, of Providence and Gloucester; John, and Sarah.

(III) John Aldrich, son of Joseph, married March 20, 1699, Martha Evans, daughter of Richard and Mary Evans. Mr. Aldrich was a miller and lived in Providence and Scituate, R. I. He became a freeman in 1701. Their children were: John, Jonathan, David, Aaron, Richard, Noah and Joseph. The father died March 17, 1735. He gave to his son Noah land near Killingly between the old and new lines.

(IV) David Aldrich, son of John and Martha (Evans), resided in Scituate. He married Sarah sister of William Sprague, and among the children born to this union was a son Noah.

(V) Noah Aldrich, born March 10, 1750, in Scituate, served in the Revolution. He married Huldah Whitaker, who was born May 27, 1750, daughter of Seth and Rachel Whitaker. Their children were: David, Sarah, Phillip, Noah, Richard, Seth, Rachel, Hulda, Nancy, Ada and William.

(VI) David Aldrich, son of Noah and Huldah (Whitaker), was born June 29, 1770, in Scituate, R. I., and married Hope Law, of Killingly, Conn., who was born Aug. 3, 1777, a daughter of David. She died Sept. 14, 1851. Their children were: George, William, John and Archibald (twins) and David L. Of these children, George was the maternal grandfather of George F. A. Beane, of Olneyville, who is mentioned elsewhere. William married Betsey Smith, and they were the parents of Gilbert Aldrich, of Scituate, mentioned elsewhere. John is mentioned below. Archibald died at the age of thirteen, and is now buried in the family plot of his twin brother, John. David L. is mentioned elsewhere.

David Aldrich, father of this family, was a successful farmer of his time, and always resided in Scituate, where he died Oct. 13, 1854. He served for a number of years in the town council of Scituate, and was a director of the old bank in that town.

(VII) JOHN ALDRICH, son of David and Hope (Law), was born in Scituate, R. I., July 20, 1804, and was there reared. For some years he assisted with the cultivation of the homestead acres, attending school and fitting himself for the position which he was destined to hold in the estimation of his fellowmen. In 1857 he located in Johnston, R. I., where he purchased the farm on which the remainder of his life was passed. In politics he was a Republican and always voted with his party; he never cared for office. His value as a citizen and neighbor was founded upon a more solid foundation than mere views on public questions. His industry was second to none, and though achievement with him was of the slow, painstaking order, it was the better therefor. His life was not greatly prolonged, but was filled with active toil. For a farmer he left considerable real estate, both country and city property. His neighbor testified to his sterling qualities; the business man asserted his integrity; the moralist endorsed his private life, and all men vouched for his honesty, and said of him, "He dealt with his fellow man as with a brother."

John Aldrich married (first) Dec. 3, 1850, Tabitha Burlingame Winsor, who was born July 12, 1815, daughter of Welcome and Tabitha (Burlingame) Winsor, and descended from distinguished ancestry, beginning with Robert Winsor, whose son Samuel was the father of John, whose son Samuel was the father of Joshua (alluded to in the foregoing), founder of the family in America. The ancestral line continues from this Joshua through Samuel (who married Mercy Waterman, widow of Resolved, and daughter of Roger Williams), Rev. Joshua, Joshua, Elisha and Welcome. To the union of Mr. Aldrich just mentioned there were born two daughters: Ada J., born May 22, 1853, who died Sept. 30, 1900, in Mapleville, R. I., unmarried; and Abbie A., born April 17, 1855. The mother of these died Aug. 31, 1861, and Mr. Aldrich married (second) Lucy Winsor, daughter of Isaac Winsor. By this marriage there were no children. The death of John Aldrich occurred

John Aldrich

July 13, 1880, and the only surviving descendant is his daughter, Miss Abbie A., who since 1880 has made her home in Providence.

WELLS (South Kingstown family). Mr. Charles K. Wells, of Milwaukie, who prepared a genealogy of a branch of the Wells family in 1874, said in his prefatory remarks:

"The Wells, or Welles, family in England is of very ancient origin, clearly traceable back, it is claimed, to the time of the Norman Conquest. About 1635 several families of that name (which was then sometimes spelled Wells, but oftener Welles) emigrated from England to Massachusetts. Some of these families remained in the eastern part of the State, others went to Rhode Island, others to Hartford and other towns in Connecticut, and still others to Hatfield and Hadley, in the western part of Massachusetts. So that we find at a very early day—before 1660—persons bearing that name in many towns in New England. It is probable that Thomas Wells of Ipswich was the earliest emigrant of that name who settled in this country. He came as early as 1635, and perhaps a year earlier. Savage states that he came in 1635, on the 'Susan and Ellen' from London, with young Richard Saltonstall, when thirty years of age."

In southern Rhode Island there were two early families of this name, namely, those of Peter Wells, of Jamestown and Kingstown, respectively, he taxed in 1679; and Thomas Wells, of Westerly, who took the oath of allegiance to Rhode Island in 1679 (he had been at New London, Conn., in 1648, and at Ipswich after 1661, going to Westerly subsequently). For several generations the descendants of Peter lived in South Kingstown and those of Thomas in Westerly and towns that were formed from it, especially Hopkinton.

This article is to refer especially to some of the posterity of Thomas Wells who have since lived in South Kingstown, where they have been among the most substantial and leading citizens of the town, having, too, allied themselves by marriage with some of the first families of the State. Among them may be mentioned the late Thomas Potter Wells, founder of the Narragansett Times and for many years as an official closely allied with the banking interests of the town, and his son Herbert Johnson Wells, who for twenty-five and more years has been president of the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Company at Providence.

Thomas Wells, of perhaps both Hopkinton and South Kingstown, was a descendant of the southern Rhode Island family.

Thomas Robinson Wells, son of Thomas, born Oct. 20, 1785, married March 15, 1808, Maria Potter, born Aug. 24, 1790, in South Kingstown, R. I., daughter of Asa and Hannah (Hagadorn) Potter, and a descendant of Nathaniel Potter, of England and Portsmouth, R. I., through Ichabod, Robert, Capt. Ichabod, Col. Thomas and Asa Potter. The children born to Thomas Robinson and Maria (Potter) Wells were: Thomas Potter, born April 28, 1809; Mary Robinson, born March 20, 1811 (married George Robinson); Hannah, born May 8, 1813 (married Rev. Charles P. Governor); Rev. John Hagadorn, born Jan. 28, 1817; Elizabeth M., born Dec. 15, 1819 (married Frank Hagadorn); Sarah Palmer, born Oct. 12, 1823 (married Dr. Rouse Clark). The father of this family by a second marriage had a son, Amos Palmer Wells, who was major of a New York regiment in the Civil war, and died from disease contracted in the army. Thomas Robinson Wells was for a period of thirty years the town clerk of South Kingstown, and held other positions of prominence in religious as well as secular matters. He died in 1853.

THOMAS POTTER WELLS, son of Thomas Robinson, was born April 28, 1809, in South Kingstown. He received his education in the old Kingston Academy, then in the height of its usefulness. He subsequently taught a public school in a small shop in what is now the yard of the Helme house, just north of the street leading north of the old academy. This was probably the first public school taught in this district. He acted as clerk in the store of Mr. Thomas S. Taylor, in the present post office building, and served in a similar capacity in the store of Gov. Jeremiah Thurston, in Hopkinton. While there he started the first Sunday-school of the place, and began a work in which he ever had a deep interest, and in which, while his health permitted, he took a most active part. His organization, system and order of the school early marked what proved life-long characteristics. The school has been pronounced by one who attended to be a model of order. During his long experience with the Kingston Sunday-school he was always devising plans for more effective organization and work. It was also while in the store of Governor Thurston that he became acquainted with Miss Elizabeth Clark (daughter of Russell Clark, of Newport), who afterward became his wife. From Hopkinton he was called to Wickford as cashier of the Narragansett Bank, succeeding Samuel E. Gardiner, in 1829. He was then in his twenty-first year. After a short stay he was compelled to resign because of failing health, when he made arrangements to spend the winter in the West Indies, intending to sail in a brig from Wickford, but circumstances influenced him to abandon the plan. The brig sailed, and was lost at sea with all on board. Mr. Wells became so greatly reduced that his death was hourly expected, yet he recovered. Having given up banking, he returned to Kingston and purchased the old Robert Pollock estate, building the house owned and occupied until his death, July 20, 1907, by his brother, Rev. J. Hagadorn Wells. This house was built about 1832, and had a store in the eastern part. Here he went into business for himself. From this place he went to the Wakefield Bank at its organization in 1835, and acted as its cashier for a time,

July 13, 1880, and the only surviving descendant is his daughter, Miss Abbie A., who since 1880 has made her home in Providence.

It is probable that Thomas Wells of Ipswich was the earliest emigrant of that name who settled in this country. He came as early as 1635, and perhaps a year earlier. Savage states that he came in 1635, on the 'Susan and Ellen' from London, with young Richard Saltonstall, when thirty years of age."

In southern Rhode Island there were two early families of this name, namely, those of Peter Wells, of Jamestown and Kingstown, respectively, he taxed in 1679; and Thomas Wells, of Westerly, who took the oath of allegiance to Rhode Island in 1679 (he had been at New London, Conn., in 1648, and at Ipswich after 1661, going to Westerly subsequently). For several generations the descendants of Peter lived in South Kingstown and those of Thomas in Westerly and towns that were formed from it, especially Hopkinton.

This article is to refer especially to some of the posterity of Thomas Wells who have since lived in South Kingstown, where they have been among the most substantial and leading citizens of the town, having, too, allied themselves by marriage with some of the first families of the State. Among them may be mentioned the late Thomas Potter Wells, founder of the Narragansett Times and for many years as an official closely allied with the banking interests of the town, and his son Herbert Johnson Wells, who for twenty-five and more years has been president of the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Company at Providence.

Thomas Wells, of perhaps both Hopkinton and South Kingstown, was a descendant of the southern Rhode Island family.

Thomas Robinson Wells, son of Thomas, born Oct. 20, 1785, married March 15, 1808, Maria Potter, born Aug. 24, 1790, in South Kingstown. R. I., daughter of Asa and Hannah (Hagadorn) Potter, and a descendant of Nathaniel Potter, of England and Portsmouth, R. I., through Ichabod, Robert, Capt. Ichabod, Col. Thomas and Asa Potter. The children born to Thomas Robinson and Maria (Potter) Wells were: Thomas Potter, born April 28, 1809; Mary Robinson, born March 20, 1811 (married George Robinson); Hannah, born May 8, 1813 (married Rev. Charles P. Governor); Rev. John Hagadorn, born Jan. 28, 1817; Elizabeth M., born Dec. 15, 1819 (married Frank Hagadorn); Sarah Palmer, born Oct. 12, 1823 (married Dr. Rouse Clark). The father of this family by a second marriage had a son, Amos Palmer Wells, who was major of a New York regiment in the Civil war, and died from disease contracted in the army. Thomas Robinson Wells was for a period of thirty years the town clerk of South Kingstown, and held other positions of prominence in religious as well as secular matters. He died in 1853.

THOMAS POTTER WELLS, son of Thomas Robinson, was born April 28, 1809, in South Kingstown. He received his education in the old Kingston Academy, then in the height of its usefulness. He subsequently taught a public school in a small shop in what is now the yard of the Helme house, just north of the street leading north of the old academy. This was probably the first public school taught in this district. He acted as clerk in the store of Mr. Thomas S. Taylor, in the present post office building, and served in a similar capacity in the store of Gov. Jeremiah Thurston, in Hopkinton. While there he started the first Sunday-school of the place, and began a work in which he ever had a deep interest, and in which, while his health permitted, he took a most active part. His organization, system and order of the school early marked what proved lifelong characteristics. The school has been pronounced by one who attended to be a model of order. During his long experience with the Kingston Sunday-school he was always devising plans for more effective organization and work. It was also while in the store of Governor Thurston that he became acquainted with Miss Elizabeth Clark (daughter of Russell Clark, of Newport), who afterward became his wife. From Hopkinton he was called to Wickford as cashier of the Narragansett Bank, succeeding Samuel E. Gardiner, in 1829. He was then in his twenty-first year. After a short stay he was compelled to resign because of failing health, when he made arrangements to spend the winter in the West Indies, intending to sail in a brig from Wickford, but circumstances influenced him to abandon the plan. The brig sailed, and was lost at sea with all on board. Mr. Wells became so greatly reduced that his death was hourly expected, yet he recovered. Having given up banking, he returned to Kingston and purchased the old Robert Pollock estate, building the house owned and occupied until his death, July 20, 1907, by his brother, Rev. J. Hagadorn Wells. This house was built about 1832, and had a store in the eastern part. Here he went into business for himself. From this place he went to the Wakefield Bank at its organization in 1835, and acted as its cashier for a time, when he returned to Kingston, resuming mercantile business in company with Mr. Thomas S. Taylor, with whom he had previously been clerk. The partnership was, however, soon dissolved and he again established himself alone in the building last occupied as such a store by the late Benjamin Palmer. While there he served two years as clerk of the Supreme Court, resigning when, in 1843, he was again called to Wakefield as cashier. While there he developed a taste for printing which increased until, to meet the demand, he issued a small advertising sheet, subsequently called the South County Journal, and which afterward came into the management of the late Duncan Gillies, who came to Wakefield in the employ of Mr. Wells; the paper was rechristened and conducted as the Narragansett Times. In 1860 he assumed the position of cashier of the National Landholders Bank, at Kingston, succeeding Asa Potter, ex-secretary of State, and remaining in that office till his death, which occurred Aug. 31, 1884. He was eminently qualified for the position which he held in the bank, his systematic, orderly business habits and experience in other banks being of great aid in acquiring success.

The domestic life of Mr. Wells was very harmonious but unfortunate. His first wife, already referred to, and by whom he had two children—Thomas C., deceased, and a daughter, who married and is living in Pennsylvania—died while he was clerk of the court, and he married Clarissa, daughter of Jeremiah Shearman, Esq., who then kept the county jail. By his second wife he had two sons—George Henry and Theodore Backus, both of whom engaged in business in Chicago. While cashier of the Wakefield Bank for the second time his second wife died, and while still there he was married to Julia E. Johnson, of Lyme, Conn. Two children of this union survive, namely: Herbert J., well known as president of the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Company; and Helen May.

Mr. Wells was deeply concerned in the welfare of his fellow townspeople, and sustained his interest in church and kindred work to the end of his days. At the time of his death he was serving as deacon of the Kingston Congregational Church, where for years, as previously mentioned, he had been superintendent of the Sunday-school. The following is taken from a local paper of the time:

"The sermon of the Rev. E. O. Bartlett, at the Kingston Church on Sunday, was delivered as a memorial discourse on the life and character of the late Deacon Thomas P. Wells. The sermon was received by the audience with sorrowful attention, many of the more tender references to the deceased calling forth a tear of real sorrow for the great loss the church and Sunday-school as well as the social and business society of the village and community have sustained in Mr. Wells's death. The sermon was based upon Hebrew xi: 14-16—'For they that say such things declare plainly that they seek a country, a better country, that is an heavenly.' The speaker began by saying that while it is not the office of the ministry to eulogize the dead or the living, it may speak of their virtues as examples, and their lives as illustrations of faith. It may dwell upon the good they have done as encouragements to noble living and earnest Christian activity. One of the things for which we are to be grateful in the memory of one who stood for so many years as a strong pillar in the church is his faithfulness as a Christian father, whose highest enthusiasm and deepest life were stirred not by things that are seen, but by things that are unseen and eternal. For the head of a family he was peculiarly qualified by his natural disposition and by his strong emotional nature. He was an affectionate man, and his heart throbs were felt by those whom he loved. He was a man of prayer, and from the altar of the home to the altar of the sanctuary there was ever a beaten path. The church was a part of his home. He regarded its interests and its support not as questions of inclination and benevolence, but of solemn and sacred duty—something that he owed, not gave, to God. He lived a high ideal of Christian character. It was not limited to the little community of the household of faith with whom he was here associated, but took in the great universal church of the living God. Hence his intense loyalty for the great missionary organizations of the church. His steady persistence that their claims and interests should be regularly presented made him, in this regard, certainly a true Aaron and Hur to the pulpit. Perhaps the most marked manifestation of his broad and enlightened Christian philanthropy was in the Sunday-school, where he so strenuously insisted that the collections taken by the children should not be used for home purposes, but be consecrated to purely benevolent work; to foreign and home missionary enterprises. So intense was this principle, so near to his heart, that for years he defrayed the necessary expense of the Sunday-school, rather than allow the money given by the children to be diverted from its sacred and consecrated uses. This he esteemed not only a matter of duty and religious principle but of the utmost importance in training children to habits of real Christian beneficence; to give not only from love of their fellow-men, from sympathy for the poor, the ignorant and vicious, but from a love of God and loyalty to His church; a deep sense of obligation to that Savior who 'became poor, that we through His poverty might be made rich.' He always insisted that the poorest, the humblest, should have the luxury of giving. He would himself pay for the child's question and singing books in order that the child might be conscious of only the most elevated sentiments that ever pervade the human soul while we grovel here below. The sentiment that we are doing something out of the spirit of pure beneficence, doing something for the benefit of the poor, the ignorant and godless, out of overflowing love to God.

"This spirit could not have been otherwise than accompanied by a deep reverence and love for the solemn assembly of the Church of God. With him church attendance was not a question of preference or pleasure, but of principle, of duty, and of solemn obligation. He did not believe he had any right to stay away from church except under compulsion, and the preparatory lecture he regarded as little less than the essential spiritual preparation for that Communion which was to him while on earth a feast indeed, and which is to-day in heaven the consummation of his lifelong hopes and holy anticipations. The speaker remarked Deacon Wells's love of flowers, saying it was fitting that such a man should pass on to the mansion above on a Sabbath morn, just as the sun was purpling the east, and it was fitting that he should go in the fruitful season of the year. His memory, precious as the perfume of the broken alabaster box, shall remain with this church and community helpfully and healingly."

At a meeting of the directors of the National Landholders' Bank held on Sept. 1st following, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted.

WHEREAS, Thomas P. Wells, who has been for many years the trusted cashier and director of this bank, has been removed by death, it seems fitting that this board should give some expression of their sorrow for this sad event, therefore Resolved, That in the death of Mr. Wells this bank has lost a faithful officer of rare ability, sound judgment and unquestioned integrity, and we mourn his loss with an unfeigned sorrow.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the family and relatives of the deceased—a loss to them, to this community and to us, irreparable.

Resolved, That the directors of this bank will attend the funeral of Mr. Wells in a body.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed on record in this bank, and a copy thereof be sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy also published in the Providence Journal and Narragansett Times.

N. C. PECKHAM,
President.

THOMAS C. WELLS died Jan. 9, 1907, and at the time the following article appeared in a local Kansas paper:

Another of the old pioneers of Kansas has "passed over the river." Thomas C. Wells was born at Hopkinton, R. I., April 26, 1832. He was the oldest son of Thomas P. Wells, late of South Kingstown, R. I. He had a long line of ancestors representing the best elements of New England society. His education was acquired in his home town and at the Academy of East Greenwich, R. I. His father was a banker and proposed that his son should follow in the same line of business. This was the young man's expectation, but failing health rendered it necessary that he should abandon this purpose and leave the Atlantic coast. He determined to come to Kansas and was one of those who helped make this a free State. Along with a younger brother he came to Manhattan, or the place where Manhattan was in the future to be. Here, on Oct. 30, 1856, he married Miss Eleanor Bemis, of Holliston, Mass. This proved a happy union of a little more than fifty years' duration. His wife, now a widow, still survives and sorrows over what seems to be an irreparable bereavement.

Mr. Wells was one of the charter members of the Congregational Church in Manhattan, one of the earliest organized in this State. He was a deacon and leading member of this church till his death, and for most of the time a Sunday-school teacher or superintendent. Among all his flock, a flock noted for its faithful support of its pastor, he knew that among the God-fearing persons on whom he could always rely for wise counsel and faithful support was Mr. Wells.

The influence of Mr. Wells in the community at large was most salutary. Quiet as he was unobtrusive, rather reserved in manner, his influence for good was unusually telling. He feared God and loved his fellow men. Everybody knew this. However, everybody esteemed and loved him.

One of the noted traits of Mr. Wells's character was his love of plants and flowers. His yard was a rich flower garden. He loved the science of botany and horticulture, and in this time of science was one of the best informed men in the State.

In the death of Mr. Wells this community has sustained a loss that will not soon be forgotten. Of him it may be truly said, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." "Their works do follow them."

Mr. Wells died at his home in Manhattan on Wednesday, Jan. 9th, and was buried in this beautiful cemetery on the hill, Jan. 10, 1907.

The officiating ministers were his pastor, the Rev. O. B. Thurston, and the Rev. J. H. Lee, a neighbor of Mr. Wells for forty years. The funeral service was in the Congregational Church. The attendance was very large. The floral offerings, as were proper in case of Mr. Wells, were profuse and very beautiful.—J. H. L.

HERBERT JOHNSON WELLS, son of Thomas Potter and Julia E. (Johnson) Wells, married Oct. 10, 1877, Sarah Emily Perry, who was born April 17, 1849, daughter of John Gould and Harriet Theresa (Hazard) Perry, he a native of South Kingstown, R. I., born June 2, 1817, and for years the efficient town clerk of that town. Mrs. Wells is a direct descendant of Samuel Perry, of Sandwich, Mass., and of that part of South Kingstown known as Perryville, which place was named for him, through James, James (2), John, John R. and John Gould Perry, and of Thomas Hazard, of record in Boston as early as 1635, through Robert, Thomas (2), Jonathan, Thomas (3), Jonathan (2), Bowdoin and Harriet Theresa (Hazard) Perry.

Children as follows have been born to Herbert J. and Sarah Emily (Perry) Wells: Grace Perry, born Feb. 15, 1879, in Providence, R. I.; Herbert Comstock, born Nov. 21, 1880, in Providence; Emily Potter, born Sept. 8, 1882, in South Kingstown, R. I.; Thomas Perry, born April 5, 1884, in South Kingstown; John Hazard, born Dec. 29, 1885, in South Kingstown; and Elizabeth Johnson, born April 20, 1890, in South Kingstown.

On Dec. 10, 1907, Mr. Wells was elected president of the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Company for the twenty-fourth time.

REV. JOHN HAGADORN WELLS, the last survivor of the Rhode Island Constitutional Convention of 1842, which drafted the present fundamental law of the State, and the oldest alumnus of Amherst College, died July 20, 1907, at his home in Kingston village, in his ninety-first year. His death removed from the community in which he was born, and in which he lived during the greater part of a long, active and unusually varied career, one of the most familiar and picturesque figures in the life of his State and generation.

As a constitution maker in the days of his young manhood, afterwards as a lawyer, teacher and clergyman, and in his retirement as one of the last and sturdiest survivors of the leaders of the old school, Mr. Wells made a distinct place for himself in the life of the Commonwealth where most of his life work was done. Death came after a long and gradual decline, due to the infirmities of age. After the death of his wife Mr. Wells failed rapidly, and the end was known to be only a matter of time. The time came at 2 o'clock, July 20th.

The record of Mr. Wells's active career covers twoscore years. It began the span of a lifetime ago, in 1837, when he graduated from Amherst College, and a generation has sprung up since it closed with his retirement from the ministry, in 1877. The last thirty years he passed quietly in his native village, absorbed in study and in watching the political and social development of the changing period. Almost to the last Mr. Wells retained his keen interest in political affairs, especially in his native State, as well as his love of reading and the classics. He was a jealous defender of the principles embodied in the constitutional instrument which he helped frame when a young law student, while recognizing the need of conservative reforms to meet changing conditions.

John Hagadorn Wells was the son of Thomas Robinson Wells and Maria Potter, whose father, Asa Potter, was of the well-known South county family and uncle of the late Judge E. R. Potter, of the Supreme court of this State. Mr. Wells's father was of the Hopkinton family of that name and was for many years the town clerk of South Kingstown and cashier of the old Landholders' National Bank, predecessor of the Kingston Trust Company.

Mr. Wells was born in 1816 in the village where he died and in which for many years he was a prominent figure. His early education was received at the old Kingston Academy, then in its palmy days and receiving its quota of boys from foreign countries as well as from wide sections of the United States. Here he was under the instruction of such well-known educators as Prof. William Gammell, Asa Potter, the late Judge E. R. Potter, Jr., and Azel Noyes.

Under the tutorship of Judge Potter Mr. Wells was fitted for college and entered the Freshman class of Brown University in 1833. After two years there, however, he decided to change, and entered the Junior class at Amherst, graduating in 1837 with a class of fifty-four. Of that class he was the only surviving member for the last year and a half, and for some time enjoyed the distinction of being the oldest living alumnus in point of graduation.

During his college career, both in Brown and Amherst, Mr. Wells found it necessary to supplement his scanty resources by tutoring and teaching school. Upon leaving school he acted as principal of Uxbridge Academy for two years. For a long time he had been debating whether he should devote his life work to the law or to the gospel. At first he turned his attention to the law, studying with Elisha R. Potter, Jr., his cousin, and afterward, when he became a tutor in the family of former Governor Thurston at Hopkinton, with Judge Barculo, a prominent attorney of that town.

Upon the breaking out of the Dorr war in 1842 Mr. Wells took sides with the Law and Order party, and was one of those to march to Chepachet and Acote's Hill, where the followers of Governor Dorr were put to flight without bloodshed.

When a convention was called to frame a State Constitution to displace the old charter Mr. Wells was selected as a fit representative by the electors of Hopkinton, though he was then only about twenty-five years of age, and took part in the deliberations of the convention which resulted in the framing of the new Constitution.

Leaving his law studies in Hopkinton soon afterward Mr. Wells was called to Poughkeepsie Collegiate Institution, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., then a well-known school for boys. Here he was placed in charge of classes in the classics and those beginning the study of law.

The advice of friends, however, induced the student and teacher of Blackstone and Kent to abandon legal pursuits and to devote his energies to preparation for the ministry.

Returning to Rhode Island Mr. Wells accordingly placed himself under the guidance of the able and venerable Rev. Dr. Shephard, of Bristol. Subsequently, having been licensed to preach, he was stationed at Abington, Conn., and Eastham, Mass. Upon ordination, in 1851, he became pastor of the Congregational Church at West Yarmouth, where he remained for five years. He was called to Kingston at the end of that term to start a family school for boys, to take the place of the academy, which had dwindled away. In this venture he was very successful from a pedagogical point of view, and men eminent in their profession have rendered tribute to the thoroughness of his instruction, among them Dr. William T. Bull, the well-known surgeon, of New York, and former Representative William P. Sheffield, Jr., of Newport, whose father's death a few weeks before that of Mr. Wells left the latter as the only surviving member of the constitutional convention of 1842.

The death of his wife compelled Mr. Wells to give up his family school, and in 1862 he accepted a call to become the pastor of the Kingston Congregational Church. For fifteen years he faithfully served his charge, relinquishing the pulpit and the ministry in 1877.

During his pastorate the Kingston Free Library was organized by members of the church under his leadership. He was also prominently identified with the management of the Rhode Island Temperance Union, being a member of the governing board, and in his capacity as secretary of the Washington County Temperance Society aided the late Rev. Mr. Conant, agent of the State Society, in organizing and conducting temperance conventions.

For many years Mr. Wells was prominently identified with the Prohibition party, aiding the advancement of its cause by purse, voice and pen.

Mr. Wells was an earnest advocate of the locating of the State Agricultural College at Kingston, and having secured it was a helpful friend of the institution from its earliest days.

After his retirement from the ministry Mr. Wells devoted his attention, up to a short time before his death, to caring for a small farm and to the pursuit of favorite lines of reading and study.

Mr. Wells was married three times. His first wife was Annie Maria Wells, daughter of Capt. James Wells, of Newport. She died in 1862, and Mr. Wells afterward married Miss Sarah Simmons Coe, also of Newport, who survived only a few months. His third wife, who died about four months before himself, was Miss Maria Abigail Perry, daughter of Dr. George H. Perry, of Hopkinton. Mr. Wells was survived by two children, of his first marriage, Miss Maria Potter Wells, and Annie Greene, Mrs. E. A. Noyes, who died Sept. 3, 1907.

Aside from serving as a member of the school committee and superintendent of schools Mr. Wells, in spite of his keen interest in public affairs, was always averse to holding public office.

GEORGE LYMAN CLAFLIN maintained for many years a high position among the influential men of the city of Providence. He was not a man who courted publicity, but his wide business interests and deep sympathy with the spiritual life of the community made him a tireless worker in both fields, and as such he was thrust into prominence in spite of a disposition retiring and unassuming. He was enterprising, and had the energy and ability to bring his project to successful consummation.

Mr. Claflin was born in Pawtucket, Mass. (now Rhode Island), Dec. 22, 1822, and was the only son of Lyman and Rebecca Gay (Starkweather)

Claflin, coming of distinguished and honorable ancestry. It is stated in "American Ancestry" that Robert MacClaflin was at Wenham, Mass., as early as 1661, and that he married Oct. 14, 1664, Joanna Warner. The line of descent of the late George L. Claflin, of Providence, from Robert (I) is through Antipas (II), Ebenezer (III), Oliver (IV) and Lyman (V).

(V) Lyman Claflin, father of George Lyman Claflin, was a native of the town of Douglass, Mass., born July 25, 1794. He was a successful manufacturer, and a man of influence in the community of Pawtucket, where he resided. He was a Knight Templar Mason, and devotedly attached to the institution of Freemasonry. His death occurred Jan. 2, 1860, when he was in his sixty-sixth year. Mr. Claflin was married, March 6, 1822, to Rebecca Gay Starkweather, and to them were born children as follows: George Lyman, born Dec. 22, 1822, died April 4, 1886; Sarah, born May 1, 1824, died Oct. 9, 1828; Minerva, born Dec. 19, 1826, was married March 15, 1849, to James Cushing, and died Sept. 3, 1896; Sarah, born April 21, 1831, was married Sept. 8, 1853, to Edward Haskell, and died Oct. 1, 1857.

Oliver Starkweather, father of Mrs. Rebecca Gay (Starkweather) Claflin, was a well-known public man in his day, having been an active member of the Massachusetts Legislature and also of the National House of Representatives. One of his sons, John Starkweather, a graduate of Brown University, was a practising physician in Upton, Mass., for nearly fifty years, and was a man of wide repute in his profession. Another son, Samuel Starkweather, also a graduate of Brown University and afterward a tutor there, was for many years a judge in Cleveland, Ohio. Another, James C. Starkweather, became a successful manufacturer in his native town, Pawtucket, being a member of the firm of Starkweather & Claflin.

(VI) George Lyman Claflin enjoyed the usual advantages afforded to boys of good parentage and surroundings, attending public and private schools and also an academy taught by Mr. Frederic Vinton. In 1842, in his twentieth year, he came to Providence, entering the store of John H. Mason & Co., druggists, on Weybosset street, nearly opposite the old "City Hotel." Subsequently he was in the employ of Earl P. Mason & Co., with whom he continued until he became a member of the firm, and this business was later conducted under the name of Snow, Claflin & Co., In 1873 he purchased the stand and fixtures of the late J. Balch & Sons, on South Main street, succeeding to their business as senior member of the firm of George L. Claflin & Co., and there he continued until his death to carry on a large wholesale and retail drug business. His success in that enterprise alone would make a creditable life record for any man, but Mr. Claflin had wider ideas of a man's responsibility in his relations to the community with which he was identified.

Consequently he interested himself in the various financial institutions which had sprung up in Providence, and in the welfare of which, as a business man, he was personally concerned. He was a director in the Northern Bank from its organization, in 1856; of the Coventry National Bank and of the Coventry Savings Bank, in Anthony, R. I.; of the Jackson Institution for Savings, and of the Second National Bank. He was also interested in insurance, and in that connection was a director of both the Roger Williams Insurance Company and the Union Mutual Insurance Company. His relations with various other institutions were equally important.

Mr. Claflin had no taste for public life and no desire for its honors, but he had the impulses which make every earnest man a patriotic and public-spirited citizen, and as such he consented to fill several offices. In 1870 he was elected a member of the common council from the First ward, and served three separate terms in that body. In 1874 he was elected to the State Legislature, and in both positions discharged his duties with characteristic ability and fidelity. But after the cares of business he found his chief pleasure in his home and in his church work, and political triumphs held no attractions for him. The prosperity of the church to which he was so devotedly attached appealed most strongly to him, and his zeal in furthering its interests displayed this side of his character. In 1843, soon after coming to Providence, he became deeply interested in religious truth, joining the Congregational Church which at that time held services in Westminster Hall, under the pastorate of Rev. Thomas T. Waterman. Upon the formation of Central Church, under Rev. Dr. Swain, Mr. Claflin at once became an active member thereof, identifying himself with all its interests and contributing largely toward the erection of the house of worship. On Dec. 4, 1859, he became superintendent of the primary department of the Sunday-school, and the duties of this position he discharged conscientiously for over twenty-five years. His devotion to the work was marked by tireless efforts and unusual results, and in no circle was he more sadly missed than among the religious workers of the city. Mr. Claflin died April 4, 1886, aged sixty-three years.

On Sept. 3, 1850, Mr. Claflin was united in marriage with Louisa Sisson Whitman, daughter of Christopher A. Whitman, of Coventry, R. I., a leading citizen of that place, a manufacturer, bank president, member of both branches of the State Legislature and an active and influential member of the Masonic fraternity. Mrs. Claflin died Oct. 19, 1892, aged sixty-four years. In 1864-65 Mr. Claflin erected a commodious and elegant home at the corner of Halsey and Pratt streets. Four children were born to himself and wife: Arthur Whitman, born Oct. 10, 1852; George Lyman, born Sept. 24, 1859 (died Oct. 2, 1859); William Lyman, born June 18, 1862 (died Jan. 24, 1903); and George Edwin, born April 4, 1866.

(VII) ARTHUR WHITMAN CLAFLIN was born Oct. 10, 1852, in Providence, where he received his education in the public schools and at Mowry & Goff's English and Classical High School, from which he was graduated in 1869. For three and a half years following he was with the firm of Snow, Claflin & Co., on Canal street, and in 1873 he came with his father to the present location of George L. Claflin & Co., Nos. 62-72 South Main street. In 1884 he became a member of the firm, and on Jan. 1, 1903, incorporated the business under the name of George L. Claflin Company. For many years this has been one of the leading wholesale and retail drug houses of New England. In addition to his interests in this concern Mr. Claflin was connected with the Fourth National Bank of Providence, of which he was vice-president, and is now a director of the United National Bank.

On March 15, 1881, Mr. Claflin married Mary Alice Howard, daughter of Lieut.-Gov. Albert C. Howard, of East Providence, and to them have come two children: Louisa Howard, born March 7, 1882, and Albert Whitman, born Jan. 31, 1885. Mr. Claflin is a member of the Central Congregational Church of Providence.

(VII) GEORGE EDWIN CLAFLIN was born April 4, 1866, and married April 18, 1894, Susan Emily Talbot, daughter of Charles H. Talbot, of Providence. Mr. Claflin is chief engineer of the United Electric Securities Company, located in the Ames Building, Boston, Massachusetts.

LAWTON. The Lawton family of Newport is of English descent and dates back to the earliest days of the Rhode Island colonies, as the emigrant ancestor, Capt. George Lawton, was one of the first settlers in Portsmouth.

(I) Capt. George Lawton, of the English Royal Navy, came to Portsmouth, R. I., among its first settlers, being one of those recorded as an inhabitant of the Island of Aquidneck in 1638. From that time his name appears frequently in various records and he was evidently one of the influential men of the colony. He was one of the twenty-nine signers of the compact of 1639, and in 1648 was a member of the court of trials, while in the same year he was recorded as owner of forty acres of land located near the property of his brother Thomas. He was made a freeman in 1655, served as deputy in 1665, 1672, 1675, 1676, 1679, and 1680 to 1690 inclusive, excepting the years 1687 and 1688. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas and Martha Hazard, and their children were: Isabel, John, Mary, George, Robert, Susanna, Ruth, Mercy, Job and Elizabeth. Capt. Lawton died Oct. 5, 1693.

(II) George Lawton (2) married, Jan. 17, 1677, Naomi Hunt, daughter of Bartholomew, and they made their home in Portsmouth. Mr. Lawton died Sept. 11, 1697, but his wife, who was born Sept. 15, 1658, survived him till Jan. 13, 1721.

Edward H. Newton

Naomi, was born Jan. 22, 1692. By the will of his father, made and proved in 1697, he was to be given the best education possible, and at the age of eighteen received 600 pounds. On April 16, 1713, he married Priscilla Thurston, their marriage being of Newport town record.

(IV) George Lawton, only child of Job and Priscilla, was born Feb. 1, 1713-14. He married, April 18, 1742, Hannah Bidder, and they had children born as follows: Robert; Mary; George; Joseph, Nov. 1, 1748; Benjamin; Jonathan, Oct. 31, 1754; James, Sept. 20, 1755; Job, July 24, 1758; and Elizabeth, June 2, 1760.

(V) Benjamin Lawton, born Nov. 7, 1751, died in Newport in about 1836. His occupation was shoemaking. Married three times, his first wife was Mrs. Abigail Price, the second Rachel Cahoon, and the third a sister of the latter, Rhoda Cahoon. Mr. Lawton was the father of nineteen children in all, two of whom died in infancy, the others being as follows: Robert, born in 1774; James, 1776; Abigail, 1782; Mary, 1785; Susan, 1787; Ruth, 1793; Benjamin, 1795; Daniel C., 1796; Benjamin Ingraham, 1798; Louis B., 1800; Samuel H., 1802; Elizabeth, 1806; Charles, 1808; Rachel, 1810; David; George; and Rhoda.

(VI) James Lawton, a lifelong resident of Newport, was born Dec. 10, 1776, and died July 10, 1863. His wife, Ann (Stevens) Lawton, born Jan. 3, 1778, survived him but one month, passing away Aug. 10, 1863. Mr. Lawton was town sergeant for many years, and as town crier drummed for the town meetings. His regular occupation was butchering, and he held a position of respect and consideration in the community. Six children were born to him: Isaac, James, Abbey, Sarah Ann, Frances, and William S.

(VII) Isaac Lawton, whose life covered a period extending from Oct. 8, 1803, to Oct. 23, 1879, was a well known citizen of Newport. In early life he learned the baker's trade, but after a very brief experience in that calling he gave it up and turned his attention to fishing. For some time he went out in his own vessels, but later he ran instead a fish market on Long Wharf, and operated it most successfully for over thirty-five years. During the existence of the volunteer fire department of Newport, he was for a long time a member of Engine Company No. 2, and did good service, but in political affairs he never participated, although a loyal supporter of the Republican party.

In about 1825 Isaac Lawton married Miss Mary Ann Freeborn, also of Newport, daughter of John Freeborn. She was born Jan. 8, 1807, and died Oct. 18, 1888, the mother of fifteen children, one of whom lived but a short time, namely: Benjamin, born Feb. 23, 1827, who died in infancy; Benjamin (2), Jan. 16, 1828 (mentioned below); Thomas, Oct. 29, 1829, (who was a boat builder in Newport, where he died); John F., Sept. 16, 1831 (who died young); Isaac, Jr., Aug. 23, 1833 (a manufacturing jeweler, who married Esther Brierly Ingraham, and died in Central Falls, R. I.); Abby Stevens, April 6, 1835 (who died unmarried); Mary Ann, Dec. 28, 1836 (now Mrs. John Anderson, of Pawtucket, R. I.); John Freeborn, Jan. 24, 1839 (who died young); William H. H., Jan. 6, 1841, deceased (who was the proprietor of a fish market in Newport); Clara Ailman, Dec. 27, 1842 (who died unmarried); Eliza, March 16, 1845 (who died young); Edward N.; John Freeborn, March 27, 1849 (a carpenter, residing in Newport); and Francis Marion, Feb. 17, 1851 (of Newport, where he is engaged in fishing).

(VIII) BENJAMIN LAWTON, oldest son of Isaac, born Jan. 16, 1828, received his education in the public schools of Newport, and remained in school till he was sixteen years old. The following year, May, 1845, he was sent to New Bedford to enter upon a four-year apprenticeship to Chapman and Bonney, sailmakers, with whom he continued as a workman until the firm went out of business. Sailmaking has been his sole occupation for over sixty years, and for some time past he has been one of the most trusted employes of Briggs & Beckman. During the Civil war he was engaged by the government to make tents for the army. Personally he is a man of domestic tastes, with no desire for mingling in politics, and has contented himself with regularly voting the Republican ticket.

Mr. Lawton's wife, who passed away in New Bedford, June 5, 1905, was a Miss Clarissa Sophia Reed, of North Dartmouth, Mass., daughter of Jacob and Lois (Rogers) Reed. They were married March 2, 1851, and rounded out more than half a century of wedded life, but no children were born to them. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lawton united with the County Street Methodist Church, of New Bedford, and were liberal in their support of its work. Mr. Lawton has resided in New Bedford for over sixty years, where he is honored and respected by all who know him.

(VIII) EDWARD NEWTON LAWTON, a younger son of Isaac, was born Jan. 15, 1847, in Newport, and was educated in that city. Leaving school at the age of fifteen, he was taken into his father's fish market as a clerk, working in that capacity till 1877, when he became a partner, the firm name being changed to Isaac Lawton & Company. Two years later the father died, and Mr. Edward N. Lawton decided not to continue the business but to engage instead in fishing, and ever since he has made that his chief occupation. He carries it on on quite an extensive scale, and has in use two launches and three "puss" boats, which yield him lucrative returns.

When the Civil war broke out Mr. Lawton was too young to enlist, but as soon as he reached the age of eighteen he offered his services to his country, enlisting in 1865, in Battery H, 1st R. I. Light Artillery, and serving for over four months. He is now a member of Charles E. Lawton Post, No. 5, G. A. R., of Newport, and has been junior vice-commander. He was also for a long time a member of Engine Company No. 2, in the volunteer fire department. The city has likewise had the benefit of his efficient services in a civil capacity, also, as he was on the city council for two years, elected on the Republican ticket. Again, in 1906, at the first election held under the new charter granted the City of Newport, Mr. Lawton was elected a member of the representative council from the First ward for the three year term, receiving the largest number of votes cast in his ward.

Mr. Lawton's married life has extended over a period of thirty-seven years, as he was united June 16, 1870, to Miss Frances Wilson, a lady of English birth, and a daughter of Fletcher Wilson, of Wickford, England. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lawton are members and liberal contributors of the Friends' Church. They are the parents of three sons and two daughters, namely: Joseph S., born Feb. 22, 1871, by trade a mason in Newport, who married Miss Eunice Albro, and has one daughter, Mildred; Fletcher W., Oct. 23, 1873, in the fishing industry with his father; Abby S., Dec. 5, 1875, who married George W. Edgar, Jr., a carpenter in Newport, and has four children, Frances, Madeline, Ralph and Ida; Harriet C., Feb. 20, 1878, wife of William B. Kinney, a painter in Newport; Benjamin, Sept. 18, 1882, employed by the city in the highway department. The Lawton family, of which Edward N. Lawton is a worthy member, is one highly esteemed in Newport and is ranked among its substantial people.

DAVIS (North Kingstown and Providence family). The North Kingstown-Providence branch of the Davis family of that region of country is of more than two centuries' standing in the State, and for approximately two hundred years it has been a family of millers and manufacturers, counting among its members Joshua, Jeffrey, Ezra, Hon. James M., Hon. William Dean and the present Jeffrey Davis, who for over a decade has been the president of the extensive Quidnick Manufacturing Company—all men of substance and prominence in their day and generation, and all in direct line of descent from Aaron Davis, who appeared at Newport, R. I., as early as 1673.

This article is devoted to a brief review of some of the lives of this ancient and long-time manufacturing family, the genealogy beginning with the earliest known American ancestor and proceeding in chronological order. The Roman numerals indicate generations.

(I) Aaron Davis was at Newport, R. I., as early as 1673, in February of which year he sold property there. He was one of the proprietors of Dartmouth, Mass., in 1694, and in 1698 was ordained as pastor of the First Baptist Church there, whose membership embraced persons living in Dartmouth, Tiverton and Little Compton. He died after 1719. The Christian name of his wife was Mary. Austin, the Rhode Island genealogist, gives the children of Mr. Davis as: William, Joshua, Aaron, Samuel and John, and remarks: "There seems no reason to doubt that Joshua was his son, and as it is believed that William, Samuel and John should be added to the list of his children, it is assumed that this is the case."

(II) Joshua Davis, son of Aaron, married Mary Scott, born Feb. 1, 1666, daughter of John and Rebecca, and they were of Newport and East Greenwich, R. I. Mr. Davis was a miller, and in 1733 deeded to his son Jeffrey, for love, etc., grist-mill, etc., and forty acres of land. His children were: William, Aaron, John, Rebecca, Katherine, Samuel and Jeffrey, the two latter being born in 1706 and 1708, respectively. The father was probably the original settler at the point known as Davisville and was the builder of its first mill, which was erected, it was judged by the late James M. Davis, not far from the year 1700. He owned an extensive tract of land in that vicinity.

(III) Jeffrey Davis, son of Joshua and Mary, was born in 1708, and died July 3, 1782. Mr. Davis was born within half a mile of what was called Davis's Mills, but later became Davisville, in the town of North Kingstown. He was occupied in agricultural pursuits and in milling.

(IV) Major Joshua Davis (2), son of Jeffrey, was born at Davis's Mills, now Davisville, in the town of North Kingstown, Nov. 10, 1742, and died there Sept. 12, 1820. He was occupied as a farmer and miller, operating the mill which his father and grandfather before him had operated, and which was one of the earliest mills in Rhode Island. This mill ground and bolted wheat in addition to grinding corn. Major Davis was a patriot of the Revolution, serving as major in the 2d Regiment, King's County Troops, and afterward represented his town in the Assembly.

(V) Jeffrey and Ezra Davis, brothers, and sons of Major Joshua Davis, were born at Davis's Mills, in the town of North Kingstown, where their lives were passed in farming and milling. They early engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods and were among the earliest in that line in the State. For many years these brothers conducted the business under the firm name of E. & J. Davis. They had in their first experience a wool-carding and cloth-dressing establishment, which they conducted in connection with hand-weaving from 1811 to 1824. In the latter year they commenced to operate woolen looms by water-power at the point where they and their ancestors in turn for a century or more had a gristmill, which fact gave to the place the name of Davis's Mills.

Jeffrey Davis married Elizabeth Mawney, and they had three children: Abby Dean, George Albert and William Dean. Ezra Davis married Mehetabel Reynolds. Ezra was born April 5, 1779, and died June 21, 1863.

(VI) WILLIAM DEAN DAVIS, son of Jeffrey and Elizabeth (Mawney) Davis, was born Jan. 26, 1813, at Davis's Mills, in North Kingstown, R. I. He attended the public schools of his town and later was a student in Kingstown Academy. When sixteen years of age he left home and took a position in a store in New York. There he remained approximately three years. His next experience was a similar one in a store in the city of Philadelphia, and for about the same length of time. He then returned to his home at Davis's Mills and became associated with his father and uncle in the woolen goods manufacturing business, which then consisted of spinning, weaving and cloth finishing.

William Dean Davis in 1850 purchased a woolen mill in Centerville, town of Warwick, R. I. This property he sold in 1860, and in the next year purchased the Uxbridge Woolen Mill, in Uxbridge, Mass., which he held until 1885, selling it in that year. In 1884 Mr. Davis, with others, bought the Quidnick Mills, located at Quidnick, and formed the Quidnick Manufacturing Company. Of this company, until within some two years before his death, Mr. Davis was the largest stockholder, and at the time of his death he still had an interest in the concern.

Mr. Davis at the time of his death was one of the oldest woolen manufacturers in Rhode Island. In 1864 he took up his residence at Providence and was a resident of the city from that time on until the close of his life. He was then owner of the handsome house on Elmwood avenue, in which he resided from the time of his removal to Providence. He was a man of quiet tastes, very much attached to his home and family, caring little for public life. He was a Republican, but never particularly active in politics. While living in North Kingstown he represented that town in the General Assembly of the State, and later was honored by an election to that body from the town of Warwick. Mr. Davis was one of the oldest members of the Squantum Club, having joined it in 1872.

Mr. Davis's sympathies were well exemplified in the various bequests he made to benevolent and philanthropic institutions, which included $5,000 to the Charitable Fuel Fund, a charity in which he was much interested; $5,000 to the Old Men's Home; $5,000 for the endowment of a bed in the Rhode Island Hospital, known as the William D. Davis bed, and a sum to the North Kingstown Free Library, the income from which is to be used as purchase money.

In September, 1849, Mr. Davis was married to Mary Eleanor Congdon, who died in 1877. He passed away at his home on Elmwood avenue, Providence, Oct. 17, 1903. To this marriage were born four children, three of whom survived the father, namely: Jeffrey, born Sept. 2, 1850, of Providence; Elizabeth La Moyné, who married Augustus S.

Miller, mayor of Providence; William Albert, of Marshalltown, Iowa; and May Congdon, who died when five years old.

(VI) JAMES M. DAVIS, son of Ezra and Mehetabel (Reynolds) Davis, was born Feb. 2, 1821, at Davis's Mills, in the town of North Kingstown, R. I., and received a good common school education. At the age of sixteen years he began a business career as a merchant in his native village and continued in merchandising until 1849. In that year, associated with his brother-in-law, Henry Sweet, and his cousin, Albert S. Reynolds, he formed the manufacturing firm of Davis, Reynolds & Co., to engage in the business of manufacturing Kentucky jeans, and continued in the business until 1863, when, by the dropping out of the firm of Mr. Reynolds, it became Davis & Sweet. Mr. Davis continued in active business for some ten years thereafter, when, in 1873, he retired and rented the mill property.

Mr. Davis was instrumental in having a post-office established at Davis's Mills in 1852, and the name of the office was made Davisville, the village thereafter becoming so known. Mr. Davis was appointed postmaster of the new office, a position he filled with great fidelity and acceptance to the people of the community as well as to the government for the next fourteen years. During the years 1866 and 1867 he was honored by his fellow-townsmen with a seat in the General Assembly of Rhode Island, and discharged the duties of the office with that efficiency and fidelity characteristic of the man.

Mr. Davis was a man of quiet manner and simple tastes, unostentatious, but of sterling character and worth, such as any community could well hold in the highest esteem and respect. He loved his native State, the home of his ancestors for two and more centuries. With him the State's welfare was of paramount consideration. He had been a member of the Aquidneck Baptist Church from its organization, and was a man of deep religious character. He was careful in the management of his business affairs, and years ago retired with a competence, spending the evening of life in comfort and ease. His death occurred Oct. 2, 1902.

On Oct. 22, 1840, Mr. Davis was married to Mary Ann Allen, daughter of James and Frelove (Pierce) Allen, of North Kingstown, R. I., and the union was blessed with children as follows: Hettie; Hannah J., who married Mr. Fayette A. B. Bennett, of Hope Valley, R. I.; Mary D.; Ida G., who married Mr. William H. Congdon, of Warwick; and Emma A., who married Mr. Christopher Allen, of Wales, Massachusetts.

(VII) JEFFREY DAVIS, son of William Dean, was born Sept. 2, 1850, at Centerville, in the town of Warwick, R. I. After due preparation for college he entered Brown University and was graduated therefrom in the class of 1870, with the degree of P. B. His forefathers for generations having been millers and manufacturers, it was but natural for him to fall into that line, which he did after finishing his college course. Going to Uxbridge, Mass., he worked in his father's mill for one and a half years, and then came into his father's office in Providence as bookkeeper. In 1873 Stephen Harris, Henry Howard, his father, William D. Davis, and Christopher and John Lippitt formed a co-partnership and purchased the Lippitt mill. Mr. Jeffrey Davis was made treasurer of this concern and continued in that position until the organization of the Quidnick Manufacturing Company, which was incorporated in 1884, when he was made treasurer of the new company. This position he held for several years, but on account of ill health he resigned, still continuing his connection with the company, of which he was then a stockholder and of which now he is the principal stockholder. He was advanced to the presidency in 1894, and still sustains such relation with the corporation.

The mills of the Quidnick Manufacturing Company rank among the most attractive and substantial plants in the State. They are located at Quidnick, in the Pawtuxet valley. The Spragues, of manufacturing note in Rhode Island, spent over a million dollars upon the property during their ownership in developing the water-power and improvements. The property finally came into the possession of the present company, which, as before stated, was organized in the year 1884, by William D. Davis, Henry A. Hidden, George W. Butts, Henry R. Chase and Jeffrey Davis. William D. Davis bought the property and then effected the organization of the corporation, the others joining him as stockholders. Up to that time the product of the mills consisted of 64 by 64 print cloths, and the corporation at once commenced to make improvements and additions and changes in the machinery, replacing the cloth looms with wide looms, so that at present the mills are equipped for the manufacturing of wide sheetings, twills, fancy goods, etc., for the converting trade. The present capacity of the mills is about 40,000 spindles and 1,000 looms. One-half of the looms are fitted with Darbies and now produce fancy goods.

Mr. Jeffrey Davis, president of the company, is a member of the Board of Trade, and has been for years a director of several banking institutions and of insurance and manufacturing companies of the State, among them the American National Bank, before its dissolution, City Savings Bank (a trustee), Mercantile Mutual Fire Insurance Company, Providence Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and American Enamel Company, and he was formerly a director of the Armington & Sims Engine Company. While in college Mr. Davis was a Greek letter fraternity man, belonging to the Theta Delta Chi, and he is a member of the Hope Club, the University Club of Providence, the Agawam Hunt Club, the Providence Art Club and School of Design, and of the Brown Alumni Club of New York. He has always been a Republican in politics.

On Feb. 14, 1888, Mr. Davis was married to Abby Potter Cunliffe.

WEEKS (Woonsocket family). The Weeks family from which the Woonsocket branch sprang is one of long and honorable standing both in Massachusetts and back over the ocean in old England. George Weekes, of Dorchester, one of the early Puritans, is said by the early chronicles to have been of "an ancient and honorable Devonshire family." His posterity have been continuous here in New England for some two hundred and seventy years, the home of the earlier generations especially being through eastern and central Massachusetts, where still reside many of the name. Here in Woonsocket, R. I., resided for approximately fifty years the late Francis Sylvester Weekes, one of that community's substantial men, successful in business and useful and prominent in citizenship, and here to-day are carrying on the work he began, and with their aid developed, his sons, one of whom, who bears the father's name, Francis Sylvester Weekes, is at the head of the Weeks Furniture Company at Woonsocket and of the same type of man as was his father.

Here follows in chronological order, from the immigrant settler, the family history and genealogy of this branch of the Weeks family.

(I) George Weekes (spelling changed in a generation or two to Weeks) came from Devonshire, England, in the ship with Rev. Richard Mather, in 1635, and settled at Dorchester, in the Massachusetts Bay Colony. He is said by the early chroniclers to have been of "an ancient and honorable Devonshire family," whose original name was Wrey, whose seat, in the latter part of the fourteenth century, was at North Wyke, in Tawton Hundred, about twenty miles from the city of Exeter. Mr. Weekes at Dorchester was a man in high estimation, of a religious family. He possessed superior culture for his time and held a prominent place in the Colony. He was made a freeman in 1640, and was one of the selectmen of the town in 1645, 1647, 1648, and perhaps in other years. He was frequently appointed to other positions of trust. He was a farmer and surveyor and often commissioned to lay out roads, determine town boundaries, etc. He seems to have taken special interest in educational affairs. He possessed considerable land. His wife Jane was a sister of Capt. George Clap, who came in the ship "Mary and John" and was from Salcombe Regis, about twelve miles east of Exeter, in Devonshire. Mr. Weekes died Dec. 28, 1650. His widow remarried and died Aug. 2, 1668. The children of George and Jane Weekes were: William, James, Ammiel and Joseph, all born in England, excepting the last named, who was born in Dorchester, Massachusetts.

(II) Ammiel Weekes, son of George, born in 1632 or 1633, in England, was admitted to the church in Dorchester, with his wife Elizabeth, May 18, 1656. He was made a freeman in 1657 and was a land holder in that year. He was constable in 1673, 1674 and 1678. He, like his father, was was probably a surveyor. He lived in Dorchester, and died April 20, 1679, when but forty-six years of age. His widow lived to be ninety, dying in 1723. Their children were: William, baptized Aug. 26, 1655; Elizabeth, baptized Sept. 14, 1656; Thankful, born April 24, 1660; Ammiel, born Sept. 15, 1662; Ebenezer, born May 15, 1665; Joseph, born Sept. 3, 1667; Supply, born Aug. 26, 1671; Thomas, born Nov. 20, 1673; and Hannah, born May 14, 1676.

(III) Supply Weeks, son of Ammiel, born Aug. 26, 1671, in Dorchester, Mass., married (first) June 4, 1699, Susanna, daughter of Thomas Barnes, and adopted daughter of Deacon John Barnes, of Marlborough, Mass. She died Jan. 15, 1712, and he married (second) March 10, 1714-15, Mary Holland, born Aug. 16, 1697, daughter of Samuel and Mary Holland, of Framingham, Mass., a descendant of John Holland, of Dorchester, Mass., 1634. Mr. Weeks was a farmer and also a shoemaker or "cord wainer." His homestead is still in the possession of his descendants, and a portion of the old house built by him was still standing some years ago. He removed to Marlborough, Mass., about 1697. His children were: Thomas, born Sept. 5, 1700; Jemima, Feb. 23, 1701-02; Abigail, Jan. 26, 1703-04; Ammiel, Oct. 13, 1705; John, March 3, 1707; Elijah, Feb. 4, 1708-10 (?); and Susana, Jan. 11, 1712.

(IV) (Col.) John Weeks, son of Supply, born March 3, 1707, in Marlborough, Mass., married in 1731 Dinah Keys, born March 4, 1710. Mr. Weeks was one of the prominent men of his community. He held a number of public offices, among them being those of colonel in the militia, deputy sheriff and justice of the peace. He died Feb. 11, 1787. Mrs. Weeks passed away Dec. 15, 1784. They occupied the old homestead. Their children were: Josiah, born Nov. 1, 1732; Francis, June 28, 1734; Betsey, Jan. 26, 1736; Dinah, Oct. 2, 1737; John, July 25, 1739; Jonathan, Dec. 14 (or 4), 1741; and Susana, Nov. 5, 1743.

(V) Jonathan Weeks, son of Col. John, born Dec. 4 (or 14), 1741, in Marlborough, Mass., married April 22, 1767, Thankful, born Jan. 17, 1749, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Bigelow, and lived in Marlboro, Mass. She died Nov. 3, 1775, and he married (second) Aug. 26, 1777, Lucy, born Feb. 27, 1752, daughter of Micah and Mary (Howe) Newton. He died April 5, 1805, and she passed away July 1, 1817. His children were: John, born Oct. 1, 1768; Aaron, July 30, 1770; Elizabeth, Dec. 2, 1772 (all born to the first marriage); Jonathan, Oct. 31, 1778; David, May 26, 1781; Mary, July 10, 1783; Solomon, Sept. 14, 1785; Phebe, Jan. 23, 1788; Francis, Nov. 1, 1790; and Lucy, Oct. 15, 1793.

(VI) Francis Weeks, son of Jonathan, born Nov. 1, 1790, in Marlborough, Mass., married (first) Jan. 14, 1814, Sarah, born March 1, 1791, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Brown. She died May 13, 1825, and he married (second) July 25, 1825, Hannah Burnap Brown, born June 11, 1803, a sister of his first wife. Mr. Weeks was a farmer at Alstead, N. H., removing to Marlborough in 1822. He died Jan. 4, 1868, and his widow passed away August 16th of that same year. His children were: Lucy, born and died between 1814 and 1848; Heaman Seaver, born and died between 1814 and 1848; Lewis Brown, born June 14, 1818; Francis Sylvester, born Oct. 28, 1822 (all by the first marriage); Sarah Brown, born Jan. 16, 1830; and William Lyman, born Jan. 8, 1834.

(VII) FRANCIS SYLVESTER WEEKS, son of Francis, born Oct. 28, 1822, in Marlborough, Mass., married June 5, 1849, Susan E. Brown, of Blackstone, Mass., born July 19, 1826.

Mr. Weeks in his early life was engaged in educational work. He was a student in boyhood of the old Rice Academy at Holliston, Mass., to which institution he later returned as a teacher; he was for a period an instructor in the famous old Phillips Academy, at Andover, Mass.; still later for four years he was principal of the Shrewsbury (Mass.) Academy; he also for a period was engaged in conducting private schools in and about Blackstone.

In 1853 Mr. Weeks came to Woonsocket, R. I., and here engaged in the stationery business, purchasing the store formerly carried on by the late Joseph Perkins, in the Music Hall building. While thus engaged he was also superintendent of the schools of the town of Cumberland. He, too, was occupied as a civil engineer and laid out many of the streets of Woonsocket as they now appear. In 1869 Mr. Weeks engaged in the furniture business in the Gilbert block, on North Main street, establishing what has since been developed into the extensive furniture house of the Weeks Furniture Company, at the head of which is the present Francis Sylvester Weeks. The elder Mr. Weeks was the first tenant in the block just referred to after its completion. Subsequently he moved his business to the Monument House block, which was burned in March, 1877. At this time he retired from active business, his son Francis S. Weeks, Jr., succeeding him in the enterprise.

Mr. Weeks's life was a long and busy one, and as well one of usefulness. "Here in Woonsocket and vicinity he was well and favorably known." He was a man of high sense of honor, a man of character, in whom the community had confidence. He made friends and held them. He was prominent and popular in the community.

On his retirement from active business in the late seventies Mr. Weeks removed to his country residence at Cumberland Hill. Here he died Dec. 26, 1898, of pneumonia, the result of an attack of La Grippe. From this home took place his funeral, which was conducted by the pastor of the Globe Congregational Church, of which the deceased was a member. The pall-bearers on the occasion were: Otis Brown, of Milford, Mass.; Dr. George Small, of Providence; Dr. A. E. Gray, of Uxbridge, Mass.; and Herbert B. and Walter O. Brown and Stafford C. Clough, all of Woonsocket.

On the occasion of Mr. Weeks's death, one of the local papers said editorially: "Francis S. Weeks, Sr., had seen Woonsocket grow up from a straggling collection of mill villages to a compact city, and had done well his part in the activities of business life in furthering educational interests and in religious and temperance work. He had lived to a ripe age, and his memory will be cherished as that of a noble man and citizen worthy to be honored."

Mrs. Weeks and two sons survived the husband and father, and the widow makes her home on Cumberland Hill. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Weeks: Emma B., Francis S. and Frederick B., the last named born May 12, 1860.

FRANCIS S. WEEKS, JR., treasurer and general manager of the Weeks Furniture Company, was born in Woonsocket Sept. 15, 1855, and was educated in the district and high schools there. At the age of sixteen he entered his father's store as clerk, and there learned all the details of the business, being advanced in position as soon as he had thoroughly mastered his duties. In 1877, when the building and stock were destroyed by fire, he started in business for himself on North Main street, where he continued until 1882, at which time he changed the name of the business to the Weeks Furniture Company. Through his good management and personality the business has grown extensively, and in 1886 he was obliged to increase his capacity, the store now being a four-story brick block, with floor space of 25,000 square feet, making it one of the largest in the State. In 1897 the company was incorporated under the laws of Rhode Island, with Frederick B. Weeks as president; Francis S. Weeks as treasurer and manager; and Walter D. Peck as secretary. To the furniture and house-furnishing business they have added wall-paper, and are the largest dealers in that line in the city. By his tact and ability Mr. Weeks has built up a successful and substantial business enterprise. He is honorable in his dealings, prompt in the execution of orders, and courteous to his customers, thus winning and retaining the respect of the entire community.

In politics Mr. Weeks is a Republican, but he takes no active part in party work. He is a member of the B. P. O. E. at Woonsocket. His religious belief is that of the Congregational Church.

In 1875, in Woonsocket, Mr. Weeks married Mary E. Miller, daughter of the late Edwin Ballou Miller. They have no living children.

GOODWIN (Pawtucket family). While the Pawtucket family of Goodwins of which this article treats is not an old Rhode Island one it is a branch of one of the ancient New England families, and here at Pawtucket it is one of approximately fifty years' standing, and one, too, of achievement and usefulness; reference being made especially to the Hon. Almon Kent Goodwin, the head of the Pawtucket family of this name, whose career here has been a conspicuous one, and who has served his adopted city long and well in various public capacities, having several times represented it in the General Assembly of Rhode Island, having been its chief executive officer a number of times, and for many years its efficient postmaster, which office he still holds.

The Goodwins of the locality in Maine—South Berwick—from which place came the Pawtucket family of the name descend from Daniel Goodwin, who was an inhabitant at Kittery, Maine, as early as 1652. Crossing the ocean, going back in old England, it is found that there lived in Yoxford, County of Suffolk, one Daniel Goodwin, gentleman, and his wife Dorothy. Mr. Goodwin's will, proved Feb. 16, 1625, left his estate to his minor sons Daniel and Stephen, both of whom came to America, Daniel settling in Kittery, Maine, and Stephen in Charlestown, Mass. As stated, Daniel was at Kittery as early as 1652, on Dec. 15th of which year he was granted land, and also more in 1656, 1659, 1670, and so on. He was twice married, first to Margaret, daughter of Thomas Spencer, of Kittery, and second to Mrs. Sarah Turbet, widow of Peter Turbet and daughter of John Sanders. Sarah Goodwin was admitted to the church in Berwick in April, 1703, when called widow. Daniel Goodwin's name heads the list of the founders of the church in 1702. His children were: Daniel, William, Moses, a daughter who married Daniel Stone, and Thomas, the latter marrying Mehitable Plaisted, of Berwick.

From the foregoing source came the numerous Goodwins of the section of Maine indicated, and through the last mentioned son, Thomas Goodwin, descended Governor Ichabod Goodwin of New Hampshire, whose daughter Susie became the wife of the then Lieutenant George Dewey, U. S. N., since Admiral Dewey, the hero of Manila Bay. And about the early home and married life of Thomas and Mehitable (Plaisted) Goodwin clusters history. In March, 1689-90, Mrs. Goodwin was taken captive by the Indians and subjected to all kinds of hardships, her infant babe being killed at her breast, and she being made to witness all kinds of inhuman torture in connection with the deed. She was carried a captive into Canada and not returned to her family for five years. One of their descendants, perhaps their son, Capt. Ichabod Goodwin, fought in Colonel Preble's regiment of Provincials and fell wounded July 8, 1758, at the terrible battle at Ticonderoga, which lasted more than four hours, with a loss of 464 regulars killed, 279 wounded and 8 missing, and was especially mentioned in the report of Major-General Abercrombie.

The South Berwick (Maine)-Pawtucket (R. I.) Goodwins descend in maternal line from an ancient and honorable family not only in Maine but back in old England, where lived and died George Preble. He was one of the Queen's Justices of the Peace "Within the East Riding of York," to whom was granted the family arms in 1585. Abraham Preble, son of George, came with the family from Tent Rider, in Kent, England, to Plymouth Colony, and settled at Scituate, being one of the earliest settlers of the town, in 1636. He removed to York, Maine, in 1641, marrying in that year Judith, daughter of Nathaniel Tilden. He was the first magistrate or mayor of York (in 1645), judge (1647-57), county commissioner and treasurer. So much for the origin of this Pawtucket Goodwin family, whose head

ALMON KENT GOODWIN was born March 27, 1839, in South Berwick, Maine, the son of Augustus and Mercy (Preble) Goodwin, and there acquired his early education and prepared for college, attending both the public schools and academy until seventeen years of age. Having decided to adopt the medical profession and not enter college, he came to Pawtucket, R. I., in 1857, for medical study under the direction of the late Dr. Sylvanus Clapp, but after pursuing his studies for a time he changed his mind, turning his attention to what seemed more in keeping with his tastes, and engaged in mercantile business, being for a number of years the senior member of the well-known firm of Goodwin & Allen, wholesale flour dealers of Providence, and continuing this business until 1887.

Mr. Goodwin has always been prominent in public affairs. He was early interested in politics and has been identified with the Republican party from its origin and prominent in its councils. His eloquent and earnest advocacy of its principles on the stump and elsewhere secured for him immediate notice. He was chairman of the Republican Town Committee of Pawtucket for many years prior to its incorporation as a city, and continued as chairman of the City Committee until his election as mayor. He was chairman of the Republican State Central Committee for a number of years, and under his vigorous lead the party won many a decisive and important victory. He was a member of the Rhode Island General Assembly in 1875, 1876 and 1882, during which time he served as a member of the committee on Corporations and as chairman of the committee on Militia. He was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1880 which nominated James A. Garfield. He served as auditor of the town and city of Pawtucket for several years and as auditor of the State of Rhode Island in 1887. In the latter year he was elected mayor of the city of Pawtucket, serving two years (1888 and 1889), and was again elected in 1890, serving during 1891. The second time he was elected mayor he carried every ward in the city, Democratic and Republican. After his third term he refused to again be a candidate. As the city's chief executive officer he was conservative yet progressive, and suggested and carried to completion many public improvements. In 1891 he was appointed State commissioner of the Bureau of Labor and Statistics and served as such until he was appointed postmaster of Pawtucket in 1892, which position he still holds. He has always been interested in the improvement and prosperity of the city and has been a member of the Business Men's Association from its inception, serving on the executive committee and as president of the association. Mr. Goodwin was for many years active in the State militia, and did good service in this line while a member of the General Assembly. He served on the staffs of Major-General Horace Daniels and Major-General William R. Walker. He has been prominent and active in public affairs and although always a Republican, and closely identified with that party for nearly forty years, his first vote being cast for Abraham Lincoln, he has ever been popular with men of all parties.

Colonel Goodwin is a man of marked ability, as evinced in the successful conduct of the many public offices he has held in the city and State. He is a hard worker, a skilful manipulator, a pleasant speaker, affable and courteous to all, and most popular.

In 1858 Almon K. Goodwin was married to Sarah M. Tower, daughter of the late John C. Tower, of Pawtucket, and sister of the gallant Capt. Levi Tower, of the 2d Regiment, Rhode Island Volunteers, who fell during the Civil war at the memorable first battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861. Mrs. Goodwin died Feb. 19, 1892. She was a woman of marked cheerfulness of disposition, combined with a kindly and sympathetic nature, and her character and ability made her an influence for good in the community. She possessed a fine voice, of unusual quality, and only her devotion to home and family and distaste for public life prevented her being even more widely known as a concert singer of distinction. The only child of this union, Margaret Kent, has inherited the musical talent of her mother, and is now a leading pianist in the State.

On Nov. 22, 1899, Colonel Goodwin was again married, to Elizabeth G. Potter, daughter of George H. Potter, of Providence. They have had no children. Colonel Goodwin and his family attend Trinity Episcopal Church of Pawtucket.

Augustus Goodwin, father of Almon K., was an extensive farmer in South Berwick, Maine, and one of its representative men, being active in all public affairs, serving his town as selectman for several years and holding other offices of trust and honor, and his genial good nature made and held for him many staunch friendships. He lived to the venerable age of eighty-two years, his first wife, Mercy Preble, of York, Maine, passing away at the age of forty-two years. Mr. Goodwin was a second time married to Mrs. David Bodwell (née Williams) of Rochester, N. Y., by whom he had no children. His children by his first wife were: Eveline, who married David W. Downs, of South Berwick, Maine; Armine, who married J. Edwin Staples, of York, Maine; Almon K.; Leonard W., who was engaged in conducting the homestead farm, where he died Jan. 17, 1902 (his wife, Laura Cater, of Portsmouth, N. H., surviving him); and Ann M., who died in infancy.

BRYER FAMILY. Newport numbers among its inhabitants a goodly proportion of those who represent families dating back to the earliest years of the Colony and who bear names that have at various times been prominently identified with the business and social interests of the city. Among these is the Bryer family, members of which have lived there since 1680 at least, and probably antedate that time by several years.

(I) Joseph Bryer was born in England in 1645, and is on record at Newport as a tax-payer in 1680. His first wife was Mary, daughter of Daniel and Wait (Coggeshall) Gould, who was born March 2, 1653. They were married June 22, 1672, and had one daughter, Elizabeth, born June 18, 1682, who became the wife of Joseph Borden. Mary (Gould) Bryer died Jan. 9, 1691, and Feb. 5, 1692. Joseph Bryer married (second) Mary Palmer, of Westchester, Pa. Their children were: Mary, born Nov. 8, 1692; Joseph, Sept. 5, 1694 (who died Nov. 5, 1711); Matthew, Aug. 23, 1696; and John, Sept. 17, 1703. Joseph Bryer died May 31, 1704, and was buried beside his first wife in the Clifton burying-ground. His will, proved in 1704, refers to his wife and to his oldest son Joseph, who was to have the household in England after the mother's decease.

(II) John Bryer, born in 1703, resided with his wife Elizabeth in Newport, where he died in 1749. Children were born to them as follows: Jonathan, October, 1724 (who died Aug. 18, 1725); Joseph, Nov. 14, 1730; Jonathan (2), Dec. 5, 1732; and John.

(III) Joseph Bryer was born Nov. 14, 1730.

(IV) Elias Bryer, born in Newport, died there. He married Mary Tillinghast.

(V) John Bryer was born in Newport, where he died at an advanced age. He was one of the old time shop-keepers of the city, established on Long Wharf, where he dealt in groceries, liquors and general ship supplies. He married June 18, 1797, Elizabeth Burns, daughter of John Burns, of Newport, and he had a family of eight children: Staffer, Peleg, William, Benjamin, John, Sallie, Mary and Capt. James.

(VI) Peleg Bryer, like his father a lifelong resident of Newport, was born Jan. 12, 1800, and died Oct. 5, 1867. A cooper by trade, he was for a long time established in that line on Bull street, but later in life went into the mercantile field instead, and locating on Broadway dealt in groceries, liquors and general merchandise till his death. He left quite a little fortune, for he was a shrewd business man and reaped good profits. His was not a nature to seek the publicity of political life, but he was a loyal Democrat of the old school. In religious matters he united early in life with the Baptist Church, but in his later years attended the Methodist Church.

In 1823 Peleg Bryer was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of William Caswell, of Newport. She was born in 1803 and died in 1873, six years after her husband. Their family, a large one, consisted of six sons and four daughters: (1) Stafford was an undertaker and furniture dealer in Newport. (2) William was at first in the cooperage business, later a grocer on Broadway. He married (first) Miss Ann Huddy and (second) Mrs. Charlotte (Slocum) Sherman. (3) Elizabeth became the wife of Leander Dunwell, and had one son, Benjamin B. This son married Miss Lydia Millican, of Block Island, and they have one daughter, named Elizabeth. Leander Dunwell died and his widow married Joseph M. Coit, by whom she had one son, Joseph. (4) Peleg, born May 8, 1831, embarked in the grocery business with his father and since the latter's death has been conducting it alone. He married Miss Sarah C. Chambers, of Newport, and they have five children, viz.: Sarah E.; Peleg, Jr.; Lillian Burns; James Monroe, who married Miss Cora Rollins, of South Auburn, Maine, and resides in Cleveland, Ohio, agent for Austin Nichols & Co., wholesale groceries of New York; and Florence Nigitingale, who married (first) Albert T. Cowie, of Washington, D. C., and (second) Irving P. Irons, of Providence. (5) Benjamin, born April 24, 1833, died May 18, 1898. He was a tea merchant in New York. He married Miss Mary Oakley, of London, England, who died May 10, 1883, the mother of seven children, born as follows: Albert, Oct. 11, 1856; Leander Dunwell, Oct. 7, 1857; Charlotte Caswell, March 2, 1859; Robert Scrymser, who died aged four; Louise Lockwood, June 24, 1865; Marie Lee, Jan. 5, 1869; and Bessie Hutchinson, June 4, 1875. The oldest son, Albert, a tea broker in China, married Miss Rachel Addison Wetmore, who was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1860, and who died April 6, 1900. They had three children: Ronald, who lived only five years; Ethelind S., born in Amoy, China, July 10, 1886; and Ottilie, born in Brooklyn, Dec. 7, 1891. (6) Andrew is a retired business man in Newport. (7) Harriet C., deceased, married George Oakley, of Newport. (8) Lydia Whitehorn married (first) George W. Mitchell, by whom she had one daughter, Georgia, now the wife of Frederick D. Hollister, of Brooklyn, and mother of one daughter, named Jessie Oakley. For her second husband Mrs. Mitchell married Lyman A. Mitchell, by whom she had three children, Jessie, Charlotte C. and Mark Alden. (9) Mary Buloid married the late John Lake, of Bristol, R. I., and had three children, Dr. John, Mary Bryer and Elizabeth Briggs. (10) John H., a fruit and vegetable dealer in Newport, married Miss Susan Dawley, of that city, and has three children, viz.: Grace Walton, now Mrs. Henry H. Lawton, of Newport; Marian Caswell, who married Dr. William R. Howard, of Newport; and John H., Jr.

(VII) Stafford Bryer, eldest son of Peleg, was born in Newport in 1824. He went to the public schools there and after that was apprenticed to Simeon Hazard, a cabinet-maker with whom he remained several years. He and Michael Cottrell then established the firm of Cottrell & Bryer, furniture dealers, located at the corner of Church and Division streets. They rented this land for several years, putting up their own store and factory. From there they removed to Thames street, on the present site of the Boston Store, where they continued in partnership till about 1870. Thereafter Mr. Bryer carried on the business alone. A few years later he bought property on the opposite side of Thames street, No. 156, put up a large block which still stands there, and occupied three floors thereof himself. He carried on both a furniture and undertaking business and was so uniformly successful that he built up a competence. He confined his attention almost exclusively to his own business, refusing all offers of political office, although he was a loyal supporter of his party, the Democratic. He was a member of Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum, of Newport. He united early in life with the Baptist Church and for some years was a teacher in the Sabbath-school.

Stafford Bryer became the husband of Miss Susan Frances Lovie Gladding, daughter of Henry Gladding, of Newport. This happy union was ended by the death of Mr. Bryer, April 21, 1892. To him and his wife were born a family of six children: (1) The first-born, James, died young. (2) Henry Gladding was in business with his father. (3) Charles E. is a painter and decorator, living in the West. (4) Stafford, Jr., was formerly engaged in the furniture business in Newport, but later was for many years in the tailoring business in Providence, where he died. He married Miss Martha Carr, and they have had three children, John, Mabel, and a daughter who died in infancy. (5) William S. was a butcher in Newport for many years, and served for some time as assistant commissary for the Newport Artillery. He married Miss Georgianna McDonald, of Westerly, and died leaving her with three children, Arthur, Gardner and Philip. (6) Nellie Lovie married (first) William Moffitt, of Newport, by whom she had two children, Godfrey (2) (deceased) and William, Jr. Her second husband was William H. Wolcott, to whom she bore one son, Harold Bradford. Mrs. Wolcott died in Newport Oct. 31, 1892.

(VII) ANDREW BRYER was born Sept. 15, 1835, the fifth son of Peleg and Mary (Caswell) Bryer. At the age of sixteen he was taken out of school and became a clerk in his father's grocery store, remaining in that capacity till he reached his majority. At that age he started in business on his own account and opened a restaurant on Thames street, where the Boston Store now stands. After seven years in those quarters he bought the business block across the street, which has since been known as Bryer's Exchange, and occupied it for about twenty years. The enterprise was a very profitable one and in 1884 he was enabled to retire and devote his whole time to looking after the various other interests in which he had invested. During his active business career Mr. Bryer acted at one time as State agent for the Poland Spring Water Company. He also had charge for nine years of the Narragansett Gun Club, which was located at that time on his fine farm in Middletown, R. I., a tract of 100 acres. As James Gordon Bennett was president of the club during this period, Mr. Bryer was brought into close connection with that eminent man.

Mr. Bryer has evinced considerable interest in Masonry and belongs to St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. and A. M.; Newport Royal Arch Chapter, No. 2; DeBlois Council, No. 5, R. and S. M., in which he served several years as conductor; Washington Commandery, No. 4, K. T.; and Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Providence. He is also a member of Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum, of Newport. In politics Mr. Bryer votes the Democratic ticket. His church affiliation is with the Methodists, as his family are members of that denomination.

On Aug. 9, 1857, Mr. Bryer was joined in matrimony to Miss Rebecca K. Babcock, the daughter of George Babcock, of Newport, a union which endured for nearly thirty years and was broken only by the death of Mrs. Bryer, July 24, 1887. They were the parents of four children, namely: Walter B., a carpenter in Newport, who married Miss Florence A. Duff, of Kansas City, Mo., and has two children, Andrew Harris and Helen Marie; Elizabeth Hazard, at home; Sarah W., who married Irving H. Gamwell, of Holliston, Mass., at present the superintendent of schools at Franklin, Mass., and who has one daughter, Constance; and Russell K., a graduate of the Philadelphia Dental College and now practising in New York City.

(VIII) HENRY GLADDING BRYER, son of Stafford and Susan F. L. (Gladding) Bryer, was born in Newport Dec. 25, 1848. During his earlier years he studied in the public schools and then was sent to East Greenwich Academy, where he remained till he was eighteen years of age. He had meantime acquired considerable familiarity with the manufacture and repair of furniture, and so decided to establish himself in that line. He opened a place on Sherman's Wharf for the manufacture of coffins and furniture, together with upholstering and the repairing of furniture and did a good business for four or five years, but after his father and Mr. Cottrell dissolved partnership he went in with the former and succeeded to the sole management of the business after his father's death. During his association with his father Mr. Bryer was made assistant city undertaker, appointed by the city council, and held that position several years.

Henry G. Bryer was one of the charter members of the Newport Light Infantry, and later was connected for several years with the Newport Artillery Company. Socially he held membership in Redwood Lodge, No. 11, Knights of Pythias, of Newport, and belonged to the Uniform Rank. In politics he was a Democrat on national issues, but independent in city affairs.

Mrs. Bryer was Miss Lydia Rhodes, and was married in February, 1867. She was born in Stockport, England, but was brought to this country by her parents, George and Elizabeth Rhodes, when only three months old. Mrs. Bryer was an attendant of the Episcopal Church. She passed away June 15, 1906, aged fifty-five years and Mr. Bryer died at his residence on Mount Vernon street, Newport, Nov. 29, 1907, aged fifty-eight years. Mr. and Mrs. Bryer had three children, viz.: George H., born in September, 1868, a painter and paper-hanger in Newport, who married Miss Laura Barlow and has three children, Lydia E., Reginald N. and Dorothy; Frank E., mentioned below; and Howard Barton, born in July, 1879, who graduated from the University of Maryland, class of 1907, with the degree of M. D.

(IX) FRANK E. BRYER was born Jan. 25, 1870. His business is that of paper-hanging, painting and decorating, and he has done well in this line, having a reputation for first-class work, but he is doubtless more generally known in a musical capacity. He is the proprietor and director of Bryer's Orchestra, which has an enviable name in the city for the quality of its work. Mr. Bryer is prominent in musical circles and belongs to the Alpha Musical Club. He is also interested in fraternal affairs and is a member of both Redwood Lodge, No. 11, K. P., and of Weenat Shassit Tribe, No. 6, I. O. R. M., of Newport, in which he is popular personally. He married Sept. 9, 1891, Miss Louisa L. Dawley, daughter of Franklin P. and Minnie A. (Gladding) Dawley, of Newport, and the union has been blessed with two sons, Raymond H. and Earle G. Mr. Bryer is a worthy representative of the name he bears and gives promise of adding in the future to the weight of honor and responsibility so long associated with the Bryer family.

HORACE P. RALPH, of Washington village, in the town of Coventry, Kent Co., R. I., is descended from Thomas Ralph, who was of the town of Warwick in 1671 and the forerunner in America of this old and distinguished family.

Amasa Ralph, father of Horace P. Ralph, was born in the town of Scituate, R. I., July 7, 1794, and was reared in the manner common to the youth of his community. When about twenty-one years old he set out in the world for himself, engaging in farming, and as soon as his accumulated earnings would permit bought a small farm some four miles west of the present village of Washington. He continued to farm that place for some years, until he disposed of the property and took up his residence in Washington, where he remained until his death, which occurred Oct. 28, 1872. Throughout his long and active life he bore a reputation for honesty and industry, and in his death the community lost one of its most esteemed citizens. He was twice married, first to Harriet Kent, who was born Oct. 25, 1805, and by whom he had three children: Harley C., born Feb. 22, 1823; Edwin, born Feb. 25, 1825, died aged twenty-two years; and Susan, born July 21, 1830. The first and last named did not live to maturity. The mother dying, Mr. Ralph married her sister Occanna, who was born March 21, 1808, and by that union there were two children, Dulinda, born Aug. 9, 1832, and Horace P., born Sept. 8, 1841. The daughter married Henry Chapin and resided at Springfield, Mass., where she died leaving Carrie R. and George H. Chapin, of Springfield.

Horace P. Ralph was born in Coventry and received his education in the public schools of that town. He took up his father's calling, following farming exclusively until he was twenty-eight years old. Meantime, being both industrious and enterprising, he had employed his spare moments in learning the use of tools, with such good results that he was able to accept employment at carpentering. He possessed natural mechanical ability, which developed with necessity, and in time he became so skilful that he was given entire charge of the repairing required in the mills situated at Washington. The rebuilding and repairing to be done afforded him opportunities for varied work which would have been impossible under ordinary circumstances, and called forth all his latent skill, so that he became an expert, displaying an aptitude and judgment for his work as remarkable as it was unusual. From time to time Mr. Ralph invested his earnings in real estate in and about the village, upon which he erected numerous buildings, also putting up various structures for others, becoming well known in that line. He has erected a complete repairing establishment, and despite his advancing years is almost as active as in the past. His life has not been one of easy prosperity, for he has had reverses, some of them severe enough to appear insurmountable to one of less determination than Mr. Ralph. Moreover, he had an accident in his youth which would have seemed a handicap to many men. When a boy he enjoyed trapping the small game abounding in that neighborhood, and while engaged in setting one of the old traps familiar to those acquainted with woodcraft the bent sprout which formed the spring became disengaged and struck him in the left eye, completely destroying the sight.

In early life Mr. Ralph affiliated with the Republican party in political affairs, but he has always been deeply interested in the temperance cause and the prohibition of the liquor traffic, and for a number of years past has identified himself with the Prohibition party, in whose ranks he has been quite active. He has permitted the use of his name as a candidate for various offices, and in 1905 was on the ticket as nominee for lieutenant-governor. Upon an independent ticket he has been chosen a member of the town council of Coventry, and he has always been active in the growth and advancement of his community. Almost all of his life has been spent near the scene of his birth, and by steady, plodding industry, and the rigid application of honorable business principles, he has accumulated a fair competence and has gained and maintained an honored and respected name. While he does not claim any special credit for what he has achieved, his life is nevertheless an example of what may be accomplished without the aid of special educational advantages or inherited wealth.

On Sept. 8, 1869, Mr. Ralph married Mary J. Potter, who was born Aug. 29, 1843, daughter of Bowen and Dorcas (Barber) Potter, and descends from well-known Rhode Island stock. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ralph hold membership in the Central Baptist Church of Coventry and take an active part in the advancement of Christian work. Mr. Ralph has been particularly prominent in church affairs, having served many years as a deacon and for more than twenty years as superintendent of the Sunday-school.

JOHN E. LEFAVOUR. Since early in the nineteenth century, for now some hundred years, the LeFavours have been a family of prominence in Pawtucket, and for several generations previous the family home was in the ancient towns of Topsfield and Marblehead, Mass. There came to the former town, says family tradition, from the Island of Guernsey, one John LeFavour. His wife was Mary, and their children were: Mary, born June 8, 1744; Rachel, born Oct. 6, 1745; John, born March 25, 1748; Anna, born Sept. 2, 1749; Robert, born Oct. 25, 1751; Ruth, born April 5, 1759; William, born Sept. 22, 1760; Sarah, born June 30, 1762; Joseph, born April 14, 1764; and Amos, born Jan. 14, 1766.

From this source came the Pawtucket family of LeFavours, the head of which was the late David LeFavour, who through a long lifetime was one of the prominent citizens and substantial men of his adopted city, a merchant of high standing, and one of whose sons, the late Gen. Heber LeFavour, rose to high rank as a citizen soldier, distinguishing himself in the Civil war; while another son, the late Edward LeFavour, was long a prominent business man at Detroit, Mich., one of his sons now representing the family at Pawtucket, this Commonwealth, in the person of John Edward LeFavour. There follows in brief something of the lives of some of the Pawtucket LeFavours.

The parents of the late David LeFavour, of Marblehead, Mass., and Pawtucket, R. I., where John and Lucy (Day) LeFavour, who were married at Ipswich (she at the time being of that town) Jan. 6, 1794, and their children of Marblehead public record, either born or baptized, were: Amos, April 12, 1795; Lucy, Aug. 7, 1796; Thomas, Dec. 17, 1797; David and Lucy (twins), Nov. 1, 1799; and Sarah G., March 22, 1801.

DAVID LEFAVOUR, son of John and Lucy (Day) LeFavour, born Nov. 1, 1799, in Marblehead, Mass., married Nov. 1, 1824, on his twenty-fifth birthday, Mary Ann Baldwin, born Nov. 30, 1798, in Brimfield, Mass., and the marriage was blessed with five children.

Mr. LeFavour when yet in his early teens came to Pawtucket, this State, and became employed as a spinner in the Slater mill, continuing his services there until twenty years of age. He then embarked in business for himself, engaging in the boot and shoe trade in association with Mr. Niles Spencer, under the firm name of Spencer & LeFavour, purchasing at that time what became the LeFavour building on the corner of High and Main streets, which in 1890, at the time of the widening of High street, gave way for the present LeFavour block. On this site Messrs. LeFavour & Spencer carried on business together until the death of the junior member of the firm, which occurred some time in the sixties, and thereafter it was continued by Mr. LeFavour until his retirement from active business life, in 1872, his business career in that one place covering a period of fifty years.

Mr. LeFavour was a man of marked characteristics, one of considerable force of character. He was upright, honest and honorable in all his dealings, won and held the confidence of his business associates and bore the esteem and respect of his fellow-citizens and the community in which his long life was spent. He was a man of good business ability and judgment and amassed a fortune. He was very gentlemanly in manner, ever kind and courteous. He possessed great executive ability.

Mr. LeFavour in early life united with St. Paul's Episcopal Church at Pawtucket, of which he was one of the founders, and all through life took a great interest in its welfare, and as far as his health permitted took a leading part in whatever was going on in the church. At one time he was the leader of the choir, and for a period of a half dozen or more years he was superintendent of the Sunday-school of the church. On the organization of the Pacific National Bank, at Pawtucket, he became one of the directors of the institution. From this time on through the remainder of his lifetime it is said there never was a time when he did not have a deposit there to his credit.

Mr. LeFavour died March 20, 1879, at his home in Pawtucket, in the eightieth year of his age, having outlived nearly if not all of his business contemporaries, and survived all of his immediate family, his wife having passed to the beyond a little in advance of him, dying Jan. 10, 1879.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. LeFavour were: Edward, born May 4, 1827, died March 27, 1874, in Detroit, Mich.; Horace, born Jan. 5, 1830, died July 27, 1832; Mary, born April 22, 1833, died Aug. 28, 1857; Heber, born May 3, 1837, died Feb. 25, 1878, in Pawtucket; and Latimer, born July 28, 1841, died March 2, 1870, at Jacksonville, Florida.

EDWARD LEFAVOUR, son of David and Mary Ann (Baldwin) LeFavour, born May 4, 1827, in Pawtucket, married Mary Drown, only child of the late Gen. John B. Read, of Pawtucket, R. I. (sketch follows), and the marriage was blessed with one child, John Edward LeFavour. Mrs. LeFavour died Oct. 16, 1858, and Mr. LeFavour married (second) Nov. 11, 1868, Martha W. Hutchinson, of Bay City, Mich., who died in Pawtucket Sept. 29, 1878. To this union were born two children, Helen H. (Nov. 30, 1869) and David (Sept. 7, 1873), the former of whom resides in Bay City, unmarried. David LeFavour makes his home in Wallaceburg, Ontario, where he has become interested in the beet sugar industry. He was married in 1901 to Helen Kline, of Amsterdam, N. Y., and they have had two children, Edward and William, twins.

Edward LeFavour became a prominent business man and citizen of the city of Detroit, Mich., where he died March 27, 1874. He is said have been one of the most popular and beloved men of that city, whither he went early in life, and there, in partnership with J. R. Nichols, under the firm name of Nichols & LeFavour, engaged in the shoe business prior to 1853. He continued in that business until his death, and met with marked success.

In political views a staunch Republican, he served his adopted city as a member of the board of aldermen from his ward, and during that service was also for a time acting mayor of the city. At the time of his death and for several years previously he was appraiser of merchandise of the United States Custom House at Detroit.

Mr. LeFavour was a prominent member of the Masonic bodies, being a member of Detroit Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templar, with which he united June 27, 1860, and of the Scottish Rite bodies up to the thirty-third degree. He was a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, and was a vestryman of same for several years prior to his death.

JOHN EDWARD LEFAVOUR, the only child of the late Edward and Mary D. (Read) LeFavour, was born May 27, 1858, in Pawtucket, R. I. He acquired his early educational training in the public schools of his native city, after which for a time he attended what is now the Moses Brown School of Providence, being obliged to leave same on account of ill health. Since leaving school Mr. LeFavour has devoted his time to looking after his real estate and other interests. In his political views, like his father, he is a Republican. He is a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of Pawtucket. Mr. LeFavour is unmarried.

HEBER LEFAVOUR, son of David and Mary Ann (Baldwin) LeFavour, was born May 3, 1837, on the North Providence side of Pawtucket, R. I. While yet in his teens young LeFavour went to Detroit, Mich., whither in the latter thirties his uncle had located. This uncle was Henry Potter Baldwin, formerly of Pawtucket and Woonsocket, who became a prominent merchant and banker of Detroit, and rose to high official position, serving as State senator, governor and United States senator from his adopted State. At the time of the breaking out of the Civil war young LeFavour was engaged in business in Detroit. When Sumter was fired upon Heber LeFavour went to his country's rescue, enlisting April 17, 1861, in the First Michigan Regiment of Volunteers. On the day following he was appointed captain and aide-de-camp on the staff of the adjutant-general of the State. On June 19, 1861, he was commissioned captain of Company F, 5th Michigan Regiment. He was in the siege of Yorktown, and in the first battle of Williamsburg, May 5, 1862, in which he was three times wounded, one of these wounds badly disfiguring his face. He was discharged for promotion, commissioned lieutenant-colonel of 22d Michigan Regiment, Aug. 8, 1862, and was promoted to colonel of the regiment Jan. 5, 1863.

Colonel LeFavour was in command of the reserve brigade at the headquarters of the Army of the Cumberland from May 31, 1864, to April 12, 1865, and during the campaign resulting in the siege and capture of Atlanta he was in command of the Third Division of the Army of the Cumberland at Chattanooga, Tenn., from April 8, 1865, until the close of the war.

Colonel LeFavour served in the Army of the Potomac in the campaign against Morgan and others in Kentucky, and was severely injured at Lexington, that State. He was in command of the Third Brigade, Second Division, Reserve Corps, Army of the Cumberland, from July to September, 1863. He was in the Army of the Cumberland in Kentucky and was temporarily in command of a brigade at the battle of Chattanooga, where he was made a prisoner of war, Sept. 29, 1863, and as such was confined in Libby prison for six months, being exchanged May 19, 1864.

On March 13, 1865, Colonel LeFavour was commissioned a brevet-brigadier-general, U. S. V., for gallant and meritorious services at Nashville, Tennessee.

Returning to Rhode Island after the war General LeFavour, Dec. 1, 1869, was commissioned colonel and inspector of the Rhode Island militia, a position he held until March, 1874. From March 26th, of the last named year, until June 25, 1875, he was colonel and assistant adjutant-general of Rhode Island. He was commissioned a brigadier-general and adjutant-general Jan. 29, 1875, and continued as such up to the time of his death.

General LeFavour was a prominent and honored member of the G. A. R., identified with Tower Post, No. 17, at Pawtucket, of which he was past commander. He held the appointment of aide-de-camp to the commander-in-chief of the United States, Gen. J. C. Robison.

At the close of the war General LeFavour took up his residence at Pawtucket, R. I., and was a prominent citizen of that city. In 1872 he represented North Providence in the State Assembly. He was one of the vestrymen of St. Paul's Episcopal Church and was a regular attendant upon its services, and as well an active worker and warm friend of the church. He was a director of the Pacific National Bank. He was also a member of Holy Sepulchre Commandery, No. 8, Knights Templar, and of the Consistory, being a thirty-second degree Mason.

General LeFavour, associated with Mr. Frank R. Almy, was extensively engaged in the leather business, and he was interested in the Hope Machine Company of Providence, in the manufacture of calico engraving machines. He was dignified in manner and manly in deportment, and always bore the respect and esteem of his many friends and acquaintances. He never married.

General LeFavour died Feb. 25, 1878, at Pawtucket, as the result of an injury received from being thrown from a carriage in which he was riding.

READ (Pawtucket family). The Reads are an ancient Massachusetts family, one of approximately two hundred and seventy years' standing there, and since 1643 and 1644 the name and family have been one common and continuous in the ancient town of Rehoboth, Mass., and in the towns created from it and in Rhode Island territory lying adjacent to Massachusetts. At Pawtucket, now a Rhode Island city, some of the posterity of the American ancestor of the Rehoboth family have been for many years among that point's leading citizens and prominent and successful business men, notably the late Gen. John Blake Read, long a merchant of enterprise and public spirit, an officer of high rank in the old Massachusetts State militia, legislator, etc.; and as well his brother, long engaged in a similar business to the General, the late Amos Read.

These Read brothers were descendants in the sixth generation from their first American ancestor, John Read, from whom their lineage is through Daniel, Daniel (2), Ichabod and Jonathan Read. These generations follow in chronological order.

(I) John Read, supposed to have been a son of William and Lucy (Henage) Read, born in 1598, is of record at Weymouth, Mass., in 1637, the next year was at Dorchester, and thence went to what is now Quincy, Mass. In 1643 or 1644 he went with Rev. Mr. Newman and his church to Rehoboth, on the settling of that point. His name is the third on the list of purchasers of the town of Rehoboth. Mr. Read became a man of large property for those times. He held the office of constable, which at the time was the chief executive office in the town. He lived in that part of the town which is now Seekonk, he kept a public house, and was a prominent and leading man. The Christian name of his wife was Sarah, and their children were: Samuel, William, Abigail, John, Thomas, Ezekiel, Zachariah, Moses, Mary, Elizabeth, Daniel, Israel and Mehetabel.

(II) Daniel Read, son of John, born in March, 1655, in Rehoboth, Mass., married Aug. 20, 1677, Harinah Peck, and their children were: Hannah, born June 30, 1678; Daniel, Jan. 30 (or 20), 1680; John, Feb. 25, 1681; Sarah, April 5, 1684; Noah, May 17, 1687; and Abigail, June 5, 1690. The father of these died Oct. 17, 1710.

(III) Daniel Read (2), son of Daniel, born Jan. 20, (or 30), 1680, married Elizabeth Bosworth, and their children, all born in Rehoboth, were: Beriah, born Oct. 29, 1707; Ichabod, Oct. 8, 1708; Hannah, Feb. 5, 1710; Abigail, April 29, 1711; Esther, July 1, 1712; Daniel, Sept. 7, 1713. The mother of these died and the father married (second) Dec. 8, 1715, Elizabeth Ide, and their children were: Daniel, born Dec. 3, 1716 (in Attleboro, Mass.); Noah, Dec. 17, 1718; Elizabeth, April 2, 1721; Samuel, May 8, 1723; Abigail, April 4, 1725; Daniel, in 1726; Rachel, June 10, 1728; Benjamin, Aug. 21, 1730; Ebenezer, 1733; Thankful, May 12, 1737.

(IV) Ichabod Read, son of Daniel (2), born Oct. 8, 1708, in Rehoboth, Mass., married Elizabeth Chaffee, and their children were: Ichabod, born Jan. 15, 1735 (in Attleboro, Mass.); Patience, Aug. 2, 1737; Amos, May 1, 1739; Daniel, Aug. 12, 1743; Olive, April 12, 1746; Ichabod, March 2, 1750; Jonathan, Aug. 8, 1752. The mother of these died and the father married (second) Elizabeth Robinson, and their children were: Ebenezer, born July 7, 1757; Dan, Feb. 7, 1766; Sarah, April 13, 1768; Lemuel, Feb. 1, 1771; Asareel, in July, 1773.

(V) Jonathan Read, son of Ichabod, born Aug. 8, 1752, in Rehoboth, Mass., married Dorothy Blake, and their children were: John, born in 1787, in Falmouth, Maine; Abigail, born in 1789;

Rufus, born in 1793; Amos, born Oct. 18, 1796; Samuel, born in 1797; Eliza, born in 1799; John B., born Dec. 2, 1801; Daniel B., born Jan. 1, 1803; Mary Ann, born in 1806; and Louisa, born in 1808. The father of these was a patriot of the Revolution, became a prisoner of war and suffered confinement on the memorable old "Jersey" prison ship. He died March 2, 1838, and his wife, too, lived to a venerable age, dying June 18, 1835.

(VI) JOHN BLAKE READ, son of Jonathan and Dorothy, born Dec. 2, 1801, in Freeport, Maine, married Nov. 27, 1828, Jane Thatcher Ingraham, daughter of Elias and Phebe (Thatcher) Ingraham, of Attleboro, Massachusetts.

When five years of age John Blake Read accompanied his parents to the town of Westbrook on their removal thither at that time. Here he was sent to a district school until he was fourteen years of age. At this time he went to work in a tin shop, residing with his older sister while he learned his trade. In 1821 he located in Pawtucket, and there passed the rest of his life. For nearly half a century he was there engaged in the hardware trade. His shop was on Main street, on part of the site now occupied by the John B. Read block. In 1842 he built the residence on Walcott street in which he died, and in which his widow continued to reside until she, too, was called to her rest. It is now occupied by his grandson, John E. LeFavour. In 1850 Mr. Read erected his handsome business block. The block adjoining it was built by Amos Read, an older brother of John B., who was also a hardware merchant. The Reads were the oldest and most prominent merchants in their line of business for many years in Pawtucket. Amos Read preceded his brother John B. to Pawtucket by several years. He died in advanced life in 1880.

Mr. John Blake Read was distinctively a business man. As a public-spirited citizen of the Commonwealth, however, he was induced to accept various offices, such as town councilman, etc., all of which positions he filled with great credit to himself and to the best interests of his constituents. His political affiliations were first with the old Whig party, and on the formation of the Republican party he became a staunch advocate of its principles. When Pawtucket or that part of it on his side of the river was a part of Massachusetts he was chosen a member of the lower house of the Assembly and was several times re-elected to that body, serving most efficiently for four years. He, too, for a long time under the laws of Massachusetts was commanding general of the militia of that State. General Read was a very popular man and citizen. He died at his home in Pawtucket, R. I., Feb. 27, 1862.

Mary Drown Read, the only child of General Read, married Edward LeFavour, son of the late venerable David LeFavour, of Pawtucket, and brother of General Heber LeFavour of that city. Their only son is the present John Edward Le-Favour, of Pawtucket. Mrs. LeFavour died Oct. 16, 1858.

BENJAMIN WILBUR, a well-known manufacturer and representative citizen of the town of Scituate, R. I., comes from an old New England family. He is a son of Samuel, grandson of Samuel, and great-grandson of Job, who was of Cranston.

Samuel Wilbur, the father of Benjamin, established a manufacturing plant at Rockland, Scituate, for the manufacture of bobbins, beginning in a small way and gradually increasing his business, although it was not until Benjamin Wilbur, his son, became identified with the industry that it assumed much importance. Mr. Wilbur was of the good old type of persevering, industrious, plodding men, whose entire life was founded upon a thorough and Christian application of the "Golden Rule." He lived to a great age, not a day of which was passed without some effort to do good. He was esteemed by all and revered by many and tradition tells of many of his good deeds and sterling qualities.

Benjamin Wilbur was born in the town of Scituate April 7, 1835, and his boyhood was not different from the ordinary life of the country boy, his education consisting of such learning as he could gain at the district schools. He early assumed a position of responsibility in his father's factory, of which he assumed charge in about 1858, the business being carried on in the buildings erected by his father until some years after the latter's death, when a new and much improved factory was erected. On Oct. 31, 1876, this was completely destroyed by fire, but rebuilding was immediately commenced, and the new buildings occupied until 1883, when fire again destroyed the entire plant—buildings, machinery, finished product and materials. Undaunted by the second complete destruction of the product of his industry Mr. Wilbur at once rebuilt upon an even greater scale than before, new and superior modern machinery supplanting the old, and the entire establishment was equipped not only for the manufacture of the specialty spools and bobbins, but for many other kindred articles. The buildings are ample, substantial and modern and Mr. Wilbur's goods find a ready sale throughout New England, where the excellence of their quality and the straightforward, honorable business methods of the producer make them well known to the trade.

In politics Mr. Wilbur is a Republican and he represented his community in the town council from 1870 to 1875, and the town in the State Legislature in 1876 and again in 1900. When but twenty-three years of age, in 1858, Mr. Wilbur became a member of the Baptist Church, and the following year was made a deacon therein, in which official capacity he is still rendering service. For more than forty years he has been Sunday-school superintendent. He is also well known in Masonic circles, a member of Hamilton Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Scituate Chapter, R. A. M., St. John's Commandery, Knights Templar, and Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine. As a business man Mr. Wilbur takes high rank, his experience having been gained in study and the hard trials of misfortune. In disposition he is one who prefers to take the sunnier side, and in manner he is genteel, plain and unaffected, thoroughly at home in the social circle, causing all to feel a sense of ease and good temper. He is a fluent talker, the gravity of his conversation being enlivened with wit and humor. He is a man of marked mental and physical equilibrium, calm and self-possessed. In fact he is such a man as will command the respect of all those whose pleasure it is to come into contact with him.

Mr. Wilbur was married in 1859 to Ann Maria Hierlihy, of Hope, and she died in 1889, after a life of true Christianity, in a community in which she was much beloved for her many womanly qualities. They had but one child, Phebe Evelena, who lives with her father in the comfortable home at South Scituate.

HON. CHARLES S. SEAGRAVE, cashier of the First National Bank of Smithfield, at Slatersville, North Smithfield, is one of the best known men in financial circles in that section of Rhode Island, where his long career as a business man, marked by continued success, has won him the assured confidence of all classes. His conduct of affairs has ever been characterized by a sound judgment, a financial ability, a foresight and integrity which make his advice on and participation in any enterprise most valuable and often sought. Mr. Seagrave is a native of Uxbridge, Mass., born Aug. 9, 1852, son of Charles Edwin Seagrave, and a descendant of one of the best known families of Massachusetts and one which was nobly represented in the Revolutionary struggle.

(I) John Seagrave and Sarah, his wife, says tradition, with their children, embarked from England for America sometime about 1725 to 1730. The father died on the passage, but the widow and children landed safely in Boston. Their children, all born in England, but the youngest, who was probably born in Boston, were: Edward, John, Sarah and Mary. The mother died in 1786.

(II) Capt. Edward Seagrave, born about 1722, in England, married Jan. 6, 1757, Lois, daughter of Joseph and Judith White, of Uxbridge, Mass. They lived in Uxbridge, where Mr. Seagrave was engaged in farming. At the breaking out of the war of the Revolution, on the Lexington alarm of April 19, 1775, he marched from Uxbridge as first lieutenant of a company of patriots, of which Samuel Reed was captain, and proved his loyalty to the Colonies by continued service. On Sept. 25, 1775, he was commissioned captain in Col. Read's regiment, the 20th regiment of Foot, in the Massachusetts eight months' service. He was subsequently commissioned captain of the 9th company, 3d Worcester county regiment; and re-commissioned captain of the same company and regiment, Jan. 30, 1778. He was again commissioned captain July 12, 1778, in Col. Wade's regiment, service in Rhode Island.

As an illustration of the bravery and self-possession of Capt. Seagrave, it is related that at the battle of White Plains in New York, in 1776, the Uxbridge Company being under his command, he saved to the Patriot Army one of the most important points. The British had captured a portion of the company, and were pressing upon our troops, when the colonel in command gave orders to retreat. In an instant the commander of the Uxbridge company, waving his sword above his head shouted "Let cowards retreat, and brave men to the rescue of their comrades," and calling out to the companies near him to turn bayonet, they charged upon the British, drove them in rout from their position, and re-captured their friends. For this act the captain was offered a colonelship, which he modestly declined. His two sons served in his company. Capt. Seagrave died May 18 (or 20), 1793. His widow, Lois, passed away Jan. 7-8, 1806. Their children were: John, born Nov. 6, 1757; Lois, Nov. 5, 1759; Joseph, Dec. 26, 1761; Mary, April 1, 1764; Bezaleel, Dec. 14, 1766; Sarah, Dec. 31, 1768; Caleb, March 14, 1771; Josiah, Oct. 14, 1773; Edward, Nov. 9, 1776; Olive, April 17, 1779; and Samuel, Feb. 3, 1782.

(III) John Seagrave, born Nov. 6, 1757, married Sarah Dorrington, of Boston, born April 7, 1755. They settled in the town of Mr. Seagrave's nativity, where he was occupied in farming. Mr. Seagrave served his country in the Continental Army both as an officer and as a soldier. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Seagrave were: Polly, born Dec. 8, 1779; Dorrington, Sept. 25, 1781; John, Dec. 1, 1783; Sally, in 1785; Bezaleel, Nov. 30, 1787; Sally, in 1790; Harriet, Feb. 28, 1792; and Daniel, Nov. 2, 1795. The father died Feb. 3, 1842, aged eighty-five years. The mother passed away Sept. 19, 1831.

(IV) John Seagrave (2), born Dec. 1, 1783, married March 21, 1805, Mary Scott, of Bellingham, Mass., born Feb. 5, 1784. Mr. Seagrave settled in Uxbridge, Mass., where he was engaged in farming. He died in his native town, Oct. 14, 1836. His widow Mary passed away Jan. 12, 1860, aged seventy-six years. Their children were: Caroline, born Jan. 31, 1806; John, Jan. 20, 1808; Saul Scott, March 3, 1810; Selissa Scott, April 14, 1812; William Henry, Jan. 6, 1815; Edward Foster, Aug. 13, 1817; James Carter, April 14, 1821; and Charles Edwin, Oct. 1, 1825.

(V) Charles Edwin Seagrave was born in Uxbridge, Mass., Oct. 1, 1825, and throughout life was identified with that town. After his school days were over he took up agricultural pursuits first, and then branched out into the lumber business also. He became a man of large private interests, and was also to a great extent connected with Uxbridge institutions and with its municipal life. For an extended period he was president of the Uxbridge Savings Bank, and was a director of the National Bank of Uxbridge. His political work has always been in connection with the Republican party, and he has given much time to it, serving as selectman for several years, and also as the representative of Uxbridge in the State Legislature. He is a man honored and respected for his high moral character, his integrity of action and his devotion to his home.

Mr. Seagrave was married May 31, 1848, to Miss Abigail Carter, who was born at Pawtucket, June 12, 1824. Their children were: Edwin Carter, born Feb. 18, 1849; Margaret Melvina, Dec. 20, 1850 (in Northbridge, Mass.); Charles Scott, Aug. 9, 1852 (in Uxbridge, Mass.); Mary Abbie, April 15, 1858; Annie, Oct. 17, 1859; and Augustus C. S., July 20, 1868.

(VI) Charles S. Seagrave passed his boyhood on his father's farm, but received a better education than falls to the lot of the ordinary farmer's son, for he attended not only the lower schools, but also the high school of his native town. In 1869 he began teaching, and for seven terms continued in that work. He gave it up in 1875 to begin his business career as a clerk in the National Bank of Smithfield, where his uncle, William H. Seagrave, was cashier. It proved to be eminently the right step, for he developed marked ability for just such a line of work, and in five short years had made so practical a study of banking methods that he had risen to the position of cashier of the bank, succeeding his uncle in 1880, upon the latter's resignation. Since that time he has continued to discharge the duties of that position with ever increasing satisfaction to the stockholders and public alike.

The First National Bank of Smithfield is an old institution, incorporated and chartered in June, 1815, as the Burrillville Agricultural Bank. It did not begin business, however, until 1818, when it opened as the Burrillville Agricultural and Manufacturers Bank. In 1822 its name was changed to the Village Bank, and in May, 1865, it was again changed, to the present form. Through this long period the officers have been few in number, for there have been but five presidents and four cashiers. Those who filled the former position were John Slater, William S. Slater, John W. Slater and Byron A. Andrews, the present incumbent, Fred J. Pitts, entering upon his duties at the demise of the last named gentleman in 1905. The first cashier, Henry S. Mansfield, was succeeded in 1839 by his son and namesake, who in turn was followed by William H. Seagrave.

The life of Charles S. Seagrave has been filled with responsibilities aside from his work in the bank, in which he is a director as well as cashier. He has been town treasurer of North Smithfield for many years, elected on the Republican ticket. In 1907 he represented the town in the State Senate. For five years he was town and probate clerk, succeeding the late Hon. Byron A. Andrews, and during that time settled a number of estates, while all through his life he has frequently been made executor of estates all through the region around North Smithfield and vicinity. He is also a justice of the peace, appointed by the judge of the Twelfth District court, and is authorized to issue warrants and taking recognizances in special cases returnable to the District court. During one term he served on the school committee. He was one of the incorporators of the Slatersville Cemetery Association, and is now its secretary and trustee and treasurer. Mr. Seagrave has always been conspicuous for his public spirit and abiding interest in his town, manifested always in active and practical ways, and often at the expense of much personal inconvenience.

On Aug. 2, 1874, Mr. Seagrave was joined in matrimony to Miss Abbie Flora Cadwell, and the marriage has been blessed with children as follows: Mabel Agnes, born Aug. 26, 1875, who married Leon L. Southwick, now of Ilion, N. Y.; Florence Carter, born Dec. 1, 1877, a graduate from Brown University, and now a teacher in North Smithfield; Abbie Josephine, born Dec. 23, 1879, who died young; Charles Edwin, born Nov. 9, 1883, who was graduated from the University School, Providence, R. I., in 1903, and is now assistant in the bank with his father, and who married June 15, 1906, Miss Laura L. Tabor; Mary Alice, born July 11, 1887, and educated at the Uxbridge and Woonsocket high schools; and Frederick W., born Jan. 22, 1890, a high school student. The family are attendants of the Congregational Church at Slatersville, and Mr. Seagrave has been specially active in its work, having served twenty-three years as superintendent of its Sunday-school, and also as teacher, and auditor of the church. Mrs. Seagrave is a member of East Douglas Chapter, D. A. R., and is a woman of unusual ability and of fine character. The family stand high in the confidence and esteem of the town and are prominent in its social life.

MARTIN WILLARD THURBER, who after living retired for some years at his pleasant home on Mineral Spring avenue, North Providence, died March 22, 1907, was a descendant of an old Rhode Island family, being in the seventh generation from the immigrant ancestor. These generations in detail follow in regular order.

(I) In 1671, John Thurber and his wife Priscilla, with six of their eight children, Mary and James remaining in England, came from Stanton, in the County of Lincoln, 125 miles from London, and settled in Rehoboth, Mass., at Meadow Neck, which is now a part of Barrington, R. I. The children were: James, John, Abigail, Thomas, Edward, Charity, Elizabeth and Mary.

(II) James Thurber, son of John, born Aug. 26, 1660, in England, came to New England in 1672, married Elizabeth Bliss of Rehoboth, and died March 26, 1736, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. Their children were: James, born March 3, 1684; John, born Oct. 31, 1686; Rachel, born March 15, 1688; Elizabeth, born Dec. 10, 1690; Bathia, born March 15, 1692; Jonathan, born March 25, 1695; Grissell, born March 3, 1697; Samuel, born Aug. 27, 1700, in Rehoboth; and Edward, born Aug. 9, 1792.

(III) Samuel Thurber, son of James, born Aug. 27, 1700, in Rehoboth, Mass., married Rachel Wheeler of that town, and they died at different points, he, Dec. 20, 1785, in Providence, R. I., aged eighty-five years, three months and twenty-four days, and she in Rehoboth, Mass. Their children were: Samuel, born Oct. 27, 1724, in Rehoboth; John; Benjamin, born July 14, 1736; Rachel; James; Mary; Daniel; and Hezekiah.

(IV) Samuel Thurber, born Oct. 27, 1724, in Rehoboth, married Hopeskill Martin, of Rehoboth, born May 8, 1725. He died July 18, 1807, aged eighty-two years, eight months and twenty-three days. She died July 7, 1785, in her sixty-first year. They had children as follows: Rebecca, born Dec. 22, 1749; Martin, born Jan. 14, 1753; Hope, born Feb. 15, 1757; Squire, born Feb. 7, 1759; Edward, born Feb. 21, 1761; Rachel, born May 19, 1763; and Lydia, born May 12, 1767.

(V) Edward Thurber, son of Samuel, was born Feb. 21, 1761, and married Sally Field. He was a resident of Providence, his home being located on Constitution Hill. He died July 6, 1795, and his widow passed away July 9, 1836. Their children were: Martin, a sea-faring man, was lost at sea; Hope; William was a blacksmith by trade, a farmer and large land owner, residing in Providence, where Thurber avenue was named for him; Edward, a resident of Providence, was a sea-faring man, mate of the steamer "Lexington," and lost his life when that vessel was destroyed by fire; Sally married a Mr. Sheldon; Stanton; and one daughter died in infancy.

(VI) Stanton Thurber, son of Edward, was born in Providence, and learned the trade of blacksmith with his brother William, who kept a shop at the foot of Waterman street. After completing his apprenticeship he opened a shop of his own on Arsenal Lane, and was engaged in business there for fifty-five years, retiring from active work about four years before his death, which occurred May 17, 1864. He was buried in the North Burying ground.

Mr. Thurber was one of the best known men in his line of work in the city, and he had a very wide acquaintance not only with the residents of Providence but also in the surrounding towns. He did a very large business as then accounted, hiring six men. He was an energetic, industrious man and worked as hard as any of his employes. Plain of speech and rather abrupt in manner, he was still very highly regarded for his integrity and many sterling traits of character. His word was as valuable as any legal procedure could have made it, and among his fellow citizens was never questioned. His death occurred at his residence at No. 100 Benefit street.

Stanton Thurber married Martha Bicknell Dexter, born in 1799, at Grafton, Mass., daughter of Nathaniel G. B. and Lucy (Willard) Dexter. Mrs. Thurber survived her husband until Feb. 13, 1872, and died at Providence. She was a very kind-hearted lady, and many were the recipients of her Christian charity. The children of Stanton Thurber and wife were: (1) Sarah, died Jan. 7, 1905, at Providence, unmarried. (2) Nathaniel D. married (first) Jane B. Crowell, and (second) Frances E. Harrington; he succeeded to his father's business, which he conducted for many years, but is now living retired. He was father of two children, Clarence and Mary, both of whom are now deceased. (3) Martin Willard. (4) Edwin S. was a druggist at Providence, where he died. He married Amy Knowles, and left one daughter, Minnie A., now Mrs. George C. Phillips, of Providence. (5) John Richmond died in infancy. (6) Nelson H. was a blacksmith and died in Providence. He married Mary E. Pettis, and left three children, Harry F., of Boston; Howard, who died in Pomfret, Conn.; and Florence, wife of Samuel Burnham of Providence. (7) Charles H., secretary of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, married Melissa Winslow, and they have three children: Martha B., wife of Henry Nichols, of Grafton, Mass.; Harriet E., Mrs. Benjamin Burden, of Providence; and Frank D.

(VII) Martin Willard Thurber was born Aug. 2, 1826, in Providence, and he received his education in the public schools of his native city. He learned the trade of tanner and currier and acquired a knowledge of blacksmithing by working in his father's shop during the winter seasons. In 1849 he was one of a company of 100 individuals who purchased the ship "South America," and on her made the voyage to California, around Cape Horn, reaching the gold fields after a voyage of 150 days. His stay in California was short, and in order to reach home he shipped from San Francisco as a seaman before the mast, on the ship "William Sprague," owned by Manton & Hallett, of Providence, and on that vessel returned home via China. After his return to Providence, Mr. Thurber took up the work of blacksmith, which he continued until 1857. He then returned to the sea, making a voyage to Australia as a seaman, on the ship "Expounder," owned at Boston. He also made later voyages. His last one was on the celebrated clipper ship "Dreadnaught," under Capt. Samuel Samuels, when the east bound passage, New York to Liverpool, was made in eighteen days and the west bound in twenty-one days—at that time the record passage. He made one voyage on the "South America," owned by William, Thomas and Joseph Fletcher of Providence; this was a whaling expedition, and lasted eighteen months. Upon his second return he remained in the employ of his father until he was offered the position of foreman for E. C. Thayer, who started the Butterfly factory in the town of Lincoln, for the manufacture of leather goods. He remained there for four years, resigning that position in November, 1865. He then purchased his property on Mineral Spring avenue, North Providence, on which he erected new buildings, set out trees and otherwise made improvements, having the satisfaction of owning one of the most attractive homes of the town. For a number of years after settling there he conducted a blacksmith shop on Meeting street, Providence, but a few years ago, was obliged to give up his work on account of failing eyesight.

On Jan. 5, 1852, Mr. Thurber was married to Sarah Elizabeth Brown, born in Providence, July 30, 1834, daughter of George Riley and Mary Arnold (Reynolds) Brown. They had three children, namely: Stanton, born Oct. 17, 1862, died Jan. 29, 1891; Evelyn Augusta, born July 30, 1867, married George W. Walker, a traveling salesman, residing in Providence, and has these children, Jessie Brown, Helen Agreta and Ethel May; and Katie Wallace, born Oct. 18, 1872, married Herbert E. Handy, a native of Providence and a meat dealer, and they reside in North Providence.

Mr. Thurber was a staunch Republican. He served as a member of the town council of North Providence and was a member of the school committee. Both he and his wife not only retained a remarkable youthfulness of appearance, but also possessed the genial, happy disposition which made their home a center of hospitality and good feeling.

HENRY CLAY GORTON. Perhaps nowhere within these pages will be found biographical mention of an individual who more typically represents that citizenship which has made New England renowned the world over. Mr. Gorton is descended through a long line of eminent ancestry from several of the oldest of Rhode Island families. The Gortons, Greens and Tillinghasts will be found on every page of her history.

(I) Gov. Samuel Gorton, the first settler of Warwick, was born in England early in the seventeenth century and came to Boston in 1636. There he was a man of much renown, and so much of him has been written that mention here need be but brief. Because of religious differences he was imprisoned by those in control at that time, but was later released through the efforts of his very close friend the Earl of Warwick, and after his settlement in Rhode Island he acquired much land by purchase from the Indians. This tract was later given the name of Warwick in honor of the Earl. Mr. Gorton died "between Nov. 27 and Dec. 10, 1677"—the exact date has never been learned. He was a man of great intelligence and tenacity of purpose, and was the writer of a number of publications of religious character. He was the father of three sons, John, Samuel and Benjamin.

(II) Samuel Gorton, son of Samuel, married Elizabeth Green July 25, 1706, and died Aug. 21, 1723.

(II) Benjamin Gorton, son of Samuel (1), married Sarah Carter, daughter of Richard, Dec. 5, 1672.

(II) John Gorton, eldest son of Gov. Samuel, married Margaret Weston Jan. 25, 1665. He was a minister and was known as Elder John Gorton. His children were: Othniel, born Sept. 26, 1669; and Samuel, born July 22, 1672.

(III) Samuel Gorton, son of Elder John Gorton, born July 22, 1672, died June 5, 1721. On May 9, 1695, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Elijah Collins, who was a physician of Warwick. Mr. and Mrs. Gorton became the parents of children as follows: Ann, born Feb. 9, 1696; Edward, May 18, 1698; Margaret, May 12, 1701; Samuel, June 2, 1706; Alice, Aug. 5, 1707; Elizabeth, Sept. 26, 1709; Samuel (2), July 14, 1711; Thomas, March 2, 1713; Benjamin Dec. 11, 1715; Ann (2), May 22, 1718; and Richard, June 15, 1720.

(IV) Benjamin Gorton, son of Samuel, born Dec. 11, 1715, married Mercy Foster March 1, 1740, and died in 1767. He was a resident of West Greenwich. He was the father of Capt. Benjamin Gorton.

(V) Capt. Benjamin Gorton was born in West Greenwich, and died in 1799. On Feb. 19, 1762, he married Deborah Weaver, daughter of Benjamin Weaver, and he was the father of William and Gen. Thomas Gorton.

(VI) William Gorton, son of Benjamin and Deborah (Weaver) Gorton, was born in West Greenwich, and married Welthian, daughter of Judge Benjamin Tillinghast, who was then a large land holder of West Greenwich. Their children were: William, born Dec. 21, 1782; Sarah, born April 24, 1784, who married Elder James Tillinghast; Elizabeth, born March 1, 1785; Phebe, born Oct. 18, 1786, who married a Campbell; Tillinghast, born Sept. 23, 1787; and James S., born July 26, 1791.

(VII) Tillinghast Gorton, son of William and Welthian Gorton, was born in Voluntown, Conn., and was educated for the medical profession. Throughout his life he was known as "doctor," but owing to his rather delicate health he was never actually engaged in the practice of medicine. He devoted himself to farming and was more than ordinarily successful. He was also skilled in woodworking and made many articles of beauty and utility with the crude tools of the period. He was prominent in the town's affairs and among other official positions with which he was honored was that of town sealer, an office in which he rendered efficient service for many years. He died Jan. 1, 1860, and was laid to rest in the family burial ground at the homestead in West Greenwich. He married Charity Rathbun, who was born at Exeter, in 1785, daughter of John Rathbun.

(VIII) Benjamin Tillinghast Gorton, born in Exeter, R. I., Nov. 25, 1807, ran the gauntlet of the common schools of the period, and "as in today already walks tomorrow" so in the experience and development of his youthful life there were clear foreshadowings of the future. For a number of years he was a school teacher, in which profession his already active mind had ample exercise fitting him for the successful career which followed. He manifested a keen interest in military affairs and was a student of tactics, and in time, by reason of his fitness, he became brigadier-general of the 4th Brigade of Rhode Island Militia, in this capacity rendering a great and lasting service to his State. He detested war unless it was absolutely unavoidable, yet he believed in preparedness, and it was due in a measure to this quality in General Gorton that rendered possible the enviable record made by Rhode Island troops in later developments, many of them having been under the direct command of the General in time of peace. His qualities of leadership, his ability and his faculty of achievement led him into political paths, and he served his town as councilman, town sergeant, assessor of taxes, tax collector, school committeeman, and in various minor positions of trust. But it was as the representative from West Greenwich in the General Assembly that he rendered perhaps the greatest service. There, it is said of him, he exerted great influence and was an interesting speaker, forcible and decidedly natural, direct, lucid, and concentrative in his presentations. He was a man singularly sincere, honest and independent in personality, simple yet assertive, courtly yet devoid of all hauteur of manner, unassuming in his intercourse with men, shunning unnecessary publicity, but warm in his attachments to friends. He died May 8, 1886, and was buried in West Greenwich cemetery. His death was mourned by the entire community, each individual of which felt that he had lost an honest and sincere friend.

General Gorton was married, Feb. 16, 1837, to Alma Greene, who was born Jan. 3, 1817, daughter of Deacon Josiah and Elizabeth (Lewis) Greene, the former of whom descended from the first American settler, John Green, through Deacon Josiah, Rev. Stafford, Rev. Elisha, Esq. Philip, Lieut. John, Benjamin, and John of Wickford. Mrs. Gorton survived her husband several years, her death occurring March 27, 1889. Their children were: Abbie N., wife of William N. Sweet, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere; Jason T.; and Henry Clay.

(IX) Henry Clay Gorton was born Dec. 12, 1847, in West Greenwich. Reared in an atmosphere of refinement, learning and Christian standards, and having the advantages of the schools of his native community, he acquired a good English education, and, choosing a mercantile career, early in youth obtained a clerkship with John Burlingame, of Providence. There he applied himself closely, learning the rudiments of business, and not long afterward he purchased a small store on Carpenter street, in Providence. He built up the business so successfully that in a very short time he was able to dispose of it to his advantage. Returning to his native community, he engaged in business in Coventry for six or seven years, and was next associated with Benjamin Horton, at Washington village, in Coventry, until the death of Mr. Horton. Then he again took up his residence in Providence, entering the employ of the Spragues. In 1888 he established himself in his present location on Plainfield street. There he began business in a small way, transporting freight and passengers to and from Thornton, there being no other means of conveyance at that time. Seven horses were at first required, and the equipment was added to as the business increased and as Mr. Gorton's commercial lines were extended, so that he now has a large plant, and conducts a prosperous wood and coal business, also doing a livery business and general teaming. He has between thirty and forty horses, and vehicles of various sorts are housed in the ample stables. Mr. Gorton has achieved no small measure of success and he has deserved it, for it is the direct result of his own efforts, labor and careful management. He stands high in business circles.

On Oct. 30, 1872, Mr. Gorton married Miss Marsena Edith Tillinghast, daughter of Rev. John Tillinghast and sister of the late Chief Justice Pardon Tillinghast. They have a family of four children, of whom the eldest, Ada C., is now the wife of Dr. C. F. Atwood, of Arlington, Mass.; Wilfred Hays married May Winsor, daughter of Harrison Tillinghast Winsor, and they are residents of Los Angeles, Cal.; Stella Westcott and Avery Tillinghast are at home.

Mr. Gorton is a Republican and has been honored by election to numerous offices, all of which he has filled with credit to himself and to the entire satisfaction of his constituency. Prior to the annexation of the Olneyville section to the city he was a member of the Johnston town council, in which he rendered efficient service. In 1900 he was first elected a representative in the State Legislature, and was continued in that incumbency by most gratifying majorities until 1906. He is decidedly self-developed and self-made. Socially he is affable, genial, thoroughly a gentleman whom it is a delight to meet, whether the visitor be old friend or stranger. In speaking he is logical and entertaining, and as a business man he is straightforward, safe and reliable.

JASON T. GORTON, eldest son of Gen. Benjamin T. Gorton, was born Jan. 5, 1841, in West Greenwich, R. I. He was reared on the farm, but received educational advantages somewhat superior to those of the average country youth. He first attended the public schools and later a select private institution of learning, and when quite a young man he began teaching in the schools of Hopkinton, R. I., continuing in that vocation for some fourteen years, the last four in the town of Coventry. For more than twenty years Mr. Gorton was the station agent at Coventry, and during that long period faithfully performed every service and fulfilled every trust. During these years he purchased the farm upon which he now resides. In political faith he is independent and has been nominated for important town offices.

On Nov. 1, 1868, Mr. Gorton married Anna L., daughter of Charles Andrews, of the well known Andrews family of Vermont, who married Hannah Tillinghast, of Rhode Island. To Mr. and Mrs. Gorton were born the following children: (1) Mabel Hope is the wife of Lewis H. Rodebaugh, of Sacramento, Cal., traveling passenger agent for the Southern Pacific Railway Company, and has one child, Karl Dehaven. (2) Charles Tillinghast married Elizabeth Dow, of Pontiac, R. I., where they reside, and where Mr. Gorton is in the employ of B. B. & R. Knight. They have two children, Grace D. and Raymond T. (3) Frank Robinson, who resides at Anthony, married Flora Wood and they have two children, George Wood and Andrew Tillinghast. (4) Hannah Maud married Herman Reed, who is in the undertaking business at Anthony, R. I. (5) Lurana Andrews became the wife of Fred A. Hill, of Coventry, and they have one child, James Richard Gorton Hill, born Oct. 9, 1905.

Mrs. Anna L. (Andrews) Gorton died Oct. 5, 1905, and is buried at Knotty Oak cemetery, at Washington, R. I. Mrs. Gorton was for some years a teacher in the public schools of Rhode Island, and was well and most favorably known throughout a wide circle of acquaintances. She was a woman of high intellectual attainments, but though well advanced in literature, and a reader of the best authors, she was entirely devoted to her family and assisted to a great degree in their educational progress, rearing her children in an atmosphere of refinement and culture. She had early become a member of the Baptist Church and was of devout temperament. The family was for some years located in Providence, whither they removed in order to give the children the advantages of the superior educational facilities afforded in that place.

DRING. The name Dring belongs to an old and well-established family in New England, one now of nearly two hundred and fifty years' standing in and about the towns in both Rhode Island and Massachusetts close to the line separating the two States. Little Compton was the early home of the Dring family treated in this article, and Newport has for many years been the home of later generations of the family.

To this family belonged Thomas Dring, who was born Aug. 3, 1758, at Newport, and died Aug. 8, 1825, at Providence, R. I. He was evidently a seafaring man before or during the exciting times of the Revolution, as he was so engaged at the time of that great war, and at least twice was made a prisoner by the enemy. In his "Recollections of the Jersey Prison Ship," which were prepared in manuscript by him in 1824 and afterward arranged and edited for publication by Mr. Albert G. Greene, he says in part: "I was first immured in 1779 on board the 'Good Hope,' then lying in the North River, opposite New York, but after confinement of more than four months, I succeeded in making my escape to the Jersey shore. Afterward, in 1782, I was again captured and conveyed on board the 'Jersey,' where, for nearly five months I was a witness and partaker of the unspeakable sufferings of that wretched class of American prisoners, who were there taught the utmost extent of human misery. I sailed from Providence, R. I., in May, 1782, as master's mate, on board the privateer called the 'Chance.'

"This was a new vessel on her first cruise. She was owned in Providence by Clarke and Nightingale, commanded by Capt. Daniel Aborn and mounted with twelve six-pound cannon and sailed with a complement of about sixty-five men. Our cruise was but a short one, for in a few days after sailing we were captured by the British ship-of-war, the 'Belisarius,' Capt. Graves, of twenty-six guns."

Mate Dring went on to say that the capture was made in the night, that the captured crew, having been taken on board the enemy's ship, were put in irons the next morning, that they were later taken to the "Jersey," where the long and dreadful confinement began. Suffice it to add here that the "Jersey" was originally a British ship of the line, rated and registered as a sixty-four gun ship, but had mounted seventy-four guns. At the commencement of the Revolution, being an old vessel and proving to be much decayed, she was entirely dismantled and soon after was moored in the East river at New York and converted into a store-ship. In 1780 she was billed as a prison-ship and was used for that purpose during the remainder of the war. She was moored with chain cables at the Wall, about a solitary and unfrequented place on the shore of Long Island.

This prison-ship "Jersey" and the treatment of its prisoners, as set forth by the work alluded to, bore much akin to the horrors of the Southern prisons, Libby and Andersonville, during the Civil war. It has been estimated, the work alluded to goes on to say, that more than 10,000 died on board the "Jersey" and its three hospital ships. During the confinement of Captain Dring, according to his account, the vessel was never visited by any regular clergyman nor were divine services ever performed on her.

After being released from captivity Mate Dring entered the merchant service and soon attained command of a ship. He sailed from the port of Providence for many years and was well known as an able and experienced officer. In 1803 he retired from his nautical profession and soon after established himself in business at Providence, where he resided during the remainder of his life and died, as stated, in 1825.

Newport, R. I., is still the home of several descendants of this family, and it is of these descendants that it is the purpose of this article to treat. The genealogical record of the family will be here found, in chronological order.

The first authentic record of the Dring family in America opens in Little Compton, then a part of Massachusetts, but later of Rhode Island, where (I) Thomas Dring, who was born in 1666, is of record there as marrying May 21, 1696, Mary Butler, who was born in 1670, and their children of Little Compton town record were: John, born April 12, 1697; Mary, April 23, 1699 (died in May, 1786); Mercy, July 23, 1701; Thomas, April 23, 1704; Elizabeth, May 16, 1706; Nathaniel, April 17, 1707; Priscilla, March 8, 1709 (died June 8, 1709); Azariah, March 27, 1710; Ruth, Feb. 3, 1712; Bathsheba, Aug. 16, 1715 (died in March, 1790); and Frelove, March 1, 1720.

(II) Thomas Dring, son of Thomas and Mary (Butler) Dring, was born April 23, 1704, and married June 28, 1725, Sarah Searle, daughter of Nathaniel Searle, and a descendant of John Alden and Priscilla Mullins, of the "Mayflower." She was born April 2, 1700, and died Feb. 16, 1783. Their children were: Tabitha, born Oct. 22, 1726; Benjamin, Nov. 27, 1727; Philip, Sept. 7, 1730; Hannah, Sept. 14, 1732; Nathaniel, Sept. 4, 1734; Abigail, April 30, 1736; and Mary, in 1737 (died Oct. 18, 1822). The father of these children died April 16, 1787.

(III) Philip Dring, son of Thomas and Sarah (Searle) Dring, was born Sept. 7, 1730, and married Dec. 19, 1751, Ruth Stoddard, daughter of Jonathan and Mary (Dring) Stoddard. She was born Oct. 1, 1733, and died July 24, 1816. Their children were: Delany, born June 30, 1752, married Robert Woodworth; John born Dec. 15, 1754, died Nov. 5, 1775; Hannah, born Feb. 3, 1757, married Peter Holt; Philip, born April 23, 1759, died April 10, 1766; Nathaniel, born March 29, 1761, married Susanna Brownell (Nathaniel was a soldier of the Revolution and a pensioner for his services; he died at Newport in February, 1822; the census of 1840 proves that he was a pensioner, and that his widow, a pensioner, was a resident of Tiverton, and was there living with Thomas Dring, and was aged seventy-two years); Ruth, born June 26, 1763, died in 1766; Benjamin, born in 1765, died in 1766; Ruth (2), born April 18, 1767, married Ebenezer Clarke; Philip was born Aug. 29, 1769; Sarah Searle, born June 1, 1772, died April 13, 1859; John was born Nov. 4, 1775; Deborah was born March 22, 1777.

(IV) John Dring, son of Philip and Ruth (Stoddard) Dring, was born Nov. 4, 1775, in Little Compton, R. I., and died in Newport, July 17, 1855. In early life he followed the sea, but later became engaged in farming and teaming. He married Esther Perry, who was born in 1782, and died in Newport Aug. 20, 1820, a native of South Kingstown, R. I., daughter of Edward Perry. Their home was in Newport, where their children were born, as follows: Philip, born May 24, 1802, is mentioned further on; Abby Gardner, born Dec. 10, 1805, died unmarried, Oct. 28, 1898, at the age of almost ninety-three years; Charles Perry, born June 12, 1808, is mentioned elsewhere in these volumes; Mary, born Oct. 7, 1810, died unmarried, March 23, 1882; Ruth, born July 7, 1813, died unmarried, Jan. 16, 1855; Frances, born Oct. 1, 1815, died unmarried, April 15, 1839; Sarah, born Oct. 4, 1817, died April 15, 1818; and Harriet, born May 9, 1819, died Oct. 15, 1820.

(V) Philip Dring, son of John and Esther (Perry) Dring, was born May 24, 1802, in Newport, R. I., where he passed away Feb. 22, 1891. In early life he followed the water, but in after years took up farming and teaming, in which business occupations he continued throughout the remainder of his active life. In political faith he was a Republican, but never sought public office. He married Nancy Clarke, daughter of William P. and Mary (Rogers) Clarke, of Newport, a record of the Clarke family appearing elsewhere in these volumes. Mrs. Dring died in Newport in 1895, aged eighty-four years. To this union were born these children: Esther P., who married Rev. George R. Northrup, and now resides in Exeter, R. I., a widow; John, mentioned further on; William C., mentioned further on; Mary, now the widow of Michael Callahan, of Newport; and Robert Lawrence, mentioned further on.

(VI) JOHN DRING, son of Philip and Nancy (Clarke) Dring, was born Feb. 29, 1836, in Newport, and received his education in the schools of his native city. At the age of twelve years he left school and for five years was engaged in selling newspapers, but when seventeen years old took up farming and for two seasons was employed by James Allen. He then leased ten acres of land at the corner of Broadway and Calvert streets, upon which he continued farming until 1886. On Dec.

2d, of the latter named year, Mr. Dring purchased a farm in Middletown, consisting of forty-three acres, known as the Christopher Sweet farm, and under his care and supervision it has been kept in a first-class state of cultivation. In the early part of his career as a farmer he was largely engaged in raising and dealing in cattle, and he has also been extensively identified with dairying interests, keeping from twenty-five to thirty cows; he has been serving his customers in Newport with the product of his dairy continuously since 1852, a period of over fifty-five years.

On Sept. 25, 1856, Mr. Dring was married to Bridget Lenahan, of Newport, in which city she passed away Feb. 9, 1871, the mother of ten children, three of whom died in infancy: Mary Ann, born Sept. 25, 1857, married Walter Burgess, of Providence; Philip, born Nov. 28, 1858, resides in Middletown, where he is engaged in farming (he married Mary Lydon, of New York); Sylvester, born Jan. 29, 1860, is an iron molder by trade, and lives in Fall River, Mass. (he married Dora Rawson, of Woonsocket, R. I.); John, born Feb. 14, 1863, is the senior member of the firm of Dring & Smith, painters and dealers in painters' supplies of Newport, and is married to Rosine Plumaz, of Switzerland; Walter, born Nov. 22, 1864, a carpenter and builder of Newport, married Margaret Ring, of this city; James, born Jan. 29, 1866, a painter by trade, married Katie Murphy, of Newport; and Joseph, born May 1, 1869, engaged in farming with his father, is unmarried. Mr. John Dring was married (second) Nov. 13, 1873, to Mary Riley, of Newport, in which city she died Feb. 10, 1902. One daughter was born to this union, Ellen, born Sept. 11, 1874, who resides at home, unmarried.

Mr. Dring is a very industrious, energetic man, and the success which is his has been attained through his thrift, pluck and business ability. In political faith he is a Republican, but he has never sought public office.

(VI) WILLIAM CLARKE DRING, son of Philip and Nancy (Clarke) Dring, was born April 24, 1841, in Newport. After attending the public schools of his native city, at the age of sixteen years he took up gardening as an occupation, and he followed that for some two or three years on the estate of the late Robert Morgan Gibbs. For the next four years he was engaged in landscape gardening on his own account, during which time he gave employment to several hands, and in June, 1871, he was appointed a member of the police force of Newport, efficiently serving the city in that capacity for a period of thirty years. In 1901 he was retired and placed on the pension list, on account of disability. He has since lived retired. After serving two years on the force Mr. Dring was promoted to sergeant, but after serving as such for a short time he gave up that position to become a day patrolman, and in that capacity served until his retirement.

Mr. Dring is a member of the Masonic organization, holding membership in St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; Newport Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M.; DeBlois Council, No. 5, R. & S. M., and Washington Commandery, No. 4, K. T., of Newport. For a number of years he was also a member of the Knights of Honor. In political faith Mr. Dring is a staunch Republican. He is an attendant of the United Congregational Church.

On Oct. 12, 1863, Mr. Dring married Janette Grindel, of Newport, daughter of Thomas Grindel. She passed away in Newport Oct. 19, 1900, at the age of sixty-four years. To Mr. and Mrs. Dring were born children as follows: William Alexander, who is a cabinet-maker by trade, unmarried; Mary Jeannette, who married Joseph Pearson, a carpenter by trade, and has one son, Russell Hilton; and Elizabeth Anna, who makes her home with her father, and is unmarried.

(VI) ROBERT LAWRENCE DRING, son of Philip and Nancy (Clarke) Dring, was born July 17, 1851, in Newport. His book learning was acquired in the common schools of his native city, which he attended until reaching the age of fifteen years. After leaving school he became apprenticed to the carpenter's trade with his uncle, James Clarke, and he remained in this gentleman's employ for thirteen years, during which time he served as foreman for several years. In 1887 Mr. Dring engaged in the carpentering business on his own account, and for about three years had as a partner in the business Benjamin Oman, but since this time has been engaged in business on his own account. Besides doing a general jobbing business, Mr. Dring makes a specialty of building fences of all kinds.

In politics Mr. Dring is a Republican. He attends the First Baptist Church, of Newport. Mr. Dring was married Nov. 5, 1885, to Fannie Wool, daughter of William Wool. No children were born to this union. Mrs. Dring passed away in Newport, Dec. 10, 1905, aged forty-nine years.

HON. WALTER F. BRAYTON, formerly State senator, and a well-known farmer and market gardener of Oak Lawn, in the town of Cranston, has been regarded for many years as one of the most useful citizens of his section of the State. He is a native of the town, and a descendant of one of the old families of New England, his line from Francis Brayton being through Francis (2), Thomas, Thomas (2), Jonathan, Lodowick and Nehemiah Brayton.

Nehemiah Brayton, the father of Walter F. Brayton, was born April 21, 1820, and made his home in the town of Cranston. On Sept. 26, 1852, he married Lydia Sarle, who was born Feb. 17, 1822, and died Jan. 17, 1864. They became the parents of three children, namely: Anna Viola, born June 13, 1853, who married Charles T. Armstrong; Evelyn Amelia, born Jan. 22, 1856, who resides with her brother at Oak Lawn; and Walter Francis, born Aug. 8, 1857. Nehemiah Brayton for his second wife married Mrs. Hannah (Johnson) Briggs, who survived him and died Aug. 5, 1905. Mr. Brayton died Jan. 9, 1889.

Walter Francis Brayton was born Aug. 8, 1857, in the town of Cranston, and there received his early education in the public schools, also attending the famous Friends' School, in Providence. Since commencing work he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits, making a specialty of market gardening. His home and farm are at Oak Lawn, and his greenhouse is one of the largest in that section. Mr. Brayton finds a ready market for his produce in Providence. His operations are conducted on an extensive scale, and his methods are characterized by the most approved and progressive ideas of the day in his line.

Mr. Brayton has been quite prominent in the Republican party and in the public affairs of his locality for a number of years. In 1889 he was elected to the lower house of the State Legislature, in which body he served continuously until 1893. In 1897 he was returned to the Legislature, serving as representative until the year 1900, when he was elected to the State Senate. He served in the latter office for two years, one of them being the last year the session was held in the old State house. During his service in the lower house he did important committee work, being a member of the committees on Finance, Executive Communications, Acts and Elections, and chairman of the committee on State Charities and Corrections. While in the Senate he was a member of the committees on State Charities and Corrections and State Property. His interest in public questions is continuous, and nothing concerning the welfare of his own town is too trivial to receive his earnest attention.

In 1885 Mr. Brayton was married to Harriet F. Briggs, who was born June 11, 1850, in Cranston, daughter of Willett R. and Hannah (Johnson) Briggs. The latter became the second wife of Nehemiah Brayton. Mrs. Brayton died at her home at Oak Lawn Nov. 17, 1906, and was buried in the Pocasset cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Brayton had one child, Robert Manchester, born June 21, 1886, who graduated from the Moses Brown school, and Bryant & Stratton Business College, and is now a clerk in the Industrial Trust Company, Providence. Mrs. Brayton was a member of the Baptist Church of Oak Lawn, of which Mr. Brayton has been a prominent member for many years, being one of the most active workers in that organization. For over fifteen years he has been superintendent of the Sunday-school and for many years he has filled the office of deacon, his services in every office being very acceptable. Mr. Brayton is a man of genial disposition, and his personal popularity has been a substantial factor in his influence in the community, which has been established in years of effective work for the public good.

PECKHAM. In the agricultural circles of Newport county, and particularly on "the Island," none have been more conspicuous or progressive or industrious than the late Benjamin Peckham and his sons, of whom this article is to especially treat. They are descendants of one of Newport's earliest settled families, being in the direct line from John Peckham, the emigrant ancestor of the family, who was admitted an inhabitant of Newport, R. I., in 1638. The ancestry of this branch of the family follows in chronological order, the Roman numerals indicating the different generations.

(I) John Peckham, of Newport, 1638.

(II) John Peckham (2), son of John, born about 1645.

(III) Isaac Peckham, son of John (2), born April 11, 1688.

(IV) Benjamin Peckham, son of Isaac, born Oct. 19, 1717, lived in Middletown and Newport, R. I. He married Virtue, daughter of Daniel and Mary (Sherman) Shepard, of Little Compton, and died in 1783. His children were: Martha, born Jan. 19, 1746; Richard, Aug. 22, 1747; Ruth, Oct. 14, 1749; Mary, June 10, 1751; Benjamin, Feb. 12, 1753; Isaac, March 29, 1755; Daniel, Feb. 20, 1758; Clement; Barbara, Feb. 7, 1761; Virtue, Feb. 7, 1761; Rhoda, Feb. 7, 1761 (died that same day).

(V) Richard Peckham, son of Benjamin, born Aug. 22, 1747, married Elizabeth Clarke, born May 31, 1747, and they were residents of Middletown, R. I., where their children of town record were: Isaac, born March 30, 1773; Barbara, Oct. 29, 1774; Arnold, April 27, 1776; Daniel, Aug. 20, 1778; Benjamin; Martha, May 5, 1782; Mary T., Dec. 3, 1784; Clement, April 18, 1786; Henry, Aug. 27, 1788; Richard, July 31, 1791.

(VI) Benjamin Peckham, son of Richard, was born April 18, 1780, in Middletown, and died in Portsmouth, R. I., where he had been engaged in farming. He was married twice, his first wife being Frances Sisson, daughter of Richard Sisson, of Portsmouth. He married (second) Feb. 14, 1830, Mercy Manchester, of Portsmouth, who was born Sept. 19, 1785, and died Nov. 6, 1874, aged eighty-nine years. Mr. Peckham died Jan. 13, 1852, in the seventy-second year of his age. His children, all of whom were born to the first marriage, were: Benjamin; Ann Sisson, born Aug. 4, 1803, who married Arnold Braman; Frances, born Dec. 4, 1804, who died young; Sarah, who married William Popple; and Jane, who married (first) William Jones Williams and (second) Capt. Richard Corrigan.

(VII) Benjamin Peckham (2), son of Benjamin, was born in Portsmouth, R. I., and received his education in the schools of that place. He was reared to farm work, and for a number of years was employed on the farm of "Shepherd" Thomas R. Hazard, of whose landed interests Mr. Peckham had charge. Later in life, about in 1860, Mr. Peckham became the farmer on the late Edward King's estate on Harrison avenue, Newport, and he continued in this capacity until his death, which occurred in Newport Aug. 13, 1879, at the age of sixty-two years, eleven months, sixteen days. Mr. Peckham possessed a genial, kindly nature which won for him hosts of friends. He was very industrious, and however small or trivial the duty it was never shirked. Although a member of no particular church organization, Mr. Peckham was a true Christian, and attended the Baptist Church, to which he gave liberally. In political matters he was a stalwart Republican, but he never cared for public office.

Mr. Peckham was married to Johanna Taylor, daughter of Lawton and Mary Taylor, and she died in Newport Jan. 2, 1886, aged sixty-seven years, five months, fourteen days. To this union were born children as follows: Alanson, who was engaged up to the time of his death in farming in Portsmouth, married Lydia A. Battey, of Newport; Joseph D. is mentioned below; Fannie, who married George Potter, died in Newport; Mary, who married Henry Tew, also of Newport, died in that city; Phebe Ann, who married Dr. Walter Mott, of Saratoga, N. Y., died in that city; Martha, who married (first) George Peckham, of Middletown, and (second) Thomas J. Potter of Newport, resides in the latter city; Jesse E. is mentioned below; Edward, who is engaged in farming in Newport, married Nellie Dempsey; Leila, who married Joseph R. West, resides in Newport; George Henry died in infancy.

(VIII) JOSEPH DENNIS PECKHAM, second son of Benjamin (2), was born July 4, 1837, in Portsmouth, R. I., and received his early educational training in the common schools of that city, later attending the common schools of Westport, Mass., to which town his parents had removed. On leaving school, at the age of fifteen years, Mr. Peckham became engaged in farming with his father, continuing in his employ until his marriage, at which time he accepted the position of foreman of the late Edward King's farm in Portsmouth, in which capacity he served very efficiently for several years. In 1869, on leaving the employ of Mr. King, Mr. Peckham located in Newport and took up his residence on the Battey farm, owned by his father-in-law, upon which place he has since resided, engaged in agricultural pursuits. He has also engaged extensively in dairying, and in this connection keeps from twelve to fifteen cows. Mr. Peckham and his wife are attendants of the Thames Street Methodist Episcopal Church of Newport. Mr. Peckham is a Republican in politics, but has always preferred to give his entire attention to his farm duties and his spare time to his home.

On Dec. 24, 1867 Mr. Peckham was united in marriage to Miss Mariah L. Battey, daughter of John T. and Hannah W. (Peckham) Battey, of Newport, and to this union were born three children, as follows: Annie L., at home, unmarried; Clara B., also at home, unmarried; and Frank Howard, who died at the age of three years and eight months.

(VIII) JESSE ERASTUS PECKHAM, son of Benjamin (2), was born at Little Compton, R. I., July 17, 1853. His early educational training was received in the public schools of Newport, to which city his parents had removed when he was about six years of age. After leaving school, at the age of fourteen years, he became engaged in farming under his father, on the Edward King estate on Harrison avenue, Newport, and there he has since remained. In 1879, at the time of his father's death, Mr. Peckham was made manager of this farm, which now comprises about 100 acres of most excellent land. The place originally contained 300 acres, but the larger portion of the estate was purchased by the Newport Golf Club and for summer cottages. In connection with the cultivation of this farm Mr. Peckham is also extensively engaged in dairying keeping an average of from twenty-five to thirty cows, the product from which he supplies to customers in Newport, daily. Mr. Peckham is a thrifty, energetic and progressive agriculturist, and he is considered one of the well-to-do men of this section.

In political matters Mr. Peckham is a Republican, but he has never aspired to public office. He attends the Thames Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a consistent member, taking an active part in the work of the body. On Jan. 7, 1902, Mr. Peckham was united in marriage to Mary Alice Anthony, daughter of the late Benjamin M. and Mary Elizabeth (Peckham) Anthony, of Newport. No children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Peckham.

ATKINSON (Newport family). The name Atkinson is an ancient one in both England and New England. One Theodore Atkinson, a felt maker, from Bury, in Lancashire, came to New England about 1634 and in the following year united with the church in Boston. He became a freeman in 1642. His children were: John, of Newbury; Theodore; Nathaniel, who was graduated from Harvard College in 1667; Thomas and Abigail. Then, there was a Thomas Atkinson at Concord in 1636, and a Thomas Atkinson at Plymouth in 1638. It is stated by one who has written of the Atkinsons that from the first Theodore Atkinson have descended the Atkinsons of New England traceable to the early stock. This emigrant was the owner of a good estate in Boston. Atkinson street there was named for him, and Bury street for the place of his nativity.

Here in Rhode Island, at Newport, the Atkinson family has been a continuous one for one hundred and fifty years or more; here have lived through much of that period some of the posterity of James and Mary (Botkin) Atkinson, the marriage of this couple having taken place Sept. 26, 1773, it being of Trinity Church record, Newport, where there is also a record of the baptism of James and John Botkin Atkinson Nov. 6, 1774, and Nov. 29, 1776, respectively, these being probably the children of the couple named, whose other children designated as such when baptized were: Sarah Ann, born Feb. 20, 1779; Mary, Jan. 12, 1781; and Susanna, July 20, 1783, all of whom were baptized July 18, 1787.

Capt. John Botkin Atkinson was commissioned captain of the Fourth Newport Company of the First Regiment of Rhode Island Militia in May, 1804. The Christian name of his wife was Rachel.

JAMES ATKINSON, son of Capt. John B. and Rachel, was born Jan. 30, 1804, in Newport, R. I., and died there June 12, 1879, aged seventy-five years, four months and thirteen days. After attending for a few years one of the old-fashioned schools of that day his tastes led him to choose the printer's trade for an occupation, and accordingly he was apprenticed to William Simons, then publisher of the Rhode Island Republican, one of the contemporaries of the Mercury; and for a period after completing his term of apprenticeship he continued in its pursuit. Later on, however, he concluded to engage in business for himself, and accordingly he began the publication of what he styled the Herald of the Times, which he made decidedly a Whig paper and continued until 1844 or 1845. At this time the publisher of the Rhode Island Republican died and the paper was bought by Mr. Atkinson. He consolidated the two papers, continuing the consolidated paper as Whig in politics. This paper was published by Mr. Atkinson until 1847, when he disposed of it and removed to Lowell, Mass., at which point he purchased the Lowell Daily Courier and Weekly Journal, which he continued publishing for two or three years as a Democratic sheet. This venture not proving a successful one he sold the paper in 1850 and returned to Newport, Rhode Island.

During his residence in Lowell the Newport Weekly Advertiser had been started by Mr. George C. Mason, and soon after Mr. Atkinson's return to Newport he purchased this paper and continued its publication for a number of years, as Democratic in politics; and for a period a daily edition was also issued. Later he discontinued the paper and from that time on through his active business life he continued in Newport uninterruptedly the business of book and job printing. His neatness and methods were almost proverbial, and this, with his general good qualities and reliableness, brought to him as patrons many of the best citizens of the city and town.

As a journalist Mr. Atkinson belonged to the earlier school, to whom the enterprise and sensationalism of the modern newspaper were unknown. In 1856 President Buchanan appointed Mr. Atkinson postmaster of Newport, the duties of which office he very acceptably performed through the Buchanan administration until 1860, giving way then to his successor, the late Mr. Thomas Coggeshall, who was still in the office at the time of Mr. Atkinson's death. Mr. Atkinson in 1865-66 represented Newport in the General Assembly of Rhode Island. In 1869 he was made chief magistrate of Newport, and was continued as mayor by four consecutive elections with but little opposition, making five years' service in all, during which period he discharged the duties of his high office in a most conscientious and faithful manner, retiring from office with the full respect of his fellow citizens—a thing few men have successfully done.

During his long life Mr. Atkinson was a regular and constant attendant upon the services of the Episcopal Church. Excluding the time he was absent from Newport in Lowell, he served for forty-four years as clerk and vestryman of the corporation of Zion Church, his service dating back to the organization of the parish. He was a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., and he was especially prominent in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was past grand of Rhode Island Lodge, No. 12, of Newport, and had held important positions in the Grand Lodge of the State. He was interested in everything that pertained to the welfare of the fraternity and did much to establish and maintain successfully the order in Newport.

It goes almost without saying that Mr. Atkinson was a man of blameless character and life, and left a record unsullied. He was a man true to his convictions, though his allegiance to what he believed was true often resulted in pecuniary loss. He was conscientious in the discharge of duty, and rendered to every man his just due. To his family he was kind and faithful; in his public life he was an honest and upright citizen.

Mr. Atkinson married Elizabeth Webster, who was born in Newport, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Webster) Marsh, and died in Newport Aug. 20, 1876, aged seventy-one years, four months and twenty days. One son blessed this union, Eugene Webster Atkinson, who learned the printer's trade under his father and has followed that business practically all his life. During his father's administration as postmaster of Newport Mr. Atkinson served as assistant postmaster. He also served several years as deputy sheriff of Newport.

On April 19, 1858, Eugene W. Atkinson was united in marriage to Amanda Franklin, only daughter of the late Thomas Tillinghast and Jane (Stewart) Franklin, of Newport. A history of the Franklin family appears elsewhere in these volumes. To Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson has been born one daughter, Jennie Franklin, who married George H. Carr, of Newport, where he is engaged in the book and stationery business. They have one son, Chester Franklin Carr.

SAMUEL MCADAM. For many years the gentleman whose name introduces this review was successfully engaged in the plumbing business in Newport, but has laid down the reins of active business and is now enjoying the fruits of his labors. He was born in the town of Castle Douglas, Kirkcudbrightshire, Scotland, March 5, 1837, and at the age of fourteen years accompanied the family to America.

John McAdam, the father of Samuel McAdam, was born in Scotland, in 1801. In his native country he was engaged in the hotel business. He came to America in 1848, and became the butler in the home of the late William Shepard Wetmore, Esq., father of United States Senator George Peabody Wetmore, in Newport in 1853, remaining in his employ for a number of years. Later he removed to St. Clair, Mich., where he lived on a farm near several of his children until his death, which occurred in 1874, when he was aged seventy-three years. He married in Scotland Annie McTaggart, who died in Michigan in 1877. To Mr. and Mrs. McAdam were born children as follows: George, who was a clerk, and died in Cowesett, R. I.; Alexander Gordon, a farmer, who died in Canada; John, who died in infancy; Elizabeth, who married (first) Capt. William H. Johnston, and (second), Alexander Thompson, a farmer of Michigan, where she now resides, a widow; John (2), who died in infancy; Agnes, who married Peter K. Wilson, a large importer of laces in New York City, where she died; Samuel our subject; James R., who is engaged in the photographic supply business in Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mary, who married J. G. Thompson, of Detroit, Mich., where they now reside; Thomas, who is engaged in the insurance business in Vancouver, British Columbia; and Menzies, who was a school teacher for many years in New York, where she died in 1898.

Samuel McAdam was born, as stated, in Scotland, March 5, 1837, and received his early education in the public schools of his native land, leaving same when fourteen years of age. He then, in 1851, sailed from Liverpool, England, for America in company with his mother and the other children, on the sailing vessel "Martha J. Ward," and after a pleasant voyage of twenty-seven days arrived in New York, where they joined the husband and father. Young McAdam attended the public schools of New York City until he was sixteen years of age, when, upon the removal of his father to Newport, he became apprenticed to Nathan M. Chafee, in the plumbing business, at the corner of Thames and Prospect Hill streets, continuing in his employ until February, 1866, when Mr. McAdam was made a partner in the business, the firm then becoming N. M. Chafee & Co. This partnership lasted until November, 1867, when, upon the death of Mr. Chafee, Mr. McAdam continued alone in the business for a short time, until he took into partnership with him James Openshaw, the firm then becoming McAdam & Openshaw. They shortly thereafter removed their business to Nos. 6 and 8 Mill street, where it is still conducted by the heirs of the late James Openshaw. The firm of McAdam & Openshaw carried on the plumbing business successfully for a period of eighteen years, until February, 1886, when Mr. McAdam sold out his interest in same to Mr. Openshaw and since that time he has not been actively interested in any business enterprises.

Mr. McAdam is a staunch adherent of the principles of the Republican party, and as such has served the city of Newport as a member of the board of aldermen for one term. In 1889 he was appointed, by the late mayor of the city, Thomas Coggeshall, one of the first license commissioners, the commission being composed of Harwood E. Read, Samuel McAdam and Stephen P. Slocum. Mr. McAdam remained a member of the said commission until 1893, when he was appointed collector of taxes by the city council, serving the city of Newport in that capacity for a period of five consecutive years.

Mr. McAdam is a consistent member of the United Congregational Church, and has served as deacon of the same continuously since 1877; he was treasurer of the church for fourteen years, was assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school for several years, and also served as moderator of the Church Society for eleven years. Mr. McAdam is a life member of the Newport Historical Society, with which he has been identified for several years. He has served continuously since 1882 as a director of the Aquidneck National Bank, of Newport, and in 1907 was elected to the office of vice-president of this financial institution.

On Sept. 29, 1857, Mr. McAdam was united in marriage to Margaret C. McTaggart, who was born at Gatehouse, Kirkcudbrightshire, Scotland, the daughter of James McTaggart, of Scotland. She has borne him the following children: (1) James was for some time associated with his father in the plumbing business, later as assistant collector of taxes, and is now bookkeeper for Edward W. Openshaw, the plumber. He is unmarried, and resides at home. (2) John Samuel, who graduated from the Rogers high school of Newport, later from Princeton College, and finally from the Columbia Law School, is now associated in business with The Lawyers' Title Insurance Company, of New York. He married Miss Anna Hazard Crandall, daughter of the late William E. Crandall, of Newport, and to this union have been born children—Roger Williams and John and William, twins. (3) Elizabeth M. died aged eleven months. (4) Gordon, died aged eight years. (5) Thomas died in infancy. (6) William Gordon died at the age of two years.

Samuel M. Adams

From 1845, age 22, 50 years

By displaying straightforwardness in his business dealings, combined with thrift and energy, characteristics he inherited from his ancestors, Mr. McAdam has earned well-merited success, and as a result is now, in the evening of his well-spent life, enabled to enjoy deserved rest from labor in ease and comfort. As a valuable citizen of Newport he holds the esteem and respect of the entire community.

FRANKLIN METCALF, who passed away Jan. 28, 1908, was the treasurer and one of the founders of the Carolina Mills Company, at Carolina, R. I., and one of the well-known and successful woolen manufacturers of Rhode Island.

Mr. Metcalf came from one of the prominent families of the State, and one of the oldest in New England. Since early in the eighteenth century the Metcalf name has been a continuous one in Providence. One Eleazer Metcalf, of the Dedham (Mass.) family, came hither not far from 1737-38; and later came others of that same stock. Say the vital records of Rhode Island: Joel and Lucy (Gay) Metcalf, of Attleboro birth, located in Providence in 1780. From this latter family have come some of the State's most capable, enterprising and successful business men, the earlier generations being tanners and leather merchants, and later generations extensive manufacturers. Such names as the two Joels, Jesse, Joseph G., Col. Edwin, Maj. George, Alfred, Franklin, Jesse H. and Stephen O. Metcalf are prominently interwoven with the State's history. We have the following record of the early generations:

(I) Michael Metcalf, born in 1586, in Tatterford, County of Norfolk, England, was by occupation at Norwich a dornock weaver. He was made a freeman there in 1618. He married Oct. 13, 1616, in Waynham, Sarah, who was born June 17, 1593. Mr. Metcalf, with his wife and their eight or nine children, came to New England in 1637. The father was admitted a freeman at Dedham, July 14, 1637, and joined the church in 1639. He was selectman in 1641. He states that he came to New England owing to religious persecution. His wife, Sarah, died Nov. 30, 1644, and he married (second) Aug. 13, 1645, Mrs. Mary Pidge, a widow, of Roxbury. Mr. Metcalf died Dec. 27, 1664. His children, all born in Norwich, England, were: Michael, born Nov. 13, 1617; Mary, Oct. 14, 1618 (or Feb. 14, 1619); Michael (2), Aug. 29, 1620; John, Sept. 5 (or 15), 1622; Sarah, Sept. 10, 1624; Elizabeth, Oct. 4, 1626; Martha, March (or Oct.) 27, 1628; Thomas, Dec. 27, 1629 (or 1630); Ann, March 1, 1632; Jane, March 24, 1634; and Rebecca, April 5, 1635.

(II) Michael Metcalf (2), born Aug. 29, 1620, married April 21, 1644, Mary, daughter of John Fairbanks, Sr. Mr. Metcalf died in Dedham Dec.

24, 1654. His children were: Michael, born in 1645; Mary, born in 1646; Sarah, born in 1648; Jonathan, born in 1650; and Eleazer, born in 1653.

(III) Jonathan Metcalf, born Sept. 21, 1650, married April 10, 1674, Hannah, daughter of John Kenric. They died, he on May 27, 1727, she on Dec. 23, 1731. Their children were: Jonathan, born in 1675; John, born in 1678; Ebenezer, born in 1680; Joseph, born in 1682; Timothy, born in 1684; Eleazer, born in 1687; Hannah, born in 1689; Nathaniel, born in 1691; Mehetabel; and Mary.

(IV) John Metcalf, born March 20, 1678, married (first) April 29, 1701, Mehetabel Savels, of Braintree. She died March 30, 1712, aged twenty-nine years, and he married (second) Feb. 12, 1713, Bethiah Savels. She died May 22, 1717, aged thirty-five years, and he married (third) Oct. 25, 1718, Grace Williams, of Roxbury, who died Nov. 11, 1749, aged sixty-one years. His children were: John, born March 31, 1704; Eleazer, born Aug. 21, 1706; Timothy, born Dec. 11, 1707; Joseph, born May 11, 1710; twins, born in 1712, who died that year with the mother; Jonathan, born May 4, 1714; Bethiah, born Dec. 31, 1715; a child, born in 1717, who died that year with the mother; Katherine, born in 1719; Katherine (2), born in 1721; Mehetabel, born in 1723; Sarah, born in 1725; Timothy, born in 1728; Timothy (2), born in 1730; Grace, born in 1732; Stephen, born in 1732; and a son, born in 1734.

(V) Eleazer Metcalf, son of John, born Aug. 21, 1706, married March 24, 1736-37, Martha Turkin, and their children were: William, John, Mehetabel, Martha and V. Katherine. [Arnold's Vital Statistics of Providence County show that William and John were born Feb. 3, 1737-38, and July 18, 1739, respectively.]

(VI) William Metcalf, born Feb. 3, 1737-38, married Dec. 13, 1761, Anna Hopkins, daughter of Capt. John and Catherine (Turpin) Hopkins, the former of whom was a brother of Gov. Stephen Hopkins and a descendant of Thomas Hopkins (who came from England and was many times a deputy from Providence beginning with 1652), his lineage being through William and Maj. William Hopkins. A daughter of the above marriage married Alfred Mann, and had among other children William Metcalf Mann, who was one of the editors of the Providence American, and died March 2, 1817, in his twenty-third year.

(IV) Nathaniel Metcalf, son of Jonathan, of Dedham, Mass., born April 17 (or 22), 1691, married Feb. 13 (or 17), 1713, Mary Gay. He died March 15, 1752. Children: Mary married Joseph Fisher; Nathaniel married Ruth Whiting; Hannah married Samuel Richards; Sarah married Israel Everett; Margaret married Stephen Fales; Mercy died unmarried, when seventy-seven years old; Ebenezer married Elizabeth Stanley; Lydia married Timothy Fisher.

(V) Nathaniel Metcalf, son of Nathaniel, born Aug. 29, 1718, died May 3, 1789. He married Ruth Whiting, of Attleboro, Mass., and they had children: Nathaniel, of Providence, who died unmarried at the age of thirty; Ebenezer, of Cumberland; Michael, of Providence, who married Molly Gay; Joel, of Attleboro and Providence; Jesse; Samuel; Lucy; Catharine, who married Philip Ellis; Ruth, who married Elisha May; Luoy, who married Benjamin Pidge, of Dighton; Sarah, who married Amos Ide, of Attleboro; and Molly.

(VI) Joel Metcalf, son of Nathaniel and Ruth, was born Nov. 4, 1755, in Attleboro, Mass. He marry Lucy Gay, also born in Attleboro, Oct. 3, 1759, their marriage (of Providence, R. I., record) being solemnized Dec. 9, 1779. Lucy Gay was the daughter of Jabez and Hannah (Bradford) Gay. They removed from Attleboro to Providence (say the Providence records) on the 4th of February, 1780, and in 1798 resided with their family at what was, in 1858, Nos. 64 and 66 Benefit street. Mr. Metcalf was a leather dresser and currier, and carried on an extensive business, at first in company with his brother Michael, and afterward on his own account, in a wooden building on Mill street. He was a hard-working, industrious, honest mechanic, and no better citizen walked the streets of Providence. He was a stern Democrat, of the Jeffersonian school, and his name may be found among the fifty-six freemen who voted the Democratic ticket when Jefferson came into power. Though his education was limited and his politics unpopular in Providence, such was the general confidence in the uprightness of his intentions and his strong common sense that his fellow citizens elected him for many years a member of their town council. They also elected him a member of the school committee for twenty-two years in succession, during which time he was present at every examination of the public schools. He was among the first and foremost in favor of public schools, and that his interest in them was real appears from the fact just noted, that he gave his personal attendance at upward of eighty successive examinations. When his party came into power in the State he was elected a judge of the court of Common Pleas for the county of Providence.

Mr. Metcalf was the father of a large family, four sons and six daughters, and the sterling worth of the man is reflected in the fact that the children have been honored and respected for their own merits. Among the daughters Betsey, who married Mr. Obed Baker, of West Dedham, Mass., is conceded by all to have been the first braider of straw in the United States. Seeing an imported Dunstable straw bonnet in the window of the store of Col. John Whipple, she determined to have a Dunstable bonnet and commenced experimenting with some oat straw that her father had harvested that year. She commenced making the first experiments June 1, 1798. She began braiding first with six straws and then with seven, and finally found, after much discouragement from friends and encouragement from an aunt in the family, that she was able to imitate perfectly the imported braid. She says, "The first bonnet I made was of seven braid, with bobbin put in like open work, and lined with pink satin. This was very much admired and hundreds, I should think, came to see it." She visited Dedham and taught them there, also in Wrentham and Providence, R. I., and had quite a factory, which was run for some time in Providence. After her marriage she lived in Dedham, and formed there a small society of ladies who, from their braidings at regular monthly meetings, were enabled to contribute more than $1,000 to the cause of missions among the Indians in this country. She was a most devout woman, and is said to have read her Bible through nearly a score of times, reading it aloud to her husband after he had retired. She was also most charitable. It is said of her that so careful was she of her time that she would keep up her knitting while going to visit a neighbor. She also says of herself that she nearly defrayed her own expenses by braiding in the stage, while traveling from Dedham to Providence. She reared a large family of excellent sons and daughters.

We have the following record of the children of Joel and Lucy (Gay) Metcalf: Katy, born Sept. 27, 1780; Lucy, born March 31, 1782; Sophia, born June 24, 1784; Betsey, born March 29, 1786; Lucy (2), born March 26, 1788; Jesse, born May 15, 1790; Joel, born Aug. 2, 1792; Ruth, born July 31, 1794; Joseph Gay, born Dec. 9, 1796; and Whiting, born April 22, 1799.

(VII) Jesse Metcalf, born May 15, 1790, son of Joel, died June 20, 1838. He was married April 19, 1812, to Eunice D. Houghton, daughter of John. She died May 5, 1858. Their children were born as follows: Sophia, Aug. 17, 1813; Emily, June 29, 1815; Ellen, June 28, 1817 (married Edwin A. Bush and had Jesse M. and Charles S.); Evelina, June 30, 1820 (married George Hunt, and had Ellen G., who lives at No. 119 Prospect street, Providence, and Mary Eva, widow of Andrew Ingraham); Matilda, April 7, 1822 (she gave her life to the building up of the Free Chapel on Benefit street, now Olney Street Church); Jesse, Dec. 14, 1824; Jesse (2), March 4, 1827 (mentioned elsewhere); Lucy Gay, Oct. 1, 1829 (living); Franklin, June 3, 1832 (late of Carolina, R. I., mentioned below); Emily, May 19, 1837 (mentioned elsewhere).

(VIII) Franklin Metcalf was born June 3, 1832, in Providence, R. I., and in that city spent his boyhood days. He attended the schools of his native city until about the age of sixteen, when he left high school to accept a position as clerk for Truman Beckwith, with whom he remained about four and one half years. Following this he was clerking for Moses B. Lockwood in Providence, and later was in the South for a time, buying cotton. He subsequently returned to Rhode Island, and for about six years was in the employ of Steere & Tinkham, woolen manufacturers, of Burrillville. In the early part of 1869 Mr. Metcalf, with Ellison Tinkham, purchased the mill property at Carolina, R. I., Mr. Metcalf becoming treasurer of the concern, and at once began operating the plant. These mills were originally built in 1842, by Rowland G. Hazard, and until the early part of the Civil war were operated as cotton-mills. The demoralized condition of that industry about that time caused the output of the plant to be changed to woolen products, and as such it has been operated ever since. Additions were built, the mill enlarged, a new dye house erected, and new machinery installed, making the mill strictly up to date. The product enjoys a reputation second to none of its kind, the product being fancy cassimeres.

Practically since 1869, when the Carolina Mills Company began business, the property has been on a paying basis, with no serious intermissions in its activity. Once the wheels were idle for two or three weeks, but that was when the canal, which carries water to the wheel, was being widened. The relation that this concern bears to the prosperity of the village of Carolina is a very close one, and has been so for nearly forty years. It furnishes employment for about all the working people in the village. At the present time about one hundred and fifty hands are employed, the majority being men and boys. The number of employees remains about the same from year to year, and a less changeable manufacturing community would be difficult to find. There is probably no other mill in the country where the average length of service among its employees is longer than it is in Carolina, which evidences the feeling of satisfaction among them, and the spirit of fairness on the part of employers. During the thirty-six years and more which have passed since the organization of the Carolina Mills Company that concern has never missed a payday—except on a few occasions when weather conditions prevented transportation of funds from bank to mill. From the beginning of his connection with the Carolina Mills Company Mr. Metcalf's life was inseparably a part of the success and progress of that concern.

In the public affairs of the town Mr. Metcalf always took a keen interest, and he served as a member of the town council. In political sentiment he was a Republican, and usually supported that party, but he was a staunch advocate of the principles of the Prohibition party, with which he was heartily in sympathy. Franklin Metcalf was a self-made man, and in achieving the success which came to him he upheld that time-honored name and reputation of the family that found in him a worthy representative. Mr. Metcalf was for a number of years a director in the Hope Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and in the What Cheer Mutual Insurance Company, of Providence. In fraternal connection he was a member of Charity Lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Hope Valley, Rhode Island.

Mr. Metcalf was married (first) in Providence to Narcissa Snow Potter, and to this union the following children were born: Franklin, died young; Edward P. (sketch elsewhere), of Providence, married Mary Elizabeth Gardner and has three children, Alice Bell, Margaret and Mildred Gardner; Ellen Houghton married Dexter Wilbur Hoxie, and they have two children, Louise M. and Emily N.; Whiting, a resident of Carolina, married Nellie May Hoxsie, daughter of George Hoxsie, senator from Richmond; Louise died young. Mr. Metcalf married (second) in Carolina, R. I., on March 3, 1874, Alice Merton Greene, daughter of Millen S. Greene, and one daughter was born to this union, Alice Narcissa, who married William McVey, of Carolina, and has two children, Dorothy Metcalf and Mary Carolyn.

Mr. Metcalf's "Mayflower" descent follows: John and Priscilla Alden; Elizabeth married William Peabodie; Elizabeth married John Rogers; Hannah married Capt. Samuel Bradford. From Gov. William Bradford his line is through Maj. William Bradford; Capt. Samuel Bradford; Perez Bradford; Hannah Bradford, who married Jabez Gay; Lucy Gay, who married Joel Metcalf; Jesse Metcalf; and Franklin Metcalf.

MILLEN SANFORD GREENE, father of Mrs. Metcalf, was born Dec. 23, 1825. His father was a typical New England farmer, and wrested a living from the rocky hills of the town of North Stonington. His mother was a Quaker, and from her came that "sympathetic nature, beauty of mind, pureness of thought, and a high appreciation of the grand and poetic in life, which later years developed in a high degree." His boyhood was spent on the farm. It was hard work for the young lad, but still there was some pleasure, for in the winter he was allowed to attend the district school. It was there that he laid the foundation of thought that led him in later years to continue study in his spare moments. Although his schooling was short, still he must have taken advantage of all his opportunities, for early manhood found him teaching the district school. At the age of twenty-one years he was married to Thankful Stillman, of Westerly. He continued to live on the farm, pursuing the peaceful life of a farmer, but while thus engaged his mind became filled with a desire to see what was beyond the hills that shut in his life. He fought the yearning until he could no longer resist. Leaving his home and all that was dear to him, for six years he sailed the ocean, making a number of whaling voyages. He was undoubtedly fascinated by the sea, and this feeling was portrayed years after in many of his poems and verses. On his return he spent ten years in district school teaching, holding positions in a number of towns in Washington county, R. I. For twelve years he made his home at Carolina, a part of the time while he was in business in Westerly, whither he moved in 1875, living first on the Connecticut side and then on the Rhode Island side of the river. About 1869 he opened a real estate office, which he continued up to within a short time of his death. He was one of Westerly's oldest business men, and during his years there had seen the town grow from a straggling village to its present thriving condition.

Mr. Greene held many positions during his long and busy life. He was a member of the Congregational Church, joining soon after locating in Westerly, was deacon of the church and at the same time a member of the standing committee. He was also a member of the corporation of the church, being clerk from 1877 to 1884, and treasurer from 1884 to 1895. He was also a member of the society committee. In fraternal circles Mr. Greene was a charter member of Charity Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Hope Valley, and at one time was worshipful master of that lodge. He was also a member of Franklin Chapter, R. A. M., of Hope Valley. For two years he was district deputy grand master of Rhode Island. Soon after coming to Westerly he joined Granite Council, No. 177, Royal Arcanum, although he was not a charter member, and he held every office in the gift of the council. The Grand Council of the State repeatedly honored him, and at the time of his death he was on the board of trustees. While residing in Pawcatuck he held numerous town and district offices. He was a trial justice for some years, and of the six hundred cases heard before him not a single decision was objected to by the court of Appeals. He took a great interest in school affairs, and was a member of the school committee when the Palmer street schoolhouse was built. He was also at one time an officer in the district. Some years ago he moved to the Rhode Island side of the river, and was afterward elected a member of the town council, serving one year.

Mr. Greene was noted throughout this section of the country as a prolific writer of verse. Many of his poems appeared in the Narragansett Weekly and The Sun. In 1894 a small volume of them was published, under the title of "Around the Hearth," and met with considerable favor, being treasured in many homes. Mr. Greene was a great favorite at reunions and celebrations, for he was always ready and willing to write verses in commemoration of such events. A great lover of poetry, it is not surprising that he also loved music. Writing a great deal, he made a collection of all productions that took his fancy, and these he was wont to esteem highly.

Mr. Greene died at his home on High street, in Westerly, R. I., July 27, 1898, leaving as his survivors a wife and three daughters, Mrs. Alice M. Metcalf and Mrs. Ida M. Brown, of Carolina, and Mrs. Evelyn A. Pendleton, of New Haven.

Mrs. Thankful (Stillman) Greene, the widow, died at her home in Westerly June 15, 1902, aged seventy-eight years. The following bit of verse, written by Mr. Greene, was a great favorite:

TO MY MOTHER.

"I know that my Redeemer lives,
What comfort this sweet sentence gives!"
My mother often sung.
In soothing numbers soft and mild
To me, when I, a fretful child
Unto her bosom clung.

I could not know the sense of pain
That, mingled with the sweet refrain,
Her gentle spirit wrung.
I could not know the weight of care
With which she breathed for me the prayer
That trembled on her tongue.

That love-wrought cadence to my ears,
Comes floating down the stream of years,
In tones that seem divine;
My soul is lulled to calm repose,
As when of yore, at daylight's close,
She laid her face to mine.

And now beyond the mystic veil,
Angelic voices never fail,
That song of love to swell;
The heavenly chorus greets her ears,
In praise of Him, whom thro' long years,
She loved and served so well.

HENRY C. CLARK (deceased), of Providence, R. I., long one of the largest and most enterprising coal dealers in the United States, came of the large family of that name scattered in the early times through the counties of Middlesex and Worcester, Mass., and the southwestern part of the State of New Hampshire. The American ancestor was Samuel Clark, who located in Concord, Mass., about 1680. In 1668 he married Rebecca Nichols and by her was the father of these children: Samuel, born in 1674; William, 1679; Sarah, 1681; Richard, 1683; Susanna, 1689; Hannah, 1691; Benjamin, 1693; and Arthur, 1696.

Arthur Clark, son of Samuel and Rebecca, married Hannah Morse, and they settled in Sherborn, Mass. They were the parents of Sarah, Samuel, Asa, John and Daniel.

The late Henry Clinton Clark, of Providence, was a son of Sterry and Julia Ann (Morse) Clark. Sterry Clark was born in 1794, in the town of Sturbridge, Mass., and died in Providence, R. I., Sept. 17, 1867, aged seventy-three years. He was the son of Lemuel Clark, a patriot of the Revolution, serving from Sturbridge during portions of 1777, 1778, 1779 and 1780 and being present at West Point in the last named year. The father of Julia Ann (Morse) Clark was also a Revolutionary soldier.

Henry C. Clark left a permanent impress on the business life of the city of Providence, with which he was identified practically all his life. As the successful proprietor and manager of large interests he proved himself enterprising and progressive beyond the ordinary, and did much to promote the public welfare and encourage public-spiritedness among his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Clark was born in Providence Nov. 28, 1822, and with the exception of the time he spent in California and abroad passed all his life there. He sailed for the new Eldorado in 1849, around Cape Horn, and while in California adapted himself to the needs of the situation, following the occupations of laundryman, boatman, boatbuilder, miner and merchant. Thus his experience was more varied than that of many. His connection with the coal business commenced in early manhood. After receiving his education in the public schools of his native city he in 1841 became an employee of the firm of Jackson & Clark, who were engaged in that line. His merit was soon apparent, and in time he became a partner, the firm becoming Jackson, Clark & Co. The business has been continued ever since, by the firms of S. Clark & Co., Clark & Coggeshall, Henry C. Clark, Clark & Webb, Tucker, Swan & Co., Tucker & Little, and the Providence Coal Company, which conducts it at present. It is probably one of the largest concerns of the kind in the United States. From the small annual sales of 1,000 tons, which Jackson & Clark enjoyed, the volume of business increased until, in 1899, 238,000 tons were disposed of, and the record of the growth and expansion of this business is the record of Mr. Clark's remarkable career, for to him is due the remarkable success which has attended the operations of the successive firms who have been interested therein. To his good judgment and financial ability, his enterprise and inventive genius, his faculty for giving ideas definite shape and form, and using everything at hand to the limit of its possibilities, the important concern now doing business as the Providence Coal Company owes its pre-eminence in the commercial world, and Mr. Clark was justly honored among his business associates in recognition of the extraordinary genius he displayed.

Mr. Clark was familiar with every detail of the work under his charge, and in the endeavor to conduct his business with the necessary dispatch put into practice many excellent ideas which came to him while superintending operations. He invented and patented several devices for storing and handling coal which are now in use among coal men, and which have proved of great value and have had much popularity as facilitating the rapid discharging and storing of coal, besides cheapening the work to a remarkable degree. He was the first to plan and erect large pockets for this work, the capacity of the Providence Coal Company being 40,000 tons. He invented and introduced a tube, which, under the direction of one man, fills itself in the vessel and distributes its contents over an inclined railway into the pockets. The coal is then drawn from the bottom through a trap into carts, ready for delivery, thus completely doing away with cars, barrows and the disagreeable labor and many unnecessary expenditures attending the old way. He invented and patented a device for the easy dumping of loaded carts by means of a screw, and also a latch to keep the tail-boards in place. His numerous inventions being quite valuable several enterprising individuals have patented parts of his devices as their own. The pockets and mill are fitted with water-pipes and sprinklers for protection against disastrous fires, which have twice destroyed the pockets. Mr. Clark was also largely interested in the salt, grain and hay business, having been the owner and operator of a large mill establishment of that kind. His standing among business men was irreproachable.

With strong anti-slavery and temperance proclivities, Mr. Clark early took an active part in legislation involving the protection of his principles. Though busy with his own affairs, he found much time to spare for the public service, and was a member of the common council from 1882 to 1885; on the board of aldermen in 1876; in the State Legislature; and was the candidate of the Prohibition party for mayor. He was always firm in his convictions of right and wrong, outspoken in their defense and persevering in maintaining them, and repeatedly before the Interstate Commerce Commission and courts defeated large corporations in their claims. In many ways he became conspicuous in public life, and especially because of the strict accountability to which he endeavored to hold city officials in the performance of their duties. He was thoroughly independent in municipal politics and for years made a special study of the city hall departments and their conduct by the men in charge. The opinions he held of those officials he expressed openly and publicly, through the medium of letters to the newspapers, for he was no coward, and was willing to take the consequences of any of his acts. There were characteristics of his nature which few men realized or understood, and one which few knew of was his willingness to assist young men in business to the possibilities and opportunities of acquiring success. In this line he was particularly zealous, loaning capital and assisting his young friends in many other ways. The statue of Ebenezer Knight Dexter, which stands on the Dexter training ground, was a gift from Mr. Clark to the city. Mr. Clark passed away March 3, 1898.

On Jan. 21, 1844, Mr. Clark was married to Miss Martha E. Field, who died Dec. 8, 1888. They had two children: William, who died young; and Harry C., born Oct. 24, 1857. Mr. Clark married for his second wife Miss Mary Caroline Phillips, who survives him.

HARRY C. CLARK, the son of Henry C. Clark by his first marriage, is the present proprietor of the Reliance Mill Company and the Providence Coal Company. He was born in Providence Oct. 24, 1857, and received his education in the public schools of his native city and at Brown University. Upon leaving school he entered his father's office and was appointed treasurer, soon after becoming a partner in the business. Upon the death of his father, in 1898, he became the sole owner of both properties, which are now conducted under his directions. Mr. Clark is one of the representative younger business men of the city, who is carrying the extensive responsibilities which have devolved upon him with great credit to himself and honor to his father, their revered founder.

HON. BENJAMIN HALL (deceased). During a long and useful life, the late Hon. Benjamin Hall was one of the best-known men and large land-owners of Portsmouth, where he was born, as was also his father, the late Judge Parker Hall, the family having been identified with the interests of this locality for very many years. Its history is one of more than usual interest.

The Portsmouth Halls came early to New England. They chose Rhode Island as their abiding place, and in the ancient town of Portsmouth still live representatives of the founder of the family on American soil. This was (I) William Hall, who was born in England in 1613, and died in 1675. In 1638 he was admitted an inhabitant of Aquidneck and became one of the leading men of the town of Portsmouth. He was commissioner in 1654, 1656, 1660 and 1663; was deputy in 1665, 1666, 1667, 1668, 1672 and 1673, and in 1672 he also served in the town council. The Christian name of his wife was Mary and their children were: Zuriel, Zurici, William, Benjamin, Elizabeth, Rebecca and Deliverance. Generation after generation of the posterity of these early Halls of Portsmouth have in turn, occupied the lands first farmed by their ancestors, and have worthily perpetuated the family name.

(II) Benjamin Hall, son of William, born in 1650, received by the will of his father, the homestead at the death of his mother, he to pay two pounds to each of his sisters, Elizabeth, Rebecca and Deliverance. Mr. Hall resided in Portsmouth, of which town he was made a freeman in 1678. He was deputy in 1699, 1701-04-05-06-07-13-14. He was assistant deputy in 1701 and 1702, and was a justice of the peace in 1704. He married July 27, 1676, Frances Parker, daughter of George and Frances Parker. He died Jan. 26, 1730. Their children were: Mary, born April 3, 1678; William, Aug. 19, 1680; Benjamin, June 17, 1682; George, June 29, 1685; and Nathaniel, June 29, 1689.

(III) Benjamin Hall (2), son of Benjamin and Frances Hall, born June 17, 1682, married April 8, 1706, Patience Cory, daughter of William Cory, and their children of Portsmouth town record were: Martha, born March 27, 1717; Frances, born April 4, 1719; William, born March 27, 1721; Patience, born April 6, 1723; Rebecca, born June 5, 1726; Benjamin, born May 21, 1729. Another page in the book of records gives: Zuriel, born Oct. 20, 1717; Solomon, born May 6, 1720; Elizabeth, born Feb. 22, 1721-2; and John, born Nov. 24, 1749.

(IV) Benjamin Hall (3), son of Benjamin and Patience Hall, born May 21, 1729, married Aug. 10, 1748, Deliverance, daughter of Richard Cornell, and their children of Portsmouth town record were: George, born Nov. 24, 1749; Parker, born June 17, 1751; Patience, born April 5, 1753 and William, born Nov. 24, 1754.

(V) George Hall, son of Benjamin and Deliverance Hall, born Nov. 24, 1749, married Oct. 21, 1772-3, Hannah Dennis. George Hall was a landowner and farmer, and was also a shoemaker, but he evidently was also a man of manners and intelligence. He had attained social prominence so that Gen. Lafayette accepted his hospitality, and, it is related that upon one occasion, while visiting at the home of George Hall, the French officer engaged in conversation with a sister of Mr. Hall at an open window. The window was insecurely fastened and fell upon the young lady's hand, injuring it to some extent. Years afterward, in 1824, when General Lafayette revisited America, he went to Portsmouth and called to pay his respects to his former entertainers. Again he met Miss Hall and he gallantly recalled the incident and inquired after the injured hand with great courtesy.

In many ways George Hall was a good citizen and foremost man. He died on his farm, April 15, 1830, at the age of eighty-two years, and was buried in the Childs cemetery, Childs street, Portsmouth. His wife, who had reached the age of ninety-one years, died July 5, 1845, and was laid by his side. Their children were: William, born Feb. 2, 1774; Hannah, Aug. 27, 1775; Benjamin Dennis, Feb. 27, 1777; Ruth, July 24, 1778; Susannah, June 24, 1780; Joseph, May 16, 1782; Parker, July 29, 1784; Freeloove, Sept. 11, 1786; George, Jan. 2, 1789; Anna, March 19, 1791; Robert Dennis, Feb. 4, 1793; and Benjamin, Nov. 20, 1795.

(VI) Parker Hall, son of George and Hannah Hall, was born July 29, 1784, at Portsmouth, and like his father, followed farming and stockraising. He made his home on the West Main Road on the farm now owned by Miss Mary E. Austin. He made many substantial improvements on that property, and lived to be honored and respected by his neighbors and fellow citizens. He proved himself a capable man of affairs, and took a prominent position in local matters and in outside interests. He was a representative in the Lower House of the Rhode Island Assembly at the time of the Dorr political troubles in 1842, and was one of the factors which brought about the adjustment of difficulties. He later served as associate judge of the court of Common Pleas and was an honor to the Bench.

Judge Hall was married Aug. 17, 1809, in the Newport Baptist Church, by Rev. Michael Eddy, to Hannah Thomas, and to this union were born these children: Almira, born May 27, 1810, married George Soule, of Dartmouth; Hannah, born Feb. 16, 1812, married Jacob Chase, of Portsmouth; Ann Janetta, born Jan. 1, 1816, married Charles Carr; Catherine, born Sept. 30, 1822, married Gardner Hall, and was mother of George Gardner Hall, long proprietor of the "Adams House," Boston; William Thomas, born Jan. 9, 1825, married Abby Fish, and resided at Newport until his death, Dec. 20, 1883; and Benjamin, born March 20, 1827.

(VII) Benjamin Hall was born in the town of Portsmouth, R. I., March 20, 1827, where his life was mainly spent engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was of just such a character of man as were his ancestors, honest, upright, exemplary, the type that leaves a lasting impress for good upon its day and generation. He continued one of the town's leading citizens. For a number of years he was town treasurer and in 1862 and 1863 he represented his town in the State Senate, where his tact, judgment and public spirit were used to advance the interests of his fellow citizens.

Although a successful man in public life, Mr. Hall was deeply interested in his farm and was particular concerning the raising of cattle and stock. Being a man of enterprising spirit, he made use of modern machinery and followed scientific lines to a large extent. No inducements could be offered to make him remove to any other home than his farm, his preference being to be identified with that locality and with agricultural interests. His death occurred Aug. 5, 1901, and he was laid to rest in the Friends' cemetery.

On Jan. 1, 1852, the late Benjamin Hall was married to Eliza V. Chase, born Dec. 28, 1831, in Portsmouth, daughter of the late Daniel Chase and a sister of Hon. John F. Chase, a well-known citizen of Portsmouth, extended mention of whom will be found in this volume. His wife died Sept. 24, 1884, and her remains also rest in the Friends' cemetery. Their children were: Hannah T., born Dec. 1, 1852, died Nov. 12, 1883; Mary Chase, born June 17, 1854, lives in Portsmouth, unmarried; George P., born Aug. 6, 1856, resides in Providence; Benjamin, born July 29, 1859; Herbert F., born March 9, 1868, is mentioned elsewhere; Lilian, born Nov. 26, 1872, died Nov. 27, 1872; and Jennie, born July 9, 1874, died July 11, 1874. In addition to his extensive farming interests, Mr. Hall operated in real estate, having an office at Fall River, Mass. In his political sentiments he was a Democrat, but the tricks of a politician were never his. His public as well as his private life was above suspicion. His nature was kind, and he assisted many who were in need without ever making any public display of generosity. Some years before his death he was married (second) to Helen M. (Chase) Cook, widow of Enos Cook. There was no issue to this marriage.

(VIII) GEORGE PARKER HALL, eldest son of Benjamin and Eliza V. (Chase) Hall, was born on the farm just east of the homestead, now the property of a Mr. Coggeshall, Aug. 6, 1856. He was educated in the public schools of Portsmouth, and in the Mill street school, Newport, remaining at the latter place for two years. He then spent one and one-half years at a private school in Fall River, conducted by a Miss Hill. The next one and one-half years were spent at the Friends school in Providence.

With such equipment as he now had Mr. Hall engaged in teaching school for six months, in district No. 1, South Portsmouth, and, having a liking for the profession and realizing his inability to teach successfully without more knowledge, he entered the Rhode Island State Normal school, in 1876, and there attended three years, at the end of which time he graduated, he being the only male student of a class of sixteen pupils. During this period of his student life Mr. Hall sustained himself solely through his own efforts, and paid his own way through the Normal school. It is much to his credit that although he could have had assistance he would never ask for it. Mr. Hall taught for six months in Slatersville, and for one winter at Wickford academy, then becoming master of the school at Peacedale, R. I., presiding there three years. On taking up his duties at this school, Mr. Hall had to contend with a most pronounced instance of insubordination on the part of the scholars. He then taught at Wakefield for eight years, and at Narragansett Pier for four years. Mr. Hall was very successful as an educator, and had a rare faculty of imparting knowledge to his pupils. He did a great deal to increase the equipment of the schools over which he presided, thereby increasing their efficiency materially. For one season Mr. Hall was paymaster for William C. Caswell, in charge of a gang of seventy-five Italian laborers in the Palisades of the Hudson, who were getting out crushed stone for the purpose of macadamizing about twenty miles of highway on Staten Island. In June, 1895, Mr. Hall entered the Joslin Manufacturing Company, as general manager and bookkeeper, and in 1898 was made secretary, a position he still holds.

Mr. Hall is a Republican on national issues, but in local politics is independent. He was the candidate for senator on the Prohibition ticket when a resident of South Kingstown. He is president of the Arlington Public Library Association, and in the erection of its new library building in 1905 Mr. Hall deserves much credit for the raising of the funds. He became a member of the Union Christian Church of Portsmouth in 1876, but later joined the First Baptist Church at Wakefield, and was its Sunday-school superintendent. He is now connected with the Cranston Street Baptist Church.

Mr. Hall was married Aug. 23, 1881, to Miss Lillian Joslin, daughter of William and Theresa (Brown) Joslin, of Johnston, R. I. Three children have been born to the union: Byron Joslin, born April 22, 1887; Harry Joslin, June 8, 1889; and Kenneth, Aug. 14, 1891 (who died July 19, 1897). Mrs. Hall was a student at the Jencks Mowry Academy, and for two years attended the Rhode Island State Normal school. For two years prior to her marriage, Mrs. Hall engaged in teaching, and for the next six years continued as her husband's assistant, being known as one of the most efficient and popular teachers in South county.

(VIII) BENJAMIN HALL, second son of the late Benjamin Hall, resides on the old homestead farm where he was born July 29, 1859. He was educated in the town schools and received instruction in a local academy. Under his father's careful direction he grew to manhood acquainted with all the various lines of knowledge necessary to make a good farmer. He intelligently carries on general farming and stockraising and is also interested as was his father, in real estate and continues the office at Fall River. He is one of the town's largest land-holders.

On Dec. 2, 1886, Mr. Hall was married to Annie L. Ashley, daughter of James Bradford and Amy F. (Brownell) Ashley. To this union have been born these children: Mildred, born Nov. 15, 1887; Norman, April 7, 1890; Gladys, Oct. 7, 1891; Benjamin, March 3, 1893; William, Sept. 23, 1895; Eliza Victoria, April 9, 1897; Annie Angenette, Aug. 16, 1899; Marjorie Amy, Aug. 24, 1902; and Berkeley Bradford, Dec. 14, 1905.

(VIII) MISS MARY C. HALL, only living daughter of the late Benjamin Hall, was born on the home farm in Portsmouth. After completing the common-school course she entered the Friends' Boarding School at Providence, and later attended the academy at Woodstock, Conn., and still later a seminary at Jewett City, Conn. She is a member of the Congregational Church at the latter point. For some years she has been something of an invalid, but her brave manner of bearing up under her infirmity commands the admiration of all who know her.

PARDON ELISHA TILLINGHAST. For some two hundred and sixty and more years Rhode Island has been the continuous home of the Tillinghast family, and from generation to generation through this long period the records give evidence of its honorable standing here and of its useful citizenship. In the beginning, the forerunner here, the emigrant, Pardon Tillinghast, an Englishman, was one of the most conspicuous and useful citizens of the town of Providence.

(I) Pardon Tillinghast, a native of Seven Cliffs, County of Sussex, England, born in 1622, and according to tradition a soldier in Cromwell's army, came to America and settled in Providence, R. I. The first record of him here is Jan. 19, 1646, on which date he was recorded as a quarter share's man, and granted twenty-five acres of land. He was admitted a freeman in 1658; was deputy in 1672, 1680, 1690, 1694, 1697 and 1700; was overseer of the poor in 1687, and a member of the town council in 1688 and 1691, and from 1693 to 1707. He was the most prominent merchant of the town of his time. He was pastor of the First Baptist Church for many years, declining all remuneration for his services. About 1700 he erected at his own expense a house of worship located near the northwest corner of Main and Smith streets, which in 1711 he deeded to the church, together with the lot upon which it stood. He was twice married and had twelve children. The surname of his first wife was Butterworth. He married (second) April 16, 1664, Lydia, daughter of Philip and Lydia (Masters) Taber. He died Jan. 29, 1718, aged ninety-six. His children were: Sarah; John; Mary (all born to the first marriage); Lydia; Pardon; Philip; Benjamin; Abigail; Joseph; Mercy; Hannah; and Elizabeth.

(II) Pardon Tillinghast (2), born Feb. 16, 1668, married (first) Mary, born in 1670, daughter of George and Mary Keech, and was a resident of Providence and East Greenwich, R. I. His wife Mary died Feb. 7, 1726, and he married (second) Sarah, born in 1678, and died in 1742. In 1688 his name was among the one hundred and seventy-two taxables over sixteen. He bought property in East Greenwich in 1699, and also in Providence. He was a freeman in East Greenwich in 1699. He was deputy in 1702, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1708, 1714, 1716, 1719, 1720, 1722 and 1725, and a justice of the peace in 1705 and 1710. He died in 1743. His children were: Mary, Philip, John, Joseph, Mercy (born in 1706), and possibly Pardon.

(III) John Tillinghast married (first) April 8, 1714, Anne; (second) about July 23, 1719, Phebe, Phenie Greene or Waite; (third) Ann, and maybe (fourth) Abigail Thomas. Like his father before him Mr. Tillinghast was engaged in agricultural pursuits. After residing for some years in East Greenwich he removed to West Greenwich and there died in October, 1770. To the first marriage were born: Amey; Mary, born June 29, 1715; and Pardon, born June 3, 1718. To the second: John, born March 27, 1720; Ann, born June 7, 1721; Welthia, born Sept. 23, 1722; Lydia, born March 3, 1724; Benjamin, born Sept. 20, 1726; and Charles, born April 5, 1729. To the third marriage: Thomas, born April 27, 1732; and Joseph, born Jan. 9, 1734-35. One child, Phebe, blessed the fourth marriage.

(IV) Charles Tillinghast, born April 5, 1729, in East Greenwich, married and among his ten children was Pardon, born in June, 1763. Charles Tillinghast was a resident of Quidnesett, R. I., and on the breaking out of the war of the Revolution he was appointed enlisting officer by the General Assembly of Rhode Island, to raise troops for the Continental army. He was so active and earnest in the work that the Tories formed a party to get rid of him; when the mob was on the way to the house, it is said, they waylaid his son, who assisted his father, took him prisoner and killed him. Shortly after, in November, 1775, four masked Tories broke into the house, and after threatening his wife dragged him from bed, not allowing him to dress, and carried him in a boat to Block Island; from wounds received he died in seventeen days.

(V) Deacon Pardon Tillinghast, born in June, 1763, married, Dec. 18, 1785, Mary Sweet, of West Greenwich, and for the greater part of his life resided in the town of West Greenwich, R. I., where he was occupied in farming. He was one of the pioneer settlers in West Greenwich, one of the first to fell its forests and rear his home in the wild, and he was a man of mark and honor in his day. He died in November, 1816. Among his twelve children were: Allen, born May 26, 1796; John, born Oct. 3, 1812; Abigail; Tabitha; and Thomas.

(VI) Rev. John Tillinghast, born Oct. 3, 1812, in West Greenwich, married March 2, 1834, Susan Caroline, daughter of Elisha Avery. Mr. Tillinghast was the youngest of a family of twelve children, and his father being a pioneer of the town the son's school advantages were limited. Of these, however, he made the most, and by application and reading became well informed, strong and sound. He was converted at an early age and soon after reaching his twentieth year began preaching. He was ordained pastor of the West Greenwich Baptist Church Oct. 18, 1840, and for nearly forty years served most faithfully as a minister in that region of country, filling the one pulpit through all those years without remuneration. He was a man of great force of character, had a pleasing voice, manly features and commanded attention, respect and esteem. His name was a power in western Rhode Island. He stood in the van of the reformers of his time. He was pronounced in his convictions, ever maintaining the right at all hazards. He owned three hundred acres of land in West Greenwich, and as a farmer was eminently successful. Mr. Tillinghast was ever ready to serve and he did serve his town, and efficiently, too, in various useful capacities, especially in educational lines. He was a member of the Rhode Island Assembly in 1854-55. He died March 28, 1878, and was buried with universal marks of honor. He was the father of ten children.

(VII) Pardon Elisha Tillinghast, second child of Rev. John and Susan C. (Avery) Tillinghast, was born in West Greenwich, Dec. 10, 1836, and he died in Pawtucket Feb. 9, 1905. His early years were passed on his father's farm in West Greenwich, and by the time he had attained the age of twelve years he was determined to leave the farm and to follow some other calling in life. His early education was acquired in the district school, which he attended for four months during the winter; at Killingly, Conn.; at Hall's Academy, Moosup, Conn.; and at the Providence Conference Seminary, East Greenwich. Later he attended the Rhode Island State Normal School, and Potter & Hammond's Commercial College, Providence; studied Latin with the Rev. Mr. Richards, of Providence, and law with the Hon. Thomas K. King, of Pawtucket. During the time he was attending school he was obliged to work for his board, part of the time doing chores for relatives and part of the time for strangers. His attendance at the East Greenwich Academy was cut short by the breaking out of cholera in the family, brought there by a sea captain uncle. Five members of the family suffered from it, a brother and grandmother of our subject dying, while the father, sister and uncle recovered. With the aid of one outsider the young school boy took care of the afflicted, the neighbors leaving food outside the house, not daring to enter. One month before he was eighteen Judge Tillinghast began his career as a teacher, teaching one winter in the little school where he had himself attended, and for his services there he received $12.50 a month, and boarded at home. He spent three winters teaching district school, two years in the Valley Falls Grammar School, one year at the Meeting street grammar school in Providence, and for six years was principal of the Grove street grammar school, Pawtucket.

At the outbreak of the Civil war Judge Tillinghast enlisted with the 12th R. I. V. I., and went to the front, serving in the 9th Army Corps under General Burnside. He was promoted to quartermaster-sergeant, and at the end of his term of enlistment was honorably discharged. But a short time before his death Judge Tillinghast had completed a history of the 12th Regiment. When he returned from the war his successor as a teacher resigned in his favor, and while teaching at Pawtucket he determined that he would prepare for the legal profession, and accordingly he entered the office of the Hon. Thomas K. King as a student, spending there all his spare time for four years. In April, 1867, he was admitted to practice, and shortly after, when Mr. King was appointed consul to Belfast, Ireland, he came into possession of a large part of his practice. From 1874 to 1881 he was town solicitor for Pawtucket, and was a member of the General Assembly from Pawtucket for seven years, three in the lower house and four years as senator. While in the Senate he was chairman of the Judiciary committee, and was also chairman of the Joint Select committee of the two houses in the Revision of the Statutes in 1872, as he was also of the Joint Select committee for the Reception and Entertainment of President Hayes on the occasion of his visit to Rhode Island, and he delivered the address of welcome on that occasion.

From 1862 to 1881 Judge Tillinghast was connected with the State militia, holding the offices of second lieutenant of cavalry, first lieutenant and adjutant of Pawtucket Light Guards, captain of the staff of General Daniels, colonel and brigadier-general on the staffs of Governors Van Zandt and Littlefield, and serving as Judge Advocate General for six years.

In 1881 Judge Tillinghast was elected a justice of the Supreme court and sat in the Common Pleas division for ten years. He was then transferred to the Supreme court, sitting in banc, and soon after to the Appellate division, sitting with Chief Justice Matteson and Mr. Justice Stiness. He was the next oldest Justice to Chief Justice Stiness, and on the latter's retirement he was elected Chief Justice of the Supreme court, the highest position in the State Judiciary, Nov. 16, 1904. Of broad and liberal views, and holding himself rigidly to the standard of life dictated by his own conscience, he never permitted his conception of his duties to influence his judgment of others, and he had the respect and confidence of the entire State. His decisions are recognized throughout the country, and he served the State for over twenty years with credit to himself and to the whole judiciary system.

Judge Tillinghast always took a deep interest in educational matters, and particularly in the public school system, and he served for a number of years on the school committee. In politics he was a Republican, but his partisanship was never offensive, and his voice was always heard on the side of right and justice, and in all public matters he was vitally interested. He was a lifelong member of the First Baptist Church and Society, and the Sabbath-school connected with it. Every Sunday, unless detained by illness or absent from the city, found him in his accustomed seat.

In 1890 the honorary degree of Master of Arts was conferred upon him by Brown University, and he was elected a corresponding member of the New York Medico-Legal Society. He was a trustee of the Free Public Library of Pawtucket, and for over twenty years was a trustee of the Providence County Savings Bank. He was a member and at one time president of the Rhode Island Baptist Social Union, the Providence Bar Club, the Pawtucket Business Men's Association, Tower Post, No. 17, G. A. R., and the To-Kalon Club.

Genuine sorrow was expressed on every hand at the death of Judge Tillinghast, as all classes of citizens, irrespective of political or religious belief, felt that in him they had a man who could fill any position when called upon, and one whose counsel and advice could be followed with safety at all times. Always courteous and easy to meet, people of any and all stations regarded him as their friend. One of the most striking characteristics of the Judge was his love for children, which was evidenced at all times, and a frequent sight on Sunday was to see the tall Justice of the Supreme court in the vestibule of the church which he attended talking to the juvenile members of the congregation.

Immediately upon receipt of the news of his death, his Honor, Mayor James H. Higgins, ordered the flags of the city of Pawtucket to be placed at half mast, and a special meeting of the city council was called to take appropriate action on his death.

Former Chief Justice John H. Stiness was deeply moved when told of the death of his former colleague and successor. He said: "My acquaintance with Judge Tillinghast extends back thirty or thirty-five years. We were both members of the General Assembly when I was elected to the Bench. We were both soldiers in the Civil war, and naturally both favored the election of General Burnside to the United States Senate. In the legislative contest for the senatorship our candidate was successful, and I remember that Judge Tillinghast and I were thrown together a great deal at that time and became close friends. At the time of his election to the Bench in 1881 I was sitting as one of the Judges of the court of Common Pleas, and we were together in that court until the death of Judge Potter in 1882. * * * He was an extremely conscientious, painstaking and hard-working judge. I do not know that I have ever known a judge who devoted more time to his work than he did. Sometimes he worked too hard for his own health. * * * He was a very pleasant man to be associated with on the Bench. Although he had an independent opinion—and no man is worthy to be a judge who has not—and although sometimes differing in consultations with the opinions of his associates, it was with a mutual respect and regard, and no one of his brethren can have an unpleasant recollection of our associations with him. * * * He had not only in his long career won distinction as a judge, but he had also won the esteem of his brethren both on the Bench and at the Bar. It is a matter of profound satisfaction to me that I retired from the Bench in time for him to receive the honor of election as Chief Justice, which honor he so well deserved from his long and faithful service."

Words of highest praise were powerless to express the feelings of the other members of the Supreme Bench toward the dead jurist. With one accord they voiced the most affecting tributes to the memory of a man who was loved and respected alike for ability, kindness and pre-eminence of personal character.

Judge Wilbur said: "I have known Judge Tillinghast for many years and I can hardly express my feelings at such a time as this. From the time we were together in the Legislature I have held for him the highest respect and the warmest friendship. I feel a personal loss, and to the community at large it may well be said to be irreparable. He was a kindly, generous, great-hearted man, and what was said of Daniel Webster may well be said of him: 'But he was ours, and by that word of pride drown with its lofty tone pain's bitter cry.'"

Judge Dubois said: "Perhaps the two most remarkable characteristics of Judge Tillinghast were his absolute candor and his remarkable memory. In regard to the first he was always ready to change any opinion which he might have formed in a case if, after hearing the arguments of the other party, he felt that he was wrong; he was willing to hear every detail of the case and would listen patiently to both parties. He grieved if his decision displeased any one, but he always endeavored to decide as he thought right and to deal justly with every one. His memory was remarkable and he could recall cases with the names in a wonderful manner. He was loved by every member of the Bar and was a personal friend to us all. His loss is a heavy one to Bench, Bar and public."

Judge Blodgett said that the dead Chief Justice was almost like a father to the younger members of the Bar, treating every one of them with the utmost consideration and going out of his way to make them feel at their ease when before him, adding: "He was a man of the highest character, and no one could have been more upright or honest. He was unusually candid, and he never allowed himself to be prejudiced by one side of a case. He had room in his great mind for both sides, and in many instances he has not hesitated to change his opinion when he thought his first impression was an erroneous one. His loss to the city and State is irreparable."

Judge Johnson said: "I have never known a man of higher character and uprightness than Judge Tillinghast. He enjoyed the unqualified respect and personal friendship of every member of the Bar, and he had gained it by his uniform patience, kindness and just dealing with every one. His patience was remarkable, and he would listen to every argument that attorneys before him desired to make. His services have been invaluable, and his death is a sad blow."

Judge Douglas said he could add nothing to what had already been said, and that like others he considered the loss a heavy one to the whole community. At the court house every one seemed to feel the loss of a personal friend, and, as one of the deputy sheriffs said, "A finer man never walked the earth."

On Nov. 13, 1867, Judge Tillinghast was united in marriage with Ellen F. Paine, daughter of Joseph H. and Frances (Arnold) Paine, of Pawtucket, and this happy union was blessed with children as follows: (1) Alice L. married Ralph R. Clapp, of Pawtucket, and they reside in London, England, where Mr. Clapp has charge of the Clapp Ammonia Company. They have two sons, Roger T. and Kenneth J. (2) John A., a practicing attorney at Providence, married Grace Bardeen, of Providence, and they have one daughter, Katherine Tillinghast. (3) Angeline F. married Russell H. Dana, of Pawtucket, where he is connected with the Union Wadding Company. They have two sons, Newton Tillinghast and Frederick Tillinghast. (4) Frederick W. graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1905, and is now practicing in Providence; he is unmarried.

KINSLEY (Providence family). The Rhode Island branch of the New England Kinsley family is of a little less than one hundred years standing here, but in the neighboring State of Massachusetts its history reaches back through the infancy of the Colonies to the year 1637, when Stephen Kingsley, husbandman, appeared as a proprietor at Braintree. A generation later found the family in South Bridgewater, in which vicinity it has since been continuous, and thence came to Pawtucket the Rhode Island branch, and from Pawtucket to Providence. The family under consideration is that of the late Shepard Carey Kinsley, for fifty years a merchant of the city, and long one of the substantial men and useful citizens of this community, active and prominent in religious work, serving many years as a Sunday-school teacher and even a longer period as Sunday-school superintendent. Here in Providence are now residing some of his children. There follows the family history and genealogy of this Providence branch of the Kinsley family, beginning with the earliest known American ancestor:

(I) Stephen Kingsley (Kinsley) appeared at Braintree, Mass., as early as 1637, husbandman and proprietor. He was made a freeman May 13, 1640. In 1656 he removed to Dorchester and purchased one-half of the Hutchinson farm, but returned to Braintree, and in 1670 sold land in Milton, Mass. He was a representative in 1650, and first ruling elder at Braintree in 1653. He was representative from Milton in 1666, and died in that town in 1673, having had a son Samuel who died before, leaving a widow Hannah and son Samuel, born in 1662.

(II) Samuel Kinsley, says Mitchell in his "History of Bridgewater," son probably of Stephen, married in 1694, Mary, daughter of John Washburn, and settled in South Bridgewater, where he bought the Jeduthun Robbins place, which adjoined the Washburn place, and had Samuel, John, Nathan, Benjamin, Mary, Sarah, Bethea, Susannah and probably others.

(III) Benjamin Kinsley had sons Silas and Abiel.

(IV) Silas Kinsley, son of Benjamin of East Bridgewater, had Asel, Daniel, Adam, Silas, Zebina, Rodolphus and Benjamin. The wife of Silas died, and in 1774 he married Mrs. Rebecca Packard, nee Richardson, widow of Zebulon Packard, to whom she had been married in 1764.

(V) Rodolphus Kinsley, son of Silas married in 1794, Salome, daughter of Ephraim Carey, and settled in East Bridgewater. They had a family of children, and removed to Pawtucket or North Providence. Here Mrs. Kinsley died. Mr. Kinsley died in Canton, Mass. Among their children were: William H., Shepard Carey, and others.

(VI) SHEPARD CAREY KINSLEY, son of Rodolphus and Salome (Carey) Kinsley, born Aug. 29, 1806, in East Bridgewater, Mass., married (first) in April, 1828, Elizabeth P. Eddy, daughter of Benjamin C. Eddy of Providence. She died in 1839, and he married (second) Mrs. Eunice Chester Simmons, widow of George Simmons, and sister to his first wife.

The early boyhood of Mr. Kinsley was passed in his native town, where his school days were begun. On the removal of the family to Pawtucket about 1815 he accompanied them thither, and some three years later was sent to Concord, N. H., where his education was furthered under the tuition of Rev. J. L. Blake, a graduate of Brown University. After three years of study at Concord, he returned to his home in Pawtucket, and there, in 1823, began his business career as a clerk in the store of Barney Merry & Co. Three years later, in 1826, he began business on his own account as a member of the firm of Rhodes & Kinsley, of Pawtucket, dealers in hats, caps, boots and shoes. His business experience in Providence began in 1832, he then establishing the afterward well and favorably known business house of S. C. Kinsley, Son & Co., for a period one of the largest wholesale boot and shoe houses in Rhode Island. Mr. Kinsley continued in active business until his death, his business life in Providence covering a period of fifty years.

During the long period of his residence in Providence, Mr. Kinsley was one of the city's most valuable and useful citizens, active and zealous in all religious and kindred work, and did much toward the bettering of society. He was a member of Grace Episcopal Church at Providence, having united with it on his coming to the city in 1832. For some eighteen years prior to 1852 he was a teacher in the Sunday-school of that church, and in 1852 was appointed by Bishop Henshaw superintendent of the school, a relation he sustained to the charge for nearly a third of a century. It is said that during all of those twenty-eight years as superintendent he was not absent more than two Sundays, excepting one year, when not holding the position. What faithfulness to a trust! It is unnecessary to state that under his charge the Sunday-school flourished.

The children born to the first marriage of Mr. Kinsley were: Elizabeth, who became the wife of the late William H. Low, of Providence; Sarah James, who married George F. Holroyd, of Providence; Minerva Jencks, who married the late Amasa M. Wheeler; Carolina Simmons, who became Mrs. Albert H. Rider, of Providence; and Benjamin Eddy. Mr. Kinsley died at his home in Providence, R. I., suddenly, of apoplexy, Jan. 18, 1881, honored and respected by all whose privilege it was to have known him. His manner was genial and his disposition social, and his strict integrity attracted to him many warm friends.

HARRIS. For many years one of the foremost citizens of the town of Scituate was Charles A. Harris, of the ancient Rhode Island family of that name, many of whom have been and are prominent in the affairs of the State and the communities in which they have resided. Mr. Harris was a direct descendant of

(I) Thomas Harris, who came with his brother William and Roger Williams, in 1630, from Bristol, England, in the ship "Lyon." William Harris was one of the six persons who arrived at Providence as first settlers before July of the year 1636, having spent the preceding winter at Seekonk. Thomas was one of the signers of the compacts of 1637 and 1640, concerning the organization and government. He was for many years conspicuous in the public affairs of the town, was many times commissioner, deputy, member of the town council and assistant. The Christian name of his wife was Elizabeth. He died June 7, 1686.

From this Thomas Harris the late Charles A. Harris's lineage is through Thomas (2), Thomas (3), Gideon, Asahel and Charles. These generations, somewhat in detail, follow in regular order.

(II) Thomas Harris (2) married Nov. 3, 1664, Elnathan, born Oct. 15, 1644, daughter of Richard and Mary (Clark) Tew. Mr. Harris was an inhabitant of Providence, R. I., was many times deputy between 1671 and 1710, and was for several years a member of the town council. He died Feb. 27, 1711, and his widow died Jan. 11, 1718.

(III) Thomas Harris (3), born Oct. 19, 1665, married Phebe, daughter of Henry and Wait (Waterman) Brown. He was an inhabitant of Providence, R. I. He was deputy, 1718, and a member of the town council, 1716-1724, inclusive. He died Nov. 1, 1741. His wife Phebe died Aug. 20, 1723. Their children were: Wait, born April 21, 1694; Phebe, Dec. 16, 1698; John, Sept. 17, 1700; Henry, Oct. 5, 1702; Thomas, Oct. 21, 1704; Charles, 1709; Gideon, March 15, 1714; and Lydia, June 9, 1715. Eddy of Providence. She died in 1830, and he married (second) Mrs. Eunice Foster Simmons, widow of George Simmons, a sister-in-law of his first wife.

The wife of Shepard of Mr. Kinsley was passed on to the school where his school days were begun. The school was of the family of Pawtucket and he was boarded there, and some time later he was sent to Concord, N. H., where he was boarded and gathered in the tuition of the school. He graduated from the University.

HARRIS. For many years one of the foremost citizens of the town of Scituate was Charles A. Harris, of the ancient Rhode Island family of that name, many of whom have been and are prominent in the affairs of the State and the communities in which they have resided. Mr. Harris was a direct descendant of

(1) Thomas Harris, who came with his brother William and Roger Williams, in 1630, from Bristol, England, in the ship "Lyon." William Harris was one of the six persons who arrived at Providence as first settlers before July of the year 1639, having spent the preceding winter at Seekonk. Thomas was one of the signers of the compact of 1637 and 1640, concerning the organization of a government. He was for many years conspicuous in the public affairs of the town, was many times commissioner, deputy, member of the town council and assistant. The Christian name of his wife was Elizabeth. He died June 7, 1686.

From this Thomas Harris the late Charles Harris's lineage is through Thomas (2), Thomas (3), Gideon, Asahel and Charles. These generations, somewhat in detail, follow in regular order.

(II) Thomas Harris (2) married Nov. 3, 1644, Abigail, born Oct. 15, 1644, daughter of John and Mary (Clark) Tew. Mr. Harris was a resident of Providence, R. I., was many times a member of the town council, 1671 and 1710, and was for many years a member of the town council. He died Jan. 27, 1711, and his widow died Jan. 11, 1711.

(III) Thomas Harris (3), born Oct. 10, 1671, married Phebe, daughter of Henry and Abigail Brown. He was an inhabitant of Providence, R. I. He was deputy, 1715-1716, and a member of the town council, 1716-1724. He died Nov. 1, 1741. His wife Phebe died Nov. 1, 1741. Their children were: Wait, born Oct. 10, 1691; Phebe, Dec. 16, 1698; John, born Oct. 5, 1702; Thomas, Oct. 5, 1709; Gideon, March 15, 1711; and Charles, born 1715. The will of the proved Jan. 18, 1742, by which Henry was to receive the homestead, etc.; Thomas was to receive land where he then dwelt, etc.; Charles to receive land in Scituate, with house in Gloucester; and Gideon to receive 100 acres near Alum Pond, Gloucester, and land in Scituate with a small dwelling.

(IV) Gideon Harris, son of Thomas (3), was the founder of the Scituate branch of the family, and was one of the earliest settlers of that town, then a part of ancient Providence. He was born March 15, 1714, and on Sept. 13, 1739, married Demaris Wescott, born June 12, 1713, of the well-known family of that name, prominent throughout New England. Both Mr. and Mrs. Harris were widely known and valued for their more than ordinary high intellectual attainments, philanthropy, and frequently attested interest in the welfare of their less fortunate neighbors. Their home was called the "Old Bank," partly because of its situation on rising ground from the road, and largely from the fact that those in the community, having valuables, intrusted them to the care of Mr. Harris for safe keeping, and those in need of financial assistance were rarely disappointed by Mr. Harris, whose benevolent disposition was sometimes imposed upon. For many years he was the town clerk, which was then an office of even greater importance than today. Mr. Harris died in 1777, at an advanced age; Mrs. Harris died May 9, 1798, and both were buried in the old Quaker burial ground at Scituate. The children of Gideon and Demaris Harris, as per Arnold's Vital Records, were: Wait, born Feb. 2, 1740-41; Tabitha, March 3, 1742-43; Huldah, May 25, 1745; Thomas, March 15, 1746-47; Asahel, Jan. 29, 1749-50; John, Oct. 24, 1753; and Charles, Dec. 4, 1756.

(V) Asahel Harris, son of Gideon and Demaris (Westcott) Harris, was born at the "Old Bank" homestead in Scituate Jan. 28-29, 1750, and he died there May 26, 1785, at the age of thirty-five years. His wife, Naomi, was born in October, 1759, and died Sept. 13, 1829. Among their children was a son Charles. Asahel Harris had only begun a career closely following that of his father when his death occurred. Had he lived he would no doubt have contributed largely to the history of Scituate and to Providence, as did his posterity and illustrious ancestors.

(VI) Charles Harris, son of Asahel and Naomi, was born Oct. 4, 1780, and lived to an advanced age, his death occurring Jan. 28, 1871. He married Mary, daughter of James and Alice Aldrich, who were also identified to a large degree with the early history of Providence and Scituate, and of them an account is given elsewhere. Mary Aldrich was born Jan. 2, 1782, and died Sept. 7, 1867. Both Mr. Harris and his wife were buried in the North Scituate burial ground. He lived upon the farm upon which his father Asahel settled, and which is now owned by his great-granddaughter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin F. Smith. It is situated some distance south of the "Old Bank" homestead. Charles Harris inherited many of the sterling qualities of his ancestors on both sides, and while of quiet and home-loving disposition he was active in his town's affairs, and did much to promote its interests. He was a man of medium build in physical construction, active and muscular. He was an industrious, honorable and progressive citizen. His friends were many and lifelong, but he was, perhaps, best known for his devotion to his family. Born to him and his wife Mary were: Amey, born Sept. 25, 1801, married, Oct. 10, 1822, Jeremy Potter, and died Dec. 14, 1836; Patia Frances, born April 14, 1803, married, Sept. 7, 1828, Abner W. Peckham, and died April 2, 1852; Mary Aldrich, born Feb. 1, 1808, died Oct. 19, 1809; Charles A. was born May 24, 1812; Mary Eliza, born Jan. 9, 1819, died Jan. 12, 1821.

(VII) CHARLES ALDRICH HARRIS, son of Charles and Mary (Aldrich) Harris, was born on the farm of his father in Scituate, and there reared. In youth he attended the sessions of the country school in the winter season, and in the summer assisted with the farm work. In time he assumed the management of his father's farm and later became its owner, and there remained until his death. On Oct. 5, 1837, he married Susan E. Fenner, a direct descendant of several of the most prominent men in Rhode Island history. Mrs. Harris was born Jan. 4, 1816, and died Aug. 11, 1867. She was a lady of high intelligence, refinement and many endearing qualities of soul and mind. Their children were four in number, but two died at birth, and the others were: Georgiana Augusta, born Aug. 3, 1846, married Benjamin F. Smith; and Rebecca, born March 11, 1851, died Nov. 5, 1853. Mr. Harris married for his second wife Henrietta Tourtellott, who bore him one son.

Charles A. Harris was a man and citizen of the highest type. He was progressive, held up-to-date opinions on all leading subjects (while holding tenaciously to the highest standard of truth), and was ever ready and willing to exert his influence and aid in all movements in the interest of better conditions, good government, and the affairs of his immediate community. Socially he was genial and sympathetic, warm in his impulses, accessible and courteous to all, loved good company and a good cigar, and was deservedly popular, having hosts of friends who regarded him as a gentleman of integrity, ability and incorruptible character. He was a staunch Democrat, and was elected to numerous offices of responsibility. He devoted much of his attention to general farming, and dealt largely in stock. His death, which occurred April 20, 1892, was regarded as a universal loss and was deeply mourned by the entire community. He is buried in the Scituate cemetery, almost in sight of his homestead.

(VIII) Georgiana Augusta Harris, daughter of Charles Aldrich Harris, became the wife of Benjamin Ford Smith Nov. 11, 1875. Mr. and Mrs. Smith so improved the old Harris homestead that it is today one of the handsomest and best improved farm properties in the State. It lies close to the banks of the beautiful Lake Moswansicut, just north of the Hartford pike in Scituate. The old house stands as it has for years, with the additions built by different generations intact, but the lawns, drives, barns, tenements and numerous outbuildings are some of the additions made to the estate, which is truly a home in all that the term implies. Mr. Smith, notwithstanding his busy career in other pursuits, finds time to direct much of the farm work and is greatly interested in his herd of cattle, by many said to be the best in New England. Mr. and Mrs. Smith had one daughter, Mabel Fenner Smith, born June 12, 1878, who is of the ninth generation from Thomas Harris, and through her paternal grandmother is descended from Oliver Cromwell. Mrs. Georgiana A. (Harris) Smith died Sept. 6, 1907. Mention of Benjamin Ford Smith follows.

FENNER. Referring again to Mrs. Susan Emeline (Fenner) Harris, the mother of Mrs. Georgiana Augusta (Harris) Smith, she was a descendant in the seventh generation from Capt. Arthur Fenner, from whom her lineage is through Major Thomas, Arthur (2), John, Obadiah and William Fenner. These generations in detail follow in regular order.

(I) Capt. Arthur Fenner, born in 1622, likely a son of Thomas Fenner, who was at Branford, Conn., and died in 1647, and who, according to tradition, was a lieutenant in Oliver Cromwell's army, was an inhabitant of Providence as early as 1650, on July 27th of which year he bought property there. Before 1675 he had established himself on the Pockhasset river, in that part of the town which became Cranston. He became a large land owner, holding at one time, it is said, some five hundred acres in the towns of Providence, Johnston and Cranston. He was an important and influential man in the town and Colony, holding high public trusts for years, and left a distinguished posterity. He was many times commissioner between 1653 and 1663; was assistant much of the time between 1657 and 1690; was deputy many times between 1664 and 1700; was a member of the town council in 1664, 1673, 1677 and 1678; and town treasurer in 1672 and 1673. He, too, was a soldier as well as statesman, being appointed by the Assembly chief commander of the King's garrison at Providence, which appointment also gave him more extended authority. Captain Fenner married (first) Mehetabel Waterman, daughter of Richard and Bethiah Waterman, he of Salem, Mass., and Providence, R. I., and (second) Howlong (or Howland?) Harris, daughter of William and Susannah Harris. He died Oct. 10, 1703, and his widow Nov. 19, 1708. His children, all born to the first wife, were: Thomas, born in September, 1652; and Arthur, Sarah, Freelove, Bethiah and Phebe.

(II) Major Thomas Fenner, son of Capt. Arthur, born in September, 1652, married (first) Alice Ralph, born Jan. 13, 1657, daughter of Thomas and Mary Ralph, and (second) July 26, 1682, Dinah Borden, born in October, 1664, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Harris) Borden, and granddaughter of Richard Borden, of Portsmouth, R. I. Like his father Mr. Fenner was an important and influential man in the town and Colony. He was deputy many times between 1683 and 1705; was a member of the town council from 1698 to 1706; was a justice of the peace in 1704; and assistant from 1707 to 1717. He was "Major of the Main" in 1712 and 1713. He died Feb. 27, 1718. His widow, Dinah, passed away Dec. 18, 1761. His children, the eldest and maybe one or two next in order, born to the first marriage, were: William, born March 11, 1677; Freelove; Mehetabel; Thomas; Richard; Joseph; Mary, born in 1692; Sarah, born in 1697; Arthur, born Oct. 17, 1699; Eleazer, born Sept. 4, 1702; and John, born Sept. 17, 1705.

(III) Arthur Fenner (2), son of Major Thomas, born Oct. 17, 1699, married June 2, 1722, Mary Olney, born Sept. 30, 1704, daughter of James and Hallelujah (Brown) Olney, he a descendant of Thomas Olney of St. Albans, England, Salem, Mass., and Providence, R. I., through Epenetus Olney and his wife, Mary Whipple; and she a descendant of Chad Brown through Daniel Brown and his wife Alice (Hearnden) Brown. Mr. Fenner resided in Providence. In the early part of his life, prior to the division into counties in 1729, he was engaged in the public service of the Colony. He later served as a justice of the peace, was a merchant, and for years a member of the Baptist Church. Of his wife, Mary (Olney), it is said, "She was one of the smart and active women of her time. She was a merchant and owned more navigation than any other person then in the town, acquired the estate, kept a store and maintained the family in affluence. She bought vessels and cargoes. Her husband was for many years sickly and unable to attend to business." She died March 18, 1756. Mr. Fenner died Feb. 2, 1788, and was buried in the North Burying Ground in Providence. Their children were: Freelove, born Aug. 25, 1723; Sarah, Sept. 10, 1725; John, April 17, 1727 (all died when young); James, Feb. 9, 1730; Arthur, Oct. 12, 1732 (died when young); Joseph, Nov. 8, 1734; Mary, 1737; John, Oct. 2, 1739; Sarah, April 28, 1741; Freelove, July 12, 1743; Arthur (2), Dec. 10, 1745; and Lydia, March 1, 1748 (married Hon. Theodore Foster, United States senator from Rhode Island, 1790-1792). Of these children, Arthur Fenner was for a period clerk of the Superior court and was afterward governor of the State in 1789-1805; and his son, James Fenner, a graduate of Brown University in 1789, was United States senator from 1805 to 1807, and governor of Rhode Island in 1807-1811, 1824-31, and 1844-45.

(IV) John Fenner, son of Arthur and brother of Governor Arthur Fenner, born Oct. 2, 1739, married July 11, 1758, Phebe Brown, born April 21, 1738, daughter of Obadiah and Mary (Harris) Brown, she a descendant of Chad Brown, who came from England in the ship "Martin," which arrived in Boston, Mass., in July, 1638, soon thereafter removing to Providence, from whom her lineage is through John Brown and his wife Mary (Holmes), James Brown and his wife Mary (Harris), and Obadiah Brown and his wife Mary (Harris). Mr. Fenner and his wife lived on a large farm in the town of Glocester, R. I., located some three miles south of Chepachet, the property of his father. Their four children were: Obadiah, born June 29, 1764; James, who married Anna Harris, and removed to Miami county, Ohio; William, who kept a tavern on Sterling Hill; and Mary, who married Charles Harris, of Scituate, R. I. It may be added that the father of these was a slave holder, as he advertised in the Providence Gazette of Oct. 18, 1777, for a runaway negro.

(V) Obadiah Fenner, son of John, born June 29, 1764, in Glocester, R. I., married March 10, 1785, Susan, born June 16, 1769, eldest daughter of James Aldrich, who was an influential man, a Democratic politician of prominence in his section. Mrs. Fenner died Aug. 16, 1829, and he married (second) Nov. 24, 1831, Sarah Battey, born May 29, 1782. Mr. Fenner in early life settled on the farm in the town of Foster, R. I., where he passed a long and useful life. In 1792 or 1793 he set out the now stately and venerable elm trees whose wide-spreading branches overhang this old Colonial mansion, which bespeaks the taste of its builder and occupant—a gentleman, as Mr. Fenner was, of the old school. These trees attained their full size during the lifetime of Mr. Fenner, notwithstanding the prophecy of some one who spoke disparagingly of his labor—for he had gone to the woods and had brought the trees upon his shoulders to the place of planting—telling him that he would not live to reap the reward. Mr. Fenner often told the story, adding, "I have lived to see them grow up." He was a true follower of Jefferson, and remained to the last an ardent supporter of the Democratic party. He voted against the new constitution in 1788. He never would accept office, fearing if he did so it might diminish his independence, one jot or one tittle of which he would not have abated for the proudest position on earth. Mr. Fenner lived to be nearly ninety-six years of age, and retained to the close of his life his faculties almost unimpaired. At the time of his death he was one of the oldest men in Rhode Island, and one of the best specimens of the sturdy, independent farmers of his period.

The children born to Obadiah and Susan Fenner were: John, born Jan. 1, 1787, who died Sept. 25, 1795; William, born Jan. (or June) 28, 1789; James A., born Oct. 8, 1793; Phebe, born Nov. 27, —; John S., born Feb. 26, 1801; and Alice Ann, born July 22, 1805.

(VI) William Fenner, son of Obadiah, born Jan. (or June) 28, 1789, in Foster, R. I., married Dec. 6, 1812, Rebecca Arnold Harris, born July 21, 1795. They lived in Sterling, Conn. Mr. Fenner died in 1858, and his widow passed away in September, 1880. Their only child, Susan Emeline, was born Jan. 4, 1816, and married Charles A. Harris.

BENJAMIN F. SMITH. In the early settling of Rhode Island there came thither a number of the name of Smith, locating in various parts of the territory now the State. Ancient Providence, out of which town have since been created several of the towns now forming a part of Providence county, was the home of the many descendants especially of John Smith, "the miller," and Christopher Smith, the Christian name of the wife of each being Alice. The former, John Smith the miller, was here a contemporary of Roger Williams. Both were banished from Massachusetts by order of the General Court, in September, 1635, and together they came to Rhode Island, Smith being one of the company of six, Williams included, who in the spring or summer of 1636 crossed the river from Seekonk, and took up their residence on the west side, making the first settlement of the English or whites in the territory. Mr. Smith was a man of considerable importance in the settlement. By agreement he was to have a certain tract of land in the valley if he would set up a mill. This valley comprised all the land between the west branch of Moshassuck river and the hill to the east of Jefferson Plains; from Smith street on the south to Orms street on the north. And in this valley Mr. Smith set up a grist mill near the first stone lock of the Blackstone canal; the privilege descended to his posterity and for many years has been used for manufacturing purposes. Mr. Smith was town clerk in 1641. Previous to his coming to Rhode Island he was at Dorchester. Of his children, John and Elizabeth, the former married Sarah Whipple, and was a man of prominence in Providence, serving often as town clerk, ensign and deputy. His children were: John, Sarah, Alice, Mary, Joseph, Benjamin, Israel, Daniel, Elisha and William, the sons all being residents of Providence excepting Elisha and William, who later were inhabitants of what became Smithfield.

Benjamin Smith, son of John (2) and grandson of John, the miller, married in 1693 Mercy Angell and (second) in 1730 Mercy Waterman. In 1700 he laid out land at Wanskuck meadow, in the right of his father, John Smith, then deceased.

He gave to his son John 160 acres of land, bounded partly by the land of his son Solomon at Tar Kiln. His children, all born between 1694 and 1736, and all to the first marriage excepting the youngest two, were: John, Daniel, Mercy, Solomon, Mary, Hezekiah, Jonathan, Nehemiah, Sarah, Abigail, Ann, Ruth, Freelove and William. As goes tradition, John Smith, of this number, left Providence with axe in hand and a bag of eatables to seek a home on his tract of land in the wilderness, and finally selected a suitable place to build near a stream of good water, on or near the site of, in more recent years, the Urania Smith house. This was in what became Glocester and perhaps in that part which still later became Burrillville and is still known as the Tar Kiln neighborhood. His brother, Solomon, accompanied him hither on a second trip.

Along through the section of the State just named have since lived many of the descendants of these Smiths. In more recent generations one Solomon Smith was the architect of the first mill for manufacturing purposes at Burrillville. It was erected in 1810 on the Tar Kiln river. Rufus and Zadock Smith built a factory a little higher up on the same stream, where were made the first satins in Burrillville. It was in this section of country (in Glocester) there was born in 1812 and figured prominently as a contractor and builder the late Daniel Gorey Smith, father of the present Benjamin Ford Smith, who for the past third of a century has been prominent as a contractor and builder in and about Pawtucket, formerly of the firms of Kenyon, Whitaker & Smith, and Whitaker & Smith. The mother of Mr. Smith was formerly a Southern lady, Miss Caroline Cromwell, of the State of South Carolina, and the children of her marriage with Mr. Smith, all born in the town of Glocester, R. I., excepting the eldest, and she born at Savannah, Ga., were: Hannah, born in 1841 (now Mrs. H. A. Potter, of Pascoag, R. I.); Benjamin Ford, born in 1846; Phoebe A., born in 1848 (died unmarried in 1896); Clifford G., born in 1851 (died in 1886). The father of these died at Burrillville, R. I., in September, 1878. He was a man esteemed and respected for his good qualities of heart and mind. Mrs. Smith was of English birth and a descendant of Oliver Cromwell. She died in 1878.

In the town of Glocester, R. I., in the land of his forefathers, was born Oct. 23, 1846, Benjamin Ford Smith, the successful contractor and builder of Pawtucket, and here was passed his childhood. When he was about seven years old his parents located in the town of Burrillville. Until the age of sixteen years he attended the public schools of his neighborhood, then began serving an apprenticeship at the carpenter's trade, at the expiration of which, desiring to supplement his early book training with further study, he took a year's course at the somewhat famous Lapham Institute, in the town of North Scituate, R. I. Leaving this school in the middle sixties young Smith, now well equipped for life's work, began following his chosen calling—working for contractors and builders in various parts of Rhode Island, and ere long acquired that proficiency in his line of work that his efforts merited. He located in Pawtucket in 1873, becoming foreman for the contracting and building firm there of Kenyon, Drown & Co., a relation he sustained to that concern until 1878. In the year last named he was admitted to a partnership in the business, which now became Kenyon, Whitaker & Smith. Mr. Kenyon retiring from the firm in 1881 it became and remained for the next decade Whitaker & Smith. In 1891 Mr. Smith purchased Mr. Whitaker's interest in the business, which he has since conducted alone.

After the retirement of Mr. Kenyon from the firm Messrs. Whitaker & Smith built the Slater and Lorraine Mills and the Dunnell Print Works, extensive plants in Pawtucket, the Nourse Mill, in Woonsocket, and various other buildings of note; and since Mr. Smith came into possession of the business as sole proprietor he has constructed, among many other buildings in and about Pawtucket, the St. Joseph's parochial school structure on Walcott street; and the edifice of the First Methodist Church on High street. The Arlington Mills, of Lawrence, Mass., probably represent the most extensive building contract Mr. Smith ever executed. The site covers seven acres of ground, and the mills are four stories high; an expenditure of over a million dollars was involved.

Mr. Smith's business is not confined alone to Pawtucket and vicinity, but extends all through New England. He has but recently completed several large factories at New Bedford, Mass., and now (1908) is constructing the seventeenth cotton mill that he has built in that one city. Through his proficiency in this line of business, of which he is a thorough master, through his energy and enterprise, his fair dealings and straightforward course with his fellowmen, and as well through his public spirit, he has built up an extensive trade and established for himself a high reputation among the business men of the city and State. The business has now reached proportions many times greater than the operations of the original firm.

In 1900 the business of Mr. Smith was incorporated as the Benjamin F. Smith Company, with Mr. Smith as president and treasurer. He has been a trustee of the Pawtucket Mutual Insurance Company for a number of years; is vice-president of the Pawtucket Sash and Blind Company, and president of the Providence County Savings Bank of Pawtucket.

Mr. Smith has been greatly interested in the affairs of his adopted city, serving his community in various ways, in one capacity for several years as a member of the school board. He is identified with the local lodge—Washington—of the Knights of Pythias, and has occupied nearly every office of the lodge. He is a member of the Pawtucket Business Men's Association.

THOMAS WILSON DORR CLARKE, cashier of the Centreville National Bank and treasurer of the Centreville Savings Bank, is a well-known banker in the Pawtuxet Valley and one of its leading citizens. Mr. Clarke is a native of Connecticut, born at Ballouville, in the town of Killingly, Windham county, May 25, 1844, a descendant of an ancient New England family.

Caleb Clarke, father of Thomas W. D., was a native of Windham county, and in his younger days lived in what is now the town of Pomfret. He was a stone mason by occupation, which he followed in young manhood, building stone walls, etc., also doing contract work, but in middle life engaged in farming in the town of Killingly, and what is now the town of Putnam, where his declining years were spent and where he died at the age of seventy-six years. He was a Democrat of the Jefferson kind, and was a stanch admirer of Dorr, who was elected governor of Rhode Island by the People's Constitution, and who in the early forties was the means of bringing on the Rebellion in the State, the admiration of Mr. Clarke being shown by the fact that he named his son for him. Mr. Clarke married Mary Snow, a native of Pomfret, who lived to the age of eighty-one years and died in Putnam, being buried beside her husband. Eleven children were born to them, of whom but two survive: Thomas Wilson Dorr; and Myra, who married Charles A. Bell, and resides in Niantic, Connecticut.

Thomas Wilson Dorr Clarke's boyhood days were spent on the farm, and he attended the district and high schools of Putnam and the East Greenwich Academy. While still a boy he hired out as a farm hand at fifteen dollars per month for the first season and twenty dollars for the second. At the age of nineteen years he taught his first school in the town of Killingly, and in the following year in Quadic, in the town of Thompson, Conn. While teaching in the winter seasons, he worked on the farm in the summer months, until accepting the position of principal of the old Wickford Academy, which he held two and one-half years, this being the last of his teaching. He then became a salesman for A. & W. Sprague at Cranston, R. I., in which capacity he remained a short time, until 1869, when he was given the management of their general store at Quidnick, R. I. He conducted this for a short period, when he was transferred to Morgan Mills as chief clerk of the counting room and store for the same firm, and where he continued until he accepted the position of manager of the Lapham store at Centreville, continuing there two years, then returning to the employ of the Spragues as clerk of their counting room and paymaster at Arctic, R. I. He spent eight years there and then accepted a like position with the Crompton Company, at their mills at Crompton. After nine months he returned again to the employ of the Spragues as clerk and paymaster for two years, when he became chief clerk and paymaster for the Lanphear Machine Company, at Harris, R. I., a position he held for five years. On Dec. 8, 1886, he accepted a position as clerk of the Centreville National Bank at Arctic, the bank at that period being under the presidency of the late Hon. Enos Lapham, the late Dr. Moses Fifield being the cashier. For fourteen years he filled that position with credit and ability, and on the death of Dr. Fifield in 1900 he was made cashier. He is also treasurer and a member of the board of directors of the Centreville Savings Bank, and since holding these positions the handsome new building has been built. Mr. Clarke is well known throughout the State in banking circles, and is considered a careful and able financier. In political matters he is a stanch Republican. He is one of the leading and active members of the Centreville M. E. Church, and has been Sunday-school teacher for many years, as well as superintendent. He is a member of the board of trustees and steward, and has been for many years class leader. Fraternally Mr. Clarke is connected with Manchester Lodge No. 12, A. F. & A. M., at Anthony, past master of the lodge and one of its oldest members; he is also connected with Landmark Chapter and Calvary Commandery, No. 13, Knights Templar, Providence, and a member of the Rhode Island Consistory, Scottish Rite Masons, reaching the thirty-second degree. He is also a member of Washington Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Washington, R. I., being one of its oldest members, is past grand and a member of the Grand Lodge of the State, also a member of the Encampment, of which he has been past high priest.

Mr. Clarke was married at Anthony, R. I., to Susan E. Hammond, daughter of William Hammond, and to this union were born children as follows: William Hammond died at the age of eleven years; Thomas Henry, a graduate of the East Greenwich Academy, is now taking a law course at the Boston University, member of class of 1908; Mary died at the age of one and a half years; Richard Harold, who attended the East Greenwich Academy, is a clerk with the New England Telephone Company, Providence; Helen Elizabeth attended the East Greenwich Academy and is an accomplished musician; Ruth Mumford graduated from the Warwick high school; and Mary Fifield is a student at the Warwick high school; all of Mr. Clarke's daughters are members of the Methodist Church choir.

PECKHAM. For hundreds of years, beginning with the time of de Peckham, 1191, this was a conspicuous name in England. It begins in this country in 1638, associated with the founders of this Commonwealth. The founder of the family here and his sons became, prior to 1700, very extensive land holders. They were, first, among the proprietors of the Pettaquamscot purchase in 1660; second, in the Westerly purchase, 1661; third, in the East Greenwich purchase, in 1677. These tracts reached across southern Rhode Island, where the original settlement was made. Soon after the first settlement of Rhode Island the Peckhams built a house, in 1640, which stood two hundred years and in which six generations of Peckhams were born. Their purchases also extended into Dartmouth, Mass., to the Acushnet river, where a part of the city of New Bedford now stands. The great-grandchildren of John Peckham were among the settlers of Stonington and other towns of eastern Connecticut; Westerly, Charlestown, Hopkinton, North and South Kingstown, East Greenwich, Scituate, Gloucester, Providence, Jamestown, Newport, Middletown, Portsmouth, Tiverton and Little Compton, R. I.; and Dartmouth, Westport, New Bedford, Rehoboth and Petersham, Mass. The succeeding generation emigrated to Dorchester and central New York.

This race gave to the State of Rhode Island and the country some able men, among them the late Hon. Francis Baring Peckham, of Newport, one of the ablest lawyers of his profession, a man known to have twice declined the place of justice of the Supreme court; Hon. Rufus W. Peckham, judge of the court of Appeals, a former representative in the United States Congress, and justice of the Supreme court of New York; and Hon. William Peckham, chief justice of Washington county, this State, 1835-41, legislator, etc. There follows one line of the Newport and Middletown family, the order being chronological, the Roman numerals indicating generations from the American ancestor.

(I) John Peckham, the progenitor of the Newport Peckhams, was an inhabitant of that town in 1638; was made a freeman in 1641, and in 1648 was one of the ten male members in full communion of the first Baptist Church. His wife, Mary Clark, is credited with being a sister of Rev. John Clark, of Bedfordshire, England, Boston, Mass., and Newport, R. I., who was intimately associated with Roger Williams. He was pastor of the First Church in 1644, and subsequently of the First Baptist Church of Newport. He was imprisoned for his religious opinions and Baptist tenets in 1651; was a deputy, 1664-1671; and deputy governor, 1669 to 1672. Mr. Peckham resided in that part of Newport which afterward became Middletown. He died after 1681. His first wife, Mary, died before 1648. His children were: John, William, Stephen, Thomas, Clement, James, Sarah, Rebecca, Deborah, Phebe and Elizabeth.

(II) William Peckham, son of John by his first marriage, was born about 1647, and lived in Newport, dying in 1734. He was ordained pastor of the First Baptist Church of Newport, Nov. 15, 1711, and is supposed to have been the first Baptist minister ordained on the continent; he was the fourth pastor of this church. He married (first) a daughter of Joseph Clarke and (second) Phebe, daughter of William Weeden. His children, the eldest only born to the first wife, were: William, Samuel, Mary, Phebe and Deborah.

(III) William Peckham (2), son of William, born Aug. 30, 1675, married Jan. 10, 1703, Mary Tew, born Oct. 12, 1680, daughter of Henry and Dorcas Tew, of Middletown, R. I. Mr. Peckham was a resident of Middletown, R. I., where he was occupied in farming. He and several of his children were members of the First Baptist Church of Newport in 1751. He was commissioned a lieutenant in 1714 of the 2d Company of the Train band of Newport, and in 1726 he was captain. He was Deputy to the Colonial Assembly that met in May, 1717. His wife Mary died May 3, 1753, and he passed away Jan. 18, 1764. Their children were: Mary, born Sept. 7, 1704; William, Sept. 3, 1706; Dorcas, July 3, 1709; Henry, Feb. 26, 1711; and Elisha, May 8, 1716.

(IV) William Peckham (3), son of William (2), and Mary (Tew) Peckham, born Sept. 3, 1706, married June 22, 1736, Phebe, born Nov. 14, 1717, daughter of James and Mary (Cook) Barker, and they resided in Middletown, R. I. Mr. Peckham died April 12, 1784, and Mrs. Peckham passed away Nov. 10, 1757. Their children were: William, born Feb. 3, 1737; Elisha, born in 1738; Peleg, born in 1739; Mary, born in 1741; and Phebe, born in 1743.

(V) Elisha Peckham, son of William (3) and Phebe (Barker) Peckham, born in 1738, married Oct. 12, 1769, Mary, daughter of Thomas and Susannah Smith. Their children were: William Smith, born Feb. 26, 1771; Hannah, born Sept. 11, 1772; Simeon; Eunice; Michael; Mary; Alanson; Elizabeth C.; Sarah; and Jane B.

(VI) William Smith Peckham, son of Elisha and Mary (Smith) Peckham, born Feb. 26, 1771, in Middletown, R. I., died May 15, 1851, aged eighty years, two months, nineteen days. Among the children born to him and his wife Sarah was Michael Eddy Peckham, who was born Oct. 7, 1798, in Middletown.

(VII) Michael Eddy Peckham, son of William S., was born in Middletown, R. I., Oct. 7, 1798, and passed away in that town Dec. 13, 1866. On Feb. 2, 1822, he married Ann Sanford, of Middletown, where she was born Feb. 14, 1804, the daughter of Peleg Sanford. She died in Newport Dec. 11, 1889. Mr. Peckham was in early life engaged in farming in Middletown. Later he removed to Newport, and for over twenty-five years was engaged as yard foreman for the firm of Peckham & Bull, at the latter's lumber-yard and planing-mill, which stood on the site now occupied by the U. S. Government dock at the corner of Thames and Church streets. After retiring from this position he again took up farming in Middletown, at which he continued the remainder of his life. He was a Republican in political faith, but never cared for public office. He was a member of the First Baptist Church of Newport, and was a regular attendant there. Mr. and Mrs. Peckham had children as follows: Lydia, born Nov. 29, 1823, died in Newport, unmarried; Alvin, born Oct. 4, 1826, died unmarried at the age of twenty-five years; Michael E., Jr., born Nov. 30, 1829, now living in Block Island, a retired farmer, married Lucretia Ball, of Block Island; Charles H., born Oct. 6, 1831, is a farmer, and resides in Newport; Joseph F., born Nov. 1, 1832, is mentioned below; Benjamin A., born Dec. 5, 1833, now living retired in Newport, married (first) Susan Slocum, of Newport, and (second) Mary R. Grush, of Fall River, Mass.; Sarah E., born Oct. 3, 1835, married Henry Smith, of Middletown, where she now resides, a widow; two daughters, Eunice and Keziah, died in infancy.

(VIII) Joseph Ferdinand Peckham, son of the late Michael E. Peckham, was born in Middletown, R. I., Nov. 1, 1832, and passed away in Newport, Feb. 22, 1899, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. After acquiring his early educational training in the schools of his native town he became apprenticed to the painter's trade under Samuel Hopkins, of Newport. He continued at his trade for some years, and then engaged in business as a painting contractor, being the senior member of the firm of Peckham & Uhler, which firm continued in business for several years. After the dissolution of this firm Mr. Peckham continued at his trade in the employ of George C. Barker & Son, with whom he remained until his death. Mr. Peckham was a Republican in politics, but being a home-loving man, and of a quiet nature, he never aspired to public office. In early life he joined the First Baptist Church of Newport, and continued actively identified with that church until his death, being a regular attendant at its services.

On Jan. 5, 1860, Mr. Peckham was united in marriage to Miss Abbie Popple, of Newport, who survives him. To this union were born children as follows: Frank A. is mentioned below; Emma A., born Nov. 25, 1864, died Oct. 7, 1867; Emory C., born Jan. 9, 1871, is residing in Newport; Arthur A., born Nov. 12, 1872, married Mrs. Bessie Smith, daughter of the late Capt. John Waters, of Newport, and they reside in Boston, Mass.; George P., born May 17, 1880, resides in Norwich, Conn., where he is physical instructor in the Y. M. C. A.

(IX) FRANK ALVIN PECKHAM, son of Joseph F., was born in Newport, R. I., Dec. 1, 1860. His school days were passed in the Mill street and Clark street schools. At the age of sixteen he began working for Mr. Amon Parmenter, and later he was in the employ for a year and a half of A. C. Landers. For five and a half years he was with Shepard & Co., in Providence. For ten years he was with McIntyre & McGuire, in New Haven, Conn., and for two years in business for himself at No. 634 Chapel street, New Haven, as a member of the firm of Beckley & Peckham, and later as F. A. Peckham.

On May 1, 1898, he bought the old established store of A. M. Thomas, at Wickford, R. I., and by close attention to business has become one of the most successful and substantial business men of that town. He is one of the few men who are by temperament naturally fitted to make a success of mercantile business.

Mr. Peckham became a member of Harmony Lodge, No. 5, I. O. O. F., in New Haven, Conn., Dec. 31, 1889, and was made noble grand in July, 1892; he is now a past grand of that lodge. Upon removing to Wickford he took a card to Beacon Lodge, No. 38. He is a past master of Washington Lodge, No. 5, A. F. & A. M., in which he was raised, a member of Washington Commandery, No. 4, at Newport, R. I., and of Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine, at Providence, R. I. He is an active member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of which he is treasurer and vestryman.

Mr. Peckham was married, Feb. 18, 1884, in Providence, R. I., to Miss Sarah F. McNamara. To them were born four children: Frank A., Jr., July 14, 1887; Gertrude Beatrice, Jan. 5, 1892; Harold Dexter, Nov. 19, 1895; and Marion Popple, April 8, 1897.

PALMER. The Palmer family in America dates back as far as 1628, and the generations from the original ancestor down to Benjamin W. Palmer, of Wakefield, are as follows:

(I) Walter Palmer came to New England as early as 1628, was at Salem, and one of the founders of Charlestown, 1629; was in Plymouth Colony and joined in the settlement of Rehoboth, and became one of the planters of Stonington, etc.

(II) Nehemiah Palmer, son of Walter and Rebecca (Short) Palmer, born Nov. 2, 1637, came to Stonington with his father, and married Hannah Lord Stanton.

(III) Joseph Palmer, son of Nehemiah, born Oct. 3, 1663, married Nov. 12, 1687, Frances Prentiss, daughter of Thomas and Rebecca.

(IV) Joseph Palmer (2), son of Joseph, born Nov. 14, 1690, married April 2, 1711, Mary, baptized June 6, 1690, daughter of Deacon Gershom Palmer.

(V) Joseph Palmer (3), son of Joseph (2), born Oct. 30, 1719, married Nov. 7, 1741, Katherine Coats.

(VI) Joseph Palmer (4), son of Joseph (3), was born July 24, 1742.

(VII) Elijah Palmer, son of Joseph (4), married Lucretia, daughter of Gershom and Dorothy (Brown) Palmer.

(VIII) Elder Gershom Palmer, son of Elijah and Lucretia, born Nov. 22, 1774, in Voluntown, Conn., married (first) Betsey Smith, (second)

Mrs. Mary (Douglas) Hunter, and (third) Miss Sarah Sheldon. Mr. Palmer accompanied his parents to Preston, Conn., where they went to take charge of the farm of his maternal grandparents, and to care for them in their old age. Gershom Palmer, at the age of eighteen, began to preach at Voluntown, and continued preaching in Preston. He went to Exeter, R. I., in 1806, and in 1808 was regularly installed as pastor of the Baptist Church there. Later he again took up his residence at Voluntown, but continued to preach in Exeter until advanced in years. He died Feb. 14, 1868, in his ninety-fourth year, and his remains were interred beside those of his first wife in the churchyard at Exeter Hill.

(IX) George Ray Palmer, son of Elder Gershom, married May 18, 1823, Mary Ann Briggs, daughter of Henry, and their children, by the Exeter town record, were: Elvira, born July 16, 1824; Amanda, born June 9, 1826, and Angeline, born Sept. 26, 1828.

(IX) Gershom Palmer (2), son of Elder Gershom, married Aug. 18, 1824, Sarah Reynolds, daughter of Benjamin Reynolds.

(X) Benjamin Reynolds Palmer, son of Gershom (2), was born in Exeter, R. I. His parents dying when he was young, he was brought up by Benjamin Wells, in the northwestern part of South Kingstown, R. I. He lived the greater part of his life on Kingstown Hill, engaged in a general mercantile business, and so continued until his death, which occurred in 1875. He married (first) Harriet Wells and (second) Mary Wells, daughters of Amos W. Wells. The children by the first marriage were: Harriet married Rev. George W. Hinckley, a resident of Hinckley, Maine, and has four children, Walter, Edward B., Grace and Alice; Benjamin Wells was born July 31, 1858; James, a resident of Wakefield, born on Kingstown Hill, married Caroline Isabella Barber, daughter of Russell W. The children of Mr. Palmer's second marriage were: Mary Lillian, a resident of Wakefield; William C., of Utah, and Carroll, a resident of Wakefield.

(XI) BENJAMIN WELLS PALMER was born July 31, 1858, in South Kingstown, and spent his boyhood days in that town and in Exeter, in the school known as the "Salt Box." For a year and a half he clerked in the National Landholders Bank at Kingstown, and at the age of sixteen years he went into the store with his father, where Bernon Helme now is. For a year after his father's death he continued the business there, and then continued there a year associated with Thomas A. Gardner, at the end of that time removing to Wakefield and continuing there for three years, when they dissolved partnership, Mr. Palmer taking the clothing and dry goods business. He located in the Sheldon store for two years, conducting the business opposite Mrs. Attmore Robinson's home, and in about two years dropped the dry goods business. He moved back to the store where T. A. Gardner's office is located, then to the Bank building, and on Jan. 1, 1900, came to the Bell block, his present location.

Mr. Palmer was married in South Kingstown to Miss Emma Louisa Brett, of Baltimore, Md., and to this union have been born: LeRoy Waterman, Annie Brett, Nellie Winchester and Harriet, the last named dying in infancy. LeRoy Waterman Palmer was married Sept. 20, 1904, to Maud V. Champlin, daughter of Lewis A. Champlin, of Narragansett Pier, and they have one child, Lewis Benjamin, born July 17, 1905.

Mr. Palmer is a director of the Wakefield Manufacturing Company, of the Wakefield Institution for Savings, and of the Wakefield Trust Company. He is a member of the Baptist Church at Wakefield.

SPRAGUE (Warwick family). The Spragues have been a conspicuous family in Rhode Island history. In the early Colonial period as well as in the later State a number of the name have been conspicuous in public affairs, and as well foremost in promoting and developing the cotton industries of Rhode Island. Hon. Jonathan Sprague was for years a member of the Colonial Assembly from Providence, and at one time speaker of the House of Deputies. Hon. William Sprague, manufacturer and statesman, served as speaker of the lower house of the State Assembly, as a member of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, as governor of Rhode Island, and as well represented the State in the United States Senate; while Hon. William Sprague, the younger, a nephew of the elder William, was also a manufacturer, governor and United States senator and citizen soldier; and in the town of Warwick still lives the Hon. Albert Gallatin Sprague, M. D., citizen soldier, assistant surgeon almost throughout the period of the Civil war, a number of times a representative in the State Assembly and president of the State Board of Health. Several branches of this Rhode Island Sprague family are treated elsewhere in this work, this article being devoted to the family history and lineage of the last named gentleman.

Born Nov. 22, 1836, in Providence, this Commonwealth, Dr. Sprague is a son of the late Albert Gallatin and Phoebe (Fiske) Sprague, and a descendant in the eighth generation from William Sprague, the immigrant ancestor of the family, his lineage being traced through John, Ebenezer, Daniel, Ebenezer (2), Ebenezer (3) and Albert Gallatin Sprague. These generations follow in regular order.

(I) William Sprague, born in about the year 1609 in Upway, County of Dorset, England, was a son of Edward Sprague, a fuller of that place, who died leaving a widow and six children, three of whom, Ralph, Richard and William, arrived at Salem, New England, in 1628 or 1629, settling in the latter year at Charlestown. William Sprague married in 1635 Millicent Eames, daughter of Anthony of Charlestown. He removed in 1636 to Hingham, where he died Oct. 26, 1675. His widow Millicent died there in 1695. Their children, the eldest born in Charlestown and the others at Hingham, were: Anthony, John, Samuel, Jonathan, Persis, Joanna, Jonathan, William, Mary and Hannah.

(II) John Sprague, born in Hingham, Mass., where he was baptized in April, 1638, married Dec. 13, 1666, Elizabeth Holbrook; settled in the town of Mendon, Mass., where his death occurred. Their children were: William, John, Ebenezer, Elizabeth, Hannah, Millicent and Persis.

(III) Ebenezer Sprague, born about 1672, married Jan. 12, 1706, in Providence, R. I., Mary, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Wheaton) Mann, of Rehoboth, Mass. Their children of Providence town record were: Mary, born March 1, 1709; Ebenezer, March 1, 1711; Daniel, March 28, 1712-13; and Samuel, Dec. 26, 1715.

(IV) Daniel Sprague, born March 28, 1712-13, in Providence, R. I., married (first) in 1730 Sarah Ballou, and (second) about 1736 Hannah Brown. Mr. Sprague was a resident of Johnston, R. I., where he was for many years a justice of the peace. His children were: Naomi; Lucy; David (all born to the first marriage); Jesse, born Aug. 29, 1738; Ebenezer, Aug. 2, 1740; Reuben, Sept. 13, 1742; Rufus, June 7, 1745; Rhoda, Sept. 14, 1749; Roby, Sept. 14, 1749; and Daniel.

(V) Ebenezer Sprague, born Aug. 2, 1740, died Jan. 21, 1812. He married about 1760 or 1761 Millicent Sheldon. Their children, according to Johnston records, were: Dorcas, born Sept. 16, 1761; Phebe, Sept. 5, 1763; Stephen, Aug. 10, 1765; Solomon, May 24, 1767; Sally Lucy, Nov. 24, 1769; Amey, Dec. 25, 1771; Avis, Jan. 21, 1774; Ebenezer, July 27, 1778; and Millicent, May 1, 1781 (died Nov. 12, 1813, aged thirty-two years).

(VI) Ebenezer Sprague (2), born July 20 (or 27), 1778, married Dinah Williams, a direct descendant of Roger Williams. The children of Ebenezer and Dinah were: Albert Gallatin, born July 20, 1804; Amey Williams, May 14, 1806, (married a Mr. Kilton); Hannah, July 7, 1808, (married Edward Luther); Adaline, Feb. 28, 1810, (married William Steere); Thomas Williams, Aug. 29, 1811; Catherine, 1812; William H., 1815; and Sarah K., 1818.

(VII) Albert Gallatin Sprague, son of Ebenezer and Dinah (Williams) Sprague, born July 20, 1804, married (first) Phoebe and (second) Mary, daughters of Charles and Mary Fiske, of Scituate, R. I. To the first marriage there were born fourteen children, of whom but two lived to maturity, viz.: Albert Gallatin and Charles. To the second marriage there came three children, of whom but one lived to maturity. He, Thomas, is deceased, and left no posterity. Albert Gallatin Sprague, father of these, was a resident of Providence and at one time engaged in the lumber business. He died in Providence Feb. 25, 1879.

(VIII) DR. ALBERT GALLATIN SPRAGUE (2), as stated in the foregoing, is a native of Providence, R. I. He acquired his early education in main at the Peirce Academy, Middleboro, Mass. Having decided upon the medical profession as a calling in life he was prepared for it at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which institution he was graduated in 1859. The Civil war soon came on, and early in its stage the young physician was found a patriot answering the summons of his country to her defense. On the organization of the 10th Regiment, Rhode Island Volunteers, in May, 1862, Dr. Sprague was appointed a first lieutenant and assistant surgeon of the same, being enrolled at Providence, R. I., May 26th, and was mustered in on that same day. The 10th was one of the emergency regiments recruited to go to the defense of Washington when threatened by the forces under Gen. Stonewall Jackson, principally from an organization of citizens of Providence banded together for State defense, and known as the 1st Regiment, Rhode Island National Guards, which had offered its services to the Governor. The regiment figured during its term of service (three months) about the national capital, holding for a period the forts which defended western approaches. Dr. Sprague was mustered out of the United States service Sept. 1, 1862. He had been previously appointed, Aug. 29th of that year, assistant surgeon of the 7th Regiment, Rhode Island Volunteers, with which he continued, though on detached duty a portion of the time in the hospital at City Point, Va., until the close of the war, being mustered out of the service June 9, 1865. This regiment, the 7th, had also been organized in May, 1862, to serve during the war. It became a part of the Eastern Army and saw active and hard service. Its engagements were: Fredericksburg, siege of Vicksburg, Jackson, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Spring Church and Hatcher's Run.

On the close of the war, after his military experience, Dr. Sprague returned to Rhode Island and in 1866 located in the practice of his profession in the town of Warwick, R. I. This has since been his field of labor, where he has long since established an extensive practice, in which he has met with well-deserved success; and though ever an active, busy business man, as well as a professional one, he has taken the time to attend to the duties devolving upon a good citizen. His affiliations have been with the Republican party. He became a member of the State Board of Health in 1878, has served as president of that body, and continues his membership therein. Along through the middle eighties his fellow-townsmen elected him to represent Warwick in the State Assembly. For twenty years, terminating in 1906, he was health officer, and for several years was a member of the council, of that town. He is a member of McGregor Post, G. A. R., at Phenix, R. I. He is also a member of the Warwick Club, and was formerly a member of the Providence Press Club and of the Providence Athletic Association. Dr. Sprague was a member of the Rhode Island Medical Society and of the Kent County Medical Society. He was prominent in the organization of the latter and in 1908 presented to the Society his extensive medical library. He commands the respect and esteem of the community in which he has so long moved and by which he has been so highly honored.

On Nov. 22, 1859, Dr. Sprague was married to Miss Ellen T. Duncan, of North Brookfield, Mass. Two children blessed the marriage, Albert D. and Mary E. D., both now deceased.

GLADDING. The Gladding family, so numerous in Rhode Island, is descended from (I) John Gladding, who is of record at Newbury, Mass., in 1666, as marrying July 17th of that year Elizabeth Rogers. It is claimed that Mr. Gladding came to Newbury in 1660-61, being at the time twenty years of age. He is found at Bristol, now in Rhode Island, in attendance at the first town meeting, held Sept. 1, 1681, at which the name Bristol was given to the settlement, and at which meeting seventy-six persons, Mr. Gladding included, were admitted as citizens by the four proprietors. The children of John and Elizabeth Gladding, of Newbury record, were: Susanna, born Oct. 6, 1668; John, Oct. 11, 1670; William, July 25, 1673; Elizabeth, Sept. 15, 1676; Mary, Jan. 14, 1679; and Hannah, Nov. 8, 1681. Additional children in record of Bristol were: Joshua, born May 6, 1685; Daniel, Nov. 8, 1687; and Sarah, Nov. 20, 1691. According to family manuscript, John Gladding died April 27, 1726, aged eighty-four years.

(II) John Gladding (2), son of John, born Oct. 11, 1670, married Alice, born Oct. 31, 1663, daughter of Uzell Wardwell, the latter being one of the persons who attended the first meeting of the town of Bristol referred to in the foregoing. Their children were: Mary, born Nov. 30, 1693; John, Sept. 8, 1694; William, Oct. 13, 1698; Jonathan, Jan. 5, 1700-01; Ebenezer, Dec. 8, 1702; Joseph, Oct. 2, 1704; Alice, March 24, 1705-06; Elizabeth, Sept. 13, 1708; Nathaniel, Dec. 16, 1709; Sarah (died May 27, 1712, aged eight days); and Sarah (2), May 2, 1715. The mother of these children died March 3, 1720.

(III) Joseph Gladding, son of John (2), born Oct. 2, 1704, in Bristol, R. I., married in 1726 (intention of marriage published July 2, 1726) Priscilla, born May 9, 1709, daughter of David and Elizabeth Cary, of Bristol, R. I. Their children were: Samuel; Joseph; Cary, born Dec. 10, 1732, in Newport; Jonathan, born Aug. 29, 1735, in Newport; Peter; Priscilla; David; Henry; Stephen; John; Benjamin; Ebenezer; Nathaniel and Alice.

(IV) John Gladding, son of Joseph, married and had children as follows: Elizabeth, Joseph, Henry and John.

(V) Captain John Gladding, son of John, spent his life in Newport, where he died aged eighty-one years. Early in life he became a fisherman, an occupation which he followed throughout his life. He married Alice Fowler, of Newport, where she died, and their children were: Rebecca, married Alexander Barker, a grocer of Newport, in which city both died; John, for many years a steamboat master, and later engaged in the grocery business in Bristol, died in that city at the age of seventy-four years; Phebe became the wife of Captain Hanney, and both died in Baltimore, Md.; Edward M.; Henry, who married Mary Ann Southwick, and died in Newport, was a fisherman by occupation; Betsey married George Taylor, a boat-builder of Newport, in which city they died; Thomas, who married Rebecca Thompson, was a fisherman, and died in Newport; Joseph, who was engaged in fishing in Newport, in which city he died, married (first) Mary Ann Linden, married (second) Hannah Dennis and married (third) Phenia Gladding; and William O., who served for many years as pilot of vessels, married (first) Harriet Vaughan, and (second) Sarina Briggs, and died in Newport.

(VI) Edward M. Gladding, son of Captain John, was born in 1801, in Newport, and died there Feb. 2, 1879. He was a sea captain, and commanded vessels running from Newport to New York. For many years he served on United States Government boats as a pilot. He married Mary Wood, daughter of John Wood, and she died in Newport, aged sixty-three years. Their children were as follows: Phebe A. is the widow of Eliab King, of Newport; Edward, a fisherman, married Abby Dunwell and died in Newport; John, who was a boat-builder by trade, an occupation which he followed in the city of Newport, where he died, was married to Mary Holt; Henry; Martin H.; and Thomas. Mr. Edward M. Gladding was a lifelong member of the Episcopal Church, and was known as an honest upright man and representative citizen.

(VII) HENRY GLADDING, son of Edward M., was born June 18, 1831, in Newport, and in his native city received his schooling. After leaving school he learned the trade of sail-maker with Edwin M. Townsend, in whose employ he remained for about three years, and then accepted a position at his trade with Benjamin Freeborne, continuing with this gentleman for a period of ten years. Mr. Gladding then formed a partnership with James Hogan, under the firm name of Hogan & Gladding and engaged in sail-making, a business which they conducted successfully for several years. After the Civil war Mr. Gladding engaged in the same business on his own account, opening a sail loft on Long Wharf, and there continued for a number of years, meeting with well-deserved success. In connection with this enterprise Mr. Gladding was also engaged in trap-fishing. Some years ago Mr. Gladding retired from active business life, and in 1895 he was appointed harbor master of Newport, a position which he has efficiently filled to the present time, also holding the office of Marine health officer. Mr. Gladding attends St. John's Episcopal Church, to which he gives his liberal support. In political faith he has been a life-long Republican.

In June, 1850, Captain Henry Gladding and Miss Matilda M. Wilkey were united in marriage. She was the daughter of Wanton Wilkey, and passed away in 1900 in Newport. Mr. and Mrs. Gladding had these children: Henry, who died in infancy; Emeline R., who married Joseph Fогarty, of Newport, in which city she died; Hattie, who married William F. Tripp, of Newport, where she died; Henry, Jr., a carpenter by trade, who died in Newport in 1901, and who married Mary Dennis, of Newport; Percy, who died in infancy; Alice, who died young; Lillie, who also died young; Mary, the wife of Ernest Boudreau, one of Newport's leading merchant tailors; and Wanton M., the efficient mechanical superintendent of the Morse Twist Mill & Machine Company, of New Bedford, Mass., who married Sarah Kaull, of Newport.

(VII) MARTIN HOWARD GLADDING was born April 10, 1833, in Newport, and after acquiring his educational training in the common schools of his native city, became apprenticed to the cabinet-maker's trade under Ernest Goffe, in whose employ he remained eleven years. Mr. Gladding then took up carpentering on his own account, and for several years was engaged in building and general jobbing. He finally gave up this occupation to engage in fishing, and in this connection he has continued for over forty years with success. Martin H. Gladding is one of the good citizens of his community. He is honest and upright in his dealings with his fellow men, and as a citizen has always been public-spirited.

On Jan. 11, 1852, Martin Howard Gladding and Mary Hannah Dennis, were united in marriage in Newport, she being the daughter of Peter and Hannah (Jouvet) Dennis, of this city. To Mr. and Mrs. Gladding there were born a family of seven children, three of whom died in childhood, the surviving four being: Romeo E., a clerk in the grocery business, died at the age of forty-three years in Newport, leaving a widow, Margaret (Crudden) Gladding, and two children, Fannie Margaret and Harry; Fannie Griffith, the wife of Joseph Willard Case, is a resident of Shelter Island, N. Y., and the mother of eleven children, ten of whom still survive; Edwin Martin, a carpenter and builder at Newport, married Annie MacDonald, of this city, and they have no children; and Louis Arnold, who is a printer by trade, being at present the efficient advertising compositor on the Newport Herald, married Jan. 1, 1907, Alma Jennings Case, of Shelter Island, New York.

(VII) THOMAS GLADDING, youngest child of Edward M. and Mary (Wood) Gladding, was born July 9, 1834, in Newport, and acquired a common-school education in the place of his nativity. Early in life he engaged in the meat and provision business, locating first in the building on Washington street, facing Bridge street, whence he removed to the corner of Washington and Bridge streets, finally locating in a store adjoining the "Perry House," on Washington Square. After a time he took his son into partnership with him, the firm name then becoming T. Gladding & Son, and this firm is still in existence, being now located at the corner of Washington and Bridge streets. Mr. Gladding was an industrious and enterprising business man, and as a result met with much success in the various enterprises with which he was connected. For a number of years he conducted a line of stages from the postoffice in Newport, on Broadway, to the "Mile Corner," or Middletown line, this being prior to the advent of the trolley line along this thoroughfare. He was also engaged in the ice business, and some time prior to his death engaged extensively in the real estate business, being very successful in this latter line to which his undivided attention was given in his later years. While engaged in the meat business, for a number of years he supplied the war vessels that entered Newport harbor. Some time before his death, Mr. Gladding's health began to fail, and while on his way to make a trip to the Bermuda Islands he dropped dead in the Mt. Vernon Hotel, Baltimore, Md., Dec. 9, 1886, his remains being brought to Newport for burial. In political faith Mr. Gladding was a stalwart Republican, but would never consent to accept political office.

Mr. Gladding married Elizabeth W., daughter of John Ring, of Newport, and she died in Newport, Feb. 12, 1895. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Gladding there were born children as follows: Renana, who died at the age of two years; Sidney B., mentioned below; Miss Ida Renana, who resides in Newport; Hattie Moore, the wife of Warren Evarts, steward of the "Astor House," New York; and Sanford Thomas.

(VIII) SIDNEY B. GLADDING, eldest son of the late Thomas and Elizabeth W. (Ring) Gladding, was born Aug. 14, 1855, in Newport, and received his education in the public schools of his native city. Upon leaving school at the age of fourteen years, he began working in his father's meat market, and continued in this capacity until 1880, when he was made a partner in the business, the firm becoming Thomas Gladding & Son. On the death of his father in 1886, Mr. Gladding became manager of the business for the heirs of his father, and he continued in that capacity until 1893, when he engaged in the meat business on his own account, opening a market at the corner of Spring and Touro streets, where he continued for three years, then selling out. Soon after retiring from business, Mr. Gladding was made foreman of the city highway department, and since that time has had charge of the city sprinkling.

Mr. Gladding is fraternally a member of St. John's Lodge No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; Newport Chapter No. 2, R. A. M., of which he served as steward for several years; DeBlois Council No. 5, R. and S. M.; of Washington Commandery No. 4, K. T., of which he was standard bearer for several years; of Palestine Temple, Order of the Mystic Shrine, of Providence; and of Aquidneck Chapter, Order of Eastern Star. Mr. Gladding also holds membership in Rhode Island Lodge, No. 12, and Aquidneck Encampment No. 5, I. O. O. F.; Weenat Shassit Tribe No. 6, Improved Order of Red Men; and Newport Lodge, No. 104, B. P. O. E. He has been a member of the Newport Artillery Company since 1872 on the roll of which he is now a "fine" member. He is also a member of the Philos. of East Greenwich Academy, which school he attended for a term when a young man. In political views Mr. Gladding is a Republican, but in town matters takes a neutral stand.

On June 26, 1879, Mr. Gladding was married to Josephine Steel, daughter of John and Mary (Beck) Steel of Newport. They have no children.

(VIII) SANFORD THOMAS GLADDING, who has been connected with the hotel business the greater part of his life, and who has been for several years steward of "The Breslin," one of New York's most fashionable hostelrys, is also a member of the firm of Thomas Gladding & Son, meat and provision dealers of Newport. Mr. Gladding married Miss Sadie Carry, daughter of the late William Carry of Newport, and three children have been born to this union: Anna Seabury, who died at the age of three and one-half years; Thomas, born in June, 1900; and Warren Evarts, born in February, 1905.

FARQUHAR MACRAE, late a well-known and successful florist of Providence, his greenhouses and residence being on Smith street, was born Jan. 12, 1843, in Ross-shire, near Inverness, Scotland, and his death occurred Feb. 21, 1905. His youth and early manhood were passed in his native land, and there he gained a practical knowledge of horticulture, which was later to gain him fortune and fame in his adopted country. He was employed in a number of large public and private parks and gardens, among these being the Conon gardens on the estate of Sir Kenneth MacKenzie. Aware of the advantages and opportunities which America afforded to the man of skill and industry, he sailed for the New World in 1870, landing on July 4th of that year. He at once located in Providence, where he was an entire stranger, having neither friend nor acquaintance. For some ten years he was employed at the Whitcomb garden at Riverside, and while there he devoted special attention to grape culture, and introduced the growing of that fruit under glass. Later he was in the wholesale florist business at the Chapin place on Smith street, where he was very successful. He next located on Smith street, west of his subsequent location, where he had previously purchased property. This he remodelled and fitted up for his line of business, and for fourteen years he carried on business at that location—or until the business outgrew the place—and seeking more room he purchased what is known as the "Crossman" place, where he resided until his death, and where his sons continue. Through his industry and ability he created one of the largest establishments of the kind in the United States. In this he had such assistance only as came from his own family, and to them he was ever ready to credit a large share of his success. His interests laid entirely in his home and in his business. He made many friends, who gave him their unstinted respect. He was emphatically a self-made man, and he left to posterity an example well worthy of emulation. His life was strictly in accordance with his early Scotch training, and he held to high moral standards and was strictly temperate in all things. He was a member of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, and in the annual displays, his exhibits were always a prominent feature, and attracted much attention.

In June, 1882, Mr. Macrae was married to Esther S. Swan, a native of Nova Scotia, and the children born of this union were: Alexander; Walter S., who married Ida Fisher, and has one child, Margaret Esther; Violet E., who married Robert W. Lister, of Providence; Lillian E.; Marjorie M.; Farquhar Arthur, and Edith I. Ellen Mary, a daughter of Mr. Macrae by a former marriage, is the wife of Stephen H. Boss, of Providence. Of the sons, Alexander and Walter S. continue the business under the old name of F. Macrae & Sons, and they are regarded as progressive and successful business men, worthy sons of their father.

The breaking of the young man's neck in the socket, especially if he goes to any length as I have done, is a rather delicate matter. Arunah Grant, son of Eliphaz, born Aug. 12, 1792, married Eliza Darling, of Wrentham, Mass.; the union was blessed with a number of children, the following surviving youth: William H., Charles E. and George H. Arunah Grant early left his home in Cumberland on what is known as Diamond Hill Plains. He was a machinist by occupation, and at one time was in business with Mr. Cook, under the firm name of Cook & Grant. They carried on business in Woonsocket where Mr. Grant made his home, and where he died in 1860.

Geo. H. Grant

GRANT (Woonsocket family). Since the very beginning of the town of Cumberland as a subdivision in Rhode Island, approximately one hundred and fifty years ago, the name of Grant has been known to the locality, and the family been a continuous one; and the name and family antedate this period in that region of country in and about "Gore Land" in the neighboring State of Massachusetts, a name by which the territory now Cumberland was known prior to the time of its becoming the territory of Rhode Island. In referring to the Grants we write of the particular Woonsocket family—that branch descending through the late Eliphaz and Arunah Grant, father and son, long substantial men and useful citizens of the communities referred to, some of whose sons and grandsons are still active in business and in citizenship in that locality. Reference is made especially to the family of Hon. George H. Grant, of Woonsocket, himself long and prominently identified with that town and city, a veteran of the Civil war, the city's first Chief Executive officer and otherwise officially connected with it, long superintendent of the Eagle Mills, and whose death occurred March 2, 1908.

Capt. John Grant, son of Asa, and grandson of an emigrant from Scotland, moved from Wrentham, Mass., to Goshen, in 1769. This emigrant, whose Christian name is unknown to us, had sons, Benjamin, Joseph, Asa, Moses and Ebenezer, of whom Moses went to Boston. Asa and wife removed to Fairfield, Vt., where they were living in 1807.

Through Ebenezer Grant, of Wrentham, beyond whom we have no knowledge, descended the Woonsocket Grants alluded to, several of his sons marrying in Cumberland, R. I., namely: (1) Jabez, May 3, 1790, to Dorcas Blanding; (2) Beriah, Dec. 26, 1790, to Elizabeth Rhodes; (3) Aaron, Nov. 23, 1794, to Dorcas Aldrich; (4) Eliphaz, May 18, 1800, to Mary, daughter of Simon Whipple, and to them, according to Cumberland town records, were born children as follows: Arunah (born Aug. 12, 1802), Amos (born March 10, 1804), Polly (born July 13, 1805), Eliza or Elizabeth (born Sept. 25, 1807), Warren (born Sept. 5, 1809) and Amasa Smith (of Pawtucket, born May 29, 1822, died Dec. 19, 1885).

Arunah Grant, son of Eliphaz, born Aug. 12, 1802, married Eliza Darling, of Wrentham, Mass., and the union was blessed with a number of children, the following surviving youth: William H., Charles E. and George H. Arunah Grant early made his home in Cumberland on what is known as Diamond Hill Plains. He was a machinist by occupation, and at one time was in business with a Mr. Cook, under the firm name of Cook & Grant. They carried on business in Woonsocket where Mr. Grant made his home, and where he died in 1860, at the age of fifty-eight. His remains were laid to rest in Oak Hill cemetery. In politics he was first a Whig and later a Republican, and was strongly opposed to slavery. His religious connection was with the Congregational Church; his fraternal with Morning Star Lodge, A. F. & A. M.

GEORGE H. GRANT, son of Arunah and Eliza (Darling) Grant, born Dec. 11, 1837, in Woonsocket, R. I., married in 1865, Ellen F., daughter of Franklin Rand, Esq., of Pawtucket, Rhode Island. Their children were: Harriet E., wife of James E. Pratt, of Woonsocket; George F.; Edwin S.; Ellen F.; and William H.

Mr. Grant received his education in the public schools of Woonsocket, the Smithfield Seminary at North Scituate, R. I., and at the Woonsocket high school, from which latter institution he was graduated. Following the closing of his school period he served a three years' apprenticeship at the machinist's trade in the machine shop of the late Hon. Edward Harris, of Woonsocket. He was next found employed at his trade in Woonsocket and Providence, respectively.

The breaking out of the Civil war found the young machinist at the time employed in Woonsocket, espousing his country's cause and ready to go to her defense. He was enrolled at Providence as Ensign in Company K, First Regiment Detached Militia, April 17, 1861, and he was mustered into the United States service May 2d following. This was Col. Burnside's regiment, one composed of the choicest material—the flower of the State—and it achieved a national reputation, and in the fiery ordeal of the conflict at Bull Run, was highly commended for bravery and fortitude in the day of battle. After bearing an honorable part in the three months' service for which he enlisted, Ensign Grant was mustered out Aug. 2, 1861, returning to his home, not, however, to resume his trade, for the times were then too stirring for him to be simply a looker on to what seemed to be the approaching hour of earnest warfare, but to rally his fellow citizens about the flag. Raising a company which was merged into the Fifth Regiment, Rhode Island Heavy Artillery, of which he became captain, he was commissioned as such Nov. 30, 1861, and was mustered into service Dec. 26th following. The Fifth was organized in the fall of 1861, being enlisted as a battalion, as a part of Gen. Burnside's Coast Division, with the ultimate design of being made a full regiment. The battalion soon departed to join the expedition to North Carolina. Suffice it to say that during its long term of service—lasting until the summer of 1865—the Fifth bore an active and gallant part in defense of the Union, having participated in the following engagements: Roanoke Island, Fort Macon (siege), Rowan's Mill, first Rebel attack on Newbern, Kinston, Whitehall, Goldsboro, Little Washington (siege), and second attack on Newbern. Capt. Grant was present at a number of the earlier engagements enumerated, and bore an honorable part as long as his health permitted him to remain in active service. Resigning his commission Aug. 6, 1862, he returned to his native town and resumed his trade, soon after being made foreman of the machine shops and foundry of the late Hon. Edward Harris. Three years later he accepted an engagement with the Groton Manufacturing Company as foreman of their machine shops, and continued this relation for one year, after which he became the superintendent of the mills. In 1873 this industry was re-organized as the Eagle Mills, of which he was until his death the efficient superintendent.

From his very boyhood Capt. Grant was an active and zealous Republican. For several years his fellow citizens elected him to the town council (being a member of the first town council), and on the incorporation of Woonsocket as a city, they honored him with election as its first mayor, a relation he sustained to the municipality for one year. He was a member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 1269, A. F. & A. M.; Woonsocket Commandery, Knights Templar; Knights of Honor; Woonsocket Lodge, No. 10, I. O. O. F.; and Smith Post, No. 9, G. A. R., all of Woonsocket. His removal from the scenes of his life's activities was deeply deplored by all who knew him.

George F. Grant, son of Capt. George H., was educated in the public and high schools of Woonsocket, and learned the trade of machinist, which he has since followed, being now master mechanic at the Eagle Mills. He is a member of Morning Star Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and Woonsocket Commandery, Knights Templar. He married Emeline Pickering, and has two children—Ray M. and Doris.

Edwin Stanton Grant, second son of Capt. George H., received his education in the schools at Woonsocket, and is now overseer at the Eagle Mills. He is a staunch Republican in politics, and is a member of the board of aldermen of Woonsocket. He married Emily Darling, daughter of Henry Darling, and they have two children, Thelma and Norman Channing.

Ellen F. Grant, daughter of Capt. George H., attended both public and high school at Woonsocket, and then completed her studies in the Friends School at Providence. She married Henry S. Manger, and they reside in Philadelphia. They have one son, D. Grant.

William H. Grant, youngest son of Capt. George H., acquired his education in the public schools of Woonsocket, the Friends School at Providence, and in Haverford College, Philadelphia. He is now holding a responsible position in Boston, Mass. He was division superintendent of the blower department of the B. F. Sturdevant Company, of Hyde Park, Mass. He married Louise Beaumont Wootton.

GARDNER M. YOUNGMAN. Among those prominent in manufacturing and industrial circles in the town of Hopkinton none is more conspicuous than Gardner M. Youngman, who, in less than a year, converted an idle mill into a profitable enterprise. No better illustration can be given of what a young man may accomplish in a short time by indomitable will and untiring efforts.

Gardner M. Youngman is a young man. He was born at Antesfort, Lycoming Co., Pa., Aug. 16, 1879, son of G. W. and Margaret (Mahaffey) Youngman, and is one of a family of five, the other children being: May, Reynolds, Ralph and Charley. His boyhood was passed in his native town and he received private instruction from a governess until he was twelve years old, at which age he entered the public schools, and later the High school at Williamsport, Pa. After this he attended for three terms the Textile School of Lowell, Mass., to prepare himself thoroughly for the business he contemplated entering. Upon completing his textile course, Mr. Youngman was employed for three years with the Taylor Manufacturing Company, of Hope Valley, and in August, 1905, he purchased the property owned by the late Amos G. Nichols, which had been constructed for a cotton mill, and converted it into a woolen factory. Mr. Youngman believes that a man should have a practical as well as a technical knowledge of whatever he undertakes, and it can be said that for thorough and comprehensive understanding of the business in which he is engaged is unsurpassed. He is known far and wide as a good citizen, and his honesty and integrity have never been questioned.

JACKSON. The Jacksons of Providence have been a continuous family here since the Colonial period and have been among the substantial families of the ancient town, village and later city of Providence, prominent in business and social life, and as well in public affairs. Of the particular branch of which we write, some of the descendants of Stephen Jackson, an educated gentleman, such names as Capt. Richard, Capt. Stephen, Hon. Richard, Gov. Charles and Richard W. will long live in the State's annals.

From an examination of the Records of Births, Marriages and Deaths in Providence and other towns of the State; of papers and archives of the Rhode Island Historical Society; of the files of the Providence Gazette, a newspaper printed in Providence commencing in 1762; of the records of wills, and administrators of estates in the Probate office of the city of Providence, we have been enabled to learn much of Stephen Jackson, schoolmaster, and his descendants.

(1) Stephen Jackson (born Oct. 11, (O. S.)

1700, died July 22, 1765), schoolmaster, came to this country in the early part of the eighteenth century, probably about the year 1723-24, from Kilkenny, Ireland. He took up his residence first in North Kings Town, R. I., and in the records of that town his marriage is recorded as follows: "Stephen Jackson married to Anne Boone, daughter of Samuel and Mary Boone, of North Kingstown, August 15, 1725." She was born in North Kingstown Sept. 18, 1709, thus making her but sixteen years old when she was married. She died in Pomfret, Conn., Jan. 30, 1782, whither she had gone to live with her son, Richard, who had bought a farm there at the outbreak of the American Revolution. Her gravestone in Pomfret reads as follows: "In memory of Mrs. Anne Jackson, relict of Stephen Jackson, Esq., late of Providence, dec., and mother of Richard Jackson, with whom she lived some time in Pomfret, well respected by those who knew her, and died Jan. 30, 1782, in the 73d year of her age." Stephen Jackson, in 1745, leased a piece of land in Providence and partly built a house thereon, but before the house was finished he sold his interest in the lease and the unfinished house to Thomas Arnold, of Smithfield, R. I. In January, 1753, he bought a lot of land of John Mawney, on the easterly side of Benefit street, bounding northerly on the land of Jabez Bowen, Esq., southerly on other land of Mawney's, and fronting forty feet on Benefit street. He built a house there, and on April 10, 1754, he sold one-half the lot and one-half the house up and down to his son Samuel, who was a cooper. In 1752 the records show that Stephen Jackson leased of the town the old town school house on the west side of North Main street, opposite the Court House parade. That he was a highly educated man is clearly shown from a "Book on Navigation," bearing the date of March 10, 1762, and written by him. Aside from the difficult problems worked out, the work is full of beautiful drawings and highly ornate capital letters. This volume is highly prized by its possessor, Benjamin A. Jackson, of Providence. The children of Stephen and Anne (Boone) Jackson were: (1) George, born in North Kingstown Nov. 12, 1726, (O. S.), married Lydia Harris, daughter of Toleration and Sarah Harris. He died in Providence, March 1, 1769. He was a prominent man in Providence, being several times elected Deputy to the Colonial Assembly, and was a member of the Town Council of Providence. He left a will leaving his property to his wife Lydia, son Joseph and daughter Lydia. His widow died March 31, 1777. (2) Samuel, born in 1728, died Sept. 6, 1811. He never married and left all his property to his sister, Elizabeth Lanksford, for her life, and after her death to her daughter, Susan Cole. (3) David married, Oct. 9, 1751, Deborah Field. (4) Richard, born May 10, 1731, died Dec. 29, 1818. (5) Mary, born July 31, 1734, married Nov. 7, 1759, Ezekiel Burr. (6) Anne, born Nov.

12, 1736, died Nov. 20, 1753. (7) Judith, born Nov. 14, 1738, married Feb. 7, 1759, Simeon Thayer, and died April 28, 1771. (8) Stephen was born in Providence Sept. 18, 1741. (9) Elizabeth, born May 23, 1743, married April 21, 1766, William Lanksford, and died Jan. 27, 1812. (10) Susanna, born Aug. 23, 1745, died in June, 1772. (11) Thomas, born in 1747, married, Sept. 14, 1778, Mary Brown, and died in 1835. (12) Sarah, born in 1750, married, in 1772, Tilly Merrick Olney, and died in September, 1785. (13) Nancy, born Nov. 8, 1754, died March 9, 1803. She married (first) in 1785, John Angell; (second) on April 8, 1790, Simeon Thayer; and (third) Darius Daniels, of Cumberland, R. I.

(II) Capt. Richard Jackson was born May 10, 1731, and on Dec. 31, 1760, he married Susan Waterman, a widow with one daughter, Molly Waterman. She was born Feb. 14, 1733, and died Dec. 21, 1806. He was a man of note in Providence, frequently a member of the Town Council. He died Dec. 29, 1818. The children born to Richard and Susan (Waterman) Jackson: (1) Nathan W., born Sept. 15, 1761, married Oct. 4, 1804, Mark Anthony, and died Dec. 8, 1829. (2) Stephen, born May 23, 1763, died Jan. 7, 1820. (3) Richard, born July 3, 1764, died April 18, 1838. On March 19, 1795, he married Abby Wheaton. He was a successful merchant and manufacturer in Providence, president of the Washington Insurance Company for many years, trustee of Brown University, and a representative in Congress, Xth, XIth, XIIth and XIIIth sessions. (4) William, born Jan. 27, 1766, died Aug. 27, 1815. (5) George, born June 14, 1771, died March 14, 1834. (6) Susan, born June 4, 1774, married Oct. 3, 1793, Benjamin Aborn. (7) Phebe, born Oct. 6, 1775, married, Sept. 23, 1798, Samuel Arnold, of Smithfield, R. I., and died Nov. 5, 1821.

(III) Captain Stephen Jackson, born May 23, 1763, died Jan. 7, 1820. He married Sophia Graves, daughter of Rev. John Graves, rector of St. John's Church. In early life he was the owner of a vessel in the West India trade. For many years he was cashier of the Exchange Bank of Providence. The later years of his life he lived in Thompson, Conn., and his death occurred while he was on his way from Providence to his home there. The children born to Capt. Stephen and Sophia (Graves) Jackson were: (1) John Graves, born March 18, 1794, died Oct. 18, 1860. (2) Susan Waterman, born July 2, 1797, died April 9, 1841. (3) Stephen Matthew, born April 23, 1799, died Nov. 3, 1868. (4) Anna, born Jan. 13, 1801, died Aug. 19, 1869. (5) Richard William, born June 4, 1803, died Feb. 17, 1871. (6) Sophia Elizabeth, born Sept. 15, 1805, died in 1869. (7) Louisa, born Jan. 5, 1809, died July 12, 1895.

(IV) Richard William Jackson was born June 4, 1803, and died Feb. 17, 1871. On Oct. 1, 1827, he married, in Providence, Susan Potter Aborn, born Feb. 18, 1804, died June 10, 1874, daughter of Edward Aborn. To this union were born children as follows: (1) Susan Aborn, born Aug. 27, 1828, died Aug. 17, 1848. (2) Stephen, born Dec. 16, 1831, died March 9, 1833. (3) Charles Edward, born Feb. 22, 1834, died May 26, 1898. On Jan. 5, 1881, he married Estelle Rose Weaver. He was educated in Lyon & Frieze's School in Providence. For a while he was in a wholesale grocery in Providence, and for many years teller and later cashier of the Bank of North America in Providence. (4) Sarah Elizabeth, born April 3, 1837, died April 21, 1878. She married William H. Taylor, and had children: William H., John T., Gustavus, Charles J. and Richard J. (5) Benjamin Aborn was born Feb. 8, 1848. For several years Richard William Jackson was engaged in the dry goods commission business in Philadelphia, Pa. After returning to Providence, he served as secretary of the Providence Washington Insurance Company, and later was secretary and then president of the Roger Williams Insurance Company of Providence. In his political belief he was a Democrat, and in his religious connection an Episcopalian.

(V) BENJAMIN ABORN JACKSON, one of the best known men in financial circles in Rhode Island, was born in Providence Feb. 8, 1848. He was educated in private schools, and Merrick and Emery Lyon's school which stood at the corner of College and Prospect streets, where now stands the administration building of Brown University. On Sept. 28, 1864, at the age of sixteen years, he became a clerk in the banking house of B. M. Jackson & Co., then consisting of B. M. Jackson, Henry Pearce and Dwight I. Brown. After the death of B. M. Jackson in 1869, Messrs. Pearce and Brown carried on the business for two years, when the firm was succeeded by D. I. Brown & Co., of which Mr. Jackson was a partner for four years, and in turn succeeded by Wilbour, Jackson & Co., and is today known as the Providence Banking Company, of which Mr. Jackson is the treasurer. From 1864 to 1903 he occupied one business location. He was president of the Globe National Bank, and a director of the Weybosset National Bank. In 1875 he became a director of the Union Railroad Company, and is now president of the United Traction Company, the Rhode Island Suburban Railroad Company and other companies; and is a director of the Denver Tramway Company.

Since 1883 Mr. Jackson has been a member of the Union League Club of New York, and since 1883 of the Hope Club of Providence. He also belongs to the Squantum Club. For some time he served as a trustee of the Rhode Island College.

Mr. Jackson was married to Lucy Anna Greene, daughter of Hon. Henry L. Greene, of Riverpoint, R. I. (sketch of whom appears elsewhere), and they have become the parents of two sons and one daughter: Henry Greene, born June 12, 1883, member of the class of 1906, Brown University; Donald, born July 16, 1886, member of the class of 1909, Brown University; and Lucy Aborn, born Dec. 17, 1891.

SHERMAN. The New England family bearing this name has given to the country at large men who have written their names high upon the roll of fame. Such names as Roger Sherman, of Connecticut, of the earlier period, and the two Ohio Shermans, of a later time, will long live in the history of their country. Here, too, in Rhode Island, have been representatives of the family whose achievements will not soon be forgotten, among them the Hon. Sylvester G. Sherman, lawyer, representative, speaker of the House, and a justice of the Supreme court of that State; Major-Gen. Thomas W. Sherman, U. S. A., and Hon. Robert Sherman, long a journalist of this Commonwealth, and as well a former United States marshal for the district of Rhode Island.

The Shermans are of German origin. In the Fatherland the name Sherman, Schierman, etc., often occurs, and was no doubt transferred to London and vicinity many centuries ago by the Anglo-Saxon emigrants, where it is still numerous. From the metropolitan stock a scion was transplanted to Dedham, County of Essex, England, which long flourished and sent out other shoots. The name is derived from the original occupation of the family: They were cloth dressers or shearers of the cloth. The family at Dedham retained the occupation of the family and also the coat of arms worn by those in and about London. In New England are found two distinct families bearing the name of Sherman. One of these descends from William Sherman, who came with the Pilgrims about 1630, and settled at Marshfield, Mass. The other is the Dedham stock, a branch of which emigrated to New England and settled in the vicinity of Boston. This article is to treat especially of the ancestry and family of Mr. Albert K. Sherman, of Newport, one of that city's leading business men and substantial citizens.

(I) Hon. Phillip Sherman, of the Dedham line, born Feb. 5, 1610, in Dedham, England, married Sarah Odding, daughter of Mrs. John Oding Porter, by a former husband. In 1634 Mr. Sherman came to New England and settled at Roxbury, Mass. In the Anne Hutchinson trouble at Boston he took the popular side, but as Governor Winthrop prevailed he, with others, found it convenient to remove to Rhode Island. In Providence they met Roger Williams, who advised them to purchase the island of Aquetuct (Aquidneck), now Rhode Island, of the Indians. The purchase was completed March 24, 1638. On July 1, 1639, they established a regular government with William Coddington, governor, and Phillip Sherman, secretary. After this he often held office in the Colony, and in critical periods. After he had removed to

Albert W. Sherman

Rhode Island he left the Congregational Church and united with the Society of Friends.

Phillip Sherman was a son of Samuel, a grandson of Henry, and a great-grandson of Henry, of Dedham, County of Essex, England, who had probably removed there from the County of Suffolk, as he bore the Suffolk coat of arms. Phillip Sherman died in Portsmouth, R. I., in 1687. His children were: Eber, Sarah, Peleg, Mary, Edmund, Samson, William, John, Mary, Hannah, Samuel, Benjamin and Phillip.

(II) Samson Sherman, son of Phillip, was born in 1642, in Portsmouth, R. I., and married March 4, 1675, Isabel Tripp, born in 1651, daughter of John and Mary (Paine) Tripp. They lived and died in Portsmouth, he dying June 27, 1718, and she in 1716. Their children were: Phillip, born Jan. 16, 1676; Sarah, Sept. 24, 1677; Alice, Jan. 12, 1680; Samson, Jan. 28, 1682; Abiel, Oct. 15, 1684; Isabel, in 1686; and Job.

(III) Job Sherman, son of Samson, was born Nov. 8, 1687, in Portsmouth, R. I., and married (first) Dec. 23, 1714, Bridget Gardiner, of Kingstown, and (second) in 1732, Amie Spencer, of East Greenwich, R. I. Mr. Sherman had these children: Philip, born Dec. 12, 1715; Israel, Oct. 31, 1717; Mary, Jan. 16, 1719; Job, May 2, 1722; Bridget, May 7, 1724; Sarah, Oct. 29, 1726; Alice, April 25, 1728; Mary, Oct. 13, 1730—all to the first marriage; and to the second marriage—Amie, born May 27, 1734; Benjamin, Sept. 14, 1735; Samson, July 23, 1737; Martha, Nov. 28, 1738; Walter, Aug. 20, 1740; Dorcas, Nov. 2, 1742; and Abigail, Sept. 10, 1744. The father died in Portsmouth, Nov. 16, 1747.

(IV) Samson Sherman, son of Job, was born July 23, 1737, in Portsmouth, R. I., and married Dec. 9, 1761, Ruth Fish, daughter of David and Jemimah (Tallman) Fish, of Portsmouth. He died Jan. 24, 1801, in Portsmouth, where his life has been spent engaged in agricultural pursuits. His children were: (1) Walter, born April 4, 1763, married Rebecca Anthony, of Portsmouth. (2) Amy, born Jan. 5, 1764, married Daniel Anthony, of Portsmouth. (3) Job is mentioned below. (4) Susanna, born Oct. 19, 1767, married Peleg Almy, of Portsmouth. (5) Hannah, born Jan. 27, 1769, married Jonathan Dennis, of Portsmouth. (6) Anne, born Nov. 19, 1770, married Nathan Chase, of Portsmouth. (7) David, born June 2, 1772, married Waite Sherman, of Portsmouth. (8) Ruth, born Oct. 21, 1773, died in infancy. (9) Ruth (2), born Feb. 20, 1778, married Obediah Davis, of New Bedford, Mass. (10) Asa, born Dec. 22, 1779, married Eliza Mitchell, of Portsmouth. (11) Abigail, born April 2, 1782, married Abram Davis, of Fair Haven, Mass. (12) Mary, born Nov. 18, 1783, married David Shove, of Berkeley, Rhode Island.

(V) Job Sherman, son of Samson, was born Jan. 21, 1766, in Portsmouth, and died Jan. 24, 1848, in Newport. In early life he engaged in farming and in teaching school, continuing until 1796, when he removed to Newport and there engaged in the dry goods business under the name of Job Sherman, continuing successfully in that business until his death. In 1798 he removed to Nos. 135 and 137 Thames street, in which location the business has since been continued—it now being conducted by the firm of William Sherman & Co. Upon his death, in 1848, Job Sherman's sons, William and David, continued the business under the present style, William Sherman & Co. Mr. Sherman was a capable, conservative business man, and as a citizen was honored and respected and the good name which he established in business has since been upheld by his successors. In political faith Job Sherman was a staunch old-line Whig, and although he never sought public office he was always ready to assist every project that promised to be of benefit to the community. He was one of the original trustees of the Savings Bank of Newport, and served in that capacity for a number of years. He was a devout member of the Friends and served many years as a trustee of the Friends' Society of Newport.

Mr. Sherman was married Dec. 9, 1795, to Miss Alice Anthony, born June 9, 1772, daughter of Isaac and Rebecca Anthony, of Portsmouth. She died March 11, 1826, aged fifty-three years, nine months. To this union were born children as follows: Rebecca, born Nov. 9, 1796, died unmarried; Benjamin, born Feb. 10, 1798, died Jan. 5, 1821; Eliza, born Nov. 14, 1799, died unmarried; William, born Dec. 5, 1801, died Feb. 16, 1885, unmarried (he succeeded his father in the dry goods business, in which his life was actively spent); Samson, born April 9, 1804, died young; James, born March 23, 1806, a tailor by trade, died in South America of Yellow fever, unmarried; David, born May 19, 1808, died Nov. 26, 1866, unmarried (he was associated with his brother William in the dry goods business); Edward, born Nov. 4, 1809, died Dec. 5, 1865 (he married Elizabeth M. Almy, of Newport); Alice, born April 28, 1812, married Richard Cornell, who died Dec. 27, 1891, and she died Feb. 26, 1894; Albert, born Aug. 14, 1815, is mentioned below; one son died in infancy; Rowland, born April 12, 1818, married Rachel Simmons and (second) Mary A. Wright, and died Sept. 8, 1892.

(VI) Albert Sherman, son of Job, was born Aug. 14, 1815, in Newport. In early life he learned the trade of sailmaker, an occupation which he followed for a number of years. For several years he was engaged in that business in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he continued until 1841, in that year returning to Newport and establishing himself in the dry goods business on lower Thames street. He continued in this line, meeting with deserved success. Mr. Sherman was never a strong or rugged man, and for many years was in feeble health, although he continued to be actively engaged in business. In political views he was a Republican, but on account of his ill health never sought public recognition. He was for many years a director in the Merchants' Bank of Newport, and took an active interest in the Newport Hospital, which he had been influential in establishing. He was a consistent and devout member of the Society of Friends.

On Sept. 2, 1841, Mr. Sherman married Sarah Catherine Marble, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah A. (Holt) Marble, of Newport. She died Sept. 15, 1889, aged seventy-two years, while Mr. Sherman died June 30, 1884. Two children were born to this union: Alice Anthony, who died at the age of two years, and Albert Keene.

(VII) ALBERT KEENE SHERMAN, son of Albert, was born March 17, 1844, in Newport. He attended private schools in his native city, after which for four years he was a student at H. H. Fay's private school of Newport. Leaving school in 1861, he became a clerk in the grocery store of Capt. Oliver Potter, in whose employ he remained for about one year. On May 6, 1862, Mr. Sherman became a clerk in the dry goods store of William Sherman & Co., and he continued thus until the death of Mr. David Sherman, in 1866, when he was made a partner in the business. In 1873 Thomas G. Brown was also admitted to the firm as a partner, and since the death of William Sherman, in 1885, the well-known and old-established business of William Sherman & Co. has been successfully conducted by the present owners, Albert K. Sherman and Thomas G. Brown. The firm handles a fine line of foreign and domestic dry goods, etc., and has one of the finest trades in the State.

Mr. Sherman is one of Newport's most substantial and influential citizens. He is a director of the Newport National Bank; a trustee of the Savings Bank of Newport; a director of the Aquidneck Mutual Insurance Company, and a trustee of Long Wharf of Newport. He is a member of the Newport Historical Society, the Natural History Society, the Redwood Library and Athenæum, and has taken a very active part in the Young Men's Christian Association of Newport, which he has served as treasurer for a number of years. Much of the success of this organization in Newport is due to his untiring efforts. Mr. Sherman is a consistent member of the Central Baptist Church (now the Second Baptist), and has served for a number of years as clerk of the church. In politics he is a staunch Republican, but has never sought public office. During its existence he was a member of the Business Men's Association.

On Sept. 3, 1874, Mr. Sherman married Miss Mary Eliza Barker, daughter of Robinson P. and Julia Ann (Peckham) Barker, of Middletown, R. I., and three children were born to this union: Kate Robinson, born Aug. 16, 1875, who died April 6, 1879; William Anthony, born May 12, 1877; and Edwin Albert, born July 16, 1879. The latter was graduated from Harvard College in 1901, with the degree of A. M., and is now discount clerk of the Newport Trust Company. He has also served as a member of the school committee of Newport, and in 1906, at the first election held under the new charter granted the city of Newport, he was elected a member of the representative council from the Third ward for the three-year term. William Anthony Sherman was graduated from Harvard College in the class of 1899, and from Harvard Medical School in 1902, with the degree of M. D., after which he opened an office for the practice of his chosen profession in Newport, where he has met with great success, having a large and growing patronage. He is a member of the medical staff of the Newport Hospital. Dr. Sherman is a director of the Union National Bank of Newport, and a member of the Medical Society. On June 25, 1902, he married Katherine M. Kennedy, of Scranton, Pa., daughter of William and Amelia (Carter) Kennedy, and to this union one son has come, William Albert, born May 12, 1903.

Albert K. Sherman is well known and thoroughly respected by all with whom he has come into contact. He is an honest, single-minded, firm-hearted, public-spirited Christian gentleman, uniting in his personality a rare combination of qualities which are fitted to command the respect and win the confidence of his fellow-men. Though quiet and unassuming in his manner, he is none the less affable and courteous. Of a domestic nature, he is much devoted to the surroundings of his home. His knowledge of current events is broad, and he is an admirer and patron of standard literature, his library being an extensive one.

BLIVEN. The Bliven family is an ancient and an honored one in New England. It is descended from the brothers, Joshua, James and Edward, who came from England to Salem, Mass., some time prior to 1650. By some members of the family it is claimed that it is descended from Welsh nobility, but there is more probability that the family comes from the German family of Bliven, several of whom were men of fame—one a musician of great note, and another an explorer of Iceland, reaching a point then farthest north. To each was granted the prefix "Von."

The earliest record of the family in America is the conveyance of property by James Bliven to his wife Bridget Oliver, at Salem, where the original parchment is displayed upon the wall at Essex Institute.

Joshua Bliven was of Newport in 1669 as master of the ship "Polly." He had sons, Edward and James. James Bliven, son of Joshua, married Margery Cord. This James located at Westerly, Rhode Island, where his son James lived, and among the latter's children was Perry. From him descend the late Benjamin James Bliven, who for some years was prominent in New England musical circles, and the latter's sons, well-known and respected business men of Providence.

Capt. Perry Bliven, son of James, married at Newport, R. I., Sept. 7, 1800, Sally Clark, and to that union there came six children as follows: Hannah, who died at the age of fifteen years in 1815; Sally, who married Samuel Morgan, a contractor of Providence; Susan, who married a Mr. Dawley and her children of Newport record were: Amy, Perry, Theodore F. and Florine (twins), and Martha Jane; Mary Ann, who married Walter Simmons, of Newport, and had one son Walter (deceased); Martha Jane, who married Joseph Coit, of Bristol, R. I. (they had no children); and Benjamin James, of whom more follows. Capt. Perry Bliven, the father, was a sea-faring man and master of a vessel plying between Newport and New York. He died on board ship of cholera. He was a man of no little importance in his day, and an oil portrait shows him to have been a man of much physical vigor, of intelligent and pleasing features, a strong jaw, and determined mouth. His widow married second a Mr. Shaw, and lived to an advanced age.

Benjamin James Bliven, youngest child of Capt. Perry, was born in Newport, Oct. 14, 1812. On Oct. 20, 1828, then a lad of sixteen, he was apprenticed or bound out for a period of five years to one Edward S. Underwood, a painter and glazier, of Providence. In the article of indenture (the original is in the possession of Mr. Charles P. Bliven, of Providence) it is provided that the lad receive the sum of thirty dollars per year for his services, out of which he must clothe himself, and that he be permitted to attend school at night for three months of the year. After the expiration of the five years, Mr. Bliven continued at the calling for a short time, but soon his commercial instinct manifested itself, and he engaged in business for himself, first in an amusement enterprise on Westminster street at the point where Dorrance street now intersects.

From early age Mr. Bliven displayed marked musical inclination and acted as a drummer boy with a Newport organization when so small that it was necessary that he stand upon a table or chair to give him sufficient elevation. Through his boyhood his leisure was given to advancing himself in musical accomplishments, and no doubt had he been capably instructed he would have won a high place in musical renown. As it was he became quite skilled, and was regarded as an artist upon several instruments, and was the leader in early musical circles. He was the founder and organizer of the Providence Brass Band, the first organization of its kind in America (1832), Mr. Bliven playing the solo trombone. His instrument was an imported one, and the first of its kind in America, and is now in possession of his son, Charles P.

Bliven. Mr. Bliven devoted very much of his time and attention to music and musical organizations, and his name is frequently found in this connection in Rhode Island publications of issue from 1820 to 1853.

For some years prior to his death, which occurred Nov. 26, 1853, he was the proprietor of the Ocean cottage on the cliffs at Newport, where he conducted a place of amusement and entertainment, and which was frequented by lovers of music, in the summer months.

Mr. Bliven married Eliza Soule, daughter of Charles and Mary Ann Lake. The latter was a daughter of John and Sarah Slocum, and descended from old and distinguished ancestry concerning whom account is given elsewhere. Mrs. Bliven was born in Providence, Dec. 25, 1812, and died Dec. 31, 1906. Their children were: (1) Benjamin J., Jr., born Aug. 30, 1835, married Ann Francis Scott, and their children were: Anna L.; Adelaide; and Earl B., who married Gertrude Mitchell, has a son, Raymond Earl, born Aug. 5, 1897, and resides in Providence. (2) Charles Perry was born Aug. 4, 1838. (3) Pitts Smith, born Nov. 8, 1840, married Victorine Sprague, and had two sons, Pitts A. (deceased) and Charles P. By a previous marriage Mr. Bliven had a daughter, Estell Thayer Bliven. (4) Ellen M., born Aug. 5, 1843, married Dexter D. Pierce Oct. 1, 1866, and died May 4, 1907. (5) Roger Williams, born Jan. 28, 1846, married M. Ida Peckham Jan. 23, 1873. Their children are Roger Newton and Avis Edna. (6) Mary Eliza, born Jan. 24, 1849, married George S. Ross, Dec. 3, 1872.

CHARLES PERRY BLIVEN, born Aug. 4, 1838, in Providence, received his education in the grammar schools of the city. While still a youth he sought employment by which he might aid in the family maintenance, beginning in the shipping and packing department of the New England Screw Company. Shortly after this he decided to learn the trade of a plumber, but after two years in which he had been given but little opportunity to acquire practical knowledge of the calling he abandoned it and sought other fields of endeavor. With his slender accumulations he purchased an interest in a retail meat market. He was but twenty years old at this time, and his youth and inexperience were taken advantage of by others so that, after less than one year, the partnership was dissolved. His commercial ambition had, however, been aroused and though he was without capital he managed to establish himself in business, though in a very small way. Later he removed to the corner of Hope and John streets, where for many years he conducted a prosperous business. For several years prior to his retirement in 1888 his brother Roger W. was a partner in the business.

Mr. Bliven owes his success entirely to his own exertions, his honorable business methods, intelligent management, and exceptional industry. His business demanded his closest attention and from fifteen to seventeen hours of each twenty-four found him thus engaged. There are presented in his career many features worthy of chronicle and emulation by the youth of today, and there are displayed the results of honest industry unassisted by chance, influence or other extraordinary feature. His most worthy characteristic has been his devotion to his mother and other members of his family. During all of his manhood his mother was, while she lived, his chief concern, and his care and solicitude in her behalf increased with her advancing years. She was possessed of every womanly and motherly virtue, patient and loyal, and tenderly devoted to her children. She lived to a great age, and in her latter years suffered the infirmities of the aged, yet she was ever cheerful and hopeful.

Though Mr. Bliven is nearing the fulfillment of three score and ten his appearance and manner do not indicate it nor do his many years of constant industry weigh heavily upon his shoulders. He is well informed upon current topics and interested in historical events and literature. He has in his possession a number of family heirlooms which are of much interest.

JOHN A. BENNETT, than whom no man was better known in New England manufacturing interests, comes of a family long established in Rhode Island.

John Bennett, his great-great-grandfather, was of Warwick, R. I., and was likely a descendant of Samuel Bennett, a settler of Providence as early as 1652, and of the town of East Greenwich, R. I., in 1678. Samuel Bennett was commissioner in 1657, deputy in 1668, 1674 and 1678.

Joseph Bennett, son of John, was married in Warwick Dec. 9, 1773, to Mary Remington. He lived to the age of one hundred and one years, and is buried in the family burying ground on the Apponaug and Pontiac road in the town of Warwick.

Asa Bennett, son of Joseph and Mary, was born in Warwick Feb. 2, 1781. He found employment in the mills in the vicinity of his home, and became a blue dyer by trade. He married Abbie Oatley, in September, 1805. Of their children Thomas is mentioned below; and Albert moved to Michigan, where he died, survived by a daughter.

Thomas Bennett, son of Asa, was born in Warwick or East Greenwich. In his youth he was employed in the mills, and for many years was an overseer, also holding other responsible positions in connection with the textile industries. Later he engaged in commercial pursuits, and still later he managed the farm interests of his son, John A. He was a man of much muscular strength and was of high moral character, well deserving the high esteem in which he was held. He married Emily Austin, and to them were born eight children, of whom there are living: James E., of East Greenwich, R. I.; Emily Amanda, widow of Ethan R. Barr, of Dwight, Ill.; and John Albert. The wife and mother died May 23, 1903.

John Albert Bennett was born Nov. 2, 1827, in North Kingstown, R. I., where his parents were residents for some time, or until John A. was about seven years of age. It early devolved upon the children in the family to seek employment to assist in the general support. At the age of ten John A. began work in the mills, continuing through the spring and summer months, and he attended school in the winter. His first compensation was at the rate of $1.50 per week. As he grew older and his earning capacity correspondingly greater, his school months were reduced to three each year; but by study, application and a retentive memory he acquired the rudiments of an education. In his young manhood, realizing the value of even a little education he attended a private school in East Greenwich. In the meantime he was applying himself to his work in the mills, and such was his proficiency, his energy and his executive ability that at the age of fifteen he was an assistant overseer in a weaving room containing some eighty looms. This was in the Potowomut Mill, at Potowomut, a mill village lying south of East Greenwich, and there he began a career the success of which has been equaled by but few men depending wholly upon their own ability, connected with any industry in New England. At the age of seventeen he was made overseer, continuing as such until he was twenty. It may be here remarked that never after throughout his long and successful career until his retirement was he obliged to seek a position or situation. His services were sought by individual owners and corporations, and he not infrequently declined advancement in order that he might be loyal to the employment at which he was engaged until he felt free to accept progress without jeopardizing the interests of others.

At the age of twenty he became overseer in the Union mill at East Greenwich, remaining two years, when he assumed full charge of a large new mill at Portsmouth, N. H., devoted to the manufacture of fine French Lawns and muslin delaines. Here, too, he remained two years, and a warm friendship sprang up between Mr. Bennett and Col. Stern, then a prominent factor in the cotton industries. At this time Mr. Jones S. Davis became the agent of the new Lyman Mills at Holyoke, Mass., and prevailed upon Mr. Bennett to go there to start the looms and act as overseer of weaving. After three years he was obliged by failing health to discontinue all work, and he spent some time resting and traveling through the West. With health restored, he returned to Rhode Island, and took the position of assistant overseer of weaving at the Atlantic mills at Olneyville. At the end of several years he entered the employ of Gen.

John A. Bennett

James, going to that gentleman's mills at Sag Harbor. This he did not find congenial, and after a short time returned to Providence to assume the duties of a position in which a number of others had failed in the Grant mills. His work here was attended by entire success and he continued for two years. At this time he was sent for and consulted by capitalists in New York City, who owned a mill at Woonsocket. Their utmost efforts to operate it with anything like success had proved an absolute failure. Mr. Bennett was induced by them to assume charge of the property in all of its branches, and was given full authority in both financial and mechanical policy. From a thoroughly disorganized and apathetic enterprise he, step by step, brought it to a state of efficiency and profit second to none in New England. He adopted at the outset a policy of "No debts, no notes," and continued that wise and judicious course throughout the twenty-three years of his control. In addition to the direct mill interests he also assumed and managed the real estate belonging to the concern, consisting of some 400 acres, sub-dividing, platting, and disposing of it as an addition to the city of Woonsocket, much to the advantage of the city, and to the financial benefit of his employers. He was given free rein in every department of the interests he represented, exceedingly long periods intervening between visits of the actual owners. And to their credit may it be said that they were not unmindful of the value of Mr. Bennett's services, and frequently when he expressed a desire to retire they offered inducements and otherwise prevailed upon him to remain. However, at the end of twenty-three years, he severed all connection with milling interests, and retired, devoting himself to looking after his own personal interests. He is an extensive property owner in Woonsocket and Providence, and much of this is now looked after by his son, Albert J.

The ability and business acumen of Mr. Bennett have not been entirely confined to his own interests for he has rendered much valuable service to the city of Woonsocket as a member of the State Legislature, and of the city council, and as assessor. As a legislator and as a member of the council he had much to do with the advancement and the protection of the city's interests, and when once convinced of the correctness of his position upon any project he was absolutely immovable sometimes to the point of obduracy, yet in every instance where his wisdom prevailed his course and attitude proved the correct one. For fully twenty years he was a director of the Citizen's National Bank of Woonsocket, and otherwise concerned in the city's welfare. He now lives quietly, at his various homes, though much of his time is passed at his comfortable residence in the village of North Scituate, and occasionally he spends the winter months in the South.

While now somewhat advanced in years, Mr.

Bennett is in almost full vigor, his intellectual faculties susceptible to their highest play and vigorous exertion. He stands full six feet in height, and is well proportioned. His life is an exposition of what industry and resolute purpose can and may accomplish, and it presents some features worthy of thoughtful consideration. He began life penniless; he obtained his education himself—he toiled for it and struggled for it; and there was in him the will and the force to do. He determined to be and he succeeded. He was interested in his work, and when intrusted with the management and affairs of an industry which he built to no inconsiderable magnitude, he discharged his duties with a steadiness, ability and firmness always equal to the occasion. In his handling of men he displayed a rare combination of inflexibility, courtesy, self-control and endurance, and strikes and labor troubles were unknown during his regime.

At the age of twenty-one Mr. Bennett was married, his bride living but two years. The present Mrs. Bennett, to whom not a little of his success may be ascribed, was Miss Eliza Amanda Kimball, born Oct. 9, 1831, daughter of Noah and Amey Kimball. Two children were born to them, namely: Walter J., born Feb. 19, 1865, died April 23, 1900; and Albert Jerome, born March 24, 1868, is a well known business man of Providence and Woonsocket. Mr. Bennett is a member of Morning Star Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Woonsocket.

ALBERT J. BENNETT, son of John A. Bennett, was born March 24, 1868, in the city of Woonsocket, R. I., and was educated in the schools of that city. Like his father, his thrifty and industrious disposition was early manifested, and he was for a number of years engaged in various commercial enterprises. He later engaged in his present business, real estate, in which honorable business methods and pleasing personality have brought him deserved success.

In politics Mr. Bennett is a stanch Republican, and has for some years been prominent in the affairs of the party in his section of the State. He has been repeatedly elected to the common council and board of aldermen of Woonsocket, serving upon many important committees. In 1907, notwithstanding his personal disinclination, he was his party's candidate for the State Legislature.

Mr. Bennett married Sept. 19, 1885, Miss Harriet J., daughter of Alfred O. and Hannah Darling, of Bellingham, Mass. They have two children: Helen Amanda and Leon John Alfred.

ANDREW J. CURRIER for upwards of thirty years has been a leading citizen of his adopted town and State, representing it many times in the town council and as well in both branches of the State Assembly. Mr. Currier was long officially identified with the mills of the extensive Albion and Valley Falls Companies, manufacturers of shirtings, sheetings, print cloths, etc., and subsequently had important connection with other textile concerns.

Mr. Currier was born in Fall River, Mass., Oct. 2, 1850, son of Andrew Robeson and Almira Leonard (Handy) Currier, of Fall River, grandson of Job Currier (probably a native of Tiverton) and his wife Roby Thomas, and great-grandson of Daniel Currier.

Andrew Robeson Currier, the father, was born in Fall River, Mass., where he died in 1867. He married Almira Leonard Handy, of Fall River, who died in Valley Falls, R. I., and to this union were born two children, Andrew J. and Eva G., the latter residing in Valley Falls, unmarried.

Andrew J. Currier attended the public schools of Fall River, what further education he acquired being gained in the school of experience and by self culture and observation. Early thrown on his own resources he learned the value of a dollar and the principles of wise expenditure. He first prepared himself for work as a telegraph operator, but not altogether satisfied with this he was for two years occupied in the line of insurance with Congressman William S. Greene, of Fall River. In his next move he found something more to his liking, and which proved to be his calling for life. Locating in what is now Cumberland, R. I., he began employment as a clerk with the Albion Manufacturing Company, and so acceptable were his services and such was his deportment that, as the years came and went, he rose in time to be manager of the extensive plants of the corporation—of both the Albion Company and the Valley Falls Company. The position was one of large responsibility, requiring a thorough knowledge of all the details of manufacturing print cloths, sheetings, shirtings, etc., as well as executive ability and quick action. In the mills at Albion and at Valley Falls are employed approximately nine hundred hands—a fact which indicates sufficiently the importance of the position of manager. The long term of service of Mr. Currier with this corporation—covering over a third of a century—was a sufficient index of his ability, which has been further evidenced in the many public positions of honor, trust and responsibility to which he has been chosen by his fellow citizens and townsmen.

Resigning his position with the Albion Company in 1901, Mr. Currier then accepted the position of general manager of the mills of the New England Cotton Yarn Company, having charge of their eight mills in Fall River and Taunton, employing about three thousand hands. In October, 1904, he became superintendent of the Kilburn Mill, of New Bedford, Mass., employing four hundred hands, engaged in manufacturing fine cotton yarns, where he continued until July 1, 1906, when he resigned. For a time he was not actively engaged in business, and then again entered the line that has been his life's work. He is a member of the Board of Managers of the Pawtucket Branch of the Industrial Trust Company, and a director in the Blackstone Coal Mining Company, of Cumberland.

The political affiliations of Mr. Currier have been with the Republican party, in the councils of which he has been active and prominent. For some eleven or twelve years he was a member of the town council of Cumberland, presiding over that body nine years. He was a representative from his town—Cumberland—in the Lower House of the General Assembly of Rhode Island from May, 1891, to May, 1892, and he served on the committee on Corporations. From May, 1892, to May, 1893, and from May, 1894, to May, 1896, he was State Senator. In 1908 he was delegate-at-large to the National Republican Convention at Chicago, and chairman of the Rhode Island delegation in that body.

On Nov. 5, 1874, Mr. Currier was married to Lucy S. Clark, of Valley Falls, R. I., daughter of John L. and Cordelia H. (Titus) Clark, a record of whose family appears elsewhere. Two children blessed the marriage, namely: Carrie C. and Andrew R., the latter traveling salesman for the Draper Machine Company. Mrs. Andrew J. Currier passed away April 30, 1888. Mr. Currier attends the Valley Falls Baptist Church, to which he gives his liberal support.

GEORGE W. GORTON, a retired business man of Pawtucket, was born Feb. 4, 1826, in the town of Warwick, where his ancestors first settled more than two centuries ago. The place was practically founded by Samuell Gorton, the first of the name to take up his residence in the New World. The line of descent from Samuell to George W. Gorton follows.

(I) Samuell Gorton was born in 1592 in a chapelry within the parish of Manchester, County of Lancaster, England, at a place called Gorton, where the family had lived for many generations. In 1637 Samuell Gorton with his wife and family left London for Boston, arriving there the latter part of March. He tried several points in Rhode Island, in preference to remaining at Boston, and finally took up his residence in 1641 in what became Warwick. In 1643 he and others bought a tract of land there which they called Shawomet, later Warwick. He became a prominent man in the Colony, being assistant in 1649; commissioner a number of times, beginning with 1641; president of Providence and Warwick, 1651 and 1652; and from 1664 on was several times deputy. He was conspicuous, too, in religious matters, had a number of his writings published, and founded a sect in Rhode Island which outlived him over one hundred years. Samuell Gorton married Mary, daughter of John and Mary Maplete, but it is not certain whether this was his earliest union or not. There may have been a first wife, named Elizabeth, in which case she must have been the mother of the oldest son and possibly one or two more. The names of the children were: Samuell, John, Benjamin, Mahershallalhashbaz, Mary, Sarah, Ann, Elizabeth and Susannah. Samuell Gorton died about 1677.

(II) Samuell Gorton (2) was born in 1630. He married in 1684 Susanna, daughter of William and Hannah (Wicks) Burton. They lived in Warwick and Mr. Gorton, who was called Captain, was a man of influence, serving many years as assistant and as deputy in 1684 and 1691. He died Sept. 6, 1724, and his widow, who remarried, died June 25, 1737. Their children were born as follows: Samuel, June 1, 1690; Hezekiah, June 11, 1692; and Susanna, June 4, 1694.

(III) Samuel Gorton (3) married June 1, 1715, Freelope Mason, who was born June 5, 1695, the daughter of Joseph and Lydia (Bowen) Mason. He died at his home in Warwick in 1784, leaving children as follows: Samuel, born March 7, 1717; Freelope, Aug. 27, 1718; Ann, Sept. 7, 1721; Lydia, Feb. 1, 1723; Benjamin, July 2, 1725; Joseph and Susanna, July 6, 1734; and Hezekiah, July 9, 1736.

(IV) Dr. Samuel Gorton (4), born in 1717, married (first) March 11, 1740, Welthian Spencer, daughter of John Spencer. She died and was buried Dec. 18, 1764, and Jan. 22, 1769, Dr. Gorton married (second) Dorcas, the daughter of Silas Ward, of Coventry. His children were: Mary, born May 26, 1741; Samuel, July 5, 1743; Peleg, Jan. 11, 1750; Slade; Benjamin, April 1, 1754; William, Oct. 15, 1760; John; Anthony; Ruth; Freelope; Wait; Catherine; and Elizabeth.

(V) Benjamin Gorton, born in 1754, married May 30, 17—, Thankful Whitford, born Aug. 27, 1763, a daughter of George Whitford. Mr. Gorton was a farmer in Warwick, owning several hundred acres of land. A deacon in the Apponaug Baptist Church, he was one who carried his religion into his daily life and was an unfailing source of aid for those needing either wise counsel or more material help. In politics he was an old-line Whig. He died in Warwick, Nov. 18, 1833, and his wife passed away May 31st of the next year. They had seventeen children, viz.: Mary, born Aug. 1, 1780; Benjamin, June 17, 1782; Charles, Jan. 24, 1784; Phebe, Dec. 6, 1785 (who died in infancy); Hannah, April 15, 1787; Sophia, Nov. 15, 1788; James W., Nov. 3, 1790; George, April 24, 1792; Barbara F., April 13, 1794; Silas Casey, April 7, 1796; Samuel, Jan. 22, 1798; Barton W., May 21, 1799; Peleg, May 31, 1801; Thomas W., April 9, 1803; Richard, June 29, 1805; Isaac, May 12, 1807; and Eveline, March 25, 1809.

(VI) Samuel Gorton (5), the father of George W., was born in Warwick, Jan. 22, 1798, and was reared to farming as his regular calling. He had charge of the Lonsdale Company's farm for some time, then in 1840 took the management of the Samuel Mann farm, in Mannville, where he remained twelve years, and from there moved to Attleboro, Mass. For one year there he was engaged in a tannery, but soon gave up that line to resume farming, this time in Windsor, Vt. From there, when somewhat advanced in years, he went to Providence to make his home with his daughter, and passed away there March 15, 1887. A man of rugged physique and strong character, he was always a hard worker and was successful in his farming operations, amassing a competence. In politics a Whig, and later a Republican, he was in religious faith a Baptist and a member of the Warwick Church.

Samuel Gorton married Miss Elizabeth H. Whitmarsh, born June 8, 1801, the daughter of Walker Whitmarsh. Their wedded life was ended by Mrs. Gorton's death at Valley Falls, Aug. 2, 1881. She was the mother of a large family, viz.: Mercy Ann Arnold, born Feb. 27, 1822, married Cornelius T. Day, and died in Milford, Mass., Dec. 2, 1880; Elizabeth Sophia, born Jan. 27, 1824, became the wife of Alexander Youngs, of Foxboro, Mass.; George W. is mentioned below; Hannah Maria, born Nov. 4, 1827, became the wife of George Adams Draper, of Minneapolis, Minn., where she died March 21, 1908; Harriet Frances, born Dec. 16, 1829, died aged twelve years; Ray Greene, born Feb. 16, 1832, served in the Civil war, and later located in California; Clarinda, born Dec. 10, 1833, died aged three; Clarinda Robinson, born Feb. 1, 1836, died young; Cynthia B., born Oct. 28, 1838, married John R. Bruce, a carpenter in Providence; Samuel Harrison, born Aug. 2, 1840, a veteran of the Civil war, now lives in the Soldiers' Home in Togus, Maine; Helen, residing in Providence, married (first) Harvey Litchfield and (second) Eliphalet Day.

(VII) George William Gorton was trained even as a boy to a life of industry. When only six years old he learned to milk cows, and at the age of nine he not only was peddling the milk, but was also put to work in a mill. There he learned spinning and other industrial processes, while at the age of eighteen he began to prepare himself as a machinist, working under David A. Mowry at Manville. He remained with him from 1844 to 1849 and then spent a few years in charge of the Chase machine shop in Valley Falls. His next enterprise was of a distinctly different character, for in 1857 he bought Mason's stable, in Valley Falls, but this received his personal attention only a short time and during that winter he went to Pawtucket and worked on fire engines for William Jeffreys. The breaking out of the war compelled the closing of this shop and in Providence Mr. Gorton took up the making of handcuffs for a few years, a piece of his handiwork being those worn by Jefferson Davis as a prisoner. In 1863 he gave up this business and embarked in the meat business in Pawtucket, which was his main interest for about thirty years. In this he made money and finally, Oct. 13, 1893, retired from active business.

During his long residence in Pawtucket Mr. Gorton has manifested considerable interest in the affairs of the city. An adherent of the Know-Nothing party at one time, he has for many years been a good Republican, and somewhat active in the party ranks. For five years he served as license commissioner of the city. During the long period when Pawtucket depended for fire protection solely upon the volunteer department, Mr. Gorton was a member of the old Rough and Ready Company, and then of the Hay Cart Company, and did faithful service. He attends the Baptist Church, of which his wife is a member.

By his marriage George W. Gorton allied himself to another of the old families of Rhode Island. On May 20, 1849, he was united to Almeda, daughter of Pardon and Sarah (Waite) Tillinghast, who resided in South Killingly, Conn. To this marriage two children were born, George T. and Almeda E. The latter became the wife of Richard H. Ryder, of Pawtucket, on Nov. 21, 1877, and became the mother of four children, Alice May, Jerusha (died in infancy), Bowen P. and Lottie Gorton.

(VIII) GEORGE TILLINGHAST GORTON was born July 15, 1853, in Valley Falls, R. I., but at the age of six was brought to Pawtucket, which has ever since been his home. After finishing the public school course he attended Scholfield's Business College in Providence and fitted himself for an active part in his father's affairs. He had begun when only ten years old to assist his father in the meat business, and after his education was finished he was taken regularly into his employ and remained so until the elder Mr. Gorton retired, in 1893, when the son purchased that portion of the business which had received his personal attention and has been carrying it on very successfully ever since.

Mr. George T. Gorton has also given considerable time to public service and is prominent in the local Republican ranks. He was a member and president of the common council in 1892-93, and held a similar position on the board of aldermen in 1894-95, besides serving as superintendent of street lights from 1896 till 1900. In 1905 he was elected by a large majority to the General Assembly from Pawtucket and was made a member of the committee on Engrossed Acts. In 1907 he was elected State senator from Pawtucket. He is a man of real ability and has the entire confidence of his constituents.

On Dec. 27, 1876, George T. Gorton and Miss Mahala Colwell were united in marriage. Mrs. Gorton was born Oct. 23, 1855, in Pawtucket, then in Massachusetts, a daughter of William H. Colwell, of Pawtucket. She has borne her husband two children, viz.: William, born Oct. 21, 1886, who died April 29, 1887; and Mahala Colwell, born March 11, 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Gorton are members of the First Baptist Church of Pawtucket. In December, 1907, they removed to their present residence at the corner of Hawes and Nickerson streets.

HON. GEORGE ROBERT LAWTON, whose honorable public career has made him one of the best known men of the State, was born in Tiverton, R. I., Dec. 31, 1858.

Rhode Island has been the home of the Lawtons since almost the very dawn of its civilization. Something like 270 years ago there settled at Portsmouth, George and Thomas Lawton, whose posterity have become numerous throughout the country at large. Within the State especially numerous were their descendants in the old home town of Portsmouth in earlier generations, where, and in the neighboring town of Tiverton, the name today represents the best citizenship, men and women of noble impulses and high resolves.

(I) George Lawton was early at Portsmouth, R. I., being admitted an inhabitant of the island of Aquidneck in 1638. He was one of the twenty-nine persons who signed the compact for a body politic in 1639. He had forty acres of land granted to him in 1648, near to that of his brother Thomas, and in that same year he was a member of the Court of Trials. He was made a freeman in 1655, and was Deputy from Portsmouth in 1665, 1672, 1675, 1676, 1679 and 1680. He was assistant in 1680-81-82-83-84-85-88-89-90. Mr. Lawton also served in many other important positions evidencing his capability and prominence in the town and colony. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas and Martha Hazard. Mr. Lawton died Oct. 5, 1693, and was buried in his orchard. His children were: Isabel, John, Mary, George, Robert, Susanna, Ruth, Mercy, Job and Elizabeth.

(II) George Lawton (2), son of George, married Jan. 17, 1677, Naomi, daughter of Bartholomew and Ann Hunt, and resided in Portsmouth, R. I. Mr. Lawton died Sept. 11, 1697, and his widow married (second) Oct. 11, 1701, Isaac Lawton. George Lawton's children were: Elizabeth, born Nov. 15, 1678; George, April 30, 1685; Robert, Oct. 14, 1688; and Job, Jan. 22, 1692.

(III) George Lawton (3), son of George (2), born April 30, 1685, married Feb. 26, 1707, Mary Gould, of Newport, the ceremony being performed by Gov. Samuel Cranston, and their children of Portsmouth town record were: Robert, born Feb. 4, 1707-08; George, April 20, 1710; Job, Dec. 28, 1712 (died Dec. 11, 1713); Job (2), April 26, 1717. Capt. George Lawton died April 11, 1740.

(IV) Robert Lawton, son of Capt. George, born Feb. 4, 1707-08, married Nov. 11, 1742, Mary Hall, daughter of William Hall, and their children of Portsmouth town record were: George, born April 12, 1744; Mary, March 31, 1747; Elizabeth, July 4, 1750; Phebe, March 30, 1752; Robert, March 14, 1754; William, Dec. 26, 1755; John, Nov. 4, 1757; Ruth, May 23, 1759; Job, May 8, 1761; and Parker, April 7, 1764.

(V) Hon. George Lawton (4), son of Robert, born April 12, 1744, was a patriot of the Revolution, serving, in 1777, as a private soldier in the Rhode Island regiment commanded by Col. John Cook, and while the command was on duty at Fogland Ferry, Rhode Island. Mr. Lawton was wounded in the leg and left arm by a cannon shot from a British ship, lying in the Seaconnet river. On April 10, 1766, he married Ruth Brownell, and their children of Portsmouth town record were: Robert, born Jan. 22, 1767; Thomas Brownell, born Sept. 16, 1768; George, born June 7, 1770; Mary H., born April 5, 1772; William, born Sept. 16, 1774; Joseph, born April 2, 1776; and Ruth, born June 19, 1778. Mr. Lawton may have married (second) Anne, by whom he had a daughter Ruth, born Oct. 17, 1786.

(VI) George Lawton (5), son of George (4), born June 7, 1770, married Jan. 31, 1808, Patience Turner, daughter of Robert Lawton, and their children of Portsmouth town record were: Robert N., born Oct. 7, 1808; George B., born May 1, 1810; William H., born March 20, 1812; and Moses Turner, born Dec. 25, 1817. There was one daughter, Hannah Turner, who married William Bowers Brayton of Fall River.

(VII) Moses Turner Lawton, son of Capt. George and Patience (Turner) Lawton, was born Dec. 25, 1817, in Portsmouth, but as his father, Capt. George Lawton, removed to Tiverton, where he was one of the largest land owners, soon after the birth of his son, he naturally grew to manhood in Tiverton, considering it his native town.

Mr. Lawton was a man of genial temperament, a stanch Republican, though never an active partisan. He belonged to the coterie of the old and first citizens of the township. Although a man of quiet tastes, his pleasing disposition had made many friends for him during his life of over three-score years and ten. He married Elizabeth Tillinghast Harris, one of the early graduates of the Warren Seminary, of Warren, R. I. He died Aug. 26, 1893, and was buried in Oak Grove Cemetery in Fall River. His wife, Mrs. Lawton, was active in church and educational work, and was one of the first of the ladies in the United States ever to be elected upon a school board, an office which she filled with dignity and to the satisfaction of the public. Her daughter, Mrs. Barker, now holds the same office very acceptably, namely, the chairmanship of the school committee of Tiverton. To Mr. and Mrs. Lawton were born two children, George Robert; and Eliza Harris, who married Hon. Richard Jackson Barker, mentioned in full elsewhere.

(VIII) George Robert Lawton, only son of Moses Turner Lawton, was born in the town of Tiverton, Dec. 31, 1858. He attended the public schools of his native town and private schools of Fall River. He became bookkeeper for Joseph Church & Co., of Maine, and later was head bookkeeper for the Durfee Mills, at Fall River, Mass., where he spent the following six years. He had a decided taste for bookkeeping, and he determined to give his entire time to that work, perfecting himself in that profession at every point. When he left the Durfee Mills it was to become a public accountant and auditor, and his field covers many parts of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York and other States. He is a member of the American Association of Public Accountants of New York City, and the Rhode Island Society of Public Accountants.

Mr. Lawton's social and fraternal connections are numerous. He is a member of the Quequechan Club at Fall River; the Boston Athletic Club, Boston, Mass.; the Republican Club of New York; and the Rhode Island Chapter, Sons of the American Revolution. In Masonic circles he belongs to King Philip Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Royal Arch Chapter, Fall River; Washington Commandery, Newport; and Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Providence.

In his political faith Mr. Lawton is an unswerving Republican, and in 1907 was elected chairman of the Republican State Central Committee. He served as a member of the council at Tiverton, and was for many years its president; in 1895 he was elected a member of the State Legislature, serving in that body until 1899, and being a member of the committees on Fisheries, Special Legislation and Corporations. In 1899 he was elected State Senator for the town of Tiverton, and was a member of the Senate until 1905, being chairman of the committees on Corporations and Elections. In 1907 he was again sent to the Senate from Tiverton. He was appointed by Governor Utter a member of the State Board of Charities and Corrections, and he was also a member of the Returning Board. Mr. Lawton is well-known, and he is a man highly respected in every walk of life.

On June 8, 1899, Mr. Lawton was married at Tiverton, R. I., to Miss Calista Church, daughter of the late Capt. Daniel T. Church. They have one child, Helen, born Nov. 14, 1900.

COL. FRANK SMITH ARNOLD, one of the leaders of the Rhode Island Bar, is a descendant in the eighth generation from (I) William Arnold, the progenitor of the family in America, his line of descent being through (II) Stephen, (III) Israel to (IV) Elisha.

(IV) Elisha Arnold, born about 1687, married Dec. 9, 1709, Hannah Carpenter, daughter of Timothy, and their children of Warwick town record were: William, born April 11, 1710; Mary, June 11, 1712; Elisha, Nov. 25, 1713; Joseph, March 2, 1716; Nathaniel, Sept. 15, 1717; James, Sept. 30, 1719; Israel, May 15, 1721; Thomas, May 25, 1724; Hannah, March 24, 1727; and John, April 27, 1731.

(V) William Arnold, born April 11, 1710, married May 6, 1733, Phebe, daughter of Thomas Stafford, and their children of Warwick town record were: Ann, born April 2, 1734; Job, Sept. 26, 1736; William, Aug. 4, 1738; Thomas, Oct. 26, 1740; and Benedict, Jan. 5, 1742.

(VI) Capt. Thomas Arnold, born Oct. 26, 1740, married April 14, 1768, Sarah, daughter of Major Preserved Pierce, of East Greenwich, and their children were: Freelove, born Oct. 18, 1768; Elizabeth, Aug. 13, 1775; Thomas Pierce, Oct. 17, 1778; Isaac Alleton, Aug. 23, 1780; Sarah Ann, Aug. 30, 1784; and William Rice, Oct. 9, 1787.

(VII) William Rice Arnold, born Oct. 9, 1787, in Apponaug, in the town of East Greenwich, R. I., married Sept. 12, 1850, Louisa Smith. He was an expert accountant in Providence, and was the originator and owner of "Prof. Arnold's Wizard Gold Dust."

(VIII) Col. Frank Smith Arnold, son of William and Louisa (Smith) Arnold, was born at New London, Conn., July 31, 1854. He was graduated at Mowry and Goff's English and Classical School in Providence in June, 1872. He was then a cadet at West Point, but owing to defective eye sight did not complete his course, and after a year's rest at home, he entered the office of Thurston & Ripley, with whom he studied three years. On Feb. 8, 1878, he was admitted to the Bar of Rhode Island, and he at once began practice, making a specialty of corporation law, and for sixteen years he was counsel for the New York & New England Railroad Company, after which time he was counsel for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., as well as many other corporations, in the conduct of whose business he has gained distinction. He has practiced extensively in the municipal, State and Federal Courts, and before the Legislature, a most remarkable fact being that in all the railroad legislation before the General Assembly he never was beaten. Col. Arnold's unflinching zeal and distinguished ability have characterized his many years of lucrative practice. He has always performed well the duties of a good citizen, and has lent his aid and influence to all movements for the public welfare.

Col. Arnold is prominent in social and military circles, and was assistant quartermaster general of the State for five years. In June, 1877, he was elected major of the Second Battalion of Infantry, which office he held until June, 1882, and in the spring of 1895, at the urgent solicitation of friends, he became colonel of the United Company of the Train of Artillery, the "crack" military organization of the State. Immediately upon receiving the command he obtained an appropriation of $2,000 from the Legislature for the purpose of renovating the old armory of the organization, and under his management the Company was recruited to its full strength, and two additional companies formed.

In 1884 Col. Arnold was elected a member of the city council for the old Ninth ward, and was one of the leaders of the Goddard plan for terminal facilities. He is a member of the Bar Club, the Union Club, Providence Athletic Association and was historian of the Providence Marine Corps of Artillery. He was counsel for the Guarantors Finance Insurance Company of Philadelphia, and for the Sea View Railroad Company. On Jan. 5, 1905, Col. Arnold was stricken with paralysis and since then has not actively engaged in practice.

Col. Arnold married Nellie A., daughter of Davis G. Hopkins, and to them have been born two sons:

(1) Louis Valentine, born May 4, 1880, graduated from Mowry and Goff's English and Classical School, and from Rhode Island College, Providence, and is now steward of the estates of Col. Oliver H. Payne, of New York.

(2) Davis Gorham, born June 12, 1883, graduated from the grammar and high school, and from Cheltenham Military Academy, Pa., in 1902. He is an honorary member of the Pennsylvania National Guard, and served during the coal strike trouble in that State. For a time he engaged in the insurance business in Philadelphia, and later was private secretary to Charles A. Sudlow, president of the Interstate Life Assurance Company of Indianapolis, being located in St. Louis for ten months. He belonged to Battery A, while in Missouri. During the time he was in the insurance business he began the study of law, afterward continuing his studies in his father's office, and in that of Tillinghast & Murdock, of Providence, and was admitted to the Bar of Rhode Island May 9, 1907. On June 12, 1905, he married Gladys Records Potter, daughter of William S. Potter, and great-granddaughter of Tillinghast Records. They have one child, Frances Potter, born July 19, 1906.

PLACE. The Providence-Glocester-Smithfield branch of the Place family of ancient Providence descends from Enoch Place, who was at Dorchester, Mass., as early as 1657. In November of that year he was married, the name of his wife being Sarah. Mr. Place was an inhabitant of Kingstown, R. I., in 1663, and in 1671 took the oath of allegiance to Rhode Island. He died in 1695, his will being made and proved in that year. At this time he called himself sixty-four years of age. He mentions his wife Sarah, and children Enoch, Peter, Thomas, Joseph and Sarah.

Peter Place, son of Enoch, married (first) in 1685, Sarah Steere, and (second) Mrs. Mary Bowditch, a widow. Mr. Place was of Providence, but some time after his marriage located in that part of Glocester, now Smithfield. His residence was in the district called Wyankeake, but later he located in the neighborhood of Harmony. He was ordained about 1700 as an elder of the Six Principle Baptist Church, and officiated in Smithfield and Glocester. He died July 6, 1735, and his widow May 25, 1745, in Smithfield. His children were: Sarah, born Nov. 12, 1686; Nathan, Nov. 4, 1688; Penelope, May 18, 1691; Hannah, Aug. 6, 1693; Aminetta, Sept. 16, 1695; Dinah, Feb. 10, 1697, married May 28, 1795, John Place; Ruth, born Oct. 7, 1700; and Joseph, born June 29, 1706.

Joseph Place, son of Peter, born June 29, 1706, resided in Smithfield, and followed the occupation of farmer. He married Amey Keach, who was of diminutive size, and was widely known as a physician, this being a natural gift. She was the mother of Joseph, Daniel and Reuben.

Reuben Place, son of Joseph, was a farmer and resided for many years after his marriage on the farm occupied by his grandson, the late Allen S. Place, located at what is now about one and one-half miles north of Harmony. Later in life Reuben Place removed to the Evans neighborhood near the old "Stone Mill," and there resided until his death, March 13, 1850, at the age of ninety years. He was a spry and active man until he received a fall while working on his farm, this being the direct cause of his death. He was buried in the Evans private cemetery in the locality referred to. Reuben Place was a Revolutionary soldier. He was married (first) to Mehetable Evans, and they had one son, Duty. His second wife was Sarah Steere, and she bore him eleven children. He married (third) Catherine Saunders, who survived him a few months, dying Sept. 15, 1850.

Duty Place, son of Reuben, was born in Glocester, Nov. 25, 1783, and was a farmer and cooper. In his early life he resided in Foster, later in Smithfield, but for over fifty years his home was in Chepachet, where he died Nov. 13, 1886, at the age of 103 years, and was buried in a private yard on "The Plains," north of Chepachet, on the road to Oakland. He retained all his faculties except his hearing, and had his second sight. He was a member of the Free Will Baptist Church at Chepachet, and attended services as long as he was able to. He was married (first) Oct. 14, 1804, to Martha Place, born Sept. 8, 1781; she died March 12, 1814, the mother of two children: Nancy, born May 27, 1806, who married Allen Lott, removed to the vicinity of Elmira, N. Y., and there died leaving descendants; and Horatio N. F., born Oct. 12, 1809. Duty Place married (second) in 1815, Sarah Pooke, of Smithfield, born April 30, 1793; she died Jan. 10, 1878. The children of this marriage were: Mary A., born May 31, 1816, married Barton Vallett, and resided at Blackstone, Mass., and later at Glocester, R. I., where he died, and she later removed to Uxbridge, Mass., where her death occurred; Martha, born Aug. 19, 1818, died at the age of three months; Edward, born Aug. 5, 1820, married (first) Dorcas Davis, and (second) Jemima Davis, and resides in Chepachet; Caroline F., born March 30, 1822, married Benjamin Keach, a carpenter, and resided in Chepachet, where she died Sept. 4, 1850; Sarah E., born Dec. 28, 1825, married Isaac S. Andrews, and resides at Apponaug, R. I.; Reuben A., born Feb. 25, 1828, married Frances Nichols of Lowell, Mass., and resides at East Douglas, Mass., engaged in farming; Susan H., born Feb. 25, 1828 (twin of Reuben A.), married Stephen H. Moss, and died at Shrewsbury, Mass.; Amey A., born Jan. 19, 1830, married Nathan Young, and resided at Chepachet, dying at Uxbridge, Mass.; and Duty, born March 19, 1833, married (first) Amanda Aldrich, and (second) Alzada Sheldon, and resided at Chepachet, where he died Dec. 28, 1907.

Horatio Nelson Field Place, eldest son of Duty, was born Oct. 12, 1809, in Glocester, and followed farming and teaming. In his early married life he resided in his native town, later removing to Greenville, but subsequently returning to Glocester, and was residing at Harmony when his death occurred Aug. 11, 1889. He was buried in the cemetery there. He married Mrs. Cynthia (Winsor) Aldrich, born June 12, 1801, daughter of William Winsor, of Johnson, and she died May 5, 1888. Their children were: William Henry; George Leander was a carpenter and resided at Providence, where he married (first) Adeline Patt, had one son Everett (who resides in Providence), and (second) Emily Dodge, by whom he had one daughter, Mabel; Cyrus Winsor is a cabinet maker and resides in the Olneyville section, where he married Sophia A. Keach, and has two children, Marion A. and Winfred A.; and Cynthia Maria married James Coman, and died in Glocester, leaving one daughter, Cynthia Maria, now the wife of Mahlon Gowdy.

William Henry Place, born March 14, 1836, in Glocester, son of Horatio N. F., remained at home until about sixteen years of age, when he located in Providence and learned the trade of builder with William Wardwell. He followed his trade as a journeyman for a time and became a skilled millwright, doing a great deal of work for the Sprague mills. He was employed in Augusta, Maine, when the war broke out, and he enlisted in the navy as carpenter's mate, being for a time on the ship "Albatross," and was later transferred to the "Pensacola." While on the latter vessel in St. Andrews Bay, Fla., in 1862, he was injured, and a short time later was discharged for disability, after having served the government for about one year. Returning to Providence, Mr. Place was for some months unable to do any work, but on his recovery located for a time at Brooklyn, Conn., and later, in Providence, was foreman for Batchelder & Gorton, contractors and builders. In 1868 he went to Norwich, Conn., where he was foreman of the pattern shop of the Richmond Stove Company, until 1871. In the latter year he accepted a like position with the Silver Lake Foundry at Providence, continuing with the latter concern until 1875. He then began a contracting and building business, doing a great deal of work in the Olneyville section, and following this occupation the rest of his active life, being very successful in his business. On May 11, 1901, Mr. Place died after a long illness, and was buried in the Pocasset cemetery. He was a Republican in politics, and while a resident of Johnston served as a member of the town council and on the board of assessors. He was much interested in the G. A. R., and was an active member of Slocum Post, No. 10. He was an enthusiastic member of Farragut Association of Naval Veterans No. 11, being one of the organizers and its first commander. He held office in the National Naval Veterans' Association. He was a member for many years, until his death, of the Free Will Baptist Church at Olneyville.

Mr. Place was married in Glocester, to Adelaide Josephine Steere, born Nov. 27, 1837, daughter of Deacon Smith and Sarah Ann (Aldrich) Steere, and she died May 6, 1903, mother of one son, Waldo Milton.

WALDO MILTON PLACE was born Oct. 13, 1859, in Glocester, at the home of his grandfather Steere on Page Hill, during the temporary residence of his mother there. He was a small boy when his parents removed to Brooklyn, Conn., and his education was received in the public schools of that town, Norwich, Conn., and Providence, and was completed at the famous Mt. Pleasant Academy, presided over by Jenckes Mowry, which he attended for eight years. In December, 1879, he became a bookkeeper in the Atlantic Mill, a short time after it had been started after the Sprague failure, and held that position until 1884, when he was compelled to resign on account of poor health. In 1890, on his recovery, he became a substitute bookkeeper at the Industrial Trust Company, and in that fall was elected tax collector in Johnston. Again, in the summer of 1891, he took his position with the Industrial Trust Company, becoming a regular bookkeeper in the year of 1892. In 1893 Mr. Place, at two elections, received a plurality of votes for the office of town clerk of Johnston, and was finally elected by the town council, but refused to qualify. On July 1, 1895, he was elected secretary of the Industrial Trust Company, a position he held until January, 1900, when he was elected assistant treasurer, and in January, 1908, was elected treasurer. Mr. Place is a Republican, and in 1905 and 1906, served as representative from Providence to the General Assembly.

Mr. Place is past master of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; member of Providence Chapter and Providence Council, and in 1906 was elected commander of St. John's Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templar. He is also a member of Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine.

CARPENTER (Cranston-Providence family). Since the days of the early Roger Williams period, two hundred and sixty and more years ago, this branch of the Rhode Island Carpenter family has been continuous in the territory in and about Providence and Cranston. The forerunner here, himself a prominent man of the locality named, an associate of Roger Williams, left a posterity which through the intervening generations have sustained the family name and reputation. They have married into a number of the first families of Rhode Island, among them the distinguished Greene family of Warwick, the Arnold, Harris and Anthony families, all prominent and as well ancient families of this Commonwealth. For something like fifty years the Carpenters and Arnolds of Cranston were the largest land owners and chief taxpayers of their community.

It is the purpose of this article to refer briefly to the life and lineage of the late Earl Carpenter, long an active and successful business man of Providence, through whose liberality the monument which stands on the old Carpenter plantation in the town of Cranston, to the memory of the immigrant and some of his descendants, was erected forty and more years ago, and some of whose descendants are yet active in the business and social life of Providence.

(I) William Carpenter, son of Richard, of Amesbury, Wiltshire, England, married Elizabeth, born in 1611 at Cheselbourne, Dorsetshire, England, daughter of William and Christiana (Peak) Arnold, and shortly thereafter left for America. Mr. Carpenter was one of the founders of the First Baptist Church established in this country, at Providence, and of the settlement at Pawtuxet, some four miles southerly from Providence, which later became Cranston. The Carpenters it is believed came to this country with the Arnolds, who came to Hingham, Mass., in 1635, and to Providence a little later. Here at Pawtuxet Mr. Carpenter lived and passed the remainder of his life, and was prominent in that community. He was elected to the General Court in 1658 and re-elected for the following five years. He also represented his town in that body in 1665-66-67-68-69-70-71. He was chosen assistant in 1672 and deputy again in 1679. During King Philip's war his house was attacked by the Indians and set fire to; one of his sons, William, was killed; he also lost many of his sheep, etc. His children were: Joseph, Lydia, Ephraim, Timothy, William, Priscilla, Silas and Benjamin.

(II) Benjamin Carpenter, born not far from 1651, at Pawtuxet, married Mary, born in 1661, daughter of Rev. Pardon Tillinghast, and became a prominent man in the Colony. He was a member of the town council from 1693 to 1699, and his name is often of record in connection with important public affairs. He possessed a large estate. He died March 3, 1710-11. His children were:

William, Joseph, Benjamin and Mary or Mercy.

(III) Benjamin Carpenter (2), born in 1693, married (first) Barbara, daughter of Israel and Mary (Barker) Arnold, (second) Mercy, daughter of Oliver Carpenter, and (third) Prudence Kingsley. Mr. Carpenter was a farmer at Pawtuxet and for a time lived in Providence. He died Dec. 16, 1766. His widow, Prudence, died July 29, 1801, aged eighty-seven years. His children were: Barbara; Mercy; Olive; Benjamin; Nathaniel; Elisha; Kingsley, and Daniel.

(IV) Nathaniel Carpenter, born Feb. 23, 1744, in Pawtuxet, married March 26, 1772, Deliverance Greene, born July 22, 1751, daughter of Elisha Greene, who was a descendant of Surgeon John Greene (a great grandson of Robert Greene, of Gillingham, County of Dorset, England), who came to America and settled at Shawomet, now Warwick, R. I., and became the founder of one of the most prominent families in Rhode Island. Surgeon John Greene settled first at Salem, Mass., where he was associated with Roger Williams, and followed him in 1636-37 to Providence. From Surgeon John Greene the lineage of Deliverance (Greene) Carpenter was through James, James (2), Elisha and Elisha Greene (2).

Nathaniel Carpenter was a farmer of the town of Cranston, where he died Aug. 12, 1828. His wife Deliverance died April 24, 1821. Their children were: Daniel, born Aug. 4, 1773; James, born March 15, 1775; Job, born Dec. 13, 1776; George, born March 29, 1780; Abby, born in 1782; Deliverance, born June 2, 1785; Nathaniel, born June 2, 1785; Sarah, born Nov. 17, 1787; and Earl, born March 21 (or 24), 1794.

(V) EARL CARPENTER, son of Nathaniel, born March 24 (or 21), 1794, in Cranston, R. I., married Oct. 26, 1821, Sarah A. Harris, daughter of Joseph and Catherine (Greene) Harris, of that town, and a descendant of William Harris, one of the five companions of Roger Williams in the founding of Providence, 1636.

Mr. Carpenter was reared on his father's farm, alternating in his boyhood, until eighteen years old, in assisting with the farm work and in attendance at the neighborhood school. At eighteen he gave his attention for a time to the carpenter's trade, and when about twenty commenced his business career in Providence in the grocery trade. His place of business was on Market Square and was reached and his business damaged by the memorable high waters and gale of September, 1815. Later on, in about 1820, he began the manufacture and sale of spruce beer as an adjunct to his grocery business. For a period in 1819-20 he had a brief experience as the proprietor of an oyster house and restaurant at Savannah, Ga., though retaining his Providence business. This introduction of what has since been known as "Carpenter's Beer" brought about the extensive ice business long carried on by Mr. Carpenter himself and later by himself and sons. The senior Mr. Carpenter began storing ice for beer purposes in 1822, in which year he purchased land adjacent to Benedict's pond, and built thereon a small storage house. This led to supplying others with ice. His business gradually increased and called for additional or larger storehouses. He rented another and built two additional ones at Dexter's pond. The increased demand led him, in 1849, to build the fine ice houses on the southeast side of Mashapaug pond. In these houses he used steam-power in the elevation of ice from the water, and was among the first in the country to introduce steam for this purpose. In the early fifties he built two more houses for the storage of ice at Randall's pond, in North Providence. Mr. Carpenter in 1854 associated with him his two sons in the business, which for many years was carried on under the firm name of Earl Carpenter & Sons. One of the sons died soon after entering the firm, and after the death of the father the business was continued by the surviving son, Charles Earl Carpenter. The capacity of ice storage, which at the beginning of the business was 300 tons, reached 68,000 tons.

In 1827 the senior Mr. Carpenter removed his grocery business to the "Union Building," in which it and the ice business were conducted until in 1855, when the grocery department was discontinued, but the ice office remained there until 1901.

From 1820 to 1837 Mr. Earl Carpenter was also engaged in the restaurant business, his location being on Canal street. In this as in the ice business, he succeeded. His restaurant was well patronized. It was here that he met many people and through his many agreeable characteristics he was popularly known throughout the community.

In his earlier life Mr. Carpenter gave considerable time and took great interest in military affairs and served as captain of a company. On LaFayette's visit to Providence, in 1824, he was colonel of the 2d Regiment of Militia. From June, 1841, to June, 1842, he was a member of the common council of Providence. He served several years as fire warden. His fellow-citizens were ready to bestow upon him offices of trust and responsibility, but he could not be induced to accept them. He was one of the first share holders and directors in the Traders' Bank, organized in 1836, and at the time of his death had been its president for more than twenty-two years. He was also a director of the Providence Mutual Fire Insurance Company. In his religious belief Mr. Carpenter was a Universalist, though not a member of the church. He was, however, a member, and a useful one, often an officer, for some twenty years of the First Universalist Society of Providence, regular in his attendance upon religious services. He died at his home in Providence, Feb. 10, 1863. His widow passed away July 25, 1867.

Mr. Carpenter possessed a fine physique and was active and vigorous in a large degree. He loved outdoor sports, such as hunting and fishing. He was cheerful and generous, and while not wealthy he was possessed of a competence and at his pleasant home dispensed a generous hospitality. He was prompt in all of his engagements.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter were: Albert Greene, born July 24, 1822; Charles Earl, born June 22, 1824; Joseph Harris, born Feb. 20, 1826; Nathaniel Greene, born in 1828; and Sarah Clarke, born Jan. 18, 1830, who married Sept. 15, 1851, David Chase Anthony, of Somerset, Mass. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Anthony, namely: Earl Carpenter Anthony, Sarah Ann Harris Anthony, Gardner Chase Anthony and David Chase Anthony, the latter of whom is a resident of Providence, R. I. David Chase Anthony, the father, died Sept 5, 1871.

CHARLES E. CARPENTER, son of Earl and Sarah Ann (Harris) Carpenter, died June 28, 1898. In past years he had been prominent in the public life of Providence and in a lesser degree in the public life of the State, but it was in his connection with church and public charities and philanthropic and veteran societies that he was best known in the last few years of his life. Always prominent in the church, he carried the teachings of humanity to mankind into all his associations.

Mr. Carpenter had seen the city grow from a small country town to the second municipality in New England, and had aided in that growth and rise. It was due in great part to his energy and far-sightedness that Pawtuxet water was introduced, and he served as one of the first water commissioners. He was one of the first advocates of the steam fire department, and put up the first fire alarm telegraph in the city, building it himself. Throughout his long career in the city council and the General Assembly he stood for progress.

Born in Providence June 22, 1824, Mr. Carpenter had always lived there. He carried on after the death of his father and for some time before, in fact, the great ice business established from such humble beginnings several years before the date of his birth. He attended a number of schools and at one time was a classmate of George William Curtis, the most famous of Rhode Island authors. His first school was kept by Miss Mahala Dyer, in the second story rear of a long building still standing on Richmond street, southeast of Clifford. Then he went to Mr. Willard's school, in the New Market building, at Weybosset street and Pawtuxet road, now Broad street. The cholera scare of that year, 1832, broke up that school. Dr. Benjamin Pettis was his next teacher, in the building at the southwest corner of Mathewson and Chapel streets. Luther Amsworth, a noted teacher, was his next master, in the school on Orange street. For five years he was under Thomas C. Hartshorn, in the brick school-house on the rear of the lot where the First Universalist Church stood, on Westminster street—the present site of the Boston Store. After the Dorr war he began to study with Merrick Lyon, in the old Peter Ferris school building, on the south side of Waterman street, 300 feet from Benefit, with the intention of fitting for Brown University. He finished his education at this school and never went to college, but at once entered business with his father, in 1844. In 1854 his father sold a one-third interest to each of the two sons. The other brother died sixty-eight days later, and Charles E. Carpenter carried on the work alone from the death of his father in 1863 to 1869. In that year he admitted his brother-in-law, David C. Anthony, to an equal interest. Mr. Anthony died in 1871, and Mr. Carpenter carried on the business alone until January, 1882, when he admitted his son, Albert G. Carpenter, his nephew, Earl Carpenter Anthony, and his daughter, Mrs. Sam H. Bullock. He gave up active interest in the business in 1884.

Beginning with the days of the old volunteer hand engines, Mr. Carpenter took a great interest in the fire department of the city and was active in the management and extension in its earlier days of the establishment of a paid fire department. He was for a number of years clerk of Union Fire Engine Company No. 3, and was later its foreman or captain. He was for many years a member of the board of fire wards, exercising a power and position somewhat resembling that of the board of fire commissioners of to-day. He joined Union No. 3, in August, 1843, the house of the company then being on Broad street below Eddy (then called Pleasant) street. He served five years as clerk and one year as foreman. His last fire duty was as clerk of the company for a year, after the organization of the paid fire department. He was one of the first to advocate the establishment of the present waterworks system, and was made a member of the first board of water commissioners, serving from Sept. 27, 1869, to November, 1876, with Moses B. Lockwood and Joseph J. Cooke, on the construction of the present waterworks. He had been interested in the Carpenter fountain, which had been established by his father and which, like the Field Fountain and the Rawson fountain, furnished water to the lower portions of the city through long wooden pipes. The Carpenter fountain was located on Fountain street below Dean. The site of the Field fountain is now occupied by the laundry building of the Women's City Missionary Society, standing on the lot on Clifford street near Claverick. The Rawson fountain was on a lot in Fountain street below Dean. These old fountains served their purpose and for a time supplied the city with needed water. But Mr. Carpenter foresaw that they would soon be insufficient, and it was largely through his efforts that the citizens were awakened to the benefit of the river near the municipality.

In the common council Mr. Carpenter represented the Fifth ward for a number of years, his terms being from 1857 to 1860; from 1866 to 1869; from 1878 to 1881. He received his first nomination through Henry A. Howland, a former Sunday-school teacher, and was made chairman of the Fire Department committee. He was defeated in 1860 largely through his active work for the adoption of steam fire engines in place of hand engines, but retired voluntarily at the end of his other terms. He was elected to the General Assembly on the Republican ticket in May, 1877, and was left off the ticket the next year because of his temperance principles. He ran on a temperance ticket against the regular nominee, and was elected on third trial, his opponent, Edwin N. Holden, withdrawing. He was elected again in 1884, on the regular Republican ticket, and the next year declined to again run on account of his election in May, 1884, as one of the board of public works. In this incumbency he served from May 19, 1884, to Feb. 11, 1889, and then retired from public life.

Mr. Carpenter was a member of many societies, although he had no desire to enter any secret societies and joined nothing of that character. His memory for dates and facts was extraordinary, and he was always one of the most interesting of the speakers at the gathering of the veteran associations, belonging to the Rhode Island Historical Society, the Rhode Island Veteran Citizens Historical Society, and the Providence Veteran Firemen's Association. Like his father before him he was a director in the People's Savings Bank, and he was also a director in the old Traders' National Bank until the institution went out of business. He was a member of the Providence Board of Trade, and was vice-president of the New England Mutual Accident Association of Boston. Until a short time before his death he served as president of the Rhode Island Homeopathic Hospital, having held the office from the foundation of the hospital, in which he was instrumental. He was also a member of the Rhode Island Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and of the similar society for the prevention of Cruelty to Children. While the Rhode Island Reform School was established in the old Tockwotton House, which stood on the lot now called Tockwotton Park, Mr. Carpenter was a member of the board of directors of the school, succeeding Henry A. Howland, and serving until December, 1866, when he resigned. He was a prominent member of the First Universalist Church of Providence, of the Rhode Island Universalist Convention, and of the Universalist Publishing House. For nearly a half century, over forty-nine years in fact, he had been superintendent of the Sunday-school of the First Universalist Church, now on Greene street, and as such was well known to many who are now sending their children to Sunday-school. Always genial, he was a well-remembered and loved figure in the church and Sunday-school. His interest in reform did not end in the church, for he was treasurer of the Bethany Home and of the Rescue Mission. He was one of the best known of the older citizens of the city, and has been greatly missed.

On Oct. 2, 1849, Mr. Carpenter was married to Adeline Frances, daughter of Peter Daniels Greene. She was born Feb. 16, 1830. As in the case of Mr. Carpenter, she can also trace her family line back to the earliest and most honored names of the Colony. Their marriage took place in the First Universalist Church, then standing on the northeast corner of Westminster and Union Streets. Children as follows blessed this union: (1) Albert Greene, born Feb. 24, 1851, is mentioned below. (2) Abby, born April 24, 1853, died Dec. 11, 1856. (3) Emma Clark, born June 8, 1858, was married June 8, 1881, to Sam Henry, son of Samuel B. and Abby (Bartlett) Bullock. He is treasurer of the ice company. Their children are: Abby, George Burroughs, Earl Carpenter, Richmond Bartlett and Frances. (4) Lucy Daniels, born Dec. 14, 1861, was married July 27, 1904, to Rev. Henry Irving Cushman, D. D., pastor of the First Universalist Church. At the death of her father she was unanimously chosen superintendent of the Sunday-school.

ALBERT GREENE CARPENTER, well known to business men throughout the city of Providence, passed away at his home, No. 213 Lexington avenue, Dec. 6, 1902, after an illness of but a few days. Mr. Carpenter was the eldest son of the late Charles E. Carpenter, and was a member of the third generation prominent in the ice interests of the city, since the organization of the business by his grandfather.

Mr. Carpenter was born Feb. 24, 1851, and was educated in the public schools of his native city, graduating from the Providence high school. While still in his teens he entered the office of Earl Carpenter & Sons, and from that time up to the absorption of the company by the Providence Ice Company he was prominently identified with the firm. With the reorganization and formation of the Earl Carpenter & Sons Company he was elected president, which office he held as long as the company remained in existence. With the formation of the Providence Ice Company and the absorption of the Earl Carpenter & Sons Company Mr. Carpenter's connection with the ice business ended, and though he was for a short time with the new concern it was for the purpose of organization only. After that time until his death he was engaged in the real estate business and was also interested in the Morgan Desk Company.

Mr. Carpenter had many friends. During his long business career he had made many acquaintances among the people of Providence, whether of high or low degree, and his death was sincerely mourned by a large circle. He was one of the most genial of men, and his wit was of the keenest, though at the same time of the kindest, nature. He was a member of the A. E. Club, of the Royal Arcanum and of the Knights of Honor.

Mr. Carpenter was married April 28, 1874, to Lucy E., daughter of Simri and Sarah F. (Whipple) Smith; she was born Dec. 28, 1854. They had no children.

JOHN AUSTIN. The Rhode Island Austin family is one of some two hundred and forty years' standing there, and that branch to which this article is directed, the Exeter-Providence family, descendants of Robert Austin in the line of the Revolutionary patriot, Ezekiel Austin of Exeter, has been conspicuous in and about Providence for some fifty years. Reference is especially made to the late John Austin and his son, the present Hon. Arthur E. Austin, who together and in turn have long contributed to the successful and widely known gold refining and smelting firm of John Austin & Son. The senior member devised a special successful process of gold refining and smelting which made him the leader in his line of business and the name of Austin widely and favorably known to the general jewelry trade—for now nearly or quite fifty years. He became a successful manufacturer and financier, bank president, etc.; while the younger member of the firm has followed in the father's footsteps and is worthily wearing the family name and sustaining its reputation.

The name of Robert Austin in 1661 appears on a list of sixty-five persons, most of whom were residents of Newport, Portsmouth and Kingstown, who were to have lots in the new settlement of Westerly. Concerning this Robert Austin, of whom he himself is a descendant, Mr. J. O. Austin, the Rhode Island genealogist, says: "Many facts seem to warrant the assumption that he was father of Jeremiah, Edward, Joseph and John." These were residents, Jeremiah of Kingstown and Exeter, Edward and Joseph of Kingstown, and John of Kingstown, East Greenwich and West Greenwich. Through this Jeremiah Austin, of Kingstown and Exeter, have descended the Exeter family of that name, to which belonged the late John Austin, of Providence, from whom and his wife, Elizabeth, his descent is through Ezekiel Austin of North Kingstown and his wife (who was a Champlin), Ezekiel Austin (2), and Ezekiel Austin (3) and his wife Rebecca (Dunnell) Austin, the home of the later generations being in Exeter, Rhode Island.

Ezekiel Austin (2) was born in 1757, and according to the United States census of 1840, was in that year residing with his son, Ezekiel Austin (3), in the town of Exeter, and was aged eighty-three years. He was at that time a United States pensioner for services performed in the Revolution. His name appears on the pension roll of 1835, as a private, New York militia. He was placed on the roll May 31, 1833, his pension to commence March 4, 1831, his age being given at the latter date as seventy-five years.

The late John Austin of Providence, son of Ezekiel (3) and grandson of Ezekiel (2), the Revolutionary soldier, was born Oct. 17, 1830, in Exeter, R. I. He was reared on a farm, working from early boyhood, and only receiving such educational privileges as were afforded by the neighboring district schools. Hard work on the farm and the good training of Quaker parents, however, developed in him self-reliance and independence, which, with his cheerful disposition and energy and hopefulness, were not long in asserting themselves. Quitting the farm along in the late fifties, he learned the trade of gold and silver refining under Mr. L. B. Darling, an experienced refiner of Providence. In 1862, associated with Horace F. Carpenter, he began business for himself, their location being on the corner of Friendship and Dorrance streets. Later Mr. Austin became the sole proprietor and carried on the business alone until in 1888, when he associated with him in it his son, Arthur E. Austin.

In the early days of the jewelry business in this country the smelting of stock was done in England or France, which occasioned great delay and danger of loss. Mr. Austin believed that smelting could be added to the business of refining with profit and advantage and to this end he secured the assistance of experts in that line, and from the information thus derived, together with his own ingenuity and tact, he perfected a process for smelting. With this addition, under his careful management the business increased rapidly and realized handsome profits. The firm manufactured blue vitriol and oxide of zinc, and dealt in fine gold, silver, copper, gold coin, sand and black crucibles, and as well were gold and silver assayers, refiners and smelters. Mr. Austin was distinctly a business man, devoting his time and energies to the building up of the vast enterprises with which his name was associated. From a small beginning he saw the concern of himself and son reach an approximate annual output of refined material to the value of $1,250,000. As a result of the process he originated the firm of John Austin & Son, perhaps, at the time of the death of the senior member of the firm led all other concerns in this line in the country, and the senior Mr. Austin had achieved almost a world-wide reputation. For nearly forty years he was known to almost every manufacturing jeweler in the land.

Mr. Austin was largely identified with several of the financial institutions of Providence. He was chosen president of the High Street Bank in 1878, succeeding Aaron B. Curry. He was chosen president of the Citizens Saving Bank, a bank located in the rooms of the High Street Bank, and mainly under the management of the same officials, in 1879. These positions he filled most acceptably to all concerned as well as to their great advantage until his death. In 1876 there were 756 depositors in the savings bank, a recent report of the State auditor showing 9,500 depositors.

Mr. Austin cared nothing for political preference, and never held political office. Of his time and wealth he gave generously to all worthy objects. He remembered his native town, Exeter, in the way of improvements in no unstinted manner. The old Austin homestead in that town, which came into the possession of his grandfather during the Revolution and of which he finally became the sole owner, he greatly improved, adding building after building until they numbered twenty-four, including a post-office, a store, school-house, and a beautiful memorial church.

Mr. Austin was a man of sensitive nature, quiet in manner, of a gentle spirit, and although reserved and retiring he was cheerful and manly, even in affliction and infirmity. His noble and loyal character was guided by a high moral purpose, whose influence was wholly for good. He was unostentatious, unpretentious and easily approached by the most humble. He was kind and affectionate in his home, in short he was held in affectionate esteem by all with whom he came in contact. Mr. Austin was identified with the Masonic fraternity, being a member of Mt. Vernon Lodge, No. 4, A. F. & A. M., and of Providence Chapter, R. A. M., at Providence. During the latter years of his life he was an attendant of the Episcopal Church, being a vestryman in All Saints Memorial Church.

On Sept. 18, 1850, Mr. Austin was married to Miss Susan Jane, daughter of John Darling, of Cumberland, R. I., and Polly (Weeding) Darling, of Greenwich, R. I., and to the union came children as follows: Clara M., born Aug. 9, 1859; Eugene A., born July 16, 1861; Clarence H., born Aug. 5, 1866; Arthur Ernest, born July 23, 1868; and Alice Weeden, born Oct. 11, 1874, all of whom are deceased excepting Arthur E. Mrs. Austin is living at the Austin residence on Westminster street, Providence.

Mr. Austin died Feb. 19, 1900, at his home on Westminster street, Providence, R. I., and in his death the city lost one of its conspicuous business men and influential citizens, and one, too, who was self-made in that term's fullest meaning.

ARTHUR E. AUSTIN, head of the firm of John Austin & Son, was born July 23, 1868, in Providence, and in the public schools of that city received his educational instruction. He early evinced an inclination for business life, and, interesting himself in his father's business, practically grew up in it. In 1888 he was admitted to the firm of John Austin & Son, and since the death of his father, in 1900, has continued the business without change or interruption, being now sole proprietor. Mr. Austin has inherited many of the business instincts of his father, and for one of his years has shown exceptional business and executive ability. He has been called upon to fill positions of responsibility and honor, and has done so with success, bearing all his honors with becoming modesty. He is president of the High Street Bank, vice-president of the Citizens Savings Bank, and secretary and treasurer of the Improved Seamless Wire Company. He was a member of the Cranston Council for ten years, to 1905, and president of that body for several years. In 1896 he was elected second representative from that town, and in 1897 first representative, during his term serving on the committee on Incorporations. In 1898 he was elected senator from his town, and served two years, during which time he was a member of the Judiciary committee and the committee on Militia. To continue in politics would have meant to give more of his attention than he desired to spare from business, so he declined a reelection in 1900. He is a Republican in political faith.

Mr. Austin is a member of St. John's Com-mandery, Knights Templar, and of the Mystic Shrine, being a thirty-second-degree Mason. He was commodore of the Rhode Island Yacht Club in 1892; is a member of the New York Yacht Club; of the Squantum Club; and of the Pomham Club. He also holds membership in the Sons of the American Revolution. He is a vestryman in All Saints Memorial Church.

Mr. Austin has two children: Clarence E., born July 23, 1889; and Gertrude W., born Sept. 20, 1891.

MATHEWSON (Burrillville family). Through the middle of the century but recently closed and for years following several members of the Burrillville branch of the ancient Providence Mathewson family were prominently identified with the interests of that town, especially in its public affairs. Some family history and genealogy follows in chronological order from the Providence settler.

(I) James Mathewson, born about 1624, was an inhabitant of Providence in 1658, in that year purchasing land of Thomas Angell. He married Hannah Field, and their children were: Ruth, James, John, Isabel, Thomas, Zachariah, Lydia, Mary and Daniel.

(II) Daniel Mathewson, born Jan. 28, 1683, in Providence, R. I., married (first) Feb. 10, 1703-04, Sarah Inman, daughter of John and Mary (Whitman) Inman; married (second) in 1732 Esther: married (third) Sept. 26, 1742, Charity Inman, of Smithfield, R. I.; married (fourth) July 12, 1747, Lydia (—) Montigur, of Gloucester, R. I. He died

Jan. 13, 1751, in Gloucester, R. I. His children were: cultured. He retired from the business of contracting and building in 1887.

Othniel, born Feb. 2, 1704-05; Peregrine, born Sept. 12, 1707; Mary, born Nov. 7, 1710; Nero, born June 27, 1713; Daniel, born March 7, 1715-16; Silvanus, born July 25, 1719; Winchester, born in 1721 (all born to first marriage); Hannah, born May 28, 1733; Martha, born Jan. 9, 1735-36; John, born Jan. 26, 1738-39; Ruth, born May 15, 1741 (all born to the second wife); Thankful, born probably in 1743 to third wife; Daniel, born Jan. 17, 1749; and Lydia, born about 1751 (both to fourth wife).

(III) Peregrine Mathewson, born Sept. 12, 1707, in Providence, R. I., married April 26, 1733, Hannah Hide. Mr. Mathewson resided in Gloucester, R. I. He was admitted a freeman of the Colony in 1735. He received land from his father in the town in 1734-35 and in 1750-51. He died Nov. 29, 1789, in Gloucester, R. I. His widow Hannah was living in 1790. Their children were: Patience, born May 13, 1736; John, born June 7, 1746; and Ai, born about 1750.

(IV) John Mathewson, born June 7, 1746, in Gloucester, R. I., married probably in 1774, Lydia Jenckes, a sister of Charles Jenckes, of Warehouse Point, Conn., the manufacturer of Jenckes's Gin, and lived in Gloucester, R. I. Their children all of Burrillville record were: Peregrine, born Jan. 17, 1775; Welcome, Aug. 15, 1778; Hannah, April 28, 1781; John, Jan. 1, 1785; Lydia, Aug. 18, 1787; Anphillis, March 4, 1790; and Amy, Feb. 3, 1795—all born to them in Gloucester.

(IV) Ai Mathewson, son of Peregrine, born about 1750, probably in Gloucester, R. I., married March 12, 1775, Amy Shippee, daughter of Joseph, and perhaps (second) July 1, 1798, Lydia Darling.

(V) Welcome Mathewson, son of John and Lydia (Jenckes), born Aug. 15, 1778, in Gloucester, R. I., married Abigail Brown of Thompson, Conn., and a direct descendant of one of the passengers of the "Mayflower." Mr. Mathewson was occupied in farming in Gloucester, R. I. He died in 1872. His children were: Huldah; Mary Ann, who married Henry Sweet; Azuba, who married Otis Eddy; Erastus, who died April 27, 1889, unmarried; and David.

(VI) David Mathewson, son of Welcome and Abigail (Brown) Mathewson, was born Dec. 29, 1817, in the town of Burrillville, R. I. His educational advantages were limited, yet he improved such as he had. He was reared to agricultural pursuits, which he continued in until 1840, when he became engaged in the lumber business, and as a contractor and builder put up some one hundred prominent mills and private dwellings in his native town. From the year 1875 on through his active business life he also in connection with Mr. Robert Sweet operated an extensive sawmill. He owned a large farm near Harrisville, R. I., which at one time was well-stocked with cattle and thoroughly

In politics Mr. Mathewson was a Democrat, and filled a number of positions of honor and trust. He served one year as town clerk, and for eight years was a member and chairman of the town council. He represented Burrillville in the lower house of the Rhode Island Assembly in 1875, 1876 and 1877. He died May 14, 1896.

At the age of twenty-seven years Mr. Mathewson was married to Emeline, daughter of Smith and Nancy Wood of Burrillville.

JEROME B. FARNUM, than whom there were few, if any, better known men in the wool trade in New England during his life time, was born June 16, 1845, in Johnston, R. I., son of John and Uranah (Smith) Farnum. His father was a farmer and sheep raiser, and shortly after the birth of Jerome became wool sorter at the Hazard mill in Peace Dale.

Jerome B. Farnum attended school first in Peace Dale, R. I., but when he was about twelve years old his parents removed to Providence, where he attended the Bridgham street school. He was but a school boy when the Civil war broke out, and when the news reached Providence that the Confederates were threatening Washington, May 25, 1862, Mr. Farnum, though at that time only sixteen years old, enlisted in the 10th Regiment, R. I. Vol. Inf. He left Providence with the regiment on May 27th, and on June 30th, while before Washington, was detached for special service. In September he was mustered out and returned home. A few years after the war he was bookkeeper for the firm of Asa Peck & Co., wool dealers, and while connected with this house became a familiar figure in the offices of wool and mill men from New York to Boston. In 1879 he entered into partnership with ex-Senator Richard Thornley, under the firm name of Thornley & Farnum. The dissolution of this firm, in 1883, was followed by Mr. Farnum's establishing himself in business in 1884, when he opened an office at No. 139 Canal street, there continuing until his death, March 3, 1902. In 1883 Mr. Farnum removed from Providence to Seekonk, where, in the central part of the town, he bought land and laid out and developed a fine farm, giving the place the name of "Hope Farm." In Seekonk he soon became the leading Republican of the town, and although he never sought office was prominent in town affairs, in county and State politics, and in the end became chairman of the Republican town committee, having close relations with the Republican State central committee. He was chiefly instrumental in establishing the Seekonk Public Library, of which he was a trustee and to which he was an unfailing friend. He was a member of Hope Lodge, No. 4, I. O. O. F., and Moshassuck Encampment, No. 2;

Jan. 13, 1751, in Gloucester, R. I. His children were: Peregrine, born Feb. 2, 1704-05; Peregrine, born Sept. 12, 1707; Mary, born Nov. 7, 1710; Nero, born June 27, 1713; Daniel, born March 7, 1715-16; Silvanus, born July 25, 1719; Winchester, born in 1721 (all born to first marriage); Hannah, born May 28, 1733; Martha, born Jan. 9, 1735-36; John, born Jan. 26, 1738-39; Ruth, born May 15, 1741 (all born to the second wife); Thankful, born probably in 1743 to third wife; Daniel, born Jan. 17, 1749; and Lydia, born about 1751 (both to fourth wife).

(III) Peregrine Mathewson, born Sept. 12, 1707, in Providence, R. I., married April 26, 1733, Hannah Hide. Mr. Mathewson resided in Gloucester, R. I. He was admitted a freeman of the Colony in 1735. He received land from his father in the town in 1734-35 and in 1750-51. He died Nov. 29, 1789, in Gloucester, R. I. His widow Hannah was living in 1790. Their children were: Patience, born May 13, 1736; John, born June 7, 1746; and Ai, born about 1750.

(IV) John Mathewson, born June 7, 1746, in Gloucester, R. I., married probably in 1774, Lydia Jenckes, a sister of Charles Jenckes, of Warehouse Point, Conn., the manufacturer of Jenckes's Gun, and lived in Gloucester, R. I. Their children all of Burrillville record were: Peregrine, born Jan. 17, 1775; Welcome, Aug. 15, 1778; Hannah, born 28, 1781; John, Jan. 1, 1785; Lydia, born 1788; Anphillis, March 4, 1790; and Anna, born 1795—all born to them in Gloucester.

(IV) Ai Mathewson, son of Peregrine and Hannah, born about 1750, probably in Gloucester, R. I., married March 12, 1775, Mary Sweet, daughter of Joseph, and perhaps (second wife) of John Sweet, of Burlington.

(V) Welcome, daughter of John and Lydia (Jenckes), born Nov. 28, 1778, in Gloucester, R. I., married Aug. 1, 1799, in Providence, Conn., and a direct descendant of the passengers of the "Mayflower," and was engaged in the occupation of farming in Gloucester, R. I., in 1872. His children were: David, who married a woman named Henry Sweet; Asa, who married Otis Kelly; Erasmus, who died young; and Sumner, and David.

(VI) David Mathewson, son of Welcome and Abigail (Brown), was born Dec. 29, 1817, in the town of Burrillville, R. I. His educational advantages were not great, yet he improved such as he had. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he continued until 1843, when he became engaged in the mercantile business, and as a contractor and builder. He was one hundred prominent citizens and prominent dwellings in his native town. For the year 1843, through his active business, he was also in connection with Mr. Robert Sweet, located an extensive sawmill. He owned a large farm, near Harris, R. I., which at one time was well-stocked with cattle and thoroughly

In politics Mr. Mathewson was a Democrat.

He filled a number of positions of honor and trust. He served one year as town clerk, and for eight years was a member and chairman of the town council. He represented Burrillville in the lower house of the Rhode Island Assembly in 1875, 1876 and 1877. He died May 14, 1896.

At the age of twenty-seven years Mr. Mathewson was married to Emeline, daughter of Smith and Nancy Wood of Burrillville.

JEROME B. FARNUM, than whom there were few, if any, better known men in the wool trade in New England during his life time, was born June 16, 1845, in Johnston, R. I., son of John and Uranah (Smith) Farnum. His father was a farmer and sheep raiser, and shortly after the birth of Jerome became wool sorter at the Hazard mill in Peace Dale.

of Prescott Post, No. 1, G. A. R.; of the Universalist Club, and of the Universalist Church of East Providence.

Mr. Farnum married (first) Ellen Tasker, and to them was born one son, Frank Tasker, who died at the age of eighteen years. Mr. Farnum's second marriage was to Mrs. Sarah J. Mills, daughter of William C. D. Earle, of Providence, R. I., and to this union was born one son, Jerome Earle, on March 6, 1883.

Jerome Earle Farnum was educated in the University grammar school and Mowry & Goff's English and Classical Institute, and after graduation went into business with his father. Upon the latter's death, Jerome E. succeeded him, locating his office in the Banigan building. On April 30, 1906, he married Miss Marion Perry, of Rehoboth, Mass., daughter of Charles and Annie (Pierce) Perry.

HAZARD. This family occupies a prominent position in the civil, commercial, judicial and military history of Rhode Island. The lineage given herewith is that of Judge Jeffrey Hazard of the sixth generation, who from 1810 to 1818 was Judge of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, and who later served as Lieutenant Governor of the State. Two of his grandsons, sons of John Hazard, were the late General John G. Hazard, one of the most conspicuous of Rhode Island's officers in the Civil war, and Jeffrey Hazard, now a resident of Providence, where he is president of the Hazard Cotton Company.

(I) Thomas Hazard, born in 1610, appears first of record in America in Boston in 1635; was admitted a freeman there in 1638, and two years later of Portsmouth, R. I. He was one of the founders and first town officers of Newport, along with Coddington, Easton, Coggeshall, Brenton, the Clarkes, Bull and Dyer. Mr. Hazard was made a freeman of Newport in 1639, and in 1640 was appointed a member of the General Court of Elections. His first wife, Martha, died in 1669, and he married (second) Martha, widow of Thomas Sheriff. His children were: Robert, born in 1635, in England or Ireland; Elizabeth; Hannah; and Martha.

(II) Robert Hazard, born in 1635, married Mary, born in 1639, daughter of Thomas and Anne Brownell, who lived to be one hundred years old, dying Jan. 28, 1739, her obituary setting forth that she was accounted a very useful gentlewoman, etc. Robert Hazard was admitted a freeman of Portsmouth, R. I., in 1665, and from that time until 1698 his name often appears in the Colonial records as chosen to fill some important position. In 1671 he bought 500 acres of land in Kings Town, and in 1687 he was taxed in that town; and not long thereafter he built his house there. This house was still standing in the early part of the nineteenth century. In 1695 he gave to his son George the larger part of his Kings Town purchase. In 1710, a short time before his death, Robert sold to his son Robert the remaining part of his farm, with "my manor house where I now live," and the latter, in 1718, gave it by will to his son Robert, after his mother's death, making three Roberts who had successively owned the old house. The last, upon the death of his grandmother in 1739, sold to his uncle George the remaining part of the farm; it went next by will in 1743 to George's son, Col. Thomas, who in 1748 sold it to John Rose. In 1695 Robert Hazard gave to his son Jeremiah two hundred acres of land in Tiverton. Robert Hazard died in 1710. His children were: Thomas, born in 1660; George; Stephen; Martha; Mary; Robert; Jeremiah, born March 26, 1675; and Hannah.

(III) Robert Hazard (2), married Amey, and they died in 1718, his will being proved in November of that year. Mrs. Hazard died a few months prior to her husband. His will gave to his son Jeffrey three hundred acres of land which he called "the farm where I now live." It was probably in that part of Kings Town which became Exeter. To his son Thomas he gave two hundred acres in Kings Town, and one hundred and sixty acres in Westerly. To his son Robert he gave the old manor house, and one hundred and twenty acres, given him by his father; but Robert was not to have possession of the house and twenty acres until after his grandmother's death. To each of his daughters he gave when of age, one hundred pounds. His children were: Jeffrey, born Sept. 29, 1698; Susannah, born Jan. 16, 1701; Robert, born Jan. (or June) 19, 1703; Thomas, born June 18, 1713; Amey, born Sept. 20, 1715; and Mary, born May 14, 1718.

(IV) Robert Hazard (3), born June (or Jan.) 19, 1703, married in March, 1717, Martha (of North Kingstown record). Early in life Mr. Hazard removed to East Greenwich, in which town are recorded the births of all his children. In 1739 he sold the old homestead with one hundred acres to his uncle George. By the terms of his father's will he was to have possession of the old home only after the death of his grandmother, which occurred in 1739. Mr. Hazard died in 1775. His children were: Robert, born Sept. 19, 1728; Amey, born in November, 1733; Sarah, born May 6, 1734; Jeremiah, born July 25, 1736; Mary, born Dec. 21, 1738; Hannah, born March 19, 1741; Jeffrey, born Oct. 6, 1743; and Thomas.

(V) Jeremiah Hazard, born July 25, 1736, married Nov. 6, 1760, Phebe Tillinghast, and died in 1773. In his will written in that year he gave to his son Jeffrey "all my lands lying in Exeter and in West Greenwich; to wife Phebe, all lands lying in Coventry (one hundred and fifty acres); to daughter, Abigail," etc. The will was admitted to probate Dec. 14, 1773. His children were Jeffrey, born in 1762; and Abigail.

(VI) Jeffrey Hazard, born in 1762, married Amey, born in 1773, daughter of Thomas Tillinghast. They died, he in December, 1840, and she June 3, 1870. Mr. Hazard was Lieutenant-Governor of Rhode Island from 1833 to 1835, and again from 1836 to 1837. He was also for many years a representative in the General Assembly, and Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and Judge of the Supreme Court from 1810 to 1818. His children were: Amey, born in 1791, married to Robert, son of John Hazard; Thomas Jefferson, born June 17, 1795; Willard, born in 1799; John, born in 1804; and Phoebe.

(VII) John Hazard, born in 1804, married Margaret, daughter of Robert Crandall, and their children were: John Gardiner, born April 15, 1832, died May 15, 1897; and Jeffrey, born Sept. 23, 1835. John Hazard was a farmer in early life and resided in Exeter, R. I. Later he removed to Providence where he was engaged at mercantile pursuits, and there died Jan. 7, 1885. He was a Democrat in political sentiment, and at one time was a representative from Exeter to the General Assembly. Mrs. Hazard survived her husband, and died on May 12, 1888, aged eighty-one years.

(VIII) GEN. JOHN GARDINER HAZARD (deceased), of Providence, one of Rhode Island's foremost citizen-soldiers, 1861-1865, was born April 15, 1832, in the town of Exeter, R. I. The breaking out of the Civil war found him engaged in mercantile pursuits at Providence. His patriotism and the stirring events of the spring and summer of 1861 led him to tender his services to his country. He was commissioned first lieutenant, 1st R. I. Light Artillery, Aug. 8, 1861; assisted in the organization of Batteries B and C; accompanied the latter to Washington, and was soon after transferred to Battery A. He was ordered to accompany General Williams's brigade to Ball's Bluff on the day of the battle there, and arrived on the ground at daylight the following morning. The day was spent in getting canal boats in readiness, and putting on board the battery and horses. After dark he was ordered to unship, as the troops already across were ordered back to Maryland's side of the Potomac. This move of crossing to the Virginia side of the river was simply a feint to prevent the enemy making another, prior to our troops returning, which could only be done under cover of night. The following day the battery returned to its old camping ground at Darnstown. About the 1st of November Lieut. Hazard was ordered to report to General Charles P. Stone, at Poolesville, Md., where his battery remained during the winter, sending out a section weekly to do picket duty. During the greater portion of the winter Lieut. Hazard was in command of the battery, Capt. Tompkins being absent on sick leave. Early in the spring the battery accompanied Gen. Sedgewick to Harper's Ferry, from which point two or three expeditions were made up the valley to Charlestown and Winchester, resulting only in slight skirmishes. In April, the battery was ordered to Washington to ship for Fortress Monroe. Arriving at that point, the Division was united to Sumner's Corps (the Second). Lieut. Hazard accompanied the battery up the Peninsula, and was almost daily engaged at the Siege of Yorktown. At the raising of the siege it was put on shipboard on the York river and landed at West Point, where it joined the main part of the army again at Camp Winfield Scott. June 30th crossing the Chickahominy it was engaged in the battle of Fair Oaks, after which it remained in this work until the retreat was ordered to the James river. The battery was engaged almost constantly, as was the entire army, from the time it started until it reached the river—more severely for the battery, perhaps, at Peach Orchard, White Oak Swamp and Glendale. At Malvern Hill it was not ordered into the fight, yet sustained loss from the enemy's artillery.

On Aug. 20, 1862, Lieut. Hazard was commissioned captain of Battery B, and took command Sept. 1st, at Alexandria, on its arrival from the Peninsula. It then rejoined the Second Corps, and accompanied it through Maryland, South Mountain, thence to the battle of Antietam. From here the army went into camp in and about Harper's Ferry, to refit and re-organize. The battery at this time was in a particularly bad condition, horses worn out, men were ragged, and from constant marching day and night, the men had become slack in discipline. These evils, with the assistance of Lieuts. George W. Adams, Horace S. Bloodgood and G. Lyman Dwight, were speedily overcome. In October, 1862, Capt. Hazard proceeded with the army to Warrenton, and from there after the change in command to Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburg, where the battery remained in camp until ordered into the battle of Fredericksburg. On the 12th he was engaged from daylight until late in the day in shelling the same. On the morning of the 13th he was ordered across the river to report to Major-General O. O. Howard, commanding Second Division of the Corps. The infantry having been repulsed again and again after many hard hours of fighting, it was decided to send Battery B to the extreme front in a very exposed position, within one hundred and fifty yards of the enemy's line and under a heavy cross fire of their artillery. Their orders were to go in on the run, or they would never succeed in getting into position at all. They did so, but had remained there only about twenty minutes when they were ordered out, with a severe loss in men and horses. Gen. Couch afterward told Capt. Hazard that he did not expect to see him get out without losing his command, but that he considered the sacrifice called for, as the infantry were getting very much demoralized. The horses of Capt. Hazard and Lieut. Bloodgood were shot under them during the battle.

In April, 1863, Capt. Hazard was made chief of artillery of the Corps. At the same time a complete change was made in the organization of the artillery of the Army of the Potomac. The artillery of each Corps was taken from the Divisions and made into a separate Brigade by itself, and placed under the sole command of the Chief of Artillery, who was made, by the order, a brigade commander. After the fatal blunder of Gen. Hooker at Chancellorsville, the enemy left our front on their memorable campaign into Maryland and Pennsylvania. Capt. Hazard's brigade accompanied the Second Corps on the chase after Lee to the battle of Gettysburg, where, after three days' terrific fighting, Lee retreated across the Potomac. After following him to Falling Waters our Army was put in motion for Virginia, and struck the enemy again near Culpeper. The Second Corps had been in a severe fight with a portion of the enemy at Auburn Hill and Bristoe Station, Capt. Hazard's command taking a very important part in the result of the day. Soon after, the army went into winter quarters on the Rapidan. In April, 1864, Capt. Hazard was made major of his regiment, and assigned to the command of the Second Brigade of the Artillery Reserves. When the Army broke camp on the 4th of May, he accompanied his brigade to the Wilderness; thence to Spottsylvania, where the brigade was attached to that part of Gen. Tidball's of the Second Corps, with which he continued through the battles of the Po, Mattapony, North Anna and Cold Harbor, to Petersburg. On July 1, 1864, Gen. Tidball was ordered to West Point as commander and the consolidated brigade was placed under Major Hazard's command. The brigade was engaged almost daily from May 5th until August 1st; and from that time, until about Sept. 1st, it remained quiet, with the exception of the battle of Deep Bottom, and the unfortunate repulse at Ream's Station, where he lost eight guns and all the officers of Battery B, captured by the enemy.

On Aug. 8th, Major Hazard was made lieutenant colonel by brevet, for "gallant and meritorious services." During the fall and winter of 1864, his command occupied various forts in the works in front of Petersburg, at times withdrawing a few batteries for some of the various moves and expeditions sent out during the winter. Most of the time he occupied the line, Col. Hazard had in his command nineteen light, four heavy and six mortar batteries, stationed at the most important points and requiring the greatest care and watchfulness. On March 28th the brigade broke camp and moved with the corps across Hatch's Run, where they engaged the enemy, in connection with the grand advance of the whole army. Richmond and Petersburg falling, they pursued the enemy to Appomattox Court House, their corps being immediately on the heels of Lee's army. They were constantly skirmishing with them to the very hour of their surrender. The last battle engaged in was at Farmersville, April 7th and 8th. On May 3, 1865, Lieut. Col. Hazard was made colonel by brevet for meritorious services. He was recommended for these brevets by his superior officers several months prior. He accompanied his brigade from Virginia to Washington, and participated in the Grand Review. At the disbanding of the artillery, he was ordered to report with his regiment (Col. Tompkins and Lieut. Col. Tompkins having been mustered out), to Rhode Island, and on July 1st, was mustered out. On the 11th of July, Gen. Hazard was commissioned Colonel of the Fifth United States Volunteers, retaining his brevet rank, and ordered by the Secretary of War to make his headquarters at Fort Wadsworth, Staten Island, New York harbor, and he commanded that post until March 9, 1866, when his regiment was mustered out of service.

After the war the greater part of the active business life of Gen. Hazard was passed in the South, making his headquarters at New Orleans, engaged in the cotton business. He made a number of business trips abroad.

Gen. Hazard died May 15, 1897, in Providence, R. I. His funeral took place from Grace Episcopal Church May 18th, there being present besides friends a large representation of the Loyal Legion of which the deceased had been a member. The interment was at Swan Point Cemetery, Providence.

"The reputation which General Hazard earned by his valor during the struggle of the Rebellion was well sustained by his upright life in the time of peace which followed its close. That he held the love and respect of all who knew him was fully evidenced by the large number of friends who gathered in the church to pay the last tribute possible to the deceased." (Providence Daily Journal, May 19, 1897.)

"The late John Gardiner Hazard, to whose memory the last tributes are today paid, was one of Rhode Island's gallant soldiers during the war of the Rebellion, and though his business career was made outside the home boundaries, he had a large acquaintance here and was greatly liked and esteemed in many circles. His sudden death was a shock to these many friends, for though the severe service of the soldier had undoubtedly had its effects on his physical constitution, he had all the spirit of young manhood, and was a charming associate wherever he moved." (Providence News, May 18, 1897.)

(VIII) CAPTAIN JEFFREY HAZARD, born in Exeter, R. I., Sept. 23, 1835, married Oct. 20, 1865. Anna Hartwell, a native of Providence, daughter of John B. and Harriet (Hall) Hartwell. Their children were: (1) Lauriston Hartwell, born Nov. 22, 1866, graduated from Brown University in 1889. Since that year he has been associated with his father, and since the formation of the Hazard Cotton Company, he has been treasurer of the organization. (2) Jeffrey, born Dec. 28, 1867, died Dec. 24, 1883. (3) John Hartwell, born May 20, 1870, died July 24, 1871. (4) Margaret Crandall, born April 10, 1872, died May 23, 1881. (5) Marion, born Aug. 3, 1874, is Mrs. L. H. Littlefield, of Providence. (6) Harriet Hall was born Aug. 11, 1877. (7) Anna Rosalind, born Oct. 8, 1882, is now Mrs. William H. Barnum, of Mamaroneck, New York.

Captain Hazard received his education in the Providence High School, and previous to the breaking out of the Civil War was engaged as teller in the Manufacturers' Bank. Early in the war, Oct. 5, 1861, he was commissioned second lieutenant of Battery A, 1st R. I. Light Infantry, and later commissioned first lieutenant and appointed regimental adjutant. His war record following is taken from Bartlett's "Memoirs of Rhode Island Officers" (1867): "While connected with this battery he distinguished himself by his bravery in the many battles in which he took part. Among these were Ball's Bluff, Yorktown, Fair Oaks, Malvern Hill and Antietam. At the latter engagement the only officers present with Capt. Tompkins were Capt. Hazard (then first lieutenant) and first lieutenant Chas. F. Mason. The battery gained for itself great credit in this battle, holding as it did an advanced and important position under a heavy infantry and artillery fire. On the 1st of October, 1862, he was promoted to the captaincy of Battery H, which had been enlisted in Providence under Capt. Hamlin. Under orders the Battery was taken to Camp Barry, Washington, where it suffered the loss of a large number of men, mostly foreigners who had enlisted for the bounty alone. The Company was then supplied by an assignment of twenty-seven men from Gen. Stannard's Vermont Brigade which was enlisted for nine months. At the time of the battle of Chancellorsville," continues the "Memoirs of Rhode Island Officers," "one section was ordered by Gen. Abercrombie to be taken to Rappahannock Station where it remained nine days with the Twelfth Vermont regiment. Upon the return of this section, the whole battery was ordered to Chantilly, where it remained until Hooker's army passed through Maryland and Pennsylvania. The purpose was to join the army in its march against Lee, who was concentrating his forces at Gettysburg, Pa. It marched on the 28th of July, 1863, to Arlington Heights, reported to Brigadier Barry, and was ordered to Camp Barry, near Washington, D. C. Here it remained two days, then marched to Long Bridge, and reported to Gen. De Russy, and afterwards to Camp Barry, near Fort Ward, reporting to Col. H. L. Abbott, commanding the Third Brigade, Dept. South of the Potomac. About this time the enlistment of the men assigned from the Vermont Brigade expired, depleting the ranks of the Company to such an extent that it seemed improbable that the Battery could get out of the Department of Washington and reach the front. Under these circumstances, on the 17th of August, 1863, Capt. Hazard resigned his command."

After his resignation from the service, Capt.

Hazard returned to Providence and entered the employ of the American Wood Pulp Company. The manufacture of paper from wood in America began in this company's mill at Royers Ford, Pa. Later Capt. Hazard was employed by William H. Reynolds, a cotton broker of Providence, remaining with him until 1868, when he (Capt. Hazard) formed a partnership with A. Duncan Chapin in the cotton brokerage business under the firm name of Hazard & Chapin. The partnership continued until 1894 when it was dissolved, and the Hazard Cotton Company was formed, Capt. Hazard being elected president, which office he has since held. He is the oldest active cotton merchant in the city.

In politics Capt. Hazard is a Republican, although his father and brother were Democrats. He has never cared for public office. He is a companion of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion, Massachusetts Commandery; a member of the Marine Artillery Veteran Corps, of Providence; and of Prescott Post, No. 1, G. A. R. He is a member of the Hope Club, Squantum Club and Providence Art Club, and prominent in the city's best social circles. In his religious faith he is a churchman, a communicant of Grace Church.

CONGDON. One of the old and honored families of Providence, R. I., is that of Congdon, a brief genealogy of which is here given, the Roman numerals indicating generations:

(I) Benjamin Congdon.

(II) James Congdon, son of Benjamin.

(III) Ephraim Congdon, son of James, was born March 1, 1732, and died April 13, 1794.

(IV) Nicholas Congdon, son of Ephraim, born Jan. 12, 1769, married Phoebe Battey, born March 2, 1772, and they had children as follows: Barbara, born April 5, 1794, died Dec. 27, 1794; Caleb, born Oct. 27, 1795, is mentioned further on; Aimey, born Nov. 21, 1797, married Henry Hudson, and died Jan. 11, 1877; Marian, born June 11, 1804, died March 2, 1810; Phebe, born May 27, 1806, married David Burton, and died Nov. 8, 1872; Dorcas, born June 26, 1808, married Thomas Harkness; and Eliza, born June 1, 1810, married Benjamin Burlingame, and died Nov. 13, 1883.

(V) Caleb Congdon, son of Nicholas, was born Oct. 27, 1795, and died April 22, 1878. He married Jan. 27, 1818, Mary Lippitt, daughter of Col. Christopher and Weight (Harris) Lippitt. She died Nov. 6, 1881. Sixty years ago Caleb Congdon resided on the farm next to Lippitt Hill, in Cranston, R. I. His children were: Mary L., born Aug. 22, 1819, died Dec. 22, 1900; Caleb B., born May 5, 1824, died Aug. 5, 1834; Lippitt, born May 13, 1827, died in August, 1884; and Victoria, born Dec. 15, 1836, died Oct. 31, 1889.

(VI) Mary L. Congdon, daughter of Caleb Congdon, was married April 24, 1844, to David Sands Harris, born Dec. 24, 1812.

(VII) Mary Congdon Harris, born June 18,

1857, married Dec. 11, 1877, Edward H. Mason, son of Israel B. Mason, and to them were born the following children: Howard Harris, born Sept. 26, 1878, is a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, was at the Presbyterian Hospital, New York City, and is now practicing his profession in New York; Helen Bowen was born Oct. 8, 1880; Ralph Edward, Sept. 22, 1882; Mary Lippitt, Feb. 27, 1886; Edward H., Jr., Sept. 10, 1888; and Louisa Catherine, July 8, 1891.

The HARRIS family, of which Mrs. Mason is a descendant, is an old family of Rhode Island, and a full history is given elsewhere in this work. Joseph Harris, grandfather of Mrs. Mason, was born June 15, 1770, son of Elisha Harris, and married Nov. 25, 1790, Catharine Greene. He died in Cranston, R. I., Dec. 17, 1853, and his wife died Nov. 25, 1790, Catharine Greene. He died in as follows: Elisha, Sept. 8, 1791; Sarah Ann, June 25, 1793; Hannah, Feb. 19, 1795; John Clark, Nov. 13, 1797; Joseph Greene, April 4, 1803; David Sands and William Sewell, twins, Dec. 24, 1812.

DAVID SANDS HARRIS, son of Joseph Harris, born Dec. 24, 1812, married April 24, 1844, Mary L. Congdon, born Aug. 22, 1819, daughter of Caleb and Mary (Lippitt) Congdon. They had two children: (1) Elisha, born Feb. 7, 1845, died April 8, 1876. He married Oct. 22, 1872, Lydia Coit Lord, of New London county, Conn. (2) Mary Congdon, born June 18, 1857, married Dec. 11, 1877, Edward H. Mason.

WILLIAM THOMAS CRANDELL, Secretary of the State Home and School of Rhode Island, is a descendant in the seventh generation from one of the earliest settlers of Rhode Island.

(I) John Crandall appears at Newport, R. I., as early as the year 1651, where he was associated with the Baptists. He subsequently became the first elder of that denomination at Westerly. He was a freeman in 1655, was commissioner several years, 1658-1662, inclusive. He had half a square assigned him at Westerly in 1661, was deputy in 1667, and again in 1670-71. He died at Newport in 1676, having moved there on account of the Indian war. Mr. Crandall was twice married. The Christian name of his first wife, who was buried May 2, 1670, is not known. His second wife's name was Hannah. His children were: John, James, Jane, Sarah, Peter, Joseph, Samuel, all born to the first wife; and Jeremiah and Eber, born to the second wife.

(II) Samuel Crandall, born in 1663, married in 1685, Sarah Celley, who died Aug. 3, 1758. He died May 19, 1736. Their children were: Samuel, born Oct. 30, 1686; Mary, May 17, 1689 (died July 11, 1732); James, Aug. 23, 1692 (died Jan. 30, 1782); John, Jan. 11, 1695; Peter, Oct. 25, 1697; Joseph, Nov. 28, 1701 (died June 2, 1731); Thomas, July 27, 1707.

(III) Samuel Crandall (2), son of Samuel and Sarah (Celley) Crandall, born Oct. 30, 1686, married May 3, 1706, Mary Wilbor, born in 1685. Their children were: Thomas, born in 1707; Eber, in 1708; Samuel, in 1710; William and John, in 1711; John (2), in 1713; Peter, in 1715; Wilbor, in 1717; Sarah, in 1718; Joseph, in 1721 (died Jan. 19, 1791); Mary, born in 1723 (died April 4, 1783); Lois, in 1725; Benjamin, in 1727; Lemuel, in 1729; Philip, in 1731; and Nathaniel, in 1733 (died April 10, 1821).

(IV) Nathaniel Crandall, son of Samuel (2) and Mary (Wilbor), baptized June 10, 1733, in the United Congregational Church of Little Compton, married Sarah Wilcox, and had children: Falle, baptized in United Congregational Church, Tiverton, in July, 1757; Ezra, baptized in same, July, 1769; Nathaniel, and perhaps others. Nathaniel Crandall, the father, was a weaver by trade.

(V) Nathaniel Crandell (2), son of Nathaniel and Sarah (Wilcox), born June 2, 1779, died in 1842. He was a baker by trade, and in 1810 he located in Taunton. On Dec. 11, 1802, he married Comfort Bailey, born Dec. 14, 1781, daughter of Joseph and Ruth Bailey. They had four children: William Bailey, born April 16, 1804, at Tiverton, R. I.; Louisa, who married Alex. Seabury; Sarah, who married Charles Nourse; and Mary Ann, who married a Leonard.

(VI) William Bailey Crandell, son of Nathaniel and Comfort (Bailey) Crandell, married in Taunton, Abigail Howard Wetherbee, born in that city. Their children were: Abby, who married Henry C. Perry; Sarah Bailey, who married Francis B. Dean, and had two children, Lewis B. (deceased) and Clarence; William Thomas, who died in infancy; William Thomas (2), born Aug. 4, 1834; Caroline W., who lives in Taunton; Charles Wetherbee, deceased; and Marianna, who died young.

William Bailey Crandell passed his boyhood days in Taunton, Mass., and was there educated. For many years he engaged in the dry goods business in Boston, Mass., and accumulated a considerable property. He had an inherent love for music, and was a skilful player of the violin and flute, and owned much music and many instruments. In his political faith he was first a Whig, and later a Republican. He was influential in the Congregational Church, and left the record of a Christian life well lived. He died April 22, 1872, in Taunton, Massachusetts.

(VII) William Thomas Crandell spent his boyhood days in Taunton, Mass., and there attended the public schools and the academy. For a time he engaged in business with Mr. Henry C. Perry, and in 1868 he went to Boston and for three years engaged in a jobbing shoe business. His father's illness and death recalled him to Taunton, in 1872, and there he remained until 1878 when he removed to Providence. In 1878 Mr. Crandell became president of the Union for Christian Work, and so continued for many years. For ten years he has been secretary of the State Home and School, and is also treasurer of the Home for Aged Men. It will thus be seen that Mr. Crandell has already given thirty years of his life to charitable work in Providence. He is a member of the First Congregational Church.

Mr. Crandell was married (first) in Taunton, Mass., to Mary P. Ellis. On April 16, 1878, in Providence, he married (second) Katharine Louise Anthony Peirce, daughter of James C. and Mary B. Anthony, and widow of Edward H. Peirce, who died Jan. 16, 1866, leaving her with two children: (1) Augustus R. Peirce, born Nov. 11, 1862, now president of the National Exchange Bank of Providence, married Ida W. Wilson, and has one son, James Anthony Peirce. (2) Amy W. Peirce.

ELLISON TINKHAM, late president of the Carolina Mills Company, at Carolina, R. I., was one of the well-known and successful woolen manufacturers of the State, and notwithstanding his more than fourscore years displayed undiminished energy in the management of that company up to the time of his decease.

The Tinkham family from which he descended is of English extraction. Hezekiah Tinkham, his great-grandfather, was the progenitor of the family in America and came to the New World some time within the period of the Revolution. He was a blacksmith by trade, and followed that occupation in the town of Glocester, R. I., where he settled. He lived to be nearly one hundred years of age, and died about 1812, in Glocester. In his family of four children, two sons and two daughters, was a son Nehemiah, the grandfather of Ellison Tinkham.

Nehemiah Tinkham, son of Hezekiah, married and settled in Glocester, where he followed the trade of his father, residing near Harmony. He died in 1814, aged fifty years. In his family of nine children, six sons and three daughters, was a son Nehemiah, the father of Ellison.

Nehemiah Tinkham, son of Nehemiah, was born Nov. 28, 1799, and at the age of twenty-one years was married to Alzada Andrews, born Nov. 23, 1800, daughter of Thomas Andrews, a farmer of the town of Glocester, R. I. Like his father and grandfather, Nehemiah Tinkham was a blacksmith, and in following that occupation at Harmony, R. I., continued the business that was established by them. The children born to Nehemiah and Alzada Tinkham were as follows: William, born July 8, 1823, of Providence, is mentioned elsewhere; Ellison is mentioned below; Eliza W., born June 15, 1828, married Job S. Steere, and died May 9, 1902; Emeline F., born Dec. 23, 1830, married Isaac Dawley, of North Attleboro, Mass.; Mary married Jesse Smith, and died in Burrillville, R. I.; Henry A. resides at Harrisville, R. I., unmarried. The father of these children passed away Jan. 1, 1886. The mother survived until Jan. 30, 1894. They are both buried in the family plot at Harmony, Rhode Island.

Ellison Tinkham was born Sept. 8, 1825, at Harmony, R. I. His opportunities for schooling were confined to the schools of his native town, which he attended about three months during each year, that being the school year in those days. A youth of that period in a country section, when not at school, usually had some kind of work to perform. Such was the case with young Tinkham, and when but a lad he began assisting his father in the blacksmith shop. Later his vacations were spent wholly in his father's shop, where he learned the trade of blacksmith. The father was an industrious man, often going to work at daylight and keeping at it until nine o'clock at night. In those days two stage-coach lines ran through Harmony, and horseshoeing had to be done at all times in order to accommodate the traffic, so it meant hard work and long hours. Thus Ellison Tinkham, early in life, secured a thoroughly practical knowledge of hard work, and contracted those habits of industry that characterized him to the end of his days. Soon after his marriage he took a position at the old High street furnace, in Providence, and later worked at his trade in Chepachet, for William Hawkins. Subsequently returning to Harmony, R. I., he worked a while for his father, whose shop he then hired and conducted, this being his first business venture. He was a hard worker and a good mechanic, having shod as many as twenty-five horses all round in one day.

About this time Mr. Tinkham concluded to try some other business, so purchasing a four-horse team he went to teaming, engaging in that business for the Harrisville Mills, then conducted by William Tinkham, his brother, and Job S. Steere, for about seven years. He then entered the employ of that concern, doing repair work. It was in 1869 that he located at Carolina, on Feb. 1st of that year, in partnership with Mr. Franklin Metcalf, having taken charge of the Carolina Mills, which they had purchased, Mr. Tinkham becoming president, which office he filled until his death, and Mr. Metcalf treasurer of the company. These mills were originally built in 1842, and until the early part of the Civil war their product was cotton goods. The demoralized condition of that industry about that time caused the product to be changed to woolen goods, in the manufacture of which the plant has been operated ever since.

When Mr. Tinkham and Mr. Metcalf first bought the mills the product was mostly beaver overcoatings and doeskin. Subsequently it was changed to fancy cassimeres. They built additions, enlarged the factory, erected a new dye house and added new machinery, making the mill new and up-to-date. The product enjoys a reputation second to none of its kind. Practically since 1869, when the Carolina Mills Company started business, the property has been on a paying basis, with no serious intermissions in its activity. Once the wheels were idle for two or three weeks, but that was when the canal, which carries water to the wheel, was being widened. The relation that this concern bears to the prosperity of the village of Carolina is a very close one, and has been so for more than thirty-five years. The principal industry in the village, it furnishes the employment for about the same from year to year, and a less time about 150 hands being engaged, the majority men or boys. The number of employes remains about the same from year to year, and a less changeable manufacturing community it would be hard to find. There is probably no other mill in the country where the average length of service among the employes is longer than it is in Carolina, which signifies a feeling of satisfaction among them, and a spirit of fairness on the part of the employers. The mill has been running practically all the time whether business has been good or bad, and that the hands appreciate this is shown in the fact that the company has never had a strike on its hands. For thirty-six years pay day has never been missed as the result of a lack of funds, the only cause for any delay being on account of bad weather rendering impossible the transportation of funds from bank to mill.

Mr. Tinkham was an ardent advocate of temperance, and it was largely due to his efforts that the licensed saloon was driven out of Carolina. It is doubtful if elsewhere in Rhode Island there exists another community where, in an event of the kind, such general interest, with everybody to make it a success, would have been aroused, as was the case with the surprise party given Mr. Tinkham Sept. 8, 1905, at Carolina, in observance of his eightieth birthday.

The Providence Journal said, in part, of this event: "Last Friday morning there was subdued excitement in Carolina, for plans were on foot to give Mr. Tinkham a rousing surprise party in the evening. For weeks the preparations had been in order. A meeting had been held to talk the matter over, and practically every man in Carolina had attended to show his interest in the scheme. Committees were appointed, including one to raise money for a suitable testimonial, and the result of this committee's canvass was the purchase of a handsome loving cup of silver, gold-lined, and with an ebonized base. The cup stands $8\frac{3}{4}$ inches high and weighs 34 ounces, and on the front is this inscription: 'Presented to Ellison Tinkham by his employes and friends, Sept. 8, 1905.' On the reverse are the dates: '1825-1905.'

"There was never a more general movement to honor a citizen in any Rhode Island town. Mr. Tinkham's friends and well-wishers comprise all Carolina, and the men, women and children of the village were on hand en masse Friday evening to witness the presentation and extend to the recipient of the gift their best wishes for 'many happy returns' of the day. Everybody in the village knows him and he knows everybody. One of his friends said the other day: 'If he goes away anywhere for a week he shakes hands all round before he starts and all round when he gets back.'

"On the morning of his birthday he was at the mills bright and early and visited the several rooms, shaking hands with everybody to show his good will. 'He grows better as he grows older,' remarked one of his employes. To grow better as one grows older is a good enough ambition for anybody."

In political matters Mr. Tinkham supported the Republican party on national issues, but Prohibition sentiment was very strong in him and his influence was always against the liquor traffic. He chose the best man regardless of politics. Although Mr. Tinkham was vitally interested in the affairs of the town, he held few public offices, declining offers time after time. He was a member of the board of tax assessors of the town for a number of years, and was also trustee of the Carolina school district under the old district system. He was for many years one of the liberal supporters of the Free Will Baptist Church of Carolina. He was a director of the National Niantic Bank, of Westerly, R. I., for some years.

Mr. Tinkham was married on Thanksgiving Day, 1846, to Mercy A. Rounds, of Foster, R. I., who died Oct. 20, 1878, in Carolina. The present Mrs. Tinkham was formerly Miss Mary L. Williams, born March 29, 1845, at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, the marriage taking place in Lebanon, N. H. From girlhood Mrs. Tinkham was reared in Boston and resided there until her marriage. She united with the Old South Church, in Boston, when a girl. Mr. Tinkham was a self-made man in all that the term implies. His energy and ambition were his capital when he began life's struggle, and that he was successful was but the just reward for an active and honorable life, as his every-day record would show. He died Dec. 12, 1907, at his home in Carolina, of pneumonia, and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Harmony.

SAMUEL WARDWELL PECKHAM, deceased, was one of the best known and most able representatives of an old family of Rhode Island and one whose pure and upright life earned the genuine love and esteem of all who were privileged to know him.

Mr. Peckham was a descendant of John Peckham, the ancestor of those bearing the name in Rhode Island, who was of record at Newport in 1838. A full account of the early history of the family is given in another part of this volume. The lineage of Samuel Wardwell Peckham to the emigrant John, is through Thomas and Sarah Wardwell, Thomas and Hannah Weaver, Peleg and Elizabeth Coggeshall, Joseph and Wait Gould, John (2) and Sarah, and emigrant John and Mary Clarke.

Thomas Peckham, grandfather of Samuel W., born June 20, 1747, married June 29, 1778, Hannah Weaver. She was born Nov. 11, 1756, daughter of James and Rebecca (Coggeshall) Weaver, a descendant of Clement Weaver through Thomas, Clement (2), and James Weaver of Middletown, R. I. Mr. Peckham lived in Middletown, where he died Dec. 18, 1825; Mrs. Peckham died June 16, 1835.

Thomas Peckham, son of Thomas, was born Sept. 8, 1783, in Middletown, R. I., and his early life was spent in Newport. He received a good common school education, and when a young man taught school in Middletown. Later he went to Bristol and entered the employ of Col. Thomas Coles, in the capacity of clerk, and was there residing when he was married. Soon after this event he came to Providence and became deputy collector of customs at the time Walter Danforth was collector. Mr. Peckham held that position for nearly forty years, or until a short time before his death, July 19, 1843. His remains were interred in Swan Point cemetery. In his political sentiments Mr. Peckham was a stanch Democrat, and was a great admirer of Andrew Jackson. He was a member of the Society of the Cincinnati. He belonged to the First Congregational Church, although his ancestors were members of the Society of Friends.

On Nov. 29, 1809, Mr. Peckham was married to Sarah Wardwell, of Bristol, daughter of Col. Samuel and Lydia Wardwell and a descendant of one of the oldest and leading families of Bristol. Mrs. Peckham survived her husband for many years, dying April 15, 1868. Their children were seven in number: (1) Eliza A., born Feb. 6, 1811, died unmarried in 1899. (2) Edward L., born June 4, 1812, was for many years engaged in the banking business at Providence, later becoming a resident of Adams, Jefferson county, N. Y. He finally returned to Providence and there died in 1889. (3) Samuel W., born July 5, 1814, is mentioned below. (4) Charles, born June 6, 1816, was engaged in farming and resided at North Providence, where he died in January, 1902. He married Hannah Farnum, and had five children, Stephen, Richard, Charles Edward, Mary and Anna. (5) Thomas C., born Aug. 8, 1818, married (first) Sophia Ross, and (second) Lydia Jennings. He was a farmer and resided at Rumford, in the town of East Providence, where he died April 22, 1905. He had three children, Sophia, Thomas and Lewis. (6) Sarah Wardwell, born Oct. 27, 1820, resides in Providence. (7) Hannah, born Nov. 2, 1822, married Edward W. Billings, and resided in Providence, where Mr. Billings was engaged in the mercantile business. She died in 1895, leaving two children: Clara, Mrs. Charles Nichols; and Charles W.

Samuel Wardwell Peckham was born in Providence, July 5, 1814, and was prepared for college in his native city under the instruction of Mr. Roswell Smith, whose school was in the neighborhood of the Beneficent Congregational Church. He was fourteen years of age when admitted to Brown University, and was graduated in 1832, being the last surviving member of his class. After graduation with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, in addition to which he later received the degree of Master of Arts, in course, he taught school for a few months and then read law in the office of Hon. Richard Ward Greene, afterwards chief justice of the State. He was admitted to the Bar in 1836, and ten years later was justice and clerk of the Court of Magistrates in Providence from 1846 to 1853, and Justice of the Police Court from 1857 to 1867. During the summer of 1857 he was clerk of the Municipal Court. For more than thirty years he acted as a Master in Chancery, during which time many cases of the first importance were referred to him. Many prominent legal friends urged Mr. Peckham to allow his name to be presented as a candidate for election as a member of the Supreme Court, but he refused.

Hatred of slavery made Mr. Peckham a Republican in politics. He had no taste for political life, but his friends prevailed on him to accept a nomination to the office of alderman and he was elected in 1875, and again in 1880 and 1881. Although urged by his friends he would not, however, accept a nomination as mayor. In his keen sense for honest management of funds held in trust by the city for the benefit of the poor, he succeeded in bringing about the abolishment of the banquets for the board of aldermen and their friends, which had long been given at the quarterly meetings held at the Dexter Asylum. His studious habits and retiring nature caused him to withdraw from the active exercise of his profession as an advocate before the courts, and kept him from extended participation in political life.

Through the love of good literature, Mr. Peckham was one of the earliest supporters and friends of the Providence Athenæum, and he was earnestly loyal to it through life. He was its librarian and director from 1836 to 1838, and its secretary and a director from 1836 to 1845, and again from 1856 to 1857. He was elected a director and served forty-one years as such, remaining constantly a director, excepting during the years he was ineligible, in accordance with the rule of the Athenæum, which requires at least one year to pass before a re-election. He was elected president of the Athenæum in 1888, but declined. In 1889 he yielded to earnest solicitation and accepted the presidency, and after that he was annually re-elected and died in office. He wrote the annual reports of 1844, 1850, 1883 and 1886. The last, the semi-centennial report, contains an historical account of the Athenæum written by one who took part in its organization fifty years earlier. He was the last survivor of the first board of directors elected in 1836. He was interested in educational matters, and was a member of the school committee of Providence from 1845 to 1849, and from 1855 to 1857. Always a studious man, after graduation from college Mr. Peckham became familiar with French and German, and extended his knowledge of Latin and Greek. When over sixty years old he began to study Hebrew, and learned to read the Old Testament in the original. He observed nature keenly. Botany was a favorite study, and philosophy and theology also received his attention. He loved music, and through life he subscribed to the various movements which were designed to promote in his native city a knowledge and appreciation of the best forms of this art. Mr. Peckham wrote many fugitive poems for his relatives and friends, and took pleasure in his late years in gathering them and printing them for private distribution. Many of these he printed in a little volume entitled "Verses in Various Moods and on Various Occasions."

A member of the First Congregational Church, Unitarian, of Providence, Mr. Peckham was president of the society for many years. He was a man of the loftiest integrity and loyalty of character. He loved the pure, the good, the straightforward, and hated the unclean, the base, the evasive. His faults were those of a high-minded and exact man, impatient with what seemed to him to be wrong or irregular. His retiring disposition made his merits less well known to the mass of his fellow citizens than they should have been known for the public benefit.

On May 14, 1846, Mr. Peckham was married to Miss Margaret Dunnell, of Providence. Mrs. Peckham died Aug. 13, 1849, of smallpox, carried from a client who visited Mr. Peckham in his office. His rare life-long devotion to her memory, known to his dearest friends, expressed itself at the end of his life in his gift to the Rhode Island Hospital to establish a free bed in her name. Mr. Peckham passed away at his home, June 29, 1895.

The home of Thomas Peckham was on the corner of Benefit and Arnold streets and there his family resided until 1869, when Samuel W. Peckham and his sisters, Eliza A. and Sarah W., removed to No. 171 Power street, and there Miss Sarah W. Peckham continues to reside.

JOHN HEATHCOTE, the senior member and founder of the firm of John Heathcote & Son, manufacturers of tentering and drying machines, for stretching and drying all kinds of woolen and worsted goods, shawls, felts, etc., is one of the well known and substantial citizens of Providence and one of the well known members of the Masonic fraternity in Rhode Island.

Mr. Heathcote was born near Manchester, England, April 30, 1833, son of Luke and Mary (Ferguson) Heathcote. He was about nine years old when he came to Providence and his associations therefore have always been with that city. He received his education in the public schools of Providence, and at the age of seventeen was apprenticed to learn the machinist's trade in the Franklin Foundry & Machine Company's works, at that time one of the leading establishments of its kind in the country. Soon after completing his apprenticeship of four years he entered the employ of the Corliss & Nightingale Engine Company, with whom he remained two or three years. After that he was two or three years with Brown & Sharpe, the founders of the now famous manufacturing company of that name, in a little old shop on South Main street, when the firm employed but seven or eight hands. After leaving them he held an official position in one of the departments of the Franklin Foundry & Machine Company for a time, and about 1866 started in business for himself.

In partnership with James Barbour, under the firm name of Barbour & Heathcote, Mr. Heathcote established a business in steam, gas and water piping and brass finishings. A few years later, under the same partnership, he bought out the patent of the J. S. Winsor Tentering and Drying Machine, and went into manufacturing, and in 1874 he bought out his partner's interest and prosecuted the business by himself. This drying machine, the Winsor Dryer, patented in 1861, of which Mr. Heathcote has made a specialty in his business ever since, was for a long time the only chain dryer in use for woolen or worsted goods, blankets, shawls, etc. Many years after the machine was copied, in a horizontal form, by foreign builders, and later the foreign-built machine was copied by others in this country. In 1870 Mr. Heathcote bought all the patent rights and entirely remodeled the machine, since when improvements have been added from time to time, strengthening its parts; two new patterns, for heavier work, have been added.

In 1896 Mr. Heathcote put up a machine of twenty-three tons, the largest and first of its style ever made in this country, for a large felt manufacturing concern in the State of New York. The firm of John Heathcote & Son also manufacture mast arms, which are in use throughout the city of Providence for extending over the streets to support electric lamps. These had for many years been manufactured under the name of the Russell Electric Manufacturing Company, but the business is now an adjunct to Mr. Heathcote's other interests. For many years Mr. Heathcote was treasurer of the Russell Electric Manufacturing Company. The special feature of their mast arm is that it provides facilities for trimming lamps without lowering and as many lamps are required in positions where it would be impossible to lower them, these mast arms are largely used. The company are the only authorized manufacturers in the United States and this device, like their tentering and drying machine, has been sold in all parts of the country. Though he still retains his financial interest in the business he founded, Mr. Heathcote has during the past few years practically withdrawn from active management, in which he has been succeeded by his son.

Mr. Heathcote was married Aug. 20, 1856, to Miss Jane Barbour, daughter of George and Ellen (Crawshaw) Barbour, of Providence. Two children were born to them, Ella J. and George H.

Mr. John Heathcote is well known socially in Providence, and is a member of the Central and Pomham Clubs, serving as president of the latter for five years—1896 to 1901. In Masonic circles, where he is very prominent, he was raised to the degree of Master Mason in 1863, in Mt. Vernon Lodge, and became a charter member of Adelphoi Lodge, No. 33, constituted in 1876, of which he is past master, having served as worshipful master in 1881; he belongs to Providence Chapter and Providence Council, and is past commander of St. John's Commandery, Knights Templar, serving as commander in 1886. He has reached the thirty-second degree. He is an honorary member of De Molay Mounted Commandery, No. 4, at Washington, D. C.; an honorary member of Gethsemane Commandery, Knights Templar, at Newtonville, Mass.; and an honorary member of St. Andrew Commandery, at Richmond, Va. He is also a member of the Veteran Masonic Association, Veteran Firemen's Association, and several other organizations. In politics he is a staunch Republican, but he has steadfastly declined to accept office.

Mr. Heathcote is a self-made man. His success has been the result of unbounded energy, grim determination, and the proper application of his extraordinary mechanical and business ability.

George H. Heathcote has been associated with his father in the business for a number of years, and July 1, 1901, became a partner, taking the position of general manager, which he had really held for several years previous. In fraternal connection he is a past master of Adelphoi Lodge, of which he served as master in 1894, and is also a member of St. John's Commandery. He is a member of the Central Club. He married Miss Sarah Tempest, and has one son, Clifford Davenport, born in October, 1892.

HENRY AUDLEY CLARKE, after a long life devoted to the world of finance, in which he has attained high and honorable position, is now living retired on his beautiful estate, "Wyndsweppe," at Jamestown, R. I. The land has been in the family name for over one hundred years. Mr. Clarke was born at Newport, Jan. 20, 1832, a descendant of one of the earliest and most prominent families of the State, members in each generation playing important and leading parts in public and financial affairs.

(I) Jeremiah Clarke, the first of the family to come to the American shore, was a native of England, and there married Frances Latham, daughter of Lewis Latham and widow of Thomas Dougan. Mr. Clarke was at Portsmouth, R. I., where his name appears Jan. 2, 1638, as attending a general meeting. In April, 1639, he was at Newport, where he afterward made his home. He was constable in 1639; lieutenant in 1642; and captain in 1644. From 1644 to 1647 he was treasurer of Portsmouth, and from 1647 to 1649 treasurer of Providence Plantations. In May, 1648, on the suspension of William Coddington, Governor of the Providence Plantations, he was elected to fill the office and administer the government during that year under the title of President Regent. He was a leader of the faction opposed to the schemes of Governor Coddington, and was quite active and prominent in the affairs of the Colony. After 1649, when he resigned as treasurer of the Providence Plantations, he held no other public office. He died in 1661. His widow married for her third husband Rev. William Vaughn, first pastor of the Second Baptist Church of Newport. She died in 1667, at the age of sixty-two years. The children born to Jeremiah Clarke were: Frances, born in 1638, married Randell Holden; Walter, born in 1640, who died Aug. 22, 1714, was also governor of the Colony; Mary, born in 1641, married (first) Gov. John Cranston, and (second) John Stenton, and died April 7, 1711; Jeremiah was born in 1643; Latham, born in 1644, married (first) Hannah Willbour and (second) Anne Newberry, and died June 1, 1719; Weston, born July 2, 1648, married (first) Margaret Easton and (second) Rebecca Easton, widow of Peter Easton, Jr.; James, born in 1649, married Hope Power, of Providence, and died Dec. 1, 1736; Sarah, born in 1651, married Gov. Caleb Carr, of Newport.

(II) Jeremiah Clarke, son of Gov. Jeremiah, was born in 1643, in Newport, and was made a freeman in 1666. From 1696 to 1705 he was deputy from Newport. He married Ann Audley, who died Dec. 13, 1732, and their children were: Jeremiah, who married Mary Sisson; Henry, who married Jude Clarke; James, who married Mary Buckling; Samuel, who married Hannah Willcocks; Weston, who married Mary Willott; Frances, who married John Sanford; Ann, who married William Grinnell; and Sarah, who married Jeremiah Weeden.

(III) Samuel Clarke, son of Jeremiah and Ann, was born in Newport in 1687, and there spent his entire life. He married Hannah Willcocks, and died Oct. 18, 1761, in his seventy-fourth year. Their children were: John, who married Mary Rogers; Audley; Samuel, who married Diana Weeden; and Daniel, who married Mary Cranston.

(IV) Audley Clarke, son of Samuel, was born in Newport, and there married Sarah Weeden, who died Sept. 17, 1749. Their children were: Peleg, born Jan. 3, 1734; Audley, born in 1739; and Sarah, who married Daniel Wilcox.

(V) Peleg Clarke, son of Audley, was born Jan. 3, 1734, in Newport, and there became quite prominent in the mercantile business, being one of Newport's leading merchants. During the Revolution he was a loyalist, and was agent for the British at Newport during its occupation. This made him very unpopular with the patriotic element, and he left Newport for a time, but later returned and there spent his last days. He died Dec. 4, 1803, aged nearly seventy years. He married Mary Gardner, and their children were: Sarah, born Sept. 19, 1759; Peleg, born Jan. 23, 1761; Mary, born Jan. 19, 1764; a daughter, born Dec. 2, 1765, who died in infancy; Nancy, born Aug. 8, 1768; and Audley, born June 26, 1770.

(VI) Audley Clarke, son of Peleg, was born in Newport June 26, 1770. He grew to manhood in his native town, and became one of the city's leading men and financiers. He was identified with the Bank of Rhode Island from its foundation in 1795, until his death, which occurred March 9, 1844, in his seventy-fourth year. For nearly thirty years he was president of the bank, which office he was still ably filling when he died. He was the owner of considerable real estate, both in Newport and Jamestown, and was very well known all through this part of the country. On Dec. 8, 1794, he married Mary Gardner, daughter of Caleb Gardner, one of the best known men of his day. Their children were: Peleg, born in 1795; Sarah Ann, who died May 13, 1834; Mary Gibbs, who married Rev. A. H. Dumont, and died Aug. 18, 1865; William A.; Harriet, who died April 23, 1886; Henry Augustus, who died Jan. 19, 1826; Edward, who died Oct. 7, 1852; Elizabeth, who died Feb. 7, 1838; and Ann, who died April 1, 1823.

(VII) Peleg Clarke, eldest son of Audley, was born in Newport in 1795, and died Feb. 20, 1862, at the age of sixty-seven years. On reaching manhood he became interested in the industries of his native city, and for a time was engaged in the distillery business, making New England rum, at which he continued until a great temperance wave swept over the State, and he went out of the business. He then became interested in whaling and was the owner of whaling vessels, carrying on this business until there were more vessels engaged in that line than there were whales to be caught. He was the owner of the whaling vessel "Audley Clarke," which was named for his father, and which was purchased by a company composed of seventy men, mostly from Newport county, who fitted out the vessel for their trip to the gold fields of California during the excitement incident to the discovery of gold in that far western State. This vessel, carrying the members of the company, sailed from Newport in the spring of 1849 for California by way of Cape Horn, making a successful voyage to its destination. The remainder of his life Mr. Clarke devoted to the banking business. He was president of the old Bank of Rhode Island, which later became the National Bank of Rhode Island, of which his father was one time president and his brother the cashier. In Newport he married Caroline M. Moore, daughter of William and Hannah Moore, the former a well-known merchant of Newport. Their children were: Henry Audley, born Jan. 20, 1832, is mentioned below; William Moore, born April 3, 1838, died in Newport Aug. 15, 1867, at which time he was cashier of the Bank of Rhode Island; Dumont, born Oct. 1, 1840, is a well-known banker of New York, being president for a number of years of The American Exchange National Bank of that city.

(VIII) Henry Audley Clarke, our subject, son of Peleg, passed his boyhood days in Newport, where he attended school and laid the foundation for his future usefulness. He entered the old Bank of Rhode Island as a clerk, under his uncle, who was cashier, and there he continued until of age. In 1853 he went to New York and accepted a position in the Bank of America, on Wall street, and for a period of thirty-two years filled various positions of trust with this bank. In 1885 he resigned from his banking interests and returned to Rhode Island, settling down to the life of a gentleman farmer. He settled on the Caleb Gardner land, in Jamestown, a tract he inherited from his grandfather, Audley Clarke, and here, with his brother Dumont, he has made extensive improvements, building a fine summer home which overlooks beautiful Narragansett bay. He has also erected two farm houses, and buildings of all kinds, turning a comparatively uncultivated tract into well tilled fields. Here he spends his summers, while his winters are passed in New York City or on the Pacific coast.

Although Mr. Clarke has practically retired from business he still gives considerable time to the Newport Branch of the Industrial Trust Company, of Providence, in which he is a director. He is also interested in the new Jamestown and Newport ferry. Mr. Clarke is a man of genial disposition and refined tastes, a good conversationalist, and a most pleasing companion. In politics he is a Jeffersonian Democrat, and he is a great admirer and firm supporter of ex-President Cleveland. He has had no personal ambition for office holding, but he has been influential in assisting those who desire public positions.

On Sept. 24, 1861, Mr. Clarke was married to Miss Fanny Randolph Wood, daughter of the late Henry Wood, of Newport. She died Oct. 8, 1904, in Jamestown, and was buried in the old cemetery at Newport. This union was blessed with the following children: Audley, born Sept. 5, 1862, is now engaged in the builders' supplies business in Brooklyn, N. Y.; he married, Jan. 20, 1892, Lula Car-scellan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and they have four children. William Littlefield, born Jan. 6, 1865, died Dec. 24, 1872. Catherine F., born Sept. 15, 1866, died March 10, 1876. Caroline Moore, born June 23, 1868, resides at home. Jessie Frances, born Dec. 4, 1873, married Philip L. Raymond, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Oskytel Henry, born March 29, 1880, is in business with his brother in Brooklyn; he is unmarried.

(VII) WILLIAM AUDLEY CLARKE, son of Audley and uncle of Henry Audley Clarke, and for many years a well-known banker of Newport, was born March 22, 1803. He received his education in the schools of Newport, and when fifteen years of age became a clerk in the old Bank of Rhode Island, which later became the National Bank of Rhode Island, of which his father was president. He continued a faithful employee of that bank as long as he lived, working his way through all the steps from the humble position of clerk to that of president. This honored institution was the second of its kind established in Rhode Island. For twenty-four years William A. Clarke held the responsible position of cashier, and from 1862 until his death, March 20, 1887, at the age of eighty-four years, he was its honored president, being at that time one of the oldest bank officials in the country and the oldest in the State. He took a deep interest in the growth and prosperity of Newport, and was the first president of the company that introduced telegraphy in the city. He was always progressive in his ideas, and he was quick to grasp the practical from the many new ideas advanced, and always ready to give everything a fair trial.

Mr. Clarke was a man of the highest integrity and respected by all. He was well read, and well posted on current events. In politics he was, like all his family, a Democrat of the Jeffersonian type. His religious belief was that of the Unitarian Church. He never married.

SAYLES (Woonsocket-Providence family). The Sayles family of Rhode Island, one among the early ones, has also been one of achievement in various lines of effort, and as well it is an historic one, the earliest known American ancestor having married a daughter of Roger Williams, the "Apostle of Liberty." Largely a Providence county family and of the towns created out of the ancient town of Providence, it has been especially prominent in more recent years, in the now capital city of the State, in the town of Burrillville, and at Pawtucket, in which communities have figured such men as the late Hon. William F., Hon. Frederick C., Hon. Alfred Z., Col. Willard and Col. Welcome B. Sayles, all men of distinction—men of achievement, some of whom, of large means and of as large generosity, left enduring monuments.

The different branches of this family are treated separately, this article being confined to the family and lineage of James M. Sayles, whose son, the late James Reidell Sayles, was for years widely known in the drug trade in Providence; while James M., long and favorably known as a cotton manufacturer, and more recently in connection with silver mining in Colorado, is yet at the advanced age of eighty-four years a citizen of Providence.

There follows in chronological order from the American ancestor the genealogy and family history of the branch designated as the Woonsocket-Providence family.

(I) John Sayles, who, says tradition, came from England in 1645, is of record at Providence in 1651. He became a freeman in 1655. He held various public offices, serving a number of years as assistant, commissioner, town clerk and town treasurer, deputy, and member of the town council. He married about 1650 Mary, daughter of Roger Williams. They died in 1681, and their remains were interred in the Easton burying ground in Middletown, R. I. Their children were: Mary, born July 11, 1652; John, born Aug. 17, 1654; Isabel; Phebe; Eleanor; and Catherine, born in 1671; and possibly Deborah.

(II) John Sayles (2), born Aug. 17, 1654, married Elizabeth Olney, born Jan. 3, 1666, daughter of Thomas Olney, and they were of Providence. Mr. Sayles became a freeman in 1681. He was twice deputy. Mrs. Sayles died in 1699, and Mr. Sayles passed away in 1727; both were buried in Providence. Their children were: Mary, born May 30, 1689; John, Jan. 13, 1692; Richard, Oct. 24, 1695; Daniel, Dec. 13, 1697; and Thomas, Feb. 9, 1699.

(III) Richard Sayles, born Oct. 24, 1695, married (first) Nov. 24, 1720, Mercy, daughter of Richard and Sarah (Mowry) Phillips, and they were of Smithfield, R. I., of which town he was town clerk in 1731. Mr. Sayles was also a surveyor, and laid out much land in that region of country. His death occurred about 1775.

(IV) Capt. Israel Sayles, born March 17, 1725-26, married Marsa (Mercy) Whipple, and they resided in Glocester, R. I. Their children were: Richard, Esek, Elisha, Christopher, Royal, Ahab, Daniel, Mary, Roba, Rebecca and Mercy. Capt. Israel Sayles was not only a well-to-do farmer, but a man of more than ordinary mechanical genius. For a number of years he was president of the town council of Glocester, R. I. He, too, was a patriot of the Revolution, having served in Captain Hopkins' Company, Colonel Lippitt's Regiment, in 1776, and, it is said, under General Sullivan.

(V) Esek Sayles, son of Capt. Israel, married Dorkis (Dorcas), daughter of Elisha and Sarah (Olney) Brown, of Glocester, R. I., he a direct descendant of Chad Brown, the ancestor of the celebrated Brown family of Providence, from whom his lineage was through John, Obadiah, and Chad Brown (2), the latter of whom had settled in Glocester, on land separated by the Chepachet river; and she a direct descendant of Thomas Olney, a native of Hertford, Hertfordshire, England, who came to America in the ship "Planter," stopping first at Salem, Mass., but who later was, with

Williams, one of the founders of Providence. He was one of the original thirteen proprietors of Providence; from him Mrs. Brown's is through Epenetus, Epenetus (2), and The children of Esek and Dorkis (Dorcas)

1) Sayles were Rebecca, Chad and others.

2) Chad Sayles, son of Esek and Dorkis

1) Sayles, born, perhaps, in that part of the town which became Burrillville, R. I., was married, first to a Mathewson, and, second, to Peckham. Mr. Sayles was occupied in the town of Gloucester. He was the father of nine children, four of whom were born to his first wife and five to the second. His children were Maria, Eliza, Alice, Laura (born to the first wife), Emeline, Marcy Ann, Charlotte, Harriet and James M.

1) JAMES M. SAYLES, son of Chad and Sarah Peckham. Sayles was born April 9, 1824, in the town of Gloucester, R. I. His father was a farmer and young James was reared amid rural surroundings, attending the schools of his neighborhood, and for a period clerking in the store of Mr. Horball, at Chepachet. He furthered his studies at the academy at Brooklyn, Conn. Subsequently he was again occupied as a clerk, this time in the store of Mr. Knight, at Burrillville, this time. After an experience of, perhaps, a couple of years at Burrillville, employed as stated, he began working at the cabinetmaking trade for Mr. Waterman, at Chepachet, following which he was employed for Mr. Stukeley, a brother of his former employer, Wilsterman, at Woonsocket. After a residence of about a little less than a decade in Woonsocket, employment as stated he accepted a position as assistant in the cotton mill operated by French & Sisson, in the town of East Greenwich. After several years so occupied, as with another, he was engaged in manufacturing at Olneyville. For a period during the Civil war he was engaged in the manufacture of cotton yarn in his own mill at Westfield, Mass. He sustained the loss of this mill in the early seventies, when, after a residence was for a period engaged in the manufacture of cotton yarn at Watertown, New York.

These somewhat varied experiences, however, were not without their pleasing and educational influences, Mr. Sayles destined to again assume a new role, this time identified with a New York syndicate engaged in the purchase of silver—in Colorado, the pursuit of which occupied much of the remaining years of his business life. Returning to Providence he made this city his home, and is now living with his married daughter, Mrs. Edward K. Alsing, the evening of a long, busy life in good health, and in that ease and comfort which his earlier efforts have so justly entitled him to. His quiet disposition and unassuming nature,

Mr. Sayles has had no taste for politics and public affairs save the performance of the duties of good citizenship; and while interested in public affairs he has cared nothing for office holding and has never sought it. He was in his earlier years a Democrat; cast his first Presidential vote for Pierce, but on the formation of the Republican party cast his lot with it and has since been a staunch Republican.

While a resident of Woonsocket, R. I., Mr. Sayles was married there to Ann Eliza Marsh, of Blackstone, Mass., and the marriage was blessed with children: James Reidell; Harriet Virginia, who died at the age of eighteen years; Walter; Georgianna; Arthur, who died in infancy; and Isabel.

(VIII) JAMES REIDELL SAYLES, son of James M. and Ann E. (Marsh) Sayles, was born April 18, 1848, in Woonsocket, R. I. On the removal of his parents to Providence not a great while after the son's birth the latter was there reared and educated in the public schools of that city, and there passed his life. He began his business career as a clerk in the drug house of Messrs. Corless, Platt & Metcalf, whose successors were the well-known establishment of Blanding & Blanding, the head of which was so long the late Hon. William B. Blanding, one of the leading business men in Providence. Still later on for a period Mr. Sayles was with the well-known business house of Chambers, Calder & Co., and in more recent years his time was occupied in caring for the property and interests of Mrs. Sarah Dennis, widow of the late William Dennis, of Providence.

Mr. Sayles was a man of simple habits and tastes, quiet in manner, and of a domestic turn, not given to ostentation and show, caring nothing for public preferment or for that life in a social way which affiliation with secret societies affords. Yet we believe he was a member of the Providence Athletic Club. Some years ago he built perhaps one of the finest and most costly residences in the beautiful suburb of Edgewood.

On Oct. 25, 1871, Mr. Sayles was married to Ruth Leonora, daughter of the late William and Sarah (Davis) Dennis, of prominent early New England ancestry, Mrs. Sayles being a granddaughter of the late Perry Davis, who was so widely known and celebrated for his discovery and the sale of the proprietary medicine known as "Pain Killer," and as well was noted for his benevolence and Christian spirit, he later in life becoming an evangelist of great earnestness and zeal; the earlier Davises were of Massachusetts antecedents, Perry Davis being a native of that State, born in Dartmouth, a son of Edmund and Sarah Davis. And the Dennises of the early Rhode Island stock descend from Robert Dennis, whose name is first of record in Portsmouth, R. I., in 1656, at which time he is designated a "planter." He was admitted a freeman in 1671, and in 1672 he was married to Sarah, daughter of Henry and Mary (Newland) Howland, of Duxbury, Mass. Mr. Howland was no doubt a man of prominence and influence in the town, as is evidenced in the fact of his being a member of the House of Deputies of the Colony in 1673-74.

The maternal lineage of Mrs. Ruth Leonora (Dennis) Sayles is as follows:

(I) William Davis, of Freetown, Mass., married Mary Makepeace.

(II) William Davis (2), born June 11, 1688, married July 24, 1712, Keziah Cudworth.

(III) Abiel Davis, born Oct. 21, 1729, married Jan. 12, 1753, Susannah Gage, of Freetown, Massachusetts.

(IV) Edmund Davis, born Nov. 27, 1761, married Sarah Wait. Their children were: Perry, born July 8, 1791; Abiel, who married (first) Mary Borden and (second) Nancy Cook; and Martha, who married William Boomer.

(V) Perry Davis, born July 8, 1791, married Oct. 8, 1812, Ruth Davoill. Their children were: Edmund, born May 13, 1815, died when young; Sarah, born May 24, 1817, married in September, 1845, William Dennis; Meneroy, born June 9, 1819, died in January, 1821; Edmund (2), born Jan. 24, 1824, married in October, 1849, Maria Phillips; Meneroy (2), born May 24, 1826, died in June, 1828; Perry, born June 1, 1831, died in August, 1837.

To James Reidell and Ruth Leonora (Dennis) Sayles were born children as follows: Edmund Perry, Sarah Louise and Ann Eliza. Of these,

(1) EDMUND PERRY SAYLES received his education in Providence, where he still makes his home. He is engaged in looking after his father's estate. He married Hattie B. Bailey, daughter of George Vernon Bailey, of Providence.

(2) Sarah Louise is the wife of Edwin A. Merrill and is residing in Roxbury, Massachusetts.

(3) Ann Eliza married Frederick W. Clapp, and lives in Roxbury, Mass. They have one son, Winthrop.

ALEXANDER THOMPSON, who during a long and honorable life was one of Cumberland's best citizens, was a native of the old town, and was born on what was known as Thompson's Hill, Dec. 8, 1834. He was a descendant of an old and honorable family, of Scottish extraction. The Thompsons who have for generations lived in and formed marriage alliances with many northern Rhode Island and nearby towns in Massachusetts descend through one Edward Thompson and his wife Margaret Aldrich, she the daughter of David and Hannah Aldrich. Mr. Thompson died Feb. 26, 1750.

Alexander Thompson, of Cumberland, married May 4, 1794, Joanna, born Aug. 13, 1769, daughter of Daniel and Anna (Whipple) Wilkinson, he a descendant of Lawrence Wilkinson, through John and Daniel Wilkinson. Mr. Thompson was an industrious and very worthy man and was highly respected in the community. He died Oct. 16, 1825. His children were: (1) Gladding O., born Jan. 13, 1797, married Lydia Carpenter, and their children were: Jane, born July 8, 1822, married W. H. Carpenter; Ellen Maria, born March 15, 1824, married John E. Bishop; John E., born Jan. 3, 1830, married Ruth A. Weatherhead; William H., born Dec. 31, 1833, married Anna R. Wolcott; Charles G., born Sept. 18, 1839, died Oct. 3, 1840; Frederick married Harriet Whipple. The father of this family, Gladding O. Thompson, was a man of considerable note, held several town offices, and was a State senator. He died March 22, 1863, and the loss was severely felt by the entire community. His widow, who survived him, was a granddaughter of Roger and Huldah (Streeter) Sheldon. (2) Silence, born in 1796, died young. (3) James, born March 31, 1799, is mentioned further on. (4) Sarah, born Jan. 11, 1800, married Amon Metcalf, and resided in Cumberland, where she died Aug. 4, 1857. (5) Eliza, born Jan. 11, 1803, married in 1865 Charles D. Brown. (6) Lydia, born Jan. 11, 1803, married Willard Newell, and died in Franklin, Mass. (7) Ruth, born Aug. 24, 1807, married Joseph Arnold Weatherhead. (8) Daniel, born June 11, 1811, married Fanny Cargill, and lived in Cumberland; his children were Jane S., Julia M. and Ruth E.

James Thompson, son of Alexander, born March 31, 1799, married Lucina Wilkinson Sheldon, born Aug. 20, 1810. Mr. Thompson resided in Cumberland and was a man of sterling integrity. He was a good farmer, and was also for many years engaged in boatbuilding. He died Jan. 31, 1861, greatly lamented by his family and the whole community, for it could be said of him that he was "an honest man, the noblest work of God." The children of James Thompson were: Alexander, born Dec. 8, 1834; Sarah T., born Feb. 5, 1841, who married Isaac Everett Razee; and Frances, born Oct. 13, 1843, who married the late Davis Cook.

Alexander Thompson, son of James and Lucina (Sheldon) Thompson, was educated in the local schools of Cumberland and also in New Hampshire, completing his education in the latter State. He then returned to Cumberland and settled down to agricultural pursuits, continuing with his father until the latter's death, at which time he took up the management of the home farm, of which he made a success. After the death of his father-in-law he removed to the Grant homestead, where he always maintained his home thereafter except during the winter seasons after 1892, which months he passed in Providence. In addition to looking after his farm and other varied interests Mr. Thompson settled a number of estates, among them that of the late Ira B. Peck and his brother-in-law, Davis Cook.

General Grant

published at the time of his death: "Mr. Thompson was a man of thorough integrity. His capability in business matters brought him not only the confidence and esteem of all with whom he had dealings, but likewise large interests and responsibilities, both on his own account and as a trustee. His administration of the estate of the late Ira B. Peck was marked by sound judgment and frugality, and these qualities characterized his whole career. With the traits which thus made him successful in practical affairs, he combined a natural cheerfulness of spirit, a kindliness of heart, a delicacy of sentiment, a purity of motive and a quiet depth and sincerity of religious feeling which won him a wide circle of genuine friends.

"He was president of the board of trustees of the Church of the Mediator, taking an active interest in everything that pertained to its welfare, and was strongly attached to its pastor, Rev. Willard C. Selleck, to whom he has been a very faithful friend. He was also a member of the Universalist Club of Rhode Island. He never sought public office, but for several years served as assessor of taxes in the town of Cumberland, and was a member of the building committee to erect the Town House about fifteen years ago." Mr. Thompson died at his home, No. 146 Bridgman street, Providence, Jan. 17, 1906, after a short illness, and was laid to rest in Swan Point cemetery.

On June 7, 1865, Mr. Thompson was married to Sarah A. Grant, who was born Oct. 28, 1835, at Tower Hill, daughter of the late Fenner Grant, and received her education in the schools of Cumberland and the high school of Pawtucket. She taught school in Cumberland, R. I., and Franklin, Mass., for ten terms. Mrs. Thompson is a descendant of an old family of this section, of which we have the following account:

Samuel Grant, the son of Joseph, married April 11, 1776, Experience Fisher, daughter of Jonathan Fisher of Cumberland. She was born in Medway, Mass. Their children of Cumberland town record were: Samuel, born Feb. 24, 1777; Huldah, born Dec. 24, 1778; Mehitable, born Nov. 19, 1780; Patty, born Aug. 16, 1783; Joseph, born Aug. 31, 1785; Joshua, born Dec. 15, 1789; Thomas, born Oct. 7, 1791; Patty (2), born Feb. 25, 1795 (died Nov. 20, 1795); and Fisher, born Feb. 17, 1797.

Samuel Grant, son of Samuel and Experience, born Feb. 24, 1777, married Urania Cook, and their children of Cumberland town record were: Fenner, born Sept. 21, 1801; Eliab Thompson, born Jan. 13, 1804; Samuel, born June 10, 1806 (died Feb. 19, 1807); Caroline Fisher, born Feb. 27, 1808; Urania Cook, born Dec. 7, 1810 (she married Brainerd Heaton, and died in Wrentham, Mass., aged sixty-two years; their only daughter, Miss Carrie E., now resides at Diamond Hill, R. I.); Samuel, born Feb. 15, 1813 (died in Wrentham, Mass.); and Joshua, a farmer, who lived and died in Wrentham, Mass. (he married Clarissa Brown).

FENNER GRANT was born on the Grant homestead at Diamond Hill, Sept. 21, 1801, and received his education in the local schools. Early in life he engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he followed throughout life, becoming a large land owner. Mr. Grant was also for a number of years engaged in the wood and timber business, in which he was also successful. He was a man of honor and integrity, and made many friends. A Whig in politics, he later became a Republican, although he was a man too liberal minded to be an aggressive politician. Mr. Grant's death occurred at his home Feb. 28, 1878, and he was laid to rest in the family plot in West Wrentham, Massachusetts.

Mr. Grant married Mary Ann Peck, who was born in Cumberland, daughter of William and Sarah (Arnold) Peck, and her death occurred April 20, 1888; she was laid to rest beside her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Fenner Grant were the parents of children as follows: Charles Edward, who died in childhood; Sarah Arnold, who married Alexander Thompson; Abby, who died in childhood; and Urania, who married William J. Sherborn, of West Wrentham, Massachusetts.

CONGDON (Providence family). The Rhode Island Congdons are of long and honorable standing here, the early home of the family being at Portsmouth and Kingstown; and if tradition be correct, the name is of historic connection and interest across the ocean. Here at Providence has lived for a century and more one branch of the family of which this article treats—some of the descendants of Joseph Congdon, who in the closing years of the eighteenth century founded one of the chief commercial houses of the city, which still continues in the family name, having descended from generation to generation; connected with which have been such well known substantial men and useful citizens as Joseph, Jonathan, Arnold, Gilbert, and Johns H. Congdon, while other of the posterity of Joseph have been identified extensively and successfully in mercantile lines in the city. Reference is made especially to the old established hardware house of W. Congdon & Sons, meaning the late Welcome Congdon and his sons Caleb and George Welcome. There follows in chronological order from the earliest known American ancestor the genealogy and family history of this branch of the Providence Congdons.

(I) Benjamin Congdon, born about 1650, appears of record at Portsmouth, R. I., in 1671, on Sept. 20th of which year he bought two hundred and thirty acres of land in Narragansett, Kingstown, but he did not remove thither for some years. He was a freeman in 1677. In 1683 he called himself late of Portsmouth, planter. He was one of the eighteen purchasers in 1710 of the 7,000 acres of vacant lands in Narragansett. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John and Dorothy Albro. Mr.

Congdon died June 19, 1718, and Mrs. Congdon, Nov. 15, 1720. Their children were: William, Benjamin, John, James, Elizabeth and Susanna.

It is family tradition that Benjamin Congdon came to this country with his brother John, who settled in New Jersey; that their father's name was John, who married a daughter of the Earl of Pembroke. In support of this, it is claimed that Benjamin was born in Pembrokeshire, Wales, near St. David's; and the coat of arms which is claimed for the family bears the following inscription: "The ancient family of Congdon of Willerby in Yorkshire, descended out of Wales, now of Rhode Island, Anno 1811."

(II) James Congdon, born April 19, 1686, married (first) Margaret Eldred, daughter of Samuel and Martha (Knowles) Eldred, (second) Nov. 15, 1729, Dorcas, daughter of Benjamin and Bethiah (Gardiner) Westcott, and (third) Mary Hoxsie, widow of Joseph and daughter of Robert and Deborah Taylor. Mr. Congdon was a resident of Kingstown, Providence and Charlestown, R. I. He was made a freeman in 1720, was a member of the town council in 1731, 1732, 1733 and 1734. His third marriage occurred in Charlestown, and he presumably went there to live about that time. He was moderator of town meetings in 1745 and 1755, was deputy in 1745, 1747, 1748, 1749 and 1750. He was ratemaker in 1746 and 1748, and in the town council in 1747 and 1748. He died Sept. 27, 1757. His children were: James (born Nov. 27, 1707), Penelope, Benjamin, Samuel, William, John, Elizabeth, Martha, Margaret (all born to the first marriage); Ephraim, Dorcas, Joseph (all born to the second wife); Robert, Susanna and Phebe.

(III) Joseph Congdon, born April 20, 1733, in the town of Cranston, R. I., married Susanna, born Feb. 6, 1734, in Charlestown, R. I., daughter of Joseph and Sarah Cross. At the time of his father's death, in 1757, Mr. Congdon was living in South Kingstown. He received at that time by the will of his father the north half of the house he was then living in and thirty acres of land, with other lands there and in Charlestown. His death is of Providence record, as occurring June 16, 1805, when aged seventy-two years. This was the Joseph Congdon who established along toward the close of the eighteenth century the present iron and steel business of the Congdon & Carpenter Company, with which from generation to generation the family has been connected for now some one hundred and fifteen and more years.

The children born to Joseph and his wife Susanna (Cross) Congdon, were: Sarah, born Feb. 5, 1762; Jonathan, born Dec. 16, 1763; Joshua, born July 13, 1765; Isaac, born June 4, 1773; William, born July 3, 1775; and Mary, born Sept. 20, 1777—Sarah, Isaac and William, born in South Kingstown, Jonathan and Joshua, born in Charlestown, and Mary, born in East Greenwich, Rhode Island.

(IV) Jonathan Congdon, born Dec. 16, 1763, married Elizabeth Arnold. Mr. Congdon was a resident of Providence, the successor of his father in the iron and steel business, and later the senior member of the firm of Jonathan Congdon & Sons. He lived to be ninety-eight years of age, dying July 21, 1862. His wife died March 7, 1855, aged eighty-seven years. Their children of Providence record were: Arnold, born Oct. 23, 1788; Phebe, Aug. 8, 1791; Welcome, April 3, 1794; Ruth E., Oct. 28, 1796; Caleb, Jan. 26, 1799; Eliza, March 26, 1801; Samuel, Nov. 28, 1803; Charles, July 10, 1807; and Gilbert, March 17, 1811.

(V) Arnold Congdon, son of Jonathan and Elizabeth, born Oct. 23, 1788, married Lydia Howland. Mr. Congdon was a resident of Providence, R. I., a member of the firm of Jonathan Congdon & Son, and senior member of the firm of Arnold Congdon & Co. He died April 19, 1847, at Providence.

(V) Gilbert Congdon, son of Jonathan and Elizabeth, born March 17, 1811, in Providence, R. I., married Mary R. Hopkins, daughter of Samuel Hopkins and sister of Johns Hopkins. Mr. Congdon acquired his education in the Friends' Boarding School at Providence, and at an early age entered the business house of his brother, Arnold Congdon, who, as noted in the foregoing, was engaged in the iron and steel trade, a business which had previously been carried on in the family by his father and grandfather. Later on young Gilbert was admitted to the firm, and on the death of his brother Arnold, in 1847, succeeded to the management of the business.

Mr. Congdon was a member of the Society of Friends, and from 1856 was a recorded minister of the Gospel, in which capacity he was not only diligent at home, but he often went abroad as a minister to visit hospitals, prisons, reform schools, and other institutions. He was often called upon to attend funerals, a duty he performed with great acceptance. His last act of consecration was to visit his fellow professors and others in the State of North Carolina, on a mission of love, in 1870.

In his business Mr. Congdon was habitually methodical and attentive. He was prosperous, yet in the midst of his activities he was not unmindful of the interests of the public and his duties as a citizen. He was greatly instrumental in furthering benevolent and religious objects. He devoted much of his time and income to the good of others. For many years he was a member, and at the time of his death president, of the Rhode Island Peace Society; vice-president of the Rhode Island Bible Society, of the Providence Franklin Society, of the Charitable Fuel Society, of the Providence Dispensary, and of other useful and benevolent associations. He was greatly interested in the cause of education; served as a member of the committee in charge of the Friends' School in Providence, and of the Sabbath-school Association. The welfare of the Freedmen and that of the Indians engaged much of his attention, he being a liberal contributor to their aid.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Congdon were as follows: Mary Emma, who married William H. S. Wood, of New York; Samuel Hopkins; Elizabeth Arnold; Johns Hopkins; Gilbert, who died in infancy; and Gilbert Arnold, the latter to a second marriage of Mr. Congdon.

Mr. Congdon died at his home in Providence, Rhode Island, Dec. 9, 1870.

(VI) JOHNS HOPKINS CONGDON, born June 3, 1849, was graduated from Haverford College, in Pennsylvania, in 1869. He is vice-president of the Congdon & Carpenter Company, trustee of the Rhode Island Hospital, Chairman of the Providence Dispensary, Director of the Mechanics National Bank, and ex-president of the Hope Club. He married Caroline Buffum, and their children are: Eleanor Buffum; Harold; Louise Buffum; Elizabeth Arnold, who married James N. Steele, Jr., and has a son, James N.; Johns H., Jr., and Gilbert Maurice.

The extensive business of the Congdon & Carpenter Company, which, perhaps, is now the oldest commercial house in Rhode Island, was established by Joseph Congdon, as noted elsewhere, sometime previous to 1790, and since that time it has continued in the family name, though others have been associated with the Congdons in its management. The successor of Joseph Congdon was his son Jonathan, the latter of whom also for a time had associated with him his son, Arnold Congdon, the firm style being Jonathan Congdon and Jonathan Congdon & Sons, respectively. The firm next became Arnold Congdon & Co., then Gilbert Congdon & Co., Congdon & Carpenter, and Congdon, Carpenter & Co., the latter style being continued until January, 1892, when the business was incorporated under the name of the Congdon & Carpenter Company, and was capitalized for $500,000. Its officers at incorporation were: Francis W. Carpenter, president; Johns H. Congdon, vice-president; Albert C. Day, treasurer; Henry C. Bangs, secretary.

This concern deals in iron, steel, metals, hardware, carriage and saddlery goods and paints and oils. It is located at Nos. 155-161 Canal street, and No. 102 North Main street, Providence.

For years the company has carried on a business which in volume amounts to upwards of a million dollars annually. Their goods go to all parts of New England.

HON. WILLIAM D. CROSS, of Carolina, R. I., is a worthy descendant of one of the oldest families of the State. Ralph and John Cross, the pioneer progenitors of the family in this country, came from Scotland and settled in Rhode Island. One of their descendants, Joseph Cross, settled in the town of Charlestown, at what became later known as Cross' Mills. By his first wife he had Peleg, Samuel and Joseph, and his children by his second wife were John, William, Benjamin, Stephen, Edward, Silas, Gideon, James, Joshua, Amos, Susannah and Ruhannah.

Samuel Cross married Anna Clarke and had issue: Mary married David Clarke; Hannah married Jesse Babcock; Ruth married Elias Clarke; Dorcas married Joshua Tucker; Martha married Christopher Browning; Anna married Simeon Tucker; Sarah; Rebecca married John Wells; Susan married Hoxsie Perry; Joseph married (first) Dorcas Reynolds and (second) Bridget Browning, and Samuel married Lizzie Clark.

Joseph Cross was born May 19, 1775, in Charlestown, R. I., and resided there all his life. He was one of the most influential citizens of the town, serving as a justice of the peace, and for many years as a representative in the State Legislature. He first married Dorcas Reynolds; his second marriage was to Bridget, daughter of Stephen Browning, of Charlestown, and his third wife was Ruth Greene. By the first union there was one daughter, Mary A., now deceased, and by the third there were no children. To the second marriage were born the following children: George W., born May 12, 1821, died in South Kingstown; he was twice married, by his first wife, Amy Gardner, having one daughter, Hannah F., wife of Leander Tucker, of Wakefield, and by his second, Lois Babcock, one son, Edward P., who is deceased. Dorcas A., born Sept. 10, 1823, died in Providence; she married William C. Tucker, and had two children, Alpheus C. and Emma F., residents of Providence. Bridget B., born June 11, 1826, died Feb. 15, 1829. Samuel J., born Jan. 6, 1828, died Sept. 27, 1875; he married Lizzie Wells, and had children: Susie P., Julia F., Samuel J. (of Rochester, Pa.), Emma W. (of Baden, Pa.), George H. and Thomas W. (of Rochester, Pa.), and Frances (deceased). Stephen B., born July 13, 1830, died Feb. 7, 1889; he was married twice, first to Mary A. Clark, and second to Samantha Hall, and had one daughter, Mary, who is deceased. William D. was born Nov. 5, 1832. Hannah W., born March 26, 1834, died July 6, 1835.

William D. Cross was born in Charlestown, and passed his boyhood days on the home farm. He obtained a common-school education, which was supplemented by a more thorough course at the East Greenwich Academy during 1857-58. Much of his time prior to maturity he passed on the home farm, after which he spent a winter canvassing for books in Savannah, Ga. He then returned to Rhode Island and entered the cigar factory of Tucker, Pierce & Co., of Carolina, where he remained two years, learning the trade of cigar making. He spent some time in East Greenwich. Becoming manager of the cigar factory of L. W. Kingsley, of Providence, he continued thus for one year. In 1869 he began the manufacture of cigars at Carolina, and there his capital and time have been mainly devoted to this business since 1872.

Mr. Cross has always taken an active part in the public affairs of his county and State, and his capacity and integrity have been substantially recognized on numerous occasions by his fellow citizens. In 1872 he was first elected to the Rhode Island House of Representatives, to which he was elected again in 1898 and in 1899. During 1880, 1900, 1901 and 1902 he served in the State Senate. In 1869 he was first elected a member of the town council, to which he was returned in 1870, 1871, 1879, 1880, 1883 and 1884, from which year on up to and including 1902 he served as president of that body except during 1891 and 1892. He was town treasurer from June, 1897, to June, 1903. In 1873-74 he was commissioner of Indian schools for the Narragansett tribe, then living on the reservation in Charlestown. Mr. Cross was one of the earliest members of the Washington County Agricultural Society and for two years served as one of its vice-presidents. His fraternal associations have been with the I. O. O. F., and he is an active and influential member of Friendship Lodge, No. 16, of Carolina. He has manifested much public spirit in the development of Carolina, and in 1872 built Samoset Hall, the only public hall in the place.

On May 22, 1869, Mr. Cross married Martha F. Fry, daughter of James and Eliza Fry, and they had three children born to them, namely: Emma E., wife of Fred C. Barber; Mary D., who died Nov. 14, 1875, and George W., who married Maria Grimes and has one son, William D.

BROWNING. In tracing the maternal ancestry of Hon. William D. Cross we find the record to be as follows:

(I) Nathaniel Browning, progenitor of one of the oldest families of Rhode Island, appears first at Portsmouth, afterward removing to Kingstown, R. I. In 1632 he married Sarah, daughter of William and Mary Freeborn, and they had issue: William, James, Sarah, Jeremiah, Hall, Hannah, Jonathan and Daniel.

(II) William Browning, son of Nathaniel, first married Rebecca, daughter of Samuel and Hannah (Porter) Wilbor, and his second wife was named Sarah. His children were: Samuel, born Feb. 10, 1688; Hannah, born July 16, 1691; William, born Sept. 29, 1693; Sarah, born April 16, 1695; John, born March 4, 1697 (married Ann Hazard); and Rebecca.

(III) William Browning (2), son of William, born Sept. 29, 1693, married (first) Dec. 7, 1721, Mary Freelove, and they had one son, William, born Nov. 28, 1724. He married (second) Aug. 5, 1728, Mary Wilkinson, and they had children: Wilkinson, born July 14, 1731, who married Susannah Hazard; John, born July 26, 1733, who married Anne Browning; Mary, born June 10, 1735, who married Thomas Browning; Dinah, born

Sept. 10, 1736; Joseph, who married Mary Champlin; Ruth, who married Jeremiah Browning; and Tabitha.

(IV) William Browning (3), born Nov. 28, 1724, married Elizabeth Tripp, and had one son, Stephen.

(V) Stephen Browning, son of William (3), was born in South Kingstown, but spent the greater part of his life in Charlestown, on a farm which he purchased from Judge Edward Perry. He married Bridget, daughter of Abijah Babcock, and she died March 6, 1831, aged sixty-four years. He survived until March 2, 1845, and both were buried in the family burying-ground on the homestead farm, which is now owned by their great-grandson, Stephen T. Browning, of Narragansett Pier, he being the fourth Stephen to own it. The children of Stephen and Bridget (Babcock) Browning were: Stephen married Miriam Watson; John B. married Hannah Lewis; Bridget married Joseph Cross; Dorcas married William Mumford; Henry, married (first) Mercy Mott and (second) Ann Card; Mary married Ludwick Thurston; Abijah B. married Martha Browning; Eliza married George Hazard Browning; Hannah married George Watson, and William D. died unmarried.

POTTER FAMILY (line of Benjamin, Benjamin, Jr., and Asa K.).

(I) George Potter came from England to Portsmouth, R. I., and in 1638 was admitted an inhabitant of the Island of Aquidneck. On April 30, 1639, he was one of twenty-eight signers of a compact for government. He died between March 21, 1709, and 1711. He was the father of Abel, whose widow married Nicholas Niles.

(II) Abel Potter, son of George, was married Nov. 16, 1669, to Rachel Warner, daughter of John and Priscilla Warner. He died in 1692, and she passed away Nov. 8, 1724. Their children were: George, John, Abel, Benjamin, May, Ichabod, Job and Stephen.

(III) Abel Potter, son of Abel, was born in Warwick, R. I., and on Jan. 1, 1713, married for his first wife Rebecca Paine, who was born in May, 1694. His second wife was Martha Paine, whom he married April 30, 1719. One child was born to the first marriage, Benjamin, Oct. 18, 1713, and to the second marriage were born: Job, March 14, 1720; Levi, May 15, 1722; Simeon, April 21, 1724; Abel, Oct. 21, 1726; Bennett, in 1742, and Dinah.

(IV) Major Benjamin Potter, son of Abel, Jr., was born in Greenwich, R. I., Oct. 18, 1713, and died in 1796. He was married Dec. 25, 1735, to Jemima, daughter of Joseph Williams, Jr., born in 1714, and their children all born in Cranston, R. I., were: Zuriel, born April 8, 1740; Mesheck, Dec. 20, 1745; Dr. Honneyman, July 3, 1755; Holliman (a Revolutionary soldier), July 3, 1755 (died Aug. 1, 1835; he married Sept. 12, 1778, Sarah Allen, daughter of Nathaniel, and their son was Roger Williams Potter); Susannah; Rebecca, and Jemima.

Frank K. Porter

(V) Zuriel Potter, son of Major Benjamin, was born April 8, 1740, in Cranston, R. I., and died Nov. 18, 1796. He married Dec. 24, 1761, Abigail King, born in 1740, who died in 1819. Their children were: Free love, born Oct. 22, 1762, married Stukely Stafford; Rebecca, born Dec. 23, 1764, died June 15, 1807, unmarried; Anna Allen, born Feb. 24, 1767, married Cyrus Arnold and died Feb. 7, 1797; Jemima W., born April 24, 1769, married Benjamin Arnold Oct. 10, 1790, and died Nov. 29, 1829; Abigail, born Dec. 31, 1771, married Major Earl Potter, June 3, 1798; Benjamin was born Aug. 11, 1774; Zuriel, born March 15, 1777, died Nov. 30, 1796, unmarried; Elizabeth, born Aug. 16, 1779, married Benjamin Hill, and died Oct. 3, 1821; Asa King, born March 24, 1782, married Ruth Stafford April 3, 1803, and died in October, 1852.

(VI) Benjamin Potter, son of Zuriel, was born Aug. 11, 1774, and resided on the old home farm in Cranston, where, in addition to his farming interests, he carried on the manufacture of twine in a small way. He died July 11, 1853. He married Nov. 25, 1798, Lydia King, who was born Oct. 14, 1777, daughter of William Borden and Welthian (Walton) King, and died Oct. 5, 1853. She was a sister of Gov. Samuel Ward King. The ten children of Benjamin and Lydia (King) Potter were as follows: (1) Sarah Greene Potter, born Jan. 18, 1800, died Oct. 14, 1846, unmarried. (2) Zuriel Potter, born Aug. 29, 1801, married Feb. 2, 1832, Rhoby M. Ames, who was born Nov. 30, 1801, and died Oct. 31, 1870. His second wife was Alzadia Brown. Zuriel Potter was a farmer, and resided in Johnston, where he was quite prominent in town affairs, bearing the title of "Judge." His children, all born to the first marriage, were: Mary Borden, born Feb. 15, 1833, married Augustus S. Randall, and died Jan. 6, 1897; Frances Maria, born May 14, 1834, married Albert Darling, and died Feb. 14, 1860 (they had two children, a daughter, Frances, surviving); Rosanna, born March 26, 1836, married John N. Arnold, the well-known artist; Lydia, born July 30, 1839, died Dec. 1, 1857; and Benjamin Dyre, born July 24, 1842, died Jan. 25, 1895. The last named was twice married, first to Lucy M. Keller and second to Kate Hope Thornton. By his first wife he had two sons, Ernest Arnold Potter and Clarence Nelson Potter, both living. His children by the second wife were: Arthur, Ora and Ina Potter. (3) William King Potter, born Sept. 16, 1803, married March 17, 1830, Esther Gaston, a sister of the late Governor Gaston, of Massachusetts. William King Potter was associated with his brother Benjamin in the mercantile business in Providence, and there died Sept. 10, 1842. His children were: John Alexander, born Jan. 18, 1832, died June 11, 1835;

Sarah Greene, born June 20, 1834, died Aug. 6, 1849; Walter McDuffe, born May 8, 1836, died April 9, 1866, unmarried; Lucy Keziah, born Feb. 2, 1839, was married April 16, 1868, to Ezra Humphrey, and died Nov. 3, 1868. Walter M. Potter and his sister, Lucy K. Potter, afterward Mrs. Ezra Humphrey, established the First Baptist Church in Denver, Colo. (4) Benjamin Potter, Jr., was born Oct. 2, 1805. (5) Rev. Otis Wilson Potter, born Dec. 10, 1807, married July 25, 1831, Lydia Allen Tillinghast, and died May 27, 1857. He was a Six Principle Baptist minister, and was located at Johnston, R. I., and later at Swansea, Mass. His widow resided in Providence in the latter part of her life and died there. She was born June 16, 1810, and died April 2, 1906. Their children were: Lucy Tillinghast, born June 18, 1833, died Aug. 16, 1833; Otis Wilson, born July 23, 1834, married (first) Oct. 8, 1860, Sarah H. Greene (born March 21, 1838, died Aug. 18, 1872), and (second) Vesta Pierce, Feb. 11, 1874 (she was born May 24, 1837); Rev. Thomas Tillinghast, born Oct. 25, 1837, married Aug. 9, 1868, Sarah Frances Manning, and died Oct. 6, 1884; Ann Maria Slade was born April 3, 1842; William King, born Dec. 21, 1843, married June 16, 1869, Harriet Emily Dickinson, born in 1842, and they have two children, William King, Jr., and Florence. (6) Welcome Allen Potter, born Jan. 17, 1810, married Aug. 18, 1839, Maria M. Pettis, who died Jan. 5, 1890, aged seventy-five years. Welcome A. Potter in early life was associated with his brother Benjamin in the furniture business, in Providence. Later he engaged in farming at Johnston, and there died Sept. 20, 1895, leaving one son, Benjamin James, born July 6, 1840, who married Sept. 8, 1866, Sarah Thurber Sheldon, and resides in Providence. (7) Lydia Allen Potter, born March 20, 1812, married March 17, 1842, James L. Gardner, and died Nov. 19, 1866. He was a farmer and resided on the Potter homestead, in Cranston. (8) Abby Eliza Potter, born Aug. 16, 1814, married Sept. 16, 1844, Charles S. Cleveland, and died April 12, 1872, in Providence. He was a member of the firm of Cleveland Brothers, furniture dealers on North Main street. (9) Mercy Borden Potter, born Dec. 8, 1816, died Nov. 3, 1849, unmarried. (10) Asa King Potter was born Aug. 7, 1820.

(VII) Benjamin Potter, Jr., son of Benjamin, was born Oct. 2, 1805, in Cranston, and in early life engaged in the mercantile business on Canal street, Providence, being associated with his brother, William K., under the firm name of W. K. & B. Potter. They also operated a vessel in the West Indies trade. The partnership continued until the death of the senior member of the firm in 1842, after which Benjamin Potter continued the business alone until 1853, in which year he engaged in the furniture business with his brother, Welcome

A., under the name of Potter & Bro., the establishment being located at No. 148 Westminster street. Four years later the business was discontinued, and Benjamin Potter engaged in the grocery, wood and coal business, which he followed the rest of his active life, retiring from business in 1878. He died Feb. 17, 1885. He was a man esteemed and respected, and worthily upheld the family name. He was a member of the Central Congregational Church, which he joined in 1855.

Mr. Potter was married (first) June 4, 1835, to Lucy L., daughter of Antipas and Mary Harrington, and she died Aug. 12, 1835. His second marriage, on May 19, 1840, was to Cornelia Weeden, born Aug. 20, 1809, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Smith) Weeden. She died Jan. 18, 1864. His third marriage, May 31, 1870, was to Amelia Weeden, twin of his second wife, and she died Aug. 4, 1886. One daughter came to the second union, Ruth Weeden, born Sept. 6, 1846, who was married Oct. 21, 1874, to David C. Moulton, a sketch of whom will be found elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Moulton resides on Elmwood avenue, Providence, and has three children: David Potter, born July 21, 1875; Benjamin Potter, May 4, 1878; and Mabel Cornelia, Sept. 29, 1880.

(VII) Asa King Potter, youngest child of Benjamin and Lydia (King) Potter, was born Aug. 7, 1820, in Cranston, and his early life was spent on the farm. After a time he came to Providence and secured a position in a wholesale grocery on Canal street. Later he entered the employ of Greene, Anthony & Co., and soon afterward an opportunity presented itself in the furniture business. With a capital of $1,000 he entered on a business career which he followed for fifty years, keeping pace with the many changes which marked this long period of commercial activity. His first venture, in 1848, was in the furniture business, under the firm name of Curry & Potter, which in 1854 became Potter, Anthony & Dennison. Later Mr. Anthony withdrew from the firm, which then became Potter & Dennison, and in the latter sixties Mr. Dennison withdrew and the firm became Potter & Co., so continuing until his death. In June, 1856, he became a member of the First Congregational Church, taking an active part in both Sunday-school and church work. Filling various church offices, he was at the time of his death senior deacon. He early became a member of the Marine Corps of Artillery, and in 1891 of the Rhode Island Historical Society. With these exceptions he formed no ties outside of his family and business. Quiet and unostentatious, loving his home, and seeking no public office, he leaves no record of public life, but to those who knew him intimately, to the church whose interests he promoted, to the poor whom he befriended, to the family with which his life was so closely connected, a great loss has come, lessened only by his example of calm resignation to the inevitable, and of firm faith in the life to come. He died Nov. 13, 1897, and was buried at Swan Point.

On Dec. 12, 1843, Mr. Potter was married to Betsey Arnold, born in 1818, who died July 3, 1846. One child, Harriet Naomi, was born to them Nov. 23, 1845, and died Nov. 1, 1864. Mr. Potter was married (second) on Feb. 24, 1849, to Cornelia E. Armington, born in 1825, who died in 1882. To this union came three sons and one daughter, born as follows: Frank King, Dec. 15, 1849; Helen Park, Jan. 10, 1859 (died April 9, 1896); Walter Armington, April 8, 1865; Charles Walton, Nov. 13, 1870. Walter Armington Potter was educated at Mowry & Goff's private school and took a special course at Brown University, but did not graduate, becoming a partner with his father, and when the business was incorporated he became president. He married (first) June 4, 1889, Maude E. Martin, who died May 29, 1892, and he married (second) March 28, 1894, Edith Weeden Spink. Charles Walton Potter, now secretary of Potter & Co., completed his education at the Mowry & Goff school; on Sept. 23, 1897, he married Blanche Horton, and they have one daughter, Priscilla, born in November, 1898.

Asa King Potter married for his third wife, June 9, 1886, Sophia A. Armington, the sister of his second wife, and she still survives.

(VIII) FRANK KING POTTER, eldest son of Asa King Potter, and a well-known business man, treasurer of the firm of Potter & Co., was born in Providence, and received his early education at the school of Merrick and Emery Lyon. He then entered Brown University, graduating with the class of 1871. On leaving college he became associated with his father, and as the latter's advancing age necessitated relief from the activities of the work Frank K. gradually became the prime spirit in the business, and so continued until his father's death. In May, 1899, two years after this event, the firm was incorporated, Frank King Potter being chosen treasurer.

On Oct. 13, 1875, Mr. Potter married Emma Maria Cook, who was born Sept. 2, 1852, in Providence, daughter of Levander and Olive (Daniels) Cook, and three children were born to this union: Ralph King, born Jan. 15, 1879, who died Feb. 19, 1882; Olive, born Sept. 26, 1884; and Alice King, born Sept. 18, 1887.

Mr. Potter, like his father, cared nothing for political life. His political sympathies were usually with the Republican party. He was a member of the Hope, University, and Art Clubs, also of the Providence Chamber of Commerce, and was a very active member of the Zeta Psi Rho fraternity, taking a deep interest in the same. Domestic in his habits, he was fond of his home and devoted to his family. He was a superior business man, and very closely applied himself, in fact overwork caused his death. He was the business head of the firm, which owes to his efforts the foremost position which it occupies. Mr. Potter died Oct. 31, 1905, mourned by a wide circle of friends, and was buried at Swan Point.

SHERMAN (Line of Daniel, of South Kingstown). This highly honored name in New England and the country at large is almost, if not quite, as old as the former section itself, the forerunner of the name having come to the Colonies only about a decade after the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. Of the Rhode Island branch in question, which had its advent in the person of Hon. Philip Sherman, the latter's great-grandson, Daniel Sherman, was a South Kingstown settler. It is of this branch, that part of it relating to the immediate family and lineage of Oliver Watson Sherman, long a merchant and prominent as well as useful citizen of the village of West Kingston, in the town of South Kingstown, that this article is to treat.

The Shermans are of German origin. In the Fatherland the name Sherman, Schurman, etc., often occurs, and was no doubt transferred to London and its vicinity many centuries ago by the Anglo-Saxon emigrants. From this metropolitan stock a scion was transplanted to Dedham, County of Essex, England, which long flourished, and sent out other shoots. The name is derived from the original occupation of the family. They were cloth dressers or shearers of cloth. The family at Dedham retained the occupation of their ancestors, and also the coat of arms worn by those in and about London. In New England are found two distinct families bearing the name of Sherman. One of these descends from William Sherman, who came with the Pilgrims about the year 1630, and settled at Marshfield, where his descendants still remain. The other is of Dedham stock, a branch of which emigrated to New England and settled in the vicinity of Boston. With this Dedham line we deal.

(I) Hon. Philip Sherman, the emigrant settler of the branch of this Sherman family under consideration, born Feb. 5, 1610, in Dedham, England, was a son of Samuel, a grandson of Henry (2), and a great-grandson of Henry Sherman, the latter of whom was of the County of Essex, England, probably having removed there from the County of Suffolk, as he bore the Suffolk Sherman coat of arms. Philip Sherman came to New England in 1634, and settled in Roxbury, Mass. He married Sarah Odging, daughter of Mrs. John Porter. In the Anne Hutchinson trouble in Boston he took the popular side, but as Governor Winthrop finally prevailed he with others found it convenient to migrate to Rhode Island. In Providence they met Roger Williams, who advised them to purchase the island of Aquetuct (Aquidneck), now Rhode Island, of the Indians. The purchase was completed on March 24, 1638. On July 1, 1639, they established a regular government, with William Coddington as governor and Philip Sherman as secretary. After this he often held office in the Colony, and in critical periods. He was a man of intelligence, wealth and influence and was frequently consulted by those in authority. The early records prepared by him still remain in Portsmouth, and show him to have been a neat and skilful penman, as well as an educated man. After he migrated to Rhode Island he left the Congregational Church and united with the Society of Friends. Tradition affirms he was a devout as well as a determined man. He died in Portsmouth, R. I., in 1687.

From this Philip Sherman the line of Oliver Watson Sherman, of West Kingston, is through Peleg, Thomas, Daniel, Daniel (2), Joseph and Joseph (2). These generations in detail and in the order named follow.

(II) Peleg Sherman, born in 1638, in Portsmouth, R. I., married July 25, 1657, Elizabeth Lawton, daughter of Thomas Lawton, was a farmer, and resided on the homestead in his native town. He died in 1719 and his wife died in 1711.

(III) Thomas Sherman, born Aug. 8, 1658, in Portsmouth, R. I., married June 26, 1702, Lydia Wilcox. Mr. Sherman bought a tract of land about a mile north of Kingston depot, lying in Exeter and North Kingstown, of Caleb Arnold, and settled there. This was the homestead of the family until it was sold about 1868. Their children were: Ruth; Josiah, born March 2, 1703; Daniel, born Nov. 26, 1706; and Benjamin.

(IV) Daniel Sherman, born Nov. 26, 1706, married May 22, 1735, Susanna Earl, born June 25, 1715, daughter of John and Sarah Earl, and their only child whose birth is of record in the town records of South Kingstown is Daniel, who was born in that same year, 1735.

(V) Daniel Sherman (2), born in 1735, married Rebecca Palmer, and their children were: George, Palmer, Hannah, Hulda, Susanna, Eunice, Joseph and John P.

(VI) Joseph Sherman, son of Daniel (2), married Mary Harrington, and their children were: Rebecca, born in 1805; Sally, in 1807; George and Mary, in 1809; Daniel, Dec. 1, 1811; Joseph, in 1815; Benjamin, in 1818; Ruhama, in 1820; and Thomas, in 1824.

(VII) Joseph Sherman (2), son of Joseph, was born at Matunuck, R. I., May 15, 1815, and remained in his native place until he reached his majority. Throughout life he was engaged in agriculture, and in 1844 he purchased the Sherman farm at West Kingston. In 1875 he removed to a house near the depot, where he died Oct. 31, 1898. In politics Mr. Sherman was first a Whig and then a Republican. He was in his earlier years a member of Elder Gershom Palmer's Church, at Exeter, and later of the church at Usquepaugh. In 1842 Joseph Sherman married Harriet Watson, whose ancestry will be found elsewhere. She died Sept.

2, 1902. There were born to this union: Oliver Watson, Dec. 15, 1842, and Benjamin Watson, Sept. 21, 1845.

(VIII) OLIVER WATSON SHERMAN, son of Joseph and Harriet, was born Dec. 15, 1842, in South Kingstown, R. I., and there attended the public schools. He was a farmer until he reached the age of thirty-four years, and afterward, for twenty-six years, engaged in the mercantile business with his brother, Benjamin W. Sherman, at West Kingstown. After the latter retired from the business Oliver W. continued alone for about a year, and in 1904 sold the establishment to W. A. H. Potter. For four years Mr. Sherman was postmaster at West Kingstown. Before their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sherman became members of the Church at Usquepaugh, he joining the organization in April, 1867, and she in May. In August, 1879, Oliver W. Sherman was married to Susan F., daughter of Ezekiel Boss. Mr. Sherman was formerly a Republican in politics, but of late years has been a Prohibitionist.

WILLIAM H. LANGLEY. The Langley family, of which William H. Langley is a worthy representative, has been for generations identified with the history of Rhode Island, and is of English extraction. The first representative in America lived in Boston, and the line of descent from this John Langley follows:

(I) John Langley was a native of Topsham, or Teignmouth, near Exeter, Devonshire, England. He married Mary, daughter of Peter and Mary King, who was born Feb. 4, 1676. At the time of her marriage to Mr. Langley she was the widow of Robert Wing, who was a son of John and Joshabeth (Davis) Wing, and grandson of Robert Wing. There were children by the first marriage, and the eldest son, Robert, is said to have descendants in Maryland in the vicinity of Little Choptank. John Langley and a brother were lost at sea, in 1712, on a voyage from Virginia to Boston. He left two sons, namely: John, born Oct. 12, 1710; and Nathaniel, May 25, 1712. The widow married a third time, March 8, 1715, when she became the wife of William Lee. This Mr. Lee was born in England, Jan. 27, 1677, and owned the covenant in the North Church, of Boston, July 12, 1717. After his death, which occurred in that city about 1728, his widow removed to Newport, R. I., and there died Feb. 6, 1757, aged eighty-one.

(II) Nathaniel Langley, born in Boston, May 25, 1712, was baptized Jan. 12, 1717, in the New North Church, as "an orphan, on account of William Lee." About 1740-41 he went to Newport, and became a freeman of that Colony May 3, 1743. He was a ship joiner by trade and also ran the sloop "Success" from Rhode Island to Boston for a period about the year 1768. He died Nov. 16, 1771, in the sixtieth year of his age, leaving a widow and large family. His wife, whose Christian name was Bethiah (or Bethial), was born Nov. 12, 1711, and died March 10, 1805, the mother of seven sons and four daughters. Three of the daughters died young, and of the others the Newport census of 1774 shows there were then living, in that city, John, William and Lee, with their families, and Peter and Bethiah, unmarried.

(III) John Langley was born in Boston Oct. 6, 1735, and died in 1824. He was four times married. His first wife, to whom he was joined on Sunday, Aug. 29, 1762, was Catherine, daughter of Samuel and Mary Greene. She was born Sept. 2, 1742, and died March 2, 1765, leaving one daughter, Elizabeth, born July 30, 1763, who deceased that same year. On April 6, 1769, Mr. Langley took for his second wife Elizabeth Sinkins, who was born Feb. 2, 1743, and died March 5, 1777. She left two children, viz.: John S. and Joshua, the latter born May 10, 1772. On Jan. 31, 1779, Mr. Langley and Mrs. Lucina Halverson were united in marriage, and one son was born to them, John L., Jan. 2, 1781. Mrs. Halverson was a daughter of Richard and Priscilla Loudon, of Newport, born March 10, 1743, and deceased Jan. 28, 1801. The fourth wife was Naomi L., daughter of Capt. Nathaniel Potter, and the date of this union was June 17, 1802.

(IV) John Sinkins Langley was born July 5, 1770, in Newport, and died there, Sept. 15, 1860, aged ninety years, two months, ten days. A cooper by trade, he had a large establishment in Newport, supplying outgoing vessels, and made good profits. His sons, as they grew up, all took places in his factory and perpetuated the business. He was active also in church work, a member of the Second Baptist Church. John S. Langley was married, in 1792, to Elizabeth, daughter of Woodman Billings, of Providence, where she was born June 15, 1771. Mrs. Langley died six years before her husband, April 18, 1854. She bore him children as follows: Elizabeth, born May 6, 1793, who lived to an advanced age; Nathaniel, born Oct. 4, 1794, who married Harriet Brownell; John B.; Deborah, born April 2, 1798, who lived to a good old age; Patience B., born Feb. 3, 1800; Mary, March 11, 1802; Edward B., April 29, 1804; Joshua, April 14, 1806; James W., Dec. 31, 1808 (married Patience Field, of Providence); and Anstriss D., March 11, 1811.

(V) John B. Langley was born July 4, 1796, in Newport. He very early began to work at coopering in his father's shop on Langley's Wharf and confined his attention to that line of business throughout his life. While he was an honored and esteemed citizen he never sought to acquire political place among his fellows, contenting himself with an unvarying support of the Republican party. Previous to the formation of that party he was a good Whig. He was a quiet and unassuming man, of domestic tastes, but yet energetic and industrious, and he easily made his way in the world. In religious matters he inclined toward the Baptist faith and gave his liberal support to the Central Baptist Church.

On May 28, 1820, John B. Langley was joined in marriage to Martha C., daughter of Job Townsend. She was born in Newport, July 31, 1801, and died there Aug. 14, 1884, many years after her husband, who passed away Nov. 27, 1865. Children were born to their union as follows: (1) William Cory, born March 1, 1821, a tailor by trade, married (first) Margaret Sherman and (second) Mrs. Annie Adlam; he died in Malden, Mass. (2) Mary Elizabeth, born May 3, 1825, married William H. Bliss, of Newport, and died there. (3) John B., Jr., born Feb. 16, 1828, a tinsmith of Newport, now deceased, married (first) Sarah Moses and (second) Susan Barlow. (4) Martha T., born April 4, 1830, married Samuel S. Southwick, deceased, a boatbuilder of Newport. (5) Job T., born Oct. 10, 1832, a hardware merchant of Newport, now deceased, married Sarah Greene. (6) Charles H. is mentioned further on. (7) Susan Ann, born Nov. 12, 1840, died aged three and one-half years.

(VI) Charles H. Langley was born in Newport, Nov. 23, 1836, in the same house where his entire after life was spent and in which both his marriage and death occurred. In early life he followed the calling of a tinsmith for a while, but during the Civil war he engaged in teaming and took the contract for hauling for the Old Colony Steamboat Company, at that time the property of the late James Fiske. Mr. Langley finally decided upon starting in the grocery business and continued in that line for the rest of his life, with his store located on Spring street, near Franklin. While not specially active in politics, he was loyal to the old Democratic party. At one time he accepted an appointment from the city council as inspector of nuisances. Fraternally he belonged to the Knights of Pythias and the Knights of Honor, and in early life belonged for several years to the Newport Artillery Company.

The wife chosen by Charles H. Langley was Miss Elizabeth Champlin, daughter of John Champlin, of Westerly, and a direct descendant of Christopher Champlin. Mr. Langley passed from this world March 25, 1893, and his wife April 5, 1901, aged sixty-five years. Their family consisted of four children, born as follows: Henry L., who died in infancy; Martha C., of Providence; William H., our subject; and Elizabeth Hammett, who died in infancy.

(VII) William Henry Langley has like his forefathers passed his days in Newport. His birth occurred in that city March 20, 1867, and his youth was spent in the public schools there. At the age of sixteen he went to work in the Newport post office for a short time, after which he became an apprentice in cabinet making, under George E. Vernon, with whom he remained in all about ten years. He gradually worked into regular carpenter work and building and in 1888 began his long association with the late Nathan Barker, the well-known contractor and builder of Newport. He was thus employed till the death of Mr. Barker, in 1895, since which time Mr. Langley has continued the work as his successor and has carried it on with the same good results, winning a flattering reputation for himself. He is prominent among those in the same line of business, is president of the Builders' and Merchants' Exchange, and secretary of the Builders' Association of Newport.

Mr. Langley's interests have never led him to enter the field of politics, although he is a good Republican. However, in 1906, at the first election held under the new charter granted the city of Newport, he was elected a member of the representative council from the Second ward for the three-year term, the office coming to him unsolicited. He has been very active in fraternal work, particularly in Masonic and Pythian circles, being a member of St. Paul's Lodge, No. 14, A. F. & A. M., of which he is master; Newport Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M., of which he is past high priest; De Blois Council, No. 5, R. & S. M., of which he is past thrice illustrious master; Washington Commandery, No. 4, K. T., of which he is past eminent commander; and Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Providence. As a Knight of Pythias he is a member of Redwood Lodge, No. 11, of which he was chancellor commander in 1893; of Davis Company, No. 8, Uniform Rank, of which he is past captain; and of El Karum Temple, No. 45, D. O. K. K. As a past chancellor he is one of the few men in the order who can be relied on to fill any position without warning, as he has memorized the ritual from beginning to end. At the annual session of the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island, held in Providence Feb. 14, 1905, he was elected grand chancellor of the Grand Lodge, the first member of Redwood Lodge to hold office in that body for over twenty-five years. Mr. Langley is also enrolled in Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum.

On Oct. 28, 1890, Mr. Langley was married to Miss Marielize Barker, whose parents were Nathan and Sarah E. (Tift) Barker. To this happy union have come one daughter and one son: Grace C., born July 18, 1893; and William H., Jr., born Nov. 9, 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Langley attend the Central Baptist Church, to which their generous support is given. Their home is a pleasant one, built by Mr. Langley in 1900, and situated on Hope street. Mr. Langley is a man capable, enterprising and progressive in business, public-spirited in his earnest efforts to promote Newport's welfare, cordial and affable in manner, a thorough gentleman, whose circle of friends is a large one and ever increasing.

The Barker family, to which Mrs. Langley belongs, is another that dates back to the early days of Rhode Island, record of which appears elsewhere in this work. Her grandfather, Arnold Barker, was a native of Middletown, R. I. As a youth he made fishing his occupation, but later took up farming and milling, putting up a gristmill on his place. In political faith a Whig, he took an active part in town affairs, while in church matters he was likewise a leader, being for many years a deacon in the First Baptist Church. His belief was exemplified in his acts, and he manifested a conscientious Christian character throughout life. Twice married, his first wife was Nancy Barker, of Middletown, their union occurring Aug. 2, 1802. Their only daughter, Harriet, born Oct. 27, 1803, died May 1, 1818, five years after her mother, whose death took place May 21, 1813. For his second wife Mr. Barker married May 15, 1814, Mary Dunbar, of Middletown, and children were born to them as follows: Esther Ann, March 2, 1816, Mrs. Abram Tilley, of Newport; Mary D., Nov. 6, 1817, Mrs. William Smith, of Middletown; Harriet, Dec. 17, 1818, Mrs. Benjamin Almy, of Middletown; Eunice, May 16, 1820, Mrs. William Brown, of Middletown; Celinda, March 24, 1823, who became the second wife of Abram Tilley; and Nathan.

Nathan Barker was born in Middletown Oct. 23, 1825. Until he was sixteen he attended the district schools in his native town, and then went to Providence for a couple of years, where he was a carpenter's apprentice. Returning to Newport he worked at his trade as a journeyman up to 1855, and then engaged in business for himself as a builder and contractor. He remained at this calling up to the very time of his death, and was very successful. Besides many of the handsome homes and other buildings which form his monument in Newport, the famous Newport Casino attests his skill as a builder. He won a high position among Newport's citizens, not only as a business man, but also as a servant of the people, for he acted as a member of the school committee several years and then was sent to the city council, as a Republican representative. He was chosen president of that body and devoted his best efforts to the welfare of the city. He was also long a member of the Newport Business Men's Association, and was still active in every good cause when struck down by death, Sept. 21, 1895, in his seventieth year.

Mrs. Barker was Miss Sarah E. Tift, and they were married Dec. 28, 1865. Her parents were Henry O. and Elizabeth (Moore) Tift. She lived eleven years after her husband's demise, passing away April 16, 1906, at the age of seventy-eight. Two daughters were born to her and her husband: Marielze, Mrs. Langley; and Grace, who married Alexander MacIver, of Newport, an insurance man, and who has one son, Alistair Ion MacIver.

ROGER MOWRY. The earliest record of Roger Mowry, the progenitor of the Mowry family in this country, is found in the Boston records, as follows:

"Eighteen May, 1631, names of such as desire to be made freemen, [among them] Roger Mawry, Roger Williams." Neither of these two Rogers remained in Boston to accept the duties and privileges of "freemen" in that colony. But soon after, we find them both citizens of Plymouth; later both became citizens of Salem, and finally they lived side by side in Providence. Roger Mowry was in Salem from 1636 to 1649. He and his wife Mary (Johnson) were members of the church at Salem. The Suffolk records (Vol. III, p. 374) show that his wife was "the eldest daughter of John Johnson, late of Roxbury." In 1637 "he had fifty acres laid out" to him two miles or more from the settlement at Salem toward what was afterward known as Salem Village. He built his house on the lot which is now the corner of Essex and Flint streets, adjoining the Bowditch school. Indeed, this house lot ran from what is now Essex street northward to the river and included the land upon which now stand the Bowditch school and the Catholic church.

The records of the church in Salem show that his eldest son, Jonathan, was baptized April 2, 1637, and other children as follows: Bethia, 1638, June 17; Mary, 1640, June 16; Elizabeth, 1643, Jan. 20; Benjamin, 1649, May 20. Between Elizabeth and Benjamin were four other children: Nathaniel, born in 1644; John, born about 1645; Mehitable, born about 1646, and Joseph, born in 1647, but no record is found of their baptism. In August, 1658, in open Town Meeting, at Providence, Roger Mowry testified that his three youngest children, Benjamin, Thomas and Hannah, were born in Providence. It is supposed that the Salem pastor, when on a visit in 1649 to the members of his church then residing in Providence, found the infant Benjamin, baptized him there and entered the record upon the Salem Church book on his return home. The original records of that period of the Salem Church have been lost, although some of them were copied and kept in a later book which has been preserved. The above facts are gleaned from that book.

Roger Mowry was admitted a freeman in Providence in 1655. About 1653 he built a house, a portion of which is now standing, newer parts having been built to it from time to time during these intervening centuries. This house is on Abbott street, near North Main street, not far from the North burial ground. It has been known for many years as the oldest house in the city, and has been called the Olney House. For a number of years Roger Mowry kept a "tavern" in the town of Providence. He died in 1666.

The descendants of Roger Mowry are scattered in large numbers all over the country. Two of his sons, Nathaniel and John, were among the early settlers of northern Rhode Island, and at one time they were half owners with three other partners, Edward Inman, Thomas Wallin and John Steere, of 3,500 acres of land, running from the Blackstone river near Pawtucket westward to the Connecticut line and including the vicinity of what is now the city of Woonsocket. Of the descendants of Nathaniel and John, very many are still inhabitants of northern Rhode Island and southeastern Massachusetts. But their descendants are also found today in the British Provinces, all of the New England States, New York and Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, California and doubtless other States.

MINER. The branch of the Miner family represented in the towns of Lincoln and the city of Pawtucket, while not an old one in Rhode Island, is nevertheless one of long standing in New England. The forerunner of the family in this State was Lucius Miner, a native of Vermont, who settled in what is now the town of Lincoln and became one of the leading and substantial farmers of the town.

Simeon Miner, father of Lucius, was a son of Isaac Miner, was born May 12, 1791, and was a farmer by occupation, residing for a time at West Burke, Vt. He removed from there to Barnston, Canada, still later to Libbytown, Canada, and there died, Dec. 19, 1865.

Simeon Miner married Mary (or Polly) Orcutt, of Sutton, Vt., who was born July 6, 1798, and died Oct. 16, 1866, daughter of Ephraim and Christiana (Willey) Orcutt. Samuel Orcutt, father of Ephraim, was a native of Wales, by occupation a blacksmith, and he became one of the pioneers at Sutton, Vt., where he was the first town clerk, but his later employment was in the arsenal at Boston; he was a soldier in the Revolution, enlisting at Windham, Conn., in August, 1777, and becoming a fifer in Capt. Wales's company, commanded by Col. Jonathan Latimer, and was in the detachment sent to re-enforce Gen. Gates at Saratoga. John Willey, father of Christiana (Willey) Orcutt, was also a Revolutionary soldier, and from "A Muster Roll of the men raised to Recruit the Three N. H. Regiments in the Continental Army till the last day of Dec., 1780," it appears that John Willey enlisted as a private from Northwood, July 11, 1780; age 19; was mustered at Kingston by Josiah Bartlett; and was discharged Dec. 4, 1780. The children of Simeon and Polly Miner were thirteen in number, of whom the eldest son and second child was Lucius, born Feb. 24, 1820.

LUCIUS MINER was born Feb. 24, 1820, in West-Burke, Vt., and was quite small when his parents removed from that place to Barnston, Canada. He grew to manhood in the latter town, was reared to farm work and received his education in the district school. He resided at home until the age of twenty-one, when he came to Rhode Island and was employed at farm work on a place on the Cobble Hill road in what is now Lincoln. Later he was employed by Whipple Randall, and while thus engaged met the lady who afterward became his wife. After their marriage they lived in Providence, where Mr. Miner was employed in the log wood mill of Snow & Lewis, makers of dye stuffs. Later he removed to the Edward Randall farm in North Providence, where he resided for a number of years; he then purchased the Whipple Randall farm, now owned and occupied by W. E. Nichols, in Lincoln, and there he passed the rest of his life. He died May 11, 1877, and was buried in the North Burying Ground.

Mr. Miner was quite an extensive farmer, at one time owning in the family and operating two other farms besides the one on which he resided, the others being the Jonathan Randall and the Edward Randall farms. He for many years conducted a large retail milk route in Providence, and after his death it was continued by the heirs until after the death of Mrs. Miner, when it was disposed of. This route was conducted by the family for forty years. Mr. Miner also bought and sold considerable live stock, and with his various interests he became very well-to-do. He was a hard working man, and he deserved his prosperity. He had many admirable traits of character, and was much liked and esteemed by his circle of acquaintances. In politics he was a Republican, and while he never cared for public office in any way, he did at one time serve on the town school committee and as highway surveyor.

Mr. Miner married Julia Albina Randall, born Feb. 12, 1818, in North Providence, R. I., daughter of Jonathan and Nancy Brayton (Smith) Randall. Mrs. Miner died April 11, 1893, the mother of five children: Annie W., born March 31, 1848, who died July 12, 1894, in Providence, unmarried; Mary R., born Oct. 10, 1849, who died Jan. 24, 1872; Lewis A., born Sept. 18, 1851; Amey Estance, born May 28, 1855, and died Dec. 27, 1907, who resided at Pawtucket, and was a member of Pawtucket Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, made eligible through John Willey before mentioned, and Samuel Orcutt; and Ida Orlena, born Dec. 13, 1859, who married Oliver H. J. Perry, Jr., of Lincoln, and has one son, Harold Thurber, born May 16, 1888.

LEWIS A. MINER, only son of Lucius Miner, and a well known farmer of Lincoln, was born on the Edward Randall farm in North Providence, and received his education in the district school and at the Friends' school at Providence. After his marriage he settled on his present farm, formerly the William Elliott place, where he has erected a new house and remodeled the other buildings. He has successfully followed the milk business in addition to general farming.

On Oct. 14, 1874, Lewis A. Miner was married in Watertown, N. Y., to Emma D. Smith, daughter of Truman and Amy F. (Fuller) Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Miner are the parents of four children: (1) Mary Alice, born March 6, 1877, was married July 16, 1896, to Lester Ross Burton, and they reside in Providence. They have two children; Harry Milton, born Nov. 2, 1897; and Edna Burton, June 16, 1904. (2) Amy Edna, May 13, 1880, was married Oct. 26, 1904, to Walter H. E. Royce, a constructing engineer. They have one child, Dorothy Miner, born Jan. 24, 1906. (3) Julia Lavinia, Feb. 10, 1882, was married Jan. 24, 1903, to Harry Thompson Burton, of Providence, by whom she has one child, Deborah, born Dec. 18, 1904. (4) Lewis Smith, born April 5, 1886, graduated from Bryant & Stratton's Business College, and is a resident of Providence.

THOMAS TILLINGHAST AND EDWARD BARBER. (I) Moses Barber (born in 1652, died 1732) was probably the son of James Barber, of Newport, R. I. In 1693 he purchased 330 acres of the "Pettesquamscut Purchase," within the limits of the present town of South Kingstown, R. I. A pond near the site of his house still bears the name of Barber's Pond. The name of his first wife and the date of their marriage have not been found. He married March 24, 1692, for his second wife, Susannah Wait, daughter of Samuel and Hannah Wait, who survived him.

(II) Joseph Barber, born Oct. 13, 1701, died in 1779. He married Feb. 4, 1724, Rebecca Potter. Children: Nathaniel and Susannah. In his will, dated April 14, 1779, mention is made of son, Nathaniel, grandsons Lillibridge Barber and Joseph Rathbun, and granddaughters Abigail Wilbur and Rebecca Wilcox.

(III) Susannah Barber, daughter of Joseph, according to tradition died about 1765, but we have no date of her birth or death. She was married, May 3, 1757, to Jonathan Rathbun. Her children were as follows: Lillibridge Barber, born May 10, 1755, died Feb. 16, 1844; Jonathan Rathbun and Joseph Rathbun, born about 1763. It is uncertain which was the older, Jonathan or Joseph. Joseph Barber, their grandfather, gave his grandson, Joseph Rathbun, a legacy which he was to receive when he arrived at the age of twenty-one years. He received this legacy Jan. 28, 1784.

(IV) Lillibridge Barber (Susannah, Joseph, Moses), born May 10, 1755, died Feb. 16, 1844, was the son of Susannah Barber and Edward Lillibridge. He married Dec. 30, 1773, Alice Wilcox, daughter of Abram and Lydia (Harrington) Wilcox, born June 10, 1755, died Jan. 13, 1828. Both were born in Exeter, R. I., and that town remained his home, although he owned several farms in other towns of Rhode Island and Connecticut. Farming was his occupation. He possessed shrewdness and executive ability, and was eccentric in his manner. He served as a justice of the peace. Children: (1) Wilcox, born March 2, 1775, died Sept. 25, 1840. He married June 1, 1797, Patience Tefft, born Aug. 13, 1777, died Nov. 12, 1844. (2) Joseph, born Jan. 29, 1776, died in September, 1776. (3) Alice, born Aug. 28, 1777, died May 15, 1862. She married Feb. 7, 1799, Thomas Tillinghast, born Aug. 22, 1778, died Nov. 22, 1856. (4) Edward.

(V) Edward Barber, son of Lillibridge, was born in the town of Exeter, R. I., July 17, 1779, and passed his boyhood on his father's farm, which was located on both sides of the Ten Rod road, and adjacent to the Four Corners Baptist Church. He here brought his young wife to his father's house for a year or two, and then commenced house-keeping in Voluntown, Conn., not far from the Swamp meeting-house, on a farm recently owned by Smith Gallup. Four years later he moved to the Ellery farm, in Hopkinton, R. I., which contained about 900 acres, a tract of land stretching from Skunk Hill on the west to Wood river on the east, a portion of which he afterward purchased. In 1830 he moved to an adjoining farm of smaller dimensions, where he lived the remainder of his days. Aside from being a good farmer, he could always use the tools of cooper and carpenter with skill. By combining these various industries, he always found something to do, whether the weather was fair or foul. He was not a large man, perhaps not over five feet, seven inches in height, but was erect and well-proportioned. Genial and kind, he formed many lasting friendships. He was active in town affairs, served seventeen years in the State Legislature, and was a delegate to the convention that framed the Constitution adopted in 1843. He was colonel of the militia during the war of 1812, and although not engaged in active warfare his department was repeatedly called out to repel expected coast invasions. An attack of pneumonia finally terminated in consumption, of which he died three or four years later, Oct. 30, 1847. At that time his eleven children who reached maturity were married and living in Rhode Island, and were all present at his funeral.

In Phebe Tillinghast, whom he married Nov. 27, 1800, Mr. Barber found a worthy helpmate—one who looked well to the ways of her household, although the combined duties of a large farm and a large family were of no trivial importance. She was born April 23, 1780, and died Dec. 10, 1867. She was a woman of robust health and great decision of character, whose eye was eye, and whose nay was nay, and thus understood and respected by all with whom she came in contact. Her opinion could be had for the asking, and she was never in any emergency found "on the fence." Firm religious principles, combined with the above, made her life one of consistent Christianity. She was a sweet singer, and to the last of her life her voice, still rich and melodious, was frequently heard in song. Mr. and Mrs. Barber early trained their children to habits of thrift and industry, and gave them such educational advantages as could be obtained in the district schools of that time. In an upper room devoted to the purpose the daughters spun and wove the cloth for family use—woolen, linen and towcloth fabrics, and coverlets of intricate designs. All were skilled in the use of the needle. The sons on leaving home could each in turn engage themselves as journeymen carpenters, without other apprenticeship than their home training. These five sons and six daughters who lived to maturity were without exception worthy descendants of worthy parents. The children of Edward and Phebe (Tillinghast) Barber were born as follows: Joseph Tillinghast, Jan. 5, 1802; Mary Himes, March 19, 1804; Susan, Jan. 17, 1806; Alice, Nov. 26, 1807; Anna James, Oct. 25, 1809; Rebecca, Sept. 21, 1811; Thomas Tillinghast, July 20, 1813; Lillibridge, Aug. 31, 1815; Edward, Aug. 3, 1817; Happy Sally, Oct. 27, 1819 (died Aug. 25, 1823); Hannah, March 2, 1823; Welcome, July 22, 1825; Phebe Caroline, Sept. 2, 1830 (died Jan. 22, 1837). Of this family all are now deceased except Hannah, widow of Peleg Matteson, of Hope Valley, Rhode Island.

(VI) Joseph T. Barber, born Jan. 5, 1802, in Exeter, R. I., died Aug. 28, 1875, in Humboldt, Humboldt County, Cal. He married Jan. 27, 1825, Nancy James (daughter of Thomas), born July 9, 1808, in Richmond, R. I., who died June 17, 1884, in Grass Valley, Cal. He was an active, energetic man, identified with the interests of the people generally in social, political and religious circles. He built the manufacturing village of Barberville, in the town of Hopkinton, R. I., on a portion of one of the farms formerly owned by his grandfather, Lillibridge Barber. There he resided for many years. In 1851 he went to California. Some two years later the family went to Wisconsin. The father rejoined them, but finding the climate too severe removed to California with his family, and there spent the remainder of his life. Joseph T. and Nancy (James) Barber had two children, both born in Hopkinton, R. I.: George Perry, Jan. 31, 1826, who died July 9, 1850, in Hopkinton, R. I.; and Charles James, Oct. 10, 1827.

(VI) THOMAS TILLINGHAST BARBER, born July 20, 1813, in Hopkinton, R. I., died Dec. 24, 1891, in Hope Valley. He married July 10, 1843, Angeline P. Richmond, born June 16, 1822, in Pawtucket, Mass., who died Jan. 29, 1893, in Hope Valley, R. I. Mr. Barber was originally named Thomas Tillinghast Himes but later in life the Himes was dropped. He remained on the farm with his father until 1835, when he went to Westerly and learned carriage making, and commenced business for himself at Barberville, R. I. From 1839 his occupation and general business were so closely identified with that of his brother Edward that their history runs parallel, as is given in a later paragraph. He was for many years a director of the First National Bank of Hopkinton. Owing to his retiring nature, the community at large failed to receive the full benefit of his ability, although he was induced to serve his town as senator for four years, from 1861 to 1864, inclusive. He was a man of broad views and a deep thinker, with a retentive memory, and he had a faculty of convincing his hearers. He was for many years a valued teacher in the Sabbath-school, having a profound Scriptural knowledge. His views were too broad to be confined to any denominational line, he believing that there was but one church—the Christian Church.

Thomas T. and Angeline P. (Richmond) Barber had two children: Marcia Angeline, born Nov. 1, 1849, in Barberville, Hopkinton, R. I.; and Mary Elizabeth, born Aug. 4, 1857, who died Oct. 13, 1857, in Barberville, Hopkinton, Rhode Island.

(VII) Marcia A. Barber, born Nov. 1, 1849, in Hopkinton, R. I., married Nov. 18, 1869, Joseph S. Aldrich (son of David L.), born July 16, 1849, died Feb. 14, 1874, in Hope Valley, R. I. She now resides at No. 323 Angell street, Providence, R. I. Mr. and Mrs. Aldrich had two children: (1) Susan Angeline, born July 16, 1870, in Hope Valley, R. I., married in Providence, R. I., June 23, 1892, Ralph Collingwood Watrous, born July 19, 1866, in Mystic, Conn. (2) Thomas Edward, born June 21, 1872, died Sept. 6, 1872, in Hope Valley, Rhode Island.

(VI) EDWARD BARBER, born Aug. 3, 1817, in Hopkinton, R. I., married March 14, 1843, Susan Card, born Sept. 25, 1816, in Richmond, R. I., who died Nov. 27, 1898. On reaching his majority Edward Barber went to Providence, seeking work as a journeyman carpenter. On being asked how long he had worked at the business he replied, "Ever since I could lift a hammer or shoulder a jackplane." The answer gained him a position with Dean & Sprague, at the foot of Pine street. After laboring one year there he returned and formed a co-partnership with his brother Thomas, as recorded farther along. He was an expert in the use of the tools of the cabinetmaker, and employed much of his leisure making bookcases, writing desks and foot-stools—about one hundred of the latter, which he gave away to friends. He was the patentee of a sectional burial case made of Portland cement.

Edward Barber was active in local affairs, serving his town for several years as councilman and in other minor offices, and was State Senator from Hopkinton in 1870-71-72. He was president of the Hopkinton Savings Bank, and director in the First National Bank of Hopkinton. He was identified with the interests of the Pine Grove cemetery from the time it began its existence, a period of more than thirty years, and the recent improvements were due largely to his efforts and influence. In 1891 he removed the old stones that marked the graves of Col. Edward and Phebe (Tillinghast) Barber, and placed a fine granite monument instead. Mr. Barber was a member of the First Baptist Church of Hope Valley. He died at Hope Valley Feb. 6, 1905.

Four children were born to Edward and Susan (Card) Barber: Lois Ann, born July 29, 1845, died Sept. 11, 1845, in Hopkinton, R. I.; Edward Perry, born July 23, 1847, died Sept. 10, 1848, in Hopkinton, R. I.; a daughter, born June 8, 1849, died July 26, 1849, in Hopkinton, R. I.; and Susan Elizabeth, born July 16, 1853, died March 22, 1860, in Hopkinton, Rhode Island.

In 1839 a co-partnership was entered into by the brothers Thomas Tillinghast and Edward Barber, under the firm name of T. T. & E. Barber, and their business life commenced at Barberville, R. I. They continued the original business of carriage-making commenced by Thomas, to which was added the making of furniture and coffins. In the year 1845 they bought a tract of land, now known as Centerville, in the town of Hopkinton, R. I., upon which they erected a cotton-mill, five dwelling-houses and a store, selling the same to Barber & Baker. In 1851 financial embarrassment of the firm, caused by becoming involved through endorsement, led Thomas to go to California. He made the journey by way of the Isthmus and spent three years mining in Grass Valley, finally returning to Rhode Island. In 1859 they purchased what was known as the James Gowdy property, in Locustville, now known as Hope Valley. They occupied the same and carried on a general hardware and tin business. Thomas, being of an ingenious turn, assumed the manufacturing part of the business, leaving the buying and selling to Edward. They were prosperous and soon felt the need of more room, which led to the building of the large brick block, in 1864, known as Barber's block, where they continued and enlarged their business until 1870, when, wishing to retire from so active a life, they sold out to Charles D. Chase, and from then found congenial employment in tilling their few acres of land in partnership. [Through the co-operation of the daughter and niece, Mrs. Marcia A. Aldrich, of Providence, R. I., we are enabled to present the excellent likeness of Thomas T. and Edward Barber.]

PELEG CARR CONGDON, in his lifetime one of the most highly respected citizens of East Greenwich, and a thoroughly selfmade man, was born Aug. 29, 1810, in North Kingstown, R. I., son of Gideon and Elizabeth (Reynolds) Congdon. He was a representative of the fifth generation of this branch of the old Congdon family, that for more than 235 years has been identified with the history of Rhode Island. The first Congdon of record in the State is Benjamin, and the line of descent to Peleg Carr Congdon is shown by generations in order.

(I) Benjamin Congdon, born about 1650, is of record in Portsmouth, R. I., in 1671, on September 20th of which year he bought 230 acres of land in Narragansett, Kings Town, but he did not remove thither for some years. He was a freeman in 1677. In 1683 he called himself late of Portsmouth and a planter. He was one of the eighteen purchasers of 7,000 acres of vacant lands in Narragansett in 1710. He married Elizabeth Albro, daughter of John and Dorothy Albro. She died Nov. 15, 1720, and he passed away June 17, 1718. Their children were: William, Benjamin, John, James, Elizabeth and Susannah. Of these William was of South Kingstown; Benjamin and John, of North Kingstown; and James, of Kingstown, Providence and Charlestown. From these have come a worthy race of people, many having remained from generation to generation in the various towns of the State, and those yet here are representative Rhode Islanders.

It is a family tradition that Benjamin Congdon was born in Pembrokeshire, Wales, near St. David's; that he came to this country with his brother John; and that their father's name was John, and that their mother was a daughter of the Earl of Pembroke.

(II) James Congdon, born April 19, 1686, resided in Kingstown, Providence and Charlestown. He was made a freeman in 1720; was a member of the town council 1731, 1732, 1733, 1734, 1747 and 1748; moderator 1745 and 1755; deputy, 1745, 1747, 1748, 1749 and 1750; ratemaker, 1746 and 1748. His death occurred Sept. 27, 1757. He was three times married. By his first wife, Margaret Eldred, daughter of Samuel and Martha (Knowles) Eldred, he had nine children: James, Penelope, Benjamin, Samuel, William, John, Elizabeth, Martha and Margaret. On Nov. 15, 1739, he married second, Dorcas Westcott, daughter of Benjamin and Bethiah (Gardiner) Westcott, and they had three children: Ephraim, Dorcas and Joseph. His third wife, Mary Hoxsie, widow of Joseph Hoxsie and daughter of Robert and Deborah Taylor, bore him one son and two daughters: Robert, Susanna and Phebe.

(III) John Congdon, born May 5, 1734, was married, in 1752, to his first wife, Mary Reynolds. They had nine children, namely: James, born Nov. 28, 1753, died July 7, 1839; Hannah, born March 11, 1755, died Aug. 9, 1837; John, born March 23, 1757, died in February, 1837; Henry, born July 15, 1759; Jonathan, born July 25, 1761, died Feb. 3, 1836; Benjamin, born May 9, 1763; Joseph, born April 18, 1765, died March 19, 1838; Mary, born July 31, 1766; and Elizabeth, born Aug. 17, 1768. To the marriage of John Congdon and his second wife, Naomi Tew, were born two sons, William, born Feb. 1, 1773; and Oliver. On March 8, 1778, Mr. Congdon married (third), at Jamestown, R. I., Abigail Carr, and four children were born to them: Abigail, born in December, 1778; Carey, born Nov. 5, 1780; Gideon, born Feb. 12, 1782, died May 8, 1862; and Peleg, born Nov. 10, 1785, died March 21, 1854.

(IV) Gideon Congdon, born Feb. 12, 1782, in Exeter, R. I., married Elizabeth Reynolds. He resided in the town of North Kingstown, was a farmer by occupation, and for a number of years was superintendent of a large farm for the Ives family. His son, Peleg Carr, and his grandson, William P. Congdon, in turn, occupied similar positions for the same family on Potowomut Neck. For more than 100 years this Congdon family performed a similar service on Potowomut Neck for the Ives family.

(V) Peleg Carr Congdon married Harriet Dyer, who was born April 7, 1814, daughter of Amassa and Lydia A. (Essex) Dyer, and a descendant of the old Dyer family of Rhode Island. After his marriage Mr. Congdon located in North Kingstown for a few years, and then removed to the town of Warwick, where he subsequently made his residence. Mr. Congdon was a conscientious, painstaking man, whose loyalty to his employers' interests was unmistakable. He was not a public man or politician, his interest in political matters being simply that of a law abiding citizen, who supported competent men as candidates. In sentiment he was in sympathy with the Democratic party. He attended the Friends Church. Mr. Congdon died suddenly April 14, 1883, surviving his wife, who died Jan. 1, 1881. They are both buried in Glenwood cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Congdon had children as follows: (1) Ray Dyer, born Nov. 19, 1838, went to sea when but sixteen years old, and always followed that occupation. He sailed a number of years as captain of ocean-going vessels, and visited in all parts of the world. His death occurred in 1896, at Cairo, Egypt. He married Marion Mayfield, of London, England, and left two daughters, Caroline May and Harriet Mabel. (2) George Warren, born Aug. 11, 1840, married Mary Smart, and resides near Petersburg, Va. (3) William Prior was born Oct. 27, 1842. (4) Charles Jackson, born Feb. 4, 1845, followed the sea for some years, and now resides in South Africa. (5) Thomas Bailey, born Dec. 2, 1847, followed the sea and on March 31, 1873, while chief officer of the vessel "Isle of Wight," which was then at Rangoon, India, he was stabbed in the back by the steward on board the ship, and died in the hospital April 3, 1873. His remains were interred in the Church of England cemetery at Rangoon. He was unmarried. (6) Caroline Frances, born Jan. 23, 1850, married Nathaniel Spink, and resides in Providence.

(VI) WILLIAM PRIOR CONGDON, son of Peleg Carr Congdon, was born in North Kingstown Oct.

27, 1842. At an early period his family moved to Warwick, where he remained until he was seventeen, at which age he went to sea, and spent a few years as a sailor. On giving up that profession he settled in San Francisco, Cal., where he remained for seven years, returning to Rhode Island in 1870. On June 30, 1870, he was married to Waity E. Spink, who was born Jan. 19, 1848, in North Kingstown, and was the daughter of Silas and Sarah (Rathbun) Spink, of North Kingstown. After his marriage Mr. Congdon became a farmer on Potowomut Neck, where he lived until his death. Like his father and grandfather he was superintendent of the Ives farm for a number of years.

Mr. Congdon was never active in political or public affairs, his attention being given entirely to the business he followed, that of a thoroughly up-to-date farmer. He was a 32d degree Mason, belonging to King Solomon Lodge, No. 11, and to several other Masonic bodies. He died Feb. 10, 1898, and was buried in the Glenwood cemetery at East Greenwich. As a business man he was methodical, industrious and sober, and he was held in high esteem by his neighbors.

Mr. Congdon is survived by his widow, Mrs. Waity E. Congdon, who shortly after his death moved into East Greenwich, where she still resides. She is regarded with respect and affection by her many acquaintances. Mr. and Mrs. Congdon had one daughter, Lottie, born Sept. 23, 1871, who attended the local schools and later the Moses Brown School in Providence, and is now Mrs. Christopher Craske, of New York, where her husband is a manufacturer.

NEWELL (Central Falls family). For several generations, since along about the middle of the seventeenth century or a little earlier, there have resided in the towns of Smithfield and Cumberland and the subdivisions coming out of them a branch of the old Roxbury, Massachusetts, family of Newells, the immigrant ancestor of which was Abraham Newell. This article is to treat, though but briefly, of this Rhode Island branch of the family. Reference is especially made to the family of the late Hon. William Newell, of Smithfield and Central Falls, himself long a prominent and successful business man; brass foundryman, legislator, gas company president, etc., and his several sons—Hon. Oscar A., Frank A. and Fred E.—all men of substance and achievement, the first mentioned having several times represented his community in the State Assembly and for years been one of the leading business men of Central Falls, for years treasurer and general manager of the Rhode Island Hosiery Company, the business of which he founded.

There follows in chronological order, beginning with the immigrant settler, something of the history and genealogy of these Rhode Island Newells.

(I) Abraham Newell, aged fifty years, with his wife Frances, aged forty, and their children, Ruth, aged fourteen, Grace, thirteen, Abraham, eight, John, five, and Isaac, two, came to New England in the ship "Francis," of Ipswich, England, in 1634, settling at Roxbury, Mass. Mr. Newell was made a freeman in March, 1634-35. Both he and his wife lived to advanced life, he dying June 30, 1673, at ninety-one, and she in November, 1682, aged nearly one hundred years.

(II) Jacob Newell, son of Abraham, whom some have coming to New England with his parents and the children named, resided at Roxbury. Among his children was a son Jacob.

(III) Jacob Newell (2), son of Jacob of Roxbury, also resided there. One of his children was Elisha.

(IV) Elisha Newell, son of Jacob Newell (2), born March 21, 1713, at Roxbury, Mass., married (first) Susanna, daughter of Obadiah Ballou. Two children were born to them, and after the mother's death Mr. Newell married (second) Dec. 25, 1748, Mrs. Bathsheba Keith, widow of Michael and daughter of James Ballou. She was born Nov. 26, 1717, in what was then Wrentham, Mass., but later Cumberland, R. I. Mr. and Mrs. Newell resided on a farm which was partly in Bellingham, Mass., and Cumberland, R. I. They were of good standing in their community. Mr. Newell died April 14, 1762. Mr. Newell's children born to Susanna were: Aaron, Aug. 19, 1740; and David, Jan. 20, 1742. Those born to Bathsheba were: Martha, Aug. 6, 1749; Elisha, May 14, 1751; Bathsheba, Dec. 22, 1753; Jason, Jan. 22, 1757; and Patience, Jan. 19, 1759.

(V) Judge Jason Newell, born Jan. 22, 1757, in Cumberland, R. I., married Sarah Whipple, and their children, the eldest two born in Smithfield, R. I., the next in North Providence and the others in Cumberland, were: Jabez, born April 10, 1772; Mary, Nov. 25, 1773; William, Dec. 14, 1775; Sarah, Dec. 21, 1777; Amey, April 7, 1780; Jesse, Aug. 15, 1782; Jason, Sept. 24, 1784; John, April 2, 1788; Spaulding, Dec. 21, 1790; and Nathaniel, Sept. 21, 1795. Judge Newell purchased a farm in the eastern part of Cumberland, R. I., in April, 1776, and this farm is still in the possession of the Newell family.

(VI) Nathaniel Newell, born Sept. 21, 1795, in Cumberland, R. I., married Ruth Howard, and their children were: Spalding, born Jan. 28, 1818; William, June 12, 1820; Allen Halsey, Aug. 30, 1822; Alma Anna, March 13, 1829; and Mary Arnold, Jan. 9, 1833. He lived on this farm all his life of ninety years.

(VII) William Newell, son of Nathaniel and Ruth (Howard) Newell, born June 12, 1820, on the farm, on the banks of Abbott's run, just north of Arnold's mill, in the town of Cumberland, R. I., married July 21, 1844, Emeline Fuller, of North Attleboro, Mass., whose grandfather Perry was a patriot of the Revolution.

Mr. Newell was born and reared on the farm where his father and grandfather before him had lived. He acquired his education in the public schools of his native town and at the Attleboro Academy. After working for three years on his father's farm in season and teaching school through the winters, and in the meantime concluding finally to engage in the manufacturing business, he, in 1845, erected a small building on his father's farm in Cumberland for that purpose, and here with a helper began the work of brass molding. In this venture he was successful to the extent that he felt warranted after a trial of two years in establishing himself at a more advantageous point and in larger quarters. This he did by building a foundry at a point in the town of Smithfield which is now Central Falls, and several years later purchased the residence opposite same. Here he carried on his business alone until 1866, in which year his son Oscar A. Newell joined him in the enterprise. Another son, Fred E. Newell, succeeded his brother Oscar in the business in 1879, and on the father's retirement in 1886 succeeded him. From this year on until the time of his death the elder Newell devoted his time to the care and management of his real estate and other interests.

In his earlier years, in the days long prior to the Civil war, when the slavery question was one of anxiety and thought, Mr. Newell espoused the cause of the anti-slavery party. He was active in this and was elected a delegate to the National convention of the Free Soil party which nominated John P. Hale, and he was one of four men in Central Falls to cast a vote for that candidate in 1852; on the formation of the Republican party in 1856 he espoused its principles and ever after acted with it. In 1858 he represented the town of Smithfield in the General Assembly, and was re-elected each year thereafter until 1863; and in 1877 he was again elected to that body, this time from the town of Lincoln. Mr. Newell was among the first to join the Volunteer Pacific Engine (fire) Company and served as its foreman. From 1852 until 1895, when he resigned from the position, he was a director of the People's Bank and its successor, the First National Bank. He was for years president of the Pawtucket Gas Company.

Mr. Newell was a man of strict integrity, one who would never knowingly enter into any arrangement or scheme that he thought would in any way reflect on him or injure any one in the least. He was most careful and conscientious on this point. He was a strong temperance man, himself always a total abstainer. He was somewhat stern in outward appearance, but to those who knew him best he had an affectionate disposition. He was most kind in his family. He was generous and a liberal contributor to all good causes.

The children born to William and Emeline (Fuller) Newell were: Oscar A., born May 1, 1845; Charles, born Oct. 23, 1847, who died in infancy; Frank A., born Oct. 7, 1850; Fred E., born Dec. 21, 1852; and George H., born Feb. 27, 1855, who died at the age of seventeen years. Mr. Newell died at his home in Central Falls, April 12, 1896, survived by his widow and three sons. Mrs. Newell died Jan. 16, 1907, aged eighty-three years.

(VIII) OSCAR ALONZO NEWELL, eldest son of William and Emeline (Fuller) Newell, was born May 1, 1845, in Cumberland, on the same farm which has been in the possession of the family for so many years, and in the public schools of his native place acquired his elementary education, which was furthered in the business college of Bryant & Stratton at Providence, R. I. From this institution he was graduated in 1865. In the year following he became a business associate and partner of his father in his brass foundry. Owing to declining health in 1879 he withdrew from the business, which seemingly did not agree with him, and engaged in the jewelry manufacturing business with Messrs. Daggett & Coombs, at Providence, the firm a year later becoming Daggett & Newell, when in 1880 Mr. Newell succeeded to the interest of Mr. Coombs. In 1882 Mr. Newell withdrew from the firm, and later became engaged in the manufacture of hosiery, establishing that business at Central Falls. This business in 1891 became incorporated, taking the name of the Rhode Island Hosiery Company, the plant being located at Central Falls. The business was continued until 1898, Mr. Newell acting as treasurer and general manager from the time of its incorporation.

Like his father before him Mr. Newell has a taste for politics, and has been active and influential in party affairs. He is a stanch Republican, and regardless of party has been often elected to various offices and trusts by his fellow-citizens. For four consecutive years until he declined a renomination he represented the town of Lincoln in the State Assembly, serving for two years as chairman of a special committee appointed by the Lower House to investigate the fisheries of the State. Later he served four terms as a representative from Central Falls, again refusing a renomination. Mr. Newell, during the last year of the first term of his service in the House, was one of the few Republicans, and the only one who secured the chairmanship of a joint committee of the House and Senate—that on Accounts and Claims. He was acting chairman of the committee on Education that same year. Mr. Newell was for six years a member of the Board of Fire Wardens in Central Falls, and he was for three years a member of the school committee. During all of the last term of his service in the General Assembly he was chairman of the committee on State Charities and Corrections and was a member of the committee on Education. He has been a candidate for office seventeen times, and has never been defeated. Mr. Newell at the age of seventeen years became a member of Pacific Engine Company, and continued an active member of the same as long as it continued a volunteer department, and is now a member of the Veteran Firemen's Association.

Mr. Newell was a director of the Rhode Island Electrical Works, of Pawtucket, director and treasurer of the Plymouth Mining Company (which he personally supervised in Missouri for six years), and was one of the incorporators of the Pawtucket Spinning Ring Company. He was also half owner of the Pawtucket Braided Line Company, which he established in partnership with his brother-in-law, Alphonso G. Hazard. He has been a member of Washington Lodge, No. 4, Knights of Pythias, since 1874. In June, 1906, Mr. Newell severed his connection with the last of his business enterprises and has retired from active business.

On Sept. 26, 1868, Mr. Newell was married to Sarah A. Hall, of Providence, daughter of Stephen H. Hall. She died in August, 1885, and he married (second) in April, 1889, Ella V. Hazard, of Central Falls, daughter of Potter G. and Lydia A. (Hill) Hazard. Two children were born to the first marriage, namely: Edwin H., born in January, 1872, who is employed by the E. Jenckes Manufacturing Company, of Pawtucket, being located at Philadelphia; and William G., born in January, 1878, who is engaged in the mining business.

(VIII) FRANK ALLEN NEWELL, third son of Hon. William and Emeline (Fuller) Newell, was born at the family homestead on High street, Central Falls, in the town of Smithfield, R. I., Oct. 7, 1850. On May 8, 1881, he was united in marriage to Miss Anna Eliza Matteson, daughter of David and Eliza (Taylor) Matteson, of Pawtucket. They have had no children.

(VIII) FRED EUGENE NEWELL, the fourth son of the Hon. William and Emeline (Fuller) Newell, was born in Smithfield, now Central Falls, R. I., Dec. 21, 1852. He attended the public schools of his native town, was a pupil at the East Greenwich (R. I.) Academy, where he pursued the English course, and finally took a course in the Bryant & Stratton Business College at Providence, R. I. After working for his father until early in 1879 he decided to try the West, and went out to Leadville, Colo., where he remained about a year, engaged in gold mining. Upon his return to the East, late in 1879, he became a partner in his father's business, under the firm name of William Newell & Co. They molded anything in brass, making a specialty of the manufacture of chandeliers, gas fittings, and plumbers' supplies. On the retirement of his father, in 1886, Mr. Newell became sole owner of the establishment, which he has since successfully conducted, employing ordinarily between fifteen and twenty men, and he has enlarged the business considerably, adding a machine shop and a general molding and finishing department, devoting special attention to the manufacture of gas fittings.

Mr. Newell takes interest in many things outside of his business, is active in fraternal and public affairs, and is well known in social and political organizations throughout this section. He was for a number of years a member of the volunteer fire department, belonging to the Pacific Engine Company, and upon its dissolution was the first man to join the paid department; he has been connected with the department for over thirty years, and is a prominent member of the Central Falls Veteran Firemen's Association, of which he is president. He is a member of Oriental Lodge, No. 9, K. of P., and for years was captain of the Uniform Rank; was a member of Ironside Council, O. U. A. M., which is now disbanded, and served as councillor of same; is a member and past sachem of Pochasset Lodge, I. O. R. M., of Central Falls; belonged to the Ancient Essenic Order, now disbanded; and holds membership in several Masonic bodies—Barney Merry Lodge, No. 29, A. F. & A. M.; Pawtucket Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M.; Pawtucket Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; Holy Sepulchre Commandery, No. 8, K. T.; and Palestine Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Providence. He took particular interest and did conspicuous work in the Order of United American Mechanics, as he is thoroughly American and very patriotic. He was elected chief marshal of the order, and has managed the parades in the State with great success.

Mr. Newell was for several years a member of the State Militia; was for four years in the Pawtucket Light Guard; belonged one year to the Union Guards; was for six years in the United Train of Artillery of Providence, in which he became sergeant; and while in school was a member of the East Greenwich Seminary Guards. He was colonel of the Central Falls Blaine and Logan Guards in 1884 and was colonel of the Harrison and Morton Guards in 1888, during the latter campaign having command of seven companies, with a total of 353 men. It is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Newell is a staunch Republican. He takes an active interest in public affairs, served his native town as a member of the school board for one term, and in 1904 was elected to the General Assembly, in which he is still serving, having been honored with reelection in 1905. He is chairman of the State Properties committee. His influence is always exerted in the interest of the public welfare, and he is a reliable as well as a popular member of the State Legislature.

On Nov. 7, 1880, Mr. Newell was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude Mary Hibbard, daughter of Wallace W. Hibbard. She was born in Windham, Conn., but became a resident of Central Falls. To Mr. and Mrs. Newell have been born eight children, of whom the eldest Edith May, married Arthur C. Smith, of Berkeley, R. I., and has one child, Norman Smith. George W., Harry and Frank O. died in infancy. Charles Eugene (now aged twenty-one years), Grace Easton, Ruth and Lena Irene are at home with their parents.

CALDER. The name of Calder has long been known in Rhode Island, and its record is traced back to

(I) Alexander Calder, born in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1660. He died there in 1715. In 1682 he married Barbara Shane, daughter of the Laird of Shane, and about 1683 he succeeded to the family estate of Asswantie. Their children were: Alexander, born in 1683; William, 1690; and Robert, 1692.

(II) William Calder, son of Alexander, born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1690, died in 1768, and is supposed to have been lost at sea. He came to Boston prior to 1732, where he became a brewer. In 1749 he married Elizabeth Brooks, born at Boston in 1729. In 1760 or 1761 he went to Scotland, and on the return to America was lost at sea. His children were: George Shane, born in October, 1750; William, November, 1753; James, February, 1755; Elizabeth, September, 1756, and Mary, March, 1759.

(III) James Calder, son of William, appears with the rank of private on the Lexington Alarm Roll, of Captain Lieutenant Hopedill Hall's Company, the 2nd Dorchester, which marched on the alarm of April 19, 1775, from Dorchester, served three days (Vol. 12, p. 145); appears with rank of private on muster roll of Capt. John Baker's Co., Col. Samuel Garnish's regiment, dated Aug. 1, 1775, enlisted May 11, 1775, time of service two months, twenty-one days, belonging to the town of Milton, eight months' service (Vol. 14, p. 16); appears with the rank of private on Pay Abstract of Capt. John Baker, Jr., 10th Co., Lt.-Col. Loami Baldwin's Regiment, for service during the month of August, 1775 (Vol. 58, file 13, p. 3); and also appears with the rank of private on a Pay Abstract of Capt. Joseph Pettingill's 10th Co., Col. Baldwin's 38th Reg., for service in September, 1775 (Vol. 58, file 14, p. 10, Archives of Massachusetts). He was born at Boston, Mass., and was a paper-maker by occupation, dying at Providence, R. I., Nov. 22, 1843. He was married Aug. 13, 1778, to Agnes Boies, born March 7, 1759, daughter of John and Mehitable (Sheafe) Boies, of Boston, Mass.; she died at Providence, March 13, 1840. He served his time in the Milton Paper works, and in 1780 came to Providence to superintend the building of a paper mill at the place now occupied by Philip Allen's Machinery mill. He made the molds and the first sheet of paper made in Rhode Island. In 1811 he went to New Bedford, and engaged in business with a Mr. Wing and a Mr. Taber, and in 1813 retired from that business, the following year returning to Providence. From 1815 to 1819 he resided in Olneyville, being part of the time a miller and the rest of the time engaged in a grocery business. His children were: Sally, born Feb. 16, 1770; Nancy, July 25, 1780; James Boies, Jan. 25, 1783; Mehitable, Jan. 9, 1785; Fanny, Sept. 9, 1786; John, Jan. 23, 1790; William, July 18, 1792; and Charlotte, Jan. 10, 1795.

(IV) William Calder, son of James, was born in Providence, R. I., July 18, 1792, and died there Dec. 5, 1856. He was married Sept. 23, 1818, to Eliza Treadwell Spencer, daughter of Lawton Spencer and Martha Niles. Mrs. Calder was born at East Greenwich, July 24, 1795, and died Dec. 12, 1872. William Calder was educated in Providence, and learned the trade of pewterer with Samuel Hamlin, of that city. He then went to Philadelphia for a year, and on returning to Providence went into business for himself in a building which stood on the present site of St. John's parish house, on North Main street. He later removed to where the Wayland building now stands, also on North Main street. In 1825 he purchased a house on the same street, having his store on the first floor, he making his home on the floor above, and here he continued to reside until his death in 1856. He was one of the founders of the First Universalist Church of Providence. He was a great reader, well-informed, and in a quiet way was quite a convincing arguer. He was captain of a local fire company.

William Calder and his wife were the parents of the following children: William Henry, born June 18, 1819; Edwin Algernon, born Dec. 1, 1820, died Dec. 12, 1824; Joseph Niles, born Sept. 14, 1822, died July 2, 1855; Andrew Anderson, born Dec. 24, 1823; Albert Lawton, born Sept. 6, 1825; Eliza Frances, born Dec. 1, 1827, married J. M. Vose; George Beckford, born April 14, 1830; Anna Sophia, born Oct. 3, 1832; Gideon Spencer, born Jan. 5, 1835; Eleanor S., born Feb. 28, 1837; and Edward Algernon, born July 1, 1839, married Virginia Tobey, and died May 28, 1892.

(V) William Henry Calder, son of William, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., June 18, 1819, and died in December, 1902. He married Dec. 3, 1856, Isabel Frances Staples, daughter of Samuel Staples, of Providence. She was born Oct. 27, 1836, and died May 22, 1897. Mr. Calder was a shoe dealer, and he and his wife had these children: George Beckford, born July 22, 1859; and Mary I., born May 13, 1869, died July 23, 1885.

(V) Andrew Anderson Calder, born Dec. 24, 1823, married Dec. 5, 1860, Emily Morse, born Aug. 5, 1839, daughter of Asa Morse, of Weymouth, Mass. To this union have been born two children: Grace Binney, born Oct. 5, 1861; and Howard Emerson, who died Dec. 29, 1872.

(V) ALBERT LAWTON CALDER, son of William and Eliza (Spencer) Calder, was born Sept. 6, 1825, in Providence, R. I. A member of a large family of children, he was reared in his native place, and was early put to work, acquiring those habits of industry and strict attention to business which characterized him throughout life. After a temporary employment, he entered the old drug store of Joseph Balch, remaining there from 1842 to 1848. He then went to Boston, Mass., and was for about two years engaged with Seth W. Fowle, a wholesale druggist. Leaving Boston, he spent a short time in Lowell, Mass., and in 1850 returned to Providence, where he lived until his death. He engaged in the apothecary business with his brother, George B. Calder, this arrangement continued from February, 1851, until June, 1853. In the latter year the store which stood on Westminster street, where is now Dorrance street, was burned out in a disastrous conflagration. Mr. Calder at once bought the lease of the lot on Westminster street where the new part of the Journal office is now located, erected a building for his business purposes, and continued there until he sold out in 1885, to retire from the apothecary business, in order to give his special attention to the manufacture of Calder's Dentine, a proprietary article which was well and favorably known throughout the country. It is said that when he gave up the retail business he was the last of the merchants on Westminster street who had been there when he started in 1851. There was no store more familiar to the people of Providence, nor any pharmacist held in higher esteem.

Mr. Calder early in life took an active interest in politics and public affairs, though he was no office seeker and had no personal ambitions for distinction. He was a staunch Republican, and was for many years a member of the Republican City Committee. During the war of the Rebellion he was very active in promoting enlistments, in providing for the families of absent soldiers, in the raising and distribution of bounties, and in various ways helping along the cause which he had very much at heart. He was a member of the common council from 1862 to 1870, and was especially interested in educational matters. In the General Assembly he served as representative in 1891-2. He originated and was one of the original members of the State Board of Pharmacy from 1870 to 1885, when he declined a further re-appointment. He had for many years been a trustee of the Rhode Island Hospital; was for some years treasurer of the Providence Franklin Society, and was also a member of the Rhode Island Historical Society, the Rhode Island Pharmaceutical Association and the Providence Board of Trade. He was a member of the Westminster Congregational Society and deeply interested in the Unitarian denomination. He served for two years as president of the Unitarian Club of Providence, and for several years was a member and director of the American Unitarian Association. He was a director of the Industrial Trust Company from its organization in 1887 until his decease, and was for some years the vice-president and a member of the executive committee, until failing health compelled his resignation. In all these associations Mr. Calder rendered valuable service. He was universally respected for his sterling qualities of mind and heart.

Mr. Calder was twice married, his first wife being Martha Ann Howland, a descendant of John Howland, who came to America in the "Mayflower" in 1620. She died Feb. 13, 1887, the mother of these children: A son, born Jan. 14, 1855, who died in infancy; Fanny Howland, deceased; Albert L., born April 20, 1860, deceased; Helen, deceased; Mary Eliza, who married R. A. Robertson; Margaret Putnam, who married John G. Aldrich; Charles Albert, born Aug. 13, 1867; and Augustus W., born Sept. 28, 1869. Mr. Calder married (second) Ellen O'Connor, of Washington, D. C. Mr. Calder's death occurred May 24, 1899.

(VI) Mary Eliza Calder married R. A. Robertson, and to them were born two children: Helen Calder and Nancy Gould (deceased).

(VI) Margaret Putnam Calder, daughter of Albert Lawton Calder, married John Gladding Aldrich, and has three children: John Gladding, Jr., born Oct. 13, 1896; Albert Calder, born in 1899, died in 1903; Putnam Calder, born July 14, 1904; and David, born Nov. 4, 1907.

(VI) Charles Albert Calder, son of Albert L., graduated from Mowry and Goff's English and Classical Institute. In 1890 he became interested with his father in the manufacture of Calder's Dentine, and upon his father's death succeeded him in that business. He married Alice Dyke Page, daughter of Frederick A. Page.

(VI) AUGUSTUS W. CALDER, son of Albert L. Calder, was born Sept. 28, 1869. He attended private schools, Mowry and Goff's English & Classical Institute, and graduated from Brown University in 1891 with the degree of A. B., and a member of the Psi Upsilon fraternity. In 1895 he graduated from the Harvard Medical school with the degree of M. D., and then studied in Vienna, Berlin, Paris and Dresden for a year and a half. In the spring of 1898 he began practice in Providence, making a specialty of nervous diseases. He is a member of the Rhode Island Medical Society, the Providence Medical Association, and American Medical Association. He is major surgeon of the cavalry, Rhode Island Militia; was on the hospital corps for five years, and post surgeon during the formation of the regiment for the Spanish-American war. He is a member of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, and of the Military Service Institute; the Hope Club; Agawam Hunt Club; Wannamoisett Club; Rumford Polo Club; Narragansett Boat Club; University Club, and the Young Men's Republican Club. On April 17, 1906, Dr. Calder married Sarah Senter Allen, daughter of Crawford Allen, and they have a son, Augustus Woodbury, Jr., born Dec. 30, 1907.

(V) GEORGE BECKFORD CALDER, born April 14, 1830, in Providence, married Nov. 28, 1855, Catherine C. Curry, daughter of Aaron B. Curry. She was born in Providence, Nov. 8, 1831, and died Oct. 3, 1890, the mother of children as follows: William Curry, born Nov. 10, 1856, married Nov. 30, 1885, Ida B. Thomas, daughter of Hiram and Mary

Thomas, of Providence, and has one child, Chester Thomas, born Dec. 29, 1889; Elisabeth Miller, born July 7, 1861, married Nov. 28, 1888, Frank Wendell Pray, of Portsmouth, N. H., and has children: Catherine Calder (born Sept. 26, 1890) and Thornton Calder (Oct. 24, 1893); Albert Lawton (2d), born Nov. 18, 1862, married Feb. 2, 1892, Harriet Ann Blanchard, who died Feb. 15, 1900, and married (second) Helen V. (Gladding) Canfield; and Dorcas Greene, was born July 6, 1864.

George Beckford Calder attended the old brick school on Meeting street, the school on Benefit street, and the high school. He went with Chapin & Thurber, apothecaries, in 1846, and in 1851 with A. L. Calder. Two years later, with Robert B. Chambers, he purchased the store of Mr. A. F. Adie, wholesale druggist, and in 1870 William H. Ballou became a partner and continued as such until 1890. William C., his son, and William S. Chambers became partners of the business in the latter year, and continued to operate thus until November, 1899.

Mr. Calder was a member of Westminster Congregational Church. He has been greatly interested in political matters, and was a member of the school committee for some years. He is a member of the Rhode Island Historical Society, having joined that organization nearly fifty years ago. He is a member of the Board of Trade, for forty years has been a director of the Weybosset National Bank, of which he was for fifteen years president, and is also a trustee of the Mechanics' Savings Bank.

(VI) ALBERT LAWTON CALDER, 2d, son of George Beckford Calder, was born in Providence, R. I., Nov. 18, 1862. He was educated in the Bridgham Street Grammar school and the high school. For many years he has been a member of the cotton brokerage firm of L. M. Wilcox, Calder & Company. He is a 32d degree mason and is connected with Adelphoi Lodge, Scituate Royal Arch Chapter, St. John's Commandery and Palestine Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of the Art Club; Providence Central Club; Rumford Polo Club; Wannamoisett Golf Club; Commercial Club; Unitarian Club; Economic Club; the Young Men's Republican Club; Sons of the American Revolution; and The Rhode Island Historical Society. Mr. Calder is president of the Howland & Wheaton Company, manufacturers of handkerchiefs at Warren, R. I., is a member of the Board of Trade, and is in other ways prominently connected with the business life of his city and State.

SEAGRAVE (Providence families). Since the early years of the eighteenth century the Seagraves have been a continuous family in and about the old town of Uxbridge, Mass., and since early in the nineteenth century at Providence, R. I., and vicinity, where they have largely been farmers and in later generations manufacturers and merchants. The old stock at Uxbridge were patriots, espousing with great zeal and earnestness the cause of the Colonies before and during the Revolution, and one of the name, an officer, Capt. Edward Seagrave, won distinction on the field of battle. Several of this same stock, the Providence (R. I.) branch of the family, have been for several generations among the substantial men and women of the Rhode Island capital and vicinity, the men being extensive merchants and manufacturers. Reference is made to the sons and grandsons of the late Josiah and Lois (Taft) Seagrave. Such men as the late Jacob Taft Seagrave, senior and junior; the late Edward and sons Caleb and George Edward; and the late George Augustus Seagrave and sons Frank Evans and Clifford P., among others figured largely in the business affairs of Rhode Island of their time.

The family comes from Barton Seagrave, near Kettering, Northamptonshire, England. There follows in regular order from the immigrant settlers the genealogy and family history of this Providence branch of the Seagrave family.

(I) John Seagrave and his wife Sarah sailed from England to America about 1725-30, with their children. The father died on the passage. The widow and children landed safely in Boston. The children were: Edward, born about 1722; John, born about 1724; Sarah, born about 1728; and Mary, probably born in Boston, about 1731-32.

(II) Capt. Edward Seagrave, born about 1722, in England, came to New England with the family. He settled in Uxbridge, Mass., where he was occupied in farming. He married Jan. 6, 1757, Lois, daughter of Joseph and Judith White, of Uxbridge. When the trouble arose between the Colonies and the mother country Mr. Seagrave became a zealous patriot, and, entering the army, served with distinction in the Revolution. On the Lexington Alarm he marched with the company from Uxbridge as first lieutenant under Capt. Samuel Read, and continued in the service. On Sept. 25, 1775, he was commissioned a captain in the 20th Regiment of Massachusetts Foot, an eight months' regiment. He was subsequently commissioned captain of the 9th Company, 3d Worcester Regiment, and was again commissioned captain of the same company and regiment Jan. 20, 1778; and on July 12, 1778, he was again commissioned captain—this time of a company in Colonel Wade's regiment, performing service later in Rhode Island. For conspicuous gallantry displayed in the battle of White Plains, where, at the head of his company, he led a charge that resulted in liberating some of the captured Colonial troops, it is said he was tendered a colonel's commission, but his modesty forbade its acceptance.

Captain Seagrave died May 18-20, 1793. His widow, Lois, passed away Jan. 7-8, 1806. Their children were: John, born Nov. 6, 1757; Lois, born Nov. 5, 1759; Joseph, born Dec. 26, 1761;

Mary, born April 1, 1764; Bezaleel, born Dec. 14, 1766; Sarah, born Dec. 31, 1768; Caleb, born March 14, 1771; Josiah, born Oct. 14, (or 4), 1773; Edward, born Nov. 9, 1776; Olive, born April 17, 1779; Samuel, born Feb. 3, 1782.

(III) Josiah Seagrave, born Oct. 4 (or 14), 1773, in Uxbridge, Mass., became occupied in farming in his native town. He married (first) Dec. 15, 1798, Lois Taft, of Uxbridge, born Aug. 27, 1780. She died April 27, 1854, and Aug. 31st of that year he married (second) Mary Larned, of Oxford, Mass. Mr. Seagrave died March 20, 1855, and his widow passed away July 2, 1878, aged eighty-eight years. The children born to the first marriage were: Mary Ann, born Nov. 17, 1799; Jacob Taft, April 8, 1802; Henrietta Frost, Dec. 1, 1803; Waity Grant, Sept. 23, 1805; Edward, Sept. 3, 1807; Lois Taft, April 13, 1809; Josiah, May 24 (or 14), 1811; Malvina, April 8, 1813; Caleb, Feb. 8, 1815; Esborn, Dec. 18, 1818; and George Augustus, Jan. 6, 1823.

(IV) Jacob Taft Seagrave, son of Josiah and Lois (Taft), born April 8, 1802, in Uxbridge, Mass., married April 20, 1828, Mary Brackett. To them were born children as follows: Mary Jane, born March 29, 1833, who married Sept. 8, 1854, Sylvanus M. Lewis, of Providence; and Jacob Taft, born May 1 (or 11), 1837. Mr. Seagrave removed to Rhode Island, locating at Providence, where he and one or more of his brothers were occupied in conducting for many years a wholesale grocery house and also were extensively engaged in the manufacturing of woolen goods at Graniteville, Burrillville, R. I. He was a successful business man, and when he retired from business was possessed of a comfortable fortune. His death occurred at his home on North Main street, Providence, Rhode Island, Sept. 24, 1870.

(IV) Edward Seagrave, son of Josiah and Lois (Taft), born Sept. 3, 1807, in Uxbridge, Mass., married Jan. 24, 1830, Hannah, daughter of John Fowler, of Uxbridge. Mr. Seagrave was a merchant and woolen manufacturer, a resident of Uxbridge, Mass., Woonsocket and Providence, R. I., Brooklyn, N. Y., and after 1870, of Bristol, R. I. His children were: Caleb, born Sept. 3, 1831; Zelis Harris, born Sept. 19, 1833; and Huldah Fowler, born April 6, 1836—all in Woonsocket, R. I.; and George Edward, born Sept. 4, 1838, in Uxbridge, Massachusetts.

Edward Seagrave died Feb. 15, 1873, in Rome, N. Y., while traveling, and Mrs. Seagrave died in Bristol, R. I., May 2, 1890.

(IV) Josiah Seagrave (2), son of Josiah and Lois (Taft), born May 14 (or 24), 1811, married Sept. 8, 1834, Phebe Brackett, and one daughter blessed the marriage. Mr. Seagrave was occupied in manufacturing. He settled in Providence, R. I., and died in Brooklyn, N. Y., July 21, 1861. His widow, Phebe, passed away April 7, 1865.

(V) Jacob Taft Seagrave (2), son of Jacob

Taft and Mary (Brackett), born May 11 (or 1), 1837, in Providence, R. I., married May 6, 1866, Flora E. Thorne, born July 24, 1847, in Buffalo, N. Y., and they were residents of Providence, R. I. Their children were: Walter Thorne, born Feb. 11, 1867; and Marshall Church, born Feb. 23, 1872.

(V) Caleb Seagrave, son of Edward and Hannah (Fowler), born Sept. 3, 1831, married Sept. 7, 1852, Helen Dailey Bucklin, daughter of James C. and Lucy (Dailey) Bucklin, of Providence. She survives him and resides in Providence. Mr. Seagrave for a number of years was engaged in the manufacture of woolen goods, as a member of the firm of Evans, Seagrave & Co., whose factories were at Blackstone, Mass., and office at Providence.

Mr. Seagrave was a great traveler and collector of art. He was a deep reader and he spent many years abroad. His private library was one of the finest in the State. He was a staunch Republican, but cared little or nothing for politics, preferring the quiet of private life. He attended the Episcopal Church, his wife being a member of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, and when that church was built he placed a memorial window for his children. He was for many years a director and later president of the old Manufacturers' National Bank, and a director in several insurance companies. He was a member of the Hope Club from its organization. His children, all born in Providence, were: Helen Louise, born Aug. 1, 1853, died April 7, 1858; Howard Okie, born Oct. 9, 1855, died Dec. 12, 1856; Edward Evans, born Aug. 17, 1858, is a priest in the Roman Catholic Church in Providence; Loraine, born Feb. 22, 1861, died Oct. 3, 1866; Eleanor Oakley, born Dec. 4, 1862, died March 24, 1863; Isabelle Vincent, born Aug. 12, 1864, married Edward Douglas Pearce, of Providence, and they have two sons, Edward Douglas and Mauran Seagrave. Caleb Seagrave died June 21, 1896, and was buried at Swan Point.

(V) George Edward Seagrave, son of Edward and Hannah (Fowler), born Sept. 4, 1838, in Uxbridge, Mass., married Jan. 26, 1870, Florence Eliza Arnold, born Nov. 26, 1849, daughter of Cyrus Arnold, of Smithfield, R. I. Mr. Seagrave was also a woolen manufacturer, engaged with his brother Caleb in the establishment alluded to above. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Seagrave were: Leonard, born June 16, 1874; and Arnold, born July 31, 1876.

(IV) GEORGE AUGUSTUS SEAGRAVE, son of Josiah and Lois (Taft), born Jan. 6, 1823, in Uxbridge, Mass., married June 24, 1856, Mary Greene Evans, born Feb. 23, 1835, daughter of Duty and Ruth (Owen) Evans, he a merchant of Providence, R. I., and a descendant in the sixth generation of Richard Evans, of Dorchester, Mass., as early as 1640, his lineage being through Richard (2), David, Edward and Daniel Evans.

The boyhood of Mr. Seagrave was passed in a manner then customary with the sons of the general farmer, alternating between work on the farm in season and attendance in the neighborhood school during the winters. In 1838, when fifteen years of age, he began his business career as a clerk in the wholesale grocery house of J. T. Seagrave & Co. Here he remained with the exception of a few months, which he passed in a private school in Uxbridge, Mass., until 1842. The firm of J. T. Seagrave included two or more of his brothers, and in the year last named, 1842, George A. Seagrave associated with him James S. Phetteplace for the continuance of the business, until that time carried on by J. T. Seagrave & Co., they purchasing the business. This they carried on successfully until 1872.

J. T. Seagrave & Co. were also carrying on a manufacturing business at the same time they were engaged in the grocery business, their location being at Graniteville, Burrillville, R. I. In 1850 Mr. George A. Seagrave became interested in the manufacturing concern just alluded to, and to its management he devoted the greater part of his time, beginning about 1856, Mr. Phetteplace giving his time to the conduct of the grocery house.

In 1865 Messrs. George A. Seagrave, James S. Phetteplace and James L. Pierce bought the Fales & Jenks cotton mill and machine shop on the Blackstone river, at Central Falls, R. I., which they let until the year 1869. In the spring of the last named year they built a new mill and made other general improvements about the place. Their lease at Graniteville having expired in 1870, they then started the new mill at Central Falls, at which were manufactured doeskins and fancy cassimeres. This concern became the corporation later known as The Central Falls Woolen Mill, of which Mr. Seagrave was treasurer.

Mr. Seagrave was one of the founders of the Continental Bank of Providence, which finally became the Fourth National Bank, of which he was a director the greater part of the time of the bank's existence. In 1854 Mr. Seagrave became a director in the Weybosset Bank, which later became the Weybosset National Bank, and for many years, beginning in 1867, was its president, and it is said that few men of Providence of his time had as good a knowledge of commercial paper and the standing of the business men of the city as he. For many years he was one of the prominent business men of Providence and occupied positions of trust, especially in the city's financial institutions. He was an official in the Providence Institution for Savings, and in some of the insurance companies of the city. He was a director in the Northern Bank of Providence from April, 1879.

Possessing a comprehensive grasp of mind,

Mr. Seagrave had a clear perception of subjects, and a happy appreciation of the relations of things. As a business man his was a life of ability, energy and success. If difficulties arose in his pathway they seemed only to give strength to his faculties. When he reached a conclusion it was firmly fixed. There was strength in his character, and although a close, accurate observer to the minute details, exacting and inclining to be distrustful, yet those who knew him intimately knew him affectionately, to be high-minded, honorable and true.

Mr. Seagrave possessed a genial disposition and was unassuming in manner. He ever had a warm hand in friendly greeting, a heart full of noble emotions and impulses; and to those who knew him best his friendship was sincere, confiding and durable. He was an upright, conscientious man, and one of usefulness.

Mr. Seagrave's religious connections were with the First Congregational (Unitarian) Church at Providence, and he took an interest in all benevolent work. His death occurred at his home on Benefit street, Providence, R. I., Nov. 15, 1884, when he was aged sixty-one years.

To Mr. Seagrave and his wife, Mrs. Mary Greene (Evans) Seagrave, were born children as follows: George A., born May 18, 1857, died that same year; George A. (2), born July 7, 1858, died Jan. 9, 1860; Frank Evans was born March 29, 1860; Lincoln Taft, born Nov. 5, 1861, married Agnes Ploettner; Clifford Phetteplace, born Dec. 2, 1863, now living in New York, married Mathilda Stahl, who died March 17, 1904; Mary Lois, born Nov. 23, 1865, married Louis W. Downes, of Providence; and Caroline Foster, born Nov. 2, 1867, married Theodore H. Bliss.

HON. JAMES POTTER ARNOLD, of the Warwick family of Arnolds, and long one of that town's highly esteemed and respected citizens, widely known through the Pawtuxet Valley, where his fifty and more years of active business life were passed, was a native of that part of Warwick now known as Bellefonte, born Aug. 6, 1820. When a young man he located in business at Phenix, in his native town, as an undertaker and funeral director, in addition to which he carried on the furniture business, and continued so engaged for nearly sixty years. He had previously learned the business under the direction of his brother-in-law, the late Isaac B. Aylesworth, who was one of the earliest residents of the village of Anthony, R. I. During the number of fires which devastated the town through the latter half of that period, Mr. Arnold was burned out several times, but with his accustomed philosophic turn he each time rallied and continued business to advanced years.

Mr. Arnold was a man of such a make-up that as a funeral director he was popular, seemingly knowing just how to best serve grief-stricken families gently and sympathetically. He won the confidence and esteem of all and filled a useful sphere in his community. He, too, was a man of considerable prominence. He was one of the charter members of the Phenix Savings Bank and a director in it from the beginning. He was for five consecutive terms in the town council, and for a number of years represented the town of Warwick in the Lower House of the General Assembly by appointment of the Governor of Rhode Island. He was also at one time one of the commissioners of the Hartford, Providence & Fishkill Railroad. He was the first member admitted to Washington Lodge, I. O. O. F., after its institution some fifty-three years before his death, and at the time of the latter event his term of membership in the lodge was exceeded by only one other, the only surviving charter member. Mr. Arnold served in 1888 as one of the directors of the Phenix Public Library.

Mr. Arnold married Mary Abby Potter, born April 12, 1823, the marriage being blessed with children as follows: A. Herbert, born May 9, 1848; John James, born Sept. 2, 1850, now prominent in his profession—that of the law—and the president and treasurer of the Warwick & Coventry Water Company, and a resident of Phenix, R. I., and Henry Curtis Arnold, born April 26, 1852, a resident of Phenix, Rhode Island.

A. HERBERT ARNOLD, son of Hon. James Potter and Mary Abby (Potter) Arnold, was born May 9, 1848, in the town of Warwick, R. I. After his school days were over he entered the employ of his father, assisting him in his undertaking business, thereby learning thoroughly the business in all of its details. He, himself, in 1863 became a funeral director and undertaker, and soon through his enterprising spirit, his study in his line of business, his keeping abreast of the times in the use of all modern equipments as they came into practice, he found himself patronized by many from far and near and in the midst of a steadily increasing business. Ambitious to cater to a larger field he, in 1888, opened an office and warerooms on Westminster street, Providence. Here by wise conduct of his business and the close care and interest he gave to every detail pertaining to what in each instance must be considered a rather delicate situation, he soon won the favor of his patrons and in time his reputation was established and a successful business secured.

'Twas not long after Mr. Arnold located in Providence until it was discovered that he had so successfully managed his private affairs and business that he would be a good man to look after the interests of the public, so in 1895, his fellow citizens made him their standard bearer for councilman from his ward (the Eighth), his election followed, and a re-election in 1896. Again in 1898 he was honored by election to that body and such was his standing in the council during those several years that in the fall of the last named year he was advanced to the position of Alderman, serving two years, and it goes without saying that his services in this body were of high order and of great value to the city of his adoption. Mr. Arnold has ever taken a deep interest in the advancement of the communities in which he has resided, favoring all measures which in his judgment tended to the welfare of his fellow citizens, and in the growth of town and city. He is both enterprising and public-spirited.

Mr. Arnold has had a liking for fraternal organizations and has long been prominent in Masonic circles; now a Mason of the 32d degree, he is widely known in the fraternity. He is also an Odd Fellow, member of Washington Lodge No. 11, of Howard Encampment, of the Order of Good Fellows, Sterling Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and of the New England Order of Protection. He also belongs to the West Side Club, Central Club and the Elmwood Club.

Mr. Arnold married Miss Annie Cora Pond, of Attleboro, Mass., daughter of George Henry and Aroline Maria (Gammons) Pond, of that town.

HENRY ESEK SMITH. By the death of Henry Esek Smith, which occurred at his home in Enfield, in the town of Smithfield, Sept. 23, 1899, there was removed one of the town's foremost men, a worthy citizen, an honored descendant of the first families of the State, a man whose influence had always been for the public good, and whose demise caused a vacancy difficult to fill. Mr. Smith was descended in the paternal line from Elisha Smith, Sr., who settled at what is now Stillwater, then called Smith's Mills, on the farm now occupied by Sidney M. Appleby. He was father of two sons, John and Elisha. Junia, son of John, was the father of Elisha Smith, father of the late Henry E.

Elisha Smith was born June 6, 1794, in Smithfield, and followed the occupation of farmer on the farm of his father-in-law at Enfield. He was a man of great force of character, and frequently represented his town as a public official, for a great number of years being a member of the town council, and for a long time a representative to the General Assembly. He was a director and president of the National Exchange Bank at Greenville from 1853 to 1869. His death occurred April 23, 1873, in Providence, in which city he was spending the latter years of his life.

On Jan. 1, 1825, Mr. Smith married Melissa Smith, whom he survived, and their children were: Martha A., who was the first wife of Alden B. Paine and died in Providence, Nov. 1, 1890, aged sixty-five years (she left no children); Henry Esek; and Sarah Amanda. The last named married Charles E. Harris, who was engaged in a grocery business in Providence for many years and became one of the city's leading and substantial men; he served as councilman and alderman and was his party's candidate upon one occasion for mayor. He died Jan. 6, 1889. Mrs. Harris survived until March 4, 1905, dying at the age of seventy-two years. They had three children: Frank S., born June 18, 1865, died Sept. 12, 1865; Lewis S., born Nov. 29, 1866, died Oct. 6, 1875; and Mira H., born June 28, 1868, died May 29, 1887.

Henry Esek Smith was born on the home farm at Enfield, Feb. 27, 1829, and was reared to farm work. He obtained his early education in the district schools, and later attended that well-known institution then presided over by Stanton Belden, the Fruit Hall Classical Institute. This training was supplemented by a course of study at East Greenwich, which place he left at the age of seventeen years, quite fairly prepared for the future which then opened up before him. Returning to the farm he assisted his father until 1853, when he bought a store at Enfield which he conducted until 1856. He then went back to farming, giving particular attention to the careful breeding of stock with a view to its improvement. In 1858 he became a member of the Rhode Island Society for the Encouragement of Domestic Industry, filling many of its important offices, serving as its vice-president for years. During these years he took considerable pride in exhibiting his exceptionally fine stock at the various exhibitions, and generally carried off premiums. He improved largely upon the Ayrshire breed of cattle. In 1887 he was elected treasurer of the Ayrshire Breeders' Association, which includes members from nearly every State in the Union and from Canada, and publishes a herd book every two years, and continued to hold that office until his death. For nearly forty years he conducted a retail milk route at Providence.

Mr. Smith, although so eminently fitted for public office, cared very little for such honors. He consented as a matter of public spirit to serve his town, and frequently was a member of the town council, but refused nomination for the General Assembly. In 1878 he became president of the National Exchange Bank at Greenville, succeeding Benjamin R. Vaughn, and held the office until his death. When the parish of the Universalist Church at Georgiaville was organized, in 1885, Mr. Smith became president, and so remained the rest of his life.

On Dec. 16, 1862, Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Mercy J. Steere, by whom he is survived, this estimable woman residing at Manton, in the town of Johnston. Four children were born to them, namely: (1) Frederick Elisha was born Dec. 18, 1863. (2) Helen Parker, born June 1, 1867, married Clinton O. Remington, and resides at Oakland, in the town of Burrillville. They have had children as follows: Martha S., born July 15, 1891; Harold C., born Oct. 23, 1892; Charlotte O., born March 23, 1895; Louise, born in

He is both enterprising and public-spirited.

He also belongs to the West Side Club, Central Club and the Elmwood Club.

Mr. Arnold married Miss Annie Cora Pond, of Attleboro, Mass., daughter of George Henry and Aroline Maria (Gammons) Pond, of that town.

HENRY ESEK SMITH. By the death of Henry Esek Smith, which occurred at his home in Littleton in the town of Smithfield, September 1, 1895, there was removed one of the best and most useful of our worthy citizens, an honored member of the first families of the State, and one who has been for the full half-century a devoted and efficient cause of the State. His death caused a vacancy in the ranks of the Smith family, which was descended in the generation of Henry Smith, Sr., who served in the Revolutionary war, then called Smith, and who was succeeded by his son, Sidney, who was the father of John, who was the father of Henry E.

Henry E. Smith was born in the town of Littleton, and followed the occupation of his father in law at Littleton, where he was of great force of character, and was a most useful and successful citizen. He was a member of the town council for many years, being elected to the office of town clerk, and for a long time a member of the General Assembly. He was a member and president of the National Exchange Bank at Greenville from 1872 to 1895. His death occurred April 23, 1873, in Providence in which town he was spending the latter years of his life.

On Jan. 1, 1825, Mr. Smith married Melissa Smith, whom he survived, and their children were: Martha A., who was the first wife of Alden B. Paine and died in Providence, Nov. 1, 1890, aged sixty-five years (she left no children); Henry Esek; and Amanda. The last named married Charles E. Smith, who was engaged in a grocery business in Providence for many years and became one of the most prominent and substantial men; he served as councilman and at the party's candidate upon one occasion. He died Jan. 6, 1889. Mrs. Henry E. Smith died March 4, 1905, dying at the age of 80 years. They had three children: John, born June 18, 1865, died Sept. 12, 1885; Mary, born Nov. 29, 1866, died Oct. 6, 1887; and Henry, born June 28, 1868, died May 20, 1895.

Henry Esek Smith was born in Enfield, Feb. 27, 1829, and was a most useful citizen. He obtained his early education at the district schools, and later attended the institution then presided over by the Fruit Hall Classical Institute, which was supplemented by a course at the Greenwich, which place he left at the age of sixteen years, quite fairly prepared for college, which then opened up before him. On the farm he assisted his father, and later bought a store at Enfield which he operated until 1856. He then went back to his home, where he gave particular attention to the careful cultivation of his land with a view to its improvement. He was a member of the Rhode Island Agricultural Society, and of the Domestic Mission Society.

Mr. Smith held important offices, serving as a member of the Board of Agriculture. During the year 1856 he made an expedition in exhibiting his stock at the various exhibitions held at the State fairs. He improved his land and raised a fine lot of cattle. In 1857 he was treasurer of the Ayrshire Breeders' Association, which includes members from all over the State in the Union and from Canada. He has a book every two years, and has held that office until his death. For forty years he conducted a retail business in Providence.

Mr. Smith, although so eminent in his public office, cared very little for public life. He consented as a matter of public duty to be a member of his town council, and frequently was a member of the town council, but refused nomination to the General Assembly. In 1878 he became a member of the National Exchange Bank at Greenville, succeeding Benjamin P. Vaughn, and held that office until his death. When the parish of the Methodist Church at Greenville was organized in 1885, Mr. Smith became president, and held that office until his death.

On Dec. 10, 1862, Mr. Smith was married to Mary J. Steere, by whom he survived, this estimable woman residing in the town of Johnston. Four children were born to them, namely: (1) Frederick E. Smith, born Dec. 18, 1863; (2) Helen Parker, born Dec. 18, 1867; (3) Clinton O. Remington, born at Oakland, in the town of Burrillville, Dec. 18, 1867; and (4) Martha E. Smith, born at Oakland, in the town of Burrillville, Dec. 18, 1867. Their children are as follows: Martha E. Smith, born Oct. 15, 1891; Harold C., born Oct. 23, 1893; and Lotte O., born March 23, 1895; Louise

(3) Annie Melissa, born April 29, 1877, was married April 14, 1903, to Herbert C. Calef, and they reside at Manton. They have two children, George C., born May 19, 1904; and Louise S., born June 11, 1906. (4) Alice Mercy, born July 16, 1882, married William M. Beebe, and they reside in Smithfield. They have one child, Dorothy Smith, born May 21, 1905.

FREDERICK ELISHA SMITH, the eldest son of the late Henry Esek Smith, occupies the home farm in Enfield, where he was born. He was educated first in the district schools and later attended Jencks Mowry's private school at Mt. Pleasant and the Mowry & Goff School at Providence. After leaving school, at the age of seventeen years, he became a brakeman on the Providence & Springfield railroad, later became a freight conductor, and finally was promoted to passenger conductor. Retiring from this line of railroad work he then became night yardmaster for the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, at Providence, and remained with that company until March, 1896, when he returned to the home farm and assisted his father until the latter's death. Subsequently he conducted the farm for his mother until Oct. 1, 1903, when he assumed the management. He continued the retail milk business established by his father, and carried on so satisfactorily for so many years, until May, 1905, when he disposed of it, converting the business into a wholesale one. He keeps about twenty-five cows, and has a fine, up-to-date dairy, with modern sanitary equipment.

On Sept. 22, 1886, Mr. Smith was married, at Granitville, to Carrie I. Barnes, daughter of James and Phebe O. (Angell) Barnes. They have two children: Henry Barnes, born May 10, 1892, and Florence Barnes, born June 1, 1896.

Like his father, Mr. Smith has been averse to holding public office, though he is one of the enterprising and very popular young men of the town. He is associated with Roger Williams Lodge, No. 32, A. F. & A. M., at Centerdale, and with Centerdale Lodge, No. 36, A. O. U. W., at Georgiaville. He attends the Universalist Church at the latter place.

The Smith ancestry traced on his mother's side led the record of Henry Esek Smith back to another branch of the family.

(I) John Smith, known as "John the Miller," was born in England in 1595, and came to Providence with Roger Williams in 1636. He operated a gristmill on the Mashausick river and was a man of importance in the community, serving in 1641 as town clerk. He died in 1648, and Alice, his wife, died in 1650.

(II) John Smith, son of John, was also a miller. He served as town clerk of Providence from 1672 to 1676. He married Sarah Whipple.

(III) John Smith (3) was a miller, like his father and grandfather, and was the last of the name to follow that business. He died in 1737, and Hannah, his wife, survived until Sept. 5, 1756.

(IV) William Smith, son of John (3), located in Smithfield about 1703, on a thousand acres of land, probably building the old house on the site of the residence now occupied by Frederick E. Smith, at Enfield. William Smith married Mary Sayles, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Olney) Sayles, and a great-granddaughter of Roger Williams. Her grandparents were John and Mary (Williams) Sayles, Mary Williams being a daughter of Roger Williams.

(V) Daniel Smith, son of William and Mary Smith, was born in 1712, and resided on the farm above mentioned. He married Susanna Winsor, born June 19, 1715, another descendant of Roger Williams through the latter's daughter Mercy, who married Samuel Winsor for her second husband. Susanna Winsor was a daughter of Rev. Joshua Winsor and a granddaughter of Samuel Winsor.

(VI) Emor Smith, son of Daniel and Susanna Smith, was born in 1755 and died Feb. 12, 1791. He married Sarah Smith, who died Aug. 12, 1790, in her thirty-seventh year.

(VII) Esek Smith, son of Emor and Sarah Smith, was born Aug. 2, 1773, was a farmer, and resided on the homestead at Enfield. He died Nov. 4, 1821. He married Desire Eddy, born March 3, 1781, who died March 28, 1844, and had three daughters, Sarah, Melissa and Amanda. Sarah married a Mr. Olney, and died in Ohio. Melissa married Elisha Smith. Amanda married John Fenner.

STEERE. Mrs. Henry Esek Smith comes from the old Steere family of Rhode Island, which traces its settlement in this country to John Steere, who came to Rhode Island nearly two hundred and fifty years ago. The early records of this family are given in more detail elsewhere in this publication, and here is presented merely an outline of Mrs. Smith's line, as follows:

(I) John Steere was born in England in 1634, was in Rhode Island in 1660, and married Hannah Wickenden.

(II) Thomas Steere, son of John, married (first) Mary Arnold and (second) Mehitable, widow of Samuel Plummer.

(III) Hon. Thomas Steere, son of Thomas, married (first) Katherine Comstock and (second) Mercy Aldrich.

(IV) Elisha Steere, son of Hon. Thomas and Katherine Steere, married (first) Amy Aldrich, (second) Penelope Steere, and (third) Mrs. Sarah Mowry, daughter of Richard and Abigail Sayles.

(V) Stephen Steere, born Oct. 29, 1780, the fourth child of Elisha and Sarah (Sayles-Mowry) Steere, was a farmer, and resided in Smithfield on the farm now occupied by Philip Andrews, a short distance west of the Stillwater depot. He was a member of the Society of Friends. He died April 27, 1853. He married Jan. 27, 1805, Sarah, daughter of Robert and Phebe (Jenckes) Harris. Mrs. Steere was born Dec. 26, 1782, and died June 1, 1853. Their children were: (1) Elisha, born March 10, 1808, disposed of the old homestead in 1858 to Robert Harris, father of Elisha S., who occupies the farm, and he removed to Illinois, where he died, unmarried, May 13, 1862. (2) William Penn was born July 4, 1810. (3) Martin Jenckes, born Oct. 15, 1814, became a minister of the Free Baptist denomination until April, 1859, when a change in his theological views led him into the Universalist Church. He died at the home of a daughter, in Athol, Mass., Jan. 18, 1877, his residence at the time being in Hardwick, Mass. He married (first) Abby Randall, of North Providence, and (second) Harriet Mayo, of Hardwick, Mass. By his first wife he was the father of two children, Sarah Frances, who married Dr. Horace E. Smith, and a son who died in infancy. By his second marriage he had one daughter, Harriet Abby, who married Charles H. Littlefield, a civil engineer. (4) Robert Harris, born May 27, 1819, married Dec. 19, 1844, Ann Eliza Clark, who survives and resides at Georgiaville. He died Oct. 11, 1874, and a record of his family will be found elsewhere. (5) Thomas Sayles, born March 21, 1822, married (first) Delila B. Talman, and removed to Illinois, where his wife died and he married again and left descendants.

(VI) WILLIAM PENN STEERE, son of Stephen, was born in Smithfield on the farm near Stillwater. His education was somewhat limited, owing to the circumscribed opportunities of the day and locality, although his advantages were superior to those of many others. He pursued a course of study at Bolton, Mass., and then settled down to farming, and was associated also with his brother Elisha in a teaming business between Slatersville and Providence. He died July 6, 1876, and was buried in the North burial ground at Providence. Mr. Steere was a staunch Republican and was a man of sterling integrity and decided views in matters of public concern. This made him eminently fitted for public office, and he became a very prominent citizen. On several occasions he was sent to the General Assembly, and in local circles he served as assessor and in the town council.

On Oct. 25, 1833, Mr. Steere married Mary Ann Parker, born July 30, 1813, in Foster, R. I., daughter of Benjamin and Marcy (Jenckes) Parker. Mrs. Steere survived her husband, dying Sept. 16, 1890. She spent the latter years of her life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Steere had the following children: (1) Stephen Parker, born May 17, 1838, married Kate M. McCormick, of Smithfield, R. I., in 1864, and resides at Pawtucket; they had two children—

William Hamilton, born in March, 1865 (married Elizabeth Augusta Roberts, of Pawtucket, in 1899, and has had two children, Edna Freeman and Harold Parker, the latter dying in infancy), and Ethel Isabel, born in November, 1887 (married Walter Steere Polsey, of Pawtucket, in 1906). (2) Mercy Jenckes, born May 6, 1841, is the widow of Henry Esek Smith. (3) Susannah Mowry, born May 6, 1841, a school teacher, is unmarried. (4) Daniel Angell, born Aug. 26, 1850, married Myra E. Woodmansee, and died at Pawtucket.

WILLIAM FRANCIS GOODWIN. Among the citizens of the town of Lincoln, none hold the esteem and respect of the community to a greater extent than William F. Goodwin, and few men enjoy a larger acquaintance in the State than he. Mr. Goodwin, although a native of Massachusetts, has spent the greater part of his life in Rhode Island, where he is favorably known for his sterling qualities.

David S. Goodwin, father of William Francis, was born in Lebanon, N. H., near the Maine State line. While yet a young man he removed to Waltham, Mass., where the remainder of his life was spent. He learned the trade of brickmaker in early life, and followed that vocation during the remainder of his years, during the latter part of which he was engaged in business on his own account as a brick manufacturer. He was also extensively engaged in farming and teaming. He was a very industrious man, although for several years prior to his death he was in very poor health, being paralyzed for several years preceding his death in about 1891, at the advanced age of about eighty years, which occurred at Waltham, Mass. Mr. Goodwin was, in early life, a Democrat of the old school, but at the breaking out of the Civil war he joined forces with the Republican party and ever thereafter affiliated with the latter party. He married Anna Custer, of Waltham, Mass., who passed away at the age of about forty years in Browns-ville, Minn. To this union were born children as follows: Daniel, who is now residing in New York State; John, who is now deceased; William Francis; Sarah, who died young; Anna, who is now deceased; and Emily, also deceased.

William F. Goodwin was born in Waltham, Mass., June 23, 1849, and acquired his educational training in the schools of his native city and in the public schools of Boston. His attending of school was continued until he had reached the age of eighteen years, and after leaving school he became apprenticed to the plumber's trade with William Watters & Co., at Philadelphia, Pa. Here he continued at his apprenticeship with this firm until four years had elapsed. After acquiring a knowledge of the business he then set out to get a thorough training in the trade's various branches, and for the next several years he was employed in various sections of New England, during which time he also acquired a thorough knowledge of chemical plumbing, which branch of the business he now makes a specialty. In 1873 Mr. Goodwin came to Cranston from Charleston, S. C., to build and operate the new sulphuric acid works which the Spragues were installing at their works in that village, but shortly after his becoming employed by them this firm met with financial reverses, and he then became an employe of the Rumford Chemical Company, having charge of the plumbing of their establishments, in which capacity he remained for about seven years. In 1878, Mr. Goodwin became a trusted employe of the Sayles Bros.' Bleacheries, having charge of the steam fitting, the gas works, and also the sulphuric acid department, and in this capacity he remained for a period of twenty-one years, at the end of which time, June 16, 1899, he was compelled to resign on account of ill health. The fact that Mr. Goodwin continued in this responsible position for so long a period speaks volumes for his ability as an experienced man in that capacity as well as for his faithful performance of duty.

The year following his leaving the employ of the Sayles' Bleacheries, Mr. Goodwin engaged in business on his own account, establishing himself in the plumbing business, under the firm name of William F. Goodwin & Co., taking into partnership with him, his son. In his business, which consists of plumbing, heating, steam fitting, copper work, hot-air heating, heavy water piping and chemical plumbing, making a specialty of the latter, Mr. Goodwin has met with well-deserved success. One of his most difficult and most scientific feats as a contractor was the successful laying of the water piping which conveys pure water to the works of the Fisher Manufacturing Company, at Fisherville, Mass. This feat consisted of laying 3,700 feet of 10-inch pipe, submerging the same under the waters of Quinsigamond Lake, and during the construction of this water main not a drop of the water of the lake entered the piping which was being laid. This is considered the largest submarine piping job ever completed so successfully.

Fraternally Mr. Goodwin belongs to various organizations, holding membership in Rising Sun Lodge, No. 30, A. F. & A. M., of East Providence, and in the Masonic Chapter and Council, of Pawtucket. He is also a member of Reliance Lodge, No. 34, I. O. O. F., and Fraternity Encampment, No. 17, I. O. O. F., of East Providence. He is as well a member of the Veteran Masons' Association.

In political views Mr. Goodwin is a Republican, but is so firm a believer in good government that he can be depended upon to take an independent stand. He has ever taken an active interest in the affairs of his town, and has been called upon by his fellow citizens to hold various positions of honor and trust. He has served as a member of the town council, and in 1905 was elected a member of the General Assembly of the State from Lincoln, during his first session (1906) serving as a member of the committee on Elections. In 1906 he was again elected a member of the General Assembly, the latter time being elected as an "independent," with a majority of two hundred votes, and during the session of 1907 served on the committee on Corporations. In 1907 he was again re-elected to the General Assembly, and re-appointed to the committee on Corporations.

In 1872 Mr. Goodwin was united in marriage to Nellie C. Rowland, of Waltham, Mass., and this happy union has been blessed with children as follows: (1) William F. Jr., who was born in Boston, married Lena Sulloway, of Pawtucket, and they have one son, William F. III. (2) Gertrude, who was born in East Providence, died in infancy. (3) Mabel Frances, who was born in East Providence, married Edward P. Tobie, of Pawtucket.

William F. Goodwin is a self-made man, full of energy and determination, and the success he has attained is due to his ability and industry, and to his faculty of taking the initiative. Both Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin enjoy the acquaintance of a large circle of friends, and their hospitable home is the rendezvous where the stranger is given as cordial a welcome as their most intimate friends.

PROF. EDWIN E. CALDER, well known in the scientific world, Professor of Chemistry and Dean of the Rhode Island School of Pharmacy, is a son of John Lewis Calder, and a member of an old New England family—one of prominence in Providence for several generations.

The first of the name of whom there is definite record is (I) Alexander Calder, born in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1660, and died in 1715. From him and his wife, Barbara Shane, daughter of the Laird of Shane, Edwin E. Calder is descended through (II) William and Elizabeth (Brooks), (III) James and Agnes (Boies) [for the history of these first three generations in detail see sketch of Calder family, elsewhere in this work], (IV) John and Louisa (Howard), to (V) John Lewis and Julia Frances (Eddy), his parents.

(IV) John Calder, grandfather of Prof. Edwin E., was born Jan. 23, 1790, and died at Providence, Aug. 10, 1873. He was a plumber and copper-smith, and first engaged in that business with Thomas Phillips, and later with his son, John Lewis Calder. Mr. Calder was married Oct. 9, 1812, to Louisa Howard, of Sutton, Mass., who was born Jan. 26, 1794, and who died Sept. 9, 1819, the mother of these children: Louisa Howard, born Oct. 17, 1814; Harriet Peck, May 4, 1817, and a son July 11, 1819. On June 23, 1823, Mr. Calder married (second) Lydia Peck, born in Sutton, Mass., July 13, 1793, daughter of David Peck; she died in Providence, March 15, 1865. To this second marriage were born children as follows: John Lewis, born April 8, 1824; Mary Elizabeth, June 27, 1825

(died Feb. 17, 1826); Adelaide Reade, June 8, 1827; Joseph Lyman, Feb. 24, 1829; and Agnes Elizabeth, July 9, 1831.

(V) John Lewis Calder was born April 8, 1824, and died in Providence, Jan. 25, 1887. He was married Oct. 4, 1847, to Julia Frances Eddy, born in Providence, Jan. 9, 1828, daughter of Barnard and Julia Eddy. Mr. Calder spent the greater part of his life in Providence. His business, that of a coppersmith and plumber, he had learned in the old house of Calder & Phillips. He first engaged in this line with his father, and later with Albert D. Read, but in later years was in business alone.

To John Lewis Calder and his wife, Julia F. (Eddy), were born these children: (1) John Barnard, born Dec. 31, 1849, was a bookkeeper in the Bank of Providence. He married, Oct. 22, 1874, Anna M. Phillips, born Dec. 23, 1852, and their daughter, Anna Maud, born Sept. 9, 1875, married Fred Jones, an attorney of Providence. (2) Edwin Eddy, born March 17, 1853, is mentioned below. (3) Lewis Herbert, born July 8, 1855, married, May 1, 1890, Lizzie Oriette Goodrich, daughter of Henry F. and Mary A. Goodrich, and has one child—Elliott Wallace, born Nov. 11, 1899. Mr. Lewis Herbert Calder is connected with Taylor, Symonds & Co., wholesale dry goods, Weybosset street. (4) Charles Granville, born Aug. 4, 1857, married, Oct. 28, 1880, Florence Nightingale, daughter of Nathan Bangs and Abby A. (Jillson) Williams, and four children were born to this union: Harold Granville, Aug. 14, 1881; Ernest Spencer, June 12, 1886; Richard Lewis, July 5, 1888; and Katherine Florence, Dec. 8, 1897. (5) William James, born June 8, 1862, married, Oct. 6, 1887, Sarah Melissa, daughter of Livingston Randall. (6) Heman Lincoln, born Nov. 22, 1864, married, Sept. 10, 1895, Jennie Medora, daughter of Humphrey Purrington. Mrs. John Lewis Calder was one of the real Daughters of the Revolution, her father having had charge of the fortifications at Field's Point during the struggle for independence.

(VI) Prof. Edwin Eddy Calder was born March 17, 1853. He was educated in the city schools of Providence and specialized in the sciences in 1873. He was assistant instructor in Analytical Chemistry at Brown University from 1874 until 1882, instructor in Chemistry at Brown from 1890 to 1900, professor of Chemistry at the Boston University School of Medicine from 1883 to 1906, and is professor of Chemistry and Dean of the Rhode Island School of Pharmacy.

Professor Calder is a member of the firm of Calder & Strickland, analytical chemists, Providence. He is connected with the American Chemical Society, and the Society of Chemical Industry. He belongs, socially, to the Sigma Psi fraternity of Brown University, and to the University Club.

On Dec. 23, 1875, Professor Calder married Ella Ann Theresa Elsbree, daughter of Hiram W. and Arethusa Elsbree, and they have two children:

Lawrence Vinton, born May 3, 1878, who is a broker in the Banigan Building; and Frances Wilmarth, born May 12, 1880.

CHACE. This branch of the Massachusetts-Rhode Island Chace family, the name in earlier generations being spelled Chase, of the old Roxbury-Yarmouth race of the name, is one of the oldest in New England, the coming hither of William Chase from England dating back to within a decade of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers themselves; and of this race, too, which, finding its way to Swansea and Somerset and Fall River and into Rhode Island, has given to the localities some strong, forceful characters who have left their impress for good in the various walks of life in which their lots were cast, not a few men of achievement, men of letters and learning, belong to the section and branch of the Chace family under consideration. For generations members of the Society of Friends, among them were ministers of distinction and usefulness. But in particular in this Somerset-Fall River and Valley Falls family, descendants of Oliver Chace, a substantial farmer of the old town of Swansea, came several generations of manufacturers, men of character as well as achievement in the industrial life of Fall River and Valley Falls and as well in the public life of Rhode Island and the business and banking interests of Providence. Reference is made especially to the late Oliver Chace; to his sons, Harvey, Samuel B. and Oliver Chace, all men of substance and some of great energy, enterprise and force, who played a conspicuous part in the industrial life of their section; and to their sons and successors, who have worthily worn the mantle of their sires, among them and still in the harness of large business activity the brothers James Hervey and Hon. Jonathan Chace, the former a leading cotton manufacturer, bank president, etc., of Providence, the latter one of the leading cotton manufacturers of the State, a former State senator, and a representative in both branches of the United States Congress.

There follows something of the lives of these men, their ancestry and the family genealogy, the arrangement being chronological from the American ancestor.

(I) William Chase, born about 1595, in England, with wife Mary and son William came to America in the fleet with Governor Winthrop and his colony in 1630, settling first at Roxbury. He soon became a member of the church of which Rev. John Eliot, the "apostle to the Indians," was pastor. Oct. 19, 1630, he applied for freemanship and was admitted a freeman May 14, 1634. In 1637 or thereabouts he became one of the company who made a new settlement at Yarmouth, of which town he was made constable in 1639. He resided at Yarmouth the rest of his life, dying in May, 1659. His widow died the following October. Their chil-

STAVELAND. This branch of the Massachusetts Staveland family, the name in early generations being spelled Chase, of the old Kent's-Yarmouth race of the name, is one of the oldest in New England, the coming hither of William Chase from England dating back to within a decade of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers themselves; and of this race, too, which, finding its way to Swansea and Somerset and Fall River and into Rhode Island, has given to the localities some strong, forceful characters who have left their impress for good in the various walks of life. dren were: William, born about 1622, in England; Mary, born in May, 1637, in Roxbury; and Benjamin, born in 1639 in Yarmouth.

(II) William Chase (2), son of William and Mary, born about 1622, in England, came to America with his parents, married and was a resident of Yarmouth. He died Feb. 27, 1685. His children were: William, Jacob, John, Elizabeth, Abraham, Joseph, Benjamin and Samuel.

(III) Joseph Chase, son of William (2), became a resident of Swansea, Mass. He married Feb. 28, 1694, Sarah, daughter of Sampson and Isabel (Tripp) Sherman. His will was proved Jan. 19, 1725. Their children were: Abigail, born July 6, 1695; Lydia, Oct. 18, 1696; Job, Jan. 21, 1698; Alice, Nov. 16, 1700; Ruth, April 15, 1702; Sampson, April 1, 1704; Isabel, Oct. 6, 1705; Joseph, July 11, 1707; Stephen, May 2, 1709; Sarah; Silas; George, Ebenezer and Moses.

(IV) Job Chace, son of Joseph and Sarah, born Jan. 21, 1698, married Nov. 6, 1718, Patience Bourne, and to them came the following children: Job, born April 24, 1720; Susanna, June 21, 1722; Joseph, Sept. 13, 1724; Ebenezer, April 30, 1727; Jonathan, May 11, 1728; and Ichabod, March 30, 1731. Job Chace and his family were residents of Swansea, Mass. His will was proved Dec. 25, 1766.

(V) Jonathan Chase, son of Job and Patience, born May 11, 1728, was a substantial man and farmer of Swansea, Mass., later moving to Paxton. He was also a Quaker preacher. He married May 13, 1754, Mary Earle, daughter of Oliver and Rebecca (Sherman) Earle, and to them came children as follows: Rebecca, born May 16, 1755; Earle, Sept. 29, 1758; Isabel, Sept. 19, 1760; Cromwell, Nov. 13, 1762; Elizabeth, Jan. 8, 1765; Job, June 6, 1767; Oliver, Aug. 24, 1769; Ruth, April 24, 1773; Jonathan, Aug. 31, 1775; Mary, Aug. 24, 1777; Joseph, Feb. 21, 1783 (died April 23, 1785).

(VI) Oliver Chace, son of Jonathan and Mary (Earle) Chase, born Aug. 24, 1769, married (first) Sept. 15, 1796, Susanna Buffinton, born Oct. 18, 1773, daughter of Samuel and Susanna (Chace) Buffinton, of Swansea, and (second) Widow Patience Robinson.

The son of a substantial farmer, though one of modest means, Oliver Chace's boyhood was one of toil, nor did he have the advantages of more than a limited school training, but his rearing was such as to make him self-reliant and industrious and early to learn the value of a dollar. He became not only a good farmer, but as well a carpenter and skilful millwright. In 1806 he began the manufacture of cotton in Swansea, Mass., where he became part owner and took the agency of a small mill, having acquired knowledge and skill in Pawtucket in connection with the manufacturing operations of Samuel Slater. He built the mill in 1806, and equipped it with spinning frames after the pattern introduced by Mr. Slater. This mill he operated successfully until 1813, when he removed to Fall River, where, in connection with Eber Slade, Sheffield Weaver, Hezekiah Wilson, Benjamin Slade, Amey Borden and others, he erected the Troy mill, which has since become famous, for spinning and weaving cotton—the first cotton mill erected in Fall River, which at the time was known as Troy. In the enterprise of the Troy mill Mr. Chace was the guiding mechanic and controlling mind. At the inception of the Troy mill the village was one of not to exceed two hundred inhabitants. Mr. Chace lived to see it one of many thousands and he was for many years identified with the place, and, as agent first of the Troy Company and subsequently of the Pocasset Company, he was actively engaged in extending the borders of the village. The Pocasset Company was projected and established in 1821, mainly through Mr. Chace's efforts. He managed both concerns with rare tact and foresight. He possessed great strength both of body and intellect, was a man of remarkable directness of purpose, and his integrity was beyond question. At one time, boarding a vessel, lately arrived, freighted with shingles, and asking their price, he was answered by the owner, "If you pick them out they will be $5 per thousand; if I pick them out they will be four dollars per thousand." He promptly replied, "Thee may pick them out and I will take the whole cargo." From early boyhood throughout his long life the career of Mr. Chace was one of toil, he being emphatically a working man. He died May 21, 1852, at what was then Tiverton, R. I., now a part of Fall River, Mass., in his eighty-third year. Mrs. Susanna Buffinton Chace passed away July 30, 1827. Mr. Chace was the first of this branch of the family to spell the name Chace, following the spelling of his grandfather rather than that of his father. The children born to Mr. Chace and his wife Susanna were: Harvey, born Aug. 30, 1797; Samuel B., March 11, 1800; Asenath, Feb. 12, 1802; Mary, Nov. 27, 1803; Jonathan, March 31, 1804; Elizabeth, April (?) 12, 1806; and Oliver, Nov. 11, 1812—all born in that part of Swansea which became the town of Somerset, Massachusetts.

(VII) Harvey Chace, son of Oliver and Susanna (Buffinton) Chace, born Aug. 30, 1797, in that part of Swansea, Mass., that became Somerset, married Sept. 8, 1824, Hannah Wood, born Oct. 22, 1800, daughter of William and Mehetible (Maxfield) Wood, of Fall River, but of the Woods of Dartmouth, Mass., the Woods, like the Chaces, being members of the Society of Friends. She died July 20, 1833, and he married (second) Anna Earle, daughter of Silas Earle, of Leicester, Massachusetts.

Harvey Chace grew up in the religious faith of his ancestors and received a common school education. At the early age of six years he did work in his father's mill as a bobbin boy, perhaps inheriting his father's taste and skill in manufacturing; at any rate he later possessed it, whether by inheritance or acquirement. When fifteen years of age he put the machinery in a mill at Burrillville, R. I., known as the Tar-Kiln Factory, which ran five hundred spindles, and started it, and here, working for his father and others, he was employed one year. He entered the employ of the Troy Company, at Fall River, Mass., on its beginning operations in 1813, and while under twenty-one years of age he not infrequently went to Boston to sell yarn and buy cotton. He continued in the employ of this corporation until 1843, a period of thirty years, in the meantime becoming a stockholder, and for fifteen years was the company's agent and treasurer. His father in 1839 had bought the mill estate at Valley Falls, R. I., on the Cumberland side of the Blackstone river, which he leased to his sons Harvey and Samuel B. Chace. These sons formed a co-partnership under the firm name of H. & S. B. Chace, and they removed to that point in 1843 and 1839, respectively. As time passed, through their careful management, industry and integrity, they were greatly prosperous, enlarging their business to meet the growing demands. In 1852, on the death of their father, they took into the firm their brother Oliver Chace, and the three formed the Valley Falls Company and purchased the property just across the river, in what is now the city of Central Falls. Later on, in 1854, Messrs. H. & S. B. Chace purchased the Albion Mills, soon buying a considerable interest in the Manville mills, which they managed. One object of these purchases was to re-arrange the water-power of their privileges. Two years later they bought the Moodus Cotton Factory, in the State of Connecticut. By a division of the properties of the firms in 1868, Harvey Chace became the owner of the Albion Mills, Moodus Mills and certain property in Fall River, and Samuel B. Chace became possessor of the Valley Falls property.

At this change in the affairs of the brothers Mr. Harvey Chace took in with him in the business his sons, James H. and Jonathan Chace, the three forming a new corporation, of which the father was president and the sons agents and treasurers. The properties of the firm in Rhode Island and Connecticut, respectively, the Albion Mills and the Moodus Mills, have continued in the Chace name. The proprietors of the Albion Mills, located in Albion, town of Lincoln, R. I., are now the Valley Falls Company. These men are manufacturers of cotton goods. The Albion Mills are equipped with about 937 looms and 40,000 spindles, have the best of water privileges and the latest machinery.

Mr. Harvey Chace was largely connected with other enterprises and interests. While a resident of Fall River he was one of the promoters and incorporators of the Fall River Reservoir Company, and subsequently was deeply interested in the reservoirs in the Blackstone river. He was one of the founders of the Fall River Savings Bank, and a leading spirit in surveying and opening new roads and turnpikes, namely the Fall River and Stone Bridge and the New Bedford Turnpike. His foresight as a calculator on the traveling needs of the country was second to none and as well none surpassed him as a surveyor in opening new routes. Mr. Chace also was a prime mover in the Pawtucket Gas Company. He was active in laying out the Providence & Worcester railroad, and in securing the course of the southern portion of it; and was one of the first directors of the company. He was the moving spirit in securing the Massachusetts and Rhode Island railroads connecting Valley Falls and Franklin, and became president of the company.

Mr. Chace's political affiliations were with the old Whig party and then with the Republican party. He was earnest and active in the cause of anti-slavery in the days when such position was most unpopular. His home was one of the stations on the old "Underground Railroad" of the day from the Southland to Canada. He, too, was active and prominent in all moral reforms. His example and voice and influence did much for the cause of temperance. As a young man, while for a time he was at Hallowell, Maine, he formed the first temperance society in the town, if not in the country. He did much to advance the welfare of the communities in which his life was lived.

The religious connections of Mr. Chace were with the Swansea, Fall River and Providence Monthly Meetings, the Rhode Island Quarterly Meetings, and the New England Yearly Meeting, of the Society of Friends, and to all the interests of the Friends he was a liberal contributor.

The children born to Mr. Chace and his wife Hannah (Wood) Chace were: Susan B., born Sept. 25, 1825, died in 1833; James Hervey, Nov. 12, 1827; and Jonathan, July 22, 1829. Those born to the second marriage of Mr. Chace were: Silas Earle, born March 7, 1836, died in that same year; and Robert Earle, born Jan. 21, 1838, died the same year. All were born at Troy or Fall River, Mass., except the last named, who was born in Tiverton, Rhode Island.

(VII) JAMES HERVEY CHACE, son of Harvey and Hannah (Wood) Chace, born Nov. 12, 1827, in Fall River, Mass., married Nov. 7, 1860, Lucretia (Russell) Gifford, daughter of William and Rhoda (Tucker) Gifford. Their daughter, Camilla H., married George H. Davenport, of Boston, Mass., and has one daughter, Dorothea, born Aug. 12, 1886.

The first school which Mr. Chace, as well as his brother Jonathan, attended was a small private in Fall River, taught by Sarah Buffum, a wife of Samuel B. Chace, and who herself was a most admirable and capable woman. The girls were educated mainly in the New England Yearly Meeting Boarding School in Providence, James Hervey going there in 1837, and remaining some years. Among their school-mates in that institution were Pliny and Thomas who became eminent educators, both presidents of Haverford College, and the latter a Greek, Latin and Hebrew scholar and one of the translators of the Bible.

Coming from a family of manufacturers of goods, young Chace, as well as his brother, was interested in that line of business under the direction of the father and uncle, and in due time became associated with their father in the business. The history of the extensive business of the Chaces having been previously given in full, it is repeated here as to connect Mr. James Chace with it as a partner. On the division of the business of the Chaces in 1868 Mr. Harvey became owner of the Albion Mills, Moodus took certain property in Fall River, at which place he took into the business as co-partners his sons, James Hervey and Jonathan, the three forming a new corporation, of which Mr. Harvey was president, and the sons agents and managers. This, consisting really of two corporations since been known as the Albion Company, owners and operators of the mills of Fall River now J. H. and J. Chace. The Rhode Island, located at Albion, in Lincoln and Cummaquid about 937 looms and 40,000 spindles. One of the excellent water privileges and is now a mill, equipped with the latest machinery.

Valley Falls Mills were exchanged for the Pawtucket Mills, the corporate names, however, being changed, so that now the Valley Falls Company owns the mills and power at Albion, and the Albion Company took the mills and village of Valley Falls. The Pawtucket water-proof and a small part of the Pawtucket, since 1900, been owned by the Sammons Company, of which Jonathan Chace is president.

James Hervey Chace vice-president. The organization of this company Mr. James Chace was actively engaged in the manufacturing business, but since that time he has been looking after his other interests. For many years he has been a director in the Mechanics Bank, and for a quarter of a century its president. In 1905 he declined a re-election, but was not accepted. He is one of the trustees of the Pawtucket Savings Bank, of Providence. For many years he has been a director in the Fireman's Mutual Insurance Company, the "Hope and Charity," the Worcester Manufacturers Mutual Union Mutual Insurance Company. He is also a director in the Providence Telephone Company since its inception, and is now the president in the company and the only living member of the original board of directors. He is president of the Conanicut Mills of Fall River, Mass. For several years he was president of the Providence Board of Trade.

Mr. Chace has ever been a strong advocate of temperance, and was once the nominee of the Law Enforcement party for governor. He is a birthright member of the Yearly Meeting of Friends for New England.

(VIII) JONATHAN CHACE, son of Harvey and Hannah (Wood) Chace, born July 22, 1829, in Fall River, Mass., married Oct. 12, 1854, Jane C. Moon, daughter of James and Jane (Haines) Moon, of Bucks County, Pa., and three daughters blessed the union.

Mr. Chace was by birthright and inheritance a Friend, coming through a long line of ancestors of that faith, and his education in main came through attendance at a school of that Society, in the New England Yearly Meeting Boarding School in Providence, and at the Leicester (Mass.) Academy. His school days over, he became identified with the business of his father and uncle, manufacturers of cotton goods as described above, and from 1849 to 1856 he was in the dry-goods commission business in Philadelphia. Since 1868, when his father became the owner of the Albion Mills at Albion, in the town of Lincoln, and the Moodus Mills, in Connecticut, Jonathan Chace and his brother James Hervey have been particularly identified with these properties, and through the tact, energy and skill of this family of manufacturers they have developed a great industry and established a high reputation in the commercial world, and have been abundantly blessed with all that success implies. Mr. Jonathan Chace has identified himself with various industrial and other enterprises, including insurance companies, railroads, savings and national banks, etc. He is a director in the Pawtucket Gas Company, and has been president of the Phoenix Bank for about twenty-five years.

Mr. Chace, as are the Friends generally, is a very modest, unassuming, plain, every-day man, though one of large practical commercial experience, skillful in business, of pronounced ability, sound judgment and of sterling character—a clean-cut man whose advice is often sought and followed. In the midst of a busy career he has given some of his time to the demands of his fellow-townsmen and to the State at large, serving them in several public capacities. He at one time was a member of the town council and represented his town in the State Senate. As a Republican he was elected in 1880 from his—the Second—district a member of the United States Congress from Rhode Island, and was re-elected in 1882, serving with marked ability and dignity. On the death of Senator Henry B. Anthony, in September, 1884, Mr. Chace, in January following, was elected by the General Assembly of Rhode Island a United States senator, to fill out the unexpired term of the deceased; and in 1888 he was re-elected, for the full term of six years. This position he resigned in 1889. It goes without saying that Mr. Chace's public career in both branches of the United States Congress was just such as his friends predicted it would be, clean, able and sound, and as dignified as his courtly bearing and commanding presence assured—that of a gentleman of the old school. One has only to read between the lines of the foregoing and this following extract to judge of the man.

On his nomination in 1880 for Congressional representation the Pawtucket Gazette said editorially, in part:

"While we are still of the opinion that the best interests of the State and District demanded the return of Mr. Ballou, we are glad that his mantle is to fall upon such worthy shoulders. Jonathan Chace is a man upon whom the whole party will unite with an earnestness that will tend to win support from intelligent voters of the other side, and his nomination is all the more acceptable in that it is the best example of the office seeking the man that has occurred within our recollection. With practical views as a noted and leading manufacturer, ripe legislative experience and wise political foresight, coupled with the courtly dignity and urbanity eminently befitting a national legislator according to the old school idea, Jonathan Chace as our representative will reflect credit upon the party and honor to the State of Rhode Island."

And on Mr. Chace's election to the United States Senate to succeed Mr. Anthony, in 1885, the Providence Journal of Jan. 21st of that year said editorially:

"Yesterday the members of the General Assembly responded cordially, heartily and willingly to the wish of the great majority of the people of Rhode Island by electing Hon. Jonathan Chace, of Lincoln, to fill the unexpired term of Henry B. Anthony, in the Senate of the United States. It is rare in the history of American politics that a demand for public service has been so weighty, so unanimous, so representative of the highest interests and welfare of the State, and so thoroughly the product of that intelligent and unselfish interest in public affairs upon which the safety of republican institutions depends. When the people of Rhode Island became reluctantly aware that the long and honorable career of Senator Anthony was well nigh over by reason of years and the attacks of disease, and were compelled to consider the question of his possible successor, their eyes were turned, first and foremost from among the many who would serve the State well, to Jonathan Chace, who in the comparatively brief term of his service in the House of Representatives had shown the highest ability for the public service, as well as confirmed the record of high honor, integrity and intelligence earned as a private citizen."

To Senator and Mrs. Chace were born children as follows: Anna Harvey, born Nov. 11, 1856; Susan A., born Aug. 17, 1861, who died March 17, 1868; and Elizabeth M., born Nov. 1, 1868.

ARNOLD BUFFUM CHACE, Chancellor of Brown University, President of the Westminster Bank, Treasurer of the Valley Falls Company, and a man whose name is also well known among men of science, is of the eighth generation of the family in America, his line being from (I) William Chace, through (II) William (2), (III) Joseph, (IV) Job, (V) Jonathan, (VI) Oliver and (VII) Samuel B.

(VII) Samuel B. Chace, son of Oliver and Susanna (Buffinton) Chace, born March 11, 1800, in that part of Swansea, Mass., that became Somerset, married April 4, 1828, Elizabeth, daughter of Arnold and Rebecca (Gould) Buffum, all of them being of Troy, Massachusetts.

Mr. Chace received such educational advantages as the period and conditions about his boyhood afforded, which were not liberal. When but a lad he began working in the cotton mill of his father, and from that time on through life with but short intermissions for attendance at the common schools, he was personally interested in the manufacture of cotton goods. Like his brother Harvey he inherited or early acquired a taste and fondness for everything pertaining to a well-built and well-equipped industrial plant. He possessed a sound practical mind and that love for mechanism, for the construction of machinery, which stood him in good turn for the business that he made his life work. In about 1828 he entered into manufacturing at Fall River, as an owner, he then being a resident of that town, associated with Mr. Joseph C. Luther, and not long thereafter with the same partner, and also with his brother, Harvey Chace, in another establishment at Grafton, Mass. The financial crisis of 1837 found them with many customers to whom they had sold goods who were unable to meet their obligations, which condition so crippled the firm that they were compelled to succumb to the pressure of the times and to stop their spindles, and compromise with their creditors by paying them eighty cents on the dollar. When the storm was over, the Chace brothers (the third partner having previously dropped out) resumed the business, removing in 1839, their machinery to Valley Falls. They lived in the town of Cumberland, Rhode Island, their father having purchased for their use the manufacturing property on the Cumberland side of the Blackstone river; and through their enterprise, industry and the careful attention given to every detail of their business they were with the passing years enabled to greatly enlarge their operations. These two brothers did business under the firm name of H. & S. B. Chace and became residents of Valley Falls, Samuel B. in 1839 and Harvey in 1843, and from that time on were largely and influentially identified with the interests of that section. On the death of their father in 1852, the three brothers, Harvey, Samuel B. and Oliver Chace, organized the Valley Falls Company to hold the real estate left them by their father and located on the Cumberland side of the Blackstone River, and they purchased the property on the Smithfield side of the Blackstone River. Later on, in 1854, Messrs. H. & S. B. Chace bought the Albion Mills, and by a division of the properties of the brothers in 1868, Harvey Chace became the owner of the Albion Mills, and certain property in Fall River, and Samuel B. Chace became possessor of the Valley Falls property. The property at Albion still remains in the family.

Referring to the mechanical turn of mind of the late Samuel B. Chace, and that for construction of buildings, etc., in connection with manufacturing plants, it was under his superintendence that the curved stone dam across the Blackstone river at Valley Falls was built in 1852. This piece of substantial work will stand, perhaps, for centuries as a monument to his thoroughness and methods. One occurrence in the business careers of the Chace brothers, Harvey and Samuel B., which was always a source of great pleasure to them, and as well evidenced the high sense of honor of the men, was that, years after their financial trouble of 1837, when they were again on their feet, so to speak, they searched out the old debts of the concern which had long since been settled by partial payment and paid them in full, principal and interest.

Mr. Chace was by no means a selfish man. He lived not alone for self, but was broad, enterprising and public-spirited. He loved improvement, advancement, and left substantial evidence of this. He linked his name, too, with the great moral reforms of his day, supporting cordially the temperance cause and that of prohibition. He was an opponent of human slavery and was active in the anti-slavery cause. Said William Lloyd Garrison, in part, at the funeral of Mr. Chace: "It is an easy matter to be an Abolitionist at the present day, because it is to be on the winning side. But it was a different affair to assume that title only ten years ago. Yet, not ten, but thirty-five years since, our departed friend, in the darkest and stormiest period of the Anti-slavery conflict, gave his adhesion to the cause. From that day his door and heart were open to the proscribed advocates of the oppressed; and, in the face of the iniquitous Fugitive Slave Law, his home was converted into a station-house on a branch of the underground railroad, running from New Bedford to Canada; and no efforts were wanting on his part to make it a safe retreat. What a blending of moral courage with rare gentleness of disposition!"

To the marriage of Mr. Chace and Elizabeth Buffum (born Dec. 9, 1806) were born the following children: George A., born March 14, 1830, died in 1839; Adelia B., born Feb. 22, 1832, died in 1839; Susan E., born Nov. 19, 1834, died in 1837; John G., born July 28, 1837, died in 1842; Oliver, born Nov. 29, 1841, died in 1843; Samuel O., born Oct. 19, 1843, died in 1867; Arnold Buffum, born Nov. 10, 1845; Elizabeth B., born Dec. 10, 1847; Edward G., born March 17, 1849, died in 1871; and Mary E., born Jan. 4, 1852. Two of the sons of Mr. Chace, Samuel O. and Arnold B., were liberally educated, both being graduates of Brown University.

Samuel B. Chace, after a most useful, successful and well-spent life, was called to his reward Dec. 17, 1870. Mrs. Chace died Dec. 12, 1899.

Arnold Buffum Chace, son of Samuel B., was born in Valley Falls, town of Cumberland, R. I., Nov. 10, 1845, and received his primary schooling chiefly under private tutors and at a boarding school at Hopedale, Mass. He was prepared for college by private teachers and in 1862 entered Brown University, graduating therefrom in the class of 1866, taking the degree of A. B. After finishing his college course, he spent one year in study in the chemical department of the Lawrence Scientific School in Cambridge, Mass. Following this he spent one year in study in the chemical laboratory of the Ecole de Medicine, Paris. Upon his return home he taught chemistry and physics for one term in his Alma Mater. He then went into the Agassiz Museum at Cambridge, under Prof. Shaler for a period of study. He has been a student of mathematics all his life, and is the author of a treatise entitled "A Certain Class of Cubic Surfaces Treated by Quaternions" in the Journal of Mathematics. Mr. Chace is a member of the Review Club, formerly the Browning Club, for miscellaneous study and research. Of this club he has been president for a number of years and has directed its work, having himself contributed many articles on mathematical subjects. He was granted the degree of Doctor of Sciences by his Alma Mater in the year 1892. While in college he stood second in his class, and he is a man of serious habits of thought and character, and is distinctly intellectual. In 1869 he engaged in business, being at that time elected treasurer of the Valley Falls Company, and he has continued in such capacity. He was elected to the Board of trustees of Brown University in 1876, and to the office of treasurer in 1882, holding the latter until 1901. On Oct. 9, 1907, he was elected Chancellor of Brown University, succeeding the late William Goddard. Since 1871 he has been a director of the Westminster Bank, and was elected its president in 1894. For a number of years he was one of the directors of the National Bank of North America.

On Oct. 24, 1871, Mr. Chace was married to Eliza Chace Greene, daughter of Christopher A. and Sarah A. Greene. Four children have blessed their union, namely: Arnold B., Jr., born Aug. 14, 1872; Malcolm Greene, born March 12, 1875;

Margaret Lilly, born Nov. 20, 1876; and Edward G., born Oct. 16, 1882. Mr. Chace has three grandchildren, A. B., Jr., having a son, Jonathan; Malcolm G., a son, Malcolm G., Jr., and a daughter Eliott.

JOHNSON (Providence family). The name Johnson is an ancient one of Rhode Island, as the family has been an honorable one in the Commonwealth's history. John Johnson was among the fifty-nine who were admitted inhabitants of the Island of Aquidneck in 1638. There died in 1702 a John Johnson, of Westerly, whose will was made there, and it is assumed that this John Johnson is identical with the John Johnson whose children were: John, Mary, Elizabeth, Joseph, Rebecca, Rachel, Jonathan and Jonah, the births of nearly all of whom are of record in the old Massachusetts town of Rehoboth, as those of John and Mary Johnson, and as occurring between 1663 and 1685. And from this source came the early Johnsons of Westerly, and of several of the towns created out of it, largely through Joseph Johnson and his wife, Sarah (Dolivan), whose children were Reuben, Stephen, Sarah, Joseph, Gideon, Daniel and Nathaniel.

Some of the Johnsons who were early admitted freemen of the Colony of Rhode Island, as of Colonial record, were: John, of Newport, 1675; Elisha, of East Greenwich, 1715; John, of Warwick, 1724; Elkanah, of Warwick, 1729; Elisha, of Warwick, 1732; Joseph, of Charlestown, 1739; and Elisha, of Newport, 1744.

Since long prior to the American Revolution one branch of the Rhode Island Johnsons, which for convenience is here styled the Providence family, because of the long and honorable record there of several of the name to which this article is specially directed, has been a continuous one in portions of Kent county, where the name has been a synonym for useful citizenship and high public service, one Benjamin Johnson becoming an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island. And in the town of Warwick and subsequently at Providence figured prominently the late Oliver Johnson, Esq., a grandson of Hon. Benjamin, founder of the wholesale drug establishment of Oliver Johnson & Company, long a member of the city council and prominent and useful in citizenship and conspicuous in Masonry; and here, too, figured the latter's son, long his business associate, the late William S. Johnson, whose son, the present Edwin A. Johnson, now of Providence, of the firm of E. A. Johnson & Company, is worthily wearing the family name and sustaining the family reputation. Of this Greenwich and Warwick-Providence family of Johnsons there is a record for generations in the town of West Greenwich beginning with

(I) Elisha Johnson, who came from Wales. He located in Frenchtown, East Greenwich, where he erected a mill and engaged in fulling and sponging cloth. He married Deborah Sprague, who died Jan. 12, 1772.

(II) Isaac Johnson (son of Elisha), then of West Greenwich, was married Oct. 26, 1740, to Martha Johnson, of East Greenwich, and on May 5, 1744, to Audry Spencer, a descendant of Lord Robert Spencer, son of the Second Duke of Marlborough. On child, Martha, was born to the first marriage, Feb. 12, 1742, and the following to the second, as per West Greenwich town records: Nicholas, born July 4, 1745; Elizabeth, born Feb. 8, 1746-47; and Benjamin, born Feb. 3, 1749.

(III) Benjamin Johnson, son of Isaac and Audry, born Feb. 3, 1749, was one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas and of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island for many years. He married Mary Weaver, born June 28, 1752, and their children of West Greenwich town record were: Elisha, born May 4, 1773 (died June 15, 1773); Levi, July 13, 1774; Elisha, Dec. 15, 1775; Isaac, June 14, 1784 (died Feb. 27, 1785); Deborah, Jan. 7, 1786; Polly, April 20, 1791 (died March 10, 1792); and Polly (2), March 4, 1793.

(IV) Elisha Johnson, son of Benjamin and Mary, born Dec. 15, 1775, died Sept. 19, 1852. He married May 12, 1792, Asee Albro, daughter of Sarah Albro, of East Greenwich, Rhode Island, and their children of West Greenwich town record were: Christopher, born Aug. 25, 1793; Nehemiah, born March 23, 1795; Sarah, born July 14, 1797; and Oliver, born June 14, 1799. They had seven others, namely: Mary, born Dec. 27, 1801; Martih, born March 3, 1808; Orrin, born Oct. 5, 1810; Benjamin W., born Jan. 16, 1814; Elisha, born May 1, 1818; Emily, born Feb. 24, 1822; and Harriet, born Feb. 7, 1824.

(V) Oliver Johnson, son of Elisha and Asee (Albro) Johnson, was born June 14, 1799, in West Greenwich, R. I. He acquired his education in the common schools of his native town, and at Washington Academy, at Wickford, Rhode Island. At the early age of fifteen years he began to teach school, and thus worked his way through the academy and was enabled to acquire a good education. He continued to teach until he was twenty-three years of age, having taught at different times in Exeter, East Greenwich, North Kingstown and Warwick, being quite successful as an educator and in the management of schools under his charge. In 1822 he stopped teaching, and with Whipple A. Arnold engaged in general merchandising at Centreville, R. I., the firm name being Arnold and Johnson. After being thus associated for about two years the partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Arnold continued to carry on the business alone. He next opened a variety store in a building owned and occupied by Dr. Sylvester Knight, and, having a desire to learn the drug business, added drugs and medicine to his stock. For some time he was assisted by Dr. Knight, and studied with him until he had acquired a thorough knowledge of the drug business at Centreville until 1833. A part of the time while there he kept the "Centreville Hotel," and also engaged in cotton manufacturing with John J. Wood. In April, 1833, he removed to Providence, where he ever afterward resided. The same year of his removal to Providence he and Dr. Knight opened a wholesale drug store on Weybosset street, where they continued until the death of Dr. Knight, in 1841, the firm style being Oliver Johnson & Co. The stock and fixtures of this store were then sold to Grosvenor & Chace, of Providence, and he afterward opened a store for the sale of drugs, groceries, cotton goods, and manufacturers' supplies, in which he continued alone and succeeded in building up a large and profitable trade. In 1846 he removed his business to No. 13 Exchange street, Providence. In consequence of increased trade his store was greatly enlarged and later was extended through to Exchange place.

In 1852 Mr. Johnson associated with him in business his son, the late William S. Johnson, and the firm continued as Oliver Johnson & Son until 1859, when Benjamin W. Spink, who had for several years been in Mr. Johnson's employ, was also admitted as a partner, and the business has since been conducted under the firm name of Oliver Johnson & Co. His uprightness of character and business qualifications won for him the esteem of his fellow citizens, and caused him to be called upon to fill various public positions. He was justice of the peace and notary public in Warwick for some time, in 1841, 1852, 1854, 1855, 1856, a member of the city council of Providence, and for several years a member of the school board. He was a representative in the General Assembly of Rhode Island in 1854, 1855 and 1857, and was a member of the two conventions in 1841, called for the purpose of drafting the Constitution of the State. He served as a director in several insurance companies; was a director of the City National Bank of Providence, and of the Mechanics Savings Bank from 1864 until the time of his death, having been one of the incorporators of the institution in 1854.

Mr. Johnson was an active and prominent member of the Order of Free Masons, having become a member of Manchester Lodge, No. 12, at Coventry, R. I., June 6, 1823. Notwithstanding the religious and political persecution to which the Free Masons were subjected during the anti-Masonic movement, Mr. Johnson remained firm in his adherence to the order. He was twice called before the church of which he was then a member to answer the charge of being a Free Mason, but the charge was finally withdrawn. He received all the degrees in ancient Masonry and the Order of Knighthood, and was honored with the highest offices in the gift of the fraternity. He was elected Grand Master of Masons by the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island in 1855-56 (Grand Commander), Eminent Commander of St. John's (Encampment) Commandery, in 1859; and Grand High Priest of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Rhode Island, in 1860. He received in all forty-four degrees and orders, including the degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite.

On July 6, 1816, when seventeen years of age, Mr. Johnson united with the First Baptist Church in Exeter, R. I., and thereafter was a member of the Warwick and Coventry Church, with which he united Sept. 5, 1824; the First Baptist Church at Providence, of which he became a member Nov. 30, 1837; the Ninth Baptist Church, Aug. 10, 1847; and the First Baptist Church, with which he again united Oct. 26, 1850; he served with efficiency in various church relations.

Mr. Johnson was twice married, first, Sept. 4, 1824, to Hannah S. Davis, daughter of Ezra D. and Mehetabel (Reynolds) Davis, of Davisville, R. I. She died May 24, 1862, aged fifty-two years, and he married (second) Feb. 23, 1864, Cordelia M. Stanwood, daughter of Solomon and Jane D. (Hamor) Stanwood, of Ellsworth, Maine. Two sons were born to the first marriage, William Sullivan and Edwin A., the last named dying at the age of eighteen years.

Mr. Johnson was for many years a member of the standing committee of the Rhode Island Society for the Encouragement of Domestic Industry, and he gave considerable attention to agriculture, having for a period before his death owned a farm on Cowesett Bay, in Warwick, R. I. In 1839 he purchased a residence on Broadway, Providence, where he resided at the time of his death, which occurred May 20, 1892, when he was within a month of ninety-three years of age.

William Sullivan Johnson, son of Oliver and Hannah S. (Davis) Johnson, grew up in the business of his father, and after his school days were over, in 1852, became his father's business associate under the firm style of Oliver Johnson & Son, and as stated in the foregoing Mr. Benjamin W. Spink was admitted to a partnership in 1859, when the firm was changed to Oliver Johnson & Co. It so remained during the lifetime of the younger Johnson and still remains so.

Mr. Johnson in both private and business life was an exemplary man, straightforward and upright to the highest degree, with a heart full of charity for those in distress, whom he was ever ready to assist. "Let not your right hand know what your left hand doeth" most truly applied to Mr. Johnson's bestowal of charity and assistance. He was a tender husband, a devoted father and a true friend.

Mr. Johnson was prominent in Masonry and Odd Fellowship, particularly the latter. He was a member of St. John's Commandery, K. T., St. John's Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and Providence Royal Arch Chapter. In Odd Fellowship he held the rank of Grand Representative of Rhode Island, was a member of Canonicus Lodge, No. 9, and of Moshassuck Encampment, No. 1, and had filled at different periods every office in the subordinate lodge of which he was a member, and all of the important offices in the Grand Lodge and Grand Encampment. For more than half his life he devoted his time to the advancement and development of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, which largely owes its present prosperity in Rhode Island to the individual efforts of Mr. Johnson, who was always foremost in every work that promised benefit to the order. His time was always at the disposal of Odd Fellowship. Mr. Johnson, too, was a devout and practical Christian and an indefatigable worker in the Universalist faith, to which he held. For more than thirty years he had been a prominent member of the Church of the Mediator, holding the office of president of the parish congregation, and was one of the trustees for a number of years. At the time of his death he was the superintendent of the Sunday-school, and had for years devoted his time to the spiritual and temporal welfare of the church.

Mr. Johnson died at his home in Broadway, Providence, R. I., Dec. 6, 1887, when in the sixty-first year of his age, his wife and two children surviving him. He married Elizabeth Christina Warner, and to them were born two children: (1) Josephine Gardiner, born July 20, 1849, died Nov. 4, 1905. She married William M. Greene, and they had two children, Howard Johnson and Gertrude Rugg. The latter married Theodore F. Pevear, who is now advertising manager of the Providence Journal, and has two children, William Wentworth and Theodore F. (2) Edwin Augustus, born Aug. 24, 1854, married Jan. 1, 1879, Clara Idelle Davis, daughter of Henry D. Davis, and they have had three children: Ethel Augusta, Florence Warner and Mildred.

HOWARD JOHNSON GREENE, son of William M. and Josephine Gardiner (Johnson) Greene, was born Jan. 22, 1876. He attended the public schools of Providence, and later Brown University in the class of 1899. He is a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity. In September, 1893, Mr. Greene became a clerk for Oliver Johnson & Co., and upon his return from college in 1896, entered actively into the business, on Jan. 20, 1905, being made manager for Oliver Johnson & Company.

On June 8, 1898, Mr. Greene was married to Miss Mary Isabelle Cook, of Ottumwa, Iowa, and they have had two children: Eleanor, born June 8, 1899, who died March 4, 1900; and Denison Warner, born Oct. 4, 1901.

FITTS (Seekonk-East Providence and Providence family). The forerunner—the immediate Fitts or Fitz ancestor—of the Bristol county, Mass., family of the name was Daniel Fitts, who was also the immediate ancestor of the Connecticut branch of the Fittses; while the numerous family of the name in Worcester county sprang from Robert Fitts, an uncle of Daniel, both of Ipswich, Mass., descendants of Robert Fitts or Fitz, from whom also sprang in maternal lines Daniel Webster and the distinguished Choate family of the United States.

In what is now the town of East Providence, R. I., formerly the town of Seekonk, Mass., has lived for several generations a branch of the family in question—some of the descendants of David Fitts, of Bristol county, Mass. One of the sons of David, the late Joseph Bucklin Fitts, lived his long life of eighty-one years, with little exception, in Seekonk, East Providence territory, a substantial man and useful citizen. He so reared his children as to perpetuate worthily the family name, several being leading citizens and representative and successful business men of their respective communities, among them Joseph D. Fitts, superintendent of the park system of Providence; David B. Fitts, formerly assistant city engineer of Providence; James S. Fitts, chief engineer of the large Wamsutta mills in New Bedford, Mass.; and Henry L. Fitts, proprietor of the Darlington Elevator at Pawtucket. Sketches of these men and the family history and genealogy of their branch of the Fitts family follow in chronological order from the American ancestor.

(I) Robert Fitts (Fitt or Fitz), he signing his name "Robert Fitt, Planter," says tradition, came from England in 1635, settling first in Ipswich. Be this as it may, it is certain that he removed with his family in later years from Salisbury, Mass., to Ipswich. He probably received land in Salisbury in the first division, and in 1640. He married Grace, born about 1603, sister of Robert Lord. He died in Ipswich, May 9, 1665, and his widow passed away there April 25, 1684. Their only child was Abraham.

(II) Abraham Fitts, son of Robert, married (first) May 16, 1655, Sarah, daughter of Simon Thompson, of Ipswich, Mass. She died June 5, 1664, and he married (second) Jan. 7, 1668, Rebecca ———, widow of Tyler Birdley or Burley. Mr. Fitts received land in Salisbury in 1654, and removed thither at the request of his father-in-law. He took the freeman's oath in 1674. He was impressed for the Narragansett Expedition in 1675. He died March 27, 1692, leaving a widow. His children were: Abraham, born about 1655-56; Sarah, born Feb. 21, 1657, who died June 14, 1660; Robert, born March 31, 1660, who died June 15, 1661; Sarah, born March 15, 1661 (to first wife); Robert, born May 28, 1670, who died when young; Richard, born Feb. 26, 1672; and Isaac, born July 6, 1675 (to second marriage).

(III) Abraham Fitts (2), son of Abraham, born about 1655-56, married (first) Margaret Choate, daughter of John Choate. She died Feb. 28, 1692, and he married (second) Jan. 9, 1693-94, Mary Ross. He lived in Ipswich, Mass., and died Aug. 18, 1714. His widow Mary died Aug. 16, 1739. His children were: Abraham; Ebenezer, born Aug. 5, 1685, who died when young; Anna, born Jan. 18, 1686-87; Robert, born July 19, 1690;

Henry L. Fitts!

Margaret, born Jan. 25, 1692 (to first wife); Mary, born Jan. 8, 1695; Mercy, born March 3, 1696; Sarah, born March 15, 1698; Samuel, born Aug. 16, 1699; John, born March 31, 1701; Mary, born March 13, 1703; Ephraim, born Sept. 30, 1705; and Ebenezer (2), born April 12, 1708 (to second wife).

(IV) Abraham Fitts (3) married (first) Phebe Fuller, their intention of marriage being published March 3, 1722; she died Aug. 25, 1739. He married (second) Widow Elizabeth Cross, their intention of marriage being published Nov. 18, 1739. Previous to 1746 both were admitted to the church in Ipswich. Mr. Fitts died in June, 1763. His children—all born of the first marriage—were: Abraham, born Sept. 29, 1723, who died Oct. 3, 1727; Daniel, baptized May 2, 1725; Phebe, baptized Oct. 6, 1728; Mary, baptized Feb. 1, 1730; Abraham, baptized Jan. 23, 1732, who died Sept. 30, 1736; James, baptized July 7, 1734, who died May 20, 1736; Sarah, baptized March 21, 1736; and Abraham (2), who died April 11, 1738.

(V) Daniel Fitts, son of Abraham Fitts (3), baptized May 2, 1725, married Dec. 15, 1750, Christiana Smith. Mr. Fitts removed from Ipswich, Mass., to Pomfret, Conn., and after living there about one year moved with his family to Ashford, in the same State, in 1770, buying a farm of 360 acres located "about one-half mile northwest of the old meeting-house." It was bounded south by land of Col. Thomas Knowlton, and embraced about 100 acres of the farm which was owned and occupied by William Knowlton (father of Col. Thomas) from 1748 to the time of his death in 1753; and it is a noteworthy fact that about one half of the 360 acres was owned and occupied successively by his son Stephen, grandson Stephen, Jr., and granddaughter Maria (Fitts) Moseley from 1795 to 1889. Daniel Fitts no doubt inherited his great-grandfather's military spirit, as he is found in the field at the very beginning of the Revolutionary war, serving for ten days in the Ashford Company of Capt. Thomas Knowlton on the Lexington Alarm in April, 1775, it being the first organized body of troops from beyond the State to arrive in the vicinity of Boston. Although fifty years of age, having a wife and five children, he re-enlisted May 6, 1775, in the company of Capt. Thomas Knowlton, being the 5th Company of the 3d Regiment, Israel Putnam, colonel. He died while in the service near Boston, Sept. 7, 1775, the company record not stating whether from wounds received in conflict or from disease, and he was buried in the immediate vicinity.

To Daniel and Christiana (Smith) Fitts were born children as follows: Daniel, Abraham, Moses, Eunice, Israel, Stephen, Solomon, James, David and Lydia.

(VI) David Fitts was born July 1, 1767, at Ipswich, Mass., and died May 18, 1844. During his boyhood he was apprenticed to a tanner. Removing to Providence, he worked there for Colonel Abbott until he bought a house and land on the banks of Ten Mile river, in Seekonk, Mass., where he engaged in tanning and custom shoemaking, also cultivating a small farm. He was a frank, honest, open-hearted man, genial and happy in his social relations and domestic life. He fitted his children for useful and prosperous lives, which to an unusual degree they all enjoyed. A prompt and regular church-goer, he was absent from Thanksgiving service only once in a period of fifty years. His health was so rugged that he never needed a physician.

The family of David and Delia (Bucklin) Fitts, of Bristol county, Mass. (the marriage of the parents being of Rehoboth town record as having occurred there Feb. 8, 1795), comprised children, as per Rehoboth and Seekonk town records, as follows: Almira, born April 25, 1797, who married Dec. 23, 1827, Joel Whitaker; Albert, born April 1, 1800; Mary, born March 18, 1802, who married Nov. 8, 1821, Simeon Newton Cutler; James Smith, born Dec. 31, 1804; David Bucklin, born May 10, 1807; Charlotte Delia, born Jan. 19, 1811, who married May 6, 1832, Almond O. Bourne; Charles Harris, born April 30, 1813; Abbie, born April 13, 1815; and Joseph Bucklin, born March 14, 1818, the latter two being of Seekonk record. The mother of these was born in Rehoboth, Mass., the daughter of John and Jemima Bucklin; she died April 30, 1861, then a widow, aged eighty-six years.

(VII) Joseph Bucklin Fitts, son of David and Delia, was born March 14, 1818, in that part of Seekonk, Mass., which is now the town of East Providence, R. I., and here with the exception of a year or so his long life was passed. He was received into the Newman Congregational Church there April 3, 1842, and continued to worship with that congregation until the time of his death, for a period of nearly sixty years. From his youth up through a life of eighty-one years he was a pronounced—we may say radical—temperance man and exerted his influence for the good of that cause. He was at one time, along in the late eighties, chosen a member of the town council of East Providence, through a coalition of the Prohibition and Democratic parties. His occupation through life was farming. His many good traits of character endeared him to the community in which he lived and moved so many years and he was held by them in great esteem and respect.

On Feb. 22, 1849, Mr. Fitts was married to Elizabeth H. Dennis, and their children were: Joseph D., born March 16, 1850; David B., born April 21, 1853; James S., born March 11, 1856; and Henry Lyman, born June 2, 1861. Elizabeth H. (Dennis) Fitts was a descendant of Isaac and Mary Allerton, who came over in the "Mayflower."

Mr. Fitts died at his home on North Broadway, in East Providence, R. I., March 21, 1899, aged eighty-one years. He possessed a robust constitution, and up to almost the close of life was quite active, apparently showing little diminution in his physical powers until a few months before the final summons came, and even then his strong constitution enabled him to resist disease with tenacity.

(VIII) JOSEPH DENNIS FITTS, son of Joseph Bucklin and Elizabeth H. (Dennis) Fitts, and superintendent of the park system of the city of Providence, was born March 16, 1850, in Seekonk, Mass., and there spent his boyhood, until he was sixteen years old, when the family moved to Warren, R. I., and a year later to East Providence. In 1868 and 1869 he attended the Pawtucket high school, and in May, 1869, entered the office of the city engineer in Providence, for the succeeding three years applying himself rigidly and persistently to studying and familiarizing himself with the intricate details and multitudinous technicalities of the business. His professional studies being completed, he was appointed assistant engineer, and during his course of civil engineering progressive ideas characterized all his work. From the year 1871 he had charge of the public parks and public buildings. The staking out of the city hall, fire stations, police stations and ward rooms, and the erection of the English high school and other public buildings, were under his personal supervision. In March, 1892, he was appointed a member of the committee on Water Supply of the East Providence fire district, and secretary of the Executive committee on the construction of the East Providence fire district. On Oct. 1, 1896, he was made superintendent of parks, and since Aug. 22, 1903, has also been secretary of the park commission. His handiwork in Providence has gained a reputation among municipal governments in the direction of modern development that has proved far-reaching and in the highest degree beneficial. The public institutions and buildings, together with the beautiful and most admired Roger Williams park, Blackstone park and Davis park, present shining examples of Mr. Fitts's skill as a landscape architect. The twenty-four parks under his care contain a total of 608½ acres, and the metropolitan park system will eventually add about thirty-six miles of boulevard and many hundred acres of park land, including lakes, hills, forests, river and bay shores, so there is no fear that Mr. Fitts will become an idle man.

Fraternally Mr. Fitts is a member of Mount Vernon Lodge, No. 4, A. F. & A. M.; Providence Chapter; St. John's Commandery No. 1, of Providence; and Palestine Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. On Dec. 21, 1875, he married Mary Alice Hunt, daughter of William and Anna Hunt. To them have been born two sons: Arthur Herbert, Nov. 3, 1876, and William Hunt, Aug. 21, 1880.

(VIII) JAMES SUMNER FITTS, son of Joseph Bucklin and Elizabeth H. (Dennis) Fitts, and chief engineer of the Wamsutta mills in New Bedford, Mass., was born in Seekonk, Mass., March 11, 1856. His education was obtained in the schools of East Providence, the Pawtucket high school, and the Polytechnic School at Worcester, Mass., from which he graduated in 1874. For a year he was employed at the Rhode Island Locomotive Works, and for six years was a fireman on the Boston & Providence railroad. For twelve years he was at the Corliss works, most of the time engaged in erecting engines in different parts of the country. Since 1892 he has been chief engineer of the Wamsutta mills, in New Bedford, Mass. Mr. Fitts is a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Providence, What Cheer Lodge, I. O. O. F., and the Knights of Pythias in Providence, the Good Fellows and Knights of Malta in New Bedford, and of the North Congregational Church, of Providence.

On Jan. 14, 1880, Mr. Fitts married Lucy Marion Britton, daughter of Nelson W. Britton, of Rumford, R. I., and to them have come three children: Helen Estelle, born Feb. 14, 1882; Ethel Marion, born Jan. 14, 1883, who is now a stenographer for the Whitney Law Corporation of New Bedford, Mass.; and Herbert Sumner, born Nov. 6, 1885.

(VIII) HENRY LYMAN FITTS, proprietor of the Darlington Elevator in Pawtucket, R. I., was born June 2, 1861, in Seekonk, Mass., son of Joseph Bucklin and Elizabeth H. (Dennis) Fitts. His early school days were passed in East Providence, and later he attended the Bryant & Stratton Commercial College in Providence. At the age of nineteen years, Aug. 1, 1880, he began his business life in Pawtucket with George Kent, in the grain elevator business, and remained with him seventeen years. His success came through years of close application to his work, and in 1897 he became the proprietor of the Darlington Grain Elevator, to which he has since devoted all his energy, and he has built up one of the leading commercial houses of its line in this section.

Mr. Fitts is a member of Union Lodge, No. 10, A. F. & A. M.; Pawtucket Chapter, No. 4, and Holy Sepulchre Commandery, and of Palestine Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. In his religious connections he is a member of the Pawtucket Congregational Church.

On April 28, 1885, Mr. Fitts was married in Pawtucket, R. I., to Miss Susie M. Polsey, daughter of George E. and Harriet A. (Richards) Polsey, and to them have been born four children: Una Augusta, born Oct. 17, 1886; George Henry, Sept. 14, 1890; Joseph Abner, Dec. 3, 1893; and Ruth Imogene, Jan. 21, 1895.

P. FRANCIS WALKER, M. D., one of the most prominent and successful physicians of Providence, R. I., was born July 30, 1859, at Dighton, Mass., son of Nehemiah and Emily A. (Bliss)

Walker, and a descendant of an old and honored Dighton family.

Dr. Walker was educated in the schools of Taunton, Mass., and the Bristol Academy, and in 1881 graduated from the medical department of Boston University. In that year he came to Providence and located in practice on Cranston street, where he has since continued with much success. Dr. Walker's professional skill has brought him a large and lucrative practice and his sterling traits of character have won him a large circle of personal friends. He is a member of the Homeopathic Society, is a thirty-second-degree Mason and a Shriner, and is connected socially with the Pomham, West Side and Automobile Clubs. He has taken a deep interest in educational affairs and for eighteen years has been an active member of the Providence school committee.

Dr. Walker was united in marriage with Miss Hubbard, and to them have been born three children, namely: Hope, Roger Clinton and Helen.

STEPHEN WATSON GRIFFIN (deceased), for many years a most able and efficient official of the town of Coventry, and a man and citizen of the highest type, sprang from an old and honored Rhode Island family.

Robert Griffin, the first of whom there is record in Rhode Island, was of Newport, where he was made a freeman in 1655 and a commissioner in 1656. His son Benjamin was one of those who had granted them, Oct. 31, 1677, 5,000 acres of land, at which time he was a resident of Newport. From these descended another Benjamin, born Dec. 14, 1798, who married Elizabeth Gardiner, born March 31, 1798, daughter of David and Elizabeth Gardiner of South Kingstown. He was an agriculturist all of his life in Cranston and Foster, R. I., and died April 20, 1879, in Foster. His wife passed away Oct. 14, 1851. Their children were: Nicholas, born Dec. 22, 1822, died the same day; Benjamin, born Jan. 2, 1824, died April 20, 1879; Joseph, born Jan. 25, 1825, died March 25, 1900; Stephen Watson, born Aug. 3, 1826, died Aug. 12, 1903; Lewis, born May 21, 1828, died March 10, 1836; Thomas was born Sept. 25, 1829; Elizabeth, born Sept. 25, 1831, died Aug. 25, 1836; Gardiner W., born March 19, 1833, died July 18, 1869; Mary A., born April 22, 1835, married Henry Crossman, and one of their daughters resides in Pawtucket; William W., born June 18, 1837, removed to California, where five of his children reside, William W., Jr., Joseph T., Agnes I., Mary E. and Frank H.; George A., born April 4, 1839, died March 31, 1842; Abby A., born May 21, 1841, died March 14, 1901, the wife of Wheaton Sweet. None of these left descendants other than mentioned except Thomas, whose son, Dr. Clifton Griffin, is a well-known physician of Providence; and Gardiner W., who married Hannah Champlain, sister of the wife of Stephen W. Their son, Gardiner W., Jr., was born

April 29, 1869, and died May 27, 1886. He was reared by his uncle, Stephen W., and was a young man of much promise. After the death of the mother of the children mentioned, the father, Benjamin, married (second) Sarah S. Austin, who died in 1904. •

Stephen Watson Griffin was born in Exeter, R. I., Aug. 3, 1826. In his youth he displayed more than ordinary strength of mind, and doubtless, had he lived in a later day, when education was less a matter of financial outlay, he would have achieved an even more signal success in any walk of life for which his capabilities fitted him. In his boyhood the family removed to Cranston, R. I., where they remained until Stephen was about fourteen years old, when they became residents of Foster, R. I. During his youth he was variously occupied and at the age of eighteen years began the battle of life equipped with a sturdy and vigorous constitution, a resolute will, energy, industry and perseverance. Having been reared on a farm, his drift was naturally in the direction of agricultural pursuits and for several years he was thus employed, working for others in the summer seasons and attending school in the fall and winter. By study and application he gained something more than an ordinary mastery of the English branches and fitted himself to take charge of a neighboring school, which he presided over for several years, in the meantime learning the trade of brickmaking. He had always manifested a keen interest in public matters and had high ideals regarding the requirements for the proper discharge of public trusts, and his ability and interest were recognized in his election, on the Republican ticket, to the office of clerk of the town of Coventry and clerk of the Probate court. He abandoned his trade and devoted his entire attention to serving the public, and, as he was re-elected year after year he gave to the people of Coventry not only his ability, his learning and careful and conscientious service, but the best years of his life. Had he chosen another path, he would have pursued it with the same zeal, industry and intelligent effort, and there is little doubt that he would have ranked among the State's most successful men in the matter of accumulation of property; but while he left to his family a fair competency, his good name, his integrity, rigid honesty, and the fond remembrance entertained for him by his hundreds of friends, represent to them a far greater value than riches. In every capacity of public or private trust he gave the best that was in him. For twelve years he was clerk of the school committee of Coventry and did much to advance the standard of education in the community. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and of Anthony Lodge, No. 21, I. O. O. F. At the age of seventeen years he became a member of the Baptist Church at Sterling, Conn., but during his long residence at Washington village, in the town of Coventry, he attended the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Griffin died

Aug. 12, 1903, interment being made at Pine Grove cemetery. A friend of many years writes of him:

"The many years of official life spent by Stephen Watson Griffin in Kent county define an era in its history. He left an example of official purity and personal integrity worthy of emulation for all time. He was not a politician according to the construction of that term in these days of corruption, misrule and mal-administration. When elevated to positions of public honor and trust he was chosen because of his signal fitness for the place and he discharged its duties with punctilious fidelity and scrupulous regard to his conscience as well as to his official obligations. His official and private reputation was without a stain. His public records are models of methodical system, aptness and exactness. His penmanship is in the perfection of the art, each word a lithograph and as symmetrical as the scrivener's of old who after a long life of devotion to his art died with the King's syllables upon his pen. A promise with him was equivalent to its fulfillment. Honesty was inscribed upon his shield—it was the rule of his life." Mr. Griffin was clerk of the town of Coventry for thirty-nine years and his hope and ambition was to round out the complete two score.

In 1852 Mr. Griffin married Adeline A., daughter of Hazard Champlain, who was of Exeter and was born in 1788. Her mother was Sarah Youngs, and their children besides Mrs. Griffin were: Hannah, who married Gardiner W. Griffin, brother of Stephen W., and Sarah, who is the widow of Charles Phillips and resides at Anthony, R. I. To Mr. and Mrs. Griffin were born two daughters: Ella Frances, born July 29, 1855, and Sarah E., born July 7, 1857. Mrs. Griffin and her daughters reside at the family home at Washington village, where they enjoy the esteem and regard of all whose pleasure it is to know them. Mrs. Griffin and her daughters attend the Baptist Church.

Ella Frances Griffin, eldest daughter of the late Stephen Watson Griffin, was born in Coventry and educated in the public schools, and taught for fifteen years in the public schools of Coventry. She is a lady of cultivated mind and intelligence and is much devoted to her mother and sister.

Sarah E. Griffin, the youngest daughter, was also educated in the public schools of Coventry and for over thirty years was assistant to her father as clerk in the town clerk's office of Coventry. For two years she was assistant to her father's successor in that office. She is known as a lady of ability and culture and like her sister is much devoted to her mother.

CAPT. JAMES COFFIN (deceased), of Warren. Among the citizens of Warren of the past one whose memory is cherished, whose life was so lived as to win and hold through an unusually long career a warm place in the hearts of his fellow associates and citizens, and whose memory it is desired should be perpetuated, was the late venerable Capt. James Coffin, whose death occurred at his home on State street, Warren, R. I., Dec. 15, 1869, when he was full of years and good deeds, having reached fourscore and one years.

While Captain Coffin was only a Rhode Islander by adoption, having been born Dec. 23, 1788, in the State of New York, he came to this State in early life and soon became and ever continued a full-fledged citizen thereof, deeply interested in all that affected her welfare. Captain Coffin for many years followed the seas successfully, and in time had considerable interests in Warren to which place he retired from his active business life. He was one of the most highly respected citizens of the town.

In the Warren Gazette of Dec. 24, 1869, appeared the following tribute over the initial "G." to the memory of Captain Coffin: "In the sudden decease of our fellow-townsmen, the late James Coffin, we feel that death has bereft us of an upright citizen, a genial friend, a thoroughly honest man. Ranking among the oldest of our venerable citizens, he had spent the greater part of his active life in maritime pursuits, and other business identified with the interests of his town. Whether as shipmaster or owner, and in whatever business engaged, he is believed to have dealt honorably and justly in the accumulation of a comfortable fortune as the reward of persevering industry and commendable frugality. In the responsibilities and duties of good citizenship Captain Coffin appeared favorable in the community. With a lively interest in local affairs, he also evinced an earnest zeal for the welfare of State and nation when recreant forces conspired to their overthrow.

"In the relations of neighbor and friend, with gentlemanly deportment, he seemed ever mindful of the rights and feelings of others, well illustrating the inspired sentiment of the Golden Rule. Unostentatious of charity, his benevolent disposition prompted very many expressions of kindness and sympathy toward those who were in perplexity of business or of personal suffering. He was a friend to the widow and orphan. Prominent in philanthropic associations and the Masonic fraternity, he was also the honored president of our Institution of Savings from the date of its incorporation. Amiable in disposition, prudent in speech and act, devout in the Christian faith, a good man has gone to his rest."

Captain Coffin was married to Bathsheba Bushee, of Warren, born Jan. 6, 1789, daughter of James Bushee. She survived her husband and died at the homestead, Jan. 3, 1874, and their remains lie in the South burial ground at Warren. Having no children of their own, they gave a home, at an early age, to Miss Mary E. Paine, a native of Smithfield, upon whom they bestowed every care and affection and whose love and devotion for them in their declining years many times repaid their kindness to her. Miss Paine is a daughter of Thomas and Cyrena (Mowry) Paine, and occupies the Coffin homestead at Warren. The excellent portrait of Captain Coffin herewith shown is reproduced through the co-operation of Miss Paine.

ABBOT. Few of the early settlers of New England have given to the country a greater number of men of achievement than has George Abbot, of Andover, Mass. From him have sprung men of scholarly attainments and advanced thought, who as educators and authors, and as well with others of the learned professions, have left their impress upon the times in which they lived. Such names as Benjamin Abbot, LL. D., first principal of Phillips Academy; Revs. Jacob and John S. C. Abbott, of Roxbury, prolific writers who gave to the children many loved companions in their books, among which are the Rollo Series; and among many others the present Dr. Lyman Abbott, of New York, the distinguished clergyman and author, will long live in the annals of their country. It is not the purpose here, however, to follow the general Abbot family, but briefly to refer to the Warren, R. I. branch, which, like the Perry family of the Commonwealth, has been distinctly a naval family.

From George Abbot referred to in the foregoing, the sons and daughters of the late Commodore Joel Abbot, some of whom are as yet at the homestead in Warren, are descendants in the seventh generation, their lineage being through Corporal Benjamin Abbot, Benjamin Abbot (2), Capt. Benjamin Abbot, Joel Abbot and Commodore Abbot.

(I) Of the several Abbots that early came to New England, George Abbot, of Andover, Mass., has the most prominent and numerous descendants. He is said to have come from Yorkshire, England, about 1640; and after living at Roxbury awhile, came to Andover, Mass., where he was one of the settlers and founders as early as 1643. He cultivated the soil and lived on the farm latterly owned by John Abbot, of the seventh generation, the house being a garrison. Mr. Abbot married Hannah, daughter of William and Annie Chandler, of Andover (formerly of Roxbury), Dec. 12, 1646, both said to have come to America on the same ship. Mr. Abbot died in Andover Dec. 24, 1681, at the age of sixty-six. His wife survived him, remarried, and died June 11, 1711, aged eighty-two. Their children, born in Andover, were: John, Joseph, Hannah, Joseph, George (2), William, Sarah, Benjamin, Timothy, Thomas, Edward and Elizabeth, all born between 1648 and 1674, inclusive.

(II) Capt. Benjamin Abbot, born Dec. 20, 1661, in Andover, married April 22, 1685, Sarah Farnum, of Andover. Mr. Abbot was a carpenter, and lived near the Shawsheen river, in Andover. He was an active and respected citizen, and died March 30, 1703. His wife survived him, and was living, his widow, in 1724. Their children, all born in Andover, between 1686 and 1694, were: Benjamin, Jonathan, David and Samuel.

(III) Benjamin Abbot, born July 1, 1686, in Andover, married (first) Dec. 24, 1716, Elizabeth Abbot, daughter of George (2); she died Sept. 3, 1718, and he married (second) Oct. 23, 1722, Mary Carlton. She died Jan. 19, 1726, and he married (third) June 25, 1729, Abigail Abbot. Mr. Abbot was a farmer and lived on his father's farm in Andover. He died Nov. 26, 1748, and his widow, Abigail, died Dec. 5, 1753. His children were: Sarah, Benjamin, Martha, Daniel, Abigail, Mary, Abigail (2), Abiel, Jacob, Elizabeth, Anna, Joel and Dorcas, all born between 1718 and 1744, inclusive.

(IV) Capt. Benjamin Abbot, born Oct. 21, 1723, in Andover, married, April 2, 1747, Elizabeth Abbot, daughter of George (3). He was a farmer and lived in Andover until after 1754, when he removed to Hollis, N. H. He died Jan. 5, 1770. Their children were: Benjamin, born in April, 1748; Benjamin (2), born April 11, 1749; Elizabeth, Feb. 22, 1751; Samuel, April 13, 1753; Mary, Dec. 31, 1754; George, Dec. 29, 1755; Joel, Dec. 4, 1757; Jacob, April 12, 1760; and Mary.

(V) Joel Abbot, born Dec. 4, 1757, married Lydia Cummings, and lived in Westford, Mass. He died April 12, 1806, and Mrs. Abbot died March 5, 1813. Their children were: Elizabeth, born Jan. 22, 1787, married R. Jonathan Cogswell, and died April 30, 1837; Joel, born June 29, 1789, died the same day; Lydia, born Nov. 29, 1790, died Aug. 20, 1791; Joel (2) was born Jan. 18, 1793; Walter, born Sept. 17, 1795, was a midshipman on the "Chesapeake" under Capt. James Lawrence, and in the fight with the British frigate "Shannon," was severely wounded, from the effects of which he died July 12, 1825, at that time holding the rank of lieutenant; Lydia, born July 5, 1798, married Daniel W. Lord; Mary P., born Nov. 23, 1801, died in 1831; and Isaac Houghton, born Jan. 18, 1804, served for a short time as midshipman in the navy.

(VI) Joel Abbot, born Jan. 18, 1793, in Westford, Mass., married (first) Jan. 1, 1820, Mary Wood, of Newburyport, Mass., born Jan. 20, 1796. She died April 15, 1821, and he married (second) Nov. 29, 1825, Laura, daughter of Charles and Abigail (Miller) Wheaton, born March 15, 1801.

In the early stages of the war of 1812, June 15th of that year, young Abbot received the appointment of midshipman in the United States Navy. He was attached to the frigate "President," commanded by Commodore Rogers, and later became the latter's aid and signal officer. He became a prisoner of war, taken while in charge of a prize, and after being released was appointed to service under Commodore McDonough, on Lake Champlain. Here he was commissioned by that commander, and ordered to go to a designated point and destroy a quantity of masts and spars which were to be used by the British in fitting out the naval force with which their object was to attack the Americans. In this hazardous undertaking he was successful, but such were the handicaps he met with in the project, that he never fully recovered from the effects. In the naval engagement on Lake Champlain, which occurred not long thereafter, young Abbot bore an active and honorable part, and for his bravery was promoted (April 1, 1818) to a lieutenancy, and presented with a sword by the United States Congress. For a period commencing in 1818, he cruised on the Mediterranean as an attache to the "Guerriere." He next served on the "Alligator," on the African coast, and was successful in bringing to Boston a Portuguese pirate ship, which had been taken off the African coast. His efforts in exposing a series of stupendous frauds in the navy yard attracted the attention and secured the commendation of the Department. He was made commander in 1838. In 1843 he took command of the "Decatur," one of Commodore Perry's African squadron. While at Cape Palmas, he learned that Bishop Payne was in imminent danger at Cavalla, and, promptly sailing to his aid, was instrumental in saving him from a force of 500 armed natives. His conduct on the African coast was warmly commended by Commodore Perry and the secretary of the navy. On Oct. 3, 1850, he was made captain. In 1852, when Commodore Perry was entrusted with power to select the officers to accompany him in his famous Japan expedition, he chose Capt. Abbot, who was with him until the object of the expedition—the negotiating of a treaty which would open the ports of that country to the commerce of the United States—was accomplished. On Perry's return home Capt. Abbot was appointed commodore in command of the United States naval force on the coast of China and Japan. At that time the Chinese pirates were committing acts of barbarity upon our vessels, and United States merchants engaged in business in various Chinese ports were urgent in their demands for protection and relief. The course which Commodore Abbot pursued received the emphatic approval of the Government. Commodore Abbot accomplished his task, but not without seriously affecting his health. He died at Hong Kong, China, Dec. 14, 1855.

By the first marriage of Capt. Abbot there was one child, Joel, born Feb. 24, 1821, in Newburyport, who was a midshipman for a short time. To the second union came nine children: (1) Lydia Lord was born Sept. 14, 1826. (2) John Pickens, born June 26, 1828, was a purser in the navy in the early fifties, but resigned and became a physician. During the Civil war he served as an enlisted man in the 9th Rhode Island from May to September, 1862, and then became in turn, sergeant major, second lieutenant and captain of the 12th Rhode Island Volunteers, serving from October, 1862, to June, 1863. He died Oct. 11, 1886. (3) Charles Wheaton is mentioned below. (4) Trevett is mentioned below. (5) Mary, born Dec. 29, 1832, died Oct. 12, 1837. (6) Laura Wheaton, born March 10, 1835, married N. F. Cooke, of Chicago. (7) Nathan Miller Wheaton, born Dec. 25, 1836, died at sea May 31, 1853, and was first interred on Prince's Island, off the coast of Africa, being later brought home. In April, 1853, he accompanied his father as captain's clerk, when the latter went to join Perry. (8) Mary (2), born May 1, 1839, married Charles H. Handy, of Warren. (9) Walter, born Oct. 14, 1841, at the United States Navy Yard at Charlestown, Mass., married Adelaide Margaret Thompson. He was prepared for the navy, became a midshipman Dec. 2, 1859; ensign, Nov. 25, 1862; lieutenant, Feb. 22, 1864; lieutenant-commander, July 25, 1866. His death occurred Feb. 3, 1873, at the Madeira Islands.

(VII) CHARLES WHEATON ABBOT, born Nov. 18, 1829, married Ann Frances Smith, of Warren, daughter of Joseph Smith and granddaughter of Joseph Smith, the latter a prominent man and at the time of his death president of the Hope Bank; he accumulated a fortune of about four hundred thousand dollars. To Mr. and Mrs. Abbot were born two children, Annie Frank and Charles Wheaton. The daughter, born in 1857, married William McClenahan Ransom, a son of Commodore George M. Ransom, U. S. N., and they have had one daughter, Marcia, born May 28, 1891, who died in 1900.

Charles W. Abbot in due course of time in boyhood followed in the line of his distinguished father, and was prepared for his country's service in the navy. He became purser, U. S. N., Sept. 2, 1856; pay inspector, March 3, 1871; and pay director July 3, 1871. After a varied experience and service he was retired Nov. 18, 1891. He accompanied his father on the frigate "Macedonian" to Japan in 1853, as master's mate. His record reads as follows: Charles W. Abbot, born in Rhode Island, appointed from Rhode Island Sept. 2, 1856; attached to sloop "Falmouth," Brazil Squadron, 1856-58; frigate "St. Lawrence," Brazil Squadron, 1859; steam sloop "Mohican," coast of Africa, 1859-60; steam sloop "Pawnee," Atlantic Coast, 1861; had several engagements with Aquia Creek and Mathias Point Batteries in the Potomac river, and participated in the capture of the forts at Hatteras Inlet; steamship "Brooklyn," West Gulf Blockading Squadron, 1862-63; capture of Forts Jackson and St. Philip and city of New Orleans and first attack on Vicksburg batteries; special duty, New York, 1864; Naval Academy, 1864-66; Board of Examiners at Philadelphia, 1866; Fleet Paymaster, North Atlantic Squadron, 1867-68; Pay Office at Boston, 1869-71; promoted to Pay Inspector May 23, 1871; and to Pay Director Dec. 19, 1871; Inspector of Provisions and Clothing, Navy Yard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, 1872-74; Pay Office at Boston, 1875-76; Navy Yard, Boston, 1878-79; Inspector of Provisions and Clothing, Navy Yard, Boston, 1880-81; Navy Pay Officer, Boston, 1883-86; Navy Yard, Boston, 1888, until date of retirement, Nov. 18, 1891.

Mr. Abbot maintained a residence in the historic Abbot homestead on Miller street, in Warren, Rhode Island, until his death, which occurred Dec. 26, 1907.

(VIII) CHARLES WHEATON ABBOT, JR., son of Charles Wheaton, was born in Warren, R. I., July 8, 1860. He was educated in the public schools of his native place, in Mowry & Goff's English and Classical School of Providence, and the English high school in Boston, where he was taking an advanced course, preparing for West Point, when he was commissioned second lieutenant, 12th United States Infantry, in February, 1881. From 1877 to date of appointment in the regular army he served in the Rhode Island militia as an enlisted man, and first lieutenant and commissary in the 2nd Battalion. In June, 1881, he joined his regiment in Arizona and participated in the campaign against the Apaches during the summer and fall of that year. He graduated from the Infantry and Cavalry School at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1883. In 1889 he was appointed regimental adjutant, and in 1893 instructor at the Fort Leavenworth School. He was on duty with the Rhode Island militia in January, 1896, until the breaking out of the Spanish-American war, when he was mustered as colonel of 1st Rhode Island Volunteers May 10, 1898. His promotion to captain of the 12th Infantry dates from April, 1898, and he was mustered out of the volunteer service in 1899. He joined the 12th Infantry in the Philippine Islands in 1900, returning in 1902. He was promoted to be major of the 25th Infantry, August, 1903, and retired from active service in 1904. He returned to duty with the Rhode Island Militia the same month and is still serving. Major Abbot is a member of the Society of Sons of the American Revolution, Society of the War of 1812, Military Order of the Loyal Legion, and Sons of Veterans of the Civil War, of which latter he was division commander of Rhode Island in 1897. He is a member of the United Spanish War Veterans, honorary member of the Regular Army and Navy Union, and also belongs to the Rhode Island Historical Society, and Rhode Island Citizens' Historical Society.

Major Abbot was married June 5, 1884, at Norwich, Conn., to Marcia Ransom, daughter of Commodore G. M. Ransom, U. S. N., and sister of William McClenahan Ransom. Two children were born to this union: Ransom Walter, born March 20, 1885, died Sept. 20, 1886, and Grace, born May 20, 1895.

(VII) TREVETT ABBOT, born July 2, 1831, married Jan. 22, 1858, Sarah Cole Turner, born Aug. 8, 1836, daughter of the late Hon. Thomas Goodwin Turner, former governor of Rhode Island, and his wife Mary Pierce (Luther) Turner, of this State.

Young Abbot was liberally educated, receiving unusual educational advantages in the good schools of his native town and State. These he improved, and subsequently entered the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Md. Here he was graduated with honor, and on Oct. 13, 1848, was admitted to the first official grade, a midshipman, in the United States Navy. Possessing high intellectual powers, through which, by virtue of his abilities, attainments and fidelity to duty, he rose rapidly from rank to rank in the naval service, the high popularity and attainments of his father in the navy no doubt were an inspiration and guide to the son, whose ambition was to serve his country well. He was promoted to past-midshipman, June 15, 1854, master Sept. 16, 1855, lieutenant, Jan. 7, 1856, and lieutenant-commander, June 16, 1862. During the trying struggle of the Union from 1861 to 1865, he stood heroically by his country's flag. He was the executive officer of the "Mercedita," when she captured and safely brought to port the richly laden "Bermuda," the largest prize taken during the war. He was commissioned as commander Dec. 12, 1867, and proved himself eminently worthy of the charge and responsibility.

Of the twenty-one years of active service of Commander Abbot in the navy, fourteen years of them were passed upon the seas, about twelve of which were off the coast of Africa, the West Indies and the Gulf. His main voyages and posts of service were perilous to his health, and like his father he succumbed to their effects, and met an early and lamented death. Some time after his commission as commander, he was ordered to the United States steamer "Yantic," to cruise in the waters of the West Indies, and while in his line of duty he was seized with yellow fever and died Oct. 27, 1869, near Port au Prince, Hayti, and was buried in the ocean with impressive ceremonies. Commander Abbot possessed fine social qualities, which with his accomplishments made him a charming companion.

To the marriage of Commander Abbot and Sarah Cole Turner were born two daughters, Marian and Mary Turner, who with his wife survived him and are now residents of Warren, R. I. Mary Turner Abbot married Samuel H. Wilson, Feb. 10, 1886, and has three children: Trevett Abbot, born Nov. 28, 1886; Thomas Goodwin Turner, Sept. 2, 1891; Marguerite Elizabeth, Feb. 10, 1893.

The father of Commander Abbot, at the time of his death, stood twenty-sixth in the order of seniority on the navy list, and the Commander himself, at the time of his death, stood eighty-fourth, and was acknowledged a gallant, accomplished and faithful officer. He was loyal to his country and his God, a Christian man and a servant of the Lord Jesus Christ. He left behind a cherished record of patriotic service and an honorable name.

WHIPPLE WALLING. The late Deacon Whipple Walling was one of the oldest and most highly respected citizens of Burrillville. He passed away at his home in Pascoag, March 24, 1907, the last representative of his branch of the Wallings residing in the town, he having been a descendant of a family that has resided in Rhode Island for many generations.

Ishmael Walling, grandfather of Deacon Whipple Walling, was a farmer and resided during his active life on a farm about one mile south of Pascoag, later removing to the village, where he resided until his death. For many years he was a deacon of the Freewill Baptist Church. He married Mary Buxton, and they had the following children: Clark, a farmer who resided in Burrillville; John, father of Deacon Whipple; Sally, who married Elisha Sayles, and resided in Glocester; Rachel, who married Dexter Angell, and resided in Providence; Martin, a merchant in Providence; and Nelson, a manufacturer, who died in Millbury, Massachusetts.

Deacon John Walling, son of Ishmael, was born March 25, 1793, on the farm near Pascoag. After his marriage he removed to the town of Glocester, where he resided for a short time, afterward returning to the homestead, where he was engaged until the land was disposed of for use as a reservoir. He then moved to Pascoag, where he resided until his death, Sept. 12, 1881. In political sentiment he was first a Democrat, later a member of the Know-Nothing party, and lastly a staunch Republican. He held the office of town treasurer of Burrillville for a few years, and later was elected town clerk and filled that position many years. He also served as president of the town council. He was one of the directors of the Granite National Bank, and later a director of the Pascoag National Bank. At the age of twenty years he was converted under the famous Elder John Colby, and in the same year (1813), at the organization of the Freewill Baptist Society, he became a member and continued as such until his death. He served as deacon for a number of years as a substitute for his father, and later was appointed to the office and served for a third of a century, or until his death. He served as superintendent of the Sunday-school for some years, and as clerk of the church for many years. A man of exemplary character, he was a leading and influential citizen of Burrillville in his day. In 1813 he married Azubah, daughter of Ahab Sayles, and granddaughter of Elisha Sayles. She was born Dec. 11, 1786, and died Oct. 25, 1857, the mother of four children: (1) Sayles, born Aug. 27, 1814, was a merchant and resided in Pascoag, later removing to Providence. He married Lamanda M. Marsh. (2) Melinda, born Aug.

12, 1818, married Brown S. Wood, a manufacturer of shoddy, and resided for a time at Greenville, later removing to Providence, where she died. (3) Whipple was born Jan. 28, 1821. (4) Lillis, born April 27, 1823, is the widow of John Tenney, and resides at Owatonna, Minnesota.

For his second wife, Deacon John Walling married, in 1857, Amey Sayles, and after her death, which occurred soon after their marriage, he wedded, in 1862, Martha Steere. She survived him, and died at Oneonta, New York.

Whipple Walling, son of Deacon John, was born in the town of Glocester. His education was such as could be acquired in the district school. At the age of sixteen years he left the farm and went to Providence, becoming a clerk in the store conducted by his brother Sayles, and there he remained about one year. He then was employed as a clerk for Martin Walling for a few years, and then he purchased a grocery and dry-goods store at the foot of Randall street, Providence. For a time he had his brother Sayles as a partner. In 1846 they disposed of the business, and Whipple Walling went to Pascoag and engaged in the mercantile business in the store now occupied by Henry A. Potter. He soon after purchased the lot now occupied by the post office, and erected the present building, there engaging in business for a few years. When the Granite Bank was organized in 1851 Mr. Walling became assistant to the cashier, James S. Cook, and he remained in that capacity for nineteen years, when failing health caused him to relinquish his duties. He was one of the original directors of the Granite Bank, and its successor, the Pascoag National Bank, holding that relation until the bank was absorbed by the Industrial Trust Company.

On May 15, 1843, Deacon Walling married (first) Calista A. Keach, of Burrillville, daughter of Eddy Keach. She died in 1885, the mother of one daughter, Josephine C., who died unmarried at the age of twenty-seven years. Deacon Walling was married (second) Nov. 22, 1885, to Josephine M. Sayles, of Pascoag, daughter of Angell and Sarah S. (Ballou) Sayles, granddaughter of Elisha Sayles, brother of Ahab Sayles (grandfather of Whipple Walling). Mrs. Walling survives her husband, and resides on High street, Pascoag.

Mr. Walling was a Republican, and at one time was quite active in party affairs. He served a number of years as town treasurer and also as a member of the town council; was justice of the peace for many years; and also coroner and tax collector. He was a man exceedingly well posted in the common branches of the law, and his services were frequently in demand for the writing of wills, deeds and like instruments.

On May 9, 1858, Deacon Walling united with the Freewill Baptist Church (now the Free Baptist Church), under the Rev. William H. Waldron, and in time became one of the leading and most active members of the church. He succeeded his father as deacon and church clerk, and held those offices until his death. Mrs. Josephine M. Walling united with the church at the same time as Mr. Walling, and for many years has been a teacher in the Sunday-school. Deacon Walling was a man of the most sterling integrity and rigid honesty, and no man in the town was more sincerely respected. He was a man of sincerity of purpose, possessed of high ideals, and he lived up to them, in every way a credit to the name he bore.

GEORGE ARNOLD GRAY, who during his life was one of the substantial citizens of Little Compton, where he was extensively engaged in agricultural pursuits, was born on the homestead farm in that town May 19, 1828.

The Gray family of Rhode Island was founded in America by (I) Edward Gray, a native of England, who came to America among the early settlers, locating at Plymouth. He married Mary Winslow, daughter of John Winslow and niece of Governor Winslow. His second wife was Dorothy Lettice.

(II) Edward Gray (2), son of the first settler, was born Jan. 31, 1667, and married Mary Smith, they locating at what is now the town of Tiverton, where they made their home. Their children were: Mary, born May 16, 1691; Edward, Jan. 10, 1693; Elizabeth, Jan. 3, 1695; Sarah, April 25, 1697; Phebe, Sept. 6, 1699; Philip, Feb. 11, 1702; Thomas, Feb. 4, 1704; Harriet, Nov. 3, 1707. Mr. Gray's second marriage was to Mary, by whom he had these children: John, born Aug. 3, 1712; Lydia, May 12, 1714; William, July 17, 1716; Samuel, Aug. 31, 1718.

(III) Philip Gray, son of Edward (2), born Feb. 11, 1702, in Tiverton, made his home in this town south of the Nanaquacket Cove, and there died. He married Sarah Corey, and to them were born children: Philip, born April 6, 1728; Pardon, April 20, 1737; and Philip (2), April 6, 1738 (died June 2, 1750).

(IV) Col. Pardon Gray, son of Philip, born April 20, 1737, made his home in Tiverton during the great struggle for independence, in which he took an active part, being connected with the commissary department. He was a land owner in Tiverton, where he had his home, and in 1760 also purchased land in Little Compton, upon which his son settled, and which is still in the possession of the family. The house still located on this land, and occupied by Mrs. George A. Gray and her daughter, is known as the "Betty Alden Homestead," being the house in which Betty Alden lived after her marriage. She was the daughter of John Alden and Priscilla Mullins, and was the first white child born in the New England States. She married William Pabodie, who was the first town clerk of Little Compton.

Pardon Gray spent his life in Tiverton, where he died. He was married there by Samuel Hicks, justice of the peace, Jan. 16, 1755, to Mary Brown, daughter of John and Sarah (White) Brown, and to them were born children as follows: Job, May 14, 1756; Sarah, May 3, 1758; Edward, July 8, 1759; Mary, Aug. 30, 1761; Lydia, March 15, 1763; Abigail, Aug. 2, 1764; Philip, Feb. 2, 1766; Pardon, Oct. 11, 1767; Hannah, May 2, 1769; John, May 20, 1772; Thomas, Nov. 28, 1774; Mary, Nov. 18, 1776.

(V) Job Gray, eldest son of Col. Pardon, was born in Tiverton, where he was married by Walter Cook, justice of the peace, to Judith Briggs, Dec. 16, 1781. They removed to the town of Little Compton in 1782, Mr. Gray settling on the Pabodie farm, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits for the remainder of his life, dying Feb. 6, 1829. He was buried in the Wilbour cemetery. To Mr. and Mrs. Gray were born: Sarah, Nov. 11, 1783; Samuel, March 6, 1785; Job, July 27, 1788; Arnold, Dec. 28, 1790; Thomas Edward, twin of Arnold; Harriet, July 1, 1792; George, Oct. 30, 1794; Willard, July 27, 1798.

(VI) Willard Gray, son of Job, and father of the late George Arnold Gray, was born on the farm in Little Compton, and there his life was spent, engaged in agricultural pursuits on the eighty-three-acre tract. He was well known in his community, and was regarded as an honest, upright man and good citizen. He died April 7, 1874, and was buried in the old Wilbour cemetery. Willard Gray was married at Tiverton, R. I., by Rev. Benjamin Wilbour, to Judith Wilbour, daughter of Jonathan and Priscilla Wilbour, and granddaughter of Clark and Judith (Briggs) Wilbour, and to this union came two children: George Arnold, born May 19, 1828; and Abby Catherine, born June 11, 1830, who married Alexander Wilbour, of Little Compton, where she died.

(VII) George Arnold Gray received his education in the public schools of his town, and in early youth started to work on the home farm, where his entire life was spent. At the age of thirty years he assumed management of the homestead, making many improvements thereon, and engaging extensively in grape growing. He was very popular in his locality and because of his ability was elected for several terms to the town council, of which he served as president. He was a Republican in political sentiment. He was a good business man and an agriculturist of modern methods, and because of his integrity and fair dealings was honored and respected by all with whom he came into contact.

Mr. Gray was married Dec. 26, 1859, in Brooklyn, N. Y., to Elizabeth Hicks Howland, born June 15, 1836, in Westport, Mass., daughter of Charles Wilbour and Mehitable (Hicks) Howland, and granddaughter of John and Lydia (Wing) Howland. Mrs. Gray, who survives her husband, still resides on the homestead. One child was born to Mr. and Mrs. Gray, Lizzie Amelia, whose whole life has been spent caring for her parents, Mrs. Gray having been an invalid for several years. Mrs. George Arnold Gray is a birthright member of the Society of Friends.

Mr. Gray died at his home in Little Compton May 5, 1900, with the esteem and respect of the community in which his useful life had been spent.

ALBERT GALLATIN WILBUR, who for many years was a well known citizen of Union Village, in the town of North Smithfield, where he was engaged in the meat business, was born in the city of Providence March 2, 1812, a member of one of Rhode Island's oldest families.

The Wilbur family is of long and honorable standing in Rhode Island, and in nearly all portions of the neighboring State of Massachusetts, to which section its coming is but thirteen years later than that of the Pilgrim fathers. The name has been variously spelled by changing the vowel in the last syllable by the use of "a," "e" and "o," but quite the largest number now use "u," and spell the name Wilbur; all, however, it is believed, descend from the same ancestor, Samuel Wildbore of Boston. Mr. Wildbore came to Boston not later than 1633, he appearing first of record there in the first church at Boston in Massachusetts Colony, to which church he and his wife Ann were admitted Dec. 1, 1633. Mrs. Wildbore was a daughter of Thomas Bradford, of Dorchester, in the south part of the County of York, England. Samuel Wildbore here in New England married a second wife, Elizabeth, who was admitted to the church at Boston Nov. 19, 1645. Mr. Wildbore was admitted a freeman of Boston, in 1634. He bought largely in the town of Taunton, Mass., and removed thither with his family. There he, with others, embraced the doctrine of Cotton and Wheelwright, and they were banished from the Province in 1637. He then, with others, fled to Providence and purchased under the advice of Roger Williams, from the Indians, the island of Aquidneck, to which place he removed his family early in 1638. Mr. Wildbore, however, did not remain in Rhode Island. He returned to Boston in 1645, maintaining a home both in Taunton and in Boston. He with some associate built and put in operation an iron furnace in that part of Taunton which is now Raynham, said to have been the first built in New England. He was a man of wealth for that period, and evidently of respectable standing in society, exerting a wide influence in each of the places where he dwelt. His death occurred in 1656. His four sons were Samuel, Joseph, William and Shadrach, and he probably had a daughter Sarah. To Samuel he left his lands in Rhode Island, and to Joseph and Shadrach his real estate in Taunton. On the death of the father the sons in general spelled the name Wilbor. Joseph, Shadrach and their descendants sometimes retained the final "e," but Samuel (2), William and their descendants invariably left it out. Samuel Wilbor settled on his father's estate in Portsmouth, R. I. He became a man of wealth, having large possessions on the island, held many responsible positions and was much esteemed. Joseph settled in Taunton, which is now Raynham, Mass. William settled in Portsmouth, R. I., while Shadrach settled in what is now Raynham, where he became a man of influence, holding several important trusts; represented his town in the Colonial Assembly; and was town clerk for some thirty-five years. This article is to deal only and but briefly with one branch of this ancient Massachusetts-Rhode Island family, with what is styled for convenience the Smithfield, R. I., branch.

From William Wilbor of Portsmouth descended the Wilbur family of Smithfield. Daniel Wilbur came from the town of Little Compton to Providence county, locating in Smithfield. His son, Daniel, located in the same town which is now a part of the town of Lincoln, near Lime Rock, where he became a land owner and farmer, his farm being located on what is known as the Wilbur Road. The farm is now in the possession of Mr. Jencks, and was formerly owned by Job Hawkins. There Mr. Wilbur spent most of his life, and there he died and was buried on his own farm. On Dec. 13, 1750, he married Ruth Smith, and their children were: Martha, born June 16, 1752; Sarah, April 10, 1755; Lydia, March 5, 1757; Christopher, Jan. 7, 1759; Ruth, Oct. 17, 1760; Daniel, Aug. 13, 1764; Abigail, Aug. 6, 1766; Tabitha, April 24, 1768; Job, Nov. 6, 1770; and Smith, Sept. 6, 1772.

Christopher Wilbur, son of Daniel, was born on the farm in what was then the town of Smithfield, Jan. 7, 1759, and there he grew to manhood. He engaged in general farming, and passed all his days there dying May 20, 1812, at the age of fifty-three. On Nov. 15, 1781, he married Rachel Sayles, daughter of Jonathan Sayles, of Smithfield, and their children were: Ephraim, who died unmarried; Reuben; Amy, who married Sanford Knight; Polly, who married Smith Teft; Sayles, who married Julia Arnold; Ann, who married George Brownell; David, who married Phebe Brown; Mercy, who married John K. Smith; Rachel, who married Eleazer Sherman; and Elizabeth, who died in childhood.

Reuben Wilbur, son of Christopher, was born on the farm May 4, 1783, and like his father followed the occupation of a farmer. He died in 1822, at the early age of thirty-nine years. He married Abigail Mowry, born May 31, 1780, and their children were: Eliza, born Jan. 31, 1807, married William Brownell, of North Scituate; Christopher, born Nov. 22, 1808, died young; Jonathan, born Nov. 26, 1809, died May 12, 1893; Albert Gallatin, born March 2, 1812; Hazard P., born July 11, 1813, died in infancy; Abby A., born May 31, 1816, married George Harris, and died in Lincoln in 1894;

Maria, born Jan. 9, 1819, is the widow of Andrew M. Rhodes, and resides in East Providence; and Alice, born June 2, 1821, a school teacher, and a lady of unusual intellectual accomplishments, died in young womanhood.

Albert Gallatin Wilbur, son of Reuben and Abigail (Mowry) Wilbur, was born March 2, 1812. He attended school at Lime Rock, and was still but a boy when he left home and came to what is now North Smithfield in search of employment and a home, finding the latter in the family of Arnold Spear, a farmer, where he remained until he was fourteen years old. He then went to the family of George Andrews, where he lived until he had attained mature age, and engaged in farming and in the meat business, in his early life, but later devoted his entire attention to farming. After his marriage of Mr. Andrews' daughter he continued in the meat business, making his home all of the time in North Smithfield, the latter years of his life being spent at Union Village—the place now occupied by his daughters. He worked hard from boyhood among strangers, and through his own energy, ability and genuine worth won success. He lived an honest, upright life, was temperate in his habits and thoroughly domestic in his tastes. He attended the Friends' Meeting. In politics he was a Republican, but he cared nothing for active party work. He died Aug. 8, 1889, at the age of seventy-seven years, and was laid to rest in Union cemetery, North Smithfield.

On March 18, 1839, Mr. Wilbur married Hannah Louisa Andrews, born in North Smithfield Jan. 5, 1813, daughter of George and Marcy (Phillips) Andrews, and granddaughter of Jonathan and Marcy (Ames) Andrews. George Andrews, born July 9, 1788, was a farmer and land owner, and died Nov. 7, 1869; he married Marcy Phillips. Mrs. Wilbur died at her home in Union Village, Aug. 15, 1898, at the age of eighty-five years, and was laid to rest beside her husband. She attended Friends Meeting. Two daughters survive Albert G. Wilbur and wife: Dency Anner, born Oct. 23, 1840; and Hannah Louisa, Dec. 25, 1845. Both are ladies of culture and are much beloved in the community where their lives have been passed. They are noted for their good works, and many deeds of kindly charity. They are eligible for membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution.

GEORGE H. NICHOLS, a highly esteemed resident of Hopkinton, and an honored veteran of the great Civil war, was born in Hope Valley, R. I., April 28, 1834, son of Alexander H. and Jemima (Perrin) Nichols, and he entered into rest Dec. 9, 1907.

Alexander H. Nichols was born in North Kingstown, R. I., but spent his boyhood in Woodstock, Conn. There he married Jemima Perrin, and returned to Rhode Island. Having learned the machinist's trade in Hope Valley he was able to secure work in a machine shop at Woonsocket, and at this trade he worked many years. Mr. Nichols was a lieutenant of the militia at Hopkinton. His death occurred in 1850, in Greenville, Conn., while his wife passed away in Hope Valley. Their children were: George H.; John T., deceased, married Ann E. Smith, and they had one daughter, Lena R.; Charles S., deceased, married Mary M. Matteson, and was for a number of years secretary of the Nichols & Langworthy Machine Company, of Hope Valley; Lewis died young; Oliver died young; Caroline E. married George H. Lewis, of Providence, R. I., and had two children, Oscar E. and Lulu. Mr. Nichols was a member of the Hopkinton Baptist Church.

George H. Nichols spent his boyhood and early school days at Greenville, Conn., and at Hope Valley. He was first employed in a cotton mill at Voluntown, and later in Greenville, and in 1849 became overseer of the weave shop in the Tift mill in Wyoming, serving in the same capacity at Burrillville for one year. He then went to Anthony village, where he remained until 1857, in that year going to Baltic, Conn., and in February locating in Exeter, in the employ of W. R. Greene & Co. In 1860 this firm located in Hope Valley and Mr. Nichols continued with them until the firm went out of existence. On Sept. 25, 1862, he enlisted in Company A, 12th R. I. V. I., and served until July 29, 1863, when he was discharged at Providence, R. I. Mr. Nichols was a member of Lincoln Post, No. 22, G. A. R., at Hope Valley, and was at one time commander of the post. After the war he returned to Hope Valley and became superintendent for W. R. Greene & Co., a position he continued to fill for both this firm and its successor, the Nichols & Langworthy Machine Co., until 1904.

Mr. Nichols was married at Sag Harbor, L. I., Sept. 3, 1854, to Susan C. Gardner, daughter of Stephen C. and Dorcas W. (Gardner) Gardner, and to this union were born: (1) Mary Estelle, born April 1, 1858, died Aug. 10, 1878. (2) George Elbert, born Nov. 18, 1859, died Feb. 21, 1861. (3) Charles Ray, born Aug. 29, 1861, for many years a locomotive engineer, married Alice Gemmel, and has one son, Ray Frank. (4) Frank E., born Sept. 19, 1864, secretary of Nichols & Langworthy Machine Company, married Sarah Louise Ellis, and their children were: Dorothy Dean, and Margaret Ellis. (5) Cora Dean, born Aug. 25, 1868, married Edward B. Fessenden, of Providence, and has a son, George Nichols. Mrs. Fessenden graduated from Emerson College, Boston, and for several years taught elocution and physical culture first in a woman's college at Whitby, Ontario, and later in a similar institution at Jacksonville, Ill., and afterward in the city schools in Brockton, Mass. In his political views Mr. Nichols was always a Republican. He was trustee of his school district, collector of town taxes, was a member of the town council for nine years, a member of the House of Representatives in 1902 and 1903, and a member of the Senate in 1903 and 1904. In the House he served on the committees on Militia and Printing, and in the Senate on Special Legislation. In 1860 he joined Mechanics' Lodge, I. O. O. F. He was a charter member of Niantic Encampment of that order at Hope Valley. He was a regular attendant at the Hope Valley Baptist Church, and in the faith of that denomination died.

MICHAEL A. McCORMICK. The name of Michael A. McCormick will be recognized as that of one of Newport's most progressive and extensive building contractors.

Mr. McCormick is of Irish extraction, though of American nativity. His father, John McCormick, was born in Roscommon, Ireland, and when but a lad emigrated to America. Settling in Newport, he began an apprenticeship at the mason's trade with a firm doing business at Fort Adams. After completing his term of service he did journeyman work for a time, then began contracting on his own account, and for many years did an extensive business in stone work in Newport county. His death occurred in Newport, June 29, 1889, when he was aged sixty-two years. He was a man of independent action, and though a believer in and supporter of Democratic principles he at times supported candidates of the Republican party. This was notably so in the case of the late Hon. James G. Blaine, for whom Mr. McCormick had conceived an intense admiration. In religious matters he was a consistent Catholic, and a leading member of St. Mary's Church of Newport.

Mr. McCormick married Eunice Gillen, a native of Sligo, Ireland, who died in Newport April 8, 1888, the mother of the following children: Peter A., who is now in the drug business in New York City; Mary, now residing in Providence, the widow of P. W. Nolan; Thomas W., a mason, of Newport; Eunice, residing in Newport, the widow of Carl Faerber; Roger, a mason, but for several years a member of Newport's police force; Michael A., the subject of this sketch; John G., a parish priest in the New York diocese, at present located at Tuckahoe, N. Y., as pastor of Immaculate Conception Church; Louisa, unmarried, residing in Newport with her brother, Michael A.; and Annie S., unmarried, living in Newport.

Michael A. McCormick was born Jan. 22, 1858, in the city of Newport. The public schools furnished him with a splendid common school education, after which he was engaged in various occupations until he had passed his majority. Having settled with much deliberation the question of his life-work, Mr. McCormick at the age of twenty-two began an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade with the late William S. Cranston, one of the leading builders of Newport, with whom he spent the full period of his apprenticeship of three years. The beginning of his journeyman's career was spent in the employ of Tripp & Walker, of Taunton, Mass. Here he soon developed the qualities which mark the successful contractor, and, being of an ambitious nature, he resolved to enter into business on his own account. He therefore in 1882 returned to his native city and hung out his shingle as a contractor and builder. He soon found, as does every man who attempts to essay higher things in the world, that there were many obstacles to overcome which he had not foreseen. But "everything comes to the man of determination and industry," and so was it in the case of Mr. McCormick. Experience is a dear teacher, and for that reason we give greater heed to her lessons; so that it was not many years until Mr. McCormick became known in the commercial world as one of the most trustworthy contractors in the city. Monuments to his skill as a builder began to rise, increasing in architectural beauty and size, and soon his fame spread to surrounding towns, even the architects of New York City calling upon him to bid on their work. Among a few of the many large and substantial structures erected by Mr. McCormick in Newport and vicinity are the Rogers high school building on Broadway, finished in 1905, and one of the finest of its kind in New England; the State Armory on Thames street; the Hazard Memorial School and Rectory; St. Anthony's church, at Portsmouth, R. I.; the Daily News and the Mercury buildings on Thames street; the Audrain building, on Bellevue avenue; the Convent of the Cenacle, on Washington street; the summer residences of E. Rollins Morse, Lisenard Stewart, Winthrop Chandler, and J. Mitchell Clark's residence known as "Gray Craig," at Middletown, R. I. In 1907 Mr. McCormick constructed the water supply for Fort Wetherell, near Newport, which consisted in the construction at Saunderstown, R. I., of three spring shelters and a large re-enforced concrete construction reservoir, with a capacity of 400,000 gallons of water, the water from which is carried to Fort Wetherell across the west passage of Narragansett bay through a submerged six-inch iron pipe, thus feeding the reservoirs located at Fort Wetherell.

For the purpose of turning out his own material for construction Mr. McCormick, in 1892, purchased the planing-mill plant at the corner of Spring and Sherman streets, and which he has increased in capacity as his business assumed its present immense proportions. Mr. McCormick was the first in Newport to engage in the manufacture of cement building blocks, when in 1907 he installed a thoroughly equipped plant on East Bowery street, with the latest improved machinery for the manufacture of pressed cement blocks and granolithic work. At present he has in his employ from fifty to one hundred men, his planing-mill and cement block factory turning out all kinds of finished products for the trade. Mr. McCormick has not neglected the comforts of his own family in the rush of business, as is evidenced by the beautiful modern home he lately purchased and remodelled on Spring street.

Mr. McCormick has a wife and three promising children. Mrs. McCormick prior to her marriage, which occurred Sept. 23, 1896, was Miss Nellie L. Maher, daughter of the late William H. Maher, one of Newport's prominent florists for many years. Their children are: Mary Lillian, born May 27, 1901; John Harold, born June 24, 1903, and Margaret, born July 28, 1905.

Being of a genial and approachable nature, the social life of Mr. McCormick is a pleasant one, his connection with many of the better organizations of the city being most helpful. He is a member of Newport Lodge, No. 104, B. P. O. Elks, and a charter member of Newport Council, No. 256, Knights of Columbus, in both of which he has served as trustee. In the line of business he holds membership in the Builders' and Merchants' Exchange, and in the Builders' Association of Newport.

The busy life which Mr. McCormick has led has precluded his entrance into politics to any extent, although his friends have frequently urged it on him. He is a staunch supporter of Democratic principles in State and national affairs. In matters of city politics he desists from taking sides, and for that reason has been strong with all parties and factions. He served his ward in the city council for five years, and was looked upon as one of the efficient members.

In religious matters Mr. McCormick and his family are liberal supporters and members of the Roman Catholic faith, with membership in St. Mary's Church of Newport. As a citizen Mr. McCormick is loyal and progressive, and is held in esteem by a host of friends and all who know him.

HON. THOMAS ROBINSON (deceased), Pawtucket, R. I. In the death of Judge Thomas Robinson, late of the city of Pawtucket, that city and the Commonwealth of Rhode Island lost a leading citizen and a highly esteemed and respected public servant. Judge Robinson was born in the village of Salford, near Manchester, England, July 27, 1820, and died at his home, Oak Grove farm, Brook street, Pawtucket, R. I., March 20, 1901, aged eighty years. He had been stricken with paralysis a week previously.

Thomas Robinson was the son of William and Elizabeth (Dunston) Robinson. He came to this country in 1841, direct to Pawtucket, where the remainder of his life, sixty years, was passed. The circumstances and conditions about his youth were such as to give him but limited opportunities for acquiring an education. When a little more than seven years of age he began to work in a mill, continuing so employed until thirteen years old. While working in the mill he attended a night school for one year. He was then apprenticed for seven years to one Joseph Thacker, an iron and brass founder at Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancashire. At the expiration of the term of his apprenticeship, possessed of a thorough knowledge of the molder's art, he concluded to seek his fortune in a new field, and leaving his native England he came to America and to Pawtucket. Here he began work at his trade in an old foundry located along the river bank where now is the city pipe yard. Here he remained only a brief period and the succeeding two years found him fitting up stoves, and also manufacturing umbrellas. Not satisfied in this, he later started a brass foundry, but disposed of it and was next found at work in Providence for Louis P. Mead, and was also employed by George B. Holmes, at the Phenix Foundry in that city, continuing until the spring of 1846. His next employment was with Frederick Fuller, who carried on a foundry at Fox Point. It was while here employed that Mr. Robinson built his late home on what was then called "Seekonk Plains." In 1847 he began working for the late Amos C. Barstow of Providence, who was then about to undertake the foundry work of Messrs. Corliss & Nightingale, who had a machine shop at India Point. He continued work for Mr. Barstow for eleven years, during which period he turned out several premium jobs, one of which was the artistic fence which surrounded the old cove in Providence. In 1853 he was one of the organizers of the Pawtucket Furnace Company, which had an existence of a number of years.

It has been stated in the foregoing that Mr. Robinson had but limited educational advantages. These, however, he improved, but not content with such privileges along this line as fell to his early years he later applied himself to study and reading as the years came and went, and his ambition inspired him to a more elevated position and station in life. By the time he was thirty-seven years of age his habit of study and reading had become so fixed that he settled upon becoming a lawyer, and so began the study of law. He later was admitted to the Rhode Island Bar and opened an office in the old Franklin Bank building in Pawtucket, subsequently, on the death of Wellington Kent, Esq., succeeding to his business. By the sheer force of his character, by his earnest effort, he became a lawyer of ability and one successful, enjoying a large and lucrative practice until the close of his active labors—1889.

In his political views and affiliations Mr. Robinson was a Democrat of the old school, of the Jackson-Jefferson type. He exemplified the idea that the office should seek the man, for in the many offices he held, perhaps all at various times in the town of Pawtucket, including the judgeships of the district and probate courts, he never solicited any during his long political career. Often his name would appear on several different tickets at a time. He was a man of broad and liberal ideas on all questions, and was much interested in philosophical speculation. The views of Judge Robinson on religious subjects and his bold advocacy of them involved him in many discussions and led to debates with different ministers.

On March 29, 1840, at Stockport, England, Judge Robinson married Mary Ashton, who was born July 8, 1818, in Yorkshire, England, daughter of John and Mary (Whitley) Ashton, and sister of John Ashton, a well-known resident of Pawtucket. She died Nov. 5, 1906, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years, and was laid to rest beside her husband in Oak Grove cemetery. In their active years, and indeed until the time of Judge Robinson's death, Oak Grove farm was noted for the generous hospitality extended to all and was a favorite gathering place for the scores of friends which this remarkable couple drew to them. Mrs. Robinson was one of the best-known women in Pawtucket, not only as a factor in the social life of the town but for her kind-heartedness to all who came within the range of her aid and influence. In the early days, particularly, she was known far and wide as a model neighbor and unfailing friend, one to whom any in distress or want felt free to turn. The last few years of her life her health declined steadily, and she appreciated greatly the devotion of her youngest daughter, Mrs. Fallows, who ministered to both her parents in their old age with tender care. Mrs. Robinson was a member of the Church of England.

To Thomas and Mary (Ashton) Robinson came children as follows: John William, born Sept. 4, 1841, died Oct. 1, 1842. Eliza, born July 17, 1844, died Aug. 14, 1844. Elizabeth Annette, born Feb. 12, 1846, now a resident of Pawtucket, has been three times married—to Benjamin K. Balch, William B. Foster and William W. Wilson, respectively. William Corbet, born Oct. 17, 1850, died Feb. 12, 1853. Mary Eleanor, born Feb. 11, 1854, married Ira N. Tew, and resides in Providence. Thomas William, born March 23, 1856, is mentioned at length further on. Alice Amelia, born Oct. 3, 1859, married Samuel Fallows, and they reside at the homestead on Brook street, Pawtucket. A child born April 24, 1862, died April 25, 1862.

THOMAS W. ROBINSON, only living son of the late Hon. Thomas Robinson, was born in the city of Pawtucket March 23, 1856, and received his early education in the public schools there. Then he took a course at Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College, in Providence, from which he graduated in 1874. Desiring to fit himself for the legal profession, he began to read law in the office of Blodgett & Clapp, of Pawtucket, with whom he remained two years, meantime starting a three years' course at the Boston University Law School, from which institution he was graduated in 1877. He was admitted to the Rhode Island Bar, and in 1878 formed a partnership with his father, after whose retirement, in 1889, he continued to practice alone. He has been engaged in legal work in his native city for a period of thirty years, and is a leader at the Bar there, standing high in his profession wherever known. Mr. Robinson has always been deeply interested in matters affecting the public welfare, and his professional experiences have enabled him to give his fellow citizens better service in the offices which he has been chosen to fill, as his official experiences have aided him in his legal work. For two years—1892-93—he was solicitor of the town of Lincoln; in 1885 he was a member of the town council of Pawtucket; in 1887 he was elected a member of the State Legislature, representing the city of Pawtucket, and was re-elected in 1888, 1889, 1890, 1892 and 1893, a fact which tells better than words of the confidence and esteem he enjoys in his native place. In political principle he has always been a staunch Democrat. Mr. Robinson is a notary public.

On Nov. 3, 1881, Mr. Robinson was married at Providence to Miss Mary E. Tetlow, of that city, and they have had two children: Lillian H., born Oct. 30, 1883, who prepared for college at the Pawtucket high school, and then entered Brown University, graduating in 1906, married Jan. 1, 1908, Haywood M. Butler (Brown University, 1906), of Providence, and now resides in Pittsburgh, Pa.; and Marion, born Oct. 27, 1885. Mr. Robinson belongs to Providence Lodge, B. P. O. Elks.

MILTON DUCKWORTH, M. D., president of the Washington County Medical Society, is ranked among the most successful medical practitioners in the State of Rhode Island. He is a native of New Jersey, born at Pattenburg, April 15, 1875, and a descendant of one of the prominent old families of that State. His father, John Wesley Duckworth, is a well-known farmer and stock-dealer, and is active in political affairs, serving as one of the county commissioners of his county. He married Maggie A. Hummer, daughter of Johnson Hummer.

Dr. Duckworth received his early education in the schools of his native town, and for three years attended the State Model School at Trenton, N. J. He attended medical lectures at the University of Pennsylvania for two years, and then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Boston, Mass., graduating with the class of 1900. While in Boston he met Dr. Weaver, of Carolina, R. I., and in July, 1900, succeeded him in practice at that place. On July 5, 1900, he passed the State board examination in Rhode Island and the same year became a member of the Washington County Medical Society, to the presidency of which he was elected in 1904.

The Doctor's practice extends over a large territory, embracing the towns of Charlestown, Hopkinton, Richmond and Exeter. Careful in his diagnosis of ailments, sympathetic and cheerful in the sickroom, he has in these few years endeared himself to his patients, to whom he devotes his undivided attention. Socially popular, Dr. Duckworth is a member of Friendship Lodge, No. 16, I. O. O. F., and of Charity Lodge and Franklin Chapter, A. F. & A. M., at Hope Valley.

Dr. Duckworth was married Oct. 17, 1900, at Pattenburg, N. J., in the house where he was born, to Miss Carrie Fritz, daughter of George and Mary (Smith) Fritz. Mrs. Duckworth was born in St. Augustine, Florida.

JOHN BALCH KELLY, a prominent retired citizen of Providence, R. I., and an honored survivor of the great Civil war, was born in Providence, July 2, 1844, son of Ebenezer Kelly. He died suddenly at his home, No. 21 Barnes street, that city, Dec. 13, 1907.

Ebenezer Kelly, born at Warren, R. I., Oct. 28, 1789, died Dec. 4, 1852. On Sept. 8, 1823, he was married by Rev. Henry Edes, to Sophia Balch, born May 8, 1805, died May 26, 1892, daughter of John Balch. To this union were born: Sophia Balch, born Aug. 15, 1825, died May 12, 1840; Mary Elizabeth, born Aug. 12, 1829, died July 16, 1843; Ann Frances, born June 25, 1830, died Sept. 9, 1832; Eben A., born April 9, 1833, married, Aug. 23, 1857, Dorcas Hall Greene, and died Aug. 9, 1896; John Henry, born in August, 1835, died Feb. 27, 1836; Emily Anna, born March 31, 1837, married Albert C. Greene; Anjanette Eddy, born July 22, 1839, died Sept. 15, 1842; Benjamin Eddy, born Feb. 9, 1847, was a lieutenant in Battery B, 1st Rhode Island Artillery, and fell mortally wounded at the battle of Salem Heights, Va., May 4, 1863; John Balch, born July 2, 1844; and Louisa, born Nov. 9, 1846. In early life Ebenezer Kelly was captain of a merchant vessel, and in 1823 came to Providence, where the remainder of his life was spent.

Prof. Eben A. Kelly, son of Ebenezer, was born in Providence, April 9, 1833, and he died Aug. 9, 1896. In local musical circles he occupied a high position. In his early life he displayed a strong aptitude for music, and the story of his career would be but the recount of a consistent application to his chosen profession. Perhaps the most striking feature of Mr. Kelly's life was the fact that in his sixty-fourth year he celebrated the fortieth year of his service as organist of the First Congregational Church of Providence. At the Easter service of 1896 he was presented with a valuable loving cup by his numerous appreciative friends. Few in any calling live to celebrate such a notable anniversary, and in connection with this notable term as organist he was a successful teacher of the piano for many years, occupying a prominent position in the musical circles of Rhode Island. Endowed with a musical temperament and aptitude before reaching the age of twenty years, he sought the Mecca of musicians—the Leipzig Conservatory—and there studied under Riedel, Von Dommer and Schellenburg. After three years spent in Germany, he returned to assume the position of organist in the church of which he became a member, and where after a lapse of two-fifths of a century he continued the honored and active organist and musical director. During this long period other organists came forward in Providence who possessed great ability in technique, brilliancy in execution and resource in composition, but no one of the younger generation surpassed Mr. Kelly in the delicate handling of the organ, and the poetic, dreamy rendering of his favorite movements. The themes of his many compositions, as well as his habits of rendering, proclaimed him to be of the romantic school, not seeking for a pyrotechnic display, with grand bursts of sound and glittering showers of falling notes, but compelling the huge pipes of the organ to restrain their power and give forth low, sweet harmonies and appealing songs befitting the hour of devotion and of prayer.

There were some who thought his music tended toward sadness, but this was so only so far as all poetry and sentiment and longing are akin to sadness. Exuberant and hilarious music was, perhaps, not his forte, but all music requiring a delicate, artistic rendering came within his sphere and appealed to his poetic temperament for expression. It is enough to say of Mr. Kelly's long and faithful service, that those who heard his music most, loved it the more and have missed it from their Sunday devotion, as they would miss a sweet and gentle voice from the circle around the hearth-fire.

Professor Kelly was married Aug. 23, 1857, to Dorcas H. Greene, daughter of Rufus Greene, and their children were: Minerva Bucklin, born June 23, 1858, married, Nov. 3, 1879, Sidney Berkeley Tobey, son of Hon. E. S. Tobey, of Boston, Mass., and to them was born, Jan. 10, 1881, a son, Berkeley Greene, who married, Sept. 23, 1905, Laura P. Clark, of Agawam, Mass., and is now employed with the Cheney Manufacturing Plant at Deep River, Connecticut; Sophia Packard was born March 23, 1866; Eben A. and Benjamin E. died in infancy.

John Balch Kelly spent his boyhood days in Providence, attending the public schools, and during his last year at high school abandoned his studies to enlist with teachers and classmates in Company B, 10th Regiment, under Capt. Elisha Dyer, for three months' service. He re-enlisted as first sergeant in Company I, under Capt. Joseph E. Kendrick, for nine months' service. After his return to Providence he attended Bryant & Stratton's Business College, and became a bookkeeper until 1883, when he was made treasurer of the Allen Print Works, remaining in this position until the business was closed in 1901. He then retired to private life.

Mr. Kelly married Susan H. Metcalf, daughter of Henry Metcalf, of Providence, and to them were born four children: Ella M., who married Henry Fletcher, deceased, and has one daughter, Lydia Metcalf; Lydia Collins, who married Col. Zenas W. Bliss, and had one son, Zenas Randall; Susan Louise, who married George J. Kilton, and had two children, John Balch and George Williams; and Bertha Balch, who married (first) William O. Hutchins, deceased, and (second) John H. Hambly.

HENRY FLETCHER, agent for the Fletcher Manufacturing Company, was born in Providence, R. I., April 19, 1863, son of Henry and grandson of Joseph Fletcher, who was well-known by Rhode Island business men. After completing his education at Mowry and Goff's English and Classical school, he entered the employ of the Fletcher Manufacturing Company, and worked his way up in the employ of that firm, to the position of director. Mr. Fletcher was a Knight Templar, and a member of the D. D. Club. He belonged to St. Stephen's Church. On Feb. 10, 1901, he married Ella M. Kelly, daughter of John Balch Kelly, and to them was born in March, 1903, a daughter, Lydia M. Mr. Fletcher died at his home, No. 21 Barnes street, Providence, Nov. 21, 1903.

MURRAY (Providence family). In the early fifties of the century but recently closed there came to Providence the family of William and Agnes (Smith) Murray, who, not unlike many others coming from the Province of Quebec, soon entered upon that citizenship here—characteristic of New England's inhabitants coming from that section of the country—that has proved both to their own advantage and profit and to this Commonwealth's. Reference is especially made here to the late Peter Smith Murray, one of the ten children of the parents alluded to, who, through his own efforts, unaided and alone, through the force of his make-up, rose to position and influence in the business world about him.

PETER SMITH MURRAY was born Oct. 14, 1843, in Port-Neuf, a small town in Port-Neuf County, in the Province of Quebec, but practically lived all his life in Providence, the family of which he was a member having moved here when he was a boy of eight years. He attended the public schools of this city and acquired the beginnings of his business training at Bryant & Stratton's commercial college in Providence. Immediately after leaving school he entered the office of the business house of which he ultimately became the chief owner. This was the old and well-known fancy goods jobbing concern of Burrington & Hutchins. With no other capital for a start than his remarkable aptitude for the multifarious details of a business of this sort, and his power of application, he became in a comparatively few years a partner in the firm, the name being then changed to Hutchins & Murray. He still continued to advance, and when Mr. Hutchins withdrew Mr. Murray became the senior partner in the firm of Murray, Spink & Co., which succeeded the old concern. Some two years before Mr. Murray's death further changes were made in the firm, new partners were taken in, and the style was again changed, this time to Murray, Blanchard, Young & Company, now Blanchard, Young & Company.

The entire business life of Mr. Murray was thus centered in one mercantile concern, in which he rose by reason of his many excellent qualities from a comparatively insignificant position to the head of the house. Under his direction the business grew rapidly to the large proportions it had attained at the time of his death. He was a man who always gave his closest personal attention to his business, and it is quite possible that his death was hastened by his continuing to work when the interests of his health counseled rest. He was possessed of a kindly disposition, which made him many friends in and out of business circles. He was a member of the First Congregational Church.

Mr. Murray died at his home on Elmwood avenue, Providence, R. I., Sept. 17, 1899. He had married Oct. 22, 1872, Elizabeth Wickes Greene, daughter of Anthony Holden Greene.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wickes (Greene) Murray is descended from a remarkably distinguished ancestry. In her paternal line she is in the eighth generation from

(I) Dr. John Greene, of Salisbury, England, son of Richard Greene, of Bowridge Hill, Gillingham, Dorsetshire, England; grandson of Richard Greene, of that same place, and great-grandson of Robert Greene. Dr. John Greene came to America in 1635, stopping at Salem and thence going to Providence, where he was one of the original proprietors in 1636, and one of the original purchasers and founders of the town of Warwick in 1642. This Greene family gave to the Colony and State a number of public officials, among them a deputy governor, John Greene (2); a chief justice who sat on the Bench of the court of Common Pleas of Kent county all through the Revolution; Philip Greene, an associate justice of the Supreme court of Rhode Island; two Colonial governors, William and William (2); and two Revolutionary officers of distinction, Gen. Nathanael and Col. Christopher Greene.

From Dr. John Greene, or, as he was styled, "John Greene, Surgeon," Mrs. Murray's lineage is through

(II) John Greene (2), general recorder, attorney-general, major of the main, deputy governor. His wife was Ann Almy.

(III) Job Greene, son of John (2), was deputy, assistant and Speaker of the House of Deputies, 1727-28. He married Phebe Sayles, a granddaughter of Roger Williams.

D. S. Murray

(IV) Philip Greene, son of Job, followed in the steps of his distinguished father. He became town clerk, assistant, deputy, for twenty-five years a justice of the court of Common Pleas of Kent county (1759-1784), associate justice of the Supreme court (1768-69), and moderator of town meetings with a few exceptions from 1757 to 1774, and in 1776, 1777 and 1779. He married Elizabeth Wickes, a great-granddaughter of the noted Samuel Gorton, of Warwick.

(V) William Greene, son of Philip, was born Oct. 25, 1746, at "Pastuxet." He married Jan. 4, 1774, Welthian, born March 15, 1746, daughter of Jeremiah and Welthian (Greene) Lippitt, of old Warwick, and granddaughter of Richard Greene, of "Stone Castle." By will Mr. Greene inherited the "Pastuxet" homestead in old Warwick, and he was engaged as a farmer. He possessed fine literary tastes and mathematical skill. In 1784 he was elected an associate justice of the court of Common Pleas for Kent county, succeeding his father, Chief Justice Philip Greene, who owing to advanced years declined longer service. William Greene died Jan. 3, 1809, and his widow passed away Sept. 12th of the same year. Their children were: Thomas Lippitt, born Oct. 16, 1774; Christopher, May 8, 1776; Harriet, April 2, 1778; Catharine, April 8, 1780; Philip, July 25, 1782; William W., July 15, 1784; Jeremiah, Sept. 10, 1787.

(VI) Thomas Lippitt Greene, son of William, was born Oct. 16, 1774, in old Warwick, R. I. He married May 1, 1803, Anne Gibbs, born Aug. 14, 1780, daughter of Anthony and Sarah (Warner) Holden, and granddaughter of Capt. Randall and Naomi (Potter) Holden. Mr. Greene was a mariner and died Nov. 28, 1816. His children were: Thomas Holden, born March 17, 1804; Sally Holden, June 12, 1805; Philip, July 26, 1806; Welthian Lippitt, May 19, 1808; Anthony Holden, Dec. 25, 1810; Lewis, March 2, 1813; and Nancy Holden and Anne Gibbs (twins), April 12, 1815.

(VII) Anthony Holden Greene was born in Warwick, R. I., Dec. 25, 1810. He married Cornelia, daughter of John I. and Ruth (Gardiner) Robinson, the latter a daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Wickes) Gardiner, of Middletown, R. I. Mr. Greene was a contractor and builder, and in early married life was engaged in business at Scio, Mich., for a few years, later returning to Rhode Island. Children as follows were born to Anthony Holden and Cornelia (Robinson) Greene: Cornelia Robinson, born June 26, 1841, died Nov. 3, 1846; Elizabeth Wickes married Peter Smith Murray; John Robinson married Mary Elizabeth Mott; Edwin Holden married Mary Ellen Chase, and they have had four children, Mary Ellen, Edwin Anthony, John Robinson, and Mabel Frances (born Oct. 18, 1889, died Jan. 19, 1890).

(VIII) Elizabeth Wickes Greene was married Oct. 22, 1872, to Peter Smith Murray, and to them were born two children, Jeannie Robinson and Richard Hubbard; the latter married June 11, 1907, Theo Blanche Chollar, and resides in Providence.

WILLIAM CORNELL (deceased), for many years one of Newport's leading merchants, was a man of exemplary and honorable life, whose sterling qualities assured him a high place in the esteem of all who knew him. The Cornell family is one of the oldest in the State of Rhode Island, and William Cornell was in the ninth generation from the original American emigrant, Thomas.

(I) Thomas Cornell was born in the county of Essex, England, about 1595, and there married Rebecca Briggs. In 1638, with his wife and children, he came to America, and, locating first at Boston, Mass., afterward moved to Rhode Island, and bought land in Portsmouth. This land, on what is now the West Main Road, is at present owned by one of his descendants, Rev. John Cornell, M. A., who spends his summers there. Thomas Cornell died at his home in 1655, and his wife died Feb. 8, 1673, aged seventy-three.

(II) Thomas Cornell (2), born in the county of Essex, England, came to Rhode Island with his parents and became a farmer and land owner in Portsmouth. The name of his first wife is unknown. His second wife was Sarah Earle, who, after Mr. Cornell's death, married David Lake. By both marriages there were seven children, four of whom were sons.

(III) Thomas Cornell (3) was born in 1653. He inherited considerable land from his father, added to it, and was one of the large land owners of Portsmouth, where he spent his life. He died Oct. 14, 1714, aged sixty-one years. He married Susan Lawton, and they had three children: Thomas, born in 1674, died April 18, 1728; George; and Elizabeth, born in 1690, died July 19, 1750, the wife of Samuel Cranston.

(IV) George Cornell was born in 1676, and, like his father, was a lifelong farmer in Portsmouth, where he died Nov. 3, 1753, aged seventy-six. He was a member of the Society of Friends. Three times married, his first wife was Philadelphia Eastis (or Eustis), of Salem, Mass., to whom he was united in Newport. After her death, he married at the Friends Meeting, in Newport, Nov. 11, 1696, Deliverance, daughter of Gov. Walter Clark. She died Oct. 8, 1732, and Mr. Cornell married, a third time, Abigail Sisson, daughter of John Sisson, becoming his wife March 8, 1735. He was the father of sixteen children.

(V) Clark Cornell, sixth son of George and Deliverance, was born July 23, 1714, and married, Oct. 2, 1735, Priscilla Lawton, daughter of Robert Lawton, of Newport. They had six children.

(VI) George T. Cornell, oldest son of Clark, was born Sept. 26, 1736, and made his home in Newport, where he died in 1799. His wife is supposed to have been Elizabeth Cranston, of Jamestown, R. I. They were married Aug. 10, 1756, and had five children.

(VII) George Cornell was born July 2, 1764, and died in 1841. He married Miss Child.

(VIII) George Cornell was born in 1797, and died in May, 1855. He served his country as a soldier and took part in the battle of Lake Erie. On Nov. 8, 1815, he married Maria Rodman, and they had six children, as follows: William; Mary Rodman, born in 1819, who married, May 3, 1842, William Henry Chase; Catherine, born in 1822, who married, Nov. 22, 1842, Nathan Hammett; Alzada, born in 1823, who died in 1850; Adelaide, born in 1829, who married Thomas Chapman, and Oscar, now living in Bristol, Rhode Island.

(IX) William Cornell was born May 14, 1817, in Newport, where his entire life was spent. After acquiring a common-school education, while still a boy, he entered Michael Freeborn's grocery store as a clerk, and remained there several years. He, then, in partnership with John Dennis, established the grocery firm of Cornell & Dennis, which continued until 1856, when the firm was dissolved, and Mr. Cornell began business on his own account. He opened a grocery store at the intersection of Spring, Broadway and Bull streets, and continued there until his death, meeting with ever increasing success. A few years before his death he took his son, the late Rodman Cornell, into partnership with him, the firm name becoming William Cornell & Son. After his father's death the son carried on the business until his own demise, and then the heirs conducted the business along the same lines and at the old location until 1906.

On Sept. 29, 1840, William Cornell was united in marriage to Sarah Vernon Chase, daughter of Elisha Chase, of Swansea, Mass., and four children were born to them: Henry, the eldest, died in infancy. Mark was for a time associated with his father in business, but later became a bookkeeper for the Appletons, publishers, with whom he remained sixteen years; he died in Newport, unmarried. Ellen, the only daughter, still resides at the old homestead. Rodman, who succeeded his father in business, and died in Newport, married Miss Charlotte Sweetland Anderson, and had one daughter, Ethel Burd.

The death of Mr. William Cornell occurred at his home in 1887, and caused widespread regret. A man of unusual beauty of character in his home, he was also warmly esteemed in both business and social relations. While quiet and unassuming, he yet possessed all the force and power required to make a success of his financial ventures, but the success was never gained through injustice to another. In politics Mr. Cornell was a good Republican, but sought no active part in the city's affairs. In church work, on the contrary, he was prominent, and at his death had served for thirty years as treasurer of the Trinity Episcopal Church, of which he was a devout member and liberal supporter. The genuineness of his Christian character was fully appreciated by his associates in church work, as is shown by the following resolutions passed after his death by the vestry of Trinity and St. Stephen's Guild:

NEWPORT, Mch. 3, 1887.

At a regular meeting of St. Stephen's Guild, held on Tuesday, Mch. 1, 1887, the following resolutions were adopted:

THAT WHEREAS our Heavenly Father, in His Divine wisdom, has taken from this world one of our honorary members, William Cornell,

Resolved, that this Guild extend to the family of the deceased their sympathies in this, their bereavement.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, and a copy be placed on the records of this Guild.

(Signed)

A. B. UNDERWOOD,
Sec'y, St. Stephen's Guild.

At a meeting of the vestry of Trinity Church, Newport, R. I., held Monday evening, Feb. 7, 1887, the following resolutions were passed:

The Vestry of Trinity Church having heard with pain and regret of the death of Mr. William Cornell, their associate for many years, desire to express their deep sense of the loss the Church has sustained in his death, and their high appreciation of his worth, his Christian virtues and his long and faithful service as Treasurer, to which office he was elected in 1862. During all these years he has cared for the funds placed in his hands in a manner that has made his name synonymous with probity and fidelity. He was a man of singular purity of character; none ever heard him say aught to disparage a fellow being, and no one can recall an instance when he was not correct and just and honorable in his dealings. He avoided the crowded walks of life, and took no part in any public excitement or demonstration; but uniformly kept to his own quiet way, striving to be just to all, true to his religious belief, and to be ready for that summons which must in turn come to us all. As he lived, so he died, a good and upright and righteous man.

Resolved, that we sincerely mourn the loss of our late associate, and that in a body the members of this Vestry will attend his funeral.

Resolved, that a copy of this preamble and these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased by the secretary.

(Signed)

JOB T. LANGLEY,
Secretary.

PHILIP LINTON was born April 30, 1836, in Scotland, of Irish parents, and came to the United States when six years old. He attended the public schools of Providence, and when fifteen years of age began to learn the jewelry business in that city. Mr. Linton has, with the exception of a few years, followed that business ever since.

The P. & A. Linton Company, of which he was the main incorporator, and is now the president and treasurer, is one of the oldest concerns in its line in Providence, having been established in 1857.

DANIEL COON CHESTER. In the adjacent territory of Connecticut, New London county, the Chesters have dwelt for two centuries or more, and have been among the leading families of their communities and of the Commonwealth, and from the Connecticut stock have gone out men of achievement, among them the late Joseph Lemuel Chester ("Julian Cramer"), antiquarian and author, himself of Connecticut birth, whose achievements were such as to give him a memory tablet in Westminster Abbey; and Albert Huntington Chester, Ph. D., Sc. D., the chemist and mineralogist.

The Westerly Rhode Island family of Chesters descend through Christopher Chester, of the Connecticut stock, and have in their lives given evidence of the family traits of high integrity, fidelity to duty, and right living. In Daniel Coon Chester, who was retired from the Revenue Cutter Service as Senior Chief Engineer in 1902, the family has had a worthy representative, the State an honorable citizen, and the government a faithful servant.

(I) Capt. Samuel Chester, "commander and owner and factor in the West India trade," arrived in Boston in 1663. That year he located in New London, at the same time for a few years carrying on business in Boston. He was skilled in both navigation and surveying and was esteemed as a judicious and worthy man. A sea captain in earlier life, he had visited foreign ports, trading among the people with good success. He had a large landed estate, partly on the east side of the river, in what is now the town of Groton, covering the ground where Fort Griswold and Groton monument now stand. He also had large tracts to the north and south of Groton point. Captain Chester held a large tract of land in the North Parish of New London, now the town of Montville, Conn. He died in 1710. He married Hannah, and his children, so far as known, were: Abraham, John, Hannah and Jonathan. Of these, John married (first), in 1716, Mercy Starr.

(II) Abraham Chester, son of Samuel, married and became the father of several children, among whom was Christopher, mentioned below.

(III) Joseph Chester, a son of John, and grandson of Samuel, born in March, 1730, married (first), in 1753, Rachel, daughter of Rev. James Hillhouse, and (second), in 1757, Elizabeth Otis, daughter of Deacon Joseph Otis. Joseph Chester settled in what is now Montville, Conn., where he was a large land owner and was occupied in farming.

(II) Jonathan Chester married, in January, 1723-24, Mary Rogers. In 1777 he sold the land upon which Fort Griswold stands to the United States Government.

(III) Thomas Chester, a son of John and grandson of Capt. Samuel, born Aug. 18, 1721, in Groton, Conn., married, in 1743, Sarah Eldridge, and lived and died in the town of his birth, dying Jan. 13, 1798.

(IV) Deacon Elisha Chester, son of Thomas (above), born in Groton, Dec. 12, 1767, married, May 15, 1794, Mary Walworth, and they resided in the town of Groton. He was a farmer—a quiet, industrious and thoughtful man.

(III) Christopher Chester, son of Abraham, was born in Groton, Conn., Oct. 26, 1757, and he died June 6, 1831. In December, 1775, he enlisted as a private under Capt. Gallup and Col. Parsons, of Connecticut, for twelve months; in April, 1777, he enlisted for six months under Capt. Smith and Col. S. Warner, of New Hampshire; later for three months he was under Avery for guard duty at Groton. He was engaged in the capture of Burgoyne. On April 1, 1818, he applied for a pension, which was granted. On Jan. 3, 1779, he married Martha Chase, who was born March 27, 1753, and who died Jan. 1, 1828. Their children of Westerly record were: Martha, born Jan. 16, 1780, died May 5, 1837; Christopher, born June 4, 1781, died Oct. 6, 1783; Lemuel, Jan. 5 (or 6), 1783; John Chase, July 8, 1785; Christopher (2), Feb. 24, 1792.

(IV) Lemuel Chester, son of Christopher, born Jan. 6 (or 5), 1783, married, Sept. 20, 1804, Nancy Burdick, and their children of Westerly record were: Lemuel, born July 1, 1805; Ann, Sept. 19, 1806; Frederic Oliver Chase, May 12, 1808; Elizabeth Martha, March 22, 1810; Hannah, March 22, 1812; Sophronia, April 18, 1814; Eunice, May 26, 1816; Ursula, Nov. 30, 1818.

(IV) John Chase Chester, son of Christopher, born July 8, 1785, married, at Shelter Island, N. Y., April 4, 1808, Nancy Cartwright, and among their children of Westerly record was John Edward, born July 10, 1809.

(IV) Christopher Chester (2), born in Westerly, Feb. 24, 1792, son of Christopher, spent his boyhood and early school days in Westerly. He was a carpenter by trade, but later in life was ordained a minister of the Seventh Day Baptist Church, preached in Rhode Island, and had charge of a church near Rome, Oneida Co., N. Y. He died in Hopkinton, Nov. 10, 1877. On Dec. 9, 1813, he married Olive Burdick, who was born in Stonington, June 16, 1795, and who died Dec. 31, 1883. Their children were: (1) Christopher N., born Nov. 7, 1814, died July 11, 1900. He married Ann Maxson, and had four children: John Henry and Horace S., of Hopkinton; Miss Olivia, and Martha (Mrs. Palmer Green, of Rockville, R. I.). (2) Benjamim F., born Sept. 13, 1816, died Jan. 22, 1889. He married Susan Langworthy, and had six children, three of whom died in infancy, the others being Albert L., Gilbert, deceased, and Amos F. (3) John H., born Nov. 28, 1818, resides in North Stonington, Conn. He married Emeline Merritt, and of their children, Louise married James Court Barber, a carpenter of Westerly; John C. is a nurse in New York; and Herbert lives in New York. (4) George D., born March 27, 1821, married Charlotte Vars and died July 12, 1881. (5) Olive B., born Sept. 27, 1823, married Russell W. Merritt, and died March 11, 1876. Her son, Dwight R., is of Ashaway, R. I. (6) Martha C., born July 18, 1826, married Joseph Perry, and died July 23, 1893. Their son, Welford, is a farmer near Rome, N. Y. (7) Oliver B., born Jan. 16, 1829, married Fanny Sisson, and lives at Stillmanville, R. I. They have two children—Irrving, and Nettie, who married Judge N. B. Lewis. (8) Daniel C., born Sept. 2, 1831, married Louise Sutphen. (9) Susan M., born March 1, 1835, resides at Hopkinton, R. I. (10) Sarah E., born July 2, 1837, died Jan. 22, 1889.

(V) Daniel Coon Chester, born Sept. 2, 1831, in Hopkinton, R. I., lived in his native town until he was fourteen years of age, when he went to New Orleans, there spending about four years. He served an apprenticeship at engineering at the Novelty Iron Works, and the Morgan Works, in New York City. He put up the engine on the steamer "Perseverance," of the Morgan line, and took her to New Orleans, and there went into the Lowell Line on the steamer "Falcon," running from New Orleans to Navy Bay; and was on the "Crescent City," from New York to New Orleans. In 1859 he went into the Navy Yard at Brooklyn, and from March, 1863, until May, 1865, served in the navy as acting first assistant engineer on the flag ship "Ticonderoga," of the West Indies Squadron. He had charge of the "A. D. Vance," which was captured as a blockader, and fitted up as a cruiser. He participated in the fights at Fort Fisher.

On June 9, 1865, he was appointed chief engineer in the revenue cutter service, and superintended the construction of the United States revenue cutter, "S. P. Chase," and took her up on Lake Ontario, remaining on her nine years. He superintended the building of the "Dallas," for the Portland Station, and remained on her for three years; then he went to Wilmington, Del., and built the "McLain," on which he went to Galveston for three years. Briefly, his later service was as follows: Ordered to Boston Cutter for about three years; rebuilt the "Fessender" at Detroit; went to New York on the "Grand" and stayed there nine years; went to Camden, N. J., and looked after building of two vessels; went to Buffalo and built a cutter there; went to Boston and built the "Manning"; superintended the building of machinery at Springfield, Ill., for the cutter for the Yukon river; superintended the building of the boiler for a cutter for service in the Great Lakes; and was retired from service April 12, 1902, as Senior Chief Engineer. Summary of service: From Eastport, including Newport, three years, three months; from Newport, including Baltimore, eight years, three months; south of Baltimore, three years, three months; Great Lakes, nine years, eight months; special duty, seven years, five months; leave or waiting orders, four months; waiting orders by request, no time; waiting orders, one year. He ranks as captain in the army and lieutenant in the navy.

Daniel Coon Chester was married in New York City, April 27, 1854, to Miss Louise Sutphen, and they had children: Ella Medora died at the age of three years; Ida Matilda died at the age of seven years; Carrie Olive, who died at the age of twenty-six years, married William W. Wilcox, and had one daughter, Gladys Chester; Charlene Bedell married James H. Blackler, of Westerly, and has a daughter, Louise; William Youngs died in infancy; George Eddy, who resides in North Stonington, married Annie Tomlinson, and has one daughter, Julia; James Ernest, of Groton, Conn., employed at the Eastern Ship Building Company, married Claude Jones, and has one son, Daniel Alexander; and Ray Addison is with Brown & Sharpe Company, at Providence, Rhode Island.

NICHOLAS BOONE SPINK (deceased), one of the prominent agriculturists in the farming district around North Kingstown, and owner of the valuable estate now known as the Narragansett Bay Farm, belonged to one of the old Rhode Island families descended from the original settler, Robert Spink.

Robert Spink was an Englishman, born in 1615, and when twenty years of age sailed from London for America. His first years in the New World are veiled in oblivion but from 1648 to 1665 there are records of him at Newport and Portsmouth. He settled in the latter year at North Kingstown, where his descendants have been found ever since. He died probably early in 1695, as his will was proved March 27, 1695. His wife Alice, bore him many children, Robert, John, Shibna, Nicholas, Samuel, Ishmael, Benjamin, Margaret, Sarah and Elizabeth.

John Spink, born Sept. 6, 1700, married for his first wife Sarah Tibbetts, and they had one child, Margaret, born Sept. 11, 1725. By the second wife, Hannah Carpenter, there was a large family, namely: Samuel, born Dec. 31, 1729; Ishmael, Feb. 12, 1731; Oliver, Dec. 23, 1733; John, March 21, 1736; Sarah, Oct. 9, 1738; Nicholas, Jan. 24, 1743 (died in April, 1807); Silas, March 3, 1745; and Hannah, July 23, 1746.

Nicholas Spink married Ann, daughter of Samuel Boone. His death occurred in April, 1807. He and his wife had twelve children, namely: Hannah, born in January, 1770, who married Thomas Fry; John, born June 22, 1771, who married Catherine Allen; Mary, born March 25, 1773, who married Jonathan Reynolds, and died Feb. 23, 1851; Samuel, born Feb. 17, 1775, who married Barbara Lindley; Christopher, born March 17 (or 15), 1777, who married Hannah, daughter of Nicholas C. Northrup, and died March 16, 1832; Boone, born April 15, 1779, who married Ann, daughter of George Tennant; Nicholas, born Feb.

11, 1781, who married Hannah Potter; Ann, born Jan. 10, 1783, who married Samuel Scott and died Oct. 24, 1825; Lucy, born Jan. 5, 1785, who married James McKenzie; William, born July 12, 1786, who married Sally Bissell; Franklin, born March 27, 1788, who married Mary Dyer; and Martha, born July 24, 1790, who married (first) Christopher Allen and (second) Jonathan N. Arnold.

Nicholas Spink, who was born Feb. 11, 1781, died Nov. 1, 1862. He married Aug. 12, 1802, Hannah Potter. He built the house on Quidnessett Neck, on the old Spink homestead, now occupied by William Boone Babcock, and there he and his wife reared their family, namely: Matilda, born March 15, 1804, who married June 29, 1820, Charles Eldred; Eliza, born Dec. 21, 1807, who married June 27, 1838, Amos Underwood; and Nicholas Boone.

Nicholas Boone Spink was born Oct. 26, 1811, on the homestead at Quidnessett Neck, endeared to the family as the birthplace of its representatives for many generations. The piazza of the old house commands an extensive view of the beautiful Narragansett Bay and of the landscape beyond. So desirable an attraction is the site that it is with difficulty that the owner, the eldest daughter of Mr. Spink, has resisted the advantageous offers made by would-be purchasers of the property.

Nicholas Boone Spink spent his life on this ancestral estate, having such educational advantages as the common schools afforded. His father was an industrious, hard-working farmer, and early impressed upon his son the importance of diligence and economy as essential to success. When a lad he therefore gave a helping hand to the labor of the farm, and after his marriage assumed entire charge of the property which finally became his by inheritance. He continued the active life of an agriculturist until his death, which occurred Jan. 11, 1882, and was regarded as one of the successful farmers of North Kingstown.

In politics a firm Whig as was his father before him, Mr. Spink later endorsed the principles of the Republican party. He was much interested in the political issues of the day, and cast his vote with great regularity, but always declined to hold office, though frequently urged to accept such honor. He was domestic in his tastes, fond of his home, and never happier than when enjoying the pleasures of the family circle. He was a supporter of the Quidnessett Baptist Church, and a constant attendant upon its services.

On March 12, 1839, Mr. Spink married Eme-line Fry Spink, daughter of Boone Spink, of Wickford. They had two children: Matilda Eldred, born Sept. 11, 1843, married Jan. 24, 1867, William Ray Babcock, son of Ray Babcock; and Ella Josepha, born June 3, 1850, married Oct. 1, 1870, C. E. Nichols, and had one son, Edgar Spink, deceased.

WILLIAM RAY BABCOCK, son of Ray Babcock, and son-in-law of Nicholas B. Spink, was born on the Bateman farm in North Kingstown, July 5, 1843, and his boyhood days were passed in his native town, and in East Greenwich and Warwick. He attended the East Greenwich Academy. In February, 1862, he came to live on the Spink farm, and on Jan. 24, 1867, married Matilda Eldred Spink, daughter of Nicholas Boone Spink. They have had four children, namely: William Boone, born Jan. 5, 1872, died Jan. 5, 1872; William Boone (2), born April 13, 1873; Gertrude, born Dec. 21, 1877, died Feb. 7, 1880; and Ray, born Aug. 19, 1881, died Nov. 22, 1889.

WILLIAM BOONE BABCOCK was born April 13, 1873, on the Nicholas Boone Spink farm, now known as the Narragansett Bay Farm. He attended the public schools and the East Greenwich Academy, chose farming as his occupation and is one of the most progressive, up-to-date farmers in the South County. His wife, to whom he was wedded Nov. 6, 1902, was in her maidenhood Annie May Reynolds, daughter of Allen Reynolds. She is a member of the Davisville Grange. Both Mr. Babcock and his wife belong to the Quidnessett Baptist Church.

JOHN T. COTTRELL, who for many years was an active business man of Pawtucket, was of Scotch descent, and his first American ancestor accompanied the Cabots on one of their exploring voyages to the New World.

The grandfather of John T. Cottrell was a man of affairs in Rhode Island, where he passed a long and useful life, dying in South Kingstown in 1843. One of his sons, John Stanton Cottrell, born April 8, 1801, was a prosperous farmer and gave all of his children the advantages of a good education. He married Desire Pearce Northrup, and the oldest child of this marriage, John T. Cottrell, was born at South Kingstown, Aug. 2, 1833.

John T. Cottrell received his early education in the high school of his native town, and afterward supplemented this with study at the Adelphian Academy of Brockton (now Bridgewater, Mass.). It was his intention to enter college after leaving the academy, and later to take up one of the professions as his life work, but he had to abandon this determination, because of the exceeding weakness of his eyes, he being warned by his oculist to leave his books and seek relief by total abstinence from reading. For the next few years he aided his father in superintending the large home farm, and he later went to Narragansett Pier, where he established a large coal and lumber business, which he successfully conducted for seven years. In 1873 he returned to Pawtucket, and continued in the same line of business, purchasing the interest of the late Albert Bliss in the coal and lumber firm of Joseph Smith & Co. About 1881 Mr. Cottrell purchased an entire interest in the Joseph Smith Company, and was the sole owner of the business until his death, Dec. 2, 1889, it now being successfully carried on by his oldest son, John S. Cottrell, as trustee.

Mr. John T. Cottrell was a Republican in politics, and ably represented the town of Jamestown for several years in the Rhode Island Senate. After his removal to Pawtucket his business interests were so large and engrossing that he had little time to give to politics. His only public office here was on the school committee, from which he resigned after a short term of service. He was an attendant of the First Baptist Church, and was a member of the Masonic Order, belonging to Holy Sepulchre Commandery, Knights Templar.

On Feb. 7, 1864, Mr. Cottrell was married to Emeline Taylor, of South Kingstown, and he was survived by his children, only two of whom were adults at the time of his death. Mr. Cottrell in every respect was a good type of the successful business man. During his life of close application to business, he was simple and unassuming. He was honored, loved and universally respected. His death was caused by acute pneumonia, after an illness of but three days.

The children born to John T. and Emeline (Taylor) Cottrell were: Mary T., who married Ferdinand Bray, of Pawtucket; John S., mentioned below; Anna T.; Emma D., now Mrs. Dr. F. A. Binford, of Hyannis, Mass.; Samuel C., who married Miss Emma Louise Hoadley, of Providence; and Esbon T.

JOHN S. COTTRELL was born at Narragansett Pier, R. I., Sept. 6, 1868, and was educated in the schools at Narragansett Pier, and in private, public and high schools at Pawtucket, R. I. A year prior to his father's death he engaged in the coal business with him in Pawtucket, and in 1889 was appointed trustee of the estate. On July 14, 1898, The John T. Cottrell Company was incorporated, with John S. Cottrell, president and treasurer, and Esbon T. Cottrell, secretary. Mr. John S. Cottrell is a Scottish Rite Mason of the 32d degree, being a member of Union Lodge, Pawtucket Royal Arch Chapter No. 4, Pawtucket Council, Holy Sepulchre Commandery, and Palestine Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

JESSE BROWN SWEET. The Sweet family, one of the oldest and for many generations of the most prominent in Rhode Island and throughout New England, is elsewhere given extended mention. This article will treat of the late Jesse Brown Sweet, for many years well-known in the commercial life of the city of Providence, of his family, and of his surviving son, Jesse Brown Sweet, a well-known Providence business man, prominent in fraternal and social circles.

Philip Sweet was born in 1751, and died March 2, 1837, in his eighty-sixth year. In youth he learned the trade of a tailor, and was thus employed through a great portion of his life. His papers and manuscripts, yet extant, display him a man of more than average intelligence and of many excellent qualities. He was a true Christian, though not a member of any religious denomination, and he reared his family in a strict observance of the Golden Rule. The death of his son Brown and that of his wife, which occurred some little time previous, hastened his own demise, though he was then at an advanced age. Mr. Sweet married Annphillis Brown, descended from Chad Brown, who came with Roger Williams to Rhode Island, the line being through (I) Chad and wife Elizabeth; (II) John and wife Mary Holmes; (III) Obadiah and wife Mary; (IV) Chad and Sarah Smith; (V) Jesse. Mrs. Sweet died Oct. 9, 1836. To Philip and Annphillis Sweet were born the following children that reached maturity: (1) Sarah married Ethan Harris, and removed to the West, where they left descendants. (2) Elizabeth married Ethan Olney, and their children were: Eliza A., who became the wife of Henry J. Angell, son of James, but left no descendants; Phebe, who married Henry Treadwell, and of their children Jane married a Mr. Hamlin, and lived in Virginia, Ida married Frank Thurston, and lives at Washington, D. C., and Jeremiah married Susan Spaulding, and has three sons, Lewis, Brown and John. (3) Amey married Charles Cousins. (4) Mercy married a Mr. Belknap, and their daughter Amey married Calvin Waterman, of Johnston, R. I. (5) Ethan married Sarah Hawkins, who was the mother of all his children, though after her death he married a second time. His children were Mary (who married Horace Beane), Thomas and Albert. (6) Brown married Mary, daughter of Paris Mathewson, and reared four children, Isaac M., Sarah (who became the wife of Benjamin Winsor), Loring and Mary. (7) Ira was thrown from a horse in his youth and killed. (8) Jesse Brown.

Jesse Brown Sweet, son of Philip, was born July 17, 1795, in the town of Smithfield, and in his boyhood received such educational advantages as were afforded by the community and justified by the limited means of his parents. When but a youth he found employment in the mills of his community, at what is now called Enfield. During the war of 1812 he was a teamster, conveying supplies, etc., between Boston and Philadelphia. Though he was still but a boy he was entrusted with many responsibilities and was exposed to many perils, through all of which he passed safely and creditably. Some few years later he came to Providence and engaged in the grocery business, which was subsequently merged into the grain and dye wood business. His name appears in the first directory of the city of Providence, published in 1820. His business career covered an extended period of years, during nearly all of which he was actively engaged in the business house which he founded and also in various other enterprises. He was successful to a moderate degree, but valued friends and reputation above the mere accumulation of wealth. From boyhood he was possessed of a sunny, genial temperament, told and enjoyed a good story, and his delight in good fellowship and in the society of his friends was only exceeded by their enjoyment of him. He possessed an excellent singing voice, and it is remembered most pleasantly by those living who enjoyed hearing him. He was a man of robust physical development. For some years he was the head of the Volunteer Fire Department of the City of Providence, and through this as well as by other official means he rendered valued and efficient service to his fellow-citizens. He died June 10, 1869, in the seventy-fourth year of his age, and his death was mourned not only by his family and friends, but by a wide circle of acquaintances.

Mr. Jesse Brown Sweet married (first) in 1821, Joanna Sayles, daughter of Smith and Abbie Sayles, of Smithfield, R. I. By this union were born children as follows: George Henry, born Oct. 31, 1822, when a young man went South, and died unmarried; Abbie Sayles, born Feb. 23, 1824, died in youth; Smith S., born June 11, 1825, married Harriet M., daughter of Constant and Eliza Sweet. The mother of these children died June 18, 1825. Mr. Sweet married (second) Mary Ann, born Aug. 10, 1808, daughter of Willard and Sarah P. Joslin, of which family further mention is to be found elsewhere in this work. To this marriage were born the following children: (1) Albert, born Sept. 2, 1827, was a machinist well and favorably known, though he died in young manhood June 27, 1853. (2) Charles Owen, born Dec. 28, 1828, died Sept. 21, 1830. (3) Ira, born April 17, 1831, died Sept. 28, 1838. (4) Charlotte E., born Sept. 22, 1833, married Charles E. Pettee, who was born May 22, 1833, and died Aug. 9, 1861. Mr. Pettee was a banker and broker in Boston, where he resided at the time of his death. Their children were: Charles S., born March 20, 1856, now residing in Providence; and Harry Maynard, born Jan. 27, 1860, who died July 23, 1871. (5) John Hoppin, born Oct. 9, 1835, died Sept. 11, 1899. In his youth he thought to follow a seafaring life, but after some little experience he returned to the homestead and became an employe in the Corliss Steam Engine Works. At the breaking out of the Civil war he was one of the very first to enlist in the 1st Light Infantry under Colonel Brown. At the expiration of his term of enlistment he was obliged to return to his home by reason of illness, but upon his recovery he enlisted in the navy and saw service on board the famous "San Jacinto" under Farragut. He was promoted to be paymaster's clerk, and served faithfully throughout the remaining years of the war. Returning to Providence, he resumed his former work with the Corliss Company, and remained with them until the death of his father, when he became a factor in the firm of S. S. Sweet & Co., with which and its successor, J. H. & J. B. Sweet, he continued until his death, which occurred at his summer home at Buttonwoods. He had the esteem of all men and was held in high regard in commercial, fraternal and social circles. He was a past master of Mt. Vernon Lodge, A. F. & A. M., which lodge he was affiliated with before becoming a member of Adelphoi Lodge. By his wife, Mary S. Clapp, daughter of Green and Juliet Clapp, he became the father of four children, two of whom died in infancy. The others are: Mary Anna, wife of Eugene V. Elsbree, of Providence, and mother of two children, Hope and Shirley S.; and John Hoppin, Jr., who married Mary, daughter of William and Ellen Smith, and resides in Providence. (6) Willard J., born Sept. 9, 1837, died Nov. 14, 1905. He was in the Civil war, in Company C, 2d R. I. Vols. He married Martha Morton, who died in a short time, leaving no children. (7) Joanna Sayles, born Sept. 24, 1839, resides with her sister, Mrs. Pettee, in Providence. (8) George Henry, born Jan. 15, 1844, died Oct. 19, 1864. (10) Jesse Brown, Jr.

Jesse Brown Sweet, youngest and only surviving son of Jesse Brown Sweet, Sr., was born in the city of Providence April 23, 1847, and after completing his education in public and private schools he became identified with the business founded by his father. In 1869 he was admitted a partner, and in 1870 the style of the firm was changed to S. S. Sweet & Co., being then composed of the brothers, Smith S., John H. and Jesse B. This continued for two years, when, upon the retirement of Smith S., the firm became known as J. H. & J. B. Sweet, and under this name it has since endured. Throughout the many years of its organization it has been well to the fore in commercial circles and a leader in the hay and grain trade of Rhode Island. For some years the firm conducted two stores, one at the present location on Canal street, in the heart of the wholesale produce district, and another on Charles street. Since the death of Mr. John Hoppin Sweet, Mr. Jesse B. Sweet has assumed entire proprietorship of the business, though the firm name remains unchanged.

Mr. Sweet was married, Aug. 31, 1870, by the Rev. Dr. A. H. Granger, to Penelope, daughter of William D. and Eliza H. Avery, of Providence. Mrs. Sweet died Nov. 4, 1904. She was a woman of more than ordinary strength of character and mental attainments, and was widely and favorably known throughout the city, particularly in such parts where her deep interest in charity and philanthropy called her frequently. To Mr. and Mrs. Sweet were born the following family of children: (1) William Howard, born Aug. 17, 1871, married Adelaide Hamilton, daughter of Ralph S. Hamilton, of Providence, and they have one son, Howard Hamilton. (2) Jesse Brown, Jr., born

Oct. 31, 1875, is a well-known cotton broker of Providence. (3) Elizabeth Avery was born April 5, 1883.

By strict integrity and close application to business Mr. Sweet has gained for himself a name and position in the commercial life of the city. He has fully sustained the repute and position won by his father and brothers and has added new lustre to an honorable name. He has been active in fraternal circles and is one of the two or three living charter members of Adelphoi Lodge, No. 33, A. F. & A. M. His brothers Smith S. and John H. were also charter members of that lodge. He is also a member of the Central Club, and has been active in the Board of Trade. In his political predilections he is a Republican, but in local matters considers the man rather than the party.

HALL (North Smithfield family). The Halls of New England are of long and honorable standing here and as well numerous. The college graduates of this name, in 1834, were twenty at Harvard, twenty-five at Yale, seven at Dartmouth, and twenty-two at other New England colleges.

This article is to treat only and but briefly of one of the Connecticut-Massachusetts branches of Halls, one member of which for forty and more years has been one of the substantial men and respected citizens of the town of Smithfield and North Smithfield, respectively. Reference is made to Capt. Philip Davis Hall, of Slatersville, an artist by profession and a veteran officer of the Civil war.

Born June 8, 1822, in the town of Plainfield, Conn., Captain Hall descends from Samuel Hall, of the County of Middlesex, Massachusetts, as long ago as two centuries, beyond which we have no direct knowledge. Family tradition, however, sets forth that this Samuel Hall sprang from one of the several brothers who came to New England in its early settlement, and from one who remained within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts. There follows the family history and genealogy of this Massachusetts-Connecticut branch of the Hall family in the line of Captain Hall of North Smithfield, the order being chronological.

Samuel Hall, of Middlesex county, Mass., purchased in 1719 of his uncle, John Hall, land in Connecticut, bordering on Moosup pond. He later bought other tracts of land in that neighborhood, all while he yet resided in Massachusetts. Subsequently he removed to the town of Plainfield, Conn. Two children are of record as born to him, namely, John and Stephen. Samuel Hall and others of the Hall name at one time owned the greater part of the land lying between Snake Meadow brook and the Quinebaug river, in Plainfield. The Christian name of the wife of Samuel Hall was Elizabeth, and their marriage occurred in Middlesex county, Mass. She died in Plainfield, Conn., Nov. 18, 1776, aged eighty-two years, and Mr. Hall passed away Nov. 5, 1770, aged seventy-eight years. Both are buried in the old cemetery in Plainfield. Of the two sons of Samuel and Elizabeth Hall, John was a lifelong resident of Plainfield, occupied in farming, and owned a number of slaves which he later liberated. He married Hannah Williams, of Sterling, Conn., and died in 1808.

Stephen Hall, son of Samuel and Elizabeth, born in 1719, in Massachusetts, came with his parents to Plainfield, Conn., on their removal thither. Here he married, in March, 1748, Hester (or Esther) Leonard (or Lennard) (Esther Lennard according to tombstone). She died July 13, 1797, aged sixty-seven years, and he passed away April 1, 1818, aged ninety-nine years. Both were buried in the old cemetery in Plainfield. Their children of town record were: Stephen, born July 6, 1749; Lucy, born Nov. 18, 1750; Sarah, born Jan. 8, 1756; and Hester, born Nov. 3, 1757.

Stephen Hall (2), son of Stephen and Hester, born July 6, 1749, was twice married. His first wife died May 24, 1790, aged forty-three years, and he married (second) Tamsin (or Tammie) Herrick, who died July 10, 1849, aged eighty-three years. Mr. Hall resided throughout his lifetime in the town of Plainfield, Conn., his home being located in the eastern part of the town. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits. On the Lexington Alarm, April 19, 1775, Mr. Hall was among the patriots of Plainfield who responded to the call to arms, being a member of a company commanded by Capt. Andrew Backus. For a time, says family tradition, he was an officer in the war of the Revolution, commanding a company.

Two children were born to the first marriage of Mr. Hall, namely; William and Sally, the latter marrying Douglas Parks and moving to the town of Pitcher, N. Y. To the second marriage were born children as follows: Abby, who married John Gordon; Esther, who married James Wilson; Lydia, who married Joseph Lathrop; Olive, who married Hezekiah French; Eliza, who died unmarried; Polly, who married James Spencer; Otis, who lived in Sterling, Conn., and later removed to Jewett City; Leonard, who died in Voluntown, Conn., leaving a family; and Calvin, who moved West.

William Hall, son of Stephen Hall (2), was born in 1776, in the town of Plainfield, Conn., to the first marriage of his father. As a young man he for a year or two taught the local school and later for a time was a teacher in the famous old Plainfield Academy, as an assistant to Deacon Burleigh; for a time, too, he taught in Catskill, N. Y., with Professor Reed, a famous instructor of that day. A man of education and considerable force, Mr. Hall, with a taste for politics, figured more or less prominently in the public affairs of his town. He was a Democrat of the old school. He served for some sixteen years—a part of which time was during the war of 1812—as deputy sheriff. He collected the war taxes of 1812-1814, covering the eastern portion of Connecticut and carrying the specie with him on horseback in saddle-bags. He became well and favorably known throughout the State. He owned a small property in Stone Hill, and when not occupied in public business followed farming.

Mr. Hall married Ruth, daughter of David Davis, of Plainfield, Conn. She died Nov. 27, 1848, aged seventy years. He passed away June 16, 1861. Their children were: George, born July 30, 1811, died Jan. 15, 1813; Edward Perry, born Oct. 28, 1812, married Elizabeth R. Comstock, and died Nov. 18, 1891; Catherine Lucretia, born Aug. 28, 1814, married Joseph Deane; Stephen, born Feb. 23, 1816, married Mary Westcott, and died in 1887, at Moosup, Conn.; Henry was born April 19, 1818; William F., born March 13, 1820, married Abby T. Shepherd; Philip Davis was born June 8, 1822.

CAPT. PHILIP DAVIS HALL, son of William, and the youngest of a large family of children, perhaps owing in a measure to this latter condition, but more to the father's appreciation of an education, as he himself was a man of somewhat liberal learning and for years an educator, was afforded liberal educational advantages. Passionately fond of art, the son turned his efforts in this direction, pursuing his studies for years under somewhat eminent artists, among whom was Alexander Emmons, of Hartford, Conn. To this profession Captain Hall has since devoted himself, finding in it his chief happiness and pleasure. With him art is a sentiment and entirely separated from commercial values. In his profession, one of pastime, he has assiduously striven to exemplify all that is noble and good, irrespective of his surroundings. He has not painted for fame, and his environment has not been such as to inspire and encourage genius. However, with an unerring purpose and with great industry, he has nevertheless persevered, and many of his best works have seen no other light than that of his studio walls.

Captain Hall in his earlier life had traveled to some extent through the South, making studies and sketches, especially through the State of Virginia, and there witnessed slavery in all its cruelty, an institution he abhorred. He had given more or less attention to military affairs, for which he had a taste, and held the rank of captain in the early stages of the Civil war. These circumstances led him into the conflict during the summer of 1862, during which period he was an officer, captain of Company E, in the 9th Regiment, Rhode Island Volunteers; and later on, within his State for years, he was actively connected with the Rhode Island militia, being in command of the 3d Company, 1st Battalion, 2d Brigade, of State troops.

As may be inferred, Captain Hall is a man of cultured tastes and mind, who finds his chief happiness and pleasure in books and art.

RUSSELL HANDY, who during his life was well known in manufacturing circles in Rhode Island, for thirty-seven years superintendent of the Manville Mills, and a stockholder therein and founder of the Contrexeville Manufacturing Company, was born in the town of Burrillville, R. I., Feb. 25, 1830, a member of an old and honored family of New England.

The Handy family (the name being variously spelled, Handy, Hendy and Hendee) while early in this country and in New England, there seems little history of it that found its way into print. One Samuel Handy, aged twenty-five years, was a passenger in July, 1635, in the "Assurance de Zo," from England for Virginia. In 1730 Hannibal, Isaac, John, Zacheus, Richard and Cornelius Handy were heads of families in Sandwich, Mass. Through portions of Bristol county, lying adjacent to Rhode Island, and in some of the towns of the latter State, the family have been represented for generations, but only fragmentary public vital records of the Handys in Rhode Island exist.

One Isaac Handy, of New Bedford, Mass., married Sarah Spooner, who was born in 1719. Along prior to the middle of the eighteenth century, there lived at Newport, R. I., James and Mary Handy, whose family comprised: Ann, Penelope, John, George, Joseph, Hannah, Mary and James, all born between 1746 and 1766.

In the region of country named and through other portions of Massachusetts many of the Handys rallied in defense of their homes and for liberty, and the name often appears as having been in the ranks during the Revolution, some rising to high place. Russell Handy, of Bristol county, Mass., of considerable service and for a period in the Continental line, became a United States pensioner, as did John and Ebenezer Handy—all these being Rhode Island men. John Handy, of Newport, was a brigade major in the Rhode Island Continental line. He was also a lieutenant, quartermaster, etc., of the Continental troops. Charles Handy was also active in the military of the State, serving as captain, paymaster and adjutant.

There lived in the region of country alluded to, but of unconnected antecedents, one Stephen Handy, the genius of whose son, the late Russell Handy, of Rhode Island birth, founded the now far-famed Contrexeville Manufacturing plant in the vicinity of Manville, R. I. Stephen Handy spent his early days in that part of Gloucester, R. I., which is now Burrillville, where he followed the trade of shoemaker, and also taught in the local schools. In addition to this he operated a small farm at Herring Pond, where he built his home, forging his own nails with which he constructed it. In many ways Stephen Handy was a genius. In the early thirties he removed with his family to what is now the village of Manville, where he spent the remaining years of his life, and he was laid to rest in the cemetery at Whitinsville, Mass. He married Deborah Ballou, born also at Glocester, now Burrillville, and their children were: Sarah, born Sept. 6, 1814, married James Andrews; Celinda E., born July 22, 1822; Esther W., born June 10, 1823, married Thomas W. Lawton; Amey Ann, born March 5, 1825; George D., born Dec. 29, 1828, married Mary Corey; Russell; and John, born June 12, 1834, married Mary Knox, and resided at Whitinsville, Mass., where he died.

Russell Handy was but a child when his parents located in Manville, and his educational advantages were quite meagre. At an early age he started to work in the mills, beginning at the bottom round, and he was promoted until he became superintendent; subsequently he was a share-holder. During his superintendency he made many improvements, including the building of the large mills of the Manville Company and enlarging the dams. He was a man of great enterprise and had progressive ideas, which, with a complete comprehension of business details, made his undertaking successful. While still superintendent of the Manville mills, he entered into the manufacturing business for himself at Kinderhook, N. Y., placing the conduct of the enterprise under the management of his sons, very capable young men, and when that plant was destroyed by fire, Mr. Handy and sons started into the manufacturing business at what is now Contrexeville. In 1887 Mr. Handy bought a large tract of land, known as the Lapham place, on which he erected a mill, in which much of the machinery was of his own invention, but he died Nov. 22, 1887, a few months after the mill was put in operation. His burial was in Swan Point cemetery. The mill was continued by his sons, under the name of the Contrexeville Manufacturing Company, of Manville, R. I., which was incorporated in 1887 with a capital of $100,000. The officers of the company at that time were Russell Handy, president; Edwin R. Handy, assistant superintendent (who, after the death of his father, became president, which office he held until his own death May 1, 1904); and T. H. Handy, treasurer and secretary. The company manufacture cotton, jute and flax plushes and velveteens by a process on which they hold the patents and for some time were the only manufacturers of this kind in the United States. The mill building, which is of brick, two stories in height, is of modern construction in every respect, and its equipment of machinery is complete and of the latest kind. It is situated about one mile from the Manville railroad station in a very attractive locality, and employment is given to 125 hands.

The founder of this great industry, the late Russell Handy, was a very unusual man. He had few early advantages, having entered upon mill work at the age of nine years, and after entering business for himself lost all in the financial depression of 1857. After some thirty years with the Manville Company he again entered into business for himself as described above, and the present great works attest his genius and the executive ability of his sons. He was well-known and esteemed by all of his employes, who regarded him as a kind and just man. He was a member of the Emanuel Episcopal Church at Manville, in which he had been a vestryman for a long time, and which religious body dispensed many of his charities. His home life was ideal. His children were his companions, and in his death they lost much more than a father. He built a beautiful home, but did not live to enjoy it long.

On Dec. 24, 1857, Mr. Handy was married at Fishkill, Dutchess Co., N. Y., to Euphemia Ketcham, born in New York City, daughter of Ebenezer and Lydia (Rogers) Ketcham, both of whom were natives of Harrison, N. Y. Mrs. Handy was educated in the public schools of Fishkill, completing her education in the High school and seminary and for three years prior to her marriage taught school in Dutchess county. The children born to this marriage were: Edwin Rogers, Thomas Henry, Russell, Jr., and Ruth Louise. Of these, Russell, Jr., died at the age of twelve years, and Ruth L. at the age of four years.

Edwin Rogers Handy was born Oct. 2, 1858, was educated at Manville, and at the Mowry & Goff English and Classical school, Providence, and early was associated with his father in the mill enterprise at Kinderhook, N. Y. Later he became connected with his father at the Contrexeville Mills, and as noted above became president of the company which operates them, continuing in that office until his death, May 1, 1904. He married Eliza C. Howard, and they had four children: Ruth Louise; Russell Howard, who married Caroline B. Vose; Edwin Rogers; and John Ketcham.

Thomas Henry Handy was born March 12, 1863, was educated at Manville and the Mowry & Goff English and Classical school, and his business career has been similar to that of his elder brother. He is now treasurer and secretary of the Contrexeville Manufacturing Company. In 1889 he married Susan L. Waterman of Cumberland Hill, and they have four children: Thomas Henry, Abbie W., Susan Westcott and William Russell.

In 1884 Mr. and Mrs. Russell Handy enjoyed an extended trip in Europe, which they repeated in 1887, when they visited Contrexeville, France, the name of this pleasant place being adopted for the manufacturing plant, which he soon erected. Mr. Handy's acquaintance was wide and included many of the substantial and prominent men of his time. The late Bishop Thomas M. Clark of the Episcopal Diocese of Rhode Island was one of his close personal friends, and always when at Manville made his home with Mr. Handy. The death of the latter was a great blow to him, and his memory was tenderly preserved in a beautiful poem, which was written by the Bishop on Nov. 8, 1888. We are permitted to add this loving testimonial to this too brief sketch of one who was in every position of life a man of sterling worth:

"His presence seems to linger here,
We feel that still he may be near,
We see him not, we hear no sound,
And yet we know that all around
A hallowing influence fills the air,
As if his spirit hovers near."

"The words he spoke come back once more,
The smile we've seen so oft before
Scatters the darkness of the night,
And fills the room with placid light;
Upon our weary, aching heads
A sacred benediction spreads."

"The memories he has left behind,
Return to us, so gracious, kind;
His sympathy and care for those,
Who came to him with all their woes;
The record of a life so pure,
In all our hearts must long endure."

"He walked most humbly with his God,
With patience bore the chastening rod,
And before man he stood upright;
With soul transparent, clear and bright,
And hands that never could be moved
To do what God or man reproved."

"His work on earth at last is done,
And he the victory has won;
He is at rest; but yet he lives,
And to his wife and children gives
In his grand life a legacy,
Which gold and silver could not buy."

E. CRAWFORD HALE, for many years a business man of the Olneyville section, well deserved the high opinion in which he was held by his many friends. He was the son of Edward Anthony Hale, once a prominent manufacturer, and grandson of Levi Hale, who sprang from good old Massachusetts stock. Both his paternal and maternal ancestors were prominent in the early settlement of New England.

Levi Hale married Emma Luther, of Dighton, Mass., and their children were: Edward Anthony; Almira, who became the wife of George Nichols, and had two sons, Frank and George, citizens of Philadelphia, where the family resided; Gardiner, who married a Miss Ballou, and removed to Alabama, where they reared a large family; Betsey, who married Otis Sweet, of Mansfield, Mass., where their son, William Otis Sweet, resides; William, a manufacturer of cotton goods, who married Mary Skinner, of Mansfield, and passed his life there, though he resided for brief periods at other points; and Cordelia, who married Henry Bliss, and two of her sons, Albert and Anthony, reside at North Attleboro, Massachusetts.

Levi Hale was a farmer. He was of quiet and thrifty disposition, but did not reach advanced years. He died while several of his children were quite young, and to the wife who survived him fell the care and rearing of the family. She was a woman of intelligence and of wonderful industry, and lived to a good old age.

Edward Anthony Hale, eldest son of Levi and father of E. Crawford, was born in 1806 at Dighton, Mass., and there reared. His early years were passed on the farm, and he shared with his mother the care of the family. For some years later he was employed in the cotton mills of the neighborhood, and he then engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods on his own account, being associated with his brothers under the firm name of E., G. & W. Hale, their establishment being located at Mansfield, Mass. This continued for some twenty-five years, or until the introduction of modern machinery into the mills. Mr. Hale then engaged in setting up and establishing self-operating mills for some time, and next became general superintendent of the operating rooms of the large Lonsdale mills. From there he came to the Merino mills in Johnston, R. I., where he remained for fully twenty years. For some twelve years previous to his death, which occurred March 1, 1886, he lived in retirement at his homestead on Whittier avenue, Olneyville. Mr. Hale's career was one filled with much labor and many trials, yet his was a successful and well-spent life. He was slightly under middle stature, broad and of great physical and constitutional strength. He was of a quiet and unassuming and rather studious manner, a devout Christian, and for many years a member of the Episcopal Church, and was most regular in attendance upon divine service. When advanced age and ill health denied him this, his greatest of pleasures, his disappointment was most keen and, perhaps, hastened his demise. He possessed a well defined musical tendency, was a great lover of music and a singer of more than ordinary ability.

In November, 1832, Mr. Hale was married at the Wilkinson homestead between Lonsdale and Ashton, to Miss Elizabeth Wilkinson, and to them were born the following children: Edward Crawford; Charles Simeon, born Jan. 8, 1837, married Reliance Mayo, had two children, Charles and Edward, and died June 23, 1875; Mary E., born May 2, 1839, died Aug. 12, 1840; Samuel W., born Sept. 4, 1841, married Ruth Ann Cory, and died Aug. 18, 1881, survived by his widow and son, Edward.

Edward Crawford Hale was born April 6, 1833, in Central Falls, R. I., and was reared at Mansfield, where the family removed soon after his birth. There, and at the various points of their residence, he attended the common schools and acquired his education. When about eighteen he became a clerk in a mercantile establishment, acquiring a practical business training. In 1861 he moved to Olneyville, then a part of Johnston, R. I., where he started in the grocery business on his own account, locating on Manton avenue, opposite the Delaine Mill, and his place was known as the Red Market. His was one of five stores then established in this section, and he continued in trade at various locations in the village for nearly twenty-five years, during which period he became widely known and respected, not only for his genial courtesy and affability, but for his honesty and fair dealing with all men. In 1888 he removed to Warren, R. I., but after two years returned to Olneyville and engaged in the milk business with his son-in-law, Alvin M. Mowry, a line he followed for thirteen years. Mr. Hale was, like his father before him, of quiet disposition, and at his death June 6, 1906, remarkably well preserved, and in appearance and activity resembling many of scarcely half his years. In political matters he was a Republican. He took a genuine interest in the affairs of his community and State, but never was an aspirant for office. Both he and his wife were members of the Church of the Messiah (Episcopal). His social qualities were marked and he was a valued member of Manufacturers Lodge, I. O. O. F., and was a member of the K. of P., and the Good Fellows and the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

On Dec. 30, 1856, Mr. Hale married Mary Anna Bowen, daughter of Leonard W. Bowen and granddaughter of Jabez Bowen. Jabez Bowen married Sarah Tanner, who bore him children as follows: Albro, Sarah, Lillis, Palmer, Ann, Henrietta, James, Eliza, Leonard W., and Henry (who died at birth). The mother of these children was left a widow when the eldest was but eighteen years of age, and though she was possessed of but slender means, she reared and educated them all, several becoming men and women of prominence—two of the sons physicians of wide celebrity.

Leonard W. Bowen, father of Mrs. Hale, was born in Scituate in 1810. He married Anna Dean Knight, and they had seven children: William K. died in infancy; Mary Anna, born May 5, 1834, became Mrs. Hale; Charles H. died in youth; Sarah J. married Ambrose Kingman, and had four children, Mrs. Helen Levett, Frederick (of Attleboro, Mass.), Charles (of Mansfield, Mass.) and Anna (who became the wife of Joseph Eaton, of Ruggles street, Providence, and has two children, Lester, born in 1899, and Clarence, born in 1901); Helen E. resides at Attleboro, as does also Albert; Frank died at the age of six years. Leonard W. Bowen, the father, died April 4, 1890, and his wife in 1887.

To Mr. and Mrs. Hale were born the following children: (1) Ida Elizabeth, who married Alvin M. Mowry, resides on Belmont avenue, Mt. Pleasant, Providence, and has had two children: Alice, who died Dec. 20, 1892; and Mary Ethelyn. (2) Anna Wilkinson married Dr. George R. Fisher, mentioned elsewhere. (3) Hattie Blanche married George H. Gordon, of Providence, and has children: Blanche Evelyn, born July 15, 1896; Marion Anna and Margery Alice (twins), born Aug. 10, 1901; and Kenneth Hale, born Aug. 6, died Aug. 10, 1905.

CHARLES ANDREW HAMBLY, who is one of the prosperous and highly respected citizens of Tiverton, R. I., where he is extensively engaged in farming and butchering, and where he owns a beautiful home and farm in the north part of the town, known as "Spring Hill Farm," was born in that town Oct. 12, 1839.

The Hambly family has been located in Tiverton for over one hundred and fifty years. Their nationality is uncertain, although the progenitor in America is supposed to have come from the north of England or the borders of Scotland. We find in the Tiverton town records that one Benjamin Hambly was married March 25, 1765, by Thomas Anthony, Justice, to Deliverance Fish. He must have been perviously married, as Benjamin Hambly, Jr., his son, was married May 6, 1777, by Walter Cook, Justice, to Elizabeth Fish, and from this Benjamin Hambly spring all the Hamblys of Tiverton and adjoining towns.

Benjamin Hambly, Jr., settled in the north part of Tiverton, on the land now owned by Charles Andrew Hambly, and the house built by him still stands on the farm. He cleared up the land and on it made extensive improvements, raising flax, and being also a large grower of sheep. He was a weaver by occupation, and all the clothes worn by himself and his family were woven and made up on the farm by the family, as were also their shoes. He spent all his life on the farm, where his death occurred Dec. 3, 1828, when he was aged seventy-five years, his wife passing away Oct. 18, 1834, aged seventy-six years, eleven months; both are buried at a beautiful spot on the farm, kept green in their memory by their grandson, Charles A. Hambly. To Benjamin and Elizabeth (Fish) Hambly were born children as follows: Mary, born Dec. 31, 1778; Elizabeth, born Dec. 3, 1780; John, born Dec. 27, 1781; Benjamin, born Oct. 20, 1783; Priscilla, born June 15, 1785, who married and settled in New York State; Alice, born March 10, 1787; Nancy, born June 17, 1789; Sarah, born June 20, 1792, who married and settled in New York State; Ruth, born Aug. 27, 1794; Charles, born April 18, 1796, who died young; Gardner and Amy, twins, born May 26, 1798; and Charles (2), born Nov. 3, 1801.

Charles Hambly, the youngest son of Benjamin and Elizabeth Hambly, and the father of our subject, was born Nov. 3, 1801, on the old homestead farm, and was given a somewhat limited education in the local schools of the day. But by applying himself to study he fitted himself for teaching, and for several terms was engaged in teaching school in his native town. He worked on the home farm, where he grew to manhood, and upon reaching his majority started in agricultural pursuits on his own account, locating on a farm on the Fish road, in Tiverton. There he continued thus engaged until his father's death, at which time he became the executor of his father's will, and located on the homestead farm on the Main road, where the remainder of his life was spent. He operated a tract of 100 acres, upon which he made extensive improvements, and where he died Dec. 8, 1887, being buried in the family burying-ground on the homestead farm. Mr. Hambly was an active member of the local militia for several years, and in political belief he was at first a Whig, later becoming a Republican. In his religious connection he was a member of the First (now the Central) Baptist Church, of Tiverton.

Mr. Hambly married Miss Mary Slocum, who passed away in Tiverton, March 29, 1897, at the age of ninety-one years. She was a daughter of Major Benjamin Slocum. Mrs. Hambly was a faithful and devoted wife and mother, and a consistent member of the Baptist Church. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hambly had the following children: Mary Jane, born March 16, 1823, married William B. Bennett, and both are now deceased; Sally T., born April 13, 1826, married George Slocum, and both are now deceased; Ann A., born July 27, 1828, married Edward B. Hambly, and both are now deceased; Abby E., born May 8, 1831, married Richard W. Sherman, and they reside in Tiverton; Fanny M., born Aug. 16, 1833, married Daniel Stafford, and both are now deceased; Ellen F., born Aug. 4, 1836, married William H. Estes, and is deceased; Charles Andrew is mentioned below; Ruth A., born Oct. 23, 1842, is now the widow of David B. Borden, of New Bedford, Mass.; Olive J. died at the age of seven years.

Charles Andrew Hambly was born Oct. 12, 1839, in Tiverton, R. I., and his educational training was begun in the district schools of his neighborhood, after which he attended the Pierce Academy, at Middleboro, Mass., which academy was then under the principalship of Prof. J. W. P. Jenks. Among his classmates were numbered students from nearly every State in the Union. After returning home from school Mr. Hambly assisted his father in the management of the home farm during the summers and employed himself in teaching during the winters. His first experience as a teacher was at Westport Harbor, Mass., where he taught several terms, after which he taught a number of terms in the schools of Tiverton, where he also conducted singing school. After giving up teaching Mr. Hambly turned his attention to the raising of poultry, disposing of his stock to the hotels at Newport and to the "Stone Bridge Hotel" at Tiverton, which was then conducted by the late Asa T. Lawton and was then a well-known hostelry. Still later he started in the meat business, doing his own butchering, and selling his product at Fall River, Tiverton and Taunton, but subsequently found it more profitable to buy Chicago dressed beef, which he disposes of at Tiverton and Fall River. For over forty years he has raised and dealt in pork and lambs, which he prepares for the market. He is a director of the Shove Mills of Fall River, Mass. Mr. Hambly owns a fine farm of 125 acres, upon which he has made extensive improvements. His beautiful residence, erected by him in 1880 at a cost of $10,000, is one of the finest in the town of Tiverton, and is so situated as to command a magnificent view of Narragansett bay, the towns of Portsmouth, Bristol, Little Compton, R. I., and the surrounding country. The house is thoroughly modern in every respect, and is well supplied with water from an ever-flowing spring situated on the hill above the house, the water flowing of its own velocity into the second story. Mr. Hambly has also built a commodious barn, sanitary slaughter-houses and a cold storage plant on his place. His building are all fully equipped with modern appliances, and his farming is carried on in a thoroughly scientific manner. Mr. Hambly's success in life is a result of his progressiveness, enterprise and never-tiring industry.

From the age of sixteen years our subject has been a consistent and devoted member of the Central Baptist Church of Tiverton, which he has served for a number of years as deacon, and for over forty years has been continuously a teacher in the Sunday-school and as well Sunday-school superintendent. In his political sentiments Mr. Hambly is a Republican, but has never accepted any public office excepting that of member of the school board, in which capacity he has served his native town for several years.

On March 2, 1862, at Fall River, Mass., Mr. Hambly was united in marriage to Miss Mary Josephine Coit, who was born in Fall River Feb. 23, 1842, daughter of the late Gardner L. and Josephine Bonaparte (Evans) Coit, and a direct descendant in the ninth generation from John Coit, who came from Wales to America between 1630 and 1638, and appears among the first settlers of Salem, Mass., in 1638. Mrs. Hambly was a most estimable woman, an affectionate and devoted wife and mother, of kindly disposition, and beloved by all who knew her for her many beautiful traits of character. From girlhood she was a devout member of the Central Congregational Church of Fall River. She was called to her reward on Nov. 9, 1905, after a short illness, and was laid to rest in the family cemetery, where a beautiful monument marks her last resting-place. The following children blessed this happy union: Harry Coit, born March 22, 1863, married Miss Ida White, and is engaged in the meat and grocery business in Fall River, as well as being engaged in farming in Swansea, Mass. Lillian Raymond, born Feb. 17, 1865, married Benjamin C. Shove, of Fall River, where he is connected with the Union Cotton Mills, and they have three daughters, Florence Hambly, Marion Gardner and Annie Coolidge Shove. George Coit, born Sept 7, 1867, is engaged in the meat and provision business in Tiverton; he married Miss Emma Slocum, and they have two daughters, Elizabeth Coit and Josephine Brownell Hambly. Martha Roberts, born March 23, 1870, married James A. Davis, of Fall River, where he is bookkeeper for A. Homer Skinner, lumber dealer, and they have three children, Ethel Josephine. Andrew Hambly and Gertrude Gifford Davis. Mary Josephine, born March 16, 1874, married Henry C. Wilcox, of Tiverton, where he is engaged in the fishing industry, and they have one son, Harold Fairfield Coit Wilcox. Charles Andrew, Jr., born July 23, 1876, who is engaged in the confectionery business at traveling salesman for Weeks Bros., of Providence, married Miss Susan R. Cone, of Fall River, and they have one daughter, Helen Louise Hambly. Edith Helen, born Dec. 26, 1878, married Osmon Potter, of Tiverton. Eunice Hazel Lawton, born Dec. 12, 1881, married Irving D. Humphrey, of Tiverton, where he is engaged in the lumber and hardware business with his father, and they have one son, Irving Durfee Humphrey, Jr. Olive Judson, born Dec. 24, 1886, resides at home with her father, and whose engagement is announced to James D. Macfarlane, formerly of Tiverton, who is now located in West Tampa, Fla., where he is president of the Macfarlane Investment Company, being also prominently identified with the municipal affairs of that city.

Mr. Charles Andrew Hambly is very domestic in his tastes, and is much devoted to his home and its surroundings. He is charitable and benevolent, and in him the needy and less fortunate find a kind and sympathetic friend. His domestic life is an ideal one, and in his hospitable home the stranger receives as cordial a welcome as do his many friends and neighbors. No man can hand down to posterity a cleaner, better record than that of Charles Andrew Hambly.

ROBERT K. ATWOOD: In this day of inherited wealth and influence, sufficient credit is rarely given those men who, by their thrift and unaided industry, gain position, affluence and an honored name. There is no credit due to the hereditary prince, or to the scion of a millionaire, to roll in luxury, to possess landed estates, or for the ability—if perchance he have the inclination—to endow universities, manipulate railways or sway legislatures; but to the young man whose capital is vested in his native energies, to him are due phrases of eulogy and praise. A possessor of qualities which when tested by their practical exercise and application resulted in success, Mr. Atwood at an early period ventured upon life on his own account, prosecuting to the present time its varied routine of duties with earnest steadfast aim.

He was born in the city of Boston Jan. 9, 1837, and is descended from the ancient Atwood family, a son of Robert Kilton Atwood, a grandson of Anthony and a great-grandson of Nehemiah.

In the family sketch the name of the father of Anthony Atwood appears as Nehemiah, while in the records he is referred to as "Annanius." Anthony Atwood married Zerviah Kilton, daughter of Samuel Kilton, and a descendant of Robert and Bethiah (Fenner) Kilton, of Providence, R. I. Mr. Kilton was a bricklayer. His name appears in the list of those who were in Capt. Samuel Gallup's company, in the expedition to Canada in 1690. In 1691 he bought four acres of land in Providence, with buildings, orchard, etc. The children born to Anthony and Zerviah were: Amey, born Dec. 1, 1796; Marcy, Dec. 14, 1799; John and Benjamin, Sept. 25, 1801; Anthony, April 25, 1803; Ann Eliza, March 23, 1805; Robert Kilton, Feb. 15, 1807; Ruth, May 23, 1809; and Abraham C., June 18, 1813.

Robert Kilton Atwood, Sr., father of Robert K., was born in Johnston, R. I., near the present locality known as Morgan's Mills, Feb. 15, 1807. He was a farmer in his youth and early manhood, later removing to Boston and to several points in the vicinity of that city. He married Cynthia Hart, and they reared a family as follows: Anthony, Robert K., Sarah, Crowel, Benjamin, and several who died in infancy or early youth. Of these Anthony, Crowel and Benjamin served in the war of the Rebellion, and the two latter died in service. Anthony located at Roxbury, Mass., where at his death he left a wife and daughter. In 1849 Robert K. Atwood was struck and killed by a train at Roxbury, Mass., where he was employed as an expert machinist by the old Boston & Providence Railroad. He was highly regarded by the company, and his death greatly deplored. His widow survived many years, and died in New Bedford, Massachusetts.

At the age of eight years Robert K. Atwood became the ward of his uncle by marriage, William L. Latham, and was by him reared on the farm in Johnston and later in Olneyville. At the very outset it became the boy's duty to earn his own livelihood, and his assistance with the work of his uncle was of no little consequence. He had few educational advantages, and was not of a very studious nature, but rather of an active and energetic disposition. After the removal of the family to Olneyville, he sought various employments. They resided at what is now a prominent point at Olneyville Square. He was careful and painstaking, and thorough in every undertaking. As he grew older his industrious disposition was noted by others, and he became a clerk in the establishment of William Harris, and for Caleb Harris, who succeeded him. He was next employed for a short time in an iron foundry, after which he became a coach driver from Olneyville to Market Square. Under the administration of the late Hon. Thomas Doyle, he became a night watchman in the city of Providence. Later he became one of the first of the regular police constables and was a familiar figure in the commercial district of the city. During these years he had been saving his earnings and had accumulated a small amount of money which, in 1867, he invested in a part ownership of a market conducted by James Davis, and the firm became Davis & Atwood. For fifteen years this partnership continued, and at its termination he purchased the interest of Mr. Davis, and for a short time conducted the business alone. He then disposed of his interests to Walter Brownell, and seeking another location again embarked in the produce and market business. After seven years he bought the site of his business property, and erected the business block which he occupied until September, 1906, when, owing to impaired health, he retired from the mercantile business. Mr. Atwood erected and owns several properties in the vicinity of Plainfield and Atwood streets, the latter being named for him.

On Sept. 17, 1860, Mr. Atwood married Frances M., born Dec. 2, 1839, in Johnston, R. I., daughter of Dexter and Lucy (Fenner) Knight. Their children are: Maria J.; Amey L., wife of Dr. F. A. Twitchel, D. D., of Olneyville; Lucy F., and Lilly P., twins, the former the wife of William O. Todd; and one son, Robert Lang. Mr. Atwood is a Democrat in political preferment, but while active in the councils of the party, and at times manifesting interest in the candidacy of friends, he is not a politician. In 1879 he was elected to the General Assembly from the town of Johnston, but declined further political honors. He is well and favorably known throughout the city of Providence, and especially to his immediate neighborhood where he is recognized as a citizen of true worth. Beginning as a poor boy without aid or influence, he has gained a competency, and this, too, while maintaining a high reputation for honesty and fair dealing. By a life of strict sobriety and temperance, he is to-day although well past threescore years and ten, in almost the very prime of manhood, with every faculty susceptible to its strongest tension and activity. He is a man of powerful convictions and when convinced he is right will not be swerved from his opinion. He has a hearty "Amen" for every good work, and in most cases leans to a verdict of "not proven."

PARDON FENNER BROWN, one of the most highly esteemed residents of Providence, R. I., was born in the town of Johnston, at the home of his maternal grandfather, Pardon Fenner, June 9, 1827. His line of descent, so far as is known, is as follows:

(I) Gideon Brown had children as follows: Sarah, born March 4, 1753, married Charles Waterman; Phebe, born in 1758, died March 14, 1784; Ruth, born in 1760, married Benjamin Whipple, son of Joseph Whipple, of Plainfield, Conn., and died July 4, 1802; Mary, born in 1763, died March 14, 1776; Gideon, born Aug. 16, 1767; Hannah, born March 25, 1756, married Jan. 7, 1781, Samuel Sprague; and Nathaniel, born July 17, 1772, died July 14, 1848.

(II) Gideon Brown (2), born Aug. 16, 1767, son of Gideon, married June 27, 1788, Eunice, daughter of Solomon and Eunice (Lake) Thornton. They had children as follows: Nathan; Phebe, born June 12, 1794, married William Green; James, born Sept. 25, 1796, married Nancy Sweet; Mary, born Feb. 14, 1798, married Henry W. Hoyle; Benjamin Whipple, born June 5, 1799, married Sally Place; and Martha Field, born Oct. 24, 1801, married Owen Taylor.

(III) Nathan Brown, son of Gideon (2), married (first) Susan Thornton, daughter of Daniel and Susan (Pearce) Thornton. She was born in 1772, and died April 23, 1823. The children of this union were: William, born June 10, 1791, who married (first) Dinah Thornton, daughter of Richard and Meribah Thornton, had one son, William Thornton, and married (second) Sally Fenner, daughter of Henry Fenner (son of Hon. Arthur Fenner, who was born Jan. 6, 1725. See Fenner sketch); Abby P., born May 15, 1793, married Edward Fiske, and died July 17, 1858; Daniel, born Feb. 20, 1795; Ruth, born July 27, 1797, married Welcome Alverson, son of Caleb and Hannah Alverson, and died Jan. 5, 1872; Nathan, born March 27, 1800, married Amy Wright, daughter of Benjamin Wright, and died Dec. 15, 1872; Susan, born May 11, 1802, married Caleb Alverson, son of Caleb and Hannah Alverson, and died Feb. 22, 1877; Sarah, born March 25, 1804, married William Harris; Gideon, born March 15, 1807, married Mary Hart, daughter of John Hart; Phebe, born Aug. 10, 1810, died unmarried Dec. 29, 1895; Isaac, born July 10, 1812, married Mary Watson, and died April 5, 1879; and Clarissa, born July 10, 1819. For his second wife Nathan Brown married Susan Smith, daughter of Job Smith.

(IV) Daniel Brown, son of Nathan, born Feb. 20, 1795, married in March, 1816, Abby Fenner who was born Jan. 2, 1800, daughter of Pardon Fenner and his wife, Huldah (Williams) Fenner. She died May 20, 1881, while he had passed away May 1, 1879. Their children were: Ardelia, born in March, 1817, married Ezekiel Ralph, and died Nov. 12, 1876; Albert, born in 1820, died Sept. 5, 1841; Eliza Manchester, born March 31, 1822, married William Brown Alverson, and died April 3, 1906; Pardon Fenner, born June 9, 1827; and Daniel, born Sept. 10, 1840, married Florinda Matheson, daughter of Nathan Matheson.

(V) Pardon Fenner Brown, son of Daniel, born June 9, 1827, married Nov. 14, 1850, Helen, daughter of Elisha Olney and Ruth (Richardson) Angell, the latter a daughter of Joel and Lyda (Brown) Richardson. To this marriage came children: Arthur Fenner, born Sept. 22, 1851, married

(first) May 16, 1872, Emma Hall, daughter of Gardner S. Hall, and (second) Mary Gorton, daughter of Col. Samuel Wales, and had one daughter, Mabel Wales, born May 21, 1883, and he died Nov. 2, 1889; Caroline, born Jan. 22, 1857, died Feb. 18, 1857; William Mills, born Aug. 12, 1858, married Sarah Van Ausdale Ruth, daughter of John J. Ruth, and has one son Arthur Fenner, born Dec. 2, 1895.

Pardon Fenner Brown commenced his education at an early age in his native town, Johnston. He then attended the Summer street school of Providence, of which Hon. Amos Perry was principal, and later took a partial course at what is now known as Lapham Institute, under the Hon. Hosea Quimby, where he had as a friend and fellow-student James B. Angell, now president of Michigan University. He then entered the University Grammar School of Lyon & Frieze, Providence, in order to prepare for a course at Brown University, but on account of failing eyesight was compelled to give up a college course. Among his classmates at the latter school were James Simmons, Jr., Horatio N. Slater and David Duncan. In 1848 he engaged in wood manufacturing, in a mill which his father had left idle, well stocked with machinery for the manufacturing of blinds and doors. He continued it afterward at Manton and Fountain streets, Providence.

Mr. Brown was a passenger on the ill-fated steamer "Metis," which was wrecked off Watch Hill, Aug. 30, 1872, on the passage from New York to Providence. Latterly Mr. Brown has been engaged in farming on the old Angell homestead, the home of his wife. He has been a Republican in politics. Originally he was a member of the St. Peter's Church of Manton, but later became a member of the Church of the Messiah, and is one of the wardens of that church. Since 1849 he has been a member of the Rhode Island Episcopal Convention. Mr. Brown is connected with the Rhode Island and Citizens Historical societies.

COMSTOCK. The Comstock family, since the year 1654, has been one of prominence in Providence. Reference is here made particularly to the families of the late Jonathan F. and Andrew Comstock, and their sons, Louis H., Walter Jay, William A. H. and Frank P., who together and in turn have been among the leading business men of Rhode Island.

(I) William Comstock, doubtless the ancestor of all of the Comstocks of Connecticut and Rhode Island, is on record in Wethersfield, Conn., in 1641. He probably came from Watertown, Mass., with a large number of immigrants to Wethersfield, Windsor and Hartford, Conn., at about that time.

On Jan. 25, 1659, William Comstock deeded land in New London, and at a town meeting held there, Nov. 10, 1650, voted to co-operate with John Winthrop in establishing a corn mill in New London. It is probable that William Comstock, of Wethersfield and New London, who married for his second wife Elizabeth, had children as follows: John, of Lyme, Conn.; Daniel, of New London (now Montville); Samuel, of Providence; Christopher, of Fairfield and Norwalk, Conn.; and Elizabeth, who married Edward Shipton.

(II) Samuel Comstock, son of William, married Annie, who was living Feb. 10, 1657, and who married for her second husband John Smith. From court records he was undoubtedly living in Hartford in 1648, but on March 1, 1654, he bought a house and lot of John Smith, in Providence. This property comprised four acres and was near the corner of North Main and Abbott streets. His children were: Samuel, born in 1654; Daniel, born May 12, 1656.

(III) Samuel Comstock (2), son of Samuel, married Nov. 22, 1678, Elizabeth Arnold, born in Watertown, Mass., daughter of Thomas Arnold, of Cheshelbourne, Dorset, England, and Phebe Parkhurst. He was a deputy in 1699, 1702, 1707, 1708, 1711, and was appointed May 6, 1702, a committee by Assembly to audit the general treasurer's account and Colony debt. In April, 1708, he was appointed on a committee to fix the rates of grain and other specie brought to the treasury. He was called captain at the time of his death. He was a deputy from Providence in 1707. His children were: Samuel; Hozadiah; Thomas; Daniel; Elizabeth; John; Ichabod, and Job.

(IV) John Comstock, son of Samuel (2), born March 26, 1693, died Jan. 12, 1749, married (first) Esther Jenckes, daughter of William and Patience (Sprague) Jenckes, and (second) Sarah Dexter, born June 27, 1698, who died July 8, 1773. He was a blacksmith, and resided in Providence, where he was a large land holder, deeding to his sons, at various times, considerable tracts of land. He was buried in the North burial-ground, Providence. His children were: Samuel, born in 1715; Joseph; Jeremiah; John, Jr.; Jonathan; James, born in 1733; Nathan, and Ichabod.

(V) James Comstock, son of John, born Dec. 25, 1733, died March 7, 1791, married Esther Comstock, who died March 12, 1808. He was admitted a freeman of Providence in May, 1757. His children born in North Providence were: Richard, born April 19, 1754, died Jan. 3, 1755; Amey, born Sept. 21, 1755, died Jan. 19, 1785; Mercy, born July 20, 1757, married Robert Harkness, and died July 12, 1790; Woodbury was born Dec. 9, 1759.

(VI) Woodbury Comstock, son of James, was born Dec. 9, 1759, and died Nov. 7, 1793. He married May 1, 1786, Hannah Read, born Oct. 30, 1776, died Feb. 26, 1838, daughter of John Read. Woodbury Comstock was a Friend. He lived in North Providence, R. I., where he had these children: Lydia, born Nov. 23, 1786, married Asa

Andrew Comstock

JONATHAN F. COMSTOCK

Kelly; Amey, born Aug. 19, 1788, married David Kelly; Mercy, born April 14, 1791, married Ephraim Bassett; and James.

(VII) James Comstock, son of Woodbury, was born Feb. 27, 1793, in North Providence, and died April 26, 1861, at Blackstone, Mass. He was a farmer and retail butcher. He went with his mother to Mendon, now Blackstone, where she married Samuel Smith of that place. On March 9, 1814, he married Catherine Farnum, of Uxbridge, Mass., born Nov. 1, 1793, died June 20, 1867, daughter of Jonathan Farnum. Their children were: Woodbury L., born Jan. 26, 1815, died May 5, 1816; Lydia F., born Dec. 5, 1816, married Laban Bates, of Mendon, Mass.; Jonathan Farnum is mentioned below; Anna Smith, born Dec. 9, 1820, married Albert Gaskill; Andrew, born March 6, 1823, is mentioned below; James Kelly, born June 29, 1827, married Charlotte E. (Kelly) Benson, and died July 21, 1897; and Catherine Farnum, born June 29, 1827, married Richard D. Beede. In religious affiliation the father was a Friend.

(VIII) JONATHAN FARNUM COMSTOCK, born Nov. 24, 1818, died Jan. 8, 1889. He married Feb. 13, 1840, Mary Dexter Hall, who died May 13, 1894, daughter of Benjamin Hall. These children were born to this union: Louis H., born March 2, 1844, is mentioned farther on; Mary, born Sept. 6, 1846, died in infancy; Sarah E., born May 6, 1849, died in infancy; Walter Jay, born Dec. 12, 1853, is mentioned below; William Allen Hall, born Sept. 14, 1856, is mentioned farther on.

The Providence Journal of Jan. 9, 1889, said of Mr. Comstock: "Jonathan F. Comstock, one of the oldest and most prominent business men of Providence, died very suddenly Tuesday at his home on Broad street. He was for many years identified with the wholesale beef and pork business and by his connection with the firms of J. F. & A. Comstock, Comstock & Company, and J. F. Comstock & Sons, was one of the leaders in the great progress and development of this business within the last thirty years that has been so beneficial to all consumers of meat products in the East.

"Mr. Comstock was born in Mendon, Mass. (now a part of Blackstone), in 1818, and was thus at the time of his death in his seventy-first year. He was one of three brothers, one of whom, Andrew, has been connected with him in business in this city, the other living in Worcester. He began his business with his father at home as a young man, in the small way in which it was then conducted. Later the two brothers carried it on, and in 1857 they removed to Providence. Here their establishment was first located on Parkis avenue, in a spot now covered with dwelling-houses. A few years later they went to Clinton street (now Willard avenue), and in 1873 a further removal was made to their present location on Smithfield avenue in Pawtucket.

"Besides his local business Mr. Comstock also became largely connected with a great establishment in the West, whereby he co-operated in the development of the beef shipping business to the East, first as live stock in cars, then as dressed beef, in which form the business has been extended so enormously, even across the ocean. For the last eight years of his life Mr. Comstock had only a nominal connection with the great interests he was identified with. A severe nervous shock took him from active affairs, to which he did not return. He was, however, in a fair state of health, and Monday morning, the day before his death, he drove out, according to custom." Mr. Comstock was a member of the Society of Friends.

(IX) LOUIS HALL COMSTOCK, born March 2, 1844, at Mendon, Mass., married Jan. 27, 1870, Rachel Schuyler Lansing, of Cohoes, N. Y., and they had these children: Mary Lansing, born Dec. 5, 1872, who died Feb. 12, 1905; and Fred Schuyler, born Jan. 12, 1874. The former married, Nov. 20, 1895, William C. Huntoon, of Providence, and had two children, Louis Hall Comstock and William Caswell, Jr.

Mr. Louis Hall Comstock spent his school days in Blackstone, Mass., and also attended the high school in Providence, R. I. From school he went directly into the business with his father and Uncle Andrew. In 1880 he and his cousin, Isaac Comstock Bates, bought out Comstock & Co., and he has since devoted his energy to that company. He is president of the Oakdale Manufacturing Company and vice-president of the Merchants' Freezing & Cold Storage Company. Mr. Comstock is a member of the Hope Club, Squantum Club, Rumford Polo Club, Commercial Club, Providence Economic Club, and the Providence Board of Trade.

(IX) WALTER JAY COMSTOCK, born Dec. 12, 1853, at Blackstone, Mass., married (first) Feb. 4, 1880, Clara S. Forney, and (second) Jan. 3, 1894, Mary Waterman Chapin, daughter of W. W. Chapin, of Providence. These children were born to the union: Walter J., born Dec. 5, 1880, is with the Providence Ice Company; Catherine F., born May 30, 1882, died Sept. 22, 1882; and Mary Waterman was born Dec. 27, 1894. Walter J. Comstock spent his early school days in Providence, attending the Friendship street primary and intermediate schools, and graduated from Mowry & Goff's English & Classical School. In 1871 he became employed in the wholesale beef house of E. A. Grout & Co., which in 1875 became the firm of J. F. Comstock & Sons, consisting of Jonathan F., Andrew, Walter Jay and William A. H. Comstock, and his entire business life has been in connection with that firm. During the past ten years Mr. Comstock has not actively engaged in business, enjoying the pleasure of travel in this and European lands. From the age of eighteen years he has been a member of the 1st Light Infantry, and is captain of Company E. He is also colonel of the 1st Light Infantry Veterans. Mr. Comstock is a member of the Hope Club, Art Club and Rumford Polo Club. His residence is at No. 25 Parkis avenue.

(IX) WILLIAM ALLEN HALL COMSTOCK, born Sept. 14, 1856, in Blackstone, Mass., married Jan. 19, 1887, Harriet L. Brown, and one child came to this union, Jonathan Farnum, born Oct. 7, 1889.

(VIII) ANDREW COMSTOCK, born March 6, 1823, in Mendon, Mass., died Nov. 30, 1898, in Providence, R. I. He married May 24, 1856, Juliette Paine, born Dec. 25, 1825, and in 1857 they came to Providence, where Mr. Comstock became president of the Commercial National Bank and trustee of Brown University. Their children were: Frederick Dana, born May 7, 1858, who died Oct. 11, 1858; Frank Paine, born Feb. 26, 1864; and Clara Elizabeth, born Nov. 6, 1866.

The Providence Evening Bulletin of Nov. 30, 1898, says of Andrew Comstock: "Andrew Comstock, of the firm of J. F. Comstock & Sons, provision dealers on Canal street, died at his home on Broad street this morning after a brief illness. Mr. Comstock complained of not feeling well Saturday, and on that day returned from his business at an earlier hour than usual. Pneumonia developed and this morning resulted fatally. Mr. Comstock was born in Mendon, Mass., March 6, 1823, and was the son of James Comstock. There were six children, three sons and three daughters, Andrew being the second son. Educated at the Friends' School in this city, Mr. Comstock did not take a college course, but entered into business with his brother, Jonathan F. Comstock, in Blackstone, Massachusetts.

"The firm, a provision house, similar to that now in this city, though on a smaller scale, was known as J. F. & A. Comstock. In 1857, under the same firm name, the two brothers came to this city and carried on the business here. Ten years ago, after the death of J. F. Comstock, two firms, J. F. Comstock & Sons and Comstock & Co., sprang from the original firm, Mr. Comstock being interested in both, though subsequently withdrawing from Comstock & Co. and remaining with J. F. Comstock & Sons. He was associated with this firm at the time of his death.

"Mr. Comstock did not confine himself wholly to the company which bears the Comstock name. He was president of the G. H. Hammond Co., a large beef house in Hammond, Ind., which has plants in Chicago and Omaha. He was president of the Commercial Bank, a trustee of the People's Savings Bank and a trustee of Brown University. In spite of his large business interests Mr. Comstock also found time for activity in church work, and was one of the deacons of the Cranston Street Baptist Church, in whose welfare he was greatly interested. Mr. Comstock had a large number of friends and acquaintances and was especially prominent in the business circles of the city. He was a member of no secret organization, and was not prominent in the political world, although he was at one time a member of the State Legislature."

(IX) FRANK PAINE COMSTOCK, born Feb. 26, 1864, in Providence, R. I., married May 11, 1887, Laura W. Burroughs, daughter of Samuel N. Burroughs, and the following children were born to the union: Andrew Burroughs, born Aug. 4, 1888; Hope Marguerite, Oct. 16, 1891; and Katharine, March 4, 1900.

Mr. Frank Paine Comstock attended Mowry & Goff's English & Classical School, graduating in 1881, immediately after which he entered the business of J. F. Comstock & Sons. He was a director of the G. H. Hammond Company and the Hammond Packing Company, and is president of the Providence Ice Company. He is a member of the Hope Club, the Squantum Club, the Commercial Club, the Board of Trade and the Churchman's Club.

MILLER (Woonsocket family). For generations the Millers in and about Woonsocket and the region of country out of which came that town have been a continuous family. In the old town of Cumberland the vital statistics indicate a continuance of the name there since about the middle of the eighteenth century. And in other nearby Rhode Island towns once a part of Massachusetts the name dates back to a much earlier period, as in Bristol, Warren and Barrington. It was in Warren that Brigadier-General Nathan Miller of the Revolution and a member of the Continental Congress was born; and in Bristol lived Nelson Miller who for a period of six years served his country in the Revolution, under Washington at Trenton, and Princeton and at Valley Forge, and who fought, too, at Bunker Hill. This article, however, is to deal with the old Cumberland branch of the Miller family, with some of the descendants of William Miller, some of whom are yet active in the business and social life of Woonsocket and vicinity. In Cumberland lived and flourished the late Jonathan Miller, one of whose sons, the late Hon. Edwin Ballou Miller, became one of the most active and leading business men, as well as successful, of his time there, winning the reputation, too, of having been as upright and honest as he was successful.

Jonathan Miller, son of William, and father of the late Edwin B., married Nov. 15, 1807, Polly Ballou, born Oct. 31, 1787, daughter of Oliver and Abigail (Colburn) Ballou, of Cumberland, R. I., he a descendant in the fifth generation of Maturin Ballou, an early settler of Providence, his lineage being through James, Nathaniel and Noah Ballou.

The children of Jonathan and Polly (Ballou) Miller, all born in Cumberland, R. I., were: Ruth, born Jan. 19, 1809; Louisa Ballou, May 11, 1811; Almira Hill, July 6, 1813; Lorenzo Dow, May 20, 1816; Leander, June 22, 1818; Almon Greene, July 15, 1820; Clementina, July 21, 1822; Edwin Ballou, April 20, 1824; Solyman, Sept. 17, 1826; and Lewis Leprelett, Oct. 29, 1828. The parents of this family resided in Cumberland, R. I. Mrs. Miller was a member of the Six Principle Baptist Church. She was always spoken of as a most exemplary Christian woman. Mr. Miller was occupied in farming and in boat-building. He died March 20, 1859, aged seventy-four years, ten months and five days. His widow Polly died Oct. 27, 1866, aged seventy-nine years less four days.

EDWIN BALLOU MILLER, son of Jonathan and Polly (Ballou) Miller, born April 20, 1824, in the town of Cumberland, R. I., married April 1, 1848, Lydia Ann Hardy, daughter of Sumner P. and Mary (Haskell) Hardy, of New Hampshire, the marriage occurring at Woonsocket, R. I., Rev. Luther D. Hill, then pastor of the Baptist Church, officiating.

Mr. Miller was one of ten children, the mother of whom, as indicated in the foregoing, was a woman of strong mental ability and deep religious feeling. Edwin B. Miller obtained a limited education in a district school in boyhood, and at the same time assisted his father on the homestead farm and in boat-building. When twenty-one years of age he came to Woonsocket and went to work as "boss" farmer for his uncle, Dexter Ballou, who became sole owner of the Social Mill property Nov. 12, 1841, and built the first stone mill there, which was destroyed by fire July 1, 1874.

Edwin B. Miller continued in the employ of his uncle until the latter's death, July 17, 1849. He then engaged in the livery business on his own account, and in it met with success. In 1855 he embarked in the ice business, and at the same time began the purchase and sale of real estate. This business he successfully carried on during the rest of his lifetime. With the ice and real estate business Mr. Miller united that of lumber and also farming. He was successful in all. Upon land purchased on North Main street in Woonsocket, and in other places in the city, he erected buildings, including stores, tenement houses and residences, one-half of which he owned at the time of his death.

In all of his varied business enterprises Mr. Miller was successful to a far greater extent than is usual, and this large measure of success was due to his uprightness of character, his honesty, to his industry and capability, for he was a most capable man. Recognizing these qualities his fellow citizens called him to many and various positions of public trust. He was elected a representative from his town to the General Assembly of Rhode Island in April, 1888, serving one term. He was a member of the town council and collector of taxes before Woonsocket became a city. He was also highway commissioner, and for many terms served as a member of the board of assessors, an office he held at the time of his death. At this time he was one of the board of trustees of the Producer's Savings Bank, and a director and large stockholder of the Woonsocket Opera House Company.

Mr. Miller was a man of sterling integrity and of great business ability. He was an industrious man, working hard throughout life. He accumulated money, every dollar of which was made honestly; he was a worthy representative of the honest business men of the Old School and is worthy of being styled a model man for young men to pattern after. Mr. Miller was a great benefactor of Woonsocket, and his death was keenly felt in that community; the loss of such a man was great to the city. He was enterprising and public-spirited, encouraging progress and advancement. He had at heart the growth and development of Woonsocket and the advancement and welfare of the people. As citizen, friend and neighbor he was held in the highest esteem. While not a member of any of the churches of the city, yet his hand and purse was extended with equal liberality to all, for he was a believer in them. His creed was the Golden Rule, and it was the active and guiding principle of his life. Temperate himself in his habits he believed in temperance. He was kind in his home and loyal in his friendships.

Mr. Miller died at his home in Woonsocket, R. I., April 12, 1897. In the resolutions prepared by the common council of the City on the occasion there appeared the extract: "He was faithful to his friends, charitable to the needy, loyal to every trust and as an assessor was of service to our city many years. His course has been finished with honor to himself and our city." Mrs. Miller died at her home in Woonsocket, R. I., Feb. 15, 1886.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller were: Mary Estelle, married Francis Sylvester Weeks, Jr.; Medora (now deceased); Ellen Frances (now deceased); Ida Eliza married Stafford Clinton Clough; Adelaide L. is the widow of Clarence Carroll Andrews, of Providence; and Edward Porter married Emma Louise Grant, and has one child, Howard Ballou.

CLOUGH. The Clough family, now worthily represented by Stafford Clinton Clough, is an old one in New England.

Daniel Clough, great-grandfather of Stafford Clinton, was the father of six children: Jonathan, George, David, Lora, Laura and Nancy.

Jonathan Clough, son of Daniel, was born in Massachusetts, and in Killingly, Conn., he married Phebe Tanner, who bore him the following children: George Howe; Phebe Ann, who died in childhood; Harriet Eleanor, who married Rev. Artemus C. Field, and lived in Rutland, Vt.; and Mary Elizabeth, who married Robert G. Lee.

George Howe Clough, son of Jonathan, was born in Windham county, Conn. He married Ann Eliza Wade, daughter of Nathan Wade, of Rhode Island, and they became the parents of a large family.

Stafford Clinton Clough, son of George Howe, received his education in Massachusetts, and his musical studies were pursued in the Boston Conservatory of Music. He is one of the best known pianists in New England, and is a teacher and writer of music. For a number of years he has been organist of leading churches in Woonsocket, the last fourteen in St. James Church. He is a member of the I. O. O. F. On Jan. 1, 1877, in Woonsocket, he married Ida Eliza Miller, daughter of the late Edwin Ballou Miller. Their children are: (1) Arthur Clinton, a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y., a well known tenor singer, received in 1906 the scholarship in the vocal department of the Master School of Music in Brooklyn. He married, June 30, 1906, Fannie E. Lamy. (2) Harold Augustine was married Sept. 1, 1906, to Maud E. Whitney, and resides in Providence. (3) Gladys, (4) Marion and (5) Adelaide Andrews are at home. The entire family is musical.

COOK. The families represented in this article descend from Walter Cook, the first of the name in New England, who was at Weymouth, Mass., as early as 1642, and who died Jan. 5, 1685, at an advanced age. He was twice married, and was the father of eight children.

Deacon Nicholas Cook, son of Walter, was born Feb. 9, 1660, and was twice married (first) to Johanna Rockett, and (second) to Mehitable Staples.

Nicholas Cook, son of Deacon Nicholas, was born June 10, 1687, and was married in 1715 to Elizabeth Staples, who died in Bellingham, March 3, 1788, at the age of eighty-nine years, the mother of twelve children.

Nathaniel Cook, eldest of the twelve children of Nicholas, was born Sept. 15, 1718. He made his home in Wrentham, Mass., where he was a deacon in the Six Principle Church. On Jan. 27, 1741, he was married to Martha Ballou, born Oct. 6, 1720, daughter of James Ballou, to which union eleven children were born.

Ariel Cook, son of Deacon Nathaniel, was born Oct. 15, 1749, and lived on the homestead on Wrentham road, in the town of Cumberland, not far from the Ballou Meeting House. He was a deacon of the Baptist Church, and was married Feb. 20, 1772, to Dorcas Whipple, who was known as Aunt Dorcas, and who died Dec. 24, 1839, at the age of ninety years. He died June 18, 1803, the father of nine children.

Ariel Cook (2), son of Ariel, was born Jan. 20, 1781, in the town of Cumberland, where he was married Sept. 10, 1809, to Eliza G. Sabin, daughter of John Sabin of Newport. Their children were: George, Albert, John, Edmund L.,

Charles, Ann Eliza, Horace, Ariel Lindsey, Rebecca, Maria, Ellen F., and Joshua S.

George Cook, son of Ariel (2) and Eliza G. (Sabin) Cook, was born in the town of Cumberland, Aug. 18, 1810. He grew up on the homestead farm, and attended the schools of his native place, working on the farm from an early age, and later engaging in the mercantile business at Cumberland Hill, where he continued successfully for three years. In 1839 he gave up his business and was elected cashier of the Cumberland Bank at Cumberland Hill, a position he filled faithfully and efficiently for forty-seven years. In 1844 the house now owned by Walter S. Cook was built as the bank—the bank being located at this place until its dissolution. Mr. Cook continued cashier of the bank until two weeks prior to his death, which occurred Aug. 14, 1886, in his seventy-sixth year, and he was buried at Oak Hill cemetery, Woonsocket. He took a deep interest in school matters, and was treasurer of Cumberland for a period of thirty years, being appointed to that office in 1855 and serving until 1885, when he resigned because of ill health. In politics he was first a Whig and later a Republican. He attended the Baptist Church.

Mr. Cook was married Oct. 5, 1837, to Rachel Hutchinson, born in Smithfield (now Lincoln), Jan. 17, 1817, daughter of Martin and Cloe (Sayles) Hutchinson, who died at her home Sept. 16, 1892, being buried at the Oak Hill cemetery at Woonsocket. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cook: Abby Sayles, born Sept. 17, 1838, resides at the homestead; Frederick and Ferdinand (twins), born June 29, 1840, the former of whom is mentioned later, and the latter died in Woonsocket June 16, 1895; Walter Sabin, born Feb. 17, 1842, is mentioned below; Emma Frances, born March 3, 1845, married Nathan H. Bassett, who died July 9, 1871, and she passed away July 10, 1882; and Joshua Sabin, born Jan. 15, 1854, died July 11, 1876.

George Cook, after a life time spent in the town of his birth, left a most honored heritage—a good name and a long career filled with responsibilities for all of which he rendered good account. His private and public life was without stain or blemish, and his business acumen and ability was much in advance of the average of his period. He safely guided the financial policy and affairs of a banking institution of by no means little importance, and his council was sincerely sought and seriously heeded by his legion of friends and associates. Honors of high degree might well have been his had he been less content with his home attachments and cared less for the affairs of those near and dear to him. So long as he shall exist in the memory of man he will be honored and esteemed. His wife, who survived him some years, was a woman of superior qualities, faithful to her home and family.

Geo Cook

Frederick Cook

WALTER SABIN COOK, born Feb. 17, 1842, received his education in the district schools of Cumberland Hill, the Woonsocket high school, and the Friends' School of Providence. From 1862 until 1885 he was employed at the jeweler's trade at Attleboro, Mass., and in the latter year he returned to the homestead assisting his father in the care of his interests, and after the death of the latter assumed charge of them. Mr. Cook has fully sustained the family name and reputation, and is spoken of as "a true son of his father." He is popular among his friends, esteemed and respected by all. In politics he is a Republican, but he has never desired political honors. He and his sister reside at the old homestead, "the Old Bank," which is in an excellent state of preservation—its high white pillars and southern Colonial style of architecture making it one of the most imposing of the many old Rhode Island homes.

FREDERICK COOK, eldest son of George Cook, was born June 29, 1840, in Cumberland Hill, R. I., and was there reared and educated in the excellent public schools which the town afforded. His boyhood was not unlike that of other youth of the period until at the age of seventeen years, in April, 1857, he engaged with Edward Harris, the pioneer woolen manufacturer, in the latter's mill office at Woonsocket. By steady progress he rose, step by step, to the highest place in the department of accounts, that of head bookkeeper. Here he remained until in 1876, when he was tendered a similar position with the Berkeley Company in their office in Providence. This position he accepted, and for some years continued in their employ, rendering invaluable service and meriting the confidence reposed in him. For many years there had existed a warm friendship between Mr. Cook and Mr. Perkins, treasurer of the Woonsocket Rubber Company, and, when the latter's failing health necessitated the choosing of his successor, Mr. Cook's services were sought, and he became connected with this concern in January, 1885. In May of the same year the death of Mr. Perkins occurred, and Mr. Cook was elected treasurer of the Company. From that date until June, 1902, Mr. Cook filled the duties of his office with marked ability, and so conducted the finances of this great industrial enterprise (the industry was capitalized for, and did a business amounting annually to, millions) as to gain unstinted praise from men of high financial rank. During his long official connection with this company, Mr. Cook had absolute charge of its finances, and largely directed its financial policy. He introduced many innovations in method and practice in his department, which were of great value, and which are no doubt still in vogue.

After forty-five years of almost continuous service, during which period he had been a large factor in the success of the enterprises with which he was identified, Mr. Cook, as before stated, entered upon a well earned retirement from active business participation, in June, 1902, and upon this occasion the following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the directors of the Woonsocket Rubber Company whose interests had for so long a period been his own.

WHEREAS: Mr. Frederick Cook having resigned as Treasurer of this Company, it is Resolved, That the Board of Directors of the Woonsocket Rubber Company desire to express their regret at the resignation of Mr. Frederick Cook, Treasurer of this Company. Mr. Cook's services have extended over a period of seventeen years. Mr. Cook, throughout his long service, has been faithful to the trusts and responsibilities reposed in him, and his zeal in attendance to his duties has been characterized by a sense of utmost fidelity to the best interests of the Company, as has been shown by his promptness to perform any duty at the request of his superior officers.

His judgment and advice on questions of importance in the conduct of the financial demands of the Company, have been extremely valuable and thoroughly appreciated.

We shall never forget his constant friendliness of manner and unflinching cheerfulness, on all occasions.

We sincerely wish Mr. Cook in his retirement as an official of this Company, a long life of usefulness to his friends, and pleasure to himself:

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of this Company and that a copy be presented to Mr. Cook.

(Signed)

SAM'L P. COLT, President,
CLARENCE H. GUILD, Secretary.

Under Mr. Cook there were numerous assistants and clerks who, upon his retirement, presented him a handsomely bound testimonial of their regard, containing photographs of themselves accompanied by quotations of his oft-repeated words of cheer, commendation, or fatherly advice. In the text there appears the following:

We cannot let the present occasion pass without testifying to the great regret we all feel at the severance of bonds that have existed for so many years, caused by your withdrawal from the Treasurership of the Woonsocket Rubber Company, and we desire to avail ourselves of the opportunity to express our appreciation of an employer who has been both considerate and just, courteous in manner, and straightforward in action; always willing to do as he would be done by—in a word the upright business man unswerving in the right.

There is one consolation remaining, however, which is that, although we have severed the relation heretofore existing as employer and employee, we may still hope to retain your good wishes and friendship as a man and friend.

Wishing you many years of usefulness and enjoyment with success according to your own desires in whatever enterprise you may in future enter, we remain, etc.

In the foregoing expressions of men associated with him for so many years, Mr. Cook feels a most justifiable pride, not so much for their expression of appreciation of himself as a valued part of a great commercial enterprise and his faithful devotion thereto—for he but did his duty as his conscience dictated—but for the place which he gained in the hearts of his fellowmen, his daily associates. In this he takes a sincere delight, a more than pride, and it may truthfully be said that these recorded expressions are but the echo of the good opinion that is borne of him by all whose pleasure it has been to come in contact with him. His example may well be emulated by the youth of today, who will find much in the life of Mr. Cook worthy of deep consideration, since it displays the results of rigid honesty, industry and a strict adherence to the Golden Rule. His accumulations have been far greater than riches, and, as an old friend has remarked, "He is a worthy son of a worthy sire."

Mr. Cook married Sept. 17, 1872, Georgianna, daughter of Nathaniel C. R. and Eliza (Reynolds) Pierce, of Wyoming, R. I. Their children are: (1) George Frederick, born Oct. 15, 1880, was educated in Providence, attending the public schools, and was prepared for college in the English & Classical School of Mowry & Goff. He is interested in, and now secretary of the Marden & Kettlety Company, of Providence. (2) Nathaniel Pierce, born July 26, 1884, was educated in the Providence schools. (3) Bertha Wells, born June 16, 1886, died Aug. 16, 1886. Mr. Cook is a Republican in his political preference, but has had no inclination toward a public or political career. Like his father before him he is much attached to his home and family, in whose society he finds his greatest enjoyment.

HENRY A. MULLIKEN. In the passing from this life to his reward of the late Henry A. Mulliken Pawtucket lost one of its oldtime and venerable citizens, one highly esteemed and respected, whose life was honorable and useful, one whose name is linked with the construction of many of the buildings in and about Pawtucket, both private and public, including mills of his day, some of which still stand as monuments to his skill and workmanship, as his occupation was that of a carpenter and builder.

Mr. Mulliken was born April 7, 1817, in Newport, R. I., son of Benjamin and Elizabeth Mulliken, and when between six and seven years of age was left an orphan. At the age of seven he was put out to a farmer in the town of Little Compton, whom he left when sixteen to learn a trade; failing, however, in this endeavor to secure a place, he then went to work for Squire Jedediah Shaw. His former employer learning of this advertised him as a runaway apprentice, forbidding all persons to harbor or employ him. The youth was then advised by Squire Shaw to secure a guardian, and after being subjected to both embarrassment and trouble finally found a friend in Mr. Richard K. Randolph who became his guardian. A little later young Mulliken became an apprentice of Mr. Nathan Hammett, under whom he worked for five years—until January, 1838, Mr. Hammett being a contractor and builder.

For a time following the completion of his trade young Mulliken was in the employ at Charleston, South Carolina, of Albert Cottrell, an astronomer and builder. This was in the fall of 1838, and the next summer he returned to Newport, where he assisted in the building of the "Aquidneck House." He again went South where he was employed in building railroad bridges from Savannah to Macon, Ga., on the Central Railroad, in the fall of 1839, 1840 and 1841; and in the fall following, 1842, he assisted in building a large structure on the corner of Church street and Redwood avenue, in Newport, to be occupied as a boarding house. This building was erected for a man by the name of Potter, and now, though modified, is occupied as a club house. At this time Mr. Mulliken was in the employ of a man by the name of Blivin, with whom he did not agree in politics. It was in Dorrite times. Blivin styled himself a Law and Order man, while Mulliken was to some extent a "suffrage" man; and not being able to agree their business relations were severed.

Following this Mr. Mulliken went to Providence where he secured a contract for erecting a building on what was then Pawtuxet street, now Broad street. After the completion of this house he went to work for Messrs. Brownell & Ham, in whose employ he continued until December, 1842. His next move was to Pawtucket, going thither with a young man by the name of Medbury, and the two divided what was styled the old "Silk House" into tenements. Mr. Mulliken next built a house for the late Mr. Leonard Dean, on Cottage street, just north of the Marcus L. Dean place, a house which is still standing. He was next associated with Albert Cottrell in the building of the last wooden bridge over the Pawtucket Falls, working for a period on the latter before completing the Dean house. For some eight months beginning with the spring of 1844, he was employed in the old planing mill, having full charge of the mill, and from that time on until the autumn of 1846 he was employed on various buildings among which was the old Masonic Temple on North Main street and the Stafford & Pearce Mill.

In the fall of 1846 he built the first house on Spring street for the late Lewis Pearce; one on North Bend street for the late David Baxter; and one on Grove street, for the late John Bruce. In the spring of 1847 he became associated in a business partnership with the late Andrew R. Slade, their place of business being on East avenue. The firm did considerable work, but in 1848 a new co-partnership was formed, comprised of, besides himself and Mr. Slade, Waterman W. Dexter and Syra and John Humes, journeymen builders, and their location was on Lumber street, a business relation, however, of short duration, as the burning of their place of business in the winter of 1848 caused the dissolution of the corporation.

Owing to the dull times at Pawtucket at the time just cited, Mr. Mulliken concluded to try his fortune elsewhere, and, on going to Warren, this State, he found employment with a Mr. Reed, a ship carpenter, and continued work in and about Warren for several years, during which period he assisted in building the boat "John J. Sutter" (which was the first ship to leave Rhode Island for California during the gold fever) a schooner and a residence for a Mr. Chace, then for a brief period he was employed at Norfolk, Va., winning at the shipyard the utmost confidence and esteem of his employers for his skill and workmanship. For the next two years he was employed at his trade in Newark, N. J., building there a church, three houses and a machine shop. Returning to Warren, R. I., he there at once built two houses just over the line in the town of Barrington. Following this he went to Attleboro, Mass., where he built a large jewelry shop for the firm of Ira Richards & Co., then went to work for the jewelry company for whom he constructed four houses. Soon after July 4, 1852, he returned to Pawtucket and entered the employ of his former partner, Mr. Andrew R. Slade. Here he supervised the construction of the Payne & Taylor building, remaining in the employ for some eight years of Mr. Slade and Slade & Walker, respectively.

From the time just alluded to on with the exception of a brief period during the Civil war when in the service of his country, Mr. Mulliken until the close of his long business career was busily engaged in work in his line in and about Pawtucket, where are today many structures which pay a high tribute to his skill and workmanship. It was in the fall of 1862 that he enlisted in the United States service, but owing to sickness was returned home in March following, and for the next two years was unable to do much of anything. As an employe of Messrs. French & Baker in 1864 he supervised the construction of the Dunnell block, on Canal street, Pawtucket, and in the following year he superintended the building of the hot house of Mr. Jacob Dunnell. Entering the employ about this time of Humes Brothers he superintended the building of the Pawtucket Hair Cloth Company's Mill at Central Falls, and also other buildings. He next supervised the building of the Greene & Daniels Mill across the river, and then went to the Gage Mill in Pawtucket, doing the wood work of it. He built in 1869 the great coal sheds along the river for Olney & Payne, and the steeple on the Universalist Church. He next rebuilt the old Slater Mill. In 1873 he built the mill for D. L. & L. B. Goff on the river front. The last public job which he supervised was the works of the Pawtucket Gas Company. From that time on Mr. Mulliken built many houses, which today as stated pay his workmanship a high tribute. He also constructed the Music Hall Building. One of the notable achievements for a man of his years—one only a little short of four-score years—was the remodeling and re-building of Infantry Hall, on Exchange street, Pawtucket, for Tower Post, No. 17, G. A. R., of which he was a member. In this he followed his own plans in detail, was present every day and produced a building of which the Post is justly proud. This was in 1895, and thereafter until the close of life Mr. Mulliken passed his days in retirement.

Mr. Mulliken was a veteran Odd Fellow and Knight of Pythias. He was a Past Grand of Good Samaritan Lodge, No. 8, I. O. O. F., of which he had been a member for over fifty years, and was also a Past Chief Patriarch of Manchester Encampment, No. 4, I. O. O. F., of Pawtucket. He was one of the original charter members of Eureka Lodge, No. 5, Knights of Pythias, and took the three ranks at the institution of the lodge in Infantry Hall (now Grand Army Hall) Jan. 30, 1871. He was made a Past Chancellor at the institution of the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island Feb. 17, 1871, and was a frequent attendant at its subsequent conventions. In company with other veterans he was present at the convention of Eureka Lodge on the occasion of the official visitation of Grand Chancellor Phillips, Nov. 1, 1898.

Mr. Mulliken died at his home at the corner of Pawtucket avenue and Sisson street, Pawtucket, R. I., Dec. 19, 1898, in the eighty-second year of his age. His funeral, which was largely attended, took place on the afternoon of Dec. 21st, following, his death. He was buried in Mineral Springs cemetery. In his religious faith he was an Universalist, and in political principle a Republican.

Mr. Mulliken was twice married. His first wife, Caroline Rounds, died leaving two children, Charles, now deceased; and Sarah, who married Samuel Wightman. On March 8, 1854, Mr. Mulliken married (second) Esther Mayah, widow of James Mayah, and daughter of Jeffery and Hannah Taylor.

Mrs. Esther Mulliken was born May 11, 1822, in the village of Little Bolton, Lancashire, England, and in her native town married James Mayah, who was a native of the same place and a blue dyer by trade. In 1842, accompanied by his young wife, he sailed for America on the small three-masted vessel "Liberty," and after a six-weeks' voyage they landed in New York, in February, 1842. They remained in that city until April, when they came to Rhode Island, where he found employment at his trade, becoming boss dyer for Amasa Sprague at Cranston. Later he came to Pawtucket, where he continued at the business for some time. His health failing, he went to New York and stayed there for a year and a half, at the end of that time returning to Pawtucket, where he passed the remainder of his days, unable to do any work. His wife kept a store on the present site of the police station on Main street, and they there made their home. Mr. Mayah died June 29, 1853, and was buried in Mineral Springs cemetery. He was a member of the Church of England. The young widow continued the store for a short time, and in 1854, as above stated, she became the wife of Henry A. Mulliken.

Jeffery Taylor, father of Mrs. Mulliken, came to America in 1842. He located in Providence, and there passed the remainder of his life. He was buried in Mineral Springs cemetery. His wife, whose maiden name was Hannah Ennis, died at the home of Mrs. Mulliken at the age of seventy-five years, and was laid to rest beside her husband in Mineral Springs cemetery. They were the parents of three children: Esther, now Mrs. Mulliken; Grace, who married John Payne; and Joyce, who married William Pittman, and left four children, James M., Grace Lillian, John Henry, and Esther W. R., who married Charles B. Broome, and resides with Mrs. Mulliken.

HON. GORHAM P. POMROY. For approximately forty-five years there lived at Providence the late Hon. Gorham P. Pomroy, long one of the substantial men and citizens of the city, prominent in both business and public affairs, representing his State in one of the National Republican Conventions, serving in its legislative body, and collector of the port at Providence, and here still reside representatives of his family.

Many of the New England Pomroys or Pomeroyes trace their descent to what may be termed the Pomeroyes of Northampton, Mass., the ancestor of whom was Eltweed Pomery, who, it is supposed, came from Devonshire, England, in 1630, in the ship "Mary and John," which landed at Boston, but Mr. Pomeroy, or Pomery, did not long remain there, as the company with which he came to this country united in the settlement of Dorchester, Mass., which was so named after Dorchester in England, the home of a large number of the passengers of the ship just named. His stay at Dorchester, where in the records he was called Eltwid Pumry, was from 1633 to 1635. He probably removed to Windsor, Conn., about 1635 or 1636. He held the position of selectman at Dorchester in 1633. He was twice married, the Christian name of his first wife being Mary. She died in 1665, in Windsor, and he married (second) Lydia, widow of Thomas Parsons. One of his sons, Deacon Medad Pomeroy, returned to Northampton about 1659, and was a man long prominent and influential there, holding many offices of trust and responsibility, often a member of the Colonial Assembly. The descendants of another son of the settler, Caleb Pomeroy, were numerous, many settling in Southampton, Mass., and another son, Joshua Pomeroy, removed to Deerfield, Mass. A descendant of this branch of the family, which settled in Stonington, Conn., was the late Hon. Benjamin Pomeroy, long a man of prominence in Southport, Conn., as was his father, who bore the same Christian name, in New London County, Conn. Col. Seth Pomeroy, the Revolutionary patriot, who distinguished himself at the battle of Bunker Hill, and who was a graduate of Yale College, as was his son, was of this Northampton stock. Lieut. Daniel Pomroy, who fell in September, 1755, at the battle of Lake George, was also of this race of Pomeroyes. A branch of the family settled in Maine, and there are numerous descendants of the family living in that State.

Gorham Parks Pomroy, the subject proper of this sketch, was a son of Benjamin L. Pomroy, who was born in Robbinston, Maine, Jan. 1, 1810, was a druggist by occupation, and spent his entire life in that State, residing the latter years of his life at Pembroke, and there his death occurred. His wife was Lucretia H. Morgan, born in Dexter, Maine, Feb. 24, 1807. After the death of her husband Mrs. Pomroy made her home with her son, Gorham P., at Providence, and there died, May 19, 1873, at the age of sixty-six years.

Gorham Parks Pomroy was one of eight children, all of whom are now deceased, he and his brother, the late Major Edwin C. Pomroy, being the only children of the family to locate in Providence. Gorham Parks Pomroy was born Sept. 22, 1834, in Pembroke, Maine, and his educational advantages were somewhat limited, being confined to the public schools. His parents being in modest circumstances, and he being one of a large family, it was found necessary for him to go to work early, and when a boy he went to Bangor, and was employed as a clerk in a dry goods house for several years. Accepting a position as clerk in the "Bangor House," he served for one year, and subsequently as clerk in a hotel in New York State for one year. Returning to Bangor, he was married, and removed to Lincoln, forty miles from Bangor, up the Penobscot river, and engaged in the lumber business. He remained there until 1857, when he removed to Providence, and for a time was the private and confidential clerk of the Hon. Philip Allen, United States Senator from Rhode Island. He then entered the services of Manchester & Hopkins, coal dealers, as bookkeeper. He remained in this capacity until 1864, when he and John H. Hopkins, another clerk in the establishment, were admitted as partners, and the firm became Manchester, Hopkins & Co. On June 30, 1871, Mr. Manchester died, and the firm became Hopkins, Pomroy & Co., which was the style of the firm for many years, until Mr. Pomroy purchased the entire business, the firm name becoming Pomroy Coal Company, and so continued until his death, May 25, 1898. Mr. Pomroy was buried at Swan Point.

A staunch Republican, of a conservative character and, notwithstanding, with no inclination for public or political life, Mr. Pomroy was called to public service by his fellow citizens, having been a member of the city council from the Fifth ward for two terms from June, 1872, resigning his seat during the last one, on May 23, 1874. He also served as Representative in the General Assembly of the State for one term. He was a member of the Republican National Convention, held at Cincinnati, which nominated Mr. Hayes for the presidency. His marked conservatism, clear judgment, firmness and uprightness of character were often called into service in managing important trusts, and he was selected by the Supreme Court of the State for appointment as assignee of the Quidneck Company, one of the involved Sprague estates.

Mr. Pomroy was elected a director in the Roger Williams Bank in 1868, and filled that position until he was chosen president. He was also a director of the Union Railroad Company, and of the New York & New England Railroad. Under President Harrison's administration he was collector of the port at Providence, being appointed in June, 1890. He was for three years a director in the First National Bank of Providence.

Mr. Pomroy was a Knight Templar Mason, a member of St. John's Commandery. He was an active member of the Union Congregational Church, and took a deep interest in all departments of its work, and contributed quite liberally with his means to the various causes. He was a home-loving man, much devoted to his family, finding his home life his chief enjoyment, and was a most dutiful son of his parents, for whose care and comfort he provided in the latter years of their lives. He was a lover of art, and especially of fine paintings and pictures. As a business man he was fair, upright and honorable in all his dealings, beginning life a poor boy, and accumulating a large property. He was an ideal citizen, supporting every good movement of benefit to the community, and as a man he enjoyed the esteem and respect of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

On Nov. 25, 1854, Mr. Pomroy was married in Bangor, Maine, to Abbie A. J. Gardiner, a native of that city, and a descendant of the Gardiner family of Rhode Island, a member of which became an early settler at what is now Gardiner, Maine, the place being named for the family. Mrs. Pomroy survived her husband thirteen months, passing away on June 25, 1899, aged sixty-three years. She was a woman of fine Christian character, a member of the Union Congregational Church. She was ever a faithful helpmate and her thrift and counsel were of much assistance to her husband in achieving his success.

Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Pomroy, as follows: (1) Herbert J., born in Lincoln, Me., April 7, 1856, graduated from the Providence high school, and Mowry & Goff's English and Classical School, and entered the Harvard Medical School, from which he was graduated with honors. He began practice at Westerly, succeeding Dr. Wilder, and remained there four years, leaving after the death of his child and coming to Providence. He was later appointed a member of the State Board of Charities, and acted as physician at the asylum under appointment by Governor Ladd. He resigned this position and took a special course in diseases of the nose and throat, under Dr. Sciler of Philadelphia, and was engaged in this practice, when he died very suddenly, Nov. 27, 1893. He was a member of the Rhode Island Yacht Club, and acted in the capacity of surgeon to the club. He was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, and was also connected with the Providence Press Club. Dr. Pomroy married Mary T. Moore, and they had one child, Addie, who died at the age of three years at Westerly. (2) Idella A., born June 25, 1858, is now Mrs. John B. Kennay, of Providence. (3) Marion J., born June 9, 1860, married Samuel W. Taber, and resided in Providence until her death Aug. 13, 1895; she was the mother of two children, Grace, who died aged four years; and Samuel Pomroy. (4) Bertha P., born Jan. 22, 1868, died July 6th of that year. (5) Gorham P., born Aug. 25, 1870, resides in Providence, the father of two sons, Gorham Addison and Elton Hendricks, who died in childhood. (6) Abbie May, born May 1, 1873, married Henry Clinton Cram, assistant city solicitor, and a well known member of the Providence Bar. (7) Daniel Edwin, born March 10, 1876, died June 26, 1876. (8) William J., born June 15, 1877, is a resident of Wauregan, Conn., and has one daughter, Gladys, Judson, born April 24, 1899.

SAYER HASBROUCK, M. D., located in Providence for the practice of medicine in the year 1884. Confining himself to special work from the first, he not only received a professional but a social recognition that he appreciated and has always done his best to be worthy of. Having the disposition to keep abreast with the times, or the current literature of the day, he has tried to do his share in adding what he could to the literature of his special work, and, further, with his natural mechanical ability he has suggested many new appliances and improved others, all of which has been favorably commented upon both here and abroad.

The ancestry of Dr. Hasbrouck is traced back to those sturdy Huguenots who fled from France on the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis XIV. and the outrageous persecutions that followed. It is said that fully one million of the best educated and skilled artisans of France became refugees from the land of their birth. France then was fast becoming the industrial center of the whole world. What was the result? France is now the butterfly of the world. Those pastoral countries—England, Germany and America—welcomed these refugees, and the fruits of industry began to take root in these lands, and their influence has without question been the foundation stone of the world's present prosperity. Go where you will there is a trace of Huguenot blood to be found. Our own President is a good example, as was also Queen Victoria.

The early history of the Hasbrouck family can not be traced further back than the father of Jean and Abraham, who was born in Calais, France, as Louis XIV. caused all family and church records to be destroyed. However, there is one interesting heir-loom, a steel rapier, still in the possession of a member of the family in this country, that dates back to 1414.

Jean and Abraham's father left Calais with the others, and settled with his family at Mannheim, Germany, or the lower Palatinate. Here no doubt his sons received their early education, and here Jean married Anne Duyon (Deyo), as it is said that he with his wife and family sailed for America in 1673, and located in Esopus (Kingston), N. Y., and it would seem that Abraham at this time must have gone to England, as he was for some time in the English army under Gen. Edmund Andros, who later became the Colonial Governor of New York State.

Abraham Hasbrouck sailed in April, 1675, with other Huguenots for America, reaching Boston in July, and as soon as possible he joined his brother Jean at Esopus. On Nov. 17, 1675, he married, at Hurley, N. Y., Marie Duyon (Deyo), daughter of Christian Duyon, whom he had known in Germany, and it is said that they came to America on the same ship. For two years the Huguenots evidently had a feeling of unrest, as, in 1677, they appointed a committee of twelve men with Abraham Hasbrouck at the head, to get a tract of land from the Colonial government on which to settle and establish homes for themselves. In this they were successful, and it is said that Abraham Hasbrouck's acquaintanceship with Gov. Andros was of material aid—in fact, one-third of the land was granted to him. This was known as the Paltz Patent, and the committee of twelve, as the Twelve Patentees, and it would seem that they served as the Governing Board of this new settlement. The Paltz Patent included the present town of Lloyd, two-thirds of New Paltz, one-third of Esopus and one-fourth of Rosendale. The records of the Twelve Patentees, written in Dutch, French and English, were for many years preserved in an ancient trunk in the vaults of the Huguenot Bank at New Paltz. They have been translated by the Rev. Ame Venema, and are now deposited in the county clerk's office. Those records show that these men had to consider many questions of importance, and that they did their work well is evident from the many years they continued in office. At the first the French and Dutch languages were both used, and for many years after the French language was dropped for the Dutch in social life, it continued to be used in the religious services where the old "cast iron doctrine" of John Calvin was expounded. The use of the English language came in with that famous Irish school master, Gilbert Cuthbert Rice, in about 1815.

The grandfather of Sayer Hasbrouck, who died in 1860, always preferred to talk with his friends in Dutch, still few, if any, of his children could speak that language.

The many ways in which the name Hasbrouck has been spelled makes one wonder which is correct. In the fifteenth century, 1414, Charles VI, granted a patent of nobility to the family. The cotte d'armes, or coat of arms, is represented by an emblazoned shield surmounted by a crest representing a male figure holding in one hand an arrow, and in the other a torch. The field of the shield is divided "Per Chevron," above which there are two torches, and in the center below one torch. On the scroll beneath is the legend, "Dieu sauve Van Asbroeck." The name has further been spelled Asbrouck, Asbrouq, Hasbrouque, Hasbroucq. When Abraham signed the patent granted by Gov. Andros, he signed his name Hasbroucq, his brother left off the Has and signed his name Jean Brock. Gov. Andros spelled Abraham's name Heesbroucq, and Jean's last name Brock, but in 1682 both Jean and Abraham spelled the name Hasbrouck.

Local and Colonial history show that the Hasbroucks have always been very prominent in public affairs. Abraham was for many years a member of the Provincial Assembly, Colonel of the Ulster County Regiment of Militia. The diary which he kept most carefully is almost a history of the times, especially local, and makes most interesting reading. To him and his wife were born seven children, of which we have baptismal records. Abraham died March 17, 1717, and his son Solomon, in whom we are directly interested, was baptized Oct. 17, 1689, at New Paltz.

Solomon Hasbrouck, in 1721, married Sarah Van Wafenen, and to them were born seven children. Of these our interest is centered in Elias, baptized June 21, 1741.

Capt. Elias Hasbrouck married, Nov. 21, 1762, Elizabeth Slecght, born Sept. 9, 1737. He was a staunch patriot of the Revolution, and was authorized June 28, 1775, by the Provincial Congress, P. V. B. Livingston, President, then sitting in New York, to raise a company of troops to be employed as a part of the American Continental Army, of which he was made Captain. At the expiration of their term of service they re-enlisted and were known as the "Rangers," and they were kept on duty during the years of 1775, 1776 and 1777, and were a part of Col. Clinton's regiment at Fort George and in the Canadian campaign under Gen. Montgomery. Capt. Hasbrouck became a great friend of the latter, and named his son (grandfather of Dr. Sayer) Richard Montgomery Hasbrouck and thereupon Mrs. Montgomery placed a gold ring on his finger and this ring, Dr. Sayer Hasbrouck's nephew, named the same, has at the present time. She also gave him one hundred acres of land in Ulster county, New York. Capt. Hasbrouck died at Woodstock, N. Y., Oct. 7, 1791.

Richard Montgomery Hasbrouck, who became proverbial for his integrity and uprightness of character, was born in Kingston, N. Y., Sept. 20, 1776. He married, Sept. 17, 1798, Mary Johnson, sister of the late Commodore Vanderbilt's wife. Mr. Hasbrouck died May 10, 1860. He was a farmer but devoted most of his time to taking charge of various large estates that existed previous to the anti-rent war, which was almost a local rebellion.

John Whitbeck Hasbrouck, son of Richard M. and father of Dr. Hasbrouck, was born Nov. 20, 1821, in Woodstock, N. Y., and died Aug. 3, 1906, at his summer home in Claryville, N. Y. On July 27, 1856, he married Lydia Sayer, daughter of Benjamin Sayer, of Warwick, N. Y., who was also in the Revolutionary war. To them were born three children, one a daughter who died in early childhood from an accident; and two sons still living.

Mr. Hasbrouck came to Kingston, N. Y., in 1834, and completed his education at the Kingston Academy, then a famous school. He commenced his business career as a clerk in a crockery store, and shortly afterward he entered the Ulster County Bank as its bookkeeper. In 1844 he took a position as bookkeeper in a mercantile house in New York. Returning to Kingston in 1845 he entered upon what proved to be his life's work, journalism, with the Kingston Journal. From 1840 to 1845 he wrote and discussed the many political questions that came up in those exciting times in a way that showed he was master of the subject. He formed the Kingston Lyceum and Literary Association, and at his invitation, Horace Greeley delivered his first public lecture before it, his subject being "Human Life," and the next morning he drove him to Albany in a sleigh, and formed an acquaintance with that famous man that lasted until his death. In the spring of 1846 he purchased the Sullivan Whig, published at Bloomingburg, and was a recognized leader in the Whig party, and was at the convention when it was changed and called the Republican party. Horace Greeley always said he was the first one to suggest Gen. U. S. Grant as a Presidential candidate. In 1851 shortly after the Erie railroad was extended as far as Middletown, N. Y., he moved there, and established the Whig Press and published the Hardwareman's Newspaper now known as the Iron Age and the Sibyl, edited by Mrs. Hasbrouck, a Reform journal of its day. At one time he went to Corning, N. Y., to consider taking charge of a newspaper there, and, strange as it may seem, those two one might say originators of "Funny Literature," Artemus Ward and Brick Pomeroy (the X Roads man), were working at the case setting type side by side. In 1848 he accepted an offer from Commodore Vanderbilt to take charge of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's Transportation across the Isthmus of Panama, but sickness prevented his doing so. Commodore Vanderbilt's reply to Mr. Hasbrouck's question as to what his salary would be was this, "Salary no object, the man is what we want. "C. VANDERBILT."

Mr. Hasbrouck changed the name of the Whig Press in the early sixties to the Orange County Press, which he sold in 1868, and retired from active work, though in 1881 he for a short time edited the Liberal Sentinel, a Reform paper. He was always known as a painstaking, careful man—one who was respected by all. His best work no doubt was done at the time of the Civil war, as then he was at his best, being well known in the newspaper as well as the political world, and having a recognized influence with those in power. It is said that he never took advantage of this. At the time of the organization of the Republican party he was a most important factor, but his son Dr. Hasbrouck believes that he was not at the convention, though it has been said that he was. At the time of his death he was acknowledged as the oldest active journalist in the country—that is, he had spent more years in active service.

It is from stock like this that Dr. Sayer Hasbrouck claims his lineage. He was born at Middletown, N. Y., June 3, 1860, and was married Sept. 25, 1889, to Miss Mary Owen Fiske, daughter of John T. Fiske, of Chepachet, R. I. She was one equal to all the demands of social life far beyond the average had her health permitted. She passed away on Feb. 14, 1906, leaving a daughter, Fannie Fiske, born Dec. 16, 1890.

Dr. Hasbrouck attended the public schools of Middletown, N. Y., until 1875, when he entered Cook Academy, Havana, N. Y. While there he was always a leader in the social life of the Academy, and was known as one of the active spirits, ready for anything, and was graduated in 1879. He entered Boston University School of Medicine in the fall of the same year, graduating in 1882. His last year in college was spent as house surgeon in the college dispensary, which gave him a most valuable practical experience in the general work of his profession. For a time after graduating he was at the New York Homeopathic Insane Asylum, at Middletown, N. Y., doing substitute work, but in the fall he had the transatlantic fever and sailed for Dublin, Ireland. He entered the famous Rotunda Hospital at once, where he spent the next six months, and received the degree of L. M. (Licentiate of Midwifery). During this time he was studying the Eye and Ear at St. Mark's Ophthalmic Hospital, and on leaving the Rotunda he was appointed house surgeon to St. Mark's Ophthalmic Hospital, founded by Sir William Wilde. This gave him the opportunity for practical experience that one rarely gets in a foreign land, but it was his good luck and the foundation of his life work.

Those were exciting days in Ireland then, as it was just after the unfortunate assassination of Mr. Burke and Lord Frederick Cavendish in Phenix

Park. One thing seemed to follow another so fast that Irish history was made as never before, and made in such a reckless sort of a way that she went backward instead of forward, just at a time when it looked as though the government was ready to aid her. Dr. Hasbrouck was well acquainted with Carry, the informer, and many times he has ridden with the jarvy, skin-the-goat, who drove the assassins to the park. On leaving Dublin he spent some time in the hospitals of Belfast, Glasgow and Edinburgh, where some of the best men in this special work were then to be found. Reaching London he at once took up his work as clinical assistant under Sir George Lawson, at that time surgeon oculist to the Queen, at the Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital (Moorfields), which was then the largest clinical hospital in the world. In the evenings he acted as clinical assistant to Mr. Hamilton, at the Gray's Inn Throat and Ear Hospital. On leaving London he visited the various medical centers of Europe. The pleasantest side of life abroad was its social side, and the opportunity he had of meeting so many distinguished men of that day was an education in itself. On his return to the United States in June, 1884, he at once located in Providence, R. I., as a specialist in diseases of the Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat.

From the first Dr. Hasbrouck was granted a professional and social position that he has always been proud of. Until a few years ago he was one of the active members of the Rhode Island Homeopathic Medical Society, having served as its president for three years, one year of which was the celebration of their fiftieth anniversary. The medical history of Homeopathy in Field's "History of Rhode Island and the Providence Plantations" was written by him. On the organization of the Rhode Island Yacht Club he became one of its most active members, and was elected its first president, and held the office for many years. During the first year of service he had the satisfaction of seeing the Club House at Pawtuxet finished and turned over to the Club free of debt. For one year he served as its commodore. The Providence Athletic Association was planned and organized in his office, and until the building was finished he acted as chairman of the temporary organization, but on account of ill health was then compelled to drop all active interest in its management. As a member of the house committee of the Union Club, he acted as its chairman for many years. In the early days of the now well organized Naval Militia he was the leading spirit in this State, and succeeded in getting a bill for its enactment. He also did much to further the interest of both Massachusetts and New York in this line, but the Rhode Island bill was the second to be passed. He has always considered it his duty to do all he could to promote anything that was for the good of all either with his pen or word of mouth, without fear or favor. At the present time he is a member of the American Institute of Homeopathy, the American Homeopathic Ophthalmological, Otological and Laryngological Society, the New York State Homeopathic Medical Society, the Massachusetts Surgical and Gynecological Society, the Unanimous Club of New York, the Holland Society of New York, the Providence Art Club, the Rhode Island Automobile Club, and he takes an active interest in most of the charitable organizations in Providence. In other words, he has always been an active public-spirited man, willing to do his part.

OTIS MASON SMITH, a well-known citizen of the town of Cumberland, and a prosperous farmer of the Little Pond country, is one of the oldest residents of the town, having been born on the homestead in the Little Pond country April 3, 1831, a descendant of one of the earliest settled families of the Providence plantations.

John Smith, the first of the name in Rhode Island, was a native of England, born in 1595, and came to Providence with Roger Williams in 1636. He was known as "John the Miller," as he owned a gristmill, and he died in 1648. He had two children, John and Elizabeth, the former of whom married Sarah Whipple, they becoming the parents of ten children. Benjamin, the second son of John (2), was married, in 1693, to Mercy Angell and (second) to Mercy Waterman, and had fourteen children. His son John, the eldest of the family, was born Dec. 8, 1694, and resided in the town of Glocester, R. I., where he married Martha Mowry, they having seven children, of whom Rufus was the second son. He was born May 11, 1730, in Glocester, R. I., and there married Nov. 12, 1751, Mercy Taft. He made his home in Glocester and Burrillville, where he was a land owner and farmer, and his children were: James, Rhoda, Sylvia, Docia, Chad, Arca, Sabra, Zadock and Paul.

Arca Smith, son of Rufus, was born Oct. 13, 1764, in what is now the town of Burrillville, where he grew to manhood. He then came to the town of Cumberland and located on the Minden road, where he owned land and was engaged in farming. He died at the home of his daughter, on Diamond Hill Plains. In his religious belief he was a Quaker. Mr. Smith married Sarah Boyce, born Aug. 8, 1764, and their children were as follows: Content, born Sept. 10, 1786, married Otis Daggett; John Milton, born Jan. 25, 1788, is mentioned below; Ruth, born Sept. 13, 1789, married Eber Aldrich; Sabra, born April 15, 1792, married Amasa Whipple; Patience, born April 6, 1794, married Turner Haskill; Amy Ellen, born March 1, 1796, married Job Steere, of Glocester, R. I.; William was born Aug. 18, 1799; Eurana was born Nov. 28, 1800; Lydia B., born July 23, 1809, married Charles Metcalf.

John Milton Smith, son of Arca, was born

Otis M Smith

John M. Smith

Jan. 25, 1788, in Burrillville, R. I., and when a youth came with his parents to the town of Cumberland, where he was reared to manhood and made farming his life occupation. He settled on the Alexander farm in the Little Pond country in the town of Cumberland, which has been the home of the family ever since, and where he was engaged in farming. He died on this farm June 27, 1874, and was buried in the Arnolds Mills cemetery. John M. Smith married Amanda Clark, a native of Cumberland, in which place she died in September, 1861. She was buried beside her husband. Their children were: Eddy C., born Dec. 7, 1818, resided at Uxbridge, Mass., and died in February, 1907; Emily E., born Sept. 11, 1820, resides at home with her brothers; John Milton, born Aug. 20, 1824, is mentioned below; Amy Ann, born Jan. 8, 1828, died in 1897; Otis Mason and Foster Walcot, twins, were born April 3, 1831, and the latter died Jan. 18, 1870, and was buried at the Arnolds Mills cemetery; Polly Ann, born Nov. 9, 1835, died young.

Otis Mason Smith spent his boyhood days on the home farm and attended the district schools. He remained at home with his parents until seventeen years of age, when he went to Providence to work for Trask & Clark, in the lumber business. Mr. Clark being his cousin. After five years spent at this employment Mr. Smith engaged with Benjamin Whipple, to whom the business had been sold, and remained with that gentleman for a short time, then going to Woonsocket, where he was employed by Mr. Dexter Clark in the grain and mill business for nine years. When Mr. Clark sold out to Samuel Elliott Mr. Smith continued with the latter gentleman for a time, when, his father and mother being advanced in age, he returned to the homestead to care for them and to take charge of the farm. He engaged at once in the work of the farm, and there he has continued ever since, making many improvements and engaging extensively in stock raising. Mr. Smith is a member of the M. E. Church and is temperate and domestic in his habits. In politics independent, he was for fifteen years highway commissioner of Cumberland, and filled the duties of that office to the satisfaction of all concerned and with great credit to himself. He is widely known as a man of honesty and integrity, one whose word is as good as a bond. Mr. Smith is very fond of outdoor life, and has always been a skilled hunter and successful fisherman.

JOHN MILTON SMITH, brother of Otis Mason Smith, who also makes his home on the old homestead, was born on the farm Aug. 20, 1824. Like his brother he was educated in the schools of the community, and in early youth worked at home. Later he went to Woonsocket, where he worked at teaming for Dexter Clark for three years. Mr. Smith then went to North Attleboro, Mass., and worked in the jewelry shops for one year, then engaging at the same business for two years in Waterbury, at this time making his own tools. Leaving Connecticut he once again engaged in business at Attleboro, continuing at that until war times, when he went to Springfield, Mass., and there worked for the government two years. He next went to Waterbury, where he continued until 1864, when he went out to California, locating at different points along the Pacific coast. After two years, however, he was taken sick, and returned to San Francisco, whence he came East to New York, and from there went to Connecticut, locating in Wolcottville. There he worked at the manufacture of patent match safes for the Hook & Eye Co., being there engaged for a year. Mr. Smith then went to North Attleboro, where for twenty-five years he was connected with J. J. & J. M. Richards, as dye sinker, at which work he is an expert.

Mr. Smith is a famous fox hunter as well as fisherman, and has in his possession a fine case of stuffed and mounted birds, valued at $100, which he won at a rifle shoot, he using a rifle which he bored himself. He is a member of the A. F. & A. M. Mr. Smith, although advanced in age, is very active. He is living retired with his brother and sister on the home farm, and the family are greatly honored and esteemed in the locality.

JAMES HAMILTON CLARKE, who during his life was a well-known resident of Jamestown, R. I., was born at Lebanon, Conn., Dec. 1, 1819, and was descended from one of Rhode Island's oldest and most prominent families, a history of which will be found in the sketch of Prof. Henry W. Clarke, of Newport, elsewhere in this work.

Russell Clarke, father of James Hamilton, was a son of Thomas Clarke, of Westerly, and grandson of Rev. Joshua Clarke, a deacon of the Sabatarian Church, and a participant of the Revolutionary war, who died March 8, 1793, in Westerly. Russell Clarke was the granduncle of Prof. Henry W. Clarke, of Newport. He was a farmer in the town of Lebanon, New London Co., Conn., later returning to the home of his birth, in Westerly, where he died. He was three times married, and had a large family.

James Hamilton Clarke was the son of Russell and Elizabeth (Langworthy) Clarke, and was still young when the family returned to Rhode Island, his education being secured in the schools of Newport. Here he grew to manhood, working from an early age, but later removed to Jamestown, where he engaged in agricultural pursuits. For seven years he was also engaged in the coal and lumber business at Narragansett Pier, in partnership with his brother-in-law, John T. Cottrell, under the firm name of Clarke & Cottrell, a connection which was continued until 1873, when Mr. Clarke returned to Jamestown and took up his home in the residence on Narragansett avenue known as "The Maples," which had been his home prior to locating at Narragansett Pier. Here he spent the remainder of his life, his death occurring Aug. 7, 1874, caused by apoplexy, and he was buried at the Island cemetery, Newport. He was a member of the Second Baptist Church of Newport. In politics he was a Democrat, and represented South Kingstown in the State Legislature while residing at Narragansett Pier. Mr. Clarke was a good citizen, a genial neighbor and an honest, Christian gentleman. He had been industrious throughout life, and at the time of his death had accumulated a handsome competency.

Mr. Clarke was married (first) to Phoebe Weaver, widow of Caleb Weaver, and two children were born to this union: Alma, who died at the age of sixteen years; and Henriette, deceased, who married John C. Seabury, of Newport. Mr. Clarke was married (second) to Susan Cottrell, daughter of John S. and Desire Pierce (Northrup) Cottrell, and to this union there were born children as follows: Henry Hamilton, who died young; Elizabeth Russell, at home; and Fred Hamilton, a civil engineer of Boston, Mass., who married Gertrude Priest, of New Hampshire, and has one child, Freda Wendell.

Since the death of her husband, Mrs. Clarke has made her home at "The Maples," in Jamestown. She has much business ability, and is engaged in looking after her various real estate interests, which have grown extensively in value in the past few years. She is active in church and charitable work, and is well known and very popular in Jamestown.

The COTTRELL family of Jamestown is one of the oldest in the State, the founder of which was Nicholas Cottrell, who is of record in the list of inhabitants of Newport, R. I., May 20, 1638, and was admitted a freeman in 1655. He represented his town in the Colonial Assembly in 1670, and was one of the signers of the Misquamicut (Westerly) contract. He was twice married; his last wife, Martha, was born in 1645. He died in 1680, at Taunton, Mass., and in his will he named eight children, namely: Nicholas, John, Gershom, Eleazer, Mary, Hannah, James and Jabez.

John Cottrell, son of Nicholas, was made a freeman in 1723, in the town of Westerly. He married Penelope, and died in Kingstown, leaving a will which was destroyed by fire in 1869. His wife Penelope bore him children as follows: John, born March 22, 1682; Nathaniel, Sept. 14, 1685; and Samuel, in 1687.

Nathaniel Cottrell, son of John, born Sept. 14, 1685, received from his father, in 1709, a farm in Kingstown, where he made agricultural pursuits his life work, and where he died in 1764. He and his wife Deborah had children, as follows: Abigail, born Feb. 10, 1727; Samuel, Nov. 27, 1729; Deborah, Nov. 19, 1731; Joshua, Sept. 2, 1733; John, Aug. 15, 1735 (died April 11, 1739); Mary, May 11, 1737 (married Christopher Champlin); Nathaniel, Jan. 18, 1739; David, March 15, 1742; Sarah, June 10, 1745 (married Benjamin Reynolds); and Hannah, Feb. 23, 1748.

Nathaniel Cottrell (2), son of Nathaniel, was born Jan. 18, 1739, in Kingstown, R. I., where he married June 10, 1762, Sarah Smith, born Aug. 11, 1744, daughter of Samuel and Sarah Smith, of Exeter.

Smith Cottrell, son of Nathaniel (2), was born in 1763. He bought land in Jamestown formerly owned by Arnold Hazard, and there he died June 17, 1843, at the age of eighty years. In 1785 he married Susannah Stanton, born Oct. 26, 1766, daughter of Benjamin Stanton; she died in Jamestown, Dec. 10, 1846. The children born of this union were: Sarah, born April 14, 1786, married Dec. 25, 1805, William Greene, and died July 28, 1847; Jesse was born July 10, 1787; Renewed, born Nov. 21, 1788, died single; Martha, born Nov. 14, 1790, married Joseph Crandell; Mary C., born May 11, 1792, married George Gardner; Nathaniel, born Aug. 1, 1793; Susannah, born May 6, 1795, married Samuel Allen; Benjamin, born Dec. 10, 1796; Eliza, born June 29, 1799, married Thomas Hopkins; John Stanton, born April 8, 1801; Samuel E., born Dec. 5, 1802; Simon Smith, born Sept. 11, 1804; Daniel S., born April 3, 1807; and Hannah, born Dec. 18, 1809, married John B. Champlin.

John Stanton Cottrell, son of Smith, born April 8, 1801, in South Kingstown, R. I., was there engaged in farming, and later removed to Jamestown, R. I., on the Cottrell farm, which he purchased. There he spent the remainder of his life, and died at the age of fifty-six years, April 13, 1857. He married Desire P. Northrup, daughter of Thurston and Susannah (Pierce) Northrup, and they had these children: John T. (mentioned in full elsewhere) married Emeline Taylor, and died in Pawtucket, R. I., where he was engaged in the coal business; Susan, married James Hamilton Clarke; Frederick Northrup; Mary Ellen is the widow of Albert W. Luther and resides in Newport; and William and Elizabeth, died in infancy.

Frederick Northrup Cottrell, son of John Stanton, was born Nov. 24, 1834. Early in life he engaged in agricultural pursuits, which he made his life work, dying in August, 1884, in Jamestown. He was also prominent in public affairs and represented Jamestown in the State Senate, doing much for the town's progress. He was married Feb. 6, 1867, to Ellen Tucker, of Jamestown, daughter of the late Pardon Tucker, and to this union there were born these children: Charles T., born July 22, 1869, is a well-known attorney of Boston, Mass.; Martha Tucker, born Aug. 20, 1871, married Archibald Monroe Clarke, of Jamestown; Benjamin Stanton, born Sept. 15, 1873, is manager of the Jamestown and Newport Ferry Company, and Alice Waite, born Sept. 14, 1878, is at home with her mother.

FISKE (Scituate-Burrillville family). The Fiske family as a New England one is as old as this section, and it is an ancient one back in old England. The original and correct spelling, and the one generally adopted, is with the final "e."

There were a number of early emigrants to New England bearing the name who settled in Massachusetts, all of whom it is believed were descendants of Robert and Sibil (Gold) Fiske, who lived at Broad Gates, Laxfield, Suffolk, England. Nathan Fiske, of Watertown, it is believed by the genealogist Somerby, who examined the parish registers in the County of Suffolk, England, was eighth in descent from the first Simon Fiske, of Laxfield, through Robert, of St. James Smith, Elmsham, who was his (Nathan's) great-grandfather. The other Fiskes of New England are, it is believed, all of the same lineage. This Simon Fiske was lord of the manor of Stradbaugh, in Laxfield, in the time of Henry VI. He bore a coat of arms which was borne by his family in the reigns of Henry VI., Edward IV., Richard III. and Henry VII. The Fiske family in Suffolk is very ancient and highly respectable.

Rev. John Fiske, of Wenham, afterward of Chelmsford, and his brother William of Wenham, were grandsons of William, eldest son of Robert and Sibil. David Fiske, of Watertown, was a grandson of Jeffrey, second son of Robert and Sibil. James Fiske, of Haverhill, and Phineas of Salem, were grandsons of Thomas, third son of Robert and Sibil.

Since early in the eighteenth century the Fiskes (or Fisks) have been a continuous family in and about Providence. The records show Samuel Fiske's family beginning with his marriage in 1703, his family being of Providence record. The record of Benjamin Fiske's family is in Rehoboth, beginning with his own marriage there in 1701; two of his sons, Benjamin and Daniel, were made freemen in Providence in 1729 and 1732, respectively.

Benjamin Fiske, son of Benjamin of Rehoboth and the great-great-great-grandfather of the present John T. Fiske, came to the town of Providence (now Scituate) in 1727, and bought a large tract of land, some of which remained in the family several generations.

John Fiske, son of Benjamin, born in 1714, married Elizabeth, daughter of Peleg and Elizabeth (Carpenter) Williams, of Johnston, R. I., he a son of Daniel and grandson of Roger Williams. Mr. Fiske was a resident of Scituate, R. I. He died in December, 1798. His children were: Peleg, born Jan. 24, 1740; Dorcas, born Dec. 19, 1741; and Caleb, born Jan. 24, 1753.

Dr. Caleb Fiske, son of John and Elizabeth, was born Jan. 24, 1753, in Scituate, and he pursued his professional studies under the direction of Dr. William Bowen, one of the most extensive and successful practitioners of his time. He served as a surgeon in General Sullivan's expedition against the British in Rhode Island, and on the completion of his service returned to Scituate, where he practiced his profession during his long life, being at the time of his death the oldest practitioner in the State. For a time he held the office of judge of the court of common pleas. In the cause of medical education in Rhode Island he took a deep interest, and was the preceptor of some of the most distinguished doctors of the State. In 1821 Brown University conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Medicine. He is named in the Act of Incorporation of the Rhode Island Medical Society as one of its original members. He was its second vice-president from 1815 to 1818; its first vice-president from 1818 to 1823; and its president from 1823 to 1824. The best service which he rendered to his profession was the donation of $2,000 to constitute what is known as the Fiske Fund, which has been largely increased, and the income of which is used in offering premiums for dissertations on subjects of interest to the profession. He also left a large portion of his library to the Society. He died in September, 1835, in the eighty-third year of his age. On June 24, 1776, he married Mary Manchester, daughter of Capt. Thomas Manchester, of Providence, a seafaring man who lost his life at sea. She died in 1817, in the sixty-ninth year of her age.

Dr. Fiske and his son, Philip Manchester Fiske, established the cotton manufactory business at Fiskeville, R. I., and carried it on extensively for many years. They also built the village and mills at Jackson which were subsequently sold to Gov. Charles Jackson, after whom the place was named.

Philip Manchester Fiske was born March 2, 1782, and through life followed the cotton manufacturing business, and he died Jan. 31, 1828. On Oct. 7, 1817, he married Eliza Andrews Taylor, born Sept. 3, 1797, daughter of William Taylor, a merchant of Providence. After the death of her husband, and with five children to educate, the widowed mother moved to Providence, where the schools were noted for their efficiency and thoroughness, and, accordingly, in 1835, took up her abode in that city, there dying April 17, 1876. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Philip M. Fiske were: John Thomas; Philip Manchester, who was engaged as a wholesale dealer in flour, and died in Providence; Elizabeth Taylor, who married Walter C. Simmons, a cotton broker, and died in Providence; Mary Manchester, who married Robert Manton, a merchant, and died in Providence; and Abby Williams, who married Robert Watson, a cotton manufacturer, and also resided in Providence, where he died.

John Thomas Fiske was born Jan. 30, 1819, in Scituate, R. I., and he received a good education in the public schools of Providence. His business career was begun in the employ of George W. Glad-ding, a leading dry goods merchant on North Main street, Providence, in 1836. About two years later he went to Mobile, Ala., and for the next two years was engaged as a cotton broker. Upon the completion of the Norwich and Worcester railroad, he was induced to embark in the cotton and grain business with Mr. Davis at Norwich, Conn., a venture which, however, did not pay, and its affairs were wound up a year later. In the early forties Mr. Fiske went to Harrisville, R. I., and began the manufacture of cotton goods in the mill owned by Andrew Harris & Co., operating about thirty looms. A year or so afterward he located in a mill subsequently occupied by his son, John T. Fiske, Jr., later purchasing the Peter Place property adjoining, running both mills until 1875. He then retired from active business with a large competency, and moved to the village of Chepachet, where in connection with other offices he devoted more or less of his time to the management of the farm at Chepachet belonging to his sister-in-law, Miss Mary B. Eddy. After the death of that lady he made his home with his daughter, Mrs. Hasbrouck, at Pawtuxet Neck, and there died Sept. 17, 1899, and his remains were interred in the Acotes Hill cemetery at Chepachet.

Mr. Fiske was prominently connected with many of the business enterprises of Burrillville and Gloucester. He was a director of the Pascoag National Bank from Aug. 29, 1865, to Jan. 13, 1885, and president from Jan. 9, 1883, to Jan. 13, 1885. He was the prime mover in the organization of the Chepachet Cemetery Association in 1850, and was treasurer of the association from its organization, and a trustee for many years. He cast his first vote in 1840 for President Harrison, and from 1854 was a Republican. While he never cared for public office, he was much interested in the success of his party's ticket, and the election of competent men to office.

On April 3, 1843, Mr. Fiske was married to Miss Abby Eddy, daughter of Hon. Amasa Eddy, of Gloucester. She died Oct. 28, 1860. Seven children were born to them, as follows: Eliza Taylor, born Jan. 13, 1844, is the wife of Charles Edward Paine, a retired woolen manufacturer of Providence; Caleb, born in 1846, died in infancy; John T., Jr., born May 21, 1847; Mary Elizabeth, born in 1848, died in 1850; Frank, born Sept. 30, 1850; Fannie, born Sept. 16, 1852, married O. J. Norris, a builder of machinery, and resided at New York, where she died March 3, 1881; and Mary Owen, born July 16, 1855, married Dr. Sayer Hasbrouck, of Providence, and died Feb. 14, 1906.

JOHN T. FISKE, JR., eldest son of his parents, and a successful business man at Providence, was born May 21, 1847, at Chepachet. At the age of thirteen he accompanied his parents on their removal to Pascoag. He attended the public schools at Chepachet and Pascoag, and the Nichols Academy at Dudley, Mass. While yet a small boy he began to learn the manufacturing business and after completing his schooling, at the age of twenty-one, he became associated with his father under the firm name of John T. Fiske & Son. Later he formed a partnership with the late Hardin R. Sayles, and they operated the Peter Place mill, owned by John T. Fiske, Sr., under the firm name of Fiske, Sayles & Co., until 1885, when the firm dissolved. John T. Fiske, Jr., then remodeled the old mill, which he had previously purchased, erected an addition thereon, and renamed it the Sheffield Mills. He installed thirty looms with full equipment for the manufacture of worsted goods. In 1888 and 1890 Mr. Fiske added more looms and also constructed other buildings, including a large addition for spinning, cording and weaving. The mills were incorporated as the Sheffield Worsted Mills in 1898, and in May of the following year, the plant was assimilated into the American Woolen Company, and named the Anchor Mills. Mr. Fiske remained with the latter concern about one year as agent for the mills, when he resigned his position.

Mr. Fiske is now president of the Wheelwright Filler and Manufacturing Company, and manufactures under their patent a superior article in the cheaper kinds of paper. In 1902 he formed the American Extractor Company, dealers in machinery for the disposing of garbage. He has been treasurer of the corporation since it was organized. In his political faith he is a Republican, and he represented the Burrillville district one term in the State Senate. He is very public-spirited and generous, and is ever ready to lend a helping hand to those less fortunate than himself. He is a member of the Pomham Club at Providence.

Mr. Fiske married Kate E., daughter of Smith R. Arnold, of Burrillville, and they have one daughter, Abby E.

FRANK FISKE, youngest son of John T. Fiske, was born at Chepachet, Sept. 30, 1850, and early in life he became interested in the woolen manufacturing business. For a number of years he was an accountant for his brother, John T., Jr., in the Sheffield Mills. Later he was agent for the American Woolen Company, afterward associating himself with Arthur Ames, in the Hope Worsted Company at Whipple, town of Burrillville, and remaining until forced to quit active business on account of ill health. In June, 1904, he removed to the Fiske homestead at Chepachet, where he died July 22, 1905. He married Maranda, daughter of Richard Barnes, of Gloucester, and their three children were: Frank, Richard and Roby S.

NOAH DRAPER, a well-known resident of Pawtucket, now living retired after twenty years of active work in the real estate business, is a native of England, born at Floweryfield, Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancashire, Oct. 14, 1833, son of Noah and Ellen Draper. The former was a reed maker and followed that occupation in his native land, where he passed his entire life.

Noah Draper

Noah Draper was quite young when his mother died, and he was early deprived of her tender care. His schooling was limited, and in his early youth he entered the mills, where he first learned the trade of cotton weaver. Later he took up loom fixing, at which he continued until 1868, when with his wife and children he set out to find a home in the New World. When he left England he had some money and it was his intention to engage in farming, but the outlook for that in Massachusetts, whither he went on first coming to America, was not encouraging, and he entered the Knights Cotton Mill, at Hebronville; and was there employed for fifteen years. He became interested in real estate in that section, and the possibilities of that line of business appealed to him. In 1885 he came to Pawtucket and devoted his attention wholly to the buying and selling of real estate. He erected several houses, bought others, and prospered greatly in his undertakings. He is now practically retired, but is still too energetic in mind and body to be entirely inactive. In every sense of the word Mr. Draper is a self-made man, and he has won his place in the world through the force of his own industry and his temperate habits. He has always been interested in the good of the town and State, and is a firm believer in the principles and precepts of the Republican party.

Mr. Draper has been twice married. In England he wedded Hannah Rayner, who died in April, 1898, and was buried in Moshassuck cemetery, Central Falls. Three children blessed this union, namely: Mary Emma, who married Thomas Seal, and resides in Central Falls, the mother of two children, Elizabeth and Beatrice; William H., a broker in Providence; and Sarah, who died young. Mr. Draper married (second) Nov. 20, 1899, Mrs. Mary (Whittaker) Wood, who was born in Lancashire, England, Jan. 24, 1851, daughter of William Whittaker, and first married George B. Wood. By that union Mrs. Draper had three children, Sarah, Lucy and Annie, all of whom died young.

JOHN ALLAN, who for years superintended the late Cornelius Vanderbilt's estate known as "Oakland Farm," at Portsmouth, R. I., is now living retired in Newport, enjoying a rest after a very active life. Mr. Allan is a native of Scotland, born April 17, 1833, at Edinburgh.

The Allan family for five generations have been horticulturists and gardeners, and have made these professions their life work. William Allan, the grandfather of John, was a native of Fifeshire, Scotland, where he was gardener on the estate of Sir William Pierpons, and there spent his life. He was the father of six sons and several daughters, one of his sons, John, settling in Canada.

William Allan, son of William and father of John, was born in Fifeshire, Scotland, and there learned, under his father, the profession of a horticulturist. When a young man he removed to Edinburgh, where he worked for Dixson & Co.—the Edinburgh nurserymen—and later removed to Donegal, Ireland, where he became gardener and steward on the estate of Sir William Johnson. In 1853, with his wife and family, he came to the United States, and, locating on Long Island, he became gardener on the King estate, where the remainder of his life was spent. He died there, and was buried at the cemetery at Jamaica, L. I. Mr. Allan married Elizabeth Richardson, also a native of Scotland, who died on Long Island, and was buried beside her husband. To them these children were born: Elizabeth S., now deceased; William, who was a gardener at Newport; Mary, who married Thomas Shephard; Jane, who died single; Joanna, who married James Allen, and is now deceased; John; Miss Penelope, who resides in Brooklyn; and Richard, a gardener of Long Island.

John Allan was but two years of age when taken to Ireland by his parents, and there he attended school and worked with his father on the Sir William Johnson estate. In 1853 the family left Ireland for the United States, sailing from Liverpool in the sailing vessel "Yorkshire," of the Black Ball line, Captain Young, and after a twenty-six days' voyage landed in New York, where Mr. Allan found employment in the Hogg Nursery, on Seventy-ninth street. There he spent three years, and then went to Maryland, becoming gardener for Mrs. Richley West, of Baltimore, where he spent three and one-half years. On leaving this place Mr. Allan went to Albany, N. Y., where he laid out grounds for a gentleman, doing a like piece of work at North River, N. Y. He next became gardener for Mrs. James G. King, of Highwood, N. J., but in 1886 accepted the superintendency of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt estate, "Oakland Farm," at Portsmouth, R. I., where for a period of nineteen years he had charge of 150 acres, filling the duties of his position with ability and credit. He retired from active work in 1905, and is now making his home in Newport, where he is highly esteemed by all who know him. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, the place of worship of the family for generations, and in politics he is a Republican.

On March 4, 1857, Mr. Allan was married to Margaret Allan, born in the North of Ireland, daughter of Richard Allan, also a gardener by profession, who was steward on a large estate owned by Colonel Clouse. Mrs. Allan, who was born March 8, 1830, died at her home in Portsmouth, R. I., April 30, 1903, after a married life of forty-six years. She was buried in the Island cemetery, Newport. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Allan were as follows: William R., born Jan. 15, 1858, was a well-known artist and portrait painter of New York, where he died April 18, 1895; John Thomas, born Aug. 12, 1861, is mentioned below; Anna E., who died in March, 1906, married John Martin, and left one daughter, Jessie, who is a pen and ink artist; and George, born March 21, 1868, died March 24, 1902.

JOHN THOMAS ALLAN, the only living child of John Allan, was born in New Hamburg, N. Y., and attended the public schools of Hoboken, N. J., from which place he came to Newport at the age of fifteen years to work in the greenhouses of the late Pierre Lorrillard, where he spent two years. He then accepted the position of second gardener on the Charles Russell estate, where he remained five years, then becoming gardener for Vice-President Levi P. Morton, on his estate in Newport, remaining there for eleven and one-half years, during which time he did much towards beautifying the place, making it one of the most attractive spots in Newport. When Vice-President Morton sold his place to Mr. I. Townsend Burden, Mr. Allan still continued there, and in 1896, when Mr. John R. Drexel, of Philadelphia, became owner of this estate, which is known as "Ochre Point," Mr. Allan retained the superintendency. Mr. Allan is a lover of his profession, and is never happier than when among his flowers, lawns and shrubbery. He has devoted his whole life to this vocation, and it is safe to say that none could be found better versed in the art of horticulture than he. He is a member of the Newport Horticultural Society and the Hatchet Club of Newport. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; Newport Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M.; DeBlois Council, No. 5, R. & S. M.; and Washington Commandery, No. 4, K. T., of Newport, as well as Palestine Temple, Order of the Mystic Shrine, of Providence. He is a member of Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum, Newport, and of Hose Company No. 3, of which he was an organizer and first captain, a position which he has held ever since. Mr. Allan is a staunch Republican, and has served as a member of the city council, being elected thereto for one term in 1900, during Mayor Boyle's administration. He and his wife attend the Emmanuel Episcopal Church. "Jack" Allan, as he is familiarly known, is one of the most popular men in Newport. He possesses a genial, hearty manner, and the enviable faculty of making friends is his. He is a representative citizen, and in his profession he is very highly esteemed.

On Dec. 24, 1883, Mr. Allan was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Gibson, daughter of James Gibson, who was for many years gardener of the Alexander Brown estate, of Newport. To Mr. and Mrs. Allan has come one son, John Hoey, born April 22, 1894.

THOMAS HARTWELL CLARKE, one of Jamestown's grand old men, who is well known as an educator and agriculturist, is a native of Jamestown, R. I., born Nov. 26, 1834, son of the late David Wright Clarke, and brother of Prof. Henry Wright Clarke, the well-known educator of Newport. Prof. Thomas Hartwell Clarke is a descendant in the eleventh generation from John Clarke, of the County of Suffolk, England, a full history of the family being given in another part of this work.

Prof. Thomas Hartwell Clarke's boyhood days were spent on the home farm, and he attended the local schools, receiving additional educational instruction under private tutors. Later he attended Adelphian Academy, Brockton, Mass., and thence went to New York, where he took a classical course under the private tutorage of Prof. Walsh, giving special attention to Greek and Latin. He then became an instructor in the House of Refuge, a New York State Institution, which he entered in 1857, becoming principal thereof in 1859. He continued in that capacity until 1865, when he resigned and returned to Newport, where he taught in the Fourth Grammar School for two terms. He was then tendered the principalship of Newport's first grammar school, which he accepted, and in 1873 was elected superintendent of the public schools of Newport, performing the duties of that office until 1882, when he resigned, his health having failed. He then located on the Jamestown farm of his father-in-law, the late Charles Sherman, where for upwards of twenty years he engaged in agricultural pursuits, retiring therefrom when his health again failed. In 1884 he became a member of the school board of Jamestown, and continued in that position until 1897, during which time he also served as superintendent of schools, when, his wife dying, he resigned all offices to give his attention to his private interests. In 1906 he removed to his cottage on Narragansett avenue, and since that year has lived retired. While a resident of Newport, Prof. Clarke for many years was one of the trustees of the John Clarke Charity Fund. He has always been a Republican, and an ardent supporter of that party's principles. He is a member of the First Baptist Church of Newport, where he has served as deacon, and teacher and superintendent of the Sunday school. Fraternally he is connected with Harlem Lodge, A. F. & A. M., New York; Newport Chapter; De Blois Council; Washington Commandery, Knights Templar, of Newport, of which latter he was prelate for several years. He is also a member of the Rhode Island Consistory, and is a 33d degree Mason.

On Sept. 26, 1865, Mr. Clarke was married, in Newport, to Sarah Jane Sherman, born in Newport, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (Sherman) Sherman. Mrs. Clarke was a loving and devoted mother and a true Christian woman, doing much in the line of charitable and church work. She was descended from one of the oldest families of Rhode Island, the ancestor of which, Philip Sherman, was the first secretary of the Rhode Island Colony. Mrs. Clarke died at Jamestown, Jan. 28, 1897, and was buried in the family plot in Island cemetery, Newport. The following children were born to Prof. and Mrs. Clarke: Elizabeth, born Sept. 1, 1866, died Jan. 6, 1876; Lena Hartwell, born Nov. 24, 1867, resides at home; Mary Sherman, born Feb. 26, 1871, married John E. Hammond, of Jamestown; Charles Sherman, born Sept. 21, 1873, is an engineer on the Bristol ferry; William Lamont Wheeler, born April 25, 1875, is an electrician at Fort Fisher; Clara Edith, born Jan. 27, 1878, an artist, resides at home; and Sarah Jane, a telephone operator at Jamestown, also resides at home.

JONATHAN V. BARNES, one of the best known men of the town of Johnston, R. I., is a member of the ancient Barnes family of Rhode Island, the first of whom there is record being Rev. Thomas Barnes, of Swansea, Massachusetts.

Jonathan Barnes, father of Jonathan V., was a native of the town of Smithfield, and was born there Feb. 11, 1821. He was reared to the work of the farm, and in early manhood learned the trade of stone mason, a calling which he followed in connection with farming for many years. Later in life he engaged in the milk business, and for thirty years he was a familiar figure in and about the city. He was a man of great energy and enterprise, but was conservative withal. In his disposition he was friendly and always ready to help one less fortunate. He married Joanna E. Staples, of an old Rhode Island family. Their children were: Lucinda R., born in Smithfield, Oct. 4, 1843, who married Amasa Jarvis Smith, mentioned further on; Horace A.; Lucius, who died in infancy; Jonathan Varian; and Maria Amanda. Of these, Horace A. resides in Providence; Maria Amanda married (first) Charles Cram, and (second) George Cram, and by her first marriage had two children: Irene Bertha (born June 4, 1877, married Walter Howard Woodmansee, of Auburn, R. I.), and Lizzie Iona (born March 19, 1879, and now deceased). Jonathan Barnes died Aug. 3, 1894, and his wife May 10, 1896. Both are buried in Greenville cemetery.

Jonathan Varian Barnes, son of Jonathan, was born April 4, 1856, in Smithfield, and with his parents removed to the town of Johnston. He acquired his education at the public schools, and in Jencks Mowry's Academy. He grew to manhood and assisted his father, the two conducting the business jointly until the father's death, when our subject assumed charge and continued it. In 1896 he and his family removed to their present location on the Greenville pike. Their comfortable suburban residence, with its beautiful surroundings and modern improvements, were the work of Mr. Barnes's recent years. Like his father, who was a worker in the Republican party, and who filled a number of positions of trust, he has had much to do with the affairs of his town. For many years he has assisted in maintaining law and order in the capacity of police constable. He has been a member of the council, and was president of that body for one term. He is a member of the school board of Johnston. He is best described as independent in his political views, though he usually supports the Republican party on national issues. He has made many friends, and there are many more who admire his fearless determination to stand for the right, regardless of his personal interests. With him wrong is wrong, and there is no middle ground. He has always been backed by the best element of the citizens, and he has generally succeeded in bringing about such reforms as he has advocated. Mr. Barnes is honorable and just in his dealings, is fond of social intercourse and is most devoted to his home and family.

Mr. Barnes was married Dec. 16, 1874, to Anna E. Mathewson, born April 21, 1852, daughter of James O. Mathewson, a well-known resident of Johnston, where the family was early settled. To this marriage have come seven children, namely: (1) Walter Varian, born March 13, 1876, and now a prosperous druggist in Providence, married Estella Tyas. (2) Nettie Josephine, born Aug. 13, 1877, is a graduate of the Johnston high school and completed her education at the State Normal school. She married, Aug. 13, 1907, Prof. Frank Arthur Burr, of Cornell University. (3) Anna Louise was born Aug. 19, 1878. (4) Lucius Irving, born Jan. 4, 1880, married Grace Carpenter, of Manton, and has three children, Kenneth, born May 14, 1902; Ruth, March 6, 1904; and Charles Henry, Oct. 15, 1906. (5) Nelson Sweet, born Oct. 8, 1882, died Feb. 5, 1894. (6) Edith Evelyn was born July 9, 1886. (7) Ethel Sweet was born Jan. 18, 1897. Mrs. Barnes and her daughters are very popular socially.

AMASA JARVIS SMITH was born at Enfield, town of Smithfield, Feb. 7, 1836, son of Amasa and Olive (Hopkins) Smith. On Feb. 23, 1862, he married Lucinda R. Barnes, daughter of Jonathan and Joanna (Staples) Barnes.

Mr. Smith attended the schools of his native town and Spragueville, where he was later employed in the mills. He entered the service of the United States in the war of the Rebellion, enlisting in the Ninth Rhode Island Infantry under Capt. Taylor. His service took him with the Army of the Potomac, and he was stationed for some time at Fort Carroll. Returning home from the army, he again became a mill man, and in that capacity was well known, giving good account of himself in every capacity. He has now retired from active work, and with Mrs. Smith enjoys the fruit of earlier years of toil. They have a comfortable home on Manton avenue, Providence. Mr. Smith is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and a member of Prescott Post, No. 1, G. A. R., at Providence. He takes great interest in politics, as a good Republican, and while living in Smithfield was very active in party work.

IDA WALLEY ZORADIA LEWIS, the noted keeper of Lime Rock Lighthouse, at Newport, R. I., is one of the best known lighthouse keepers in the United States, and on account of the many lives she has saved in the performance of her duties is familiarly and affectionately known as "the Grace Darling of America."

Miss Lewis' father, Captain Hosea Lewis, was born in Hingham, Mass., and when a small boy took to the sea. For many years he was a deep-sea pilot, later entering the United States Government revenue cutter service, in which he continued until 1852, in which year he was appointed keeper of Lime Rock Lighthouse at Newport. At that time this was one of the most important lights on the Atlantic coast, and he continued as keeper of this place until his death, which occurred in Newport, Nov. 19, 1872, when he was sixty-nine years of age. He married Ida W. Z. Willey, daughter of Dr. Aaron C. Willey, of New Shoreham (now Block Island, R. I.). Upon the death of Captain Lewis, in 1872, his widow was appointed to succeed him as keeper, she continuing in that capacity until February, 1879, when her daughter, who has since held that position, was appointed to succeed her. Mrs. Lewis passed away in Newport, July 18, 1887. To Captain and Mrs. Lewis were born the following children: Ida W. Z.; Thomas Rudolph, who resides at Lime Rock Light, is unmarried; Hosea, Jr., who died at Newport, where he was engaged in teaming, married Ellen Mowry, of Newport, and to them was born one daughter, Ida W. Z.; and Harriet, who died in Newport, unmarried.

Ida Walley Zoradia Lewis was born in Newport, R. I., Feb. 25, 1844, in the house which is built on Lime Rock, and here her eventful life has been spent. She received her education in the public schools of her native city, and upon the completion of her educational training took up the duties that devolved upon her in giving her parents assistance at the lighthouse. In February, 1879, Miss Lewis was appointed by Congress, keeper of the Lime Rock Lighthouse, to succeed her mother, and since that time she has continued to efficiently fill this position. Miss Lewis has a remarkable record for saving human lives. Her first rescue was that of four boys, who were thrown into the sea by the capsizing of their boat, this rescue occurring when Miss Lewis was but seventeen years of age. She has displayed wonderful bravery in her rescues, and upon numerous occasions has risked her life in attempting the rescue of others. She has been successful in her every attempt, and her record is five rescues, with a total of eighteen human lives saved. She has many medals and tokens which have been presented to her for her wonderful display of bravery, at various times, among them being a solid gold first class medal presented by the United States Government. Another is a medal from the Humane Society of Massachusetts, the first ever given by that society for rescue, it being presented to her for the rescue of two soldiers who broke through the ice, in February, 1881. Miss Lewis succeeded in getting a rope to them after they were beneath the ice. She received a medal from the Life Saving Benevolent Association of New York for saving the lives of two men whose boat had capsized in a terrible gale, March 30, 1869, Miss Lewis going to their rescue in an open boat, alone. This Miss Lewis considers her most hazardous attempt at rescue. She was also presented with a solid silver tea-pot by the officers and enlisted men of the First Regiment of Artillery, stationed at Fort Adams, for saving the lives of two members of the band, Feb. 4, 1881. The citizens of Newport also presented her with a life-saving boat as a token of their appreciation of her great bravery. In 1907 she was made the recipient of a pension of thirty dollars per month for life from Andrew Carnegie, in recognition of her brave and noble work.

Miss Lewis has ever stood ready to risk her life in an attempt to save the life of a fellow creature, and in several instances has performed feats in making rescues that the bravest of men would hesitate to undertake. Her sole thought has ever been to attempt a rescue, regardless of the consequences to herself, and, fortunately in every case her attempt has been successful. As a result of the wonderful bravery she has displayed on so many different occasions, Miss Lewis has been styled "the Grace Darling of America," a title to which she is certainly entitled. She however, is very modest about her marvelous record, believing that she has done nothing but what any woman would do who had been placed in her position at these trying times.

HON. GEORGE CARMICHAEL, one of the best known men and useful citizens in Rhode Island, in his time, and long prominent in State politics, was a native of Glasgow, Scotland, born Nov. 22, 1838. In his paternal line he descended from one of the oldest families in the Lowlands, and in his maternal line from the Rutherfords, one of the most numerous clans in the Highlands of Scotland. He was but a boy when his parents, in 1847, emigrated to America, and located at Westerly, Rhode Island.

Early in life George Carmichael, armed only with ambition and energy, began its struggles. His opportunities for schooling were limited, the major portion of his education being received at night school, but the knowledge acquired was supplemented by patient and careful study at home. The young man of to-day has hardly reached an age to begin his schooling when young Carmichael had become a wage-earner. In the woolen mills of Welcome and Orsemus Stillman, at Westerly, he first began to learn the manufacturing business, with which so much of his subsequent life was identified. He lived at Ashaway, Bethel, and Laurel Glen, and in each place was connected in various capacities with the manufacturing business. His application, his ability, his industry and his ambition all served to win him rapid advancement as his thorough knowledge and trustworthiness were made known. While he applied himself

HON. GEORGE CARROLL was one of the best known men and prominent citizens of the island, in his time, and long after his death. He was a native of the town of South Scituate, Mass., born Feb. 22, 1838. In his paternal line he was one of the oldest families in the island, his maternal line from the Rutherford family, one of the most numerous clans in the island. He was but a boy when his parents emigrated to America, and located on Block Island.

Early in life George Carroll was imbued with ambition and energy, began to take advantage of the opportunities for schooling which were afforded him, a portion of his education being received at the common school, but the knowledge acquired was supplemented by patient and careful self-study. No young man of to-day has had to wait so long to begin his schooling when he had become a wage-earner. He was one of the first of Welcome and Orasmus Smith families, he first began to learn the manner of sailing, with which so much of his life was identified. He lived at Ashford, Mass., Laurel Glen, and in each place he was employed in various capacities with the manufacturing companies. His application, his ability, his industry and ambition all served to win him a high position, as his thorough knowledge and skill were made known. While he was closely to his work, he did not forget other duties, and the love of his home, always a dominant characteristic in his life, was there evidenced by the lad's walking from Ashaway to Westerly every evening after the mill closed, to see his mother, who was ill. No thought of his own comfort ever intervened to deter him from duty. In 1875 he removed to Shannock, R. I., and took charge of the woolen business there, carried on under the name of the Carmichael Manufacturing Company. In his subsequent active business life he was chiefly identified with this company. His affairs were all conducted to conform with a high ideal of business and personal honor and no man ever stood higher in the estimation of his business associates. To his employes he was ever a wise friend and counselor, and he was always ready, in the midst of his busy life, to lay aside his own affairs to help by word or deed some less fortunate or unhappy brother back into the sunlight of peace and comfort.

Well known and honored as he was in the manufacturing world, George Carmichael's name will live longest in the public mind as a good, loyal and conscientious citizen. He was a supporter of the principles of the Republican party, but before he was a politician he was first of all a true American citizen. In 1877, while residing at Shannock, in Richmond, he was elected as representative to the Legislature, serving so acceptably that he was re-elected for another term. Declining another term as representative, he was elected in 1879 president of the Richmond town council, where he served in an able and satisfactory manner. Public opinion was that he should return to the Assembly and there do work for his town, and so strong was this feeling that he was obliged to yield to it, though much against his will. In 1880 he was again unanimously chosen representative from Richmond.

In this session began his work in the Legislature that, of itself, would be a monument to his ability and patriotism. At this time the remnant of the once famous tribe of Indians, the Narragansetts, who controlled Rhode Island to its settlement by Roger Williams, still maintained their tribal government and tribal lands within the limits of the town of Charlestown. They owned a reservation of some 6,000 acres. Many attempts had been made to induce these descendants of the race of Canonicus and Miantinimah to abandon their tribal system and become citizens of the State. Their lands were exempt from taxation. They, themselves, while they remained on the reservation, were exempt from arrest or civil process. They supported their own poor, and the State maintained separate schools for them, their children not being permitted to attend the other schools; matters, generally, had drifted into a very undesirable condition. Mr. Carmichael, who was familiar with the situation, suggested that it was the business of the State to examine into and, if possible, improve the condition of this remnant of an interesting race. He was appointed by Governor Van Zandt, along with Dwight R. Adams and William P. Sheffield, a commission with power to negotiate for the purchase of the common lands of these Indians, and to settle all matters pertaining to the affairs between them and the Colony or State. The work occupied three years, and was adjusted with honor to the State, and with satisfaction to the people affected. They were paid for their lands, they became citizens of the State, abandoning their tribal forms, and their children were admitted to the public schools. When it was suggested that a monument should be raised in Providence in memory of Canonicus, the friend of Roger Williams, Mr. Carmichael was one of the strongest supporters of the movement, and at its dedication he was one of its speakers, his address being both able and eloquent. During the settlement of these Indian matters it was ascertained that the ancient burying-grounds, in which were interred the remains of the principal chiefs and warriors, kings and queens, of the Narragansett nation, had passed out of the hands of the tribe. Upon the statement of these facts by Mr. Carmichael in the House of Representatives a resolution was passed making an appropriation to purchase, in the name of the State, the Royal Indian Burying Ground, in the town of Charlestown, to inclose the same, and to erect a suitable tablet within the inclosure, which was done.

At the same session of the Legislature Mr. Carmichael secured an appropriation to protect the inlet connecting the Great Salt Pond in Charlestown with the ocean, his purpose being to prevent the closing of the inlet by storms and tide and the shutting out of the migratory fishes and the destruction of shell-fish.

In 1882 Mr. Carmichael changed his residence to the town of Charlestown, and in 1883 he was elected to the Legislature from that town. He served in the House until 1887 and was then promoted to the Senate, where he served two years. For many years probably no other man wielded as great influence in South county affairs, and so disinterested was he known to be, and with the general welfare and advancement of his town and State so much at heart, that few men in the entire State were more influential or more successful in promoting what they desired for public purposes. He was a Presidential elector in 1884, and voted for James G. Blaine, of whom he was a great admirer. In 1888 he was elected clerk of the Supreme court and court of Common Pleas for Washington county, and served one year. He was a member of the committee appointed to investigate State prison affairs in 1887. In 1892 he was appointed special agent of the United States general land office, and spent three years in this service, being away from home much of the time. His life was an active one, and he accomplished much for his fellow men.

During the war Mr. Carmichael served in Company B, 9th R. I. V. I., from May to September, 1862, and later as captain of Company H, 8th R. I. Militia, for three years, rendering service a part of the time in garrisoning the forts along the west passage of Narragansett Bay. He was always greatly interested in the veteran soldiers, and was prominent in Grand Army circles throughout the State, belonging to Burnside Post, No. 2, G. A. R. He was very active as a commissioner for the relief of needy soldiers and sailors, and labored assiduously for the establishment of the Soldiers Home at Bristol. He was prominently identified with the legislation relative to the 4th R. I. V. I., regarding the reimbursement of soldiers of that regiment for uniforms wrongly charged to them during the Civil war, and it is probably to him, more than to any other one man, that the passage of the measure was due.

No better evidence of the value of Mr. Carmichael's labors in behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic can be asked than the following resolutions, which were presented to him at his home in Shannock by a delegation comprising about fifty of the representative G. A. R. men of the State, the presentation speech being made by Daniel R. Ballou of Providence. These resolutions, beautifully executed with pen, and of exquisite coloring, make a work of art, to say naught of their significant character:

Assistant Adjutant General's Office.
Headquarters Department of Rhode Island,
Grand Army of the Republic,
Providence, Rhode Island, February 9, 1891.

At a meeting of the 24th annual Encampment held in Providence on February 6, 1891, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Department of Rhode Island, Grand Army of the Republic, at all times feel under deep obligations to any citizen of the State for service rendered in the interest and welfare of the Veterans of the War of the Rebellion, 1861-1865, therefore

Resolved, That the thanks of this Department, in Convention assembled, are most heartily extended to our comrade State Senator Geo. Carmichael, of Burnside Post, No. 2, for his untiring efforts and interest taken in behalf of the Veteran Soldiers and Sailors before the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island, and for introducing into the General Assembly the resolution calling for the revision of the Adjutant General's report of the State of Rhode Island for the year of 1895.

Resolved, That the foregoing resolution be spread upon the records of the Department and that a copy of the same be suitably engrossed and framed at the expense of the Department and presented to comrade George Carmichael.

Attest:
EDMUND F. PRENTISS, BENJAMIN F. DAVIS,
Ass't Adjutant General. Department Commander.

Mr. Carmichael was well known in Masonic circles, and was affiliated with Franklin Lodge, No. 20, A. F. & A. M., at Westerly, and with the Order of the Eastern Star, at Hope Valley, to which his widow also belongs. He was likewise a member of the Southern Rhode Island Press Club.

On Nov. 7, 1858, Mr. Carmichael was united in marriage with Miss Abby Sanford Thomas, of North Kingstown, and to them were born two sons: George A., who holds a responsible position in the freight department of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company, at Worcester, Mass.; and Welcome S., of Providence. Mrs. Carmichael died Feb. 19, 1885. Mr. Carmichael was married April 11, 1888, to Miss Nellie A. Clark, of Shannock, R. I., born March 25, 1850, daughter of Simeon P. and Catharine (Perry) Clark, who are mentioned elsewhere. In 1882 Mr. Carmichael erected the beautiful home, "River View," at Shannock, where he resided until his death, July 12, 1903, and where his estimable widow yet resides. He is buried in River Bend cemetery, at Westerly. In his home was dispensed a most generous hospitality, and it was the scene of many social gatherings. He was never so happy as when at home with his family, or surrounded by his friends, the latter including the prominent men in every section of the State, and these were often guests at his home. He was even-tempered, seldom angry, never revengeful, being always ready to overlook or forgive. He always claimed, "Life is too short to seek revenge." He was a man of fine presence and distinguished appearance, with a force of character that seemed to command without any display of force. He was naturally dignified, but adapted himself to his surroundings, making friends with men in every walk of life. By nature he was a peacemaker, and always deprecated strife, using his influence to settle many disputes of social, domestic and legal character, utilizing every means at his command to avoid trouble or litigation between parties. Well informed and well read, he was an interesting talker, a good conversationalist, a fine raconteur, and as a speaker was always in demand. His death deprived Rhode Island of one of her well known men and able citizens.

ROBERT DENNIS HALL, of Boston, Mass., and Portsmouth, R. I., who has long been prominently identified with the coal trade in the former city, is a worthy representative of one of the oldest families in New England.

The Portsmouth Halls came early to New England. They chose Rhode Island as their abiding place and in the ancient town of Portsmouth still live descendants of the founder of the family on American soil. This was (1) William Hall, who was born in England in 1613 and died in 1675. In 1638 he was admitted an inhabitant of Aquidneck and became one of the leading men of the town of Portsmouth. He was commissioner in 1654, 1656, 1660 and 1663; was deputy in 1665, 1666, 1667, 1668, 1672 and 1673, and in 1672 he also served in the town council.

The christian name of his wife was Mary, and their children were: Zuriel, Zurici, William, Benjamin, Elizabeth, Rebecca and Deliverance. Generation after generation of the posterity of these early Halls of Portsmouth have, in turn, occupied the lands first farmed by their ancestors and have worthily perpetuated the family name.

(II) Benjamin Hall, son of William, born in 1650, received by the will of his father the homestead at the death of his mother, he to pay two pounds to each of his sisters, Elizabeth, Rebecca and Deliverance. Mr. Hall resided in Portsmouth, of which town he was made a freeman in 1678. He was deputy in 1699, 1701, 1704, 1705, 1706, 1707, 1713 and 1714. He was assistant deputy in 1701 and 1702 and was a justice of the peace in 1704. He married, July 27, 1676, Frances Parker, daughter of George and Frances Parker. He died Jan. 26, 1730. Their children were: Mary, born April 3, 1678; William, Aug. 19, 1680; Benjamin, June 17, 1682; George, June 29, 1685; and Nathaniel, June 29, 1689.

(III) William Hall, son of Benjamin and Frances (Parker) Hall, was born in Portsmouth, R. I., Aug. 19, 1680, and there he spent his life engaged in farming. He died March 11, 1760. He was buried in the Hall cemetery, Portsmouth, on the Bristol Ferry road. Over his grave is the following inscription: "In memory of Colonel Wm. Hall, who died March ye 11, 1760, in the 80 year of his age."

He married, Feb. 25, 1702, Mary Brownell, who died March 23, 1776, and was laid to rest beside her husband. On her headstone is the following inscription: "In memory of Mary, the widow of Colonel Wm. Hall, who departed this life March 23, A. D. 1776, in the 93d year of her age." Their children, according to family record, were: George, born Feb. 13, 1704; Benjamin, April 19, 1706; William, Oct. 8, 1708; Parker, Nov. 27, 1711; Ruth, April 19, 1714; Phebe, Sept. 3, 1716; Thomas, Dec. 13, 1718; Mary, Nov. 3, 1720; and Martha, Jan. 14, 1722.

(IV) George Hall, born Feb. 13, 1704, in Portsmouth, eldest son of Col. William Hall, made farming his life occupation, and owned land on what is now known as the Bristol Ferry road, where he built a home which is still standing, and owned by Mrs. Robert Dennis Hall. It has been the home of five generations. He married, in Newport, according to Newport town records, March 25, 1725, Elizabeth Smith, and their children (two only of family record, the second of Newport town record) were: William, born Jan. 20, 1726; Edward, born April 14, 1730-31; and George, born May 4, 1735. During the Revolutionary war a guard of British soldiers were quartered in the home of George Hall, and there is yet to be seen a bullet hole through the milk house door, a silent witness of those stirring days over 125 years ago.

(V) George Hall, son of George and Elizabeth

(Smith) Hall, was born on the old homestead May 4, 1735, was a well-known farmer, and died May 24, 1817; he was buried in the old cemetery. He belonged to the Society of Friends. In 1759 he married Charity Fish, who was born Sept. 11, 1733, and died Feb. 5, 1821. Their children were: Sarah, born June 17, 1760, died Nov. 8, 1813; Ruth, born Dec. 12, 1761, died April 28, 1785; Mary and Hannah, twins, born Dec. 12, 1763, died Nov. 11, 1786, and Dec. 23, 1787, respectively; Phebe, born Sept. 3, 1765, died Nov. 28, 1815; William, born March 28, 1767, died Aug. 28, 1853; Isaac, born May 17, 1769, died Jan. 11, 1770; George, born Dec. 11, 1770, died June 8, 1838; Stephen, born Aug. 15, 1772, died Aug. 27, 1772; Abigail, born Sept. 14, 1773, died April 19, 1836; Isaac (2), born June 18, 1775, died Jan. 20, 1800; Parker, born Nov. 22, 1776, died March 11, 1836; Nancy, born Sept. 25, 1779, died Oct. 16, 1786; David, born July 16, 1781, died June 13, 1847.

(VI) Judge David Hall, son of George and Charity, born July 16, 1781, married, Jan. 1, 1807, Hannah, born July 13, 1784, daughter of Robert Dennis; she died April 12, 1868, and was buried in the old cemetery. To this union came children as follows: Isaac Dennis, born Nov. 2, 1807; Darius, Jan. 21, 1809; Harriet A., July 16, 1810; Jane, April 4, 1812; Edward, Nov. 27, 1814; Gardner, Oct. 10, 1815 (was the father of George Gardner Hall, long proprietor of the "Adams House," in Boston, and who has a sketch elsewhere in this work); Ruth Dennis, Nov. 21, 1817; Robert Dennis, June 18, 1820; and David Franklin, Feb. 18, 1828 (resides in California). David Hall's birth occurred on the old Hall homestead in Portsmouth and he succeeded to its occupancy. There his life was passed, and there his family were reared to become useful men and women. He served as a trial justice, and was a man highly esteemed.

(VII) Robert Dennis Hall, son of David and Hannah, was also born on the old homestead of his forefathers, the date of his birth being June 18, 1820. He received his education in private schools, and, remaining at home, was reared to and continued in agricultural pursuits, assisting in his earlier years his father, and after the latter's death, in 1847, becoming by inheritance and purchase the owner of the home farm. Mr. Hall was an experienced and practical farmer, and by his care and judicious management prospered, meeting with success in his business operations. His attention in main was given to general farming, yet knowing the value of growing vegetables for market, he also engaged in that line of farming with good results. He was one of the highly esteemed and respected citizens of his town, one of its substantial men. He died Jan. 7, 1899, and was buried in the old family cemetery.

Mr. Hall's successful and judicious management of his own business affairs commended him to his fellow-townsmen, who deemed him a good man to look after the affairs of the community, and they elected him to various local offices, among them to that of member of the town council, in which capacity he served with his characteristic good judgment for a number of years. His religious faith was that of the Society of Friends.

On June 11, 1856, Mr. Hall was married to Mary Almy Cook, born Sept. 17, 1831, daughter of Albert G. and Hannah (Boyd) Cook, of Portsmouth, R. I.; she still resides on the homestead. The marriage was blessed with children as follows: Robert Dennis, born May 28, 1857, is mentioned below; David Franklin, born Jan. 27, 1859, married Abby Chase, and they reside in Portsmouth; Hannah C., born Sept. 12, 1860, married Alfred G. Sisson, and they reside in Portsmouth; Ruth D., born Oct. 16, 1862, is unmarried, at home; Emma E., born Sept. 29, 1864, married Albert T. Sisson, of Newtonville, Mass.; Albert C., born Feb. 7, 1866, married Sarah D. Cory, and they reside in Portsmouth; Alice D., born Dec. 11, 1867, married Henry E. Sisson, and they reside in Providence; Isaac D. and William G. both died in infancy.

(VIII) Robert Dennis Hall, Jr., eldest son of Robert Dennis and Mary Almy (Cook) Hall, was born on the old homestead at Portsmouth, May 28, 1857, and like all farmers' boys he grew up on the farm, and attended the district schools of the town. He also spent two terms at East Greenwich Academy. At the age of eighteen years he left home to make his own way, going to Boston, and there he obtained a position as clerk with the well-known firm of L. G. Burnham & Co., coal merchants, which later became the nucleus of the Metropolitan Coal Company, and with these concerns he continued until 1900, covering a period of a quarter of a century. Mr. Hall then spent several months sojourning in California, and upon his return to Boston he became a member of the Stetson Coal Company upon the latter's organization, in 1902, of which he is treasurer, and in which he is also a stockholder and director. He makes his home in Brookline, Mass., during the winter, and in Portsmouth, R. I., in the summer.

Having a strong liking for the old home he, in 1900, bought a tract of land opposite the old homestead in Portsmouth, which was known as the old Watts farm. Later he added to it the property owned by the late J. Henry Stoddard, where he has made many improvements, not sparing expense in beautifying the place, and fitting it up with modern buildings, as well as a conservatory. The house commands a beautiful view of the Narragansett Bay, the town of Bristol, across the Bay, and the Islands in the Bay.

Mr. Hall is a self-made man, having begun life a poor boy, receiving but five dollars per week at the start, all of which went for room and board, but he resolved to succeed, and he can now look back with pride on his achievements. In political matters he is a Republican, but not active in party work, his private affairs demanding all his attention. He is modest and unassuming, genial and charitable. He has a marked fondness for dogs, horses and poultry.

On Oct. 6, 1886, in Newtonville, Mass., Mr. Hall was married to Sarah Howland Smith, who was born in New Bedford, Mass., daughter of Joseph E. and Anne Elizabeth (Swift) Smith. They have one child, Sarah Dennis Hall.

ANGELL (line of Lemuel Angell of North Providence). Lemuel Angell was a descendant in the sixth generation of Thomas Angell, the founder of the Angell family in Rhode Island.

(I) Thomas Angell was born about 1618, and came to America, with or about the same time as Roger Williams. He was one of the first settlers in Providence, but being less than twenty-one years of age when Roger Williams divided the land that he bought from the Indians, was omitted from that division. He received his share later, after he became of lawful age, and seems to have lived in peculiarly intimate relations with Roger Williams.

(II) John Angell, son of Thomas, married Ruth, the daughter of William Field, and resided in Providence.

(III) Hope Angell, son of John, was born in 1685, and he lived in what is now North Providence. He was admitted a freeman of the Colony May 6, 1712, and he died Feb. 11, 1759. His wife was Lydia Olney, and one of their children was Abiah Angell.

(IV) Abiah Angell, son of Hope, was the owner of large areas of land in Smithfield and some in North Providence, Rhode Island. He married Frelove Smith, and one of their children was Benjamin Angell.

(V) Benjamin Angell was born in North Providence, March 9, 1760, but when a young man, he went to what is now Sunapee, New Hampshire, and worked as a farmer for his brother Gideon, who had previously settled in that town. He later returned to Rhode Island, engaging in farming in North Providence, and in Smithfield. He married Lydia Benchly (who was born Jan. 14, 1760, and died May 12, 1831) and he died Sept. 28, 1826. To Benjamin and Lydia Angell were born six children, namely: (1) Lemuel Angell was born Oct. 11, 1782. (2) George Angell, born March 24, 1785, died Feb. 18, 1827. He was a graduate of Brown University, and a Baptist clergyman, and his only representative is his son George T. Angell, of Boston, the well-known champion of dumb animals and other philanthropies. (3) Pardon Angell, born May 12, 1788, died Dec. 27, 1789. (4) Christopher Angell, born Sept. 16, 1790, died May 12, 1842, childless. (5) Harriet Angell, born May 20, 1794, married Joseph B. Hawkins, and resided for some years in North Providence, later removing to Pawtucket, where she died Feb. 24, 1869. Her children were: (a) Eliza A., born in 1815, married Edward B. Harrington, and lived in Pawtucket, where her death occurred Oct. 15, 1886. He died Aug. 17, 1876. They were the parents of four children, as follows: Frances H., born in 1835, who married Nathaniel D. Thurber, and lives in Providence, childless; Almira E., born in 1837, who died unmarried Jan. 25, 1895; Miss Sarah C., born in 1842; and Harriet E., born in 1848, who died July 23, 1863. (b) Henry, born in 1818, died in Pawtucket from the effects of injuries received while at work in a factory. (c) Desire, born in 1820, married Kimball Aldrich, lived in Pawtucket, and there died. Their only child died in infancy. (d) Albert, born in 1822, was engaged in the market business first at Pawtucket, and later at Providence, and died in the latter place June 6, 1868. He married Julia Bourn, and they had two children: Juliana, who married W. Harry Gibbs, and had four children, of whom two survive: Harriet (wife of Warren E. Arnold) and Arthur C. (of Providence); and Mary F., who married Dr. Clarence T. Gardner, and died in Providence, the mother of one son, Dr. Clarence H. Gardner. (6) Almira Angell, born Oct. 28, 1802, died June 22, 1870, the wife of Hiram L. Howard of Pawtucket, Rhode Island (who died May 7, 1883). Their only child Hattie, wife of D. Ferdinand Read, was born in 1840, and she died March 26, 1864, at Pawtucket, Rhode Island, childless.

Lemuel Angell

(VI) LEMUEL ANGELL was born Oct. 11, 1782, and lived all his life in what is now North Providence, R. I., where he died Nov. 24, 1872. He was married Dec. 3, 1810, to Sally Smith, who was born Feb. 20, 1781, and who died Feb. 15, 1836, daughter of Nehemiah and Frelove Smith. Nehemiah Smith was born May 12, 1731, son of Hezekiah and Rachel (Brown) Smith, and he died Oct. 7, 1813. Frelove Smith, his wife, a daughter of Col. William Smith, was born Feb. 17, 1842, and died March 23, 1818.

From about the time of his marriage, Lemuel Angell's home was on the homestead farm of his father-in-law in North Providence (where Frederick Winsor now resides) and Nehemiah Smith and his wife are both buried there. It is very doubtful what facilities Mr. Angell had for getting an education in any school, for as late as the spring of 1847 his own report as chairman of the committee on public schools of North Providence included almost all of what is now Pawtucket, and a large area now included in Providence. He then reports, when sixty years of age, only $2854.92 are available for educating 2120 children, or as he states it "about one dollar and thirty-five cents for each child,—a sum in the opinion of the school committee manifestly inadequate to the educational wants of the town." He never had a dozen books in his home at a time, and only one newspaper, and each of his daughters went to a "Dame's School" because the public schools were not at that time considered fit places for girls to attend. This report gives us a splendid specimen of terse and vigorous language, and it contains a long list of extremely practical suggestions or recommendations. It is permeated throughout with faith in the advantages of education, and a keen perception of the best means to accomplish the results that he hopes and labors for. It has the flavor of Horace Mann and Henry Barnard, for he is not merely "up to date" at that time, but up to the present, or even ahead of it. Think of a man more than sixty years of age inviting the increase of the taxes of himself and of two of his children by such a sentence as this: "A good district library can be obtained at a very small expense, and we hope that no district will long be without one," and again, "In this matter we cannot if we would, remain stationary; we shall inevitably go backward if we do not progress." He must have been a close observer of men and affairs, and studious in temperament, for he developed unusual business capacity. He was an auctioneer and a land surveyor the greater part of his life, but added to those occupations, drawing deeds, mortgages and similar documents, and especially such as related to the division of estates. He was for many years justice of the peace, and in some years a trial justice, and served two terms in the General Assembly. He had a great facility for attracting people to himself, retaining their confidence, and influencing their conduct. His integrity in business transactions was universally conceded throughout, and his business career did not end until after he had completed his ninetieth year. He was endowed with excellent judgment in business matters, and he acquired an accurate knowledge of legal principles. As he was naturally a peace maker, he for many years was as useful and as well known a citizen as his town contained. Lemuel and Sally Angell had children and descendants as follows:

(1) William B. Angell, born March 16, 1812, died Oct. 3, 1817.

(2) Pardon Angell, born June 22, 1814, married in Smithfield, R. I., March 30-31, 1836, Mary Ann Angell, who died April 29, 1881. Pardon Angell came to Greenville when a very young man, and commenced his business career there as a wheelwright, as carriage and wagon makers were then called. His first shop had no machinery except a turning lathe that was used to prepare spokes for the wheels. This machine was operated by a horse that walked about it in a circle. Later, he bought a larger shop nearly opposite the Bank at Greenville, and here he had water power, and by it operated a few saws and lathes. Besides being for about thirty years proprietor of this business, he was the village undertaker, a director of the bank, president of the town council and court of Probate, and prominent in the Free Baptist Church. His children were: (a) Thomas L., born Nov. 10, 1837, a graduate of Brown University, formerly Principal of Lapham Institute at North Scituate,

R. I., and for more than thirty years a Professor in Bates College at Lewiston, Maine, married, July 31, 1862, Emily Brown (born Nov. 22, 1835, died Dec. 23, 1901) and their only child Mary F. (wife of Charles H. Lincoln, of Washington, D. C.) was born July 29, 1868. (b) George W., born June 5, 1840, died Dec. 5, 1840. (c) Francis M., born June 7, 1843, died Aug. 3, 1843. (d) Josephine F., born July 12, 1845, married July 12, 1866, John M. Steere, who died Dec. 22, 1868. (e) Rufus J., born April 12, 1848, married (first) Oct. 4, 1871, Ruth E. Andrews, had six children—Harry Rufus (born Sept. 26, 1872, married Harriett Sibley), Ruth Bertha (born Aug. 26, 1875), Mary Winona (born March 16, 1877, wife of Charles Whitaker), Thomas Caleb (born Sept. 15, 1878), Fred Walter (born Jan. 5, 1880, married Bertha Wade) and Crawford (born Jan. 18, 1885, died Feb. 27, 1885). He married (second), Aug. 16, 1890, Charlotte M. Butler, and died Dec. 1, 1904, leaving besides the six children of the first marriage two by the second—Ethel J. (born March 23, 1900) and Albert J. (born July 11, 1905). (f) Orra A., born Dec. 25, 1849, died Dec. 5, 1851. (g) Orra A. (2) was born Oct. 29, 1853.

(3) Sally Ann Angell, born Sept. 8, 1816, died at Greenville Feb. 17, 1883. She was married, March 30, 1836, to William Tobey (born June 20, 1810, and died at Greenville Feb. 18, 1894). In early life Mr. Tobey was a blacksmith, but for many years was a storekeeper and postmaster. He was extremely kind and universally beloved throughout his life. He was one of the group of people driven out of the Free Baptist Church at Greenville (in which he was then owner of a pew) by a mob of his neighbors, because they were holding an anti-slavery meeting. To Mr. and Mrs. Tobey were born the following children: (a) Oscar A., born Jan. 10, 1837, has been town clerk and clerk of the Probate Court of Smithfield ever since the present town was organized in 1872, and postmaster and proprietor of the village store for many years. He was married June 12, 1861, to Addie Brown, born March 15, 1837, and they have had four children: Jessie H., born April 28, 1862, married Henry F. Smith, and has two children, Harold T. (born Sept. 6, 1887) and Helen Sumner (born June 23, 1893); William Edgar, born Dec. 16, 1863; Charles Sumner, born Jan. 6, 1866, died Nov. 29, 1887; and Jennie Lester, born June 8, 1874. (b) Sarah Amanda, born Sept. 15, 1839, died July 31, 1861. On Sept. 15, 1857, she married Ethan C. Thornton (now deceased), and their only child, Leland A. Thornton, born March 24, 1861, married Nov. 15, 1888, Edna L. Allen, and has two children, Ethel A. (born Sept. 25, 1891) and Marion L. (born Feb. 4, 1894). (c) William H., born Sept. 15, 1842, married Dec. 24, 1866, Emma F. Cooke, born Nov. 15, 1846, and they have had five children: Robert Irving, born April 2, 1870, married Elma Yardley, and has one son Henry Irving; Harold Wilson, born Nov. 5, 1872, died March 6, 1880; George Angell, born Jan. 11, 1876, married Florence E. Millett, and has one son, Norman; Edith May, born July 31, 1879, died March 19, 1880; and Ethel Sarah, born April 24, 1881, married James M. King, and their only child, Janet T., died at the age of sixteen months. William H. Tobey has been employed by the Lonsdale Company for nearly forty years, and now holds a very creditable and important position in their business. (d) Ellen F., born Aug. 3, 1844, married George A. Southwick, and has one son Oscar Howard Southwick, born May 27, 1866, who married Jan. 26, 1888, Rena B. Fuller, and has two children, Willett T. (born Aug. 23, 1888) and Earl Fuller (born Jan. 15, 1894). (e) James Edwin, born Oct. 18, 1848, died July 28, 1891. He was a graduate of Lapham Institute, and of the medical department of Harvard University. In the few years of his practice as a physician, he showed a fine adaptation to his profession and marked ability. He was married Nov. 26, 1882, to Frances Wightman, but had no children.

(4) George W. Angell, born March 31, 1818, died May 19, 1905. In his early years he learned the trade of blacksmith, and worked at Greenville for a short time, and then for about a dozen years, or until about 1843, at Fruit Hill, R. I. From that date until near the date of his death he was engaged in the milk business and farming. He was a man of considerable business ability, and had a charming and refined personality. In his later years he was the ideal of a delightful aged person. He was married Nov. 12, 1840, to his first wife, Emily Mann, who was born May 6, 1821, and who died May 9, 1848, the mother of two children: Henry J., born Oct. 2, 1841, died Nov. 16, 1869. Thomas William, born Feb. 11, 1843, married July 23, 1865, Ellen R. Eddy; he is a veteran of the Civil War, and was formerly a grocer, but his principal business now is the care and management of estates. Mr. George W. Angell married (second) Oct. 11, 1849, Mary J. Manchester (born Nov. 19, 1821, died Dec. 26, 1902). To this marriage three children were born: George Herbert, born June 20, 1853, died Sept. 1, 1858; Infant, born June 2, 1860, died June 8, 1860; and Infant, born May 8, 1864, died June 8, 1864.

(5) Eben S. Angell, born April 9, 1820, died April 27, 1898. During the business portion of his life he lived at Greenville, but during his last years shared the homes of his children. He was a quiet, unobtrusive man of most excellent character, and much respected by his acquaintances.

"Such was our friend, built on the good old plan
A true and brave and downright honest man."

On Sept. 22, 1844, he married Abby F. Thompson, who was born Oct. 1, 1825, and died March 6, 1887. She was a descendant in the seventh generation from John Thompson, who came to Plymouth, Mass., soon after the "Mayflower" arrived, and in another line she was a lineal descendant of Myles Standish and Priscilla (Mullins) Alden, through the marriage of Alexander Standish (a son of Myles) to Sarah, daughter of John and Priscilla Alden. Their children were: (a) Louis L., born April 22, 1850, married, Jan. 1, 1883, Hannah A. F. Peckham, born July 23, 1860, eldest daughter of Hon. Thomas Clarke Peckham referred to elsewhere in this work. Louis L. Angell was educated at Lapham Institute and at the law department of Union University at Albany, N. Y., and in June, 1876, was admitted to practice law in the Courts of Rhode Island and also in the United States Courts. Since December, 1888, he has been a member of the law firm of Cooke & Angell. While his practice may be called general, his preferences are probate law and office practice. In politics he is, and always has been, independent. He has never sought political positions, but served one year as president of the town council and court of Probate of the town of Johnston. He holds several positions as trustee in important matters, and has been a successful man. His children were: Helen, born July 24, 1886, died same day; Edith P., born May 19, 1888; and Louis W. (b) Abby M., born November 19, 1852, married April 20, 1881, Frederick Winsor, a successful man and a well known resident of North Providence, Rhode Island.

(6) Harriet Newell Angell, born April 20, 1822, died July 16, 1881. On March 28, 1844, she was married to Zalmon A. Olney, who was reported "missing" at the battle of Fredericksburg in December, 1862. On Oct. 12, 1870, she was married to John P. Dawley, who is now deceased. No children were born by her second marriage, but she had two by the first, namely: (a) George E., born Sept. 19, 1845, married Oct. 12, 1865, Ann E. Mathewson, and children as follows have been born to them: George W., born Sept. 25, 1866; Henry L., July 29, 1868; Alonzo E., Jan. 30, 1871 (died July 16, 1871); Lizzie F., Aug. 10, 1872; Harold S., April 4, 1874 (died April 21, 1893); Milton G., Sept. 20, 1876; Hattie L., July 29, 1880; Cynthia, Feb. 12, 1882; Charles B., May 22, 1884; and Ruth E., Feb. 24, 1892. (b) Emma A., born Aug. 23, 1853, married, Feb. 8, 1870, James V. Dawley.

JAMES HARRISON ANDREW, one of the most prominent citizens of Central Falls, R. I., who died Jan. 10, 1906, at his home, No. 10 Jenks street, was for a number of years a leader in business and political circles in the city. Mr. Andrew was born in Providence, R. I., Feb. 14, 1835, son of John and Ann Harrison Andrew.

Richard Andrew, James Harrison's grandfather, was a friend and companion of Robert Burns, the poet, and Flaes' Mill at Ayr, of which Richard Andrew was proprietor, is mentioned in one of Burns' poems.

John Andrew, father of James H., was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1804, and died in Providence in 1846. He came to the United States about 1826, settling in New York City, whence he removed after a short period to Providence. Here he started in the hardware business, opening a store on North Main street, and in this business he was successfully engaged until his death. During the Dorr war he was an active supporter of the popular cause, planted a cannon on Constitution Hill to defend the interests of the Dorrites, and was one of those arrested and imprisoned for taking part in the affair. He married Ann Harrison, born in 1810, in London, England, who died Jan. 15, 1890, at the home of her son, James H., at Central Falls. These children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Andrew: Jane, widow of Alfred Woodward, resides in Providence; John, who died in Boston, Mass., was for a number of years superintendent of the Chelsea, Mass., gas works; Robert was drowned in Providence at the age of eight years; Mary died at the age of twenty-one years; James H.; and Isabelle married William Rice, of Providence, in which city both died.

James Harrison Andrew received his education in the school of his native city, and in 1850 went to work for the Providence Steam & Gas Pipe Company, continuing with that company until 1857, when he came to Pawtucket and assumed charge of the manufacturing department of the Pawtucket Gas Company. He remained in this position until 1866, when he associated himself with Robert Alexander on Mill street, in the steam and gas piping business. In 1871 he purchased Mr. Alexander's interest and took in David L. Fales, his brother-in-law, as a partner. They then bought the Rhode Island Steam Heating Company, on East avenue, removed their original business to that establishment and began operating under the name of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company. In June, 1890, the company was incorporated and carried on business at the old location, No. 32 East avenue, until in 1903, in which year the business was sold to Messrs. John A. Arnold, G. B. Allen, E. D. Anthony and others, who are still continuing the business under the same name. Mr. Andrew had been president from the time of organization until he sold out his interests, after which time until his death he was not actively engaged in business.

Mr. Andrew was a Republican, and had taken an active interest in local affairs in Central Falls, where he lived. He was a member of the board of fire-wards of the town of Lincoln for twenty years, and was its president for eight years; was one of the town council for some years, and president two years; and was sewer commissioner for two years. He was one of the committee of seven which prepared the act incorporating the city of Central Falls. Mr. Andrew was a Universalist in religion. He was a Free Mason, a Knight Templar, a member of the Mystic Shrine, Knights of Pythias, Knights of Honor, and the American Mechanics.

On Jan. 24, 1866, Mr. Andrew was united in marriage to Robie A. Fales, born Nov. 21, 1838, in Central Falls, daughter of the late James Gillmore and Maria (Aldrich) Fales, of Central Falls. A record of the Fales family—one of the earliest settled in New England—will be found elsewhere in this work. To Mr. and Mrs. Andrew were born three children: James Everett; Maud Fales, at home, unmarried; and Marie Ethel, who was married Oct. 30, 1901, to Sanford A. Maxcy, of Central Falls. James H. Andrew was possessed of a genial, social manner, and was a man who won and kept many warm friends. He was a kind and considerate husband and an indulgent father. In his death, which occurred in Central Falls, Jan. 10, 1906, that city lost one of its useful and representative citizens.

JAMES EVERETT ANDREW, only son of the late James H. and Robie A. (Fales) Andrew, was born June 23, 1868, in Central Falls. He attended the public schools of his native city until fourteen years of age, then went to Bryant & Stratton's Business College, at Providence, where he spent a year as a student. On leaving school he became stenographer in the office of W. F. and F. C. Sayles, Pawtucket, and he continued in this capacity for six years, at the end of which time he entered the employ of the Pawtucket Steam & Gas Pipe Company. When this corporation was incorporated in June, 1890, Mr. Andrew was given an interest in the corporation, and was elected secretary, a position which he held until his death, July 12, 1903, at his summer home at Touiset, Rhode Island.

Mr. Andrew was a stanch Republican, and when Central Falls became a city in 1895 he was elected auditor, filling this position until July, 1900. He also represented his native city in the General Assembly of the State. Mr. Andrew was prominent in the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in Barney Merry Lodge, No. 29; Pawtucket Royal Arch Chapter, No. 4, of which he was captain of the Host; Pawtucket Council, No. 2, R. & S. M., in which he was deputy master; Holy Sepulchre Commandery, No. 8, Knights Templar; Palestine Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Providence; and the Providence Consistory, thirty-second degree of Masonry. Mr. Andrew was also a member of various social and pleasure organizations.

On Oct. 22, 1890, Mr. James Everett Andrew was married to Mary J. Booth, daughter of John Booth, of Central Falls, R. I., and two children were born to this union, namely: John Percival, born Nov. 9, 1891, and Madeline Frances, born Sept. 30, 1895, who with their widowed mother, make their home in Central Falls. Mr. Andrew was one of the leading young business men of the city. He was popular throughout Central Falls, and his death was a sad blow not only to his immediate family, but to a large circle of warm friends.

JOHN BOOTH, one of the prominent and influential citizens of Central Falls, and treasurer and general manager of the Pawtucket Spinning Ring Company, which business he founded, was born March 2, 1845, in Lancashire, England.

William Booth was born in England, and in his native country learned the trade of mule-spinner, an occupation which he followed after coming to America and settling in Millbury, Mass., in 1848. After a short period he went to Worcester, Mass., and from there to Hamlet, near Woonsocket, R. I. Mr. Booth's next change was to the Grosvenor Dale Mills, at Grosvenor Dale, Conn. After spending several years at his trade in the latter place he went to Fall River, Mass., and then removed to Central Falls, where the later years of his life were spent. In 1857 he retired from active business, and his death occurred in Central Falls in the fall of 1865. Mr. Booth was of an inventive turn, and made many improvements on mule-spinning machines, both in his own and in this country. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, but possessed a kindly, genial manner which won for him many friends.

William Booth was twice married, and by his first wife had children as follows: William; James; Joseph, of Austin, Texas; Lavina, of Malden, Mass., and Sarah. His second marriage was to Mrs. Mary Broome, a widow, who passed away in Central Falls in 1892, aged eighty-one years. The only child of this union was John.

John Booth was brought to America by his parents when he was but three years old, and he received his education in the schools of Grosvenor Dale. When but eight years of age he commenced work in the Hamlet Mill, and he later worked in the Grosvenor Dale Mill, going thence to the Pocasset Mills, at Fall River, Mass., where he remained a short time. During the time he was engaged as an employe in the various mills Mr. Booth acquired a thorough knowledge of the machinist's trade, and on coming to Central Falls, R. I., took a contract as machinist on top rolls, spinning rings, hydrants and fire department supplies with the Fales & Jenks Machine Company, in which capacity he remained for many years, employing a force of twenty mechanics. Mr. Booth resigned this position in 1888, in which year he founded the Pawtucket Spinning Ring Company, which is now one of the thriving industries of the city. In 1902 the business was incorporated with a capital stock of $30,000, and with the following officers: A. P. Martin, president; John Booth, treasurer and general manager; John A. McAllen, secretary. Largely through Mr. Booth's business-like management this firm has prospered greatly, and is now counted among the substantial, solid institutions of the section. The business gives employment to about twenty skilled mechanics, and has a large and rapidly increasing trade.

Mr. Booth is a popular member of the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in Jenks Lodge, No. 24, A. F. & A. M., of Central Falls; Pawtucket Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M.; Pawtucket Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; Holy Sepulchre Commandery, No. 8, K. T., of Pawtucket; and Palestine Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Providence. He is also a member of Washington Lodge, No. 4, K. P., of Central Falls. During the days of the volunteer fire department Mr. Booth was for a number of years an active member of the Pacific Engine Company, and now holds membership in the Veterans' Association of Central Falls. He is a staunch, earnest Republican in political matters, and although he has never sought office has served for a period of six years as member of the board of public works of Central Falls, during which time he was for two years president of the board.

Mr. Booth has been thrice married. His first marriage was to Frances Avery, daughter of Giles Avery, and three children blessed this union: Edith, who died young; a son who died in infancy; and Mary J., widow of James Everett Andrew, of Central Falls. Mr. Andrew was secretary of the Pawtucket Steam and Gas Pipe Company, and died July 12, 1903, at his summer home in Touisset, R. I., aged thirty-five years, leaving two children, who reside with their mother at Central Falls: John Percival, born Nov. 9, 1891, and Madeline Frances, born Sept. 30, 1895.

Mr. Booth's second marriage was to Etta Winterbottom, daughter of James Winterbottom. No children were born to this union. Mr. Booth's third marriage was to Mary A. Reynolds, daughter of the late Benjamin A. and Ann Eliza (Griffin) Reynolds, of Central Falls.

Mr. Booth is very fond of fishing and hunting and is very proficient in the use of the rod and gun. He is a member of Camp Comfort Club, of Moosehead Lake, Maine, and for the past fifteen years has made semi-annual trips to that State, the spring trip being in quest of the wily trout and salmon, and the fall sojourn to search for the game of the forest. Mr. Booth has many highly-prized trophies of these expeditions and has shot several moose, in the killing of which he has had some exciting experiences. He is popular with a large circle of warm friends, and he is held in esteem by the community in which he has lived for nearly fifty years.

SAYER. The Sayer family has been a continuous one in Newport county since early in the eighteenth century. Sayer, Sayers or Sayre has been a New England name since the very early Colonial period. It was Robert Sayers who was master of the ship "Mary and John," of London, which came over in 1634.

The vital statistics of the Newport county family of Sayer begin in the town of Tiverton in 1707, and in Newport in 1740. These records in part follow, and from that period is traced the genealogy of several of Newport's leading families, men and women prominent in its social life and citizenship.

(I) Joshua Sayer, son of Joshua Sayer, of Deal, England, came to America in 1727, settling in Newport. On Sept. 25, 1740, he married Anstress (or Anstiss) Almy, and their children of Newport record were: Abigail, born July 8, 1741; Benjamin, Feb. 10, 1745; Anstress, Sept. 23, 1747; Ann, Dec. 7, 1749; Elizabeth, April 18, 1753; Lewis, Aug. 6, 1755; and Mary, baptized Nov. 19, 1758. All of these were baptized in the Second Congregational Church of Newport. The mother of these, then the widow of Deacon Joshua, died Oct. 4, 1790.

(II) Benjamin Sayer, son of Joshua, was born Feb. 10, 1745. He married, Oct. 17, 1762, Sarah James, of Newport, and their children of Newport public record were: Peter, born Feb. 27, 1764; Joshua, July 3, 1765; Anstress, baptized Jan. 15, 1769; Benjamin, baptized March 17, 1771; James S., baptized Oct. 19, 1773; Sarah, baptized July 7, 1776; and Betsey and Nancy Jane (twins), baptized Oct. 18, 1781.

From the middle of the eighteenth century on through and after the Revolution, members of the Sayer family are frequently of record in Newport in official capacity. Maj. Benjamin A. Sayer, in 1746, held such rank in the Rhode Island Horse Guards, and was lieutenant-colonel of that organization in 1747. Capt. Sayer was an officer in Col. Elliott's regiment in 1776, in the Revolution. Joshua Sayer was a justice of the peace in 1748, and he figured prominently in the military organizations of Newport county (was captain of a Newport company in July, 1746, at the time of the expedition against Canada), and occasionally Joshua, Jr., from 1767, and constantly in commission through the Revolution. Joseph Sayer was a lieutenant, and Lewis midshipman in 1778, on the "Black Snake." Benjamin Sayer was commissioned a justice of the peace from Newport county in 1795-96-97.

(III) Joshua Sayer, son of Benjamin, was born July 3, 1765, and was a seafaring man, and for many years was in command of a vessel of Havre, France. He was later master of a frigate, which sailed from Newport. This vessel was lost with all on board. He married Elizabeth Davis, daughter of William Davis, who was high sheriff of Newport county during the Revolutionary war.

(IV) Joshua Sayer, son of Joshua and grandfather of William D., married Anna Watmough Dean, daughter of Silas Dean, who was for many years one of the prominent merchants of Newport. Joshua Sayer was engaged in the baking business in Newport until 1815, and had an extensive patronage. He baked bread for the privateers, so famous in those days. Later he became a merchant, dealing in paints, oils, flour, etc. He was a fine specimen of manhood, and a noble character. His fine old homestead was what is now known as the "General Prescott house," located at the corner of Pelham and Spring streets. He was a handsome man, and of such distinguished appearance that he was known as the "Duke of Pelham."

(V) Joshua Sayer, son of Joshua, was born Dec. 24, 1827, in Newport, just 100 years after his ancestors settled in that city. In early life he was engaged in the manufacture of sperm oil, his father having been engaged for many years in the manufacture of sperm oil and candles. He was also engaged for many years on Sayer's wharf, in a general ship stores and supplies business, and was interested in a number of cruising vessels, becoming well-known among the shipping interests of the country. Prior to the Civil war he had a large trade in the West Indies, and during the war he had contracts with the Government for carrying army stores and supplies. His life was spent in mercantile pursuits, although he was also interested in various other enterprises. He was treasurer of the Newport Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of brass goods, etc., for several years during its existence. In later years he was sent South and purchased hardwood lumber for Northern concerns. After a very active business life, covering a period of many years, during which time he met with marked success and acquired a goodly competence, he retired some fifteen years prior to his death, which occurred April 29, 1905. He passed the years of his retirement quietly at his home, devoting his time largely to the care of his garden and flowers, of which he was very fond, and in which he took a commendable pride. He had been for many years a member of the Trinity Episcopal Church, but belonged to no social organizations. In early days Mr. Sayer was an old-line Whig and later became a Republican, but never cared for political office. General expressions of regret were heard about the city when the sad news of his death became generally known, for in the death of Mr. Sayer, Newport lost another of its landmark citizens, and one beloved by all who knew him.

Mr. Sayer was married Feb. 7, 1860, to Sarah Elizabeth Finch, the eldest daughter of the late Benjamin and Mary Hall (Tilley) Finch, of Newport. To this happy union were born three children: Archibald Baldwin, born June 29, 1862; William Davis, Oct. 4, 1863; and Anna, who died Aug. 21, 1864.

(VI) ARCHIBALD BALDWIN SAYER, son of the late Joshua and Sarah Elizabeth (Finch) Sayer, was born June 29, 1862, in Newport. In boyhood he attended the public schools of Newport, and was graduated from the Rogers high school in 1880. Soon thereafter he became a clerk in the American Exchange National Bank in New York City. Returning to his native city in 1883, he became associated a few years in business with his brother, William D. Sayer, under the firm name of Sayer Bros., dealers in fancy groceries, etc.—this connection lasting until his death.

Mr. Sayer was ever greatly interested in the affairs of Newport and served his fellow townsmen in various ways. He was a member of the common council and the school committee. He was identified with Trinity Episcopal Church, and served it officially, several years prior to his death being its treasurer. He was prominent in fraternal organizations, being a member of Rhode Island Lodge, No. 12, I. O. O. F., Newport, and a charter member of Lodge No. 49 of that Order; member of Aquidneck Encampment, and of the grand lodges of both branches of the Order, occupying official positions in them all. He was a member of Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum. He was also a member of the Newport Yacht Club and of Gen. G. K. Warren Post Association. He was a member at one time of the Newport Artillery Company and of the Business Men's Association. He was a member of the Rhode Island Chapter of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution, being eligible through several ancestors.

On Oct. 23, 1888, Mr. Sayer married Sarah Anna Norman, daughter of the late William J. Norman, of Newport, and to them came one son, William Norman, who was born Jan. 20, 1894, in Newport.

The death of Mr. Sayer occurred Oct. 3, 1899. His funeral was held at Trinity Church and was attended by a large concourse of people. Many of the orders and societies of which he had been a member were present in bodies, Excelsior Lodge of Odd Fellows participating in the services. The Grand Master of Odd Fellows of Rhode Island, accompanied by a delegation of officers of the Grand Lodge, was present. The public schools of the city closed, and both teachers and pupils in large numbers were in attendance at the funeral. At a meeting of the school committee, held in October, 1899, by unanimous vote the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, in view of the loss we have sustained by the decease of our friend and associate, Archibald B. Sayer, and the great loss sustained by this community, and the still heavier loss sustained by those who were nearest and dearest to him, therefore be it RESOLVED, that it is but a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say that for five years and a half he has been one of the most active and efficient members of the school board, one of the most regular attendants at its meetings, an able chairman of its most important standing committees, and at the time of his death in charge of a special commission to inquire into the necessary changes in the course of higher instruction; and that in his removal we mourn for one who was in every way worthy of our confidence and esteem.

RESOLVED, that we sincerely condole with his family, in the dispensation of Divine Providence, and commend them for consolation to Him who orders all things for the best, and whose chastisements are meant in mercy.

RESOLVED, that this heartfelt testimonial of our sympathy and sorrow be entered upon our records, and that a copy be forwarded to the family by the secretary of this board.

(VI) WILLIAM DAVIS SAYER, son of the late Joshua and Sarah Elizabeth (Finch) Sayer, was born Oct. 4, 1863, in Newport. His early training was obtained in private schools taught by Mrs. Martha Ellis, Miss Mary Ann Wilbour and Mrs. I. W. S. Marsh. He then entered the second grade in the Rogers high school of Newport, but after spending two years at study in that institution of learning was compelled to give up his studies in 1881, on account of poor health. He then entered his father's employ as clerk and bookkeeper, remaining with him until 1885, when on account of continued ill health he went to Denver, Colo., where he intended locating permanently. However, after spending about two months in Denver he returned to Newport, and again entered his father's employ. After some time he became bookkeeper for George M. Dockray, dry goods merchant, in which capacity he was engaged for about six months. On June 6, 1887, in partnership with the late Archibald B. Sayer, under the firm name of Sayer Bros., Mr. Sayer engaged in the fancy grocery and wine business, locating at No. 283 Thames street. From the beginning this enterprising and progressive business house met with marked success. Upon the death of his brother, Mr. Sayer purchased his interests in the business, which has since successfully continued, under the original firm style of Sayer Bros.

Mr. Sayer is a member of various social and fraternal organizations, holding membership in St. Paul's Lodge, No. 14, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master; in Newport Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M.; and in Washington Commandery, No. 4, K. T. He is a member of Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum, and is past regent of the same. During its existence he was a member of the Business Men's Association. He is also a member of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution, in which he is a member of the Board of Managers, being eligible to membership through both paternal and maternal lines. Mrs. Sayer is a member of William Ellery Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, being eligible as a descendant of William Shrieve.

On Sept. 4, 1883, Mr. Sayer became a private in the Newport Artillery Company, in which capacity he served four years. In 1888 he was appointed corporal and in 1891 promoted to sergeant. In 1893 he was promoted to first lieutenant and inspector of rifle practice, and during his administration of four years his team was victorious in the rifle shooting tournaments. He was elected clerk and quartermaster of the company in 1897, in which capacity he served for two and a half years. On Oct. 3, 1899, he was promoted to major of the company, and after a year's service in 1900, he was obliged to resign his commission on account of business interests. He still retains membership, however, as a "fine" member.

In politics Maj. Sayer is a Republican, but owing to business interests he has never sought public office. He is a consistent and devoted member of Trinity Episcopal Church, and has served as a member of the board of vestrymen since the death of his brother in 1899, whom he succeeded. Mr.

Sayer is also on the committee on rental of pews, and takes a very active part in all works pertaining to the church.

On Oct. 29, 1890, Major Sayer was united in marriage to Sarah Annie Dodge, daughter of Edmund and Eliza Maxson (Alger) Dodge, of Newport, and to this happy marriage the following children have been born: Reginald Dean, born Aug. 2, 1891 (who died at the age of six months); Dorothy Maxson, Jan. 24, 1893; Anna Watmough, July 14, 1897; Powel Finch, May 21, 1899 (who died aged nine months); William Davis, Jr., April 19, 1903; and Elizabeth Moore, Nov. 23, 1904.

ETHAN T. SHELDON, one of the oldest and best known milk dealers of Providence and vicinity, is the son of Angell Sheldon, who for many years was recognized as one of the most worthy men of the town of Johnston, and grandson of Angell Sheldon, Sr., a native of the town of Scituate or Foster.

Angell Sheldon, Sr., was a descendant in the fifth generation from John Sheldon, the ancestor of the Rhode Island family of the name, from whom his lineage is through Nicholas, Jeremiah, Jeremiah (2), which generations follow in the order named.

(I) John Sheldon, a tanner by occupation, is of record at Providence as early as 1675, in February, of which year, he gave testimony in a controversy, giving his age as about forty-five years. He was deputy in 1702. In 1660 he married Joan Vincint (or Vincent). Their children were: Timothy, born March 29, 1661; John; Mary; Nicholas; and Nehemiah.

(II) Nicholas Sheldon, son of John, married Abigail, daughter of Pardon and Lydia (Tabor) Tillinghast, and lived in Providence. She was born in March, 1674. Mr. Sheldon died Nov. 23, 1747. Their children were: Mary, Nicholas, Joseph, Abigail, Lydia, Hannah, Pardon and Jeremiah.

(III) Jeremiah Sheldon, son of Nicholas, lived in Johnston, R. I. By the will of his father he was made executor of the latter's estate, and by his own will, probated Dec. 20, 1784, he bequeathed to his wife Hannah, to several daughters of his son Pardon (deceased), to daughters Mercy Mathewson, Wait Luther and Amey Smith, and to his sons John and Jeremiah, the latter of whom he made executor of the estate.

(IV) Jeremiah Sheldon (2), son of Jeremiah, inherited by the will of his father the latter's homestead in Johnston, R. I. He married Avis, daughter of Abraham and Anna (Smith) Angell, he a descendant of Thomas Angell, who came from England to this country in the ship "Lion" with Roger Williams, in 1631, from whom his descent is through John and Ruth (Field), Daniel and Hannah (Winsor) and Joshua and Elizabeth (Taylor) Angell. Mr. Abraham Angell was a farmer of the town of Scituate, R. I., and, says family tradition, was an officer in the Revolution. Jeremiah Sheldon (2) was a resident of Johnston, R. I. By his will which was probated May 28, 1812, he refers to his sons Angell and Charles, to his daughter Sarah, to his sons Jeremiah, Nicholas, William, Tillinghast, Israel and Job.

(V) Angell Sheldon, son of Jeremiah (2), as stated, was born in the town of Scituate, or Foster, Rhode Island.

(VI) Angell Sheldon (2), son of Angell, was born in Johnston; R. I., and was there reared. In his early manhood he was extensively engaged in the business of wood dealer, and many acres of Johnston timber lands were cleared by him. He found a market for the product in the city of Providence and his business was a thriving one. Later in life he devoted himself to the cultivation of his farm in Johnston. He married Mary E., daughter of Hiram Hopkins; she was born May 18, 1827, in Foster, R. I., or just over the line in the State of Connecticut, and she died Oct. 16, 1882, in Johnston, and is buried in Pocasset cemetery. Hiram Hopkins was born Feb. 14, 1805, and died March 15, 1880. In an early day he was in the employ of Perry & Barnard at their wharf, which was located where the Butler Exchange building now stands in the city of Providence. He was an earnest, hardworking man, and bore a most excellent reputation for honesty, industry and integrity. Angell Sheldon was of tall, commanding presence, and of quiet, even temperament, and he took but little part in public affairs. Respected and esteemed by a wide acquaintance his death in August, 1902, pered solely through his own effort he has given was sincerely mourned. He, too, was laid to rest in Pocasset cemetery.

(VII) Ethan T. Sheldon, only son of Angell and Mary E. (Hopkins) Sheldon, was born in the town of Johnston, R. I., Oct. 13, 1847. He had the advantages of the Johnston schools, and later for three years was a student in Lapham Institute, North Scituate. During this period he assisted his father in the work of the home farm, and later in his young manhood was employed for some six years in the establishment of the Providence Tool Company, where guns and other arms for the governments of Russia and Turkey were being made.

On Sept. 1, 1871, Mr. Sheldon embarked in the milk business. His beginning was most modest, and he performed about all of the labor connected with it himself. By diligence and perseverance and strict attention to business even to the most minute detail, and by a policy of absolute honesty and fair dealing he succeeded and prospered, and still continues in that line, being now one of the oldest milk dealers in Providence in point of continuous service. He has customers with whom he has had dealings for over thirty-six years, a fact in which he takes a justifiable pride. While he has succeeded and prospered solely through his own efforts he has given not a little of his time and attention to the advancement of public good and is deservedly popular. He is a Republican in his political views, and for some five years was a member of the Johnston town council. Mr. Sheldon is a member of Nestell Lodge, No. 37, A. F. & A. M.; Providence Chapter; Providence Council; and St. John's Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templar. He is a member of all the Scottish Rite bodies, having attained the 32nd degree, and he also belongs to Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine. He is a member of Manufacturers Lodge, No. 15, I. O. O. F., and Moshassuck Encampment. During the existence of Woonasquatucket Encampment Mr. Sheldon passed through all the chairs in that body. He is a member of the Sunset Club and the Olneyville Business Men's Association. For a number of years past he has served as president of the Providence Milk Car Association, composed of milk dealers.

On Jan. 29, 1871, Mr. Sheldon was married to Miss Esther Walch, daughter of William Walch, a native of England. To this marriage have been born children as follows: Ellen Bertha, born Nov. 2, 1872, died Feb. 3, 1878; Angell, born Aug. 21, 1875, died Feb. 10, 1878; Newell Bentley, born May 23, 1879, married Herbertina Macomber, and has two children, Angell and Newell Bentley, Jr. (Mr. Sheldon was educated in the Providence schools and Bryant & Stratton Commercial College, and is now in the employ of the Herreshoff Company, the famous boat builders of Bristol, R. I.); Rowena Thornton, born Nov. 9, 1881; Mary Beulah, born Jan. 14, 1884, was educated at Brown University, graduating in 1907, and is now a private tutor; Dora S., born Nov. 5, 1885, was educated in the Providence high school and the Bryant & Stratton Commercial College. Mrs. Sheldon and the members of her family are all communicants of the Episcopal Church. Accompanied by her daughter, Dora, she made in 1905 a visit to the former home of her parents in England, also visiting other places on the British Isles.

SAMUEL SILLS. A history of Rhode Island and its representative men would be incomplete without mention of the late Samuel Sills, who, for a number of years, was an esteemed citizen of Providence, though his home and employment lay just beyond the confines of the city, in the town of Johnston.

Mr. Sills was one of two sons, both now deceased, of Stephen and Sarah Ann Sills, of Sutton-in-Ashfield, England, where Samuel Sills was born Sept. 17, 1862. His father, Stephen Sills, was well known in the textile industry in England and especially expert in the line of hosiery, and it was with him that his son Samuel gained his first knowledge of his profession. He attended the common schools of his native place, meanwhile being employed in the mills. When he was yet a young man his skill, learning and ability had advanced him to a position of authority and responsibility in a mill of importance at Sutton-in-Ashfield. At about the age of twenty-five years, in 1888, he was engaged by the interests represented by Mr. R. W. Cooper to come to America to assume charge of the then newly established mills of the British Hosiery Company, at Thornton, R. I. Under the superintendency of Mr. Sills this concern has become one of the most successful of the many important industries of Rhode Island, and largely so through his intelligent and capable management. Not only was he most proficient in mechanical lines, but his control, and the manner in which he exercised his authority, over the many employees under him was extraordinary. There was none of the despot in the make-up of Mr. Sills. To every man worthy of it he extended the hand of friendship. Those under his authority came to him with personal and domestic cares and troubles, and never in vain. He made their troubles and vicissitudes his own, and, by his wise counsel, advice and brotherly interest, he endeared himself to all. His devotion to others, combined with the responsibilities of a business character which rested upon his shoulders, may have had much to do with his early and unexpected demise. To the interests which he represented Mr. Sills at all times gave the best that was his to give, and though gentle and lenient he discharged his duties with a sturdiness, ability and firmness always equal to the occasion, and he displayed a rare combination of inflexibility, courtesy, self-control and endurance. His mechanical skill and learning was excelled by but few, and many improvements and innovations of much value in the manufacture of the product of the industry with which he was connected were the result of his ingenuity.

Sills

Mr. Sills's interests were not entirely confined to his work and its environment. He was deeply interested in the welfare and advancement of the affairs of the community, and, though in no respect a politician, he had been honored with public office of trust and responsibility, to all of which he gave the same attentive fidelity which characterized his private life. Such was the esteem, respect and confidence reposed in him that, had he aspired to greater political honors, any office in the gift of his townsmen might have been his.

Mr. Sills's death, which occurred suddenly, Dec. 13, 1906, came as a shock to his wide acquaintance. Though it is likely that he had been in ill health for some time his uncomplaining nature and characteristic cheerful disposition rendered his actual condition unknown even to his family, to whom he was devoted, or to his more intimate friends. The high regard and esteem in which Mr. Sills was held is best expressed in the language of an old friend who said: "Samuel Sills was a man of rare character and personal qualifications. Not only did he stand with those first in the ranks of his profession, in the land of his adoption, but he possessed those qualities of sterling manhood which made him an honor and a credit to his day and generation. He was beloved and deeply respected by his fellow-men, high and low, as is attested by the fact that a monument to mark the place of his interment has been arranged for by his friends and former employees, who feel that such action is the last and least that they can do in commemoration of the memory of the man whom they will ever call friend."

We quote the following from the Providence Tribune of Dec. 15, 1906:

"Out in Thornton on every side there is gloom because of the death of Samuel Sills, who was superintendent of the British Hosiery Company for many years. The plant is shut down and work will not be resumed until after the funeral. Never, for any other man, has there been such grief among Thornton residents. Mr. Sills's fine character had won the friendship of everybody. In Calef's Hall in the village, the largest hall in Thornton, the workers at the Hosiery Mill gathered yesterday afternoon. It was a meeting called by the workmen to give opportunity for the expressions of grief caused by the death. The session was presided over by former Councilman Frank Bolton, who has been associated with Mr. Sills for many years. He expressed the grief he felt at the taking away of his friend and he was followed by others who spoke in the same strain.

"Resolutions of condolence to Mrs. Sills and Miss Sills were passed and the men discussed how best they could show their appreciation for the worth of the man by honoring him. All the workers are to take part in the funeral, which will be held at 1 o'clock to-morrow. The body will be taken to the Church of the Holy Nativity in the village, where service will be held, and then to Pocasset cemetery for interment.

"At the meeting some of the men proposed carrying the casket from the house to the church, and this may yet be done. It is a distance of about one mile, and for six men it would be a difficult task to carry the solid oak casket in which the body will be incased. However, any arrangement which will not interfere with plans of the family will be suitable to the men, who are prepared to manifest their deep grief at his sudden taking off.

"The closing of the plant at which he was the managing head by the owners has greatly pleased the villagers, and the every act of the workmen during their lull in occupation has been such to cast not the least discredit. The new flags in the town are at half-mast and there are other evidences of public mourning. The workmen propose to leave a lasting memorial in the line of a stone to mark their employer's last resting-place.

"The following resolutions were presented by Frank Aucott, and were immediately adopted:

"WHEREAS, it has pleased our Heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom to remove from our midst our well-beloved Superintendent, Samuel Sills; be it

"Resolved, That we, the employes of the British Hosiery Co., in meeting assembled, desire to place on record our appreciation of his great kindness, his ceaseless service and faithful performance of every duty. His ever-ready council and advice has been helpful to us all. A kind, just and generous Superintendent has been removed from our midst. He was a leader in every sense of the word, a faithful friend to all, and we can truly say a great man has gone from amongst us, one for whose loss we cannot possibly express in words our grief.

"We do also desire to express our sincerest sympathy to the family in the loss they have sustained by the calling away of such a good, kind, faithful husband and father."

In 1888 Mr. Sills married Miss Adelaide Burrows, daughter of Jeremiah and Jane Burrows, of Derbyshire, England. Two daughters, Beatrice J. (who died at the age of six years) and Eva, were born to them. Mr. Sills was a member of Nestell Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and the West Side Club of Providence.

WELLES (Woonsocket family). The Wells or Welles family of England is of very ancient origin, clearly traceable back, it is claimed, to the time of the Norman Conquest. About 1635 several of the name, which was then sometimes spelled Wells, but oftener Welles, came from England to Massachusetts, and there was Gov. Thomas Welles of Hartford and Wethersfield, who appears first of record as a member of the court of magistrates in 1637. He was an original proprietor of Hartford, 1639, his house-lot being on the east side of what is now Governor street. He removed to Wethersfield, where he was also an original proprietor. On March 28, 1637, he became a member of the court of magistrates, and continued until he was chosen deputy governor, May 18, 1654. He was again chosen deputy governor in 1656, 1657 and 1659. He was the first treasurer in 1639, and was secretary of the Colony from 1640 to 1649. In the last named year he was commissioner of the United Colonies, and governor from 1655 to 1658. Mr. Welles was twice married, marrying (first) in England Elizabeth Hunt, and (second) in about 1645 or 1646 Elizabeth Deming, widow of Nathaniel Foote, of Wethersfield. He died in Wethersfield Jan. 14, 1659-60.

For some forty years past a branch of the Connecticut Welles family has resided at Woonsocket, this State, the head of which is the present George M. Welles, Esq., of that city, for years one of its substantial men and useful citizens, representing his ward in both branches of the city government, and as well filling other positions of trust, honor and responsibility. This George M. Welles is a direct descendant of Gov. Thomas Welles, from whom his lineage is through John, Capt. Robert, John (2), James, Allyn and Aaron Dutton Welles. These generations in detail and in regular order follow.

(II) John Welles, son of Thomas, born in 1621, in Northamptonshire, England, came to America with his father in 1636. He went with his father from Saybrook, where the latter had landed in the autumn of 1636, to the settlement at Hartford, and in 1645 removed to Stratford, Fairfield Co., Conn., where he lived the remainder of his lifetime, and died in 1659, aged thirty-eight years. Mr. Welles was made a freeman at Hartford in 1645; was representative in 1656 and 1657; was elected magistrate of Stratford in 1658, at the same time his father was governor of Connecticut. He held other important positions for years. In 1647 he married Elizabeth Bourne, and their children, born in Stratford, Conn., were: John, born in 1648; Thomas and Robert (twins), in 1651; Temperance, in 1654; Samuel, in 1656; Sarah, in 1659, and Mary, in 1661.

(III) Capt. Robert Welles, son of John, born in 1651, in Stratford, Conn., married Elizabeth, daughter of William Goodrich. Mr. Welles was adopted by his grandfather—Gov. Thomas Welles, of Hartford, Conn.—and removed to Wethersfield, where he died June 22, 1714. His children were: Thomas, John, Joseph, Prudence, Robert and Gideon.

(IV) John Welles (2), son of Capt. Robert, was born in 1678, in Wethersfield, Connecticut.

(V) James Welles, son of John (2), born Sept. 13, 1728, in Wethersfield, Conn., married Sept. 1, 1753, Prudence Wright. Their children were: Timothy, born March 20, 1754, who died July 15, 1759; Ebenezer, born April 10, 1756; Mary, born Oct. 1, 1758; Hannah, born May 3, 1761; Martha, born Aug. 8, 1763, who died Nov. 20, 1776; James, born March 23, 1766; Lucy, born Sept. 16, 1769 (date of death unknown); Allyn, born April 12, 1771; Prudence, born Jan. 1, 1774, who died the same day; and Moses, born Dec. 18, 1775.

(VI) Allyn Welles, son of James, was born in the town of Wethersfield, Hartford Co., Conn., and was a carpenter and joiner by occupation. He died suddenly, of heart failure, Jan. 12, 1840, in his sixty-ninth year. On Jan. 15, 1801, he was married, in Watertown, Conn., to Anna Dutton, who was born Sept. 13, 1775, and they settled in Plymouth, Conn. Mrs. Welles died Sept. 15, 1847, aged seventy-two years. They had children as follows:

(1) One daughter died in infancy. (2) Joseph Allyn, born Nov. 16, 1805, married (first) Sarah Caroline Boardman, who died in 1838, the mother of one child, Catharine Louise, born Aug. 26, 1837. He subsequently married (second) Anna Keziah Merriam, who died Dec. 30, 1891, aged eighty-four years. (3) Aaron Dutton is mentioned farther on. (4) James Welles married Harriet Ruth Terry, March 23, 1834, and they had four children: Sarah Ann, born May 2, 1835, who married Jan. 21, 1863, Charles W. Harrison, who died Nov. 9, 1870 (they had one child, Charles William Edward, born May 7, 1870, who married Florence Brainard Fayles May 20, 1901, and has three children, Florence, born Aug. 16, 1902, Eleanor, born Feb. 16, 1905, and Catherine, born June 19, 1907); William Allyn, born Feb. 1, 1837, who died unmarried; Edward Terry, born June 9, 1844, who married May 16, 1872, Emma Powell, who died Dec. 4, 1879, and he died Jan. 20, 1882 (they had two children: Howard Edward, born March 26, 1875, who married June 5, 1899, in Tenaflly, N. J., Kate McKeown, and had three children, Edward, born March 29, 1900, Kate, born Aug. 4, 1902, and Thomas; and Paul, born Nov. 25, 1879, who died Dec. 12, 1879); and James Dutton, born Jan. 10, 1848, who died in infancy. (5) Thomas Wright, who died March 12, 1876, married Susan Smith Moore, and they settled in Brasher Falls, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. The children were: Joseph, who died unmarried; Anna Dutton, who married Dr. Jackson and had one child, Joseph; and Wallace Herbert, who married Carrie Boynton, and had one child, Anna (she married Edward J. Mulholland and they have had one child, Henry Welles, born Jan. 20, 1905; they reside in Piercefield, New York).

(VII) Aaron Dutton Welles, born in Plymouth, Litchfield Co., Conn., was educated there, and learned the trade of carpenter, which he followed for several years. He was also engaged in farming on his father's place, where he spent his life, and where he died in April, 1871, at the age of sixty-three years. His remains rest in the New cemetery at Plymouth. Mr. Welles was originally a Whig in political sentiment, later becoming a Republican, and he was an anti-slavery man and a strong advocate of temperance, taking a deep interest in every movement which he considered favorable to the advancement or enlightenment of the human race. He was quite active in local public matters, filling the offices of selectman of Plymouth, member of the board of relief and justice of the peace.

Mr. Welles married Martha Bull, of Plymouth, daughter of Jabez and Betsey (Benedict) Bull, and sister of Isaac Bull. She died June 20, 1887, aged seventy-six years, and was buried beside her husband in the New cemetery. Mrs. Welles was a member of the Congregational Church. She was the mother of three children: (1) Allyn, born in Plymouth in 1837, went to Wisconsin, when twenty-one, and there he spent the remainder of his life; he married Mary Mehitable Bushnell, and had two children: George A., who married Fannie Gould, and had two adopted children, Katherine and Gould (they live in Des Moines, Iowa); Asa A., a resident of Pasadena, Cal., who married Carrie Treat, and has had three children, Eva (deceased), Bernice and Carlos. Allyn Welles married (second) Hettie Bushnell, a sister of his first wife, and she still resides in Wisconsin. (2) Elizabeth, born July 26, 1839, died April 17, 1903. (3) George Merriam is mentioned below.

(VIII) GEORGE MERRIAM WELLES was born Oct. 29, 1845, in the town of Plymouth, Conn., and acquired his early education in the schools of his native town and those of New Britain, Conn. Subsequently he furthered it and was prepared for business in a commercial college at Philadelphia. In 1865 he located in the city of Woonsocket, R. I., entering the employ of his uncle, the late Isaac M. Bull, Esq., in the office of the Hamlet Mills. Here as time passed and he grew in experience and usefulness his value was recognized from time to time, until in 1881 he was made superintendent of the mills, a relation he sustained until 1885. Subsequently he was for a period in the employ of the executor of the large Bull estate, occupied in its settlement. Still later Mr. Welles, besides being interested in a number of enterprises, became associated in the livery business with Mr. Turner as junior member of the firm of Turner & Welles. After giving up this business he became a member of the City Lumber Company, in 1889, and for the past nineteen years has been identified with that concern. He is also interested in real estate, and is one of the stockholders of the Building & Loan Association, which he helped to organize and of which he has been president since 1889. During this long period the association has never lost a cent, and three per cent. interest, compounded semi-annually, has been paid continuously. Mr. Welles is also president of the People's Savings Bank of Woonsocket, is a trustee of the Woonsocket Institution for Savings and is a director of the Woonsocket Gas Company. His reputation in his community and wherever known is that of a substantial man of good business ability and judgment, whose integrity is unquestioned.

Having managed his own business affairs successfully, as well as those of others under his charge, Mr. Welles' fellow citizens have recognized in him one well adapted to look after public interests, and several times they have elected him a member of the town council; for some six years he served efficiently as assessor of taxes; on the formation of the city government of Woonsocket he was chosen alderman from the First ward. His political support is given to the Republican party.

On Oct. 18, 1870, Mr. Welles was married, in Ogdensburg, N. Y., to Eleanor Ives, who was born at Plymouth, daughter of John O. and Martha (Tomlinson) Ives, and they have had one child, Charles Ives. The family is highly respected.

(IX) CHARLES IVES WELLES, born in Woonsocket Aug. 19, 1872, received his education in the public and high schools of his native place and in Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Providence, and the Worcester (Mass.) Academy. For some time after commencing his business career he was engaged in the real estate and insurance business, later becoming a wholesale dealer in meats, with headquarters at Worcester. He is now connected with the City Lumber Company, Woonsocket. He is a director in the People's Savings Bank.

Mr. Welles has been twice married. His first wife, Inez A. Cook, daughter of the late Theodore Cook, died Jan. 31, 1900, leaving one child, Ives Cook Welles, born Jan. 30, 1900. For his second wife he married Harriet Pond, daughter of Charles Pond, and to them have been born three children, namely: Charles Allyn, born Feb. 4, 1904; George Hayward, July 10, 1905; and Eleanor, Jan. 8, 1907.

PHILIP OWEN HAWKINS, who died Feb. 7, 1908, lived retired at Providence, but for many years was a resident of Pascoag, town of Burrillville, where he was one of the foremost and leading citizens. He descended from several of the old and leading families of the State, and was in the eighth generation from

(I) William Hawkins, who is of record as receiving land in Providence Dec. 20, 1638. On July 27, 1640, he was one of thirty-nine signers of an agreement for a form of Government, and he was made a freeman in 1655. His death occurred in 1699. The name of his wife was Margaret, and their children were: John, William, Edward, Mary and Madeline.

(II) William Hawkins (2), son of William, married June 14, 1678, Lydia, widow of George Gardiner, and daughter of Robert Ballou. Lydia Hawkins died in 1722, and William died on July 6th of the following year. He was a resident of Providence and engaged in farming. In 1678 and again in 1703-05-06 he served as deputy. His children were: William, Stephen, John and Sarah.

(III) William Hawkins (3), son of William (2), born in Providence, was a farmer, and he died in his native place, Oct. 8, 1712. He married Dec. 14, 1704, Elizabeth Arnold, who survived him, and married Israel Smith, June 3, 1718. She died July 11, 1758. The children born to William and Elizabeth Hawkins were: Elijah, Uriah, Joseph, Ruth and Deborah.

(IV) Uriah Hawkins, born July 30, 1707, died in 1808. His wife, Elizabeth, bore him seventeen children, as follows: Stephen, George W., Elizabeth, Uriah, Benoni, Rufus, Asabel, Duty, Peter, Sarah, Susannah, Deborah, Wealthy, Horana, Lydia, Dorcas and Oranda.

(V) Stephen Hawkins, son of Uriah, was born in 1751, and resided about one mile northeast of Harmony village, in the town of Glocester. He was the largest land holder in the town, as well as the wealthiest citizen. He enlisted for service during the Revolutionary war in a regiment commanded by Colonel Lippitt, in a Company commanded by Captain Blackmar, his name appearing on the pay-roll of September, 1776, as a private. He was placed on the United States pension roll Nov. 21, 1832. The latter years of his life were spent at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Taylor, on the farm above mentioned, and there he died in 1842. He married Eunice Potter, of Scituate, and their children were: Esther married a Mr. Turner, and removed to the Mohawk Valley in the State of New York; Amos resided at Chepachet; Eleazer resided in Scituate; Ezra; James and John, twins, both resided in Glocester; Mary died unmarried; Eunice married Eddy Walden, and was grandmother of the late Fred S. and Albert E. Farwell, of Providence; Phebe married Joseph Walden, and resided at Chepachet; Hannah married a Mr. Taylor, and settled in Smithfield, but died at Harmony; and Stephen resided in Glocester, and later in Providence, where he died.

(VI) Ezra Hawkins, son of Stephen, born Sept. 22, 1794, resided at Chepachet in the town of Glocester, where he followed the occupation of shoemaker, and he also served as a justice of the peace. He died June 11, 1858, at Chepachet, and was buried in the Acotes Hill cemetery. He married Abigail Walden, born Aug. 18, 1800, of Quaker faith. She survived her husband and died Oct. 21, 1862, at the home of her son in Pascoag. They had one son, Philip Walden.

(VII) Philip Walden Hawkins was born Feb. 28, 1820, near Chepachet, and his early education was received in the public schools and at Smithville Seminary, now Lapham Institute, at North Scituate. During the early part of his life he was employed in Providence, Putnam, and other places, as an accountant. Later he engaged in manufacturing spindles, at Harrisville, and in 1860 formed a partnership with Job Walden and Collins Keith, in the woolen manufacturing business at the White mill at Bridgeton, near Pascoag. There he successfully engaged in business until 1865, when he retired from active life. After leaving the mill he resided in Pascoag until 1869, when he removed to Wakefield where he resided for five years, thence went to Chepachet, residing in the latter place until his death, Jan. 31, 1900.

Mr. Hawkins was a Jacksonian Democrat, but in 1896 voted for McKinley. He represented Glocester for a number of years in the General Assembly. He also served several terms as a member of the board of assessors. Mr. Hawkins was prominent in financial circles, and was a director in the Pascoag National Bank for many years prior to his death. Mr. Hawkins married Emeline B. Owen, born April 5, 1826, daughter of Lawton and Marcy (Brown) Owen, and a relative of Deputy Governor Daniel Owen, of Glocester. She was also a descendant of Roger Williams and of Rev. Chad Brown. She died Sept. 21, 1881, at Chepachet, the mother of children as follows: Philip Owen; Robert B., born June 6, 1851, and residing in Providence, married Latilla A. Mowry, and has three children, Fenner M. (who married Bessie Barton and resides at Pascoag), Emeline B. and Roy O.; and Marion, born June 11, 1857, died July 11, 1869.

(VIII) Philip Owen Hawkins was born Feb. 5, 1850, in Chepachet, and was ten years of age when his parents removed to Laurel Ridge in the town of Burrillville. His education was received 1700, leaving one child, Ives, born 1701, died 1700. For his second wife, he married the daughter of Charles, who had been born three children, George, born 1704; George, born 1704; George, born 1704; and Isaac, born Jan. 8, 1705.

(V) William HAWKINS (20) died Feb. 17, 1700, at Scituate, and for many years he was one of the most and leading men in the town, and was in the town of Scituate.

William HAWKINS (21) was born as recorded in the town of Scituate, 1708. On July 1, 1708, he was one of the signers of an agreement with the Government, and he was one of the signers. His death occurred in 1708. His wife was Margaret, and they had four children, William, Edward, Mary, and Sarah.

William HAWKINS (22), son of William, born 1708, Lydia, widow of George, daughter of Robert Ballou. Lydia was born 1722, and William died on July 1, 1722, following year. He was a resident of Scituate, and engaged in farming. In 1728 and 1729 he served as deputy. His children were William, Stephen, John and Sarah.

William HAWKINS (23), son of William, born in Providence, was a farmer, and he died in his native place, Oct. 8, 1712. He married Dec. 14, 1704, Elizabeth Arnold, who survived him, and married Israel Smith, June 3, 1718. She died July 11, 1758. The children born to William and Elizabeth HAWKINS were: Elijah, Uriah, Joseph, Ruth and David.

(IV) Uriah HAWKINS, born July 30, 1707, died in 1808. His wife, Elizabeth, bore him seventeen children, as follows: Stephen, George W., Elizabeth, Lemuel, Rufus, Asabel, Duty, Peter, Sarah, Susannah, Deborah, Wealthy, Horana, Lydia, David and Coranda.

(V) Stephen HAWKINS, son of Uriah, was born in Scituate, and resided about one mile north-east of Burrillville, in the town of Glocester. He was the largest land holder in the town, as well as the wealthiest citizen. He enlisted for service during the Revolutionary war in a regiment commanded by Colonel Lippitt, in a Company commanded by Captain Blackmar, his name appearing on the pay-roll of September, 1776, as a private. in the district schools at Chepachet and Pascoag, and until the age of fifteen years he spent considerable time in his father's mill, where he picked up no small amount of information pertaining to the business. He pursued his studies at Nichols Academy, Dudley, Mass., an academy at Pittsfield, Mass., and completed at the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale, finishing in the class of 1871. On Nov. 22, 1872, he became a clerk to James S. Cook, cashier of the Pascoag National Bank, and in 1876 was elected assistant treasurer of the Pascoag Savings Bank, and the following year succeeded Mr. Cook as treasurer, holding that position until the bank went out of business in 1888. In October, 1876, he became assistant cashier of the Pascoag National Bank, a director in 1888, and cashier upon the resignation of Mr. Cook, who retired because of advancing age. Mr. Hawkins served as cashier until May, 1901, when the bank was absorbed by the Industrial Trust Company. He then retired from active business, and the following month removed to Providence, purchasing the mansion erected by the late Dexter N. Knight, on Elmwood avenue. Mr. Hawkins was influential and active in business, financial and social circles at Pascoag, and in addition to his banking duties he was for twenty-five years a sub-agent of the late Addison H. White and his successors in the insurance business, and for three and one-half years was an accountant for J. H. Smith. He was an active member of the Providence Board of Trade.

Mr. Hawkins was a staunch Republican in political belief, and in 1884 was elected town treasurer, a position in which he served sixteen years, when he declined a renomination. He served as school committeeman for six years, being chairman of the board in 1884-85-89. The strength of Mr. Hawkins as a candidate was shown when he was nominated for any office, and the opposition party refrained from nominating a candidate. In 1901, shortly before Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins removed from Pascoag, a public reception was given by them to their fellow townsmen, who gathered to show their esteem and affection. A local paper, in a sketch of Mr. Perkins, said in part:

"* * * He is a man of sound judgment and irreproachable character and although he soon severs his connection with the Pascoag, his works and good deeds of twenty-eight years will live after him. * * *"

Mr. Hawkins was married in Pascoag, Feb. 26, 1876, to Ellen Isora Smith, born July 14, 1851, in Burrillville, daughter of Martin and Mary Malvina (Inman) Smith. Mrs. Hawkins is a descendant of a family connected with many of the old ones of the State, in addition to those mentioned there being the Mowry, Phillips, Aldrich, Steere, West and Cooke families. She completed her education at Lapham Institute, and previous to her marriage was a highly successful school teacher. In Pascoag she was very active in religious and social affairs. Mrs. Hawkins is a member of Gaspee Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, at Providence. Seven of her ancestors served in that bitter struggle, namely: Lieutenant Martin Smith, Augustus Aldrich, Sylvanus Cooke, Brigadier General William West, Judge Caleb Aldrich, ——— Walker, and Jonah Steere. Mrs. Hawkins is a member of both the Arion and Embraso Clubs, of the Providence branch of the International Sun Shine Society, and also of the Book and Magazine Circle. Mr. Hawkins was a member of the Edgewood Yacht Club.

HISCOX. The Hiscox family of Rhode Island traces descent from

(I) Elder William Hiscox, pastor of the first Seventh Day Baptist Church in America, who died and was buried in Newport, R. I., where he was a landed proprietor and general treasurer. He was born in 1638, and he died May 24, 1706. His wife was Agnes Poignes.

(II) Thomas Hiscox, born in 1686, died May 20, 1773. On Oct. 13, 1703, he married Bethiah Clarke, who was born April 11, 1678, and who died in 1756, daughter of Joseph and Bethiah (Hubbard) Clarke. They had issue as follows: William, born May 31, 1705, married (first) Susannah Burdick, and (second) Content Babcock; Ephraim, born June 2, 1707, married Abigail Saunders; Edith, born Sept. 6, 1709, married Joseph Crandall; Bethiah, born in 1711, married Elder John Davis; Mary, born July 12, 1713, died young; Thomas, born May 7, 1715, married Elizabeth Davis; Joseph was born April 22, 1717; and Hannah, Jan. 22, 1720. Thomas married (second) Patience Beebe, born Feb. 25, 1692, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth (Rogers) Beebe, of Southold, L. I. No children were born to the second marriage.

Thomas Hiscox came to Westerly about 1708, was made a freeman in 1709, and elected town clerk in 1716, an office he filled from that time until his death. In 1716 he was deacon in the Seventh Day Baptist Church; in 1719 was chosen elder, and in 1726 was ordained to the ministry. He died aged eighty-seven years, and was buried within half a mile of the church of which he had so long been a pastor and a shining example of the true Christian faith. No memorial marks his resting-place.

(III) Joseph Hiscox, born April 22, 1717, married (first), in 1739, Sarah Green, and (second) Dec. 30, 1754, the Widow Bathsheba Mackee, born Oct. 26, 1717, daughter of John and Mary (Beebe) Clarke, and widow of John Mackee. The children of the first marriage were: Joseph, born Jan. 1, 1740; Simeon, April 28, 1742; Thomas, March 16, 1744; and Eunice, Nov. 9, 1747. One son, Clarke, was the issue of the second union.

(IV) Clarke Hiscox, born Oct. 14, 1760, died Feb. 8, 1842. He married, Dec. 2, 1782, Sarah Saunders, born Aug. 9, 1758, died Nov. 18, 1841, daughter of Capt. Edward and Sarah (Hiscox) Saunders. Their children were: Sarah, born in 1783, who died in 1788; Bathsheba, born in 1785; Clarke, born May 28, 1787, who died Dec. 7, 1856; Arnold, born in 1789; Sarah, born in 1792; Polly, born in 1794, who married William Greene; John, born in 1796; and Joseph, born in 1799.

(V) Clarke Hiscox (2), born May 28, 1787, died Dec. 7, 1856. On Jan. 11, 1809, he married Mary White, born Nov. 28, 1791, daughter of Maj. Walter and Sophia (Brown) White; she died March 5, 1834. Their children were: Sally, born Jan. 19, 1810, married, Sept. 29, 1831, William R. Chapman; Sophia, born Aug. 5, 1813, married, Jan. 19, 1837, William Ensign; Mary, born April 17, 1815, married, March 24, 1841, John M. Barber; Martha, born March 19, 1817, married, Oct. 19, 1842, Daniel F. Larkin; Alfred C., born Sept. 25, 1819, married Alice Smith; Julia was born Nov. 5, 1825; Gurdon is mentioned below.

(VI) Gurdon Hiscox was born April 8, 1829, and he died Aug. 1, 1885. On Dec. 6, 1851, he married Lydia A. Fenner, born June 12, 1832, daughter of Philip and Lilly (Potter) Fenner. They had two children: Gurdon B., born May 15, 1857, who married Susan E. Clarke; Jessie, born June 27, 1875, who married La Clede Woodmansee. Gurdon Hiscox was a farmer in Westerly through his entire life. He was a member of the First Seventh Day Baptist Church at Hopkinton.

(VII) GURDON B. HISCOX, born May 15, 1857, was married Nov. 23, 1880, to Susan Emily, daughter of Benjamin F. Clarke, and they have five children, as follows: Walter Clarke, born July 4, 1883, who married, Aug. 31, 1904, Marion I. Thom; Robert M., born June 18, 1884; Julia Louise, born June 15, 1885; Raymond Howard, born Sept. 14, 1894; and Marion, born July 16, 1900.

Mr. Hiscox was reared in Westerly, and there completed the public school course. When the time came for him to make a choice of occupation, he decided to learn the builder's trade and entered upon an apprenticeship in the same with C. Maxson & Co., of Westerly. With this firm he followed stair building, and later followed the same line of work with the well-known firm of Randolph, Bentley & Co. In 1900 Mr. Hiscox became a member of the firm of H. T. Kenyon & Co., builders, of Westerly. This is one of the leading firms in this locality, and has done a great deal of the fine building here. Many of the larger and more ornate cottages at Watch Hill have been constructed by them, notably the Sully cottage, the Fenner cottage, and the Barney cottage, and this firm had the contract for rebuilding the Brown building.

Mr. Hiscox is an excellent business man, but he cares little for entertainment outside of his home and work. He is connected with the Masonic organizations, Franklin Lodge, No. 20, A. F. & A. M.; Palmer Chapter, R. A. M.; Narragansett Commandery, K. T., and Palestine Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He has been assessor in Westerly for several years.

WHITE. The White family, allied by marriage to the Hiscoxes, is of "Mayflower" stock.

(I) William White married, Jan. 27, 1612, Anna Fuller (or Fielder), probably the same called Susanna, and came with his wife and son Resolved and two servants on the "Mayflower." Peregrine White, of Marshfield, son of William, the first white child born in New England, came into life on board the "Mayflower," Nov. 11, 1620, in the harbor of Cape Cod. He was brought up by Edward Winslow, who married his mother Susan, May 12th following, his father having died Feb. 21, 1621. Peregrine White married Sarah, daughter of William Basset; he died July 20, 1704, and she died Jan. 22, 1711. Their children were: Daniel, who died May 6, 1724, aged seventy years; Jonathan, born June 4, 1658; Sylvanus, who died before his father; Peregrine, baptized Feb. 16, 1724, aged sixty-four; Sarah, born in October, 1663, and Mercy.

(II) Resolved White, born in 1614, at Leyden, Holland, died in 1680, at Salem, Mass. He married, April 8, 1640, Judith Vassell, daughter of William and Anne (King) Vassell. She died April 3, 1670. Their children were: William, born in 1642; John, 1644; Samuel, March 13, 1646; Resolved, 1648; Anna, June 4, 1649; Elizabeth, June 4, 1652 (married, July 17, 1672, Obediah Wheeler); Josiah, 1654; and Susannah, 1656.

(III) Samuel White, son of Resolved, was born March 13, 1646. His wife, Rebecca, died Jan. 25, 1711. They had children: John, born Aug. 24, 1669; Samuel, July 22, 1671; Elizabeth, March 4, 1673; Malitiah, Feb. 14, 1676; Hezekiah, in April, 1682; Penelope, March 12, 1687 (married May 31, 1704, Pierre Crapand); and William, Jan. 6, 1690.

(IV) William White, son of Samuel, born Jan. 6, 1690, married Elizabeth Cadman, daughter of George and Hannah (Hathaway) Cadman. The following record of their children has been preserved: William (married Oct. 2, 1729, Abigail Thurston); George (married Feb. 18, 1730, Deborah Shaw); Roger (married May 4, 1736, Rebecca Grinnell); Chris (born in 1717, who married March 4, 1739, Eliza Thurston); Oliver (married Mary Harmon); Thomas; Susanna; Sarah (married May 23, 1726, John Brown); and Hannah (married Aug. 22, 1732, William Taber).

(V) Oliver White, son of William, married Jan. 21, 1747, Mary Harmon, who died Nov. 28, 1811, the mother of five children, namely: Walter; Oliver, Jr., who married Cynthia; Penelope, who married in 1784, Oliver Davis; Godfrey, born Sept. 4, 1761, who married in 1789, Jane Worden; and Susanna, born Nov. 1, 1766, who married in 1793, William Gardner Greene.

(VI) Walter White, son of Oliver, died in 1832. He was twice married. His first wife, Sophia

Brown, bore him eight children, as follows: Lucy, born Dec. 12, 1775; Abby Soule, Feb. 20, 1778 (married a Dye); Walter Ellery, Sept. 1, 1785; Sophia, May 17, 1787 (married John Sheldon); Lydia, Sept. 25, 1788 (married Clarke Saunders); Mary, Nov. 28, 1791; Matilda, Dec. 10, 1795; Martha, April 15, 1801, married Joseph Hiscox. Walter White married (second) Esther Saunders, daughter of Edward and Sarah (Hiscox) Saunders.

(VII) Mary White, born Nov. 28, 1791, daughter of Walter, died March 5, 1834. She married Jan. 11, 1809, Clarke Hiscox, born May 28, 1787, son of Clarke and Sarah (Saunders) Hiscox. He died Dec. 7, 1856. To this union were born children as follows: Sally Ann, born Jan. 19, 1810, married Sept. 29, 1831, William R. Chapman, and died Nov. 2, 1849; Sophia, born Aug. 5, 1813, married Jan. 19, 1837, William Ensign; Mary, born April 17, 1815, married March 24, 1841, John Barber; Martha, born March 19, 1817, married Oct. 19, 1842, Daniel F. Larkin (born June 10, 1817, died July 31, 1900), and died March 3, 1894; Alfred C., born Sept. 25, 1819, married Alice Smith; Julia, born Nov. 5, 1825, died March 3, 1837; and Gurdon, born April 8, 1829, married in 1851, Lydia A. Fenner, and died Aug. 1, 1885.

SWAIN. An ancient and prominent, though not a numerous, family in Rhode Island is that of the name of Swain, which is directly descended from Richard Swain, who came from London to Boston in the ship "Truelove" Sept. 17, 1635. Technically he was not the first for he had previously sent his family to New England, in the care of friends, while he and one son, John, remained until all had safely arrived and their affairs in England had been adjusted. The wife, Elizabeth, came in the ship "Planter," his sons William and Francis in the ship "Rebecca," and his daughter Elizabeth in the "Mary and Ellen." On the arrival of the father and elder brother the family were re-united, and were at first located at Nantucket, and afterward at Newbury, Rowley and Hampton, Mass. A few years after coming to America his wife Elizabeth died, and the family soon after became scattered. There is record of Richard Swain of date 1643, while a resident of Hampton, Mass., it appearing that he had been annoyed by an officer of the militia, one William Howard, and petition was made by Mr. Swain to the Governor for redress and relief. Also while at Hampton he was made a commissioner and selectman. In 1659 he and his son John were among the nineteen purchasers of the island of Nantucket from Thomas Mayhew, the consideration paid by the Swains being "thirty pounds and two beaver hats, one for myself and one for my wife," as Mayhew in the deed declares. In 1661, then a resident of Nantucket, he was made a commissioner to lay out lands. In 1667 he married (second) Jane, widow of George Bunker; she was the first white person of record as having died in Nantucket. Of his children John is mentioned below; Francis went to Long Island; William settled at Hampton, Mass.; Richard, the only child of the second marriage, moved to New Jersey. Richard Swain, the first settler, died in 1682.

John Swain, son of Richard, was born in England and came with his father to America, and was associated with him in all his movements. He had children: John, the first white child born in Nantucket, from whom have descended many of the name who have been men of more than ordinary stability and citizens of sterling worth and integrity; Joseph; Benjamin; Elizabeth; Mary; Hannah; and Patience. There also lived with him another John Swain, a distant relative, who came from England in youth, and to avoid confusion was called "John England;" later he dropped his real name, and has a large posterity of the name of England. Gilbert Swain, the well known and respected citizen of the Olneyville section in Providence, descends from the old family of Nantucket, where his grandfather Silas was born.

Silas Swain passed his entire life on Nantucket. His wife Lydia bore him the following children: Seth, when a young man, went to California, where he located and left descendants; Charles B. was of Nantucket and New York, where he was prominent in business, and at his death left three sons and one daughter, Julius (who located in the West), Odian (a coal merchant of Boston), Sylvester (a business man of New York), Clementine (who married and resides in New York); Ellen died unmarried in Nantucket after a useful life; and Edward Coffin.

Edward Coffin Swain, son of Silas and Lydia, was born at Nantucket, Feb. 11, 1805. He was but three years of age when his father, a sea faring man, was lost at sea with the vessel of which he was master. The family not being in good financial circumstances, it became necessary that he seek employment when he was a mere lad. Like his father he took to the sea and followed that calling for some years. When a comparatively young man he went to California, where he was engaged on a vessel in the service of the government, and while there met with an accident which rendered him unfit for employment, and seriously interfered with the course of his career as he never regained his former activity. He was a man of generous physical proportions, as well as mental qualifications. He was enterprising and industrious, and but for his unfortunate accident, would doubtless have been a man of much importance. Notwithstanding his incapacity for work he was successful and progressive. He died May 8, 1887, and was buried in the Northend burial ground, Providence. He was twice married. He (first) wedded at Nantucket, Eliza Folger, who bore him one son, Edward, now deceased. He married (second) Ann Coffin, daughter of Paul and Priscilla (Gardner) Coffin (mentioned elsewhere). To this marriage were born four children: Eliza Folger, now Mrs. James D. Cogswell, of Providence; Herbert and Gilbert (twins), born Oct. 9, 1851; and Lydia, who died in infancy. The mother of these children, a lady of strong religious principles, died Oct. 5, 1866.

Herbert Swain, son of Edward C., was a carpenter and joiner by trade, and later was engaged in the milk business. He married Elizabeth King, and died Aug. 15, 1897, survived by his widow and two sons, William Lee and Forrest Jestram, who now live in Providence.

GILBERT SWAIN, son of Edward C., was born as above stated Oct. 9, 1851. After absorbing the rudiments of an education, he was, by force of circumstances obliged to learn a trade, and accordingly was apprenticed to the machinist's trade. At this he worked long and diligently, a portion of the time being employed at night. At the same time he furthered his education, and later was enabled to attend the Jencks Mowry Academy for a short time. His trade had been acquired with the view of employment in the large railroad machine shops then located in Providence, but this was rendered impossible by the financial crash which occurred about this time, and which carried the industry mentioned with it. Mr. Swain then (1874) with his brother engaged in the milk trade. He purchased a route doing a moderate business, and in the first year, because of his inexperience and lack of familiarity with the business, it failed to succeed to any extent, and this to a man of less determination might have resulted in complete disaster. Undaunted Mr. Swain continued, and another year saw a marked improvement which has continued to the present, which finds him one of the leading men in the trade whose success is due entirely to his own effort and the sound business principles which he has put into practice.

On Sept. 15, 1875, Mr. Swain married Anna Lenora Hill, daughter of Thomas Rice Hill, of the ancient Hill family of Rhode Island. Her grandfather was Thomas Hill, who was born in Scituate, R. I., and who on Dec. 8, 1811, married Elizabeth Stone, and at her death he married her sister Nancy. By the last union there were no children, but by the first Mr. Hill became the father of: William, born Nov. 11, 1812; Jonathan, Oct. 11, 1814; Laura, Feb. 25, 1817; Thomas Rice, Nov. 21, 1819; Roby, Oct. 10, 1821; Priscilla, Nov. 22, 1823; James, Feb. 14, 1826; George, July 26, 1829; John, Oct. 10, 1831; and one that died in infancy unnamed Aug. 9, 1833. All are now deceased. On Aug. 15, 1841, Thomas Rice Hill married Mercelia Hill, daughter of John Walker and Anna (Wood) Hill and became the father of three children, as follows: Isaac Walker, born May 20, 1842, now resides in Scituate, R. I.; James Elwin, born Oct. 24, 1852, now lives in Bristol, R. I.; and Anna Lenora, wife of Gilbert Swain, was born Sept. 13, 1856.

Mr. and Mrs. Swain have had two children: Irving Gilbert, the eldest, born in 1883, died in infancy; Leslie Earl, born July 5, 1886, was educated in the schools of Providence, and is now a student at Brown University. Gilbert Swain is a man of thoroughly domestic temperament. In 1889 he built his comfortable home on Ralph street, which he has surrounded with every evidence of good taste. He is a prominent member of the Plainfield Free Baptist Church, as is also his wife, and has for many years been one of the deacons. Many years ago he became a member of Crescent Lodge, I. O. O. F., and is a firm believer in the principles of that fraternity. Both Mr. and Mrs. Swain find much to enjoy in life, and are very popular socially.

LOUIS NELSON COLWELL, one of the leading business men of Providence, R. I., was born Sept. 25, 1872, and is a descendant in the eighth generation from (I) Robert Colwell, the progenitor of the family in America, the line being through (II) Robert (2), (III) Robert (3), (IV) Joseph, (V) Stephen, (VI) Uriah, and (VII) Joshua.

(VI) Uriah Colwell and wife Deborah were residents of the town of Glocester, R. I. Among their children were six sons: George, Harley, Uriah R., William, Joshua and Larned.

(VII) Joshua Colwell, son of Uriah, was born in 1832, and when a small boy removed from Glocester to North Scituate, where he attended in later years the Lapham Institute. His father was a farmer and butcher, and for a number of years the son drove a butcher's cart. In 1855 he located on the Whitman farm near Rockland, and, associated with Mr. Gallup, engaged in the butcher business until 1861, when he bought out Mr. Gallup's interest. He was director and president of the Old State Bank at North Scituate. In 1869, in company with Emery S. Kimball, he engaged in the grocery business at the corner of Westminster and Almy streets, in Providence, and in 1872 they bought out the firm of Baggs & Williams, pork packers on Washington street, and Mr. Colwell continued in that business until his death, Nov. 21, 1898.

* Joshua Colwell married Julia E. Olney, born June 25, 1836, daughter of William T. and Lucy (Rogers) Olney, of Scituate, and a direct descendant of Thomas Olney, a native of Hertford, England, who came to this country in 1635 in the ship "Planter" and was first of Salem, and previous to March, 1638, in company with Roger Williams, visited Narragansett Bay. He was one of the thirteen who formed the settlement at the head of the bay, which they named Providence. Mrs. Colwell's line from Thomas Olney was through Epenetus, Epenetus (2), Joseph, Nathan, Stephen and William T. Mrs. Colwell died April 12, 1904. By her marriage with Mr. Colwell she became the mother of children as follows: Comer, born June 17, 1869, died in 1872; and Louis Nelson, born Sept. 25, 1872.

(VIII) Louis Nelson Colwell graduated from the Bridgham Street Grammar school and Providence High school. In 1890 he entered the pork packing house of Kimball & Colwell, in 1895 became a member of the firm, and upon his father's death succeeded him to his interests, becoming an equal owner of the business with Ex-Gov. Charles Dean Kimball. In 1900 the business was incorporated under the name of The Kimball & Colwell Co., with Louis N. Colwell as president and Charles Dean Kimball as secretary and treasurer. Mr. Colwell is president of the What Cheer Beef Company, of Providence, and is secretary and treasurer of the Fall River Provision Company, of Fall River, Mass. He is interested in the James R. McLean Loan Company, of Providence; is secretary of the C. D. Snow Automobile Company; treasurer of the Edwin Lowe Gold Plate Company, and treasurer of the Edwin Lowe Company. He is a member of Adelphoi Lodge of Masons, and of Providence Chapter and Providence Council.

On Oct. 9, 1895, Mr. Colwell married Ida Alice, daughter of Edwin and Isabel (Marshall) Lowe.

READ (Woonsocket family). The Read family of Woonsocket descends from one of the most ancient families of the Bay State, prominent there and ancient and distinguished in old England. The family history here in New England reaches back to within a decade of the coming thither of the Pilgrim Fathers, and here in Rhode Island the Woonsocket branch of the family have lived for several generations, and been among the substantial and prominent men and women of their community. Reference is especially made to the late Elisha Thornton Read, long identified with the banking interests of Woonsocket, who for thirty-one years was the cashier of one of the banks there; and to his sons—the present Hon. George S. Read, a veteran of the Civil war, a former Representative from his city in the General Assembly, of Rhode Island, long its postmaster, etc.; and James S. Read, of the same city, who on the death of his father succeeded him as cashier of the Union National Bank, a relation he has sustained to that bank for a period of now nearly thirty years, and who otherwise has been closely identified with the business interests of Woonsocket.

There follows in chronological order from the immigrant settler the family history and lineage of the Reads of Woonsocket, just alluded to.

(I) Col. Thomas Read, of distinguished ancestry in England, came to New England with Gov. Winthrop and others in the great fleet of 1630, and settled at Salem, Mass., where he was made a freeman in that year. It is supposed by those who have written of him and his family that he was a son of Sir Thomas Read and Mary Cornwall, of Brocket Hall, in Hertfordshire. His paternal grandfather had been clerk of the Green Cloth, and his maternal grandfather was Lord of Shropshire. His elder brother was a baronet. Col. Read had a grant of 300 acres of land in Salem in 1637, there being but four in the town having as large a grant. The Christian name of his wife was Alsea, and their children were: Thomas, Jacob and Abraham, all of whom were probably born in England. Col. Read was a very prominent man in the Colony, and was a colonel in the militia as early as 1643, probably of that rank previous to coming to New England. He was a colonel in the British army at the Restoration of Charles II, in 1660. He died in England in the year 1663, and his son Abraham settled his estate.

(II) Capt. Thomas Read, son of Col. Thomas, born in England, came to New England likely with his father and family. It is thought he lived at one time in Lynn. He was appointed ensign in 1647, was made captain, and had several ten-acre lots granted him in Salem. His children were: Susanna, baptized Sept. 23, 1649; John, baptized June 13, 1651; Mary, baptized in 1653; Elizabeth, baptized May 13, 1655; Remember, baptized April 26, 1657; Jacob, baptized Dec. 22, 1658; Sarah, born March 15, 1660; John (2), born Aug. 21, 1662; Jacob (2), born June 7, 1663; and Sarah, born Oct. 14, 1665. The father probably died shortly after the birth of the youngest child, as his wife was soon after known as Widow Mary.

(III) Jacob Read, son of Capt. Thomas, born June 7, 1663, married in December, 1693, Elizabeth Greene, and their children were: Aaron, born in 1694 (at Salem, Mass.); John, Dec. 26, 1695; Mary, in 1697; Jacob, Feb. 4, 1699; Jonathan, Jan. 12, 1701; Sarah, May 15, 1703; Elizabeth, March 13, 1704.

(IV) Jonathan Read, son of Jacob, born Jan. 12, 1701, in Salem, Mass., married (first) Mary Hanson, and (second) Jan. 1, 1744, Sarah Kemper. His children born to the first wife were: Benjamin, Hanson, Daniel, John, Jacob and William (born in 1729); and those born to the second wife were: Oliver and Aaron. Several of the sons of the first marriage appear to have settled in the State of Rhode Island, or nearby. One of the sons, Jacob, died in October, 1749, in Smithfield, Rhode Island.

(V) John Read, son of Jonathan, was born Dec. 10, 1732. He married Hannah Farnum, and among their children were: David, George, John, Anna and Abigail, the two last named being of record in Smithfield, R. I., as born March 4, 1756, and March 17, 1758, respectively.

(VI) George Read, son of John, born June 1, 1771, in Smithfield, married Abigail, born April

7, 1774, in Leicester, Mass., daughter of Antepas and Mercy (Slade) Earle, he a descendant of Ralph Earle, who was at Portsmouth, R. I., in 1638, his descent being through William, Ralph (2) and Benjamin Earle. George Read and wife lived in Smithfield, R. I. She died there Oct. 29, 1818, and he passed away Feb. 26, 1859, in Woonsocket, R. I., aged eighty-seven years, nine months. Their children were: Mercy E., born Nov. 5, 1799; Hannah, June 30, 1800; Sarah, Sept. 14, 1802; Elisha, Feb. 5, 1807; Elizabeth, Oct. 25, 1809; Jonathan E., Oct. 5, 1811; and Abby E., Aug. 2, 1814.

(VII) Elisha Thornton Read, son of George and Abigail (Earle) Read, born Feb. 5, 1807, in Smithfield, R. I., married (first) May 16, 1834, Harriet Atwood Stockbridge, daughter of Dr. Horatio and Priscilla W. Stockbridge. She died Jan. 11, 1857, and he married (second) Dec. 8, 1858, Mary B. Osborn, daughter of John and Elizabeth A. Osborn. Mr. Read received his education in a private school, and in the Friends' School, Providence. He was early given business training, following mercantile lines. For many years he was agent for the line of stages between Providence and Worcester, retaining the position until such time as staging was succeeded by the railroad. In February, 1847, Mr. Read became cashier of the Smithfield Union Bank, which subsequently became the National Union Bank at Woonsocket, and with these he continued in such relation for the long period of thirty-one years, from 1847 until the time of his death which occurred March 1, 1878. His life of activity and uprightness gave him prominence in the community, and his memory is cherished by all who knew him.

To the first marriage of Mr. Read were born children as follows, three of whom are yet living: James S. was born Sept. 9, 1835; George S. died young; Harriet A., born Oct. 2, 1839, married Charles B. Armstrong, of Pawtucket (mentioned elsewhere); Isabelle died young; George S. (2) was born Sept. 22, 1842; Isabelle (2) died aged six and one-half years; and Elisha T. died aged six months.

(VIII) JAMES S. READ, son of Elisha T. and Harriet Atwood (Stockbridge) Read, born Sept. 9, 1835, in Woonsocket, married June 15, 1861, Laura A., daughter of Abner Aldrich, of Woonsocket. Their children are: Elisha T., teller in the Union National Bank, and clerk and recorder for the Society of Friends of the Smithfield monthly meeting; and Laura Isabelle, at home.

James S. Read passed his boyhood days in Woonsocket where he attended private school taught by Miss Delpha Warren, and later he attended Worcester Academy. He then taught school in North Smithfield and later in Woonsocket, after which he became clerk in a grocery store for R. P. Smith. He next held a similar position with C. E. Aldrich for four years and at the end of that time became bookkeeper for the Clinton Manufacturing Company, and had charge of their store for six years. In June, 1869, he formed a partnership with George L. White, of Woonsocket, to engage in manufacturing, but the following year sold out to Mr. White, and accepted a position as clerk, bookkeeper and paymaster with the Woonsocket Manufacturing Company, and there he continued until his father's death, when he was appointed the latter's successor as cashier of the Union National Bank, a position he has filled with credit for thirty years. He is also a director of the Bank. He is a member of the Society of Friends in which denomination he is an elder, and he is a man of high character, respected by all. Mr. Read has variously served his native city in positions of trust and responsibility, and is favorably known throughout the State. He has been a member of the town council, and of the school board, of which he is now chairman, succeeding the late Hon. L. L. Chilson, and he has also served as treasurer of the Globe school district, and is a trustee of the Woonsocket Hospital.

(VIII) GEORGE S. READ, son of Elisha T. and Harriet Atwood (Stockbridge) Read, born Sept. 22, 1842, in Woonsocket, married in 1867, Lavilla A., daughter of Amos and Eliza C. Allan, of Franklin, Mass. Mr. Read acquired his education in the public and high schools of Woonsocket and the Friends School at Providence. During the Civil war he was a member of the Third Rhode Island Heavy Artillery, enlisting Aug. 30, 1861, and on June 3, 1863, he was commissioned second lieutenant; August, 1863, he was on detached service at Morris Island, and so continued until October, 1863. On Oct. 31, 1863, he was discharged as sergeant to accept promotion, and was mustered in as second lieutenant to date Sept. 1, 1863; March 9, 1864, ordered on detached service with Lieut., Co. M, First U. S. Artillery, and so borne until July, 1864, when he joined the regiment; August, 1864, on special duty in charge of Fort Seward, Bay Point, S. C.; Oct. 5, 1864, mustered out.

After sharing the fortunes of war with the Third, Lieut. Read returned to his home in Woonsocket, where he has since been actively and prominently identified with the growth and development of that city. From 1879 to 1888 he was the efficient postmaster of Woonsocket, and in the last named year he was the representative of that city in the Rhode Island Assembly. He is now bookkeeper for the Weeks Furniture Company, and is president of the Union National Bank.

WIGHTMAN. In the early settlement of Rhode Island there appeared at two different points a George Wightman and a Valentine Whitman, whom authorities on early Rhode Island history make kinsmen, "perhaps brothers." From this source spring those of either name whose family history extends back to early Rhode Island. The descendants of George have more generally preserved the spelling of the name as Wightman, though occasionally using the other form—Whitman.

It will be recalled that Edward Wightman of Burton-upon-Trent, England, had the distinction of being the last martyr condemned for heresy on English soil. He was convicted Dec. 14, 1611, and was burned at Litchfield April 11, 1612. Tradition makes George Wightman (above) a descendant of the martyr Edward Wightman, who suffered death for religious liberty. George Wightman was in Kingstown as early as 1669. He took the oath of allegiance in 1671, and became a freeman in 1673. He was constable in 1686. He was born in 1632, and died in 1722. He married Elizabeth Updike, born in 1644, daughter of Gilbert and Katherine (Smith) Updike, of South Kingstown. Their children were: Elizabeth, Alice, Daniel, Sarah, George, John, Samuel and Valentine. Of these Daniel was ordained as a minister and made assistant to Rev. James Clarke, pastor of the Second Baptist Church at Newport. He succeeded Mr. Clarke to the pastorate of the church in 1736, and for nearly fifty years was identified with it. To one of his sons, George, who settled in Warwick, he deeded in 1743, two hundred and fifty acres of land in Exeter, R. I. Another son, John, lived in South Kingstown, and in Exeter, while another son, Samuel, was located in Groton, Connecticut.

Valentine Whitman, the other of the two original settlers referred to, was early at Providence, where in 1656 he was surveyor of highways, was later for several years juryman, and in 1658 commissioner. He died in 1701, and his widow Mary passed away in 1718. Of their nine children there was but one son—Valentine—who married in 1694, Sarah Bartlett. He became a citizen of Smithfield, R. I., and at his home on March 17, 1731, was held the first meeting of the town council. He was a member of the Colonial Assembly in 1719.

From Col. George Wightman, son of Rev. Daniel and grandson of George Wightman, the North Kingstown settler, has descended a branch of the Barrington-Providence family of Wightmans, several of whom were prominently identified with the city's history through the latter half of the nineteenth century, and as well a younger generation is now active in the city's life.

Reference is especially made to the late George W. Wightman, who for forty and more years was a most valuable and useful public servant here and in the State at large, the greater part of which period he was at the head of the city and State's charities; and to his brother the late Capt. Albert Augustus Wightman, a veteran of the Civil war, and long at the head of the extensive jewelry manufacturing establishment bearing his name, his business associate being Mr. Walter S. Hough, now president of Wightman & Hough Company; and to the sons of these men, some of whom still represent the name and family in the business life of this section.

The Christian name of the wife of Col. George Wightman of North Kingstown was Mary, and their family comprised the following children of North Kingstown record: Catherine, born Feb. 28, 1725; George, Nov. 4, 1726; David, Aug. 24, 1728; John, Oct. 7, 1730; Valentine, March 13, 1733; a daughter, May 13, 1736; and Samuel, in 1739.

George Wightman, son of George and Mary, born Nov. 4, 1726, married Dec. 2, 1746, Elizabeth Wait, of Exeter, Rhode Island.

George Wightman, son of George and Elizabeth, married June 16, 1776, Wait Sweet.

Daniel Wightman, son of George and Wait, born about 1797, married Charlotte Chase.

GEORGE W. WIGHTMAN, son of Daniel and Charlotte (Chase), born May 10, 1821, in the town of Warwick, R. I., married (first) May 10, 1843, in Barrington, R. I., Lydia Bosworth Smith, daughter of Simon and Lydia (Bosworth) Smith, of Barrington stock. Mrs. Wightman died May 8, 1860, aged thirty-eight years. She was a granddaughter of Capt. Samuel Bosworth, of the Rhode Island Artillery.

Mr. Wightman received his elementary education in the public schools of his native town, furthering his studies at the Exeter Academy. From Warwick his father and family removed to the town of Barrington in the same State and here the early years of George W. were passed on a farm. In 1846 he located in Providence, where the most of his active life was devoted to the development of system and proper organization in benevolent, charitable and correctional institutions, for which he displayed remarkable fitness and adaptability. His first experience as an executive officer over charitable work was in the office of the overseer of the poor of Providence, where he made a wise administration for thirty-two years (1857-1889), and it was in that capacity that Mr. Wightman served the city so efficiently. He was a thorough master of the science of pauper administration, a friend to the unfortunate—one who knew how to best administer to their needs, and direct charity in the way it could do the most good. It was Mr. Wightman who first conceived the idea of a city wood yard, and that institution was set up in Providence some twenty years prior to his death, the first in the United States, and it has since been adopted by nearly every city in the country. As overseer of the poor of the city, and agent of the board, continuing in office until his death, Mr. Wightman had the fullest opportunity to exercise his remarkable talent for the work, and in the study of the needs of the dependent classes, he learned and applied wiser and more humane methods of treatment. His large acquaintance with men and institutions outside the State made him an authority on charity and correction management. Almost up to the very hour of his death he had been in robust health. In July, 1892, he attended the convention at Denver of the representatives of the Charitable Institutions of the country, and although then three-score and ten years of age, Rhode Island recognized in him the man most conversant with such affairs and the man best equipped to act as its delegate. His tender sympathies, good judgment, and wise counsels brought him into close contact with the people he was called on to aid, and the officials responsible for their care. The unfortunate of all classes and conditions found in Mr. Wightman a true friend as well as a faithful officer, who was in touch with their infirmities and sorrows. He had the will and magnetic energy that gave strength and courage to the weak and erring, and cheered the hopeless to hopefulness. "Mr. Wightman was a man of marked and masterful individuality, and it was not at first interchange of relations with him that he was always estimated at his true value; but when the relations became closer few failed to find him a man of strong intellect, excellent judgment, and kindly and sympathetic feeling."

In the death of Mr. Wightman, which occurred at his home in Providence, R. I., Feb. 24, 1893, when in the seventy-second year of his age, the city lost not only one of its oldest citizens in point of years, but the oldest in its service. He was a member of the city's first police force, the small body of men known as the "Old Watch," which kept the peace in the days when blue coats and brass buttons for patrolmen had never been thought of.

To Mr. Wightman and his wife, Lydia Bosworth (Smith) Wightman, were born children as follows: Harriet C., who married the Hon. George T. Baker, of Barrington, R. I., and died April 3, 1906; Annie Wilson, now Mrs. Dr. Hunt, of Providence; Walter Russell; and George Henry.

WALTER RUSSELL WIGHTMAN was born in Providence, R. I., Oct. 21, 1850. In 1888 he entered his father's office, and in May, 1893, he was appointed agent of the State Charities and Corrections and State Probation officer. He is proving himself a most efficient successor to his worthy father.

JAMES BURDICK. The late James Burdick, a well-known citizen and successful business man of Providence, was a descendant of an old Rhode Island family, and was a native of Newport, son of Isaiah and Mary (Lake) Burdick.

Isaiah Burdick was a prominent citizen of Newport, serving as sheriff for many years. The latter years of his life were spent in Providence, in which city his death occurred. He was the father of seven children, of whom but two survive: Joseph D., now a resident of Alameda, Cal.; and Mrs. Caroline E. Jerneagan, a resident of Florida.

James Burdick was born March 30, 1831, in Newport, and his education was received in the public schools of that place, and at the academy in Killingly, Conn., to which latter place he went at the age of fourteen years, a brother, Benjamin, being engaged as a tinsmith at what is now Danielson, in that town. Young James worked in his brother's shop, and there acquired his knowledge of the tinsmith's trade. They resided there until about 1848, when the brother removed to Providence, and James, being in his brother's employ at that time, accompanied him, devoting almost his entire attention to the making of the tin cans used in the cotton manufacturing business. He was saving of his wages, and when the news of the California gold discovery was received he was among the first to make up his mind to go, having the necessary money to pay his way on the ship "South America," which sailed from Providence, Sept. 3, 1849, around Cape Horn, reaching San Francisco, Feb. 15, 1850.

Mr. Burdick began prospecting at Calveras, and so continued until the fall of 1851, when he began keeping hotel at the same place. In 1855 he was engaged in the hotel business there, his place of business being destroyed by fire the following year. At this time he was elected a justice of the peace, and in 1858 was elected a representative to the California Legislature from Calveras county. Mr. Burdick at this time was the owner of the famous group of large trees at Calveras, but later disposed of them. He spent fifteen years in California, meeting with successes and reverses, as was the lot of the miners and prospectors of that time and place. He was fond of recalling his many interesting experiences, one of which was his teaching dancing, which he turned to when no other lucrative work was in view. About 1864 he left California and went to the gold fields at Caribou, on the Frazier river in British Columbia, at which place he was engaged at mining, and he spent ten years in that place, some of which time he held the office as a local justice of the peace, with the title of judge.

About 1874 Mr. Burdick returned to Rhode Island, and soon after he became associated with his brother, Benjamin, who was engaged in the stone, tinware and plumbing business, on Smith street, Providence, under the firm name of Burdick & Jackson. James Burdick purchased the interest of Mr. Jackson, and the firm name became Burdick Brothers, who continued to do business with success until 1898, when Benjamin Burdick died, and the firm became Burdick & Co., James Catrell becoming a member of the firm. This partnership continued until October, 1902, when Mr. Burdick disposed of his business interests, and afterward lived retired until his death, which occurred July 12, 1905, at Niantic, R. I., and he was buried at Swan Point.

In his political views Mr. Burdick was a Democrat, and served the Third ward in the common council from 1892 to 1901. He was a member of Nesten Lodge, No. 37, A. F. & A. M.; Providence Chapter, No. 1, R. A. M.; and also belonged to the Veteran Firemen's Association, of which he served as president. He was also a member of the California Pioneers Association, a Massachusetts organization, and when able always attended their meetings and frequently answered a toast or delivered an address. He prepared three interesting papers relating to his California trip and experiences and read them before the Rhode Island Historical Society (of which he was a member), entitled, "Foot Prints of the California Argonauts," "Reminiscences of a Forty Niner," and "To California and Return." In 1901, accompanied by Mrs. Burdick, he visited California and spent three months there visiting the places familiar to him a half century before, renewing old acquaintances, many of them now being millionaires. Mr. Burdick was a very genial and companionable man, possessing a very retentive memory, and was a most entertaining conversationalist. A man of much native ability had he had the opportunity of a college education he could have made his mark in any kind of business.

Jas. Smucker

Mr. Burdick was first married to Mrs. Mary (Halsey) Head, daughter of Wright and granddaughter of Thomas Halsey, and a descendant of a family once numerous and prominent in Providence. Mrs. Burdick died in 1880, and on Feb. 12, 1891, he was again married, this time to Miss Abbey Frances Barber, daughter of Deacon John L. and Abbey (Matteson) Barber, and granddaughter of Deacon Weeden and Hannah (Lewis) Barber. Mrs. Burdick is a descendant of several of the old families of the southern part of the State, among them being the Lewis and Kenyon families. Deacon John L. Barber, her father, was at one time engaged as a manufacturer in Exeter, R. I., and became quite successful. He resided in Providence for many years previous to his death, being for twenty-four years a traveling salesman in the employ of Oliver L. Johnson & Co. Mrs. Burdick resides at No. 141 Prospect street, Providence, and her summer home is in Conanicut.

HON. THOMAS FRANCIS PEIRCE, of Providence, R. I., was held in such esteem by the people of the city, which was the scene of his long and active business career, that the Providence Dailey Journal on the occasion of his death editorially said: "In the decease of Hon. Thomas Francis Peirce the community has lost a conscientious public citizen and a representative business man, whose integrity and spotless career of over forty years in this city have made him deservedly prominent."

Born Jan. 12, 1835, on the old Pawtucket turnpike in the town of Providence, Mr. Peirce was a son of Thomas and Lucina Jane (Horton) Peirce, and a descendant of one of the old and prominent New England families, the Peirce, Pierce or Pearce family tracing their lineage for hundreds of years back in Great Britain prior to the coming across the ocean of the several emigrants of the name to the American Colonies in their early history.

Thomas Peirce was born in 1802, son of Thomas of Dighton, Mass., a tanner, currier and leather merchant and he was educated in the schools of his native town. Coming to Providence in 1833, he engaged in the manufacture of men's sewed and pegged boots and shoes, his place of business being located on North Main street, near the Amasa Gray place. He had the principal wholesalers for his customers and his business prospered abundantly. In 1836, in connection with his manufacturing, he opened a retail store on the present site of the Commercial Bank. The store did well but in 1841 Mr. Peirce wanted to devote all his attention to manufacturing, and he sold out the retail establishment to C. A. Peirce & Co., C. A. Peirce being his brother. Five years later Mr. Peirce sold the manufacturing business and opened another retail store, located where Tillinghast & Mason formerly were, in the Dantworth Block. For six years he managed the new store, until in 1852 Mr. Christopher Johnson, of Lyman, Mass., wanted to buy it, and with his usual accommodating disposition Mr. Peirce sold out to him. For two years he enjoyed the well-earned profits of his labors, but in 1854, joining with his only son, Thomas F., he established the well-known firm of Thomas F. Peirce & Son, which continues to this time under the same name, a period of over fifty years. He continued as a member of this firm until about 1863, when he retired wholly from active business pursuits, leaving the business to his son. He thus had been actively identified with the business interests of the city of his adoption for thirty years. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him for the uprightness and probity of his character. He was a man of liberal religious views, and his life was governed wholly by the Golden Rule, which was his creed and his religion. His was a character that ennobled all who came in contact with it. A contemporary, writing of him at the time of his death which occurred Dec. 7, 1884, said: "He was just to a fault, and a man of honor to the last."

He married Lucina Jane Horton, of Rehoboth, Mass., and one son blessed this union, Thomas France, born Jan. 12, 1835.

After receiving a common school education Thomas Francis Peirce engaged in the shoe business with his father, who had established himself in the shoe trade in 1836 on the present site of the Commercial Bank, in Westminster street. Later the business was established in the Arcade Building, in which it had three locations, first in No. 7, afterward in the first No. 2 on the right and then No. 4 on the left. He then took the first four stores on the left and one up-stairs, making five in all, entering from Westminster. It was carried on in the Arcade Building at the time young Peirce joined his father in 1854. In 1893 the business had outgrown its larger Arcade location, and was removed to its present central location and handsome quarters on the corner of Westminster and Dorrance streets, where is maintained one of the finest establishments in the shoe line in New England.

The business has succeeded from father to son until it has passed through several generations of the family, and is now under the management of George E. Peirce, son of the late Thomas Francis Peirce; and by the business acumen, enterprise and efforts of these several generations of Peirces has been attained the present excellence of business and high standing in commercial circles of this, the oldest shoe establishment in Rhode Island, and the oldest in New England handling fine goods. Mr. Peirce was president of the National Shoe and Leather Association of America. He got up the largest boot and shoe clam bake ever held in Rhode Island, hundreds attending from all parts of the country.

The late Thomas Francis Peirce in his political views was a staunch Democrat, but his political life and actions were very broad in their scope and not limited by party. In 1889 he was elected to the General Assembly. In 1892 he was re-elected, being the only candidate on either ticket to secure an election on the first ballot, this fact being the direct cause of bringing about the plurality laws. As a member of the Democratic City and Central committees his services were of great value and were always appreciated. Up to within six years before the death of Mr. Peirce he was a prominent member of the Squantum Club. Always of a social nature in his youth he was a leader in society. One of his greatest pleasures was derived from the enjoyment of good horses, of which he kept an excellent stable. Personally he was much like his father in his characteristics, broad and liberal in his views, and charitable in every way.

On March 16, 1865, Mr. Peirce was married to Miss Caroline T. Rounds, a native of Boston, Mass., and they had four children: (1) Francis Thomas was born March 22, 1867. (2) Carrie L., born April 30, 1871, married H. N. Williams, M. D., and has two children, Charlotte Peirce and Francis. (3) George E., born April 15, 1873, married Florence, daughter of Alanson Alexander, of Pawtuxet, R. I., and one son, George, Jr. (4) Truman B. was born Nov. 18, 1879.

Mr. Peirce died at his late home on Broadway, Providence, R. I., June 19, 1896, on the spot where his father had purchased a home in about 1838, and where he and his father spent the balance of their lives. At that time there were only two houses on what is now Broadway, between this house and Olneyville.

have lived in the town of Norton, Mass., and the city of Providence, R. I. Reference is here made to the late Hon. George Leonard Clarke, who through a long period was prominent in public life in Providence, to his father, Rev. Pitt Clarke, a scholarly gentleman of the old school who for upwards of forty-one years was the pastor of the Congregational (Unitarian) Church at Norton, and also to Prescott O. Clarke, son of George Leonard, at this time a practicing architect in Providence. These Clarkes are of the old Medfield stock.

Rev. Pitt Clarke was born in Medfield, Mass., Jan. 15, 1763, and was of the fourth generation of the family in New England. His great-grandfather came from England, and settled in the north of Wrentham, Mass., at that time comparatively a wilderness. His grandfather moved to Medfield, Mass., and by his own industry purchased a farm in the north part of the town. The father of Pitt Clarke was Jacob Clarke, one of a family of three brothers and three sisters.

In speaking of his parents Rev. Pitt Clarke in substance said his father had nothing to recommend him beyond the reputation of being an honest man, an industrious farmer and a practical Christian. He was naturally of a cheerful disposition, while his mother, formerly Meletiah Hammont (rightly spelled Hammond), and the second wife of his father, was of a feeble, nervous and gloomy make-up and very pious. The antecedents of both have the reputation of being honest, industrious and devout. His mother, devout in her religious practices, always set a good example before her children, and it was to her teachings and practices that her son, Rev. Pitt, attributed his religious course in life. The grandfather of Pitt Clarke had an excellent opinion of the great Pitt in his mother country, and of his distinguished plans for American liberty, and out of regard for this eloquent friend, he told his grandson, he gave the latter his name and flattered him with the idea of going to college.

In his boyhood Pitt Clarke worked on his father's farm. When old enough during the Revolution to be enrolled in the militia he was called to go as a soldier on a sudden expedition to Rhode Island, of which in after life he wrote: "The British had taken possession of the Island and were directing their devastation toward Massachusetts. The alarm came and the militia was called upon to meet the attack and drive them from the Island. In this expedition I was daily expecting to meet the enemy in the hottest battle, but just before it came our turn to fight, the British were driven from the stronghold and left the Island. I returned home to my father's farm." Pitt Clarke from early boyhood had a great desire to obtain an education, but although he had planned and started to school a number of times circumstances compelled him as often to give it up for a time. Finally, however, after becoming of age, through study at home, but chiefly under the tuition of Miss Hannah Adams, he was fitted for college, and on July 22, 1786, he was admitted to Cambridge University. He received the honors of the University July 21, 1790. For two years thereafter he taught the town school in Cambridge, and at the same time pursued his theological studies. These studies had been his predilection before he entered college and were a leading object of his attention during his college life. Before he left the school he was examined, April 12, 1792, before the Cambridge Association of Ministers and approbated to preach. He preached occasionally in the neighboring towns while he continued in the school, and before he closed it received an application to supply the vacant parish in Norton, Mass. This was the first place of his preaching on probation. After having preached there only four Sabbaths the congregation gave him an invitation to settle among them as their gospel minister. He preached for them through the winter before accepting the call, which was then nearly unanimous, and was ordained July 3, 1793. From that time on until his death, covering a period of forty-one years, he remained the pastor of that same charge, and was a most satisfactory pastor and useful man in that community.

"Rev. Clarke was remarkable for his habits of industry and order. He was greatly respected for his sound judgment and his counsel in all affairs of importance and particularly in such as related to ecclesiastical affairs and to the interests of literature, morals and religion. His whole character as a minister was not only entirely without reproach, but in all respects most exemplary. His preaching was always serious and impressive and a number of his sermons were published. The usefulness of this good man was felt and appreciated beyond the bounds of his parish, and at his death he left a large circle of friends who loved and honored him while living and who will embalm the many estimable traits of his character and life." He died Feb. 13, 1835, at threescore and twelve years, after a ministry of forty-one years, seven months and ten days.

Rev. Mr. Clarke was a member of various associations, literary and philanthropic, as well as religious, in several of which he was a prominent officer. He was vice-president of the Bristol County Bible Society and vice-president of the board of trustees of the Bristol Academy.

On Feb. 1, 1798, Rev. Pitt Clarke was married to Rebecca Jones, daughter of John Jones, Esq., of Hopkinton, Mass. She died July 2, 1811, and on Nov. 2, 1812, he married (second) Maria Jones Stimson, daughter of Dr. Jeremy Stimson, of Hopkinton. His children were: Abigail M., William P., John J., Caroline and George Leonard, all born to the first marriage; and George Leonard (2), Harriet, Manlius and Edmund H., all born to the second marriage.

Hon. George Leonard Clarke was born Aug. 10,

1813, in the town of Norton, Mass., son of Rev. Pitt and Maria Jones (Stimson) Clarke, of the latter of whom it is said, "She was a woman of fine presence, of rare intellectual qualities and as beautiful in person as in character." The pecuniary circumstances of a country minister in those days were such as made it necessary that the sons should be thrown upon their own resources at an early age, and the early education of George L. Clarke was such as he received at home from his parents, in attendance during the winter months at the neighborhood district schools, and one or two years' study in a private academy. His half-sister, Abigail, had married John J. Stimson of Providence, senior member of the firm of Stimson & Hodges, and at the age of sixteen George L. came to Providence to enter the employ of this firm. In boyhood and young manhood at Providence he improved his spare time in reading and attending the old Lyceum lectures and such scientific talks as occasionally came within his reach, and as the years passed became well informed and prepared to take a leading part in the affairs of his adopted city. He was early interested in the anti-slavery cause and was well known not only in Providence, but all over the State, as among the staunchest of the Abolitionists of Rhode Island, and at a period when that name was a stigma of reproach and when to be known as such meant social and political ostracism. But he lived to enjoy the satisfaction of seeing the whole system of slavery overthrown as the result of the overwhelming anti-slavery sentiment of the North, and to behold a regenerated country, growing and prosperous under the inspiring rule of freedom.

Mr. Clarke was an active member of the old Liberty and Free Soil parties, and when those parties became merged into the victorious Republican party of the State and Union he was among its earliest members and supporters. He took an active and prominent part in politics and was repeatedly a member of the General Assembly of the State from Providence. He was a member of the Lower House of that body in 1856, 1857, 1858, 1863, 1868, 1875, and of the Senate in 1869, and during that period was once the Speaker of the House. While in the Senate he was largely instrumental in having the "cove lands," now so valuable, deeded by the State to the city of Providence. Mr. Clarke in May, 1869, after an unusually exciting contest, was elected mayor of Providence by a large majority, and after his term of office expired was chosen as alderman from the First ward without opposition. In this capacity he served, as he had done in all previous official relations, with great acceptance, until he declined re-election. For many years Mr. Clarke was one of the managers of the Dexter Donation, and for several years he served on the school committee.

After leaving the mercantile business of Stimson & Hodges Mr. Clarke engaged in the manufacturing business with his father-in-law as a member of the firm of William Chace & Co., grinders of dye woods, the plant being located in North Providence, the offices of the company in Providence. The concern later became known as the Providence Dye Wood Company, Mr. Clarke severing his connection with the same sometime before it went out of business. For a number of years he was president of the City Fire Insurance Company, and for a period of time devoted his entire attention to the affairs of that organization. About 1882 he became a member of the jewelry manufacturing firm of Clarke, Black & Co., Providence, and was in active business when he died, Feb. 11, 1890, in his seventy-seventh year.

Mr. Clarke was married May 5, 1841, at Providence, to Frances Alice Chace, daughter of William and Lydia (Drown) Chace. Mrs. Clarke died Jan. 14, 1883, aged sixty-six years. Two children survived her: Elizabeth D. and Prescott O. The daughter, Elizabeth D. Clarke, married Herbert F. Hinckley, of Providence, member of the firm of Taylor, Symonds & Co., and they have had three children, namely: Frank L.; William P., who died in 1894; and George C., who married Marian Spink and has one son, George C. Hinckley, Jr.

PRESCOTT O. CLARKE, son of Hon. George L. and Frances A. (Chace) Clarke, was born in Providence March 10, 1858, and received his education in Mowry and Goff's English and Classical School, and Brown University, from which latter institution he graduated in the class of 1880. For a time after leaving college he was in the employ of The Brown & Sharpe Manufacturing Company, leaving them to enter the firm of Clarke, Black & Co., of which his father was the senior partner. After the death of his father, in 1890, Prescott O. Clarke closed out his interest in the firm and took the architectural course in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston. He then located in Providence and soon afterward formed a partnership with Arthur R. Spaulding, under the name of Clarke & Spaulding for the practice of architecture.

In 1901 Mr. Spaulding retired and Mr. Wallis E. Howe was admitted to partnership, the firm name changing to Clarke & Howe. The most important commission the firm have executed is the United States postoffice building on Exchange Place, Providence.

Mr. Clarke is a member of the University Club and the Agawam Hunt Club, and of the Brunonian Chapter of the Alpha Delta Phi college fraternity. In 1895 he married Mary Chase, of Lynn, Mass., daughter of Philip A. and Alice B. (Pierce) Chase, and the following children have been born to them: Frances Chase, Alice (who died in infancy), Barbara and George Leonard.

WILLIAM HOXSEY, who for almost a quarter of a century was the efficient town clerk of Westerly, is one of the well-known men in that section of the State, and one of the foremost citizens of his town. Mr. Hoxsey belongs to an old and numerous family in South Coventry, and is a descendant in the seventh generation from Lodowick Hawksie, who came to America soon after 1650, and was the progenitor of a numerous posterity, the line in which we are at present interested being from Lodowick through Joseph, Joseph (2), Gideon, Joseph (3) and Welcome A. to William. The present day spelling of the name takes various forms, such as Hoxsey, Hoxie, Hoxsie, yet all those bearing the name are descendants of Lodowick Hawksie.

(I) Lodowick Hawksie is supposed to have come from Scotland. He settled in Sandwich, Mass., where he learned the trade of a hatter and later carried on business as such. He took a rather prominent part in the affairs of that town, as is shown by the records. He married Mary Presbury, the daughter of John Presbury.

(II) Joseph Hoxsey was born March 15, 1667, in Sandwich, Mass., and moved to what was then called Narragansett. He settled in Kingstown, R. I., in 1698. He was a townsman in Sandwich in 1691. He married Sarah Tucker, and both died in 1727. Their children were: Peleg, born June 23, 1695; Zebulon, Aug. 8, 1697; Mary, 1699; Joseph, Nov. 25, 1701; Ann, Aug. 1, 1704; Gideon, July 31, 1706; Lodowick, Sept. 27, 1708; Sarah; Martha; Deborah; Ann (2); and Zebulon (2). Of these children, all that lived to adult age settled in Kingstown, Exeter and Richmond, R. I., and Berkshire county, Massachusetts.

(III) Joseph Hoxsey (2), son of Joseph, born Nov. 25, 1701, married Mary, and their children were Martha, Gideon, Sarah, Joseph and Mary.

(IV) Gideon Hoxie, son of Joseph (2), born Dec. 14, 1730, married Dorcas Congdon, daughter of James, and they had children as follows: Joseph; Gideon, Jr., who married Annie Browning; Peleg, who married Lucy Babcock; Lodowick, who married Ruth Taylor; Mary, who married John Cross; and Martha, who married Hezekiah Babcock. Gideon Hoxie, the father, settled in what is now the town of Charlestown.

(V) Joseph Hoxie (3) married Mary Congdon, who long survived him, his death occurring Oct. 8, 1829, while she lived to April 8, 1851. They had children: John C. married Mary A. Fellows; Welcome Arnold married Mary A. Fellows after the death of his brother John; Sarah married N. B. Sands.

(VI) Welcome Arnold Hoxie, son of Joseph (3), was born in 1792. He took up his residence in Westerly in 1839, and became one of the prominent men of the town, where he died Dec. 10, 1875. In 1839 and 1840 he was a member of the lower branch of the General Assembly, and in 1847 and 1848 he served as a member of the State Senate. He was a business man of excellent standing, and was a director of the old Phenix Bank in 1825.

William Hoxsey.

In 1826 Mr. Hoxie married Mrs. Mary A. (Fellows) Hoxie, widow of his brother John, and they became the parents of the following named children: John, for years a sea captain and later a ship broker, married Isabella Dickinson; Joseph was a seafaring man in his early life, and passed his later years in San Rafael, Cal., where he died in April, 1905, leaving two children, Harriet and Vivian; Pierce Fellows died in New Orleans, and his widow now lives in Biloxi, Miss.; Harriet married Stephen Wilcox, who is mentioned elsewhere; William is the subject proper of these lines.

(VII) William Hoxsey was born March 1, 1840, in Westerly, in the house where he now resides. During his boyhood he attended school in Westerly, and later was a student in the Kingston private school and at the Friends School in Providence. Soon after leaving school he accepted a situation as clerk in the grocery store of Hall & Sheffield, at Westerly, and subsequently, for a period of about five years, was associated with the firm of Robinson & Hoxsey, drygoods merchants of Westerly, as the junior partner. Though most of his time since has been devoted to the public service he has never severed his connection with the business life of the town entirely, and he has been a prominent figure in financial and industrial circles through all these years. He was a director and vice-president of the Phenix Bank, is now a director of the Washington Trust Company, and until November, 1907, president of the Pawcatuck Street Railway Company.

In July, 1882, Mr. Hoxsey was appointed deputy town clerk, and the year following was elected to the office of town clerk, in which position he was continued by yearly re-elections until June, 1907, when he declined the office. He has also been called upon to fill other positions of trust, his fellow-townsmen having on April 1, 1891, elected him a member of the Rhode Island General Assembly, in which he served until April 6, 1892. In April, 1893, he was elected to the State Senate, and served two years as a member of that body. A prominent member of the Republican party, he has always taken a keen interest in its success and is regarded as one of its most influential workers in his section of the State. He is equally prominent in other respects, and as well liked in social circles as he is in public and business life. He belonged to Narragansett Commandery, Knights Templar, of which he has been treasurer for years. He is a man of cultivated tastes, quiet and refined in disposition, yet democratic in manner, his ability to make all whom he meets feel completely "at home" in his presence being one of his prominent characteristics. Mr. Hoxsey devotes no small portion of his leisure to the study of art, of which he is an ardent admirer and judicious patron, and his greatest pleasure is undoubtedly found in the pursuit of this hobby.

On June 4, 1861, Mr. Hoxsey was united in marriage, in New York City, to Miss Louise D. Heggie, and two children have come to this union: Frederick, born Oct. 28, 1866, died at the age of fourteen years; Mary Minton, born June 24, 1879, married Percy C. Thomas, of Rome, N. Y., and has two daughters, Louise Hoxsey, born July 13, 1903, and Jane Dodge, born April 4, 1906.

CHARLES I. BURLINGAME, wholesale dealer in hay at Providence, and one of the best known men in his line in the State, was born in Scituate, R. I., and descends from an early settled family.

Roger Burlingame, the remote ancestor of the family in Rhode Island, came to America from England, locating first at Stonington, Conn., later removing to Providence Plantations. He became the owner of about 500 acres of land, some of which is now comprised within the city limits of Providence. His death occurred in 1718. To him and his wife were born: Peter, Roger, John, Thomas and several daughters. The lineage of Charles I. Burlingame is traced down through John (son of Roger), David, Benedict, David, Asahel and Cyrus P., the latter being the father of the subject of this review.

Benedict Burlingame was a farmer and resided in Glocester.

David Burlingame, son of Benedict, also a farmer, in early life resided about three-fourths of a mile northeast of the village of Harmony, town of Glocester. Subsequently he purchased a tract of about 100 acres of woodland, in North Scituate, which he cleared, and there he made his home and lived to the age of ninety-two years, an active, rugged man until the last. He was buried in a private yard on his farm. He was considered a successful man for those times, as well as a man of influence and prominence. For a brief time he saw service in the war of the Revolution, being present at the battle of Rhode Island, when the British attempted an invasion. He married Mary Inman, whom he survived for many years. Their children were: Asahel; Celinda, who married Rev. Pardon Tillinghast, a Baptist clergyman, and resided at East Greenwich; and Polly, who married James Wilbur, a bobbin turner, and resided at South Scituate, until her death Oct. 27, 1818, when she was aged thirty-one years.

Asahel Burlingame, only son of his parents, was born in Scituate, and his entire life was passed on the farm where he was born. He added to the acreage of the home farm, and became a large land holder. He, like his father, was a very hard working man, was successful in his farming business, and lived to the age of ninety-two years, retaining his vigor to the last. In his political views he was first a Whig, but later became a Republican, and he would never consent to hold office. Asahel Burlingame was married Dec. 2, 1813, by the Elder John Westcott, to Phebe, daughter of John Hawkins, of Gloucester. Mr. Burlingame survived his wife several years, she being eighty-six years of age at the time of her death. Their children were: (1) William Henry married (first) Julia Searles, and (second) Sarah Swarts, and was the father of two sons and two daughters, one son being now being deceased. He was a carpenter by trade, residing first in Gloucester and later in Providence, dying at the latter place. (2) Cyrus P. is mentioned below. (3) Daniel B., of Scituate, is mentioned in full elsewhere in this publication.

Cyrus P. Burlingame was born March 21, 1821, in Scituate and was reared in that town, receiving his education in the district schools, and living at home until twenty-one years of age. He then began as a clerk in the store of James Winsor, on High street, Providence, remaining with this gentleman one year, after which he was employed in the store of George Winsor at Scituate Four Corners, and by Warren Ballou, Mr. Winsor's successor. Mr. Burlingame was later a clerk for Elisha Aldrich at Harmony village. After a period of six years spent on the home farm, he entered the employ of William Tinkham as a clerk in his store at Greenville, and was so employed until Mr. Tinkham went out of business. Subsequently Mr. Burlingame formed a partnership with his brother, Daniel B., in a general store at Harmony, which was conducted under the name of Burlingame & Co. Six months later Cyrus P. Burlingame purchased the interest of his partner, and continued the business alone for a number of years, during which time he erected a new building. After disposing of his mercantile business he engaged at teaming for the mills and stores at Mapleville, Harmony, Greenville and Providence, hauling merchandise between these places. After another period spent in the mercantile business he engaged, in company with a Mr. Poole, in the portable saw milling business, which he continued for two years. In 1885 he removed to Providence, since which time he has not been engaged in any business, making his home with his son, Charles I.

Cyrus P. Burlingame married Lucia A. B. Arnold, born Dec. 24, 1825, daughter of James B. Arnold, and she died May 20, 1899, in Providence. Their children were: Cyrus A., a hay dealer at South Whitley, Ind., married Evelyn Clemence, and they have had two sons, Edward and Charles, the latter of whom is deceased; Phebe A., who married Charles H. Poole, a lumber dealer, died at North Providence, leaving two children, Charles and Harry; Charles I.; Mary E. married Benjamin M. Neill, of Providence, and they have two children, Arthur and Annie.

Charles I. Burlingame, son of Cyrus P., was born Dec. 23, 1856, in Scituate, and was an infant when his parents removed to Harmony. His education was received in the district school at Harmony, East Greenwich Seminary, Lapham Institute at North Scituate, and Scholfield's Commercial College at Providence. After leaving the latter place he was employed as a clerk in the store of Day & Sprague, grain dealers on Canal street, continuing there until the age of nineteen years, when he engaged in the retail hay and grain business for himself at Nos. 174-186 Dyer street, his brother being associated with him under the firm name of Burlingame Brothers. A little more than a year later Charles I. withdrew from the firm, forming a partnership with S. C. Harris, under the name of S. C. Harris & Co., and they engaged at selling hay in carload lots, the partnership continuing for about ten years with splendid success. Mr. Burlingame next bought out the interest of his partner, and conducted the business alone for a number of years, making, in all, about twenty-five years at this location. The Interstate Coal Company seeking new land purchased part of this property, and this caused Mr. Burlingame to remove the business to West Exchange street, carrying on business there under the name of the Eastern Hay Company, and also maintaining an office at No. 17 Custom House street. In 1904 Mr. Burlingame disposed of his business on West Exchange street, and is now, under his own name, wholesaling hay in carload lots entirely. In point of service, he is one of the oldest hay dealers in the city of Providence.

Mr. Burlingame was married in Portsmouth, N. H., to Mary E. Potter, of Pawtucket, daughter of Lyman B. Potter, and two sons were born to this union: Roland Irving, born June 13, 1886, is a graduate of Bryant & Stratton's Business College; and Clayton Charles, born Feb. 19, 1895. In his political views Mr. Burlingame is independent, voting for the best men and issues. He is a member of the Providence Board of Trade. Fraternally he is a 32d degree Mason, belonging to Rising Sun Lodge, No. 30, A. F. & A. M., of East Providence; Providence Chapter; Providence Council; Calvary Commandery No. 13, Knights Templar; and Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine. Mr. Burlingame is also a charter member of Elmwood Lodge, No. 16, Knights of Pythias.

HUGHES. The English family of Hughes is an ancient and distinguished one, in England, and the lineage is traced to Hugh ap Piers of Dyserth and Llewellyd, County of Flint, Wales, who was living in 1588. He had by his wife Margaret two sons, Pierce of Piers and Walter. The latter had a number of children who died without issue, therefore the family descends from the first son, Pierce, who died in 1688, and who married Sarah, daughter of Abraham Dean, Esq., of Ballytrent and St. Margarets, County Wexford. The name has long been identified with the industrial, social and political life of the town of Johnston, through Thomas Henry Hughes and his son Theodore S. Hughes, the latter now one of the substantial business men and manufacturers of that town.

Thomas Henry Hughes, the progenitor of this branch of the family in America, embarked for America in 1839 and on arrival first located at Pawtucket where he was employed in the capacity of a printer of cotton and silk goods, in which work he was especially skillful. He possessed an excellent knowledge of the textile industry and was familiar with a number of the different branches. In 1849 he removed to Johnston where he founded the village of Hughesdale, and in 1850 established the Hughesdale Dye & Chemical Works. Here were manufactured various dye stuffs, which found a ready market. The industry was successfully conducted until merged into other lines. Hughesdale, the village founded by Mr. Hughes, has an interesting history which displays the resource, energy and tenacity of purpose of its founder. It is situated in a picturesque location, lying between Potasset on the north and Thornton on the south, and is destined to better things as the city of Providence continues its growth, as it is admirably situated either for manufacturing sites or as a residence district. James F. Simmons, in the early forties began a bleaching business in this location, and a few years later sold his interests to Thomas H. Hughes and James Walch. Later Mr. Hughes became sole proprietor, and began the manufacture of chemicals for textile purposes. In May, 1868, he suffered great loss by a flood which nearly, or quite, destroyed the entire village, including mills, plant, homes, etc. Undaunted, however, Mr. Hughes at once set about erecting new buildings and in a short time Hughesdale became a village entirely new and of much greater pretensions. In 1871 the business of Mr. Hughes was organized into a stock company, the same being styled The Hughesdale Manufacturing Company. The stock was closely held, and Mr. Hughes was its president; Mr. T. S. Hughes, treasurer; and Mr. W. H. Hughes, secretary. They conducted a business of about $100,000 per year, and gave employment to some sixty men. Mr. Hughes married, in 1846, Mary, daughter of Nathan Smith, a native of England, and one of the first block printers coming to America, and who, like Thomas Henry Hughes, did much to advance this industry during its earliest history in New England. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hughes were: William H., who died in Hughesdale; Thomas F., who died in Boston; Theodore S.; Oscar L., who resides in Pawtucket, R. I.; Harold E., who resides in Pittsfield; and Alfred E., who resides in Southbridge, Mass. Mr. Hughes died June 11, 1884, and was buried in Swan Point cemetery, as also was his widow, who survived him till 1902, when she died in Fall River, Massachusetts.

THEODORE S. HUGHES, son of Thomas Henry Hughes, was born Feb. 10, 1853. He received such educational advantages as were common to the youth of the period. Inheriting a thrifty, progressive industrious spirit at the age of sixteen he became a business man, establishing a general store at Hughesdale. In 1872, when nineteen years of age, he was appointed postmaster of the village. In 1871 he became a factor in his father's business, and in 1878 was elected treasurer of the Hughesdale Manufacturing Company. At the death of his father he succeeded to the business which, in 1892, was consolidated with the Bradford Soap Works, and he has since conducted the enterprise in a manner highly satisfactory. Mr. Hughes is clearly deserving of his success. He began hard work when many another youth was spending his time in amusement. His business training was along difficult and rigorous lines, and he learned thoroughly every detail of whatever enterprise he was identified with, truly beginning at the bottom or most humble position, and rising to the most responsible. Nor have his time and abilities been entirely occupied with his personal advancement. He has served his town in various official capacities, including those of school committeeman and trustee, president of the town council in 1889, member of State Legislature for five years, going in as representative in 1899, and in 1901 as senator. As a citizen Mr. Hughes has always taken a keen interest in the advancement of the town in which his industry has been a prominent factor.

Mr. Hughes was married, in March, 1876, to Miss Rebecca, daughter of Daniel and Sarah E. Yandes, of Indianapolis, Ind., and they have two children, Thomas Yandes and Rebecca. Mrs. Hughes comes from a family that was among the earliest to settle in Indianapolis, and that has been prominent in the business and social circles of that city for many years.

WALTER SCOTT GARDNER, now living retired, is a well-known resident of Pawtucket, where for nearly forty years he was engaged in the manufacture of brooms and brushes. He is a son of Dr. Johnson and Phebe Lawton (Sisson) Gardner, and a descendant of an old New England family, the records of which are given elsewhere.

Walter Scott Gardner was born Sept. 9, 1839, in Seekonk, now East Providence, R. I., and attended the public schools there until the age of seven years. Having lost the sight of one eye as the result of cataracts on both eyes, he went in 1854 to the Perkins Institution for the Blind, South Boston, where he remained ten years, during which period he obtained a first-class education. The last three years of this time he was a teacher, and had charge of the workshop. While at this institution he learned various handicrafts, among others that of broom making. In 1865 he returned to Pawtucket, and in a shop on High street, on his father's estate, began to make brooms to order. He made a success of the business, which as the years passed increased in volume slowly but surely. In 1890 he built the present factory at the rear of No.

54 Warren avenue, where he employed a number of men in the manufacture of brooms and brushes, continuing the business until 1903, when he was succeeded by his son Frank A., who now conducts it.

Mr. Gardner enlisted in Boston during the war of the Rebellion, and went on to Washington, but was discharged from the service on account of his poor eyesight. In politics he is a Republican, but he takes no active interest in such matters beyond casting his vote. He is a member of Eureka Lodge, Knights of Pythias, at Pawtucket.

Mr. Gardner has been twice married, and by his first wife he became the father of one son, Walter A., who married Annie Musgrove, of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, and has one daughter, Marion. Walter A. Gardner is now engaged as a boss farmer on a large estate at Hyannis, Massachusetts.

On May 30, 1876, Walter Scott Gardner was married to Ellen Muir, a native of Musquodoboit, Halifax county, Nova Scotia, daughter of James and Jane (McKenzie) Muir. James Muir was a native of Aberdeen, Scotland, and his wife was a native of Nova Scotia, and of English descent. Mrs. Gardner was a resident of Boston for several years previous to her marriage to Mr. Gardner. The following children have come to this union: (1) CLARENCE EUGENE GARDNER, M. D., born Sept. 10, 1877, attended the public schools at Pawtucket until his health failed, after which he received private instructions. He entered the Philadelphia Textile School at Philadelphia, Pa., taking a course in chemistry and physics to prepare himself for a course in medicine, and graduated from there in 1897. He then entered the Medico-Chirurgical College, in the same city, graduating in 1901. During the last two years he was a special student, under Prof. Elwood R. Kirby, of the University of Pennsylvania, lecturer on surgery. The year of his graduation Dr. Gardner settled for practice in his native city, and in the short space of time since he has built up a very flourishing practice. He makes a specialty of surgery, together with his general practice. Dr. Gardner is the appointed surgeon for nineteen mills in Pawtucket and vicinity, including the largest mills. He has been very successful in his practice. On Nov. 27, 1901, he married Nellie Saywell, daughter of Alfred Saywell, of Pawtucket. (2) Viola died at the age of three months. (3) Frank Arthur, who was educated in the public schools of Pawtucket, married Margaret Cameron, a native of Scotland, and they have two children, Norma Craig, and Cameron. As before stated Frank A. Gardner carries on the business formerly conducted by his father. (4) Harry A., born Oct. 12, 1882, graduated from the Pawtucket high school in the class of 1901. He entered Brown University the following fall, taking a special chemistry course for one year, and in September, 1902, entered the University of Pennsylvania and took a course of one year in chemistry. Soon after his graduation he was employed as a chemist in Easton, Pa., for one year, resigning to accept the position of head chemist with the Kalbfleisch Company at Waterbury, Conn., a very large concern, manufacturers of heavy chemicals. He has a very responsible position, and has a large force of help under him. Harry A. Gardner while at school was very active in athletics, being an athlete of no mean ability. While in the high school he was captain of the football team and was a member of the baseball and basketball teams. At the University of Pennsylvania he was a member of the 'varsity crew, and a substitute on the 'varsity football team.

AUGUSTUS WRIGHT, a well-known and highly respected citizen of Providence, residing at No. 118 Broadway, is a representative of one of the oldest families of Rhode Island, and a descendant in the seventh generation from Henry Wright, the ancestor of the family in this State.

Henry Wright came to this country from England and was of record at Dorchester, Mass., in 1635. He was a member of the first church there. Later he removed to Providence and obtained by purchase one of the original house lots. He is said to have been a follower of Roger Williams and his neighbor from 1643 to 1676. The Christian name of his wife was Elizabeth, and their children were: Mary, born April 1, 1635; and Samuel, born Feb. 14, 1637. From Henry Wright the lineage of Augustus Wright is down through Samuel, Benjamin, Samuel, Charles and Augustus, the last named being the father of our subject. Charles Wright, the grandfather, was a resident of Smithfield, now Lincoln, serving as town clerk of that town.

Augustus Wright, son of Charles, was born Nov. 22, 1787, and resided at Lime Rock, where he followed farming in connection with lime burning. During the war of 1812 he assisted in the throwing up of the redoubt at Field's Point, for the protection of Providence. He was a member of Mt. Moriah Lodge, A. F. & A. M., at Lime Rock. Mr. Wright died May 25, 1838. He was married to Mary Harris, born Jan. 14, 1792, at Lime Rock, daughter of Simon and Keziah Harris, and she survived her husband, dying at Lime Rock, Jan. 28, 1871. Children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wright as follows: (1) Earl Aldrich, born March 28, 1813, married Minerva Sprague. He was a teamster, and resided at Providence. (2) Celinda, born March 20, 1815, died Sept. 23, 1819. (3) Orin, born Oct. 28, 1816, married Mary J. Wilbur. He went to sea when a young man, one of his voyages taking him to China, and on his return was elected town clerk of his native place, an office he held for many years. (4) Stephen, born June 25, 1819, who married Louisa D. Eaton, was a farmer and lime burner of Lime Rock, where he accumulated a large property. (5) George Waterman, born Sept. 13, 1821, married Georgina T. Sturtevant.

Augustus Wright

He was a clothing merchant, and resided at Providence. (6) William Fenner, born July 24, 1823, married Elizabeth Kent. In early life he went to Iowa and later to California, later residing at Lime Rock and Valley Falls, carrying on carpentering at the latter place until his death. (7) Augustus was born Dec. 14, 1831. (8) Mary Harris, born Aug. 23, 1833, married Reuben M. Wilbur, a grocer, and resided first in Providence and later in New Milford, Conn., in which latter place she died.

Augustus Wright, son of Augustus, was born Dec. 14, 1831, at Lime Rock. He received his early education in the district school of his native place, and this was later supplemented by attendance at a night school in Providence. At the age of sixteen, years he located in Providence and became a clerk in the clothing store of his brother, George W., on Washington Row, remaining in that capacity about thirty-five years, or until the business was removed to the corner of Westminster and Exchange streets, when he became a partner in the enterprise, the firm name becoming G. W. & A. Wright. Four years later he disposed of his interests in the business and for a time continued with his brother as a clerk, then becoming traveling salesman for Pultz & Walkley, paper bag manufacturers at Plantsville, Conn. Leaving this firm he became special agent for the Providence Telephone Company, in whose employ he continued for fifteen years.

Mr. Wright is of a very ingenious turn of mind, and has invented a number of electrical devices which are now in use and are of much value to the electrical world. For a time he was associated with others in the manufacture of these inventions under the name of the Hope Electrical Appliance Company of Providence. For the past several years, however, he has given his entire attention to his private interests, having large real estate holdings in the vicinity of his home on Broadway, where he has been a resident for over forty years.

On Nov. 18, 1858, in Providence, Mr. Wright was married to Minerva Bucklin Curry, born in Providence Aug. 21, 1838, daughter of Aaron B. and Dorcas (Greene) Curry. She died Dec. 28, 1870, the mother of four children: (1) Martha Baldwin Curry, born Sept. 21, 1859, died July 5, 1863. (2) Walter Augustus, born March 19, 1862, married Sadie S. Crane. He is a resident of Newport, where he is manager of the Newport branch of the Providence Telephone Company; he has been a member of the Newport city council, superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Channing Memorial (Unitarian) Church, and is a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Newport. (3) Minerva Bucklin Curry, born Dec. 15, 1865, married Alexander S. Fraser, who is connected with the Hall & Lyon Co., and they have one son, Alexander Easton, born in May, 1891.

(4) Aaron Curry, born June 8, 1868, is at Little Rock, Ark., where he is connected with the Little Rock Gas Company.

Mr. Wright was again married, Sept. 29, 1879, in Providence, to Ottelie Louise Ruff, born Aug. 7, 1852, at Waterville, Conn., daughter of Charles A. and Mary (Reidal) Ruff, natives of Stuttgart, Germany. Mrs. Wright is a member of Grace Episcopal Church.

Mr. Wright is a staunch Republican, but never has accepted public office, although often importuned to do so. He is a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., and Providence Chapter, R. A. M., and is also connected with the Masonic Veterans' Association. When a young man he became a member of the 1st Light Infantry. Later he became associated with the Burnside Zouaves, when they were first organized, in 1862, being one of the original members, and he was the first orderly sergeant this organization ever had. He rose to the rank of lieutenant-colonel in that organization, and held that rank when he subsequently became a member of the United Train of Artillery.

NEWTON. The town of Bristol, this Commonwealth, but long a subdivision of Massachusetts, a part of the old Colony, was the home of the family of Newtons who later located at Newport, where from generation to generation descendants have been among the town's substantial men and women and useful citizens. The tradition of the Newport family is that their ancestor, Simon Newton, a sea-captain, settled in Bristol.

The earliest of the vital records of Bristol reveal the family of John and Anne Newton, which comprised children as follows: Thomas, born March 21, 1714-15; John, Jan. 29, 1716-17; Martha, March 10, 1718-19; Simon, June 25, 1720; Daniel, Aug. 1, 1722; Anne, Feb. 27, 1724-25; Hannah, May 4, 1727; and Sarah, May 11, 1730. Captain John Newton died Jan. 2, 1747, aged fifty-seven years, and his wife May 7, 1770, aged seventy-six years, which would make them born in 1690 and 1694, respectively.

The records of the Colony of Rhode Island show that Simon Newton of Newport was admitted a freeman in the Colony in May, 1743, and that he married Jan. 27, 1740-41, Mrs. Mary Richardson, and their children, baptized in the Second Congregational Church, in which the father was a deacon, were: Martha, born June 17, 1750; Simon, Oct. 27, 1751; Thomas, April 21, 1754; Elizabeth, April 10, 1757; Keziah, Sept. 10, 1758; Simon, Feb. 10, 1760; and Sarah, Aug. 22, 1762. The father died in 1808, aged eighty-nine years, his death being noticed in the Newport Gazette of Jan. 30th of that year, and Mrs. Newton in 1810, her death being noticed in the Gazette of May 19th.

Public records show that John Newton married May 10, 1765, Abigail Rogers, and the same church records cited above give the following as their children: Mary, born Jan. 10, 1768; Abigail, Aug. 27, 1769; Martha, June 23, 1771; Simon, May 2, 1773; and Elizabeth Eaton, March 12, 1775.

Simon Newton, son of John and Abigail, grandson of Simon and Mary, and great-grandson of John and Ann of Bristol, baptized May 2, 1773, married in October, 1798, Elizabeth Davenport, daughter of Gideon Davenport. Mr. Newton, as had been a number of his ancestors before him, was a sea-faring man—a master of vessels. He lived and died in Newport, his death occurring Nov. 27, 1862, in the ninetyeth year of his age.

James Rogers Newton, son of Simon and Elizabeth, was born in Newport, R. I., and died in New York City, Aug. 7, 1883, aged seventy-two years. He was one of the "forty-niners" of California, where he spent several years engaged in the wholesale grocery business. He later returned East, where the remainder of his life was spent. He married Betsy Viall Hammett, daughter of John Viall and Louisa Davenport Hammett of Newport, and she died in Newport, Jan. 20, 1891, aged seventy-seven years, one month, twenty-six days.

DUDLEY NEWTON, son of the late James Rogers and Betsy Viall (Hammett) Newton, was born Jan. 4, 1845, in Newport, and acquired his early educational training in the public and private schools of his native city. Upon leaving school at the age of about fifteen years, he entered the office of the late George C. Mason, under whom he acquired a thorough knowledge of architecture, continuing under that gentleman's instruction until he had reached his twenty-first year, when he engaged in business on his own account, opening an office for the practice of his profession in 1866. Mr. Newton continued actively engaged in architectural work until a few years prior to his death, when he retired from active business. Many of Newport's beautiful homes and substantial business blocks stand to-day as monuments to the architectural skill and genius of Mr. Newton.

Mr. Newton was a member of St. John's Lodge No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Newport. For a number of years he served as director of the Aquidneck National Bank of Newport. In his political views he was a staunch Republican, but he had never sought public recognition. Mr. Newton was a member of the United Congregational Church, of which Mrs. Newton is also a member.

On March 2, 1876, Mr. Newton was married to Mary Elizabeth Bailey, daughter of Captain Samuel Cahoon and Susan (Townsend) Bailey, and to this union three children were born: Elizabeth Cahoon, at home; Dudley, Jr., who has succeeded his father as an architect, and who married Amy Ethel Smith, of Newport, and has two children; and Samuel Bailey, unmarried, who is in business in Seattle, Washington.

Dudley Newton was a descendant on his maternal side of Isaac Allerton, who came to America on the "Mayflower," and settled in Plymouth Colony, of which he became assistant governor. Mr. Newton passed away at his home in Newport, March 28, 1907, where he enjoyed the respect of the community in which his life had been spent.

HENRY ARNOLD BURLINGAME, one of the well-known, successful citizens of North Providence, and for over twenty-five years previous to its dissolution in 1905 a member of the firm of Burlingame & Whipple, Providence, is a descendant of one of the oldest families of the State.

Roger Burlingame, the remote ancestor of the family in Rhode Island, came to America from England, locating first at Stonington, Conn., later removing to Providence Plantations. He became the owner of about 500 acres of land, some of which is now comprised within the city limits of Providence. His death occurred in 1718. To him and his wife Mary were born: Peter, Roger, John Thomas, and several daughters. The lineage of Henry A. Burlingame is traced down through John (son of Roger), David, Benedict, David, Asahel and Daniel B. (the latter being the father of Henry A.).

Benedict Burlingame was a farmer and resided in Glocester.

David Burlingame, son of Benedict, was also a farmer, and resided in early life about three-fourths of a mile northeast of the village of Harmony, town of Glocester. Subsequently he purchased a tract of wood land of about 100 acres in North Scituate, which he cleared, and there made his home. He lived to be ninety-two years old, an active and rugged man until the last, and was buried in a private yard upon his farm. He was considered a successful man for those times, as well as a man of influence and prominence. For a brief time he saw service in the Revolution, being present at the battle of Rhode Island, when the British attempted an invasion. He married Mary Inman, whom he survived for many years. Their children were: Asahel; Celinda, who married Rev. Pardon Tillinghast, a Baptist clergyman, and resided at East Greenwich; and Polly, who married James Wilbur, a bobbin turner of South Scituate, and died Oct. 27, 1818, aged thirty-one years.

Asahel Burlingame, only son of his parents, was born in Scituate, and spent his entire life on the farm on which he was born. He added to the acreage of the home farm, and became a large land holder, being, like his father a hardworking man and successful in agricultural pursuits. He lived to be ninety-two years old, and retained his mental and physical faculties to the time of his death. In his political views he was first a Whig and later a Republican, but would never consent to hold office. On Dec. 2, 1813, Asahel Burlingame married Phebe, daughter of John Hawkins, of Glocester, and she was eighty-six years old at the time of her death. The children born to this union were: William Henry, who married (first) Julia Searles, and (second) Sarah Swarts, was a carpenter by trade, and resided first in Glocester and later in Johnston, dying at the latter place; Cyrus P. is mentioned elsewhere in this work; and Daniel B.

Daniel B. Burlingame, a highly respected citizen of Scituate, was born in that town, and early in life learned the trade of wheelwright by apprenticeship to a man in Harmony. He followed this occupation for a number of years, continuing to reside in Harmony, where he was for a time in partnership with his brother, Cyrus P., in the store business. In May, 1869, he located at Providence, and for a time was a hay buyer for Johnson & Whaley, who conducted a hay, grain, coal and wood business, and about one year later he engaged in the wholesaling of hay on his own account, operating a baling-press in St. Johns, Canada, for a time, and having his son, Henry A., as a partner under the firm name of D. B. Burlingame & Son. This business was successfully carried on for several years, when Mr. Burlingame removed to Pennellville, N. Y., and for about a year was engaged in buying hay, grain and potatoes for the city market. He then settled on the home farm in North Scituate, where he is at present engaged in general farming and in the wood business. He is a Republican in politics, and has served on the town school committee.

Mr. Burlingame was married in 1847 to Waitey Sweet Arnold, born in Glocester, R. I., daughter of James and Lucia (Page) Arnold, and to this union were born two sons: Henry A.; and William M., a teamster of North Scituate, who married Maria Towner.

Henry Arnold Burlingame was born Jan. 13, 1850, in Scituate, and was a small boy when his parents removed to the town of Glocester. From the age of seven until he was nineteen years of age he made his home in Harmony, his education being acquired in the district schools, and as a boy assisted his father in the store, and was later a clerk for his uncle in the store at Harmony. At the age of nineteen years Mr. Burlingame came to Providence, beginning work in the hardware store of Harrington & Briggs on High street, now Westminster, where he remained for two years, and, at this time, feeling the necessity of a better education, he entered the Lapham Institute at North Scituate, which he attended for two terms. He then engaged in the hay business with his father, and later became associated with S. C. Harris for a time in the same business, the firm name being H. A. Burlingame & Co. Subsequently Mr. Burlingame's father became associated with him under the firm name of D. B. Burlingame & Son, but after a time this partnership was dissolved, and Henry A. Burlingame went to Chapinville, N. Y., where he was engaged at farming for one year, returning in 1880 to Rhode Island. Forming a partnership with Bryon S. Whipple, he engaged in the coal, wood, hay and grain business under the firm name of Burlingame & Whipple at Nos. 290-292 Smith street, Providence, and this firm continued until the latter part of 1905, when it was dissolved, and the firm went out of business after a prosperous existence of a quarter of a century, during all of which time the most pleasant relations existed between the partners. Since 1882 Mr. Burlingame has resided in North Providence, at his present place on Fruit Hill avenue, which was formerly a part of the Stephen Whipple farm. He has erected greenhouses, and, in addition to the wholesaling of hay, is engaged in the growing of early cucumbers.

On July 14, 1875, Mr. Burlingame was married to Ella L. Potter, born in Glocester, daughter of Philip and Ann F. (Mowry) Potter, and two children were born to this union: (1) Milton Earl, born Dec. 27, 1877, completed his education at the Bryant & Stratton Business College, and is connected with his father in the hot house business. He married Saide Alice Rogers, and they have one son, Adin Arnold, born Oct. 21, 1902. (2) Inez Potter, Mr. Henry A. Burlingame's other child, was born June 7, 1883. In politics Mr. Burlingame is a Republican, and for three years served as a member of the town school committee of North Providence. He takes little interest in politics, however, and has frequently declined office. He has always applied himself very closely to business, and is a successful business man, he and his family being highly esteemed in the community in which they reside.

POTTER. Mrs. Henry A. Burlingame is a descendant in the ninth generation from (I) Robert Potter, the ancestor of this branch of the family in Rhode Island, and mentioned in detail elsewhere in this publication.

(II) John Potter, son of Robert, married Ruth Fisher.

(III) John Potter, son of John, married Jane Burlingame.

(IV) Fisher Potter, son of John (2), married Mary Winsor, a great-granddaughter of Roger Williams through his daughter Mercy, who for her second husband married Samuel Winsor.

(V) Samuel Potter, son of Fisher, born in Cranston, R. I., Jan. 10, 1731, married (first) Abigail, and (second) Sarah, and died March 26, 1789, the father of these children: Sprague, who married Mary Potter; Jesse; James, who married Amy Steere; Abigail, who died unmarried; and Wanton, who married Mary Burlingame.

(VI) Jesse Potter, son of Samuel, married Deborah Steere, daughter of Jeremiah and Mary (Wade) Steere, and their children were: Samuel; Mary, who married Jeremiah Keach; Nancy, who married Mathewson Winsor; Lydia, who married William Hines; Ada, who married Christopher Winsor, and Ruth, who married Nathan Irons.

(VII) Samuel Potter, son of Jesse, was born Aug. 29, 1786, and married March 27, 1811, Urania Keach, born in 1788, who died in 1881. Samuel Potter died Feb. 22, 1873, the father of the following children: William S., who married Isabella Irons; George R., who died unmarried; Samuel, Jr., who married Mary Corey; Emma Jane, widow of Charles King, of Gloucester; Henry B., who married Lucy Wade, and died in Providence; Daniel, who died unmarried; Philip; Jesse, who married Miranda Sheldon, and was killed in California by the explosion of a vessel; and Harriet Minor, widow of George W. Wilson, residing at Morenci, Michigan.

(VIII) Philip Potter, son of Samuel, was born in Gloucester, March 7, 1827, and in early life learned the trade of carpenter. He later worked at the machinist's trade, and for some years was engaged in hotel keeping in Burrillville, North Scituate and Johnston. He again worked as a machinist in the mills at Olneyville for a number of years, and his death occurred in Johnston, July 23, 1894. He was married in January, 1849, to Ann F. Mowry, born Nov. 28, 1826, daughter of Captain Smith and Mahala (Edwards) Mowry. Mrs. Potter survived her husband, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Burlingame, Oct. 4, 1902, being buried beside her husband in the Acotes Hill cemetery at Chepachet. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Potter, namely: Albert E., born Oct. 25, 1850, who was engaged in the hotel business, in addition to the livery business in Johnston, where he died Oct. 12, 1900, unmarried; and Ella L., born March 14, 1856, who married Henry A. Burlingame.

Ann F. (Mowry) Potter, mother of Mrs. Henry A. Burlingame, was a descendant in the seventh generation from Roger Mowry, the ancestor of the family in Rhode Island, the line traced back being through Captain Smith, Gideon, Uriah, Henry, Nathaniel and Roger. Captain Smith Mowry, Mrs. Potter's father, was a farmer and millwright, and spent his entire life in Gloucester, R. I. He was a man of ability and good character, and brought up a large family of children, all of whom made for themselves an honorable record. Captain Smith Mowry was captain of a company of militia during the war of 1812, and was a prominent man in Gloucester for many years.

ANDREW LUTHER, one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Burrillville, residing at Bridgeton, descends from the old Swansea (Mass.)-Providence county family, which is out-lined more fully on other pages of this record.

Elisha Luther, his grandfather, resided in the town of Johnston, R. I., where he followed the occupations of farmer and trader. He married Sarah Mathewson, who bore him three children, two sons and one daughter, as follows: Andrew; Delia, who married Horace Randall, and resided in Scituate; and Consider, who removed to the State of New York and there died, leaving descendants.

Andrew Luther, son of Elisha, was born in Johnston July 2, 1802, and there learned the occupation of shoemaker, which he followed throughout life. After his marriage he removed to North Scituate, his death occurring at that place April 7, 1849, and there he was buried. He was married May 16, 1830, to Patience Smith Randall, a native of Johnston, daughter of Henry and Mary Randall. Some years after her husband's death Mrs. Luther went to the State of Iowa to make her home with a daughter, and there married a Mr. Robinson, after whose death she returned to Rhode Island, making her home with her son, Andrew, until her death, June 1, 1884, in her eightieth year. Her children, all by her first marriage, were as follows: (1) Elisha, born Aug. 16, 1831, died Jan. 5, 1832. (2) Ardelia, born Sept. 29, 1832, married March 30, 1850, Albert Bucklin, who died Jan. 3, 1888, and she is now a resident of Mystic, Conn. She had children as follows: Albert A., born March 28, 1851, who married Margaretta A. Miller and resides at Rockville, Conn.; Susan E., born June 7, 1853, who married Noieton Taft, of Providence, and George L., born March 26, 1858, who died unmarried. (3) Andrew was born Oct. 18, 1833. (4) Patience, born Jan. 29, 1836, died Feb. 7, 1836. (5) Sarah Ann, twin to Patience, married Sept. 28, 1852, David F. Phillips, and is now a widow, residing at Providence. They had children: Sarah F., born Nov. 18, 1854, now the wife of Eugene Ward, of Westerly, R. I.; Leander, born June 22, 1857, who died Oct. 24, 1865, and Andrew D., born Aug. 26, 1859, who married Lillian Mowry and resides in Gloucester. (6) Susan Frances, born Oct. 29, 1838, died Jan. 29, 1840.

Andrew Luther was born Oct. 18, 1833, at North Scituate, and left home at the age of nine years, since which time he has been self-supporting. His first work was for a Mr. Reynolds, a farmer in Gloucester, with whom he remained for one year, then spending several years in the home of Darling E. Sweet, another farmer in that town. He was called upon to do hard work, his remuneration being only his board and clothes, while his opportunities for an education were limited to a few months' attendance each year at the district school. In about 1849 he came to Burrillville and began work in the spindle shop of Augustus Hopkins, where he remained a most faithful employee for twenty-six years. He was careful with his earnings, and when ready to engage in business was able, with Benjamin Whiteley as a partner, to purchase a one-half interest in the Laurel Hill grocery store, the firm becoming Whiteley & Luther. Several years later Mr. Luther sold his interest to Edward Eddy, one of the clerks, and the firm name was changed to Whiteley & Eddy. Less than one year afterward, however, Mr. Luther purchased the entire business, which he conducted alone for a few years, and then sold an interest to his former partner, Mr. Whiteley, the old firm name of Whiteley & Luther being resumed. In 1891 the firm was dissolved and the stock sold to Joshua Perkins, Mr. Luther retiring from active business to devote his attention to real estate and his own private affairs. He is a staunch Republican, and has been quite prominent in town affairs. He overcame a Democratic majority upon his election as senator from Burrillville, and served as such in 1895 and 1896 and again in 1904 and 1905, finally declining a renomination. He has served three years as president of the town council, as tax assessor for a number of years, and in other minor offices. He has been frequently called upon to settle estates and to serve as guardian or trustee. Mr. Luther is a member of Granite Lodge, No. 26, A. F. & A. M., and has served as treasurer thereof for over twenty years. He is one of the trustees of the Laurel Hill Methodist Church, and has been quite active in the conduct of its affairs. Mrs. Luther also belongs to that denomination.

Andrew Luther was married, Oct. 25, 1854, to Phebe Mowry Smith, born Dec. 30, 1835, in Gloucester, daughter of Col. George and Uranah (Steere) Smith, the former of whom came to Gloucester from Belchertown, Mass.; he was for a number of years colonel of the local militia in Gloucester. Uranah, his wife, was a daughter of Judge Samuel and Phebe (Smith) Steere, the former one of the most prominent citizens of Gloucester in his day.

Mr. and Mrs. Luther have had one son, Charles Burnside, who was born Feb. 14, 1862. He received his education in the public schools of Burrillville, and also graduated from the East Greenwich Academy and the Eastman Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. For a few years after leaving school he was in the employ of his father, gaining valuable practical business experience, but after the latter disposed of his interests Charles B. went to Boston, where for about one year he was engaged in the crockery business. He then entered the employ of the Payne Furniture Company, with whom he remained until organizing the firm of Frothingham, Heffernan & Co., wholesalers and retail dealers in carpets on Washington street, Boston. Though the silent partner in this establishment he is the dominating spirit. He married Nellie E. Presbey, of Rockville, Conn., and they have had two children: Nelson Andrew, who died in infancy; and Gordon Presbey, born May 31, 1903. Charles B. Luther became a member of Granite Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Pascoag.

GREENE (Middletown family). At the old family homestead called "Greenesdale," in the town of Middletown, this State, there still resides a representative of what is here styled, for the purpose of designation, the Middletown Greene family. Greenesdale was purchased in 1836 by the late Nathaniel Ray Greene, a son of the distinguished Maj.-Gen. Nathanael Greene of Revolutionary fame. He was succeeded in its ownership by his son, the late Dr. Nathanael Greene, who was for years a substantial man and prominent citizen of the vicinity of Newport. At the death of Dr. Greene his niece Mary Ward Greene inherited this estate and now resides there. A brief sketch of this man and of his Greene lineage, follows, the order being chronological from the American ancestor.

(1) John Greene, an English surgeon, son of Richard and Mary (Hooker) Greene, grandson of Richard and great-grandson of Robert Greene, was born on his father's estate at Bowridge Hill, in the parish of Gillingham, County of Dorset, England, about 1590. His forefathers had been residents of Bowridge Hill for nearly an hundred years before him, and Robert Greene it seems probable was descended from a younger branch of the powerful and wealthy family of Greenes of Northamptonshire. This surgeon John Greene had early removed to Sarum (Salisbury), the county town of Wiltshire, where, at St. Thomas's Church, Nov. 4, 1619, he was married to Joanne Tattershall, who was the mother of all his children, seven in number, and all of whom were baptized at St. Thomas's Church. Mr. Greene here lived and followed his profession for sixteen years, when, in 1635, with his wife and six children, he sailed in the ship "James" for New England, and arrived in Boston June 3d of that year. He first settled at Salem, where he was associated with Roger Williams and where he purchased or built a house, but soon after Mr. Williams' flight from Salem (1636) he sold it, joined Williams at Providence and secured his home lot No. 15 on the main street. Surgeon Greene was one of the eleven men baptized by Roger Williams, and one of the twelve original members of the first Baptist Church on the continent, organized at Providence, R. I. He was the first professional medical man in Providence Plantations. Mrs. Joanne Greene died soon after the family's removal to Rhode Island and Surgeon Greene married (second) Alice Daniels, a widow, and in 1642-43 they removed to Warwick, R. I. After the death of his wife Alice he married (third) in London, England, about 1644, Phillipa, who returned with him to Warwick, R. I., in 1646. The third Mrs. Greene died March 11, 1687, in Warwick.

Surgeon Greene made the first purchase by the English of land in Warwick, R. I., to whom was deeded the tract of land (700 acres) Oct. 11, 1642, called Occupasuetuxet by the chief sachem of the Narragansetts and the local sachem of Pawtuxet, and upon it was an actual resident in September, 1644, and his family held it for 140 and more years, when it was sold, Oct. 6, 1782, by his great-great-grandchildren. Surgeon Greene was a prominent man in the public affairs of the town and Colony, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of his associates through a long and active political life, holding office almost continuously until the summer before his death, when he declined to accept the office of commissioner. He died and was buried at Conimicut, Warwick, the first week in January, 1659. His children were: John, Peter, Richard, James, Thomas, Jane and Mary.

(II) James Greene, "of Potowomut," baptized June 21, 1626, came to New England with his parents. He married (first) about 1658 Deliverance, born in 1637, daughter of Robert Potter and wife Isabel. (Robert Potter was the ancestor of Bishop Potter of New York and Pennsylvania.) She died in 1664, and he married (second) Aug. 3, 1665, Elizabeth, daughter of John and Susannah Anthony, of Portsmouth, R. I. She died in 1698. James Greene was made a freeman of Warwick and Providence Plantations in 1647, and resided at Old Warwick. He was a member of the General Assembly of the Colony, being commissioner under the first charter and deputy and assistant under the second (1663) for ten years, between 1660 and 1675. He was considered a man of much practical sagacity. On the outbreak of the Indian war, 1675-76, the inhabitants of Warwick left the town and Mr. Greene fled to Portsmouth, and in 1684, having made purchases of Warwick land, he removed to Potowomut, where was an ancient mill, and built his home on the hill near the west bank of the river overlooking the beautiful lake, which furnished the water-power for the forge which his grandsons (sons of Jabez) established for making anchors and other forms of iron work. This became a notable industry in Colonial times and in the early days of the republic. The interests of the forge "were enhanced by the revival after peace existed between England and her emancipated Colonies, and this became the pioneer of the more extensive works on the Pawtuxet river, near the western border of Warwick, known as 'the Forge.'" The place at Potowomut, where James Greene resided until his death, was the birth place of his great-grandson, the highly distinguished Nathanael Greene of the Revolutionary army, and the residence of his descendants for more than two hundred years. He died "at his mansion in Potowomut," April 27, 1698, in the seventy-second year of his age. The issue of the first marriage of James Greene were: James, Mary, Elisha and Sarah; and of the second marriage: Peter, Elizabeth, John, Jabez, David, John and Susanna.

(III) Jabez Greene, "of Potowomut," born Nov. 17, 1673, in Portsmouth, R. I., married (first) March 17, 1697-98, Mary, daughter of Benjamin and Susanna (Gorton) Barton and granddaughter of the Warwick pioneer, Samuel Gorton. She died March 6, 1712-13, and he married (second) May 23, 1716, Grace, daughter of Valentine Whittman, of Providence. Mr. Greene inherited and resided at the Potowomut homestead. He was admitted a freeman of Warwick May 5, 1696. He was a Quaker and a meeting of the Society of Friends is of record as held at his house Dec. 3, 1699. He inherited also the Forge at Potowomut, where his six sons and his grandchildren carried on the successful industry of manufacturing anchors and other iron work as late as 1820. Jabez Greene was grandfather of the distinguished Maj.-Gen. Nathanael Greene. The children of the first marriage were: James, Benjamin, Jabez, Nathanael, John and Rufus; and of the second: Mary.

(IV) Nathanael* Greene, son of Jabez, born Nov. 4, 1707, married (first) Sept. 13, 1733, Phebe Greene, his second cousin. She died May 3, 1737, and he married (second) April 18, 1739, Mary, born April 25, 1708, daughter of Jacob and Rest (Perry) Mott, and granddaughter of Jacob Mott, Sr., both of whom were deputies from the town of Portsmouth, R. I. The family were Quakers, the elder Jacob being one of four who built the first Quaker meeting-house in the town of Dartmouth, Mass. Adam Mott, their ancestor, came from Cambridgeshire, England, in the ship "Defence" in 1635.

Nathanael Greene inherited the homestead of his father and grandfather, on the banks of the river. As well as being engaged in the iron works with his brothers he was a Quaker preacher. He died in October, 1768, and was buried in the old Friends meeting-house lot at East Greenwich. He married as his third wife Mary Gardiner. His children were: Benjamin, Thomas (both born to the first marriage), Jacob, Phebe, Nathanael, William, Elihu, Christopher, and Perry (all born to the second marriage).

(V) MAJ.-GEN. NATHANAEL GREENE, son of Nathanael and Mary (Mott) Greene, was born July 27, 1742, at Potowomut, in the town of Warwick, R. I., and his early education and training were in keeping with the views of his father, that his boys should only receive an elementary training, and each in turn he trained to work at the old forge mill, hence young Nathanael, like his brothers, was engaged in the manufacture of iron, the business being regarded in the light of a family partnership, whose members from a feeling of Quaker humility called themselves "blacksmiths." In 1740 Nathanael's father and the other five sons of Jabez Greene had become owners of the entire mill property. The old forge at Potowomut, near the family homestead, had been most successfully operated, and, in 1741, they built another at Coventry which was equally successful, and in full operation before Nathanael's birth. Its prosperity gave over one hundred families employment, the village being named Greenville. Later Nathanael and his five brothers established the larger forge on the southwest branch of the Pawtuxet river in Coventry, which was also for many years in successful operation.

Notwithstanding his business activity the younger Nathanael Greene found time to acquire a large amount of general information, making a special study of mathematics, history and law. Says Prof. John Fiske, in his American Revolution: "From lowly beginnings he had come to be, though still a young man, the most admired and respected citizen of Rhode Island. He had begun life as a blacksmith, but, inspired by an intense thirst for knowledge, he had soon become a learned blacksmith, well versed in history, philosophy and literature." This phraseology might mislead were it not a fact and known that the American ancestor, John Greene, surgeon, and his son, John, deputy-governor of the Colony of Rhode Island, were men of distinction in Old and New England, and that the books of "The Forge" firm showed large accounts for anchors, cables and heavy iron work, amounting to thousands of pounds, which at that period represented wealth.

In his boyhood and early manhood Nathanael Greene was involuntarily a member of the Society of Friends, his father being a leading preacher. In 1773 he attended a military meeting, and for engaging in the military drills he encountered a remonstrance from the Quaker authorities, and after due consideration he was excluded from their Society. After his removal to Coventry he became active in organizing the first public schools of that place, and was deeply interested in all educational matters. In April, 1770, he was elected deputy to the General Assembly from Coventry, and served almost continuously until he was made a Brigadier-general in the Continental army, and he was not again in Coventry after the war broke out. In 1774 he was influential in forming the military company known as the "Kentish Guards," at East Greenwich. In December of the same year he, with four others, was appointed by the General Assembly to revise the militia laws of the Colony. "This was the commencement," wrote the late Gen. George Sears Greene, "of his military career, from which he rose to a military rank and esteem second to none but the commander-in-chief in a contest with the mother country, renowned for her military prowess." It is not within the province of this work to follow the life of General Greene through the Revolution. This is familiar history. [See sketches of the Life and Correspondence of Nathanael Greene, by William Johnson, 1822; and Life of General Nathanael Greene, by G. W. Greene, 3 Vols.] The General's career has been most worthily portrayed by his talented grandson, the late Hon. George Washington Greene, of East Greenwich, R. I. In one of his able articles, "The United States Army," published in Scribner's Monthly, September, 1901, Gen. Francis Vinton Greene quotes the following from the late Prof. John Fiske: "In every campaign since the beginning of the war, Greene had been Washington's right arm, and for indefatigable industry, for strength and breadth of intelligence, and for unselfish devotion to the public service, he was scarcely inferior to the commander-in-chief."

After the close of the Revolution, General Greene removed his residence from Rhode Island to Georgia, where at "Mulberry Grove," June 19, 1786, he died suddenly when but at the meridian of life. This Georgia estate had been confiscated and was a part of a large body of land given to General Greene by the Legislature of that State. "Mulberry Grove" was one of the finest plantations of those days, situated on the Savannah river some twelve miles from the city of Savannah. General Greene's death was from a congestive chill induced by exposure to the hot sun when unprotected. Maj.-Gen. Anthony Wayne, who was with him when he died, in notifying the authorities of Savannah of the sad event, said: "He was great as a soldier, greater as a citizen, immaculate as a friend. The honors, the greatest honor of war, are due to his memory."

A monument was erected to the memory of General Greene by the people of Georgia in Johnson Square, Savannah, March 21, 1825, the cornerstone being laid by his deeply attached friend, the Marquis de LaFayette. In 1877 an equestrian statue was erected in Sherman Square, east of the capitol, at Washington, D. C.

On July 20, 1774, General Greene was married to Katherine, daughter of John and Phebe (Ray) Littlefield, of New Shoreham, Block Island, R. I., who was born in 1755 and died Sept. 2, 1814. Their children were: George Washington, Martha Washington, Cornelia Lott, Nathaniel Ray and Louisa Catherine.

(VI) NATHANIEL RAY GREENE, son of Maj.-Gen. Nathanael Greene, was born Jan. 29, 1780, at Morristown, N. J., at that time the headquarters of the Continental army, where his father was stationed. After the war, his father removed to the State of Georgia. The latter dying when he was but six years of age, he continued to live on his mother's estate in Georgia, later lived in East Greenwich, R. I., and in still later life removed to "Greenesdale," Middletown, R. I., where he died June 11, 1859.

On Sept. 9, 1808, Mr. Greene married Anna Maria, born Nov. 8, 1783, in Newport, R. I., daughter of Ethan Clarke and his wife Anna (Ward), daughter of Gov. Samuel Ward. Mrs. Greene was a woman of great excellence and strength of character, was highly educated, of great vivacity and courteousness, which was unailing until within a few weeks of the close of her graceful life, Jan. 17, 1886, at "Greenesdale," Middletown, R. I., at the advanced age of 102 years. When she rounded the century she was strong enough to receive and entertain her friends most charmingly. Her funeral services were held at the Union Congregational Church, Newport, and were attended by many of the representative people of the city and State. She was buried beside her husband in Newport. Their children were: Nathaniel, born June 22, 1809; and George Washington, born April 11, 1811.

(VII) DR. NATHANIEL GREENE, son of Nathaniel Ray Greene, was born at Dungeness, Cumberland Island, Ga., June 22, 1809. He passed much of his boyhood at East Greenwich, R. I., where his parents removed soon after his birth. In 1824 he entered as freshman Amherst College, and the next year entered Brown as Sophomore, but left college before completing his Junior year. He studied medicine with Drs. Peck and Clark, in Oneida county, N. Y., for about one year, and then returned to East Greenwich and completed his medical course under Charles Eldredge of that town. He engaged in farming for some years, his family being large land owners, but in 1848 took up the practice of medicine. Dr. Greene was greatly respected as a man of high character and tone, and worthy of his race and antecedents. He commanded the company of volunteers raised in Portsmouth and Middletown for the service of the State against the Dorr government, and afterward was captain of a company of cavalry, with the rank of colonel. For several years he was president of the Aquidneck Agricultural Society, and was State senator, 1848-1851. On July 4, 1878, he was chosen president of the Rhode Island Society of the Cincinnati, an office he held until the time of his death.

On Dec. 17, 1827, Dr. Greene was married to Mary Jane, daughter of Col. William and Harriet (Gibbs) Moore, of Newport, and soon after removed to Middletown. He died at his home, "Greenesdale," Middletown, July 8, 1899, soon after his ninetieth birthday. His wife died a few years previously. They left no issue.

EAST GREENWICH BRANCH—(VII) PROF. GEORGE WASHINGTON GREENE, son of Nathaniel Ray and brother of Dr. Nathaniel, was born April 8, 1811, in East Greenwich, R. I. He became a man of letters, was honored as the historian of his State, and was the author of historical and biographical works, among them the "Life of General Nathanael Greene," (called by Charles Sumner "a monument more enduring than marble") his distinguished grandfather. He was United States consul at Rome, 1837-45. During his residence in East Greenwich he represented that town in the General Assembly many years and was active in all public work there.

On Feb. 9, 1852, Professor Greene was married to Catherine Van Buren, born Aug. 16, 1831, second daughter of John Addison and Anne Porter, of Catskill, N. Y. Mrs. Greene was a lady of great brilliancy of mind and a most agreeable companion, and was beloved and respected by a large circle of friends. On her paternal side she was a lineal descendant of John Porter, who came to Massachusetts Bay from England in 1637, and who was sixteenth in descent from William de la Grand, a Norman knight who went with the army of the Norman duke, at the time of the Conquest, 1066. He acquired lands near Kenilworth, Warwickshire, England, and his son, Ralph, was made "Grand Portur" to King Henry I., 1120-1140. In the sixth generation from John (1637) was David Porter, D. D., pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Catskill, N. Y., for twenty-eight years. Addison, his eldest son, was the father of John Addison Porter, the father of Mrs. Greene. John Addison was Professor of Chemistry in Harvard, Brown and Yale Universities.

On her maternal side Mrs. Greene was a lineal descendant of the American ancestor, Evert Zugcassen, who came from Amsterdam, Holland, and purchased land, from the Indians, at Kinderhook in 1665. Professor Greene died Feb. 2, 1883, at East Greenwich, R. I., and was buried near his father at Newport, R. I. His children were: Anna Maria, Catherine Porter, Mary Ward, Nathaniel and George Washington.

(VIII) MARY WARD GREENE, the present owner of "Greenesdale," Middletown, was born in Tarrytown, N. Y., March 29, 1860, and was educated in public schools and at the Academy in East Greenwich, where she lived at that time. After her father's death in 1883 she moved to Philadelphia, from which place in 1885 she went to the West, where for several years she was engaged in missionary work among the Indians, being stationed both at Santee, Neb., and Santa Fe, N. Mex. Later under the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, she went to Persia, Asia, where she taught for several years until her health compelled her to return to America. On the event of his wife's death, in 1897, she came to reside with her uncle, Dr. Nathaniel Greene, and when he died she inherited the estate, "Greenesdale," which she superintends as a farm. She has many most interesting relics of her distinguished great-grandfather, General Nathanael Greene—his sword being the most highly valued. She is an ardent woman suffragist.

GEORGE MENDOL CARPENTER, who is now living retired on his excellent farm in the town of Cumberland, was born on the old homestead, on Diamond Hill road, May 10, 1833, a member of the old Carpenter family, one of long standing in Rhode Island and the adjoining New England States.

The pedigree of the American Carpenter family is traced by the genealogist of the family to John Carpenter, 1300, from whom the lineage of William, the emigrant settler in America, is through Richard, John (2), John (3), William, James, John (4), William (2), and William Carpenter (3), a resident of London, who accompanied his son William, the settler, to this country, but who himself returned to England in the same vessel in which he came.

(I) William Carpenter, born in 1605, in England, there married Abigail. On coming to America he first settled in Weymouth, where he became a freeman in 1640. He was a representative from Weymouth in 1641 and 1643, and from Rehoboth in 1645, having been admitted an inhabitant of the latter town in 1645. He was also made a freeman in that same year. From 1643 to 1649 he served as proprietors' and town clerk. He died Feb. 7, 1659, in Rehoboth, Mass., his widow, Abigail, dying Feb. 22, 1687. Three of their seven children were born in England, the next three in Weymouth, and the youngest in Rehoboth; they were: John, born about 1628; William, born about 1631; Joseph, about 1633; Hannah, April 3, 1640; Abiah and Abigail (twins), April 9, 1643, and Samuel, about 1644.

(II) William Carpenter (2), born about 1631 or 1632, in England, married Oct. 5, 1651, Priscilla Bennett. She died Oct. 20, 1663, and he married (second) Dec. 10, 1663, Miriam Searles. Mr. Carpenter was a resident of the town of Rehoboth, Mass., occupied in farming. He was elected town clerk in 1668 and held that office, with the exception of the year 1693, until the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 26, 1703. He was also deputy from Rehoboth in 1668. He was chosen deacon of the church the same year. He was one of the purchasers of the North Purchase. He was one of the committee to settle the bounds between the town of Taunton and the North Purchase in 1670, and clerk of the community of the North Purchase in 1682, and his name is found in connection with other important public affairs. He was a man of superior ability, accurate in all his business transactions, and a reliable counselor in the Colony. His fourteen children, all born in Rehoboth, were: John, born in 1652; William, 1659; Priscilla, 1661; Benjamin, 1663; Josiah, 1664; Nathaniel, 1667; Daniel, 1669; Noah, 1672; Miriam, 1674; Obadiah, 1677-78; Ephraim, 1681; Ephraim (2), 1683-84; Hannah, 1684-85; and Abigail, 1687.

(III) Noah Carpenter, born March 28, 1672, married Dec. 3, 1700, Sarah Johnson, born April 4, 1677, daughter of Matthew Johnson, and granddaughter of Edward Johnson, who came from the County of Kent, England, with the Winthrop fleet in 1630. He was married (second) May 22, 1727, to Ruth Follet Talbott, daughter of Abraham and Ruth (Foster) Follet and widow of Abraham Talbott, and he married (third) in 1745 Tabithy Bishop, relict of William Bishop, of Attleboro, Mass. She passed away June 7, 1753. Mr. Carpenter was a farmer and linen millwright in the town of Attleboro, Mass., where he died in April, 1756. For a number of years he was town clerk and proprietors' clerk. He belonged to the order of Masons. His children were: Noah, born Nov.

21, 1701; Marian, born Dec. 25, 1702; Sarah, born Sept. 24, 1704; Stephen, born July 23, 1706; Asa, born March 10, 1707; Mary, born Jan. 24, 1709 (or 1710); Margaret, born March 30, 1712; Simon, born Nov. 13, 1713; Isaiah, born Feb. 7, 1715; Simon, born Aug. 20, 1716; Martha, born May 25, 1719; Elisha, born Aug. 28, 1721; Amy, born Feb. 2, 1723 (or 1724); and Priscilla, born May 1, 1728.

(IV) Stephen Carpenter, born July 23, 1706, married (first) Nov. 28, 1734, Dorothy Whittaker. She died Jan. 25, 1761, and he married (second) June 6, 1768, Mrs. Rebecca Sprague, of Providence. Mr. Carpenter was a farmer and also a shoemaker. His children, all born in Attleboro, Mass., were: Stephen, born July 11, 1735; Asa, born Dec. 29, 1736; Stephen, born Dec. 9, 1737; Stephen (2), born Oct. 15, 1740; Charles, born Feb. 11, 1743-44; Hannah, born Jan. 3, 1744-45; Dorothy, born Nov. 4, 1746; Mary, born July 6, 1748; Charles (2), born Sept. 13, 1754; and Joseph, born July 30, 1751.

(V) Asa Carpenter, born Dec. 29, 1736, married March 13, 1760, Abigail, born in 1736, daughter of John and Mary (Bishop) Follett. Mr. Carpenter was a farmer in the town of Cumberland, R. I. He died in 1810. His children, all born in Cumberland, R. I., were: Chloe, born Jan. 24, 1761; Joseph, born Jan. 15, 1763; Levi, born March 25, 1765; Lois, born Dec. 4, 1767; Dolly, born Nov. 22 or 25, 1769 or 1770; Abigail, born Nov. 8, 1771; John, born Jan. 21, 1774; George, born June 28, 1776; Lydia, born June 18, 1778; Jesse, born Nov. 9, 1780; Perez, born March 2, 1785; Polly, born June 18, 1786; and Sally, born April 15, 1788.

(VI) Levi Carpenter, born March 25, 1765, in Cumberland, R. I., married May 20, 1797, Rebecca Sheldon. She died Aug. 20, 1843, aged seventy-four years, and was buried in Arnold's Mills burying-ground. Mr. Carpenter was occupied in farming. He died April 16, 1856. Their children, all born in the town of Cumberland, were: James M., born March 29, 1798; Lydia, born July 28, 1799; Lyman, born April 1, 1802; Levi, born Oct. 28, 1803; Rebecca, born March 28, 1805; Mary, born March 12, 1807; and George, born Aug. 28, 1810.

(VII) James M. Carpenter, son of Levi, born March 29, 1798, married in 1831 or 1832 Betsey Newman. His death occurred March 28, 1848. His children, both born in Cumberland, R. I., were: George Mendol, born May 10, 1833; and Mary N., born June 30, 1840. The latter married Erastus Richardson, of Woonsocket, and was a resident of that city, where Mr. Richardson was employed as a bookkeeper. James M. Carpenter lived in the northern part of Cumberland, where he was a boat-builder for eighteen years, then engaging in agricultural pursuits. He settled on the Miller homestead, known as the Jabez Amsbury farm (and where Amsbury conducted a hotel or tavern famous in his day), and for the remainder of his life was engaged in farming and stock raising.

George Mendol Carpenter attended the district schools at Chapel Four Corners and entered the academy at Seekonk, after graduating from which he taught school for one term, then settling on his farm of eighty acres, on which, in 1876, he built his fine home, making many like improvements. He has been engaged in the dairy business, selling his product at Valley Falls, and until his retirement was very active, being considered one of the good, practical farmers of his locality. Mr. Carpenter is a member of the Universalist Church at Chapel Four Corners, to which his wife also belongs, she being a member of the Ladies Aid Society and prominent in all temperance and charitable work. For thirty-three years Mrs. Carpenter was superintendent of the Sunday-school. Both she and her husband are stanch advocates of the cause of temperance, and she is a member of the W. C. T. U., in which she has labored faithfully for many years. The earnestness and piety of Mr. Carpenter have made him a power in the community. He is connected with Cumberland Grange, No. 2, being a charter member, and has been master and overseer of the Grange; he is also identified with Pomona Grange. Mrs. Carpenter is connected with the Grange and has been lecturer. In his political belief Mr. Carpenter is a Prohibitionist.

In 1856 Mr. Carpenter was married to Sarah Cook, daughter of Olney M. and Harriet (Arnold) Cook. She was educated in the local schools of Cumberland and the State Normal School at Providence, and was a teacher in the public schools for a number of years. To Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter were born children as follows: (1) Irving, born Jan. 9, 1860, who resides on the homestead, married Anna B. Mowry. (2) Edmund Arnold, born Jan. 17, 1865, is a clerk in the Valley Falls Company store and resides in Central Falls. He married Susan Sweet, and they have had three children: Edmund S., born Aug. 19, 1901; William, who died in infancy; and George M., born May 2, 1907. (3) Clara Annette, born July 1, 1866, was educated in the schools of Cumberland and the Dean Academy, at Franklin, Mass., and received her musical education at Emerson College, Boston. Until her death, which occurred April 28, 1906, she was engaged in giving vocal lessons, and was well and favorably known as a music teacher. She was also prominently connected with all church and charitable work, was actively engaged in the work of the W. C. T. U., of which her mother was president at Ashton, and was well beloved for her many lovable characteristics, as well as for her charities. Her death was the cause of much grief, not only among the members of her family, but throughout Cumberland as well. She married Marcus J. Woodrow, superintendent of the Clinton Mills at Woonsocket, in which city she died; she is buried in the Cook cemetery, Cumberland Hill.

FREDERICK A. ALLAN, JR., whose death occurred Feb. 16, 1907, was one of Newport's successful contractors and builders, and was a native of that city, where for several generations his ancestors before him had made their homes.

There were many emigrants to New England in its early Colonial period bearing the name of Allan, and the Allans of that part of Massachusetts lying adjacent to Rhode Island and in portions of this Commonwealth have been numerous since the early settlement of this region of country. One William Allan of Salisbury, a house carpenter, received land there in the first division in 1640. His name appears on the list of townsmen and commoners in 1650, and later lists. He married (first) Ann, daughter of Richard Goodale, and (second) in 1684, Alice, widow of John Roper, and daughter of John Dickison. Through William Allan's son, Benjamin of Salisbury and Rehoboth, Mass., have descended many of the Allans of parts of Massachusetts and Rhode Island lying adjacent to each other. Benjamin Allan was born in 1652, and was married (first) in 1686, to Mrs. Rachel Wheeler, of Boston. He married (second) in 1695, Hopestill Leonard, of Rehoboth or Taunton. Through Benjamin's son, Jeremiah (born to the first marriage), who settled in Rehoboth, came a numerous posterity, he having married twice and had thirteen children. His home was in Swansea and Rehoboth.

There settled at Newport and later lived in Kingstown, this Commonwealth, one John Allan, a Quaker, who was taxed in 1680. He married, in 1650, Elizabeth Bacon, and their children were: Elizabeth, Mary, Mercy, Priscilla and Samuel, and possibly Christopher. Mr. Allan's daughter, Mary, married Rowland Robinson, and it was at the latter's house the father died in 1708. Then another of the early Rhode Island Allans was William Allan, of Portsmouth or Providence, as early as 1683, from whom the name has been perpetuated through his sons: William Allan, of Portsmouth, who was deputy from that town in 1705; Thomas Allan, who married Anne Barnes, and lived in Swansea; John Allan, of North Kingstown; and Matthew Allan, of Portsmouth, Warwick and North Kingstown.

For upwards of a century there have lived at Newport and vicinity several generations of one branch of the Rhode Island Allans, but the public records of the family are so fragmentary and incomplete as to make it impossible for one to connect them with the emigrant settler. This Newport family is that of the late William Samuel Newton Allan, who married June 27, 1784, Abigail Westgate, and among their children were: William S. N. Jr., born in 1785; George Washington, in 1797; and James Westgate, in 1813.

George Washington Allan, born Sept. 9, 1797, in Newport, died there Oct. 10, 1838. He married Aug. 12, 1822, Mary L. Lawton, born Aug. 1, 1798, daughter of Timothy Lawton; she died July 19, 1865, in Newport. Their children were: (1) Julia Maria, born Jan. 23, 1823, died unmarried, aged about seventy-five years. (2) William Lafayette, born Sept. 4, 1824, married Maria Sprague, and died in Newport aged forty-one years. He was a butcher by occupation, conducting a market in Newport. (3) Mary Elizabeth, born March 12, 1826, married William Spooner, and both are deceased. (4) Emily, born Aug. 11, 1830, married William Gammill Friend, a carpenter, who died in Newport, where she still resides, a widow. (5) Frederick A. was born Oct. 12, 1833. (6) James Monroe, born May 6, 1838, was a butcher by trade, and married Ellen Greason, of Providence; he died May 6, 1894. George Washington Allan was a baker by occupation, conducting a bakery on Ferry Wharf, in which he was very successful. He was an invalid for about ten years prior to his death. He died in the faith of the Congregational Church.

Frederick Augustus Allan, Sr., was born in Newport, Oct. 12, 1833, and attended school there until fifteen years of age, after which he followed farming for three years, and then learned the carpenter's trade with Abram Tilley Peckham of Middletown, and remained with that gentleman for thirteen years. He then purchased Mr. Peckham's business, which he conducted for about two years, when he became a partner of Perry G. Case and Isaac R. Spooner, the firm being known as P. G. Case & Co. This partnership covered a period of twenty-six years, and among the firm's work may be mentioned Joseph I. Bailey's residence on Kay street, Job A. Peckham's residence on the same street, Fairman Rogers' home on Ochre Point, William D. Smith's home on Bellevue avenue, the Hoffman residence on Bellevue avenue, the home of Col. George R. Fearing on Narragansett avenue, and many others. In 1889 Mr. Allan bought out the interest of his partners, continuing to operate the contracting business for two more years, when, in 1891, he retired. In politics he was a staunch Republican, and in 1902 was appointed tax assessor for a period of three years. He was a member of the United Congregational Church. He passed away in Newport, Dec. 5, 1906.

Mr. Allan was married Sept. 22, 1853, to Ann Elizabeth Pike, daughter of John and Adeline (Huddy) Pike, of Newport, who died May 8, 1888, in Newport. To this union were born: George W., born Aug. 21, 1854, is a broker in rubber goods and real estate in New York, and is unmarried; Ann Elizabeth married Daniel A. Carter, of Middletown, a farmer; Clara married Richard Freeborn, an undertaker, and is now deceased; Adeline P. married Frank Packard, a tinsmith, and resides in Newport; Miss Cora resides at home; Frederick Augustus, Jr.; Julia Maria, who married John Bolton, of Fall River Mass., died in Newport, April 14, 1883; Lilly, married Gilman Low, an artist of Hingham, Mass., now lives in Dorchester, Mass., Perry Case (1) died in infancy; and Perry Case (2) is also deceased.

Frederick Augustus Allan, Jr., was born Feb. 28, 1864, in Newport, and there received his education, attending the public schools until fourteen years of age. He then became a clerk in the market of Charles Spooner, with whom he remained three years, when he engaged with Edward Griffith in the fish market of the latter. At the age of eighteen years he began to learn the carpenter's trade with P. G. Case & Co., of which firm his father was a member, and in 1895 he embarked in the contracting business on his own account. Mr. Allan was very successful in this line, doing all kinds of general contracting, and employing at times from ten to thirty men. Among some of Mr. Allan's work may be mentioned the Coggeshall school building on Van Zandt avenue, the F. B. Coggeshall block, corner of Washington Square and Thames street, Reginald Norman's residence on Black Point, and the Bee Hive building on Thames street.

Mr. Allan was a member of St. Paul's Lodge, No. 14, A. F. & A. M., of which he had been marshal, and was principal sojourner of Newport Chapter No. 2, Royal Arch Masons; deputy master of DeBlois Council, No. 5, R. & S. M., and a member of Washington Commandery No. 4, Knights Templar, having served as guard of the latter. He was a member of the New England Order of Protection, in which he had served as junior warden, and he and his wife also held membership in Aquidneck Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, his wife having been matron of the society since 1905. Mr. Allan was a member of the Builders' and Merchants' Exchange of Newport, and was vice-president of the Builders' Association of Newport. He was also a fine member of the Newport Artillery Company, of which he had been ensign sergeant, and was also a member of the Newport Light Infantry, in which he had served as second lieutenant for five years. He was a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, of which he was gymnasium instructor for several years, as well as a member of the board of gymnasium directors, and was a member and stockholder of the Newport Realty Company, and of the Citizens' Business Association. A Republican in politics, Mr. Allan had always been interested in the success of his party, but was never an aspirant to public office. Mr. Allan was a member of Trinity Episcopal Church, to which Mrs. Allan belongs.

Mr. Allan was married April 18, 1892, to Mary A. Riegel, daughter of Charles Joseph Riegel, of Newport, and to this union two children were born: Mary Augusta, who died at the age of twenty months; and Dorothy Carter.

OLNEY ARNOLD, secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Rogers Screw Company of Providence, is a descendant in the ninth generation of the Arnold family, his line of descent being through (I) Thomas, (II) Richard, (III) John, (IV) Seth, (V) Nathan, (VI) Nathan (2), (VII) Seth, (VIII) William G., (IX) Olney.

(VIII) William G. Arnold was born June 11, 1827, in Smithfield, R. I., and was educated at Prof. Bushee's Academy in Woonsocket, and at the Connecticut Literary Institute in Suffield, Conn. For a time he taught school in Smithfield, and later served as town clerk of Cumberland, and after that of Woonsocket. In politics he was a Republican. He held the Central Mill privilege of East Providence. Mr. Arnold had charge of the department of Titles and Mortgages of the Providence County Savings Bank of Pawtucket, and was trustee of the Pawtucket schools. He died at Providence, in June, 1894. Mr. Arnold married Lucy M. Aldrich, daughter of Burrill Aldrich, of Woonsocket, and to them were born: William Henry, deceased; Olney; and Flora Ellis, who married George H. Wightman, by whom she had one daughter, Flora, who married Philip K. Reynolds, and had two children, Philip K. and Elizabeth Joy.

Olney Arnold, one of the prominent and successful business men of Providence, was born in Woonsocket, R. I., Sept. 8, 1862. His early schooling was secured in Pawtucket and at Mowry & Goff's English and Classical school in Providence. He began his business life with the hardware house of C. H. George & Co., in Providence, and for about twenty years was with the American Screw Company, being secretary of that company from 1889 to 1899, and in May of the latter year he became secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Rogers Screw Company, of Providence.

Mr. Arnold takes a deep interest in historical matters. He was the first treasurer of the Rhode Island Sons of the American Revolution, and was instrumental in having the commission appointed to open the right of way to the old burial ground in Newport, where rest the remains of Gov. Benedict Arnold. Mr. Arnold is a member of the Hope Club of Providence, the Hardware Club of New York, and the New England Tariff Reform League. In national politics he is Democratic.

On April 10, 1889, Mr. Arnold was married in Providence to Miss Grace Angell, daughter of Edwin G. and Sarah S. (Southwick) Angell, and to them were born: Linda, Sept. 16, 1890; and Olney, Jr., Feb. 12, 1895.

DANIEL ALDRICH SMITH, the most extensive farmer in northwestern Rhode Island, residing about one mile from Tarkiln station, in the town of Burrillville, descends from the first settled family in that section and one of the very oldest families in the State. He is a descendant in the ninth generation from John Smith, as indicated by the following record:

(I) John Smith, a miller by occupation, was born in 1595 in England and settled first at Dorchester, Mass. He was banished from Massachusetts in September, 1635, and was with Roger Williams and four others when the settlement was made at Providence in 1636. He was allowed a grant of land on condition that he would set up a mill for the grinding of corn. John Smith (Miller) was a confidential friend of Roger Williams and was an important man in the Colony. He was chosen town clerk in 1641, and in 1647 was a delegate from Providence to Portsmouth to organize a government under the charter. He died in 1648, survived by his wife, Alice, who died in 1650.

(II) John Smith (2), son of John, was also a miller. He served as deputy from 1666 to 1672, and as town clerk from 1672 to 1676. He died in 1682. His wife was Sarah Whipple, born in 1642, who died in 1687.

(III) Benjamin Smith, son of John (2), was born in 1672, and died April 23, 1751. He married (first) April 12, 1693, Mercy Angell, born in 1675, who died Sept. 3, 1721. He married (second) June 11, 1730, Mercy Waterman, who died in 1750.

(IV) Solomon Smith, son of Benjamin and Mercy (Angell) Smith, was born March 4, 1702, and resided near what is Tarkiln, in the town of Burrillville, the farm he owned and occupied being known in more recent years as the "Jason Olney place." It is now owned by Daniel A. Smith, whose name introduces this sketch. Solomon Smith and his brother John were the first of the family to settle in that locality.

(V) Capt. John Smith, son of Solomon, was born in 1729, and continued to reside on the farm before mentioned. He married Sarah Arnold, who died June 19, 1812, in her eightieth year, he surviving her and dying May 7, 1828, in his ninety-ninth year. Both are buried in a private yard on the farm.

(VI) Simeon Smith, son of John, succeeded his father to the homestead farm and there died March 19, 1836, in his seventy-sixth year. He was a man of firm Christian character, much interested in the cause of religion, and his home was a well-known stopping place for ministers. He married (first) Mary Eddy, daughter of Zephaniah Eddy; she died May 9, 1794, in her thirty-fourth year, and his second wife was Lydia, her sister. She died Feb. 9, 1844, in her eighty-eighth year. Mr. Smith had several children by each marriage.

(VII) Syra Smith, son of Simeon and Mary, remained on the homestead farm until his marriage, after which he removed to the farm of his father-in-law, in what is North Smithfield, and there died in 1811. He married Martha, daughter of Charles Sayles, and after his death became the wife of Paoli Steere, by whom she had two children, Mowry and Uranah. Syra and Martha Smith had four children: Charlotte, who married (first) Welcome Sheldon, and (second) John Goldthwaite; Simeon, who married Almira Utley, and resided in Glocester; Nelson, who died young; and Charles Sayles.

(VIII) Charles Sayles Smith, youngest child of Syra Smith, and father of Daniel A., was born Sept. 2, 1809, in what is now North Smithfield, and was reared to farm work. After his mother's second marriage he made his home with his grandfather, Simeon Smith, in whose home he resided until his marriage, after which he settled on the farm adjoining, formerly owned by Arca Phetteplace. There he passed the rest of his life and died March 1, 1884, and his remains rest in a private yard on the farm. He was a hard-working man, a successful farmer, and ranked among the substantial as well as the highly esteemed citizens of the town. He was a Democrat, and represented the town of Burrillville several terms in the General Assembly of the State.

On Nov. 24, 1831, Mr. Smith was married in Smithfield to Mary Ann Aldrich, who was born Dec. 5, 1814, in Smithfield, daughter of Daniel and Diana (Gaskill) Aldrich. Mrs. Smith, who is now ninety-three years of age, retains all her faculties to a marked degree excepting her hearing, which is, however, only slightly impaired, and she is unusually active for one of her years. She was always a hard-working woman, and by her thrift and industry contributed in no small degree to the success of her husband. Her elder sister, Hannah, widow of George W. Mowry, of Smithfield, is now ninety-four years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Smith had children as follows: (1) Simeon, born Dec. 20, 1832, was a farmer and resided on the homestead. He died unmarried Nov. 6, 1865. (2) Alzada, born May 11, 1835, died Dec. 13, 1854. (3) A son and (4) A daughter, twins, born June 18, 1838, died the following day. (5) Syra Emor, born Sept. 20, 1840, was a farmer in Burrillville and died Oct. 14, 1865. On Dec. 5, 1861, he married Mary E. Thompson, and they had two children, of whom the eldest, Diana, born Sept. 20, 1862, died May 26, 1866. Charles H., the other, born July 12, 1864, died May 12, 1865. Mrs. Syra E. Smith subsequently married William H. Fuller, and now resides in Woonsocket. (6) Martha Sayles, born July 31, 1843, died Oct. 13, 1865. (7) Mary Anna, born March 28, 1847, was married Jan. 1, 1867, to David D. Nichols, and has one daughter, Clara Estelle, born Oct. 4, 1867. (8) Daniel Aldrich was born Jan. 6, 1850.

(IX) Daniel Aldrich Smith was born in the house he now occupies, and received his education in the district school and the famous Latham Institute, at North Scituate, attending that institution for six months. Returning to the home farm he assisted his father and eventually succeeded him, because of his advancing years, in the management of the farm. He has ever since proved himself a true friend of progress, for from the time he undertook the management of the place he has been indefatigable in his efforts to improve it to the utmost. He has been adding to his holdings until he is now the largest landowner in the town, having nearly a thousand acres, much of which is covered with valuable timber. Among the improvements which he has made on the original place may be mentioned a large addition to the barn. He has increased the scope of his enterprises to a considerable extent, at present keeping about one hundred and fifty cows, having the largest dairy in Burrillville, if not in Rhode Island; he disposes of his milk at wholesale. He is a well-known trader, doing a large business in that line, and raises a large number of hogs annually. He handles hay and grain in carload lots. Associated with Mr. Smith in his various undertakings is his son Bert C., under the firm name of D. A. Smith & Son. Mr. Smith is recognized as a careful and shrewd business man, and he is one of the most substantial citizens of his town. He has achieved success as a result of industry combined with the most intelligent methods, for Mr. Smith is a keen observer of results in his work, and has excellent judgment in following the methods that lead to the most satisfactory outcome. His unimpeachable integrity and straightforwardness in every relation of life, and the high position he has attained, command respect for him wherever he is known, and his advice is sought and valued. He is a director of the National Exchange Bank at Greenville. Though a staunch Democrat Mr. Smith has steadfastly abstained from taking any part in political or public affairs and has uniformly declined to accept office, his business interests requiring his entire time and attention.

Mr. Smith was married April 20, 1873, to Lydia A. Clemence, who was born in Glocester, daughter of Reuben A. and Elsa (Mann) Clemence, and died Dec. 12, 1887, in her thirty-fourth year. Three children were born to this union: (1) Charles Reuben, born Aug. 5, 1875, died July 22, 1885. (2) Mary Elsa, born Jan. 27, 1880, married Everett H. Mowry and resides in Burrillville. They have one daughter, Martha Washington, born Feb. 22, 1905. (3) Bert Cleveland, born July 14, 1885, married Mary E. Pray, and they have one daughter, Mary Etta, born Aug. 27, 1906.

LATHAM (Providence family). The history of the Latham family in this country begins with the landing of the Pilgrims in the "Mayflower" in 1620. William Latham, at the time a youth, under the charge of Governor Carver, and of Plymouth 1623, it is said, was a passenger in the "Mayflower," and in 1627 had a share in the division of cattle, yet he was not mentioned as one of the "Mayflower Company." He was at Duxbury in 1637, where he sold property in 1639. He was at Marshfield in 1643, where he and Roger Cook had their houses burned.

Across the water in England, the Lathams were an ancient and historic family. The senior branch of the Lathams, of the County of Lancaster, ended with the death of Isabel, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Latham, of Latham, who died in 1385. Isabel Latham, his daughter, married Sir John Stanley, Knight, from whom were the Stanleys, Earls of Derby. Latham House was defended with much heroism, and successfully by the Countess of Derby, in 1644. Lewis Latham, the ancestor of so many Rhode Island families, was descended from a junior branch of the Lathams of the County of Lancaster, and he bore the same coat of arms as that family. For many generations the Lathams exerted a powerful influence in the County of Lancaster; and to all descendants of Lewis Latham, the manor which bears his name, and where his ancestors lived for so long a period, must ever be treasured with interest as great as the place where he actually abode. Lewis Latham, born in 1555, was falconer to King Charles I., and died in 1655. Through his daughter Frances, by two of her four husbands, William Dungan and Jeremiah Clarke, his blood, though not his name has been perpetuated to an extraordinary degree both in Rhode Island and in other parts of the United States. She had eleven children and eighty-two grandchildren. Her remains rest in the Newport cemetery, Rhode Island.

One Robert Latham was constable at Marshfield, Mass., in 1643; he was at Cambridge two years in the family of Rev. Thomas Shepard. Mitchell, in his history of Bridgewater, Mass., says he was a son probably of William Latham. Then there was at Cambridge or Boston, a Cary Latham, who married Elizabeth, daughter of John Masters and relict of Edward Lockwood. Two of his children are of record at Boston. He settled in New London, Conn., and served in many town offices, being one of the townsmen or selectmen for sixteen years, and six times deputy to the General Court from May, 1664, to 1670. He died in 1685. His large grants of land enriched his descendants. Mitchell, in his history of Bridgewater, Mass., says this Cary Latham might have been a brother of the first William Latham.

Robert Latham (above) married, in 1649, Susanna, daughter of John Winslow, brother of Governor Edward Winslow, and had children: Mercy, 1650, at Plymouth; James Chilton; Joseph; Elizabeth; Hannah; and Sarah. Mr. Latham took the oath of fidelity at Marshfield, 1637; settled at East Bridgewater, before 1667. His wife's mother was the famous Mary Chilton, who is said to have been the first female who set foot on the Plymouth shore, 1620. Her father, James Chilton, and her mother, Susanna, both died the first winter.

It is through this Robert and Susanna (Winslow) Latham that the branch of the Providence family—that of the late Joseph Stanton Latham—under consideration, is said to descend.

One Thomas Latham, a descendant in the fourth generation from Robert (above), married in 1752 Abigail Hammar, and their children were: Nabby, born in 1753; William, born in 1756; Betty, born in 1757; Thomas; Benjamin; Lucinda; Stephen; and Rowland. Of these William and Thomas served in the war of the Revolution and went westward, and Benjamin went to Providence. The line of Thomas Latham (above) from Robert Latham is through James Latham and his wife Deliverance, and Joseph Latham and his wife Sarah (Hayward).

The late Joseph Stanton Latham, of Providence, was born in 1820, in the town of Windsor, Conn., a son of Joshua and Delight Latham. He married Jane Ellen Bulkeley, who was born at Rocky Hill, Conn., about 1824, a descendant of an ancient and prominent family of that section. In his younger life Mr. Latham was engaged in the picture frame business at Providence, but later he became connected with the Gorham Manufacturing Company, serving for some twenty-five or more years as foreman of the engine-turning department of that great plant. Mr. Latham was an active and prominent member of the Mathewson Street Methodist Episcopal Church at Providence, and was a class leader in the church. He was held in high esteem and respect by the community. He died March 14, 1887, aged sixty-seven years. His wife passed away Feb. 1, 1886, aged sixty-two years. Of their three children, one died in infancy; Joseph Augustus is a resident of Providence; and Charles Bulkeley, born in 1862, is a resident of Cranston, Rhode Island.

JOSEPH AUGUSTUS LATHAM, son of Joseph Stanton and Jane Ellen (Bulkeley) Latham, was born Dec. 6, 1850, in Providence, R. I., and in the public and private schools of the city received his elementary education. He furthered his preparation for business in the commercial college of Bryant & Stratton. At about the age of seventeen years he began and served a three years' apprenticeship in the office of Mr. John Howe, a civil engineer of Providence. He was subsequently employed by Mr. Howe until they together bought a granite quarry located in the town of Smithfield, this State. Here for some two years young Latham was in charge getting out a large amount of materials to be used by the city of Providence for the work about the Sockanosset pumping station, for caps and foundation of the Butler Exchange building and other work. In 1873 the quarry was disposed of, and Mr. Latham began employment with the firm of Messrs. S. B. Cushing & Co., civil engineers of Providence with whom he was engaged professionally for two years, leaving at the expiration of that time to take charge of the surveying department of a real estate establishment in Providence, doing business for himself in addition to this outside work, and he gradually became fully established in business solely on his own account, and really from the time of the completion of his term of apprenticeship dates the period of his professional career, which at this writing (1907) finds him one of the oldest civil engineers now in Providence in point of service. In the course of his long years of experience he has been engaged in the various lines of work a civil engineer is called upon for, although he has made bridge-building a specialty, and erected many such structures in and about Providence. He was chief engineer for the Pontiac Branch Railroad until that road was leased by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Company. He made a preliminary survey of the Pongansett Railroad from Providence to Danielson, Conn. He built the Spring Lake Reservoir in Cranston. Mr. Latham keeps abreast of the times and executes work after modern plans. His reputation is second to none in the State in his line of work. He has in his employ a dozen or more men the year round. He is enterprising and public-spirited and has met with deserved success, managing his business affairs in a manner that commends him to execute safely and properly all work, no matter how extensive, that is entrusted to his care.

Mr. Latham is a resident of the town of Cranston, district of Edgewood, and has taken an active part in the politics of that town—in its public affairs, ever ready to advance as much as it is within his power, the interests of the town; and ever advocating such measures as in his judgment are for the best welfare of his fellow townsmen. He has served the town for a number of years as town engineer. He has been the moderator of town meetings and served his townsmen in various other capacities. He was a member of the school committee of the town for seventeen consecutive years. He, too, was for several years, superintendent of schools when the schools were under the district system. He has also served on many committees assigned to the laying out of streets and avenues.

Since the age of seventeen years, Mr. Latham has been a member of the Mathewson Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Providence, and been active and zealous in church work. For the last twenty years he has been superintendent of the Sunday-school of that church. He is now and has been for a number of years a trustee of the church. He was a member of the building committee of the present beautiful and commodious church edifice. He was also a member of the building committee of the Edgewood Methodist Episcopal Church edifice. Mr. Latham, too, has been active in fraternal organizations. He is a member of Harmony Lodge, No. 9 A. F. & A. M., at Pawtuxet, of which he was worshipful master in 1887; is a member of Providence Chapter and Council; of Calvary Commandery, and has reached the thirty-second degree.

On Nov. 26 (or 28), 1874, Mr. Latham was married to Hattie R. Tuller, of Simsbury, Conn., daughter of Jeremiah and Lurennah (Phelps)

Tuller of that town. Their children were: Hattie L., now the wife of Frank D. Easterbrooks; Eva J., now the wife of David M. White, of Lancaster, N. H., an editor and publisher of the Coos County Democrat; Charles O., now engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Providence; and Arthur J., of Providence, a graduate of Brown University, class of 1905.

DR. REUBEN FERRIS EATON, of Providence, R. I., is a descendant in the eighth generation of one of the oldest families of New England, the line of his descent being as follows:

(I) William Eaton, was of Watertown, Massachusetts.

(II) John Eaton, of the Hill, was born in 1636.

(III) John Eaton (2), son of John, was born in 1666.

(IV) Thomas Eaton was born in 1696.

(V) Capt. Thomas Eaton, born in 1743, married Joanna Flint.

(VI) George Washington Eaton, son of Captain Thomas, born in 1782, died in 1858. He resided in North Reading all of his life, being a wheelwright, blacksmith and farmer. He was active in town matters, and one of the most prominent men of his town. He married Ruth Eaton, of Wilmington, Mass., and to them were born: George, Sally, Warren, Sylvester, Emeline, Maria, Albert, Alvin, Thomas, Alfred and Edward. In religious belief Mr. Eaton was a Unitarian.

(VIII) Albert Eaton, son of George W., was born in North Reading, Mass., but at the age of thirteen years ran away to sea, and at the age of eighteen enlisted in the United States Navy. He later made several voyages around the world and to the arctic regions. Albert Eaton married Sarah Hopkins, a Quakeress, when she was about fourteen years of age, and both died in North Reading. Their children were: George Albert, deceased; Reuben Ferris, M. D.; James Buchanan, a wholesale butcher at Peabody, Mass., who married Elizabeth Fiske, and had three children—Nellie, George and Emma; Homer Francis, deceased; and Irving Clifford, of North Reading, Massachusetts.

(VIII) Dr. Reuben Ferris Eaton, son of Albert, was born in North Reading, Mass., Aug. 14, 1853, and attended the public schools at North Reading, and the Bristol Academy at Taunton, Mass. He graduated from the Medical Department of Boston University in 1886, and then went to Europe to pursue his studies in the Vienna Hospital, and under private instruction for a year. From 1887 to 1890 he practiced at Foxboro, Mass., and while there served on the school committee. In 1890 the Doctor sold out and came to Providence, locating on Waterman street, where he has built up a large and lucrative practice and made many warm personal friends. Dr. Eaton is unmarried.

BARKER. One of the oldest and most interesting families of the State of Rhode Island is that of Barker, which has been prominently identified with its history for over two and a half centuries. The Barker family pedigree is traced for numerous generations in England prior to the immigrant ancestor to this country, and was there connected through marriage to the first Protestant lord mayor of London. The genealogy given below particularly treats of the ancestry and families of Jacob Alton Barker and Henry Howard Barker, brothers, two of Newport's prosperous and successful business men, as well as two of that city's progressive and honored citizens. The Roman numerals in the following genealogy indicate the different generations.

(I) John Barker married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Hill, brother of Sir Rowland Hill, the first Protestant lord mayor of London, in 1549.

(II) Edward Barker, son of John and Elizabeth Barker.

(III) Rowland Barker, son of Edward, was of Wellerton, in the County of Salop, and to him a coat of arms was granted.

(IV) James Barker, son of Rowland, left Southampton, England, in the spring of 1634, on the ship "Mary and John," of London, for New England, but died on the passage. In the family manuscript he is called of Harwich, County of Essex, England. He had two children, Christianna and James.

(V) James Barker (2), son of James, was born in England about 1617, and married about 1644 Barbara, daughter of Thomas and Frances Dungan. Until he became of age, which was about 1638, he was in the care of his sister, who had married Thomas Béecher and later Nicholas Easton. He came to Portsmouth, R. I., in 1638 or 1639. He was an officer of Newport, in 1644; was a member of the General Court of Elections from Newport, in 1648; was made a freeman of Newport, in 1655; was a member of the Court of Commissioners, in 1655, 1661 and 1663; was deputy, in 1669, 1676 and 1677; assistant deputy, in 1678; deputy governor, in 1678 and 1679, after the death of Governor Coddington, and again in 1681, 1683, 1684, 1685 and 1686, and he, or his son, James, in 1690 and 1696. He died in Newport, R. I., in 1702. Mr. Barker and his wife had the following children: Elizabeth, who married Nicholas Easton, son of Peter and grandson of Nicholas; James, born in 1648; Mary, who married (first) Elisha Smith and (second) Israel Arnold, of Warwick; Sarah; Joseph; Peter; Christianna, who married William Phillips; and William, born in 1662.

(VI) James Barker (3), son of James (2), was born in 1648, and married in 1673 Sarah, born in 1656, daughter of William and Mary (Gould) Jafferay. He was of Newport; was admitted a freeman thereof in 1675; was deputy in 1678, 1690, 1691, 1696, 1703, 1705, 1706, 1707, 1708, 1709 and 1716; and was assistant deputy in 1695, 1696, 1698 and 1699. His children were: James; William, who died unmarried; Nicholas; Mary, who married Joshua Winsor; Abigail, who married John Work, of Long Island; Priscilla, who married Robert Lawton; Jane, who married Thomas Lawton, and Jeremiah, born Jan. 16, 1699.

(VII) James Barker (4), son of James (3), was born Dec. 4, 1675, and married in 1699 Mary Cook. He was of Newport and Middletown, R. I.; was admitted a freeman in 1704; and in 1709, 1717, 1725 and 1726 he was deputy to the General Assembly. He was for over fifty years a member of the Second Baptist Church of Newport. Mr. Barker died March 26, 1758, and his wife died Feb. 24, 1758. Their children were: James, born Dec. 30, 1700; Phebe, born Feb. 17, 1703; Mary, born in 1705; Mary (2), born May 9, 1706, who married (first) William Greene and (second) Job Mason; Priscilla, born July 26, 1708, married Aug. 29, 1728, John Clarke; John, born Dec. 18, 1710; Robert, born June 2, 1712; Sarah, born Dec. 30, 1714; Peleg, born July 11, 1716; Phebe, born Nov. 14, 1717, who married Jan. 23, 1736, William Peckham; and Deborah, born Jan. 17, 1720, who married Sept. 14, 1738, Hezekiah Hoar.

(VIII) John Barker, son of James (4), was born Dec. 18, 1710, and married Sept. 25, 1735, Rebecca Hoar, born in 1713, daughter of Hezekiah and Sarah (Brightman) Hoar. They lived in Middletown, R. I., where they died, he on March 17, 1777, and she on May 18, 1800. Their children were born as follows: Hezekiah, Aug. 24, 1736; Mary, May 19, 1738; John, Aug. 8, 1741; Elisha, June 27, 1744; John, Dec. 7, 1746; David, July 20, 1749; Gideon, Dec. 4, 1751; Samuel, in April, 1754; and Hezekiah, in April, 1757.

(IX) David Barker, son of John, was born July 20, 1749, and married Oct. 1, 1772, Eunice Sherman, of Portsmouth, R. I. Their children of Middletown town record were: John, born Oct. 1, 1773 (died Sept. 8, 1774); Rebecca, born Aug. 23, 1774; Christopher, born May 28, 1776; John, born Dec. 19, 1777; George, born March 1, 1779; Gideon, born Aug. 1, 1780; Nancy, born Aug. 2, 1782; David, born May 23, 1784; Eliphaz, born July 26, 1786; Rachel, born Feb. 27, 1788; Sarah, born Jan. 30, 1790; Simon, born July 9, 1791; Elijah, born Aug. 31, 1793; Hezekiah, born Dec. 26, 1796; and Charles, born Jan. 2, 1799.

(X) Eliphaz Barker, son of David Barker, was born July 26, 1786, in Middletown, and was twice married, (first) to Hannah Fish and (second) to Cynthia Sherman. Mr. Barker carried on agricultural pursuits and was also extensively engaged in butchering, operating a slaughter house in Middletown. He was successful in his business enterprises, although he met with reverses by being burned out twice, and some of his silver, which was melted by the fire at his home, was later found in the cellar and run into spoons, which are still in the possession of some of his descendants. His children were: Henry, Barzilla, Sarah, Mary Ann, Eunice and Edwin, by the first marriage, and Cynthia Ann, Lucinda, Hannah and Thomas, by the second marriage.

(XI) Edwin Barker, son of Eliphaz, was born Nov. 3, 1818, in Middletown, and passed away in February, 1890, in Little Compton, R. I. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits during the greater part of his life, which was spent in Middletown, Newport and Little Compton. He was an industrious man, and bore the esteem of the communities in which he lived. For a number of years he was a member of the Central Baptist Church of Newport. Mr. Barker married Rebecca Anthony Sherman, daughter of Jacob and Susan (Taber) Sherman, of Middletown, R. I., in which town she passed away. To them were born the following children: Clara, who married Charles H. Seattle, of Newport, a carriage maker by trade; Hannah, the wife of John Cahoon Bailey, of Newport; Agnes, the wife of William S. Jones, of Newport; Edgar L., who married Lillian C. Dyer, of Tiverton, R. I., where they reside; Mary, who is unmarried and resides in Newport; Elma D., who married Edgar S. Peckham, of Little Compton, where they reside; Jacob Alton; Henry Howard; and Wendell E., who is engaged in the teaming business in Newport, and who married Eliza Pearce.

(XII) JACOB ALTON BARKER, son of Edwin and Rebecca Anthony (Sherman) Barker, was born Dec. 31, 1860, in Middletown, R. I., and was reared on a farm, attending the district schools in the winter months and engaging in farm work in the summer time. Thus he was employed until eighteen years of age, when he became an active worker on the farm, giving his attention to poultry raising. With his parents he finally removed to Little Compton and there continued farming for a time, being later employed for about two years by Robert Brown, in the meat business, and upon giving up this employment went to Providence. In the latter city he engaged with Henry F. Tourtellot, a commission and produce merchant, with whom he remained for some time, and then came to Newport, where he became a clerk in the grocery and produce store kept by the late Capt. Henry D. Scott. After about two years in this gentleman's employ he engaged with the late William S. Lawton, who was conducting a meat market and produce store, and with whom he continued for one year. Mr. Barker then entered into partnership with Charles D. Martin, and under the firm name of Barker & Martin they opened a meat and provision business on Thames street. This connection lasted about two years, when Mr. Martin withdrew from the business, and at this time Mr. Barker's brother, Henry Howard Barker, became a partner, the firm name becoming J. A. & H. H. Barker. The business was conducted under that style until Dec. 1, 1901, at which time the firm was dissolved. Mr.

J. A. Barker has since conducted the business at the old stand, Nos. 346-348 Thames street, as a dealer in meats, produce, provisions, etc., and has been very successful, his store being a model one.

In 1903 he erected his present commodious three story brick block, in which the business has since been conducted.

Mr. Barker is a member of Redwood Lodge, No. 11, Knights of Pythias, and Excelsior Lodge, No. 49, I. O. O. F. During its existence he was a member of the Business Men's Association, serving as a member of the Public Improvement and Finance committees, and upon its dissolution became a charter member of the Miantonomi Club. He is a Republican in political opinion, and he and his wife are members of the First Presbyterian Church, to which they give their liberal support. Mrs. Barker holds membership in William Ellery Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, in which organization she takes an active part.

On Sept. 22, 1889, Mr. Barker was united in marriage to Miss Minnie Coggeshall, daughter of William E. and Susan (Huddy) Coggeshall, of Middletown, and by this union there are two children: Mildred Coggeshall, born Oct. 19, 1891, and Harold Sherman, born May 30, 1897.

Mr. Barker is a director and vice-president of the Rhode Island Cuban Company, a corporation engaged in the cattle raising industry in Cuba. He is also interested in agriculture, being the owner of "Hill Top Farm," in Portsmouth, formerly known as the Potter farm, which he has purchased, and upon which he has made many improvements, building thereon a large and commodious house and barn, with all modern improvements. This farm consists of about sixty acres of land, which is kept in a good state of cultivation. Mr. Barker is recognized as an able, energetic and progressive business man, and as a citizen is always ready to lend his hand to all measures having as their object the welfare and advancement of the city's interests.

(XII) HENRY HOWARD BARKER, son of Edwin and Rebecca Anthony (Sherman) Barker, was born Nov. 11, 1863, in Middletown, R. I., and received his early educational training in the district schools of his native town and, later, in Little Compton. He attended school until about twenty years of age, and during this period the rest of his time was spent in work on the farm. After leaving school he accepted a position as clerk in the drug store of Luce & Duffy, of Providence, and remained with that firm for six years, at the end of which time he purchased one of the firm's stores, located at Pawtuxet, R. I., conducting the same for three or four years. Mr. Barker then sold out and became a clerk in the drug store conducted at Olneyville, R. I., by Patrick Collins, but continued there only several months. In the fall of 1889 he came to Newport and purchased an interest in the meat and provision business which was then being conducted by his brother, Jacob Alton Barker, the firm name becoming J. A. & H. H. Barker. They continued together successfully for twelve years. Having met with great success in their venture the brothers opened a market at the corner of Thames and Marlborough streets, and in December, 1901, when the firm was dissolved, H. H. Barker took charge of the "Marlborough Market," which he has conducted profitably to the present time.

Mr. Barker holds membership in Excelsior Lodge, No. 49, I. O. O. F. He and his family are attendants of the Thames Street Methodist Episcopal Church of Newport, of which he has served as a trustee for a number of years. In political matters Mr. Barker is a Republican, but he has never cared for public office.

On Nov. 3, 1891, Mr. Barker was married to Miss Ida Mabel Alger, daughter of the late Edwin G. S. and Jane E. (Mitchell) Alger, of Newport, and two children have been born to this union: Edwin Howard, born Sept. 12, 1893; and Florence Myrtha, born March 22, 1895. Mr. Barker is a self-made man, the success which he has attained being entirely due to his industry, energy and business foresight. He well sustains the reputation of the old family of which he is a worthy member.

WARFIELD (Woonsocket family). Since the early settling of that region of Massachusetts to the north of portions of Rhode Island including the town of Woonsocket, and the territory out of which that town came, the name Warfield has been a continuous one. As early as 1642 Deacon John Warfield was an inhabitant of Dedham, Mass. He was next in Medfield, thence he went to Mendon town seat in 1685, where he seems to have grown into public confidence, being made a deacon in the church there and placed in charge of the meeting house. He was also appointed school-master of the children and youth. Throughout the region of country indicated in the foregoing and extending down into what is now Blackstone, Mass., and across into Rhode Island, the posterity of this Dedham race of Warfields has continued to the present, and among them have been men and women of high social position and large usefulness. For some forty-five years a branch of this family has been closely identified with the best interests of the community of Woonsocket and worthily worn the family name. Reference is made especially to Aaron B. Warfield, Esq., of that city, long one of its successful business men, a veteran of the Civil war, and merchant, with banking connections; and to his brother, George P. Warfield, Esq., who, though of less years of residence in Woonsocket, is of substantial citizenship, for many years engaged in contracting and building.

(I) Reverting to the early history of the Warfields, Deacon John Warfield, finally of Mendon, Mass., was three times married, marrying (first)

Elizabeth Shepard, who died May 24, 1669. He married (second) a woman whose Christian name was Peregrina. She died April 1, 1671, and he married (third) Hannah Randall. Two children blessed the first marriage, namely: John E. and Elizabeth; and the following named were born to the third marriage: Ithamar, born March 28, 1676; Ephraim, Oct. 4, 1679; Elihu, born April 27, 1682; Mary, in Mendon, April 17, 1685; and perhaps Samuel. Deacon John Warfield died April 12, 1692.

(II) Elihu Warfield, son of Deacon John, lived on the homestead in the town of Mendon, Mass., and through him came the Warfields in general of the town of Milton, Mass. His first wife was named Mary, and they had children as follows: Mary, born Nov. 7, 1715, who married Jonathan Hayward; and Elizabeth, born April 27, 1717, who died Sept. 15, 1719. By his second wife Sarah, there were likewise two children: Elihu; and Job, born July 7, 1724, who married, on June 12, 1751, Huldah Thayer.

(III) Elihu Warfield (2) was born Oct. 24, 1722, and was first married May 24, 1744, to Ruth Green, who died May 11, 1763, the mother of the following children: Hannah, born Feb. 17, 1745; Elihu, July 1, 1747; John, Jan. 5, 1749; Paul, Nov. 22, 1751; Samuel, Jan. 13, 1757 (who married on March 22, 1780, Margaret Gray); and Abijah, April 17, 1759 (who married, on Dec. 11, 1783, Lydia Wheelock). For his second wife Mr. Warfield married, May 30, 1764, Mary Ellis, of Medfield, and their issue was: Mary, born June 16, 1765, who married, Feb. 11, 1790, Jacob Fiske Chesterfield; David, born April 22, 1767, who died young; Ruth, born March 17, 1770, who married, on Jan. 13, 1791, Jonathan Highland, of Providence; and Esther, born June 26, 1772.

(IV) John Warfield, son of Elihu, born Jan. 5, 1749, became one of the leading citizens of Blackstone, Mass., and was greatly respected by all. He owned a farm there on Chestnut Hill, and carried it on until his death, March 31, 1823, at the age of seventy-four years. He was buried at Chestnut Hill. For a long period he was a deacon in the Baptist Church, and a man of genuine piety. On April 3, 1777, he married Deborah Taft, by whom he had a daughter and a son: Lydia, Mrs. George Hill; and Thurber.

(V) Thurber Warfield, son of John, was born in that part of Blackstone which afterward became Mendon, and he grew up there on his father's farm. As a young man he started in the mercantile business and for several years conducted a store successfully on Chestnut Hill. He was also an extensive land owner in that vicinity, and eventually devoted his whole time to farming operations. He was a Whig in political sentiment. He died at his home June 2, 1873, aged ninety years, two months and eight days, and was buried in Chestnut Hill cemetery. He married Miss Lydia Tourtelotte, who was born in Mendon, in October, 1793, daughter of Jesse Tourtelotte. She died March 4, 1877, aged eighty-five years, six months and nineteen days, and was interred beside her husband. They were the parents of eight children, namely: Mauris, who died in Woonsocket; Alanson, who died in Millville, Mass., Nov. 28, 1834, aged twenty-three; Preston; Abby Ann; Adelia A., deceased May 19, 1843, aged twenty-five; Caroline M., who died Jan. 28, 1838; Harriet, who died Feb. 16, 1840; and Lawton, who died young. The daughter, Abby Ann, the only survivor, was born in Mendon, Mass., Oct. 3, 1814. She married Estes Burdon, and had one son, Oscar, of Chestnut Hill. Although over ninety-three years old, she is still active both mentally and physically.

(VI) Preston Warfield was born in Mendon, Nov. 5, 1813. His youth was spent on the home farm and he went from there to work in a paper mill in New York State. He had bought land on the Pacific coast, and later went there, but was attacked by Mexicans and received injuries which caused his death April 12, 1853, when he was in the very prime of life. He left a wife, Hannah (Burdon) Warfield, and a family. Mrs. Warfield was a native of Mendon, born July 31, 1817, daughter of Capt. Aaron Burdon, of Chestnut Hill, and she lived until Nov. 15, 1902. Her remains are interred in the Chestnut Hill cemetery. A woman of education and culture, of brilliant mental attainments, she was a teacher before her marriage, and resumed the work when left a widow, in order to bring up her children more comfortably. Her efforts were more than successful, for her children became honored citizens of the State and reflected credit upon the training given by their mother, who was of a beautiful Christian character. She was the mother of eight children: Frances Ellen, born in 1837, deceased in 1840; Sullivan Alanson, born in 1838, deceased in 1840; George Preston, born in 1843, who died in infancy; Fanny E., Mrs. LeRoy L. Chilson, of Woonsocket; Aaron B., born in 1844; Theresa Adaline, born in 1848, who died in 1849; George Preston, born Oct. 3, 1849; and Theresa Adelia, who lives with her brother, Aaron B.

(VII) AARON B. WARFIELD, son of Preston and Hannah, was born Oct. 23, 1844, in Blackstone, Mass., where in the public schools and at the Walpole (Mass.) high school, he acquired his education. While yet in his teens and hardly out of school, came the Civil war, and in its early stage he became a participant in it, going to the front with his company and regiment in the summer of 1862.

The Seventh Regiment, Rhode Island Volunteers, in which Mr. Warfield served, was recruited in the summer of 1862, and left Providence for Washington, D. C., Sept. 10, 1862, under the command of Col. Zenas R. Bliss. From start to finish with the gallant Seventh, young Warfield shared the fortunes of war. On Aug. 5, 1862, he enlisted as a corporal in Company E, from the town of Cumberland, R. I., later becoming a sergeant. It fell to the lot of Sergeant Warfield to fall under the fire of the enemy, wounded at the fiercely contested and ever memorable battle at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862. And scarcely had he recovered and was again in the ranks when he was the second time pierced by the shot of the enemy, this time on May 25, 1864, at North Anna river. He was finally discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability, by reason of wounds, from Lovell General Hospital, Portsmouth Grove, R. I., June 3, 1865.

Mr. Warfield returned to his home after the close of the war with an honorable war record, and became associated in the cotton yarn business with Mr. E. Jencks, at South Walpole, Mass., in which he continued for two years. Previous to his enlistment young Warfield had for a time been employed as a clerk in a grocery store in Woonsocket. To this town he returned in 1868, and established himself in that same business, associating with him in it Mr. Moses Aldrich. In 1871 he bought his partner's interest, and has since conducted the business alone, and in it and in his other business connections has prospered greatly. In August, 1888, Mr. Warfield first occupied his present business quarters, which are next door to his former location. Mr. Warfield for some years was a director of the Bailey Wringing Machine Company, until it was absorbed by the American Wringer Company. He is a member of the board of directors of the Mechanics Savings and First National Banks at Woonsocket.

In 1865 Mr. Warfield was married to Adelaide, daughter of Nathan Chilson, of Bellingham, Mass., and they have two children: Florence Gertrude, who married John R. Boyden, of Woonsocket; and Edna Louise, at home. Mr. Warfield is a whole-souled man, popular with all classes and with a reputation for honesty and integrity in all his dealings. His home life is a happy one, and he is devoted to his family. He is a member of Smith Post, No. 9, G. A. R., of Woonsocket.

(VII) GEORGE P. WARFIELD, youngest son of Preston and Hannah Warfield, and brother of Aaron B., was born Oct. 3, 1849, in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y. After his school days were over he learned the trade of a carpenter, at Millville, Mass., which he followed as an occupation, and in the middle seventies started in that line of business on his own account in the city of Woonsocket, which has since been his business headquarters. He carried on that business until 1883, in which year, associated with the late Hon. LeRoy L. Chilson, of Woonsocket, he purchased what was known as the River Street Lumber Yard of B. Hawkins & Co. This business he conducted for three years, since which time Mr. Warfield has been engaged in the business of contracting and building. He is also largely interested in real estate. Like his brother, Mr. Warfield has through his energy, industry and the careful management of his business affairs, met with that success his efforts have deserved, and is now one of the substantial business men of his community, esteemed and respected.

On April 1, 1880, Mr. Warfield was married to Georgianna, daughter of George B. and Mary Adams (Rose) Lapham, of Woonsocket, and granddaughter of Arad and Nancy (Mowry) Lapham. Two children have been born to them: George Harold and Ruth Helene. The family reside in a handsome residence on Carrington avenue. Both Mr. Warfield and his wife are members of the Universalist Society. In politics he is a Republican. He is a member of Eureka Lodge, No. 28, I. O. O. F., and is popular, well-known and of enviable reputation in every respect. Mrs. Georgianna (Lapham) Warfield, through her mother, is a direct descendant of Major Ebenezer Adams, an officer in the Revolutionary service, who was with Col. Barton at the capture of the English general, Prescott. Mrs. Warfield is a member of Woonsocket Chapter, D. A. R.

BARTON. Since prior to the middle of the eighteenth century the name introducing this article has been continuous in the town of Warren, where have figured or whence have gone into other localities men bearing the name who have achieved success in the business world, and one at least has written his name high on the roll of fame.

The Warren Bartons came from the old Portsmouth and Warwick families, some of whom figured prominently in the State's Colonial history, and whose progenitor—Rufus Barton—came to this section not far from 1640. This article is to treat specially of some of the Warren Bartons, descendants in the line of the late Samuel and Sarah (Viall) Barton, among whom were the late Capt. George Barton, long one of the substantial men and honored citizens of his native town, the executive head of two of its financial institutions; and William Turner Barton and Nathan B. Barton, prominent business men of Providence, the former now president of the Warren Manufacturing Company.

From Rufus Barton, of Portsmouth, 1640, the paternal lineage of the descendants of the late Samuel Barton, of Warren, follows:

(I) Rufus Barton fled from the persecutions of the Dutch in New York, and settled at Portsmouth, R. I., about 1640. His wife was Margaret. Mr. Barton had a grant of land in 1641, was in the town council of Warwick in 1647, and was also town magistrate in 1647. He died in 1648. His children were: Elizabeth, who married June 30, 1659, Thomas Greene, of Providence, R. I.; Phebe, who married Richard Godner; and Benjamin.

(II) Benjamin Barton, born in 1645, married June 18, 1672, Susanna, daughter of Samuel (the emigrant ancestor) and Elizabeth Gorton, and lived in Warwick, R. I. He was assistant in 1674-75-83-84-99-1700-01-02-03; deputy in 1679-81-85-90-96-1704-05-06-07-08-13-14-15-17; and was Speaker of the House of Deputies, 1703-04. He died in 1720 and his widow in 1734. Their children were: Rufus, born in 1673; Andrew; Mary, born May 1, 1678; Phebe; and Naomi.

(III) Rufus Barton, born in 1673, married Jan. 4, 1705, Sarah, daughter of Rowland and Mary (Allen) Robinson, and was a resident of Warwick, R. I. He died in 1763, and his wife passed away in 1760. Their children were: Rufus, Rowland, Margaret, Sarah and William.

(III) Andrew Barton married Rebecca Low, daughter of John and Mary (Rhodes) Low, and resided in Warwick. Their children were: Benjamin, born in 1703; Samuel; Andrew; Rufus; Anthony; Phebe; and Susanna. Of these children Benjamin Barton became a resident of Warren, R. I. He married Lydia Brown, and their second son, born May 26, 1748, in Warren, R. I., became the distinguished Colonel Barton of Revolutionary fame, and general of the Rhode Island Militia.

William Barton, a descendant of Rufus or Andrew Barton, of Warwick, married (first) Jan. 10, 1768, Ruth, born May 27, 1746, daughter of Amos and Jemima Thomas. She died Feb. 11, 1777, and he married (second) April 25, 1779, Elizabeth Miller. Mr. Barton died Aug. 15, 1809. His children born to the first marriage were: Amos T., born Oct. 5, 1768; Lillis, Sept. 17, 1770; William, Aug. 20, 1772; and Patience, Aug. 13, 1774; and those born to the second marriage were: Mollie, March 28, 1780; Samuel, June 26, 1782; Thomas, Sept. 23, 1784; Rebecca, Nov. 11, 1787; Alfred, Dec. 12, 1790; and Betsey, Jan. 31, 1793.

Samuel Barton, son of William (above), born June 26, 1782, married (first) July 4, 1805, Sally Viall, daughter of Josiah Viall, and (second) Nov. 2, 1834, Mrs. Hannah (Viall) Smith, daughter of Joseph Viall, of Barrington, R. I. His children, all born to the first marriage, were: George, born Feb. 4, 1807; James W., Oct. 27, 1808; Charles, July 31, 1810; Laura, May 22, 1812; Hannan, Aug. 20, 1814; Elizabeth, Feb. 17, 1817; Sarah, Oct. 22, 1821; Maria, Aug. 21, 1823; and Henry, May 23, 1825.

GEORGE BARTON, son of Samuel (above), born Feb. 4, 1807, in Warren, R. I., married Aug. 14, 1834, Rebecca M., daughter of William and Rebecca (Maxwell) Phillips, and had a daughter, Georgiana. At about eighteen years of age Mr. Barton began a seafaring life, and sailed a number of years in the employ of the Messrs. Rhodes of Providence, and subsequently he sailed for Suchet Mauran. He rapidly acquired such knowledge of his duties, in which he was prompt and faithful, as led to his promotion to the command of a ship. From the beginning of his captaincy to the end of his long maritime service he was highly successful in his voyages as master. Retiring from the sea in 1853, Captain Barton engaged in the coal business at the foot of Miller street, in the town of Warren. His stand on the wharf adjoined that of the late Capt. John Throupe Child.

Captain Barton was a man of good judgment and business ability, and held the confidence of his fellow men, and was frequently honored by them in being selected for public trusts. He served a number of years as a member of the town council, and also as one of the board of tax assessors.

He was an influential member of both boards. For a number of years he was overseer of the poor. He was frequently called upon to settle estates, serving as administrator and guardian, and invariably discharging his trusts with eminent fidelity and ability. In 1855 Captain Barton was elected a director of the Hope Bank, at Warren. He was a member of the first board of trustees of the Warren Institution for Savings on its organization, in 1856, and was also a member of its investment committee, a position he retained until the time of his death. In 1870 he was made president of the bank, and retained this position during the remainder of his life. His influence in shaping the policy of the institution, in careful investment of the deposits and economical management of expenditures, was more dominant than that of any other man connected with the bank, and the sound condition of the concern (1904), with its more than a million dollars of deposits, is a monument to his financial skill and integrity. In 1881 he was elected president of the Hope National Bank, succeeding the late George T. Gardner.

Captain Barton possessed a fund of rich humor and his was eminently a social nature. He was modest and unassuming, and from his bearing or demeanor none would suspect the responsible nature of his positions. His sympathies were warm and active, frequently manifesting themselves in unostentatious charity. His life work of honest endeavor and active usefulness is crowned with the commendation of all his fellow citizens. He died Aug. 15, 1888. Mrs. Barton died in 1874.

At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Warren Institution for Savings, held Aug. 20, 1888, the following is one of the several resolutions passed relating to the life and death of Capt. George Barton, late president of that institution:

"Resolved: That in the death of our late president, the board is called upon to mourn the loss of an esteemed friend and associate; an upright and energetic officer who has been actively connected with this institution from the date of its organization, and who has discharged his duties with singular zeal and fidelity, a wise counsellor, who has always proved faithful to all trusts reposed in him."

Capt. Alfred Barton, son of William, born

Dec. 12, 1790, married Oct. 12, 1820, Margaret Clay Turner, born April 20, 1800, daughter of William and Abiah, and to the marriage came children as follows: Alfred, born July 12, 1821; William Turner, Dec. 24, 1823; Robert, April 4, 1827; Thomas Hale, Jan. 14, 1830.

Alfred Barton, son of Alfred, born July 12, 1821, married April 20, 1846, Ann Elizabeth Bowen, born July 20, 1827, daughter of Nathan and Ann (Dorrance) Bowen. Seven children were born of this union: Frank Dorrance, born Oct. 9, 1848; Nathan Bowen, Aug. 8, 1853; George Alfred, May 26, 1855 (died Nov. 14, 1884); William Tulley, May 19, 1859 (died Oct. 16, 1893); Henry Walter, July 6, 1863 (died Dec. 26, 1890); Annie Louise, Feb. 18, 1865 (died March 6, 1869); Alfred, June 13, 1868. Mr. Barton married for his second wife Annie Kate Adams, daughter of Jeremiah S. Adams, of Providence, R. I. No children were born of this union. He died March 17, 1899.

Alfred Barton lived in Warren until 1876, when he moved to Providence. He was engaged in the dry-goods business until 1857, and when he came to Providence he entered the employ of his brother Robert, who was then in the jewelry manufacturing business, and is now engaged in it, being (1904) one of the oldest manufacturers of jewelry in Providence. Mr. Alfred Barton continued with his brother until 1890, when he retired. He was not a public man, but was rather retiring and home-loving in his nature. He was a most enthusiastic Mason, was secretary of Washington Lodge, No. 3, of Warren, for many years, and very constant in his attendance after coming to Providence. He was the oldest man upon whom the commandery degree had been conferred by St. John's Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templar, up to that time. For many years he was active in the Baptist Church of Warren, and after coming to Providence he united (first) with the Stewart Street Baptist Church, and afterward with the Central Baptist Church. He left an untarnished reputation and many friends mourned his death.

NATHAN BOWEN BARTON, son of Alfred, was educated in the high school of Warren. Leaving home he came to Providence in June, 1869, and entered the employ of Belcher Brothers, dealers in hardware and jewelers' supplies, as salesman. He remained with them for ten years, and in 1879 associated with himself Mr. E. C. Ostby, in the manufacture of gold rings, the firm being Ostby & Barton. The partnership continued until 1893, when the firm was incorporated as the Ostby & Barton Company. Mr. Barton was elected treasurer of the company and has so continued ever since. The business has practically continued as a gold ring house and has grown constantly, becoming the largest house of the kind in the world. The business was started in a very small way, on what was then Potter street (now Garnet), and grew so rapidly that they were obliged to move, then locating in a building just completed by John Austin, at No. 80 Clifford street. Taking at first the upper floor, they soon took in the next floor below. Then as the business increased they took in the two additional floors, making four floors—all they could secure in that building. They were soon crowded out of that building and in 1898 purchased the building on the corner of Richmond and Clifford streets. In five years these quarters were also outgrown, and in 1904 they had more than doubled their capacity; a new addition was built to meet this demand in 1903. They have in their buildings accommodations for one thousand hands, and the firm now employs about 750 hands. The secret of their business success is liberality to customers, the firm having among their best and largest customers patrons who bought from them in 1879. Mr. Barton is a director of the High Street Bank, and of the Manufacturers' Trust Company of Providence; was vice-president of the Jewelry Manufacturers' Board of Trade; and a member of the executive committee of the Providence Chamber of Commerce. In politics he is a Republican, but he has taken no active part in his party's work. He has been an active Mason and is past master of Adelphoi Lodge, No. 33, A. F. & A. M.; member of Providence Royal Arch Chapter, No. 1; St. John's Commandery, No. 1, K. T.; the Rhode Island Consistory of Scottish Rite Masons; and of Palestine Temple, Ancient Accepted Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

Mr. Barton is to-day one of the best known and most representative men in the industrial field of Providence. Descended from long lines of hardy yeoman ancestry on both the paternal and maternal sides, who transmitted to him in full qualities of industry and honesty, Mr. Barton presents to the youth of to-day an excellent example of what a boy with energy and high purpose can accomplish. In his private life; in his business and social relations, and in his civil duties, he typifies the best element of American citizenship.

Mr. Barton married Lillian Fisher, daughter of William L. and Mary T. Fisher, of Providence, and they have one daughter, Annie Florence, born Nov. 19, 1875. Socially Mr. Barton belongs to the Providence Central Club, Providence Art Club, Wannamoisett Golf Club, Rhode Island Automobile Club, and Rumford Polo Club.

BOWEN. The Bowen family, maternal ancestors of Nathan Bowen Barton, has been settled in New England for over two hundred and sixty years, and for the better part of two centuries some branches of it have had a home in Rhode Island.

(I) Richard Bowen was of Rehoboth, Mass., in 1643, and was a large land owner there, his property extending along the river, under the bridge called Bowen's bridge now, the fresh water tributary of the Barrington river, south from Seekonk. Mr. Bowen was a town officer June 4, 1645. He was admitted a freeman June 5, 1651. On March 4, 1646, he married Esther Sutton. His burial took place Feb. 4, 1675. His will, probated June 4, 1675, bequeathed his estate to his wife Elizabeth and to children: Thomas, Obadiah, Richard, William, Alice Wheaton, Sarah Fuller and Ruth Leverich.

(II) Obadiah Bowen, son of Richard, married and became the father of the following family: Obadiah (2), born Sept. 18, 1651; Mary, born Jan. 18, 1652; Sarah, born Nov. 6, 1654; Samuel, born July 16, 1659; Joseph, born June 26, 1662; Thomas, born Aug. 3, 1664; Hannah, born May 3, 1665; Lydia, born April 23, 1666; Mercy, born March 18, 1672, and Isaac, born Sept. 30, 1674. Obadiah Bowen, father of these children, died in the eighty-third year of his age.

(III) Obadiah Bowen (2) married Abigail Bullock, and their children were: James, Hezekiah, Daniel, Peleg, Aaron, Nathan, Abigail, Mary, Elizabeth and Sarah.

(IV) Aaron Bowen, son of Obadiah (2), was married Dec. 12, 1717, to Experience Whitaker, born May 16, 1697, who died Dec. 6, 1781. About 1740 they removed to Coventry, R. I., and the house which they there erected has the date 1740 on the chimney and is owned and occupied by Amos Bowen (son of Samuel, son of Isaac). Their children were: Elizabeth, born March 20, 1719, married Capt. Thomas Eddy, and died March 20, 1791; Philip, born May 25, 1721, died Dec. 3, 1740; Aseph, born June 23, 1723, died at sea; Huldah, born April 27, 1725, married April 29, 1750, Caleb Vaughn, of Coventry, R. I., and died Feb. 2, 1803; Ichabod, born Aug. 21, 1727, married Sept. 22, 1757, Mary Bucklin, daughter of Joseph Bucklin, and died Feb. 27, 1816; Aaron, born Sept. 2, 1730, married May 13, 1762, Elnathan Gorton, daughter of Samuel Gorton, of Warwick, and died Oct. 7, 1816; Israel, born Friday, Aug. 17, 1733, married April 5, 1761, Sarah Gorton, daughter of Samuel (Jr.) and Mary, and died April 26, 1819; Prudence, born May 15, 1736, married in 1762 Joseph Mathewson, and died Feb. 27, 1828; Experience, born April 2, 1739, married Sept. 9, 1764, Timothy Nichols.

(V) Israel Bowen, son of Aaron and Experience (Whitaker) Bowen, born Aug. 17, 1733, married April 5, 1761, Sarah Gorton, and died April 26, 1819. Children: Amy, born Feb. 16, 1762; Elizabeth, born March 1, 1764, who died Feb. 1, 1782; Roby, born Nov. 29, 1766, who died Sept. 20, 1861; John, born June 3, 1769, who died Feb. 24, 1837; and Nathan, born July 2, 1771, who died Jan. 31, 1855.

(VI) Nathan Bowen, son of Israel and Sarah (Gorton) Bowen, born July 2, 1771, married (first) June 10, 1798, Betsey Gardner, of Warwick, who died Feb. 26, 1817. He married (second) May 14, 1818, Ann Dorrance. The children by the first marriage were: William Gorton, born May 14, 1799; Sarah Ann, born Oct. 5, 1801; Polly Clarke, born Sept. 20, 1803 (died Aug. 23, 1805); Israel Gardner, born Feb. 19, 1805; Polly Clarke, born Aug. 22, 1806; Tully Dorrance, born Jan. 29, 1808; Edwin Emery, born May 2, 1809; Mercy Rice, born April 14, 1813; and Roby Hill. By the second marriage there were children: Samuel Dorrance, born April 12, 1819; Nathan, born Sept. 5, 1820, who died Aug. 31, 1845; and Ann Elizabeth, born July 20, 1827, who married Alfred Barton.

GORTON. (I) Samuel Gorton and Elizabeth.

(II) Samuel Gorton, son of Samuel and Elizabeth, born in 1630, married Susanna Burton.

(III) Samuel Gorton, Jr., son of Samuel and Susanna (Burton) Gorton, married for his second wife Jan. 21, 1730-31, Mary Rice.

(IV) Sarah Gorton, daughter of Samuel (Jr.) and Mary (Rice) Gorton, born Sept. 10, 1739, married April 5, 1761, Israel Bowen.

EDWARD SISSON. Among the industrious agriculturists of his community none held a higher place in the general esteem than did the late Edward Sisson, who during his lifetime was one of Portsmouth's substantial farmers, and a man whose life afforded a splendid example of upright manhood and good citizenship. He was a descendant of one of New England's early settled families.

John Sisson (3), grandfather of Edward, married, July 8, 1756, Ruth, daughter of John Fish. According to the Portsmouth town record, children were born to this couple as follows: Mary, Jan. 23, 1757; Preserved, Feb. 6, 1759; Allen, Nov. 3, 1761; John, Oct. 25, 1763; Matthew, Oct. 17, 1765; George, June 10, 1768, Ann, Oct. 23, 1770; Matthew (2), Sept. 23, 1773; Pardon, Sept. 23, 1775; and Lavis, May 10, 1779.

Pardon Sisson married, Nov. 26, 1797, Mary (or Polly) Slocum, born in Portsmouth, Feb. 20, 1778, daughter of John and Phoebe (Durfee) Slocum. Her parents had moved from Middletown to Newport about 1750, and later to Portsmouth. Pardon and Mary Sisson made their home after marriage in their native town, and both died devout members of the Society of Friends. Both lived to a ripe old age and retained till within a few days of death their physical and mental vigor to a great degree. She died July 7, 1864, and her husband, Nov. 28, 1866. Mary (Slocum) Sisson was descended from Anthony Slocum, whose son Giles is of record in Portsmouth, R. I., in 1648, and her line of descent is through this Giles, Peleg, Joseph, John and John (2).

Pardon and Mary Sisson were the parents of a large family: (1) Anne, born Feb. 5, 1799, married Abraham C. Coggeshall. (2) Matthew, born Dec. 20, 1800, chose for his wife Sarah Atwood. (3)

Phoebe, born Dec. 15, 1802, died unmarried Aug. 30, 1878. (4) John, born Nov. 18, 1805, married Phoebe Sherman, of Portsmouth. (5) Celia, born Sept. 9, 1807, died Feb. 9, 1852, unmarried. (6) Martha C., born July 7, 1809, became the wife of William Carr. (7) Edward is the subject of this sketch. (8) Oliver, born July 4, 1813, married Almeda Franklin. (9) Holder, born Nov. 4, 1815, lived only one month. (10) Alexander, born Nov. 14, 1816, married (first) Abigail Atwood and (second) Abby Brown. (11) Pardon, twin brother of Alexander, died in 1844, a bachelor. (12) William B., born Aug. 18, 1819, married Charlotte Slocum. (13) Benjamin Franklin, born May 6, 1823, died three years later.

Edward Sisson, seventh child and third son of Pardon and Mary Sisson, was born June 25, 1811, in Portsmouth, R. I., and there passed all the years of his earthly sojourn. He early chose farming as his life work and continued actively engaged in that occupation till his death, which occurred June 24, 1892, when he was aged eighty-one years. Both a good worker and a good manager, his labors met with an ample reward and at his death he left a good estate. About 1852 he purchased a farm of 120 acres on "Gypson Lane," and there made his permanent home. His estimable widow still resides on this homestead, and its former good state of cultivation has been carefully maintained since Mr. Sisson's demise.

While Mr. Sisson always gave his personal attention to the conduct of his farm, he also found time for considerable public service, and was keenly attentive to every matter affecting the welfare of his native town. Originally a Whig in his political fealty, after the formation of the Republican party he became for the rest of his life a loyal adherent of its principles. Several positions of both honor and responsibility were tendered Mr. Sisson and he was a member of the town council for several years and of the school committee, while for some time he served as commissioner of the town asylum.

In 1834 occurred the marriage of Edward Sisson and his chosen bride, Miss Mary Gardner Stedman, daughter of Stephen and Elizabeth (May) Stedman, of Newport. Their union proved to be an unusually happy one, and was blessed with five children: (1) William M., born July 24, 1835, a farmer in Portsmouth, married Lovicia Northrop and has had six children. (2) Sarah E., born in 1837, married the late Martin E. Burtless, by whom she had one son. She now lives in Seneca Falls, N. Y. (3) Edward P., born May 14, 1844, is also a Portsmouth agriculturist. His wife was Miss Abby Fisher, of Providence. (4) George E., born June 14, 1849, is engaged in farming in Portsmouth. He married Miss Laura Sweet, of that town, and has two daughters. (5) Elbert A., born July 28, 1853, is carrying on the home farm. After the death of his first wife, whose maiden name was Emma Peckham, he married Mary (Elliott) Sisson, widow of James M. Sisson. By his first marriage he was the father of two daughters.

Both Edward Sisson and his wife were persons of deep religious feeling and their faith made itself apparent in their daily lives. Members of the First Baptist Church of Newport, they were most regular attendants, nothing but ill health preventing them from taking the long drive every Sunday, no matter what the weather. Their admirable characters made them loved and respected by all, and Mrs. Sisson had the heartfelt sympathy of all when her husband was taken from her.

BUGBEE (Providence family). Through much of the century but recently closed there have resided in eastern Connecticut, and in and about Providence, R. I., several generations of the ancient families of the old town of Woodstock, Conn.—the Bugbee family, a family in itself among the first in position and influence in the old constitution State, and as well long so in the near-by State of Rhode Island; and one which, through its alliances with many of the first families in point of time, position and wealth, but emphasizes its claim as one of the first families of the Commonwealths named. The names of Dorrance, Holmes, Harris, Olney, Arnold, Griswold, Carpenter and others with whom is linked the name of Bugbee, and the latter name itself, will long live and brighten the pages of New England annals. In one of the settlements of eastern Connecticut, a section in which figured long and prominently the late Edwin H. Bugbee, who, too, was one of the leading men of the section, stands a beautiful library building, his gift, known as the Bugbee Memorial; while here, in Rhode Island, at Providence, for long years have figured two of the nephews of Edwin H., in the persons of the late James Henry Bugbee, latterly of the firm of Bugbee & Brownell, wholesale grocers and dealers in spices, and the late John Edwin Bugbee, of the firm of Bugbee & Thompson, stationers and blank book manufacturers, both of whom were substantial men and useful citizens of the city. And here in Providence now resides their sister, Miss Elizabeth Dorrance Bugbee.

Beginning with the first ancestor of the Bugbee family in this country, and arranged chronologically, there follows the family history and genealogy of the branch alluded to.

(I) Edward Bugby (as the name was then spelled) came to Boston in 1634. Richard Bugby, a brother of Edward, came with Winthrop and was the first of the family to come to New England. Edward Bugby, born in 1594, came from Stratford-le-Bow, on the river Lee, near its junction with the Thames, now a part of the city of London. He brought with him his wife, Rebecca, and his daughter, Sarah, sailing from Ipswich on the ship "Francis," and on his arrival in Massachusetts made his home in Roxbury, where he died Jan. 26, 1669, most of the family fortune descending to his son Edward, who remained in that place.

(II) Joseph and John Bugbee, sons of Edward the emigrant ancestor, were born in Roxbury, Mass., and they were among the fifty proprietors of what is now Woodstock, Windham county, Conn., which was settled by people from Roxbury, Mass., the new settlement then being called New Roxbury. The descendants of Joseph and John Bugbee are numerous in that section of New England.

The lineage of the Rhode Island branch of the family from Edward Bugbee is traced through Joseph of Roxbury and Woodstock, who married Experience, daughter of Andrew Pitcher, of Dorchester, Massachusetts.

(III) Samuel Bugbee, born in Roxbury, 1673, married Dorothy, daughter of John Carpenter, of Rehoboth, Massachusetts.

(IV) James Bugbee, born in Woodstock July 11, 1715, married March 16, 1745, for his second wife, Mary May, who was a descendant of Samuel May, one of the first settlers of Woodstock.

(V) Hezekiah Bugbee, born Feb. 19, 1746, resided at Woodstock, where he died. He married Jan. 21, 1773, Bathshua Holmes, born May 6, 1753, daughter of Dr. David Holmes, and aunt of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes. She died in 1833. Dr. David Holmes was a descendant of John Holmes, one of the original settlers of Woodstock. Dr. Holmes was a captain in the Colonial wars and later was a surgeon in the Revolutionary war.

(VI) James Bugbee, born April 11, 1788, in Woodstock, Conn., came to Warren, R. I., when a young man, and was engaged as an accountant. Later he was engaged in the mercantile business at Woodstock and Thompson, Conn., but had been retired from business a number of years, and was residing in Killingly, Conn., when his death occurred, July 17, 1866. He was married Dec. 26, 1811, in Warren, R. I., to Elizabeth Dorrance, a native of Scituate, daughter of Samuel Dorrance, and a descendant of George Dorrance, who came from the North of Ireland with that large Scotch emigration about the year 1715. Samuel Dorrance was a member of Gen. Putnam's party that went to make the settlement of Ohio at Marietta. He took land there, and returned to Rhode Island for his family, when he died. Mrs. Elizabeth Bugbee survived her husband several years, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Charles J. Harris, at Warren, R. I. Her death occurred on her eighty-ninth birthday. Their children were: James Henry; Mary A., who married Charles J. Harris (a cotton manufacturer, and an expert in mill machinery) and resided at Warren, where she died; Edwin H.; Sarah Tully, who is the wife of William Torrey Harris, LL. D. (the well known educator and author, and for years United States

John E. Bugbee

J. M. L.

John E. Bigbee

J. H. Ryker

Commissioner of Education), and resides at Washington, D. C.

(VII) Edwin H. Bugbee, born April 26, 1820, in Thompson, Conn., in 1839 became clerk and bookkeeper in a factory at Lymansville, R. I., and later became associated with Henry Weaver. They conducted the same mill for several years. In 1849 he entered the employ of the Williamsville Manufacturing Company, of Killingly, Conn.—S. & W. Foster being the Providence agents—with whom he remained thirty years, retiring in 1879. Mr. Bugbee was one of the foremost citizens of eastern Connecticut, being called upon to serve the people in many positions of trust and honor. He was more than once urged upon to be a candidate for Governor of his State and Congressman from his district, but he declined. He was a member of the New England Historic-Genealogical Society, and its vice-president for Connecticut, and was much interested in genealogical research.

Mr. Bugbee married in 1865 Selenda Howard Griswold, who died a few months after their marriage. Mr. Bugbee died in 1900, and he left the sum of $15,000 to erect the Bugbee Memorial Library at Danielson, Conn., and also gave his large private library to the same association.

(VII) James Henry Bugbee, of the above family, was born Dec. 5, 1812, in Warren, R. I., and became a clerk in the office of James Rhodes & Son, manufacturers, at Pawtuxet. Subsequently he went on the water and became master of a vessel plying between Providence and European ports. He was lost at sea from his vessel March 4, 1846. He had married in Warren, R. I., June 18, 1834, Maria Smith Potter, daughter of William and Sally (Smith) Potter, and a descendant of many of the oldest families of Rhode Island, including the Smiths, Potters, Williamses, Harrises, Olneys, Arnolds and Carpenters. Mrs. Bugbee survived her husband until Aug. 27, 1874, dying in Providence at the age of sixty-four years. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. James H. Bugbee, their births occurring at Pawtuxet, in the town of Warwick: (1) Miss Elizabeth Dorrance resides in Providence. (2) James Henry was born Feb. 14, 1837. (3) John Edwin was born Nov. 14, 1843.

(VIII) JAMES HENRY BUGBEE, eldest son of his parents, was born Feb. 14, 1837, and received his education in the public schools. He came to Providence in 1854, and became a clerk for Fosters & Fisher, and a few years later became a member of the firm which became Fosters, Fisher & Co., who were engaged in the wholesale grocery business. Later Messrs. Fosters & Fisher withdrew from the firm, and engaged in the manufacturing business at Williamsville, Conn. Subsequently James H. Bugbee formed a partnership with Henry Parsons under the firm name of Parsons, Bugbee & Co. Still later he formed a co-partnership with Seth H. Brownell, in the wholesale grocery and spice business, the firm being Bugbee & Brownell, and continued until 1888, when the firm was dissolved, and Mr. Bugbee retired from active business.

Mr. Bugbee was married June 17, 1868, to Emma Tingley, who was born in 1848, and died April 16, 1873. They had one daughter, Alice Stewart, born June 8, 1870, who died Feb. 26, 1881.

Mr. Bugbee was a well-known man in social and club circles, being an active member of the Squantum Association, and was president of same at the time of his death. He was a member of the old Union Club when it was in existence, a member of the Providence Board of Trade, at one time serving on the executive council. He was a member of the Rhode Island Historical Society, and was eligible to membership in the various patriotic societies. Mr. Bugbee died March 5, 1900, after a very short illness, and was buried in the family plot at Swan Point. He was a highly respected citizen, possessing a genial temperament, very friendly, cordial and kind, and had a wide circle of friends.

(VIII) JOHN EDWIN BUGBEE, youngest son of his parents, was born Nov. 14, 1843. He received a sound common school education at Pawtuxet, and when a boy became a clerk in the store of George Whitney, who had a bookstore in Providence. Later John E. Bugbee became a member of the firm of Bugbee & Thompson, manufacturers of stationery, blank books, fancy goods, etc., and so continued until his death, Dec. 20, 1890. He never married. He was a man of decidedly quiet tastes, very domestic in his habits, and of a retiring disposition.

HARRY WALDO KIMBALL, M. D., one of the best known of the younger physicians of Providence, R. I., was born in Woonsocket, R. I., Jan. 17, 1868, son of James Frederick and Ada Frances (Wales) Kimball, grandson of Stephen Kimball, and great-grandson of Daniel Kimball.

James Frederick Kimball was born at Manville, R. I. A machinist by trade, for many years he was connected with the mills at Woonsocket, R. I., and Hopedale and Milford, Mass. He married Ada Frances Wales, daughter of Jonathan, who was superintendent of construction for the Harrises. To this union there were born: Harry Waldo; Jennie, who married George Roberts, manager of the Hammond Beef Company, in New York City; Charles H.; Frank L.; Daisy, who married Clifton Montague; Horace; Mary; and Clifton, the last six children being residents of Milford, Massachusetts.

Harry Waldo Kimball was educated in the public schools and at Cole's English and Classical school in Pawtucket, R. I. In 1888 he entered the Portland, Maine, School for Medical Instruction, and later attended the Medical Department of Bow-doin College, from which latter institution he was graduated in 1891. In 1890 he was assistant in the Portland Dispensary; in 1891 was clinical clerk of the Maine General Hospital; in 1891-92 was interne at the Rhode Island State Institution and Insane Hospital; on Jan. 1, 1893, became assistant surgeon of the Dermatological Department of the Rhode Island Hospital. He has served as assistant surgeon, with rank of first lieutenant, of the First Regiment, Infantry Brigade, Rhode Island Militia, and first assistant surgeon of the First Light Infantry Regiment, 1892-1894. He is medical examiner for the Union Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Portland, Maine; the A. O. U. W., and the I. O. O. F., and is visiting physician of the Sophia Little Home. Dr. Kimball is a member of the Rhode Island Medical Society, the Providence Medical Association, the University Club, the Medical Improvement Club, the Rhode Island Medico-Legal Society, and the Providence Clinical Club. His fraternal connections are with Harmony Lodge of Masons; Washington Park Lodge of Odd Fellows; What Cheer Lodge, A. O. U. W. (of which he was master); and Rhode Island Yacht Club (of which he is surgeon). He is surgeon for the Rhode Island Division, American National Red Cross Society. In politics he is a Republican.

On Jan. 15, 1896, Dr. Kimball was married to Emma L. Hayward, and to this union there has been born one daughter: Lucile Hayward, born Oct. 12, 1896.

OSBORN (Tiverton family). For now some one hundred and fifty and more years, since the middle of the eighteenth century, the name of Osborn has been one of Tiverton identity, the family long one representative of the best and most useful citizenship, as exemplified in the life of, perhaps, its most distinguished member, the late Hon. Joseph Osborn, who through two-score and more years served as treasurer of his native town, represented it in both branches of the State Assembly, was long a justice of the Court of Common Pleas, member of the Constitutional Convention of 1841, member of the Board of State Charities and Corrections, bank president, etc.; a man whose high type of manhood won expression at the time of his death from his fellow associates of the financial institutions with which he had long been officially connected, of this high tribute to his manhood in their resolution of respect and esteem: "Resolved, That by the death of Hon. Joseph Osborn, President of this Corporation, from its organization, the Citizens Savings Bank has been deprived of a wise counselor, a discreet and faithful Trustee and an efficient presiding officer. He was a man of sterling integrity, Christian character, true to every trust reposed in him, honest in all his dealings, diligent in business, a friend to the poor and suffering, a lover of right, unswerving and implacable in his opposition to duplicity, wrong and oppression."

Then, too, in the succeeding generation has the family name and reputation been worthily worn and sustained in the sons of the deceased just alluded to, some of whom are yet active in business life. One William J. Osborn was a well and favorably known banker and broker of New York; and another is Hon. Henry Clay Osborn, of Tiverton, who is engaged in agricultural pursuits, and as a dealer in live stock, and a former representative of his native town in the State Senate.

William Osborn, the grandfather of the late Judge Joseph Osborn, of Tiverton, was born in the town of Newport, R. I., in 1729, and May 28, 1752, married Elizabeth Shrieve, and to them were born, according to Tiverton town records by Arnold, children as follows: Wilson, born June 3, 1753; Weaver, April 17, 1756; Elizabeth, June 8, 1758; Patience, July 17, 1761; Thomas, March 31, 1766; and William, July 18, 1769. The father of these children died at the age of eighty-one years.

Thomas Osborn, son of William and Elizabeth (Shrieve) Osborn, born March 31, 1766, married in Tiverton, R. I., in 1797, Ann Durfee, born March 6, 1775, in the town of Tiverton, R. I., daughter of Joseph and Abigail (Borden) Durfee, and they were residents of Tiverton, where their lives were passed and where they died, Mr. Osborn Oct. 7, 1833, and Mrs. Osborn May 23, 1845. The children born to them were: William, born Nov. 26, 1798; Thomas, Dec. 30, 1800; Joseph, Aug. 20, 1803; Anna, Dec. 4, 1805 (died in 1812); Wilson, April 15, 1808; Eliza Ann, May 25, 1810 (died in 1887); Patience, Aug. 29, 1812; Weaver, May 23, 1815; and James M., Aug. 26, 1822.

Joseph Durfee, father of Mrs. Ann (Durfee) Osborn, was descended from Thomas Durfee, a native of England, who came to New England and settled in Portsmouth, R. I., previous to 1664, his lineage being through William and Samuel Durfee.

JOSEPH OSBORN, son of Thomas and Ann (Durfee) Osborn, was born Aug. 20, 1803, in Tiverton, R. I., and here in his native town, the town he loved so well, was lived his long and useful, honored life of nearly four-score years. Mr. Osborn began his career a poor boy, became a teacher, was engaged as a fisherman, and struggled as a farmer. These were the harsh limitations bounding the horizon of his earlier years, but the broader fields of effort and influence of a successful man of affairs he attained by middle life. At the time of his death but one of the four men who, with him in business as cattle drovers, made a competence for themselves, outlived him, and the generation who knew him in his earlier efforts had passed away; while the generation remembering him only as a man of mature years, with a fortune to enjoy and an honorable name to bequeath, may scarcely appreciate that from sterner needs than many know he gained by patient care the one and earned by the life he lived the other, and made the place his memory fills today in the hearts of those who knew him best.

The life of Mr. Osborn is thus admirably portrayed and a high tribute accorded the man in the following sketch written by his lifelong acquaintance and friend, the late distinguished Hon. William P. Sheffield, of Newport, and published in the Newport Mercury at the time of his death:

"Mr. Osborn early attracted and constantly preserved the good opinion of his fellow citizens. Under the old charter he was elected one of the ten Senators that then constituted the upper branch of the General Assembly. He was also under the old regime, long a justice of the Court of Common Pleas. He was a member of the convention called to form a State Constitution in 1841, known as the Landholders' Convention, and has been often chosen by his townsmen to represent them in each branch of the General Assembly; at one time he was a member of the Board of State Charities and Corrections, and for forty-four years was Treasurer of his native town. In all of these trusts he was faithful, and adorned the offices with which he was trusted. But he was more than a good officer, for he lived a spotless life and gathered the harvest of a good name for the inheritance of the children he has left behind him. He was an industrious, equable, energetic and well-balanced man, successful in his undertakings because they were conceived in good judgment and carried on by constant and persevering effort to consummation. He was through his life devoted to the cause of temperance, and a consistent member of the Baptist Church for many years.

"Judge Osborn was a man of peace, for he composed more neighborhood differences and settled more quarrels than any five men in Tiverton. He has lived a long and useful life, and in the maturity of age, holding his usefulness to the last, with his life-work well done, has been gathered into the heavenly fold. The gift of such a life is a benefaction to the community in which it is spent. There is not room enough in the world for both the old and the young; by the order of nature the former give place to the latter, and when a good man's life is brought to an end without any association with decrepitude or decay, so that he can be remembered only as in the vigor of his intellectual force, such a life and such a death both give occasion for thanksgiving and not for sorrow."

The foundation of Judge Osborn's fortune was laid in the slow, plodding way of the live stock dealer, making weekly pilgrimages to Brighton and becoming widely acquainted with the farmers of half the State. Later, he became interested in the cotton mills at Fall River and made some very wise investments, from which was developed the larger portion of his fortune. He was a director in the Osborn Mills, a director of the Pocasset Bank, and President of the Citizens Savings Bank (both of Fall River, Mass.) from the time of its organization in 1851 to the time of his death. After handling as treasurer, for more than half his life, the financial interests of the town, he declined a re-election, and when he presided for the twentieth time as moderator of town meeting the people attested their esteem by voting him an honorary seat with whoever might preside at any future meeting. In this latter capacity through his great coolness and power as an extempore public speaker, the town's interest which he always had at heart never suffered.

The Judge, while making his almost paternal relations to Tiverton his greatest public care and study, still regarded his seat with the ten in the old charter Senate as the crowning honor of his political life, and among the dearest memories of his old age were the friendships of that time. As one by one all these associations passed away, the last two passing scarcely a season before him, a subtle suggestion—perhaps not suddenly, yet surely casting its shadow—filled the last of his days with a tender pathos and a dream in which his closest friends well knew they had no part.

On May 2, 1830, Mr. Osborn was married to Eliza Gardner, born Oct. 22, 1804, in Tiverton, R. I., daughter of Samuel and Catherine (Borden) Gardner, and their children were: Ann Catherine, born May 15, 1832; William Joseph, Dec. 3, 1836; Jason Woodward, March 25, 1838 (died Oct. 26, 1860); Eliza Gardner, May 20, 1840; and Henry Clay, born April 15, 1844.

"In his domestic relations, ever the subject of his greatest pride and his keenest care, Judge Osborn was signally favored. His wife Eliza, the fifth child of Samuel and Catherine Borden Gardner, lived to see her sixty-second year, and nearly to complete the thirty-sixth year of their married life. Here in Tiverton, at the homestead, where their youngest daughter, Eliza, now (1907) lives, they saw their little family of five reach manhood and womanhood, and here death closed the gate of earthly possibilities to their son, Jason, when scarcely twenty-two." Judge Joseph Osborn and his wife, and also their son, Jason, are laid to rest in the family cemetery adjoining the Osborn homestead. Of their children, Ann Catherine Osborn, who married Samuel B. Allen, of Fall River, died at the home of her sister, Miss Eliza Gardner Osborn, "Brookside," Tiverton, Feb. 19, 1906, and was laid to rest in Oak Grove cemetery, Fall River.

William Joseph Osborn, eldest son of Judge Joseph, was born on his father's farm Dec. 3, 1836, and was educated in the public schools, at Pierce's Academy, Middleboro, Mass., and at Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Providence. After leaving school he accepted a position as clerk in the freight depot of the Old Colony Railroad, at Boston, Mass., where he spent three years, after which he became a partner of Frank A. Brackett, in the wholesale and retail tea and tobacco business at Boston. Later he removed to New York, where he became interested in railroading and banking. He afterward became a stock broker, and was a member of the Consolidated Stock Exchange. He was noted for his honesty and upright dealings, and was fully trusted by his patrons. While walking in a Benjamin Harrison political procession in New York City, Nov. 3, 1888, he was taken ill and died on the street. He was buried in the Oak Grove cemetery at Fall River. His religious connection was with the First Baptist Church, Pierpont street, Brooklyn, N. Y. In politics he was a Republican, and in fraternal circles a Mason. On June 19, 1873, he married, at Fall River, Hannah L. French, daughter of Stephen L. French, deacon of the Baptist Church at Fall River. To this union came one child, Charles French, born May 2, 1878, who graduated from Williams College, Mass., and is now engaged in the Bureau of Animal Industry in the United States Government service at Portland, Maine.

Miss Eliza Gardner Osborn still makes her home at "Brookside," Tiverton. She is active in the work of the Baptist Church, and takes great pride in her home.

Hon. Henry Clay Osborn, ex-State Senator and farmer and cattle dealer of Tiverton, was born on the old homestead April 15, 1844. He attended the public schools of Tiverton, and the Pierce Academy at Middleboro, Mass., and grew to manhood on his father's farm, and when the latter retired, the son rented the place and engaged in farming and dairying and also in stock dealing, now being one of the largest stock dealers in Newport county. From his boyhood he has been actively interested in public affairs, and as a strong Republican has been prominent in party work. For the past ten years he has been treasurer of the town of Tiverton. In 1887 he was elected State Senator from Tiverton, succeeding Capt. Nathaniel B. Church. In 1889 and 1890 he was again elected a member of the Senate, and still again, in 1905, he was elected a member of the same body, where he served on the committees on Fisheries and Education. Mr. Osborn married (first) Sarah Slocum, of Tiverton, daughter of Aaron Slocum, and six children were born of this marriage, namely: Grace, who married Frank Brewster, of Buffalo, N. Y., where they reside; Joseph, who died young; Mabel J., at home; Florence L., who married Lucien Yeoman, of Chicago; Joseph D., at home; and Henry Clay, Jr., at home. Mrs. Osborn died in 1904, and Mr. Osborn married (second) Miss Lydia Cranston, of New Bedford, Mass. No children have been born of the second marriage.

WALTER SCOTT HOUGH, Providence, is president and treasurer of the Wightman & Hough Company, manufacturing jewelers, who are among the best known and most extensive firms in their line in that city. In the great manufacturing State of Rhode Island the branch of jewelry manufacturing has long been a conspicuous feature, and not only has the city of Providence been the center of this branch of trade here in New England but pre-eminent in this line in our country; and here in Providence no firm or corporation has earned a higher and more honorable position with manufacturers and the jobbing trade of this country and abroad—for the product of the concern goes to all parts of the civilized world—than the corporation of which Mr. Hough is president.

President Hough, the founder of the business of the Wightman & Hough Company, and who for half a century, has been closely identified with the jewelry manufacturing business here in Providence and laudably active and interested in the city's growth and development in other lines, is a true type of New England character—one of that sturdy yeomanry which has given shape to this section and set the pace for the great West and middle West to follow.

While not a Rhode Islander by birth Mr. Hough is thoroughly one in life's work, for the site of the office from which, as the chief executive officer of the corporation of Wightman & Hough, he directs the operations of the company is not farther distant than a half mile from the very place where as an apprentice sixty years ago he began his business career.

The early home of many of the Houghs of eastern Connecticut, where lived the forefathers and parents of Walter Scott Hough, was in the town of New London, where, and in all that region of country, the name has been a continuous one for two hundred and fifty and more years. The progenitor of these Houghs was William Hough, the son of Edward Hough of Westchester in Cheshire, England. William was known as a house carpenter at Gloucester, Mass., along just prior to the middle of the seventeenth century. He lived at Trynall Cove, where and on Biskie Island, opposite, he had land. It is not known that his father came to New England, but it is believed by those who have written of the family that Ann Hough, who died at Gloucester in 1672, aged eighty-five years, was Edward's widow, and the mother of William Hough. The latter was selectman in 1649 and 1650. His departure from Gloucester is spoken of in the latter year, when he joined the migration to New London. He married, Oct. 28, 1645, Sarah, daughter of Hugh Calkins, and the births of the first three of their children are of Gloucester record, namely: Hannah, born in 1646; Abiah, born in 1648; and Sarah, born in 1651. Their other children were of New London record, namely: Samuel, born March 9, 1652-53; John, born Oct. 17, 1655; William, born Oct. 13, 1657; Jonathan, born Feb. 7, 1659-60; Deborah, born Oct. 4, 1662; Abigail, born March 5, 1665-66; and Anna, born Aug. 29, 1667. Of these, Samuel was born at Saybrook, probably while his parents were there temporarily, the father, as stated, being a house carpenter. William Hough died Aug. 10, 1683. The last four of the children of Mr. Hough probably settled in other towns, as the record of them in New London soon ceases. Hannah married John Borden, of Lyme; Abiah married the second William Douglas; and Sarah married William Carpenter. Of the four sons, (1) Samuel Hough located at Saybrook. (2) Capt. John Hough became a noted man of his time, powerful in frame and energy and character. His wife was Sarah Post, of Norwich, of which town he himself was at least for a period a resident. Along in the settling of Voluntown Plantation, in the early years of the eighteenth century, Capt. Hough was a member of a committee in relation thereto sent from Norwich. (3) William Hough married Ann, daughter of the first Samuel Lorthrop, of Norwich, where she died Nov. 19, 1745, her husband passing away long before, April 22, 1705. (4) Jonathan Hough in the summer of 1688 bought land in the town of Windham, Conn., of Hugh Calkins, and at the first public meeting of the town, June 12, 1692, he was chosen townsman.

As stated in the foregoing it was from this race of Houghs that those of the name of the region of country referred to largely sprang. It was here in the old town of Canterbury, Windham county, Conn., lived the parents and forefathers of Walter Scott Hough, he being a grandson of Walter Hough (who was a patriot of the Revolution) and son of Samuel Lockwood and Betsey (Adams) Hough, and here he was born April 21, 1828. He received his elementary education in the public schools of his native town, and at the age of seventeen began an apprenticeship of four years with Messrs. Stone & Weaver, manufacturing jewelers at Providence, R. I. Here under the direction of these men, and no doubt inspired by the close influence of those engaged in the same line of trade, their extensive business and successes, young Hough became thoroughly versed and familiar with the art and ambitious to follow in their footsteps. This atmosphere no doubt had much to do with the forming of habits and character which in after years enabled him to become one of the foremost manufacturers of jewelry in Rhode Island. In 1853, associated with Messrs. Jeremiah Briggs and Calvin Stone, young Hough began in a small way at Providence to manufacture jewelry, the firm style being Briggs, Hough & Stone. Some years subsequently, on the dissolution of this firm, Mr. Hough, in 1856, associated with the late Albert Augustus Wightman, formed a business partnership for the manufacture of jewelry which continued throughout the lifetime of Mr. Wightman and established a business which is still carried on by the Wightman & Hough Company, a corporation which in magnitude is perhaps not second to any concern in its specialty in the country, surely not in reputation or the character of its product. On the death of Mr. Wightman, in 1893, Mr. Hough purchased his interest in the business and the concern was incorporated under the name of the Wightman & Hough Company, of which Mr. Hough has since been the chief executive officer and treasurer. Here, at No. 7 Beverly street, Providence, is located the office and plant of the corporation, which plant is the largest in its line in the country, and the great position it has attained in jewelry manufacturing circles and its successes are largely due to the guiding mind of the now president of the corporation, through the care and attention he has constantly given to the business through the past fifty years of service. The house belongs to the New York Jewelers Association, also to the New England Jewelers Association, and the Manufacturing Jewelers Board of Trade.

Mr. Hough, though his standing in business and social circles and his means would justly entitle him to exclusive society, in manner and disposition is as free from ostentation, and as easily approached as when he began his business career in a most humble way. He is a self-made man in the truest sense of the word, rising from the ranks through the force of his make-up to the head of a large business with the position, influence and power which such commands in business circles and in his community. In his tastes he is fond of outdoor sports and is socially inclined, as his membership in clubs and orders might imply. He is a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of St. John's Commandery, No. 1, K. T., and of Palestine Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He is a member of the Central Pomham and West Side Clubs, and of the Rhode Island Chapter of the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. He has given considerable attention to military affairs, having been since 1852 a member of the First Light Infantry, and is now a member of the First Light Infantry Veteran Association. Though ever interested in all that good citizenship implies and active in all that pertains to the welfare of the people of his community and in measures looking to the advancement of his adopted city, and a zealous Republican, yet he has no taste or inclination for political preferment or public position and has held aloof from such.

On Nov. 3, 1850, Mr. Hough was married to Sarah E. Burroughs, daughter of Capt. Peleg and Eliza (Bigley) Burroughs, of Newport, R. I. Mrs. Hough died in September, 1901. The following children were born to them: (1) Walter S., Jr., born March 9, 1852, is engaged in the manufacture of gold rolled plate and seamless wire, under the firm name of the W. S. Hough Jr. Company, on Orange Street, Providence. He is the father of two sons: Eugene Walter, who is married and has two children and resides in New York; and Herbert Dorrance, of Providence, who is married and has one child. (2) Eliza Robbins, born Oct. 18, 1854, married Charles A. Wilkinson, of the firm of C. A. Wilkinson & Co., manufacturers of optical goods, at Providence. They have three sons: Howard H. (who married Harriet L. Huestis, and is associated with his father in business), Frederick C. and Ralph A. (3) Edward Bigley, born Dec. 16, 1866, is married and resides in Providence, he being vice-president and general manager of the Wightman & Hough Company.

In 1886 Mr. Hough erected the residence at No. 334 Broadway, which has since been his home. For more than twenty years he has maintained a summer home at Buttonwoods.

BUCKLIN. The first record of the Bucklin family in Rehoboth is that of the marriage of (I) Joseph Bucklin (Buklin) and Deborah Allen, Nov. 5, 1659. Some of the earlier settlers of Bucklins in Rhode Island were farmers, and some operated extensive grist mills in 1747 on the banks of the Seekonk river, and it is said that they were the original white owners of the land in the vicinity of Pawtucket Falls, on the east side where now stands the plant of D. Goff & Sons' Braid Works. Here once stood the Bucklin grist mill, which was purchased by Colonel Stock, a member of the first cotton mill company, which utilized the above privilege by the erection of the yellow mill, in 1805. In 1811 was erected a small stone mill, on Bucklin Brook, in which cotton yarns were manufactured for three or four years, when the mill was burned. Others then purchased the water-power and forty acres of land from Nancy Bucklin in 1817, and afterwards carried on the bleaching of cotton cloths and yarns. Mary Church, the mother of Colonel Bucklin, of Providence, descended from Joseph Church, of one of Rhode Island's most distinguished families.

To the marriage of Joseph and Deborah (Allen) Bucklin were born: Deborah, born Sept. 16, 1660; Joseph, Feb. 16, 1663; Barak, Aug. 1, 1666; John, May 10, 1668; James, July 3, 1669; Isaac, Jan. 31, 1672; Nehemiah, Sept. 16, 167—; Nehemiah (2), March 31, 1678; and Lydia, Sept. 5, 1680.

(II) Joseph Bucklin (Buckland), Jr., son of Joseph, was born Feb. 16, 1663. He married, June 30, 1691, Mehitabel Sabin, by whom he had issue: Deborah, born May 5, 1692; Joseph, Sept. 20, 1694; Martha, Sept. 6, 1696; Benjamin, Jan. 30, 1697-98; John, March 30, 1701; Rachel, Dec. 1, 1703; Nehemiah, June 6, 1706; David, Oct. 31, 1708; Esther, Oct. 3, 1710; Jonathan, Sept. 13, 1713, and William, Feb. 23, 1716-17.

(III) Nehemiah Bucklin, son of Joseph, Jr., born June 6, 1706, married Beriah, and they had children: Daniel, born Dec. 5, 1731; David, Jan. 2, 1733-34; Oliver, June 14, 1736; Martha, Jan. 14, 1739-40, and Nehemiah, April 19, 1743.

(IV) Daniel Bucklin, born Dec. 5, 1731, married, Oct. 31, 1754, Elizabeth Carpenter. They were both of Rehoboth. Their children were: William, born Aug. 18, 1755; Martha, Feb. 4, 1760; Daniel, Sept. 11, 1761; Jabez, Aug. 27, 1764;

George, March 3, 1767; Elizabeth, Sept. 20, 1768; and John, Sept. 20, 1776.

(V) Jabez Bucklin, born Aug. 27, 1764, married Lydia, and their children were: George and William.

(VI) William Bucklin, son of Jabez, was born Aug. 3, 1787, and married, June 18, 1810, Mary Church, born Sept. 3, 1791, daughter of Nathaniel. The children of William and Mary (Church) Bucklin were: George, born April 1, 1811; William, Sept. 9, 1812; Henry, Sept. 21, 1814; Sarah Bishop, Oct. 24, 1816; Charles, Aug. 15, 1818; Daniel, Sept. 9, 1820; John Henry, Sept. 29, 1822; Mary Church, Sept. 2, 1824 (married R. B. Woodward, formerly of Providence, later of San Francisco, where he became a millionaire and where his children now live); Joseph Howard, Aug. 17, 1826; Edward Pearce, July 13, 1828; John Carpenter, Oct. 30, 1830; Jane Frances, April 12, 1833; and James Tibbitts Pearce, March 5, 1836. William Bucklin, the father of these children, was a barber for many years on South Main street, having as his patrons many of the most prominent men of Providence, continuing his business until within a few years of his death. He was a gentleman of the old school, well-read and well-informed. Although a temperate man he was not a Prohibitionist. He was straight as an arrow, and a man of fine physique. Mr. Bucklin died March 15, 1864, and his wife July 1, 1841.

(VII) COLONEL JAMES TIBBITTS PEARCE BUCKLIN, son of William and Mary (Church) Bucklin, was born at the Bucklin homestead, at what is now known as No. 8 Arnold street, March 5, 1836, the youngest of the family of thirteen children. He received a liberal education in the schools of his native city, and subsequently served an apprenticeship to the trade of silversmith with the Gorham Manufacturing Company. At the outbreak of the war of the Rebellion, in 1861, when the first call was made by the President for troops to preserve our National unity, the spirit of patriotism found a ready response in the heart of James T. P. Bucklin, who enlisted in the 1st Rhode Island Regiment, Detached Militia, for three months' service. The regiment left Providence between the 20th and 24th of April, 1861, the first detachment under Col. A. E. Burnside, and the second under Lieut.-Col. Joseph S. Pittman. They arrived in Washington and bivouacked on the site of the present patent office, and went into quarters at Camp Sprague. The battle of Bull Run was soon fought, and although it proved disastrous to the Nation's cause this regiment made an honorable record, and after its term of service returned home, bearing its wounded and its rent and battered flags. At the call for volunteers to serve three years, Mr. Bucklin is credited with raising Company A, the first company raised and taken to Camp Greene, which was situated between Olneyville and Apponaug, and which resulted in the organization of one of the crack regiments, the

4th Rhode Island Volunteers, which was organized by Col. Johnston I. McCarthy, of the regular army. Among the officers of the 4th Rhode Island appeared the name of Second Lieutenant James T. P. Bucklin. This regiment, like the preceding ones, received many tokens of regard from the citizens of Providence, among these being two beautiful stands of colors, presented by the loyal ladies of this city. On Oct. 2, 1861, the regiment broke camp, reached Washington on the 6th, and took temporary quarters at Camp Sprague, afterward removing to Casey. The Colonel with his command, paid his respects to the President on the 11th of October, and on the following day the regiment was received by General Casey, who expressed surprise and pleasure at their soldierly appearance. This command, like those preceding it from Rhode Island, contested many a hard-fought battlefield, and whether experiencing defeat or victory, their heroism knew no abatement. The hosts of illustrious names from Rhode Island were indelibly stamped upon the pages of Congressional record, surrounded with a halo of glory that grows brighter and brighter with each succeeding generation. James T. P. Bucklin is the youngest in years in the State to hold the rank of major during the War of 1861, and his commission is the oldest dated Major's commission. At the battle of Bull Run he was acting first sergeant, and was engaged in the battles of Roanoke Island, Newbern, Fort Macon, South Mountain, Antietam, first battle of Fredericksburg, Siege of Suffolk, Hill's Point, Petersburg, at the explosion of the mine July 30, 1864, in front of Petersburg, and Weldon Railroad. During many of the battles, Major Bucklin was in command of the regiment, and assumed command after Lieut.-Col. Buffum had been taken prisoner at Petersburg, July 30, 1864. He continued in command until after his return with the regiment to Rhode Island. His official war record is as follows: Sergeant Co. A, 1st Reg. R. I. Detached Militia, April 17, 1861; enrolled May 2, 1861; mustered, Aug. 2, 1861; mustered out Sept. 2, 1861; went into Camp Greene as second lieutenant, Co. A, 4th R. I., Sept. 12, 1861; mustered in Nov. 20, 1861; promoted first lieutenant, Dec. 7, 1861; transferred from Co. A to Co. E, April 30, 1862; promoted captain and transferred to Co. H, June 11, 1862; promoted major, Jan. 9, 1863; July, 1863, on detached service, and placed in command at New Haven, Conn., of the company of conscripts from Rhode Island and Connecticut, and so continued until December, 1863. His duties here made it necessary to take the men the entire distance from New Haven to the Rapidan, in order to deliver them to their respective regiments, a fact which speaks well for Major Bucklin and his assistant officers, to succeed in taking a detachment of 265 men to the front with a loss of but two men. In the spring of 1864 he obtained a ten days' leave of absence, to return to his home to attend the funeral of his father, whose death occurred March 15, 1864. He remained in the recruiting service until May, 1864. In August, 1864, he was absent on sick leave, but assumed command of the regiment upon his return, and on Oct. 15, 1864, was mustered out. On March 25, 1867, he was brevetted lieutenant-colonel of U. S. Vols., and on March 26, 1867, brevetted colonel for faithful and meritorious service, these brevets to date from March 13, 1865.

No man ever endeared himself to his men any more than did Colonel Bucklin. His exact justice secured their unlimited confidence, while his kindness of heart won their love. He proved himself unselfish, frank, generous and manly, in all the qualities of life; a patriot during the years of the Rebellion, and an honored citizen ever since. After the war he went to Chicago, and entered the employ of the Northwestern Silverware Company, and was in the Custom House for some ten years as weigher and measurer. After his return to Providence he established a blacksmithing business at the corner of Bridge and South Main streets, which he successfully conducted for a period of three years, when he sold out to accept the position of harbor master, in which he served from 1885 to 1890. In 1893 he was appointed inspector of provisions, and served in that capacity until 1896, and in 1898 he was again made harbor master; and has been twice re-elected since.

Colonel Bucklin has always been an active Republican, and has won the approbation of his party for his efficient and faithful devotion to its principles. He is a member of the Loyal Legion, and for twelve years has been quartermaster of Rodman Post, No. 12, G. A. R., and in 1904 was commander; is a member of the Veteran Firemen's Association; of the Athletic Association; and of the Corinthian Yacht Club.

On June 25, 1865, Colonel Bucklin was married to Miss Hannah Hathaway, daughter of Dennis and Elizabeth Presby Hathaway White, and of one of the most representative families of Fall River, Mass. On the paternal side Mrs. Bucklin is a lineal descendant of Peregrine White, the first white child born after the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock. Col. Bucklin and wife have one daughter, Abby Robinson, now the wife of Henry L. Slater, who is identified with the Rhode Island Hospital Trust Company.

JOHN L. KENYON. The first authentic record of the Kenyon name in Richmond is of one John Kenyon, who came from North Kingstown. From his own sworn statement he was born in 1657. His death occurred in the year 1732. He had these children: John, James, Enoch, Joseph, David, Jonathan, Samuel, and one daughter, who married John Webster, the first town clerk of Richmond.

John Kenyon, son of John, was born in January, 1682, and died in January, 1745. In July, 1704, he was married to Elizabeth Remington, born in 1685, daughter of John and Abigail (Richmond) Remington, of North Kingstown; she died in July, 1748. To this marriage were born: John, born Nov. 21, 1706, married March 23, 1727, Mary Gardner, daughter of Nathaniel Gardner; Thomas, born Dec. 28, 1708; Sylvester, born April 7, 1710, married Annie, daughter of Moses and Susannah Waite; George, born Sept. 28, 1712, married June 16, 1741, Anna Lewis; Sarah, born Sept. 21, 1715, married Dec. 18, 1740, Ebenezer Niles; Mary, born in 1717, married Feb. 27, 1742, Enoch Lewis; Elizabeth, born April 25, 1720, married, on Feb. 27, 1735, Stephen Hoxsie, son of Joseph Hoxsie; Samuel, born in 1722, married April 13, 1746, Hannah Kenyon, daughter of David Kenyon; Abigail was never married; and Benedict, born in 1735, died April 10, 1807.

Benedict Kenyon, son of John, born in 1735, married (first) Amy Barber, May 29, 1759, and (second) Phoebe Thurston. His children were: Edith, born Aug. 11, 1760, married William Hoxsie; Samuel, born April 17, 1762, married Mary Westcott; Remington, born June 11, 1764, married (first) Charity Rathbone, who died March 10, 1795, and (second) Patience Webster; Silas, born Aug. 28, 1766, married Hanna Clarke; Benedict, Jr., born Dec. 26, 1768, married Phoebe Champlin, and died April 18, 1857; John, born March 9, 1771; Carey, born April 13, 1773, married (first) Sarah Record, and (second) Witty (Moore) Barber; Amy, born Sept. 26, 1774, married Judge William James, of Richmond; Betsy, born Jan. 3, 1778, never married; Mary, born June 30, 1780, never married; and George, born Feb. 9, 1783, died unmarried.

John Kenyon, born March 9, 1771, son of Benedict, married (first) Anstrieus Tefft, daughter of Joseph and Alice (Albrough) Tefft, (second) Sarah Woodmansee, and (third), May 1, 1808, Charity Barber, daughter of Josiah and Ellena (Lewis) Barber. Mrs. Charity Kenyon died Nov. 28, 1859, the mother of one son, Daniel, born July 15, 1809.

Daniel Kenyon, born July 15, 1809, son of John, married Nov. 9, 1833, Mary Larkin, born Sept. 22, 1806, daughter of Roger and Mary (Kenyon) Larkin. He died Jan. 10, 1859, and his wife passed away June 25, 1882. They had the following children: Mary Abbie, born May 24, 1835, died March 8, 1836; John L., born Aug. 1, 1836; Charity B., born April 30, 1838, married May 31, 1880, Samuel A. Waterman, and died May 16, 1904; Phoebe Ellen, born Dec. 31, 1839, died unmarried Nov. 4, 1891; Amy N., born Oct. 29, 1842, died May 20, 1843; Daniel C., born July 15, 1844, married (first) Sept. 25, 1882, Josephine Ware, who died Dec. 21, 1892, and (second) Agnes E. Wright, Jan. 25, 1897; and Sarah Eliza, born June 21, 1849, married in January, 1883, John L. James, who died March 28, 1900.

John L. Kenyon, son of Daniel, was born Aug. 1, 1836, in Hopkinton, and at an early age removed with his parents to Richmond, where he lived, with the exception of four years in Hopkinton, all of his life. The foundation of his education was laid in the district schools, and this was supplemented by extensive reading, and aided by an active mind, thus developing abilities far above the average. His father was a blacksmith by trade and a practical surveyor, and Mr. Kenyon soon entered into the practical work of both these branches. He kept the old shop open after the death of his father, until 1892, when he made surveying his principal business. The blacksmith business he continued by hiring a blacksmith, after he gave it up himself. His first large undertaking was the survey of a railroad from Wickford to Narragansett Pier, which, however, was never built. He was engineer in chief, having charge of the layout and building of the Wood river branch railroad, from Wood River Junction, then called Richmond Switch, to Hope Valley. He became the first superintendent of the road, and was always on the board of directors until about two years prior to his death.

Mr. Kenyon was interested in public matters. In politics he was a Democrat, and was senator from his own town for two years, declining a further election. He was also a member of the town council for nearly twenty years, most of the time being president of the same in Richmond. Mr. Kenyon was one of the earliest members initiated into the Mechanics Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F.; and he was also a member of Charity Lodge, A. F. & A. M., and of Franklin Chapter, R. A. M. He was a popular member of the Washington County Agricultural Society, and was greatly interested in its work.

For over two years Mr. Kenyon had been in ill health, suffering severely, and death came while he was sitting up in a chair, at his home in Wyoming, Richmond, Aug. 25, 1904.

On March 25, 1857, Mr. Kenyon married Harriet Frances Kenyon, born Oct. 1, 1840, daughter of David and Thankful (Barber) Kenyon. Mrs. Kenyon's line is through her father David, his father Pardon, his father Capt. Thomas, his father David to his father John, the progenitor of the Kenyon family. Mrs. Kenyon, a highly esteemed and respected lady, still resides at the old home in Wyoming, Richmond. She is well known, and is a woman of more than ordinary business capacity, and is greatly interested in genealogical research.

SOUTHWICK. The Southwick family, which bears a time-honored name in the New England States, where it has been a continuous one since 1639, was one of the first settled families of Massachusetts. Newport, R. I., has been the home of members of this family since early in the eighteenth century, and during the past century there have been worthy representatives in the persons of the late Pitts Southwick and his sons, the late Samuel S. Southwick and James M. K. Southwick, the latter at present one of the city's leading business men.

SAMUEL S. SOUTHWICK

J. M. R. Southwick

(I) Lawrence Southwick is of record at Salem, Mass., in 1639, in which year he and his family were admitted members in the First Church of Salem. There is a tradition in the family that Mr. Southwick came from Lancashire, England, to America in 1627, and returned to England and brought his wife, Cassandra, and children, John and Mary, to Massachusetts in 1630, on the "May-flower," in company with William Bradford and others. He settled at Salem. Two acres of land were given him by the town of Salem in 1639, to carry on the business of manufacturing glass and earthenware. The family were Quakers, and for that were fined, whipped, imprisoned and finally banished. Lawrence and his wife went to Shelter island, on Long Island sound, in 1659, and died there from privation and exposure in 1660. They had been baptized at the First Church, Salem, 24th of 2d month, 1639, and their children were: John, born in 1620; Mary, in 1630; Josiah, in 1632; Provided, in 1635; Daniel, in 1637; and Provided (2), in 1641.

(II) Josiah Southwick, son of Lawrence, was born in 1632. He and his wife Mary were married in 1658. He united with the church at Salem, but was later whipped, imprisoned and finally banished for being a Quaker. He went to Rhode Island and there established a home, and going back to Salem after the death of his parents, in 1660, to look after the property, was again whipped for returning to Massachusetts. His children were: Josiah, born in 1660; Joseph, April, 1662; Mary, November, 1664; Cassandra, 1666; Deborah, 1667; Solomon, 1672; Ruth, 1674; Jonathan, 1676; Deliverance, 1678; and Hopestill, 1680.

(III) Solomon Southwick, son of Josiah, was born in 1672, married, probably in 1712, and had children: Hannah, born in 1713; Mary, 1715; Ruth, 1717; Joseph, 1719; Martha, 1722; Jeremiah, 1725; Elizabeth, 1728; and Solomon, 1731. The father of these children seemingly lived in Rhode Island in 1711.

(IV) Joseph Southwick, son of Solomon, was born in 1719, and married in 1738 Mary Pitman, born in 1722. Mr. Southwick and his brother, Solomon, were admitted freemen of the Colony of Rhode Island in May, 1759. Solomon Southwick was commissary-general of the State of Rhode Island for several years, and during the Revolutionary war was the publisher of the Newport "Mercury." When the British invaded Newport he was compelled to leave the city, and escaped to Massachusetts. Joseph Southwick was a member of the Sabbatarian Church of Rhode Island. He died Sept. 15, 1780, and his wife Oct. 16, 1788. Their children were: John, born in 1740; Mary, 1743; Hannah, 1743; Catherine, 1745; Joseph, 1746; Josiah, 1748; Deborah, 1749; and Jonathan, 1764.

(V) Joseph Southwick (2), son of Joseph, born in 1746, married (first) in 1768 Mary Irish, and for his second wife married Susannah Pitts, who was born in 1756. He died June 19, 1829, and Mrs. Susannah Southwick died Dec. 21, 1839, both attaining the age of eighty-three years. His children, the two first named born to the first marriage, and the others to the second marriage were: Josiah, born in 1769; Mary, born in 1771; Betsey, born in 1777; George H., born in 1778; Sarah, born in 1779; Joseph, born in 1780; Catherine, born in 1782; David, born in 1785; Ruth, born in 1787; Tiley, born in 1790; Susan, born in 1792; and Pitts, born in 1795.

(VI) Pitts Southwick, son of Joseph (2), was born Oct. 14, 1795, in Newport, R. I., and there died Jan. 7, 1887. In early life he learned the trade of boat-builder, and after following that occupation some years engaged in the business on his own account on Long Wharf, where he gave employment to several skilled mechanics. Here he continued successfully throughout the remainder of his life, winning a reputation as a careful and capable business man. As an upright, conscientious, honorable citizen he held the respect and esteem of the entire community. Early in life Mr. Southwick was a Democrat of the old school, but before the great Civil war, on account of his strong Abolition views, he became a stalwart adherent of the principles of the Republican party. While always taking a good citizen's interest in public matters, and always being willing to lend his hand and voice to any measure which had for its object the betterment of the community, he never cared for public preferment. He was for many years an active member and devoted worker in the Fourth Baptist Church, of Newport.

On Dec. 6, 1816, Mr. Southwick was united in marriage to Sarah Sweet, daughter of Christopher Sweet, of Newport, a descendant of one of New England's early-settled and time-honored families. To Mr. and Mrs. Southwick were born children as follows: Phebe, born in 1818, who died in 1875, unmarried; and Samuel S., born April 10, 1820. The mother of these two children died July 20, 1822, in Newport, and Aug. 28, 1824, Mr. Southwick married (second) Mary (Eldred) Comstock, daughter of Benedict Eldred, and widow of Benjamin Comstock, of Newport, where she was born in 1796. To this union were born the following children: Mary, born May 12, 1825, married Clark H. Burdick, of Newport, where they both died; Sarah, born June 16, 1827, married Edwin G. Angell, of Providence, where Mrs. Angell passed away; Benjamin P., born Nov. 14, 1828, was a boat-builder by trade and died in California, March 20, 1891, unmarried; James M. K. was born Nov. 25, 1830; Cecelia P., born Aug. 16, 1832, died at the age of sixteen years. Mrs. Mary Southwick died in Newport May 23, 1879, aged eighty-three years.

(VII) SAMUEL SWEET SOUTHWICK, son of

Pitts and Sarah (Sweet) Southwick, was born April 10, 1820, in Newport. After acquiring his early educational training in the public schools of his native city, he took up the boat-builder's trade under the instruction of his father, continuing with him until the latter's death, in 1887, after which he continued to conduct the business successfully until his own death, July 1, 1896. Like his father, Mr. Southwick was careful and conservative, in manner quiet and unostentatious, but withal genial and kind, winning hosts of warm friends. In his death the city lost an honored and public-spirited citizen and the needy a true-hearted friend. In his habits he was domestic, being greatly devoted to his home. He was a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party, and, while never an office seeker, was a power in the ranks of that organization. For many years, until his death, Mr. Southwick was a devoted member and staunch supporter of the Fourth Baptist Church, of Newport.

On Oct. 26, 1843, Mr. Southwick and Miss Mary Rose were united in marriage. After her death Mr. Southwick married (second) Nov. 1, 1883, Martha Townsend Langley, daughter of John B. and Martha C. Langley, of Newport. Mr. Southwick had no children.

(VII) JAMES M. K. SOUTHWICK, son of the late Pitts and Mary (Eldred) (Comstock) Southwick, was born Nov. 25, 1830, in Newport, R. I. He received his literary education in the public schools of that city, attending the same until his fifteenth year, when he went to work for his father in the boat-building establishment. There he remained until 1849, in which year he joined a company composed of seventy men, nearly all residents of Newport, who purchased the whaling ship "Audley Clarke," in which they set sail for California, by the way of Cape Horn. Arriving at their destination after a long and perilous journey, the men entered the mines, in which Mr. Southwick worked from Sept. 4, 1849, until 1854, in April of which year he returned home by way of Nicaragua. During his stay in California Mr. Southwick's mining ventures proved successful, and upon again locating in Newport he possessed the capital necessary to establish himself in the hardwood lumber business, as an importer, continuing in that line for a matter of two years. After a short time in the grocery business Mr. Southwick embarked in the ship chandlery enterprise, at No. 101 Thames street, which he has continued to the present time, with great success. In 1874 he rebuilt the building at No. 185 Thames street, to which place his business was removed and where he has since been located. He also deals in cordage, fishing tackle, sporting goods, and yachting and ship supplies of all kinds.

Mr. Southwick is a member of the Newport Historical Society, having served as vice-president of that body for one year, and was also very instrumental in raising the funds to build the society's present substantial quarters on Touro street; he served as a member of the building committee. He is a member of the Newport Natural History Society and of the Redwood Library and Athenæum. He was one of the original incorporators of the Newport Realty Company, and has served as a member of the board of directors. In 1892 Mr. Southwick was appointed by Governor Brown, a member of the fish commission of the State of Rhode Island, and he served as president of that body for a period of twelve years; he is still a member of the commission, of which he is now vice-president. In his political views he is a staunch adherent of the principles of the Republican party and as such was chosen to serve his native city as a member of the common council in 1855, when he was but twenty-four years of age. He also represented the city of Newport in the General Assembly of the State in the session of 1874-75. Mr. Southwick and his wife are active members in the Central Baptist Church (now the Second Baptist) of Newport, to which they give their liberal support. Mrs. Southwick is a member of the Ladies' Benevolent Society and also of the Missionary Society, in the work of which she has been prominent and active.

On July 21, 1856, James M. K. Southwick and Mary A. Goodspeed were united in marriage. She is the daughter of Isaiah and Mary A. (Carr) Goodspeed, of Newport, both of whom were descendants of distinguished old New England families. Mr. and Mrs. Southwick have no children.

Mr. Southwick is one of the most progressive business men of the city. Honorable and upright in all his dealings, prompt to fill contracts, he has won the confidence of all with whom he has come in contact, and bears an enviable reputation for integrity. He is very public-spirited and is considered one of Newport's representative citizens.

HORACE WALKER STEERE, member of the firm of Arnold & Steere, manufacturing jewelers at Providence, and a successful self-made business man, is a son of Horace S. and Marietta (Walker) Steere, and a descendant in the seventh generation from John Steere, the ancestor of the family in Rhode Island, his lineage being traced back through Horace S., Job, Deacon Asa, Jonah, John and Samuel.

Horace Smith Steere is a venerable and highly-esteemed citizen of Gloucester and a more complete record of his family will be found elsewhere in this publication.

Horace Walker Steere was born Nov. 1, 1854, in Gloucester, on the farm now occupied by his father, and at an early age manifested a spirit of self-reliance that has since shown itself to be one of his chief characteristics. He left home at the very early age of eight years, and from that time to the present has depended wholly upon himself. Until he was sixteen years of age he worked at farm labor, being employed on farms in Burrillville, R. I., Pomfret, Conn., and at Scituate. His education was obtained in the district schools in the towns where he was employed, he working in the winter time for his board so that he could attend school. While employed in Scituate he attended the Lapham Institute for two or three years.

Mr. J. C. Case

Horace W. Steere

In 1870 Mr. Steere located in Providence, and was employed on the street railway, first as a driver and later as a conductor, his term of service covering about seven years, when he was compelled to give up work on account of ill health. For two seasons he was in the employ of the Continental Steamboat Company, first as ticket-seller on the pier at Providence, and later looking after the receipts of all of their properties at Rocky Point, except the hotel and theatre. His first experience in the jewelry business was when he represented a New York importing house handling precious stones among the jewelry manufacturers of Providence and vicinity, which business he followed with much success for several years. In 1883 he became a traveling salesman for Ferd I. Marcy & Co., manufacturing jewelers, and remained in their employ for five years, until 1888, when he accepted a more lucrative position as traveling salesman for Thomas F. Arnold. Two years later he became a partner with one-half interest, under the firm style of Arnold & Steere. The business of the new firm increased very rapidly, and these gentlemen continued together until April 1, 1901, when, because of advancing age, Mr. Arnold withdrew from the firm, and William H. Grafton of Providence, and Fred R. Sheridan, the Western representative of the company, were admitted as partners, the name remaining unchanged. They are makers of solid gold band and stone rings, diamond mountings and scarf pins. They have an office in Maiden Lane, New York, and one at Nos. 151-153 Wabash avenue, Chicago. The firm is widely known in its line, and ranks among the leading establishments of its kind in the country. In addition to his manufacturing interests Mr. Steere is the sole owner of a large wholesale and retail jewelry establishment near the corner of Woodward and Jefferson avenues, Detroit, Michigan.

Mr. Steere has been twice married. On Oct. 31, 1875, at Pomfret, Conn., he wedded Ella M. Butler, by whom he had one son, Herbert A., born Oct. 20, 1878. Mr. Steere was married (second) Aug. 11, 1891, to Miss Hattie H. Hanna, in St. Paul, Minn., she being the daughter of James H. Hanna, of Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Steere is a thorough business man, and his attention is almost wholly taken up with his business affairs. He is a member of Adelphoi Lodge, No. 33, A. F.

& A. M., Providence Chapter, and Providence Council. Beyond the casting of his vote he takes little interest in political affairs.

GLADDING-GREENE. The Gladding family of Bristol is one of the oldest of that ancient town, the forerunner of the name coming to the settlement in time to attend the first town meeting, at which the name the town has borne was given it and its first inhabitants admitted to citizenship. This was two centuries and more ago. John Gladding was one of the founders of the town, and his posterity, now among the most substantial men and women of the community, have since in turn through the intervening generations sustained a worthy and honorable connection with the town annals. The family, too, has allied itself by marriage with some of the first families of Rhode Island, the branch under consideration notably with the Greenes and Wardwells, the former family giving to the Rhode Island Colony two governors, to the army of the Revolution Maj.-Gen. Nathanael Greene; and the latter family (Wardwell) has been long most honorably identified with Bristol's history, one of its conspicuous sons being Hon. William T. C. Wardwell, former lieutenant-governor of the Commonwealth.

This article, however, is to deal only with the families and lineage of the present Capt. John A. C. Gladding, long a leading business man and substantial citizen of the town, and as well his sons. John A. C. Gladding in the paternal line is a descendant in the eighth generation from John Gladding, one of the founders of Bristol, through John (2), John (3), John (4), John (5), Capt. Samuel and Capt. Richard S. Gladding; and his wife is descended from Surgeon John Greene, of ancient and honorable English lineage and himself one of the conspicuous characters in Rhode Island history, who came to the American Colonies in 1635, through James, Jabez, Rufus, Sergeant Joseph and Joseph. These generations in detail and in the order named, respectively, follow.

(1) John Glading (Gladding) is of record at Newbury, Mass., in 1666, as marrying on July 17th of that year, Elizabeth Rogers, and their children of record in Newbury were: Susanna, born Oct. 6, 1668; John, Oct. 11, 1670; William, July 25, 1673; Elizabeth, Sept. 15, 1676; Mary, Jan. 14, 1679; and Hannah, Nov. 8, 1681.

Additional children, of record in Bristol, of John Gladding and his wife Elizabeth, were: Joshua, born May 6, 1685; Daniel, Nov. 8, 1687; and Sarah, Nov. 20, 1691.

Mr. Gladding is found at Bristol, R. I., in attendance at the first town meeting, held Sept. 1, 1681, at which time the name Bristol was given to the settlement, and at which meeting seventy-six persons, Mr. Gladding included, were admitted as citizens by the four proprietors, John Walley, Nathaniel Oliver, Nathaniel Byfield and Stephen Burton, who purchased of New Plymouth Colony in the year 1680 said town of Bristol, for eleven hundred pounds. According to family manuscript, Mr. Gladding died April 27, 1726, aged eighty-four years.

(II) John Gladding (2), born Oct. 11, 1670, married, Oct. 31, 1692, Alice Wardell, who was born Dec. 27, 1670, daughter of Uzell Wardell, the latter being one of the persons who attended the first meeting of the town of Bristol referred to in the foregoing. Their children were: Mary, born Nov. 30, 1693; John, Sept. 8, 1694; William, Oct. 13, 1698; Jonathan, Jan. 5, 1700-01; Ebenezer, Dec. 8, 1702; Joseph, Oct. 2, 1704; Alice, March 24, 1706; Elizabeth, Sept. 13, 1708; Nathaniel, Dec. 16, 1709; Sarah (died May 27, 1712, aged eight days); and Sarah (2), May 2, 1715. The mother of these children died March 3, 1720.

(III) John Gladding (3), born Sept. 8, 1694, married, July 12, 1716, Martha Smith, daughter of Richard Smith, the first recording town clerk of Bristol, who was born in London, England, came to Boston in 1673, and Nov. 9, 1680, removed to Bristol. The children of John Gladding and wife were: John, born June 30, 1717; Charles, June 10, 1719; Daniel, May 20, 1721; Martha, April 10, 1723; George, March 29, 1724-25; Samuel, March 25, 1728; Phebe, Aug. 21, 1730; and Mary, Aug. 23, 1732.

(IV) John Gladding (4), born June 30, 1717, married (first) Mary Drown, who died April 14, 1759, aged forty years, and he married (second), Sept. 6, 1759, Hannah Short. Mr. Gladding was a seafaring man, a master and owner of ships. He worked when not at sea at shoemaking. His place of residence was on Bradford street. He kept something of a diary and in it are found some interesting facts of Bristol during the Revolution. On Aug. 25, 1775, he was made a prisoner by the British commander, Colonel Wallace, and was confined on the ship "Pant" for three days; and it is set forth in the diary that Wallace took from him about thirteen cords of wood. Captain Gladding died Nov. 8, 1785, aged sixty-eight years. His children were: John (born Jan. 3, 1739-40), Josiah, Peter, Martha, Daniel (baptized Dec. 20, 1747), Martha (2), Mary, Solomon, and Joshua, all except the first named baptized between 1741 and 1757.

(V) John Gladding (5), born Jan. 3, 1739, married, Sept. 17, 1761, Lucretia Smith. Mr. Gladding was famous as a boat-builder, the boats of his construction gaining great notoriety for speed as sailors. His boat shop was on the same lot as his dwelling on Constitution street, Bristol. His wife Lucretia died May 5, 1813, in the seventieth year of her age. Mr. Gladding died Sept. 25, 1820. Their children were: John, born Nov. 10, 1762; Hannah, Aug. 27, 1764; Lucretia, July 25, 1766; Samuel, April 4, 1768; Richard, May 8, 1770; Benjamin; Polly; Richard (2); Rebecca; Sarah; Lucretia;

Ezra; Josiah; Polly (2); Joseph; Timothy; Susan; John; and Daniel.

(VI) Capt. Samuel Gladding, born April 4, 1768, married, in 1789, Charlotte Ingraham, daughter of Joshua and Mary (Richmond) Ingraham. Captain Gladding was a ship owner, and also a merchant, residing at Bristol. His children were: Eunice B., born Oct. 12, 1789; Allen I., Aug. 16, 1791; Samuel, Feb. 22, 1794; Richard Smith, Feb. 25, 1796; John, May 8, 1798; Edmond, Oct. 2, 1800; Gilbert R., March 4, 1802; Samuel (2), July 28, 1804; Martha J., Sept. 7, 1806; and Mary I., Sept. 14, 1808. Capt. Samuel Gladding died Dec. 14, 1813, aged forty-five years, and his widow Charlotte passed away Nov. 5, 1836, aged sixty-nine years.

(VII) Capt. Richard Smith Gladding, son of Capt. Samuel Gladding and Charlotte (Ingraham), was born in Bristol, R. I., Feb. 25, 1796, and there died Sept. 12, 1880. He was the fourth in a family of ten children. He received his education in his native town. Richard Smith, for whom he was named and from whom he descended in a direct line, was the first recording town clerk for the town of Bristol. Previous to his occupancy of this office there was one other incumbent, who, being without pen, ink or paper, was unable to keep any records of the town, and this explains the reason why Richard Smith is mentioned as the first recording town clerk. Captain Gladding, like his father before him, owned and commanded several vessels, and for many years during his active life was largely engaged in the coasting business between Providence, New York and Albany, as well as other places along the coast. He also made some foreign voyages. Captain Gladding was a man of good principles, square and upright in all of his dealings, and commanded the uttermost respect of all with whom he came in contact. Although he seemed somewhat stern in his manner he was always kind-hearted and very sympathetic. In politics he was a staunch Republican.

On May 15, 1815, he married Martha Diman Clark, who was born in Bristol, R. I., Dec. 11, 1797, and died Jan. 21, 1888. She was the daughter of Joseph and Nancy (Titus) Clark. In her day, it is safe to say, there was not a person in the town more beloved and respected than "Aunt Patty" Gladding, as she was called by everybody, and the name by which she was most familiarly known. In those days trained nurses were out of the question, consequently in times of sickness she was called upon very frequently, not by her friends alone but by physicians as well. She was ever ready to respond without compensation to go to any part of the town, at any time of the day or night, to administer to the wants of and care for the sick; thus her experience was very great and useful, as well as practical. She was a woman of considerable energy, her house was never lonesome, and it did not seem to matter how many came—there was always plenty of room for her friends and a hearty welcome. Her generosity knew no bounds, and there was always room at her table for all who wanted to come and partake of her hospitality. Her heart was big enough for all. She was quick-witted, mirthful, and enjoyed a good joke. She was kind-hearted, sympathetic, and always had a smile for everybody. As her home was situated next to the primary school she came in contact more or less with the children as well as the teachers, and it was not an uncommon thing for the latter, in the case of a stormy day when it was not advisable to go home, to be remembered by a share from her table. There are not a few of the pupils, many of whom have left town, who remember how they fully appreciated Aunt Patty's cookies and doughnuts. No doubt the children in those days were much the same as those of the present, for sometimes, when they were more or less naughty, they had to be reprimanded, and it was not an uncommon thing for such matters to be brought in some way or other to Aunt Patty's attention. Her disposition generally was to favor the children, and they always found in her a true friend and sympathizer. Her family consisted of eight sons and one daughter, all of whom lived to grow up and marry. Of them we have the following record:

(1) Allen Ingraham Gladding, born Dec. 3, 1815, went to California in 1849, and ever afterward made his home there, dying Feb. 21, 1889. On Jan. 16, 1840, he married Abby Madison Brown, who is also deceased. They had nine children: Sarah, born Nov. 6, 1841, who is deceased; Allen I., born Oct. 28, 1843, who died in his twenty-third year; Abby M., born Oct. 5, 1845, who is deceased; William F., born Oct. 20, 1847; Henry C., born Oct. 20, 1847, who is deceased; Sarah E.; Theodore O., born July 15, 1855; Charles B., born July 7, 1858; and Richard Smith, born July 18, 1862, who is deceased. (2) William Robinson Gladding, born Feb. 16, 1818, died May 20, 1871. He was blind for many years, losing his sight through an accident, while working at his trade, that of boilermaker, in Providence. He married Susan Tanner, who is deceased, and they had one child, Susan D., born in 1853, who married Joseph W. Greene. (3) Charles Bindley Gladding, born Aug. 5, 1820, moved to California with his family, who still reside there. He died several years ago. He married Lydia Smith, and they had two children, Lydia N. and Charles F. (4) Martha Elizabeth Gladding, born Jan. 25, 1823, first married James Waldron, and after his death became the wife of Caleb Arnold Carr, who is also deceased. By the first union there was one child, James, and by the second two children, George H. and Theodore O. Mrs. Carr is deceased. (5) John Andros Crossman Gladding, born Sept. 1, 1825, died June 27, 1905. On July 23, 1849, he married Elizabeth Greene, and their family is mentioned further on. (6) Samuel Gladding, born Feb.

6, 1828, married (first) Abby Sweet, who is deceased, and (second) Mrs. Susan Helen Anthony. There were three children born to the first marriage, Samuel Richard Arnold and Abby, and two by the second, William F. and Abby. (7) Theodore Orman Gladding, born Sept. 14, 1830, died Jan. 24, 1853, on board the steamship "Oregon," in the Pacific ocean, and was buried at sea. He was on his way to California with his brother Samuel. He married Abby Ann Coggeshall, who is now deceased, and they had one son, Charles A. (8) Henry Diman Gladding, born Oct. 27, 1833, married Abby Frances Luther, and they had one child, George E. (9) George Taylor Gladding, born Oct. 8, 1836, was married Jan. 8, 1868, to Susan Elizabeth Card; they had no children.

(VIII) Capt. John A. C. Gladding, born Sept. 1, 1825, in Bristol, R. I., was married there July 23, 1849, by Rev. James W. Cooke, to Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Floyd) Greene. To them came children as follows:

(1) Leonora Frances, born April 10, 1850, died May 25, 1903. She married, Nov. 24, 1874, Hon. William T. C. Wardwell, of Bristol, R. I., and their children are: Hezekiah Church, born Nov. 23, 1876; Elizabeth Uzelle, July 16, 1878; Marguerite, June 22, 1882.

(2) FREDERIC FILLMORE GLADDING, born July 14, 1851, received his education in the public schools, and began his business career as an office boy, in 1865, with the National Rubber Company of his native town. He remained with that company until 1872, since which time he has been in the employ of Hon. William T. C. Wardwell and held a business connection with him. In 1885, when the company was formed, he entered the Wardwell Lumber Company, of Bristol, of which Governor Wardwell is president, and he secretary and treasurer. Mr. Gladding is one of the active and progressive business men of Bristol. He has served the community as a member of the town council. He is a vestryman and the clerk of St. Michael's Protestant Episcopal Church at Bristol. He is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution and the Churchmen's Club of Rhode Island.

(3) Mary Greene, born Feb. 4, 1853, died April 7, 1883. She married James P. Lyons, Aug. 17, 1881, and they had a son, William Frederic, born March 28, 1883, who died June 9, 1883.

(4) Richard Smith Gladding, born Sept. 19, 1855, recently removed to Beverly, Mass., where he carries on the tinsmith and plumbing business. He married, July 15, 1886, Annie M. Mahnken, and their children are: Katherine Elizabeth, born March 18, 1888; Helen Lavinia, born June 19, 1893; Dorothy Wardwell, born Oct. 29, 1891, who died Aug. 1, 1892; and Richard Smith, born April 2, 1899.

(5) Theodore Orman Gladding, born Sept. 17, 1857, succeeds his father in the wholesale planting and raising of oysters.

(6) Helen Vernon, born Feb. 10, 1864, married, June 17, 1885, James Finley Canfield, and they had two children: John Gladding, born July 21, 1886; and Margaret Caldwell, born Nov. 17, 1891, who died Jan. 20, 1893. For her second husband she married Albert L. Calder 2d, a cotton broker and manufacturer of Providence, Aug. 4, 1903.

(7) Wilhelmina Everett, born Jan. 17, 1868, married, Jan. 31, 1893, William R. Babcock, a wholesale merchant of Providence, who was born May 7, 1854, son of John R. Babcock and Eliza (Alger). They have two children: Mary Floyd, born March 29, 1894; and Wilhelmina Russell, born Aug. 23, 1895.

John A. C. Gladding received his education in his native town, and in early life accompanied his father, who owned and commanded a vessel in the coasting business between Providence, New York and Albany. He participated in the Dorr war, as a volunteer from Bristol, under the command of Col. William R. Taylor, and later joined a company known as the "Sea Fencibles," of Providence, which was largely composed of sailors. At this time he was employed in the Fairbanks Boiler Shop at India Point, Providence. About the year 1845 he commanded a vessel and did a coasting business, like his father before him, between Providence, New York and Albany, as well as other ports along the coast. Captain Gladding continued in the coasting business until 1853, when he moved to Albany, N. Y., where he was employed as head brakeman on the Hudson River railroad. In 1856 he moved back to his native town, where he carried on the teaming business until the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861, at which time he held a commission as major in the Bristol Train of Artillery. He was also at that time appointed by the State a recruiting officer for the purpose of enlisting volunteers for the war, the result of which was the enlistment of eighteen recruits, who, together with himself, formed a part of Company K, 4th Regiment, Rhode Island Volunteers, in which Captain Gladding was appointed a sergeant. He was with General Burnside in his expedition to North Carolina and took active part in the battles of Roanoke Island and Fort Macon, and was detailed by General Burnside to accompany, by vessel, to the hospitals in the North a company of sick and wounded soldiers. Although he enlisted for three years, after serving fourteen months he was honorably discharged from the service, Nov. 3, 1862, by surgeon's certificate, on account of disabilities. As soon as his health would permit after leaving the service he engaged in a boating and fishing business until 1865, and for several years he kept and maintained a lightship on Hog Island shoals, in Narragansett Bay, for the Old Colony Steamboat Company, until a lightship was placed there by the United States Government.

In 1870 the Captain opened a restaurant and ice cream saloon in Bristol and did most of the catering for the town, his chowders and clambakes being famous. He was called upon quite frequently by Gen. Burnside, who entertained Gen. U. S. Grant and many other distinguished guests with his clambakes, chowders, etc. About 1880 he engaged in the planting and raising of oysters, his oyster beds being situated in the Kickamuit and Providence rivers, in Rhode Island; from these beds many of the large houses in New York and Boston are supplied with the celebrated "King Philip" oysters. In his later years he continued with his son, Theodore O. Gladding, to carry on the wholesale oyster business.

Captain Gladding held several minor offices in his native town. He was a member and officer of Babbitt Post, No. 15, G. A. R. He was a man of many capabilities, in times of emergency quick to grasp the situation, possessed of very good judgment, very generous, and ever ready and willing to go out of his way at any time of the day or night to do a kind act. He was a most excellent gardener and dear lover of flowers, and at the age of nearly eighty, for a man of his years, enjoyed a remarkable degree of good health until shortly before his death. He marched in line with his regiment in Providence on battle-flag day, Oct. 17, 1903, over the whole route, when the old battle-flags were transferred from the old to the new Statehouse. His loyalty to and interest in G. A. R. affairs many times caused him to go beyond his strength, as was the case at the Grand Encampment of the G. A. R. held in Boston in 1904 when, against the advice of his comrades and friends, he took his place in the line, in which he made his last march. Overcome and exhausted by the fatigue and heat, he was obliged to retire from the ranks and was taken to a drug store near by, where he received the necessary treatment, and for a while he seemed to rally from the exhaustion, but the improvement was temporary only and he gradually failed in health until the 27th of June, 1905, when he passed away, having almost reached the age of four-score years.

(1) John Greene, an English surgeon, son of Richard and Mary (Hooker) Greene, grandson of Richard Greene and great-grandson of Robert Greene, was born on his father's estate at Bowridge Hill, in the parish of Gillingham, County of Dorset, England, about 1590. His forefathers had been residents of Bowridge Hill for nearly an hundred years before him, and Robert Greene, it seems probable, was descended from a younger branch of the powerful and wealthy family of Greenes of Northamptonshire. This surgeon, John Greene, had early removed to Sarum (Salisbury), the county town of Wiltshire, where, at St. Thomas's Church, Nov. 4, 1619, he was married to Joanne Tattershall, who was the mother of all his children, seven in number, and all of whom were baptized at St. Thomas's Church. Mr. Greene here lived and followed his profession for sixteen years, when, in 1635, with his wife and six children, he sailed in the ship "James" for New England, and arrived in Boston June 3d of that year. He first settled at Salem, where he was associated with Roger Williams and where he purchased or built a house, but soon after Mr. Williams' flight from Salem (1636) he sold it, joined Williams at Providence and secured his home lot, No. 15, on the Main street. Surgeon Greene was one of the eleven men baptized by Roger Williams and one of the twelve original members of the first Baptist Church on the continent, organized at Providence, R. I. He was the first professional medical man in Providence Plantations. Mrs. Joanne Greene died soon after the family's removal to Rhode Island, and Surgeon Greene married (second) Alice Daniels, a widow, and in 1642-43 they removed to Warwick, R. I. After the death of his wife Alice, he married (third) in London, England, about 1644, Phillipa, who returned with him to Warwick, R. I., in 1646. The third Mrs. Greene died March 11, 1687, in Warwick.

Surgeon Greene made the first purchase by the English of land in Warwick, R. I., to whom was deeded the tract of land (700 acres) Oct. 11, 1642, called Occupasuetuxet by the chief sachem of the Narragansetts and the local sachem of Pawtuxet, and upon it was an actual resident in September, 1644, and his family held it for 140 and more years, when it was sold, Oct. 6, 1782, by his great-great-grandchildren. Surgeon Greene was a prominent man in the public affairs of the town and the Colony and enjoyed the confidence and respect of his associates through a long and active political life, holding office almost continuously until the summer before his death, when he declined to accept the office of commissioner. He died and was buried at Conimicut, Warwick, the first week in January, 1659. His issue were: John, Peter, Richard, James, Thomas, Joan and Mary.

(II) James Greene, "of Potowomut," baptized June 21, 1626, came to New England with his parents. He married (first) about 1658 Deliverance, born in 1637, daughter of Robert Potter and wife Isabel. (Robert Potter was the ancestor of Bishop Potter of New York and Pennsylvania). She died in 1664, and he married (second) Aug. 3, 1665, Elizabeth, daughter of John and Susannah Anthony, of Portsmouth, R. I. She died in 1698. James Greene was made a freeman of Warwick and Providence Plantations in 1647 and resided at Old Warwick. He was a member of the General Assembly of the Colony, being commissioner under the first charter and deputy and assistant under the second (1663) for ten years between 1660 and 1675. He was considered a man of much practical sagacity. On the outbreak of the Indian war, 1675-76, the inhabitants of Warwick left the town and Mr. Greene fled to Portsmouth, and in 1684, having made purchases of Warwick land, he removed to Potowomut, where was an ancient mill, and built his home on the hill near the west bank of the river, overlooking the beautiful lake which furnished the waterpower for the forge which his grandsons (sons of Jabez) established for making anchors and other forms of iron work. This became a notable industry in Colonial times and in the early days of the republic. The interests of the forge "were enhanced by the revival after peace existed between England and her emancipated Colonies, and this became the pioneer of the more extensive works on the Pawtuxet river, near the Western border of Warwick, known as 'the Forge.'" The place at Potowomut, where James Greene resided until his death, was the birthplace of his great-grandson, the highly distinguished Nathanael Greene of the Revolutionary army, and the residence of his descendants for more than two hundred years. He died "at his mansion in Potowomut," April 27, 1698, in the seventy-second year of his age. The issue of the first marriage of James Greene were: James, Mary, Elisha and Sarah; and of the second marriage: Peter, Elizabeth, John, Jabez, David, John and Susanna.

(III) Jabez Greene, "of Potowomut," born Nov. 17, 1673, in Portsmouth, R. I., married (first) March 17, 1697-98, Mary, daughter of Benjamin and Susanna (Gorton) Barton, and granddaughter of the Warwick pioneer, Samuel Gorton. She died March 6, 1712-13, and he married (second) May 23, 1716, Grace, daughter of Valentine Whitman, of Providence. Mr. Greene inherited and resided at the Potowomut homestead. He was admitted a freeman of Warwick May 5, 1696. He was a Quaker and a meeting of the Society of Friends is of record as held at his house Dec. 3, 1699. He inherited also the forge at Potowomut, where his six sons and his grandchildren carried on the successful industry of manufacturing anchors and other iron work as late as 1820. Jabez Greene was grandfather of the distinguished Major-Gen. Nathanael Greene. The issue of the first marriage were: James, Benjamin, Jabez, Nathaniel, John and Rufus; and of the second: Mary.

(IV) Rufus Greene "of E. Greenwich," born June 2, 1712, married at East Greenwich, March 13, 1735, Martha, daughter of Joseph Russell, of Dartmouth, Mass. Mr. Greene was made a freeman in February, 1735. He was interested with his father in iron manufacturing and was engaged also in mercantile business. He resided in East Greenwich. Mrs. Greene died Sept. 30, 1770, and Mr. Greene passed away Dec. 11, 1784. Their issue were: Abraham, Russell, Phebe, Mary, Joseph, Rufus, William, Caleb, Charles, Stephen, Martha, Jonathan, David and Martha.

(V) Sergeant Joseph Greene, born March 20, 1745, was a rope manufacturer. On the breaking out of the Revolution Joseph Greene entered the service and during the war rendered twenty-two months' and twenty-seven days' actual service. He was a member of the Kentish Guards and was a sergeant in Colonel Fry's Rhode Island Regiment. Mr. Greene died March 25, 1825, in his eighty-first year. On Sept. 9, 1770, he married Patience, daughter of Caleb Sheffield, and Mrs. Greene passed away April 20, 1839, in her ninety-third year. Their children were: Barnabas, born Nov. 2, 1771, who married Mary Weeden, a widow; Samuel, born May 23, 1774; Lydia, born Feb. 27, 1776, who married James Sweet; Susan (or Susannah), born July 4, 1778, who died May 17, 1858; Mary, born June 8, 1780; Joseph, born Dec. 19, 1781, who married Mary Floyd; Catherine, born May 28, 1783, who married Augustus Gardiner; Sarah, born Oct. 31, 1785; and Eliza, who married James Miller.

(VI) Joseph Greene (2), born Dec. 19, 1781, was, like his father before him, a rope manufacturer, and owned a rope walk. In 1808 he married Mary Floyd, of Needham, Mass., who was born Feb. 17, 1790, daughter of Philip Floyd, who married Mrs. Deborah Ware; they were of Needham. She died Jan. 7, 1845, in East Greenwich, R. I. Their children were: (1) Lydia French, born Feb. 5, 1812, died Nov. 12, 1893. She was married July 20, 1831, to William F. Dawley, who was born Feb. 5, 1807. They had five children, born as follows: Henry G., Aug. 22, 1833; Mary E., 1839; William E., May 4, 1841; Franklin A., April 29, 1844; and Charles F., September, 1847. (2) William Charles, born Jan. 22, 1815, died Sept. 25, 1877. He married Eliza Gorton, and their children were born as follows: Charles, Jan. 23, 1839; William Edwin, Jan. 19, 1840; Annie More, Dec. 23, 1842; James Albert, Jan. 28, 1844; Benjamin Floyd, Aug. 17, 1845; Sarah E., Oct. 25, 1852; William T., July 25, 1855. (3) Augustus Gardiner, born Oct. 5, 1819, married Elizabeth Bentley Greene, and they had four children, Mary C., Abby H., George and Frederick R. (4) Deborah Floyd, born March 20, 1822, died June 27, 1898. On Nov. 17, 1845, she married Benjamin Lewis Waldron, who was born Oct. 9, 1823, and died May 11, 1860. He was burned to death in James DeWolf's house fire. They had five children, born as follows: Lewis Floyd, April 2, 1847; Elizabeth Barton, May 27, 1849; Lewis Bradford, Sept. 7, 1856; Ella Greene, Dec. 24, 1858; Ida Leonard, Dec. 24, 1858. (5) Sarah Smith, born Sept. 19, 1824, died May 20, 1848. (6) Elizabeth, born Nov. 17, 1829, became the wife of John A. C. Gladding, and is mentioned at length further on. (7) Joseph Edwin, born in 1831, married Celia Y. Hatch, and both died of yellow fever and are buried together at Galveston, Texas. They left two sons.

(VII) Elizabeth Greene, born Nov. 17, 1829, in East Greenwich, R. I., married July 23, 1849, John A. C. Gladding, of Bristol, R. I. She received her education in her native town. At the age of fifteen years, upon the death of her mother, she went to Bristol, R. I., where she made her home with her elder sister, and when nineteen years of age she became the wife of John A. C. Gladding, who at the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion enlisted as a volunteer in Company K, 4th Rhode Island Regiment, to go to the war. Consequently, Mrs. Gladding was left alone with five small helpless children, without any one to help share those responsibilities which to her at the age of thirty-two years was a problem of no trifling moment. Mr. Gladding received for his service in the army the small sum of seventeen dollars per month, and this was the sole dependence for the maintenance of his family, which in those days of extremely high prices was no flattering proposition. However, with the assistance of a kind Providence, she bravely and cheerfully accepted her situation without a murmur. Fully realizing her responsibilities, she was obliged to make the most of her small allowance in caring for her family, which by her constant and untiring labor as well as good management she did most successfully. Although her domestic cares were very great Mr. Gladding, while away to the front, was by no means neglected, as she found time not only to knit his stockings and mittens, but do many other things for his comfort. She possesses a mild and retiring disposition, and her life and character, as also her words of counsel, have ever been a powerful influence for good among her friends and associates. Too much cannot be said in her praise as to her worth, and the good work she has accomplished in her quiet and unassuming way. It may be of some interest to note that Mrs. Gladding has the credit of making the first fireman's red flannel shirt, the kind which in later years has been almost universally adopted by firemen throughout the country for their uniforms. Mrs. Gladding is a member of St. Michael's Church (Episcopal), also a member of Babbitt Post, Woman's Relief Corps, of Bristol, R. I. Though not very strong she is still living at the age of seventy-seven years. Five of her seven children are still living.

WILLIAM H. WOOD, late of Providence, was one of the best-known men in the city, a prominent and successful real-estate dealer. He was born Nov. 13, 1849, in Providence, the son of William and Delia (Bundy) Wood. The parents were natives of England, who came to Rhode Island to reside. When the gold excitement began in California the father left Providence for the New Eldorado, and died there within a few years.

William H. Wood, being thus left fatherless when only a small boy, was obliged to go to work as soon as he was able, in order to assist in the support of the family. His educational advantages were necessarily limited in consequence, but he attended the public schools for some time and eventually, by his own efforts, became a well-educated and well-informed man. From the beginning, when only a boy, he displayed a spirit of resolution in grappling with circumstances that was unusual in one so young and that plainly foretold his ultimate success. His first commercial training was received in the office of Jason Stone, a dealer in sewing machines, and Mr. Wood spent a number of years in his employ. He was anxious to study law, as he had a natural inclination toward that calling, but circumstances made such a course impossible and he early entered upon a business career for himself.

On the suggestion of the late Daniel Lyman, a well known and wealthy citizen of Providence, he engaged in the real-estate line, beginning in the position of agent for the large real-estate holdings of Mr. Lyman—the opening of a career covering more than a quarter of a century and one marked by the strictest and most undeviating principles of honor. His first offices were in a building on Westminster street, owned by Mr. Lyman, but later he removed to the corner of Westminster and Exchange streets, where he was ever after located. So universal was the confidence placed in Mr. Wood's honesty and fair dealing by all clients that he was not only given some of the largest real estate deals to handle, but was also made trustee for many valuable estates. At the time of his death, in addition to other trusts, he was a trustee in charge of the Vinton and Barnaby properties. He was also in charge of the Nancy K. Bishop estate, and at the same time he was serving as treasurer of the Rhode Island Investment Company and of the Beckwith Land Company. He was appointed by the Lemuel Bishop heirs administrator of the money received from the French Spoliation claims, arising from the destruction of the brigantine "Nancy" in 1799.

In politics Mr. Wood was a Republican, and one who participated actively in municipal and State affairs. In April, 1883, he was elected to the city council, serving until January, 1885, while in the following fall he was sent to the Legislature and served one term. He was a candidate for reelection but was defeated as a result of what was known in Rhode Island politics as the "May deal." After that he gave up politics entirely, and took no further part in public life, a great loss to the State, for the services of men like Mr. Wood are invaluable.

On Oct. 2, 1872, William H. Wood was united in marriage to Adele S. Remington, daughter of William H. and Jane (Smith) Remington, the former of whom was an old and successful dry goods merchant of Providence, with a store located in the Arcade. Mr. and Mrs. Wood became the parents of a son and a daughter. William R., the elder, is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, at Boston. He married Miss Caroline Jonsen, of Boston, and has two sons, Remington and Richard. The daughter, Florence, married George Owen, of Providence, and has two children, George and Florence.

Mr. Wood's death occurred very suddenly at Wilmington, Del., May 8, 1905, when on his way from Washington to Providence. He was taken ill on the train, and died while being carried from the car to a hospital in Wilmington. His remains were interred in the North Burying Ground at Providence. In Masonic circles Mr. Wood's name was prominent, as he was a member of What Cheer Lodge and of St. John's Commandery, and had attained the 32d degree. In both lodge and commandery he had held office. Socially he was a member of the Hope Club and of the Metacomet Golf Club. Mr. Wood was a man of wide popularity and one who held the genuine respect and esteem of his acquaintances to a remarkable degree. His many admirable traits of character won him numbers of friends, while his absolute integrity was beyond question. His home on the southeast corner of Cooke and Manning streets, where his widow now resides, was erected by him in 1897, and was his residence until his death.

WILBUR. Augustus L. Wilbur, a well-known young farmer of South Portsmouth, Newport Co., R. I., is a substantial citizen of his locality and a worthy descendant of an honored family. He is a native of the island upon which he lives, born March 14, 1868, son of George V. Wilbur, and is a member of the ninth generation of his line in America, the Wilburs being among the oldest and best-known residents of this section of New England. The name has been spelled variously, but this branch has always written it Wilbur, others using the more general form of Wilbor.

A member of the Wilbur (Wilbour, Wilbor) family of New England begins the history of the family in this country with Samuel Wildbore, of Boston, who came there not later than 1633. He and his wife Ann were admitted to the church there Dec. 1st of that year, the date of the first record of him. His wife was the daughter of Thomas Bradford, of Dorchester, in the southern part of the County of York, England. He had a second wife, Elizabeth, prior to Nov. 29, 1645. It is evident, said the writer referred to, that Mr. Wildbore had four sons: Samuel, William, Joseph and Shadrach, and probably a daughter, Sarah.

Mr. Wildbore was made a freeman of Boston in 1634. He bought largely in the town of Taunton, Mass., and removed thither with his family. While in Taunton he, with seventeen others, embraced what was "the dangerous doctrines of Cotton and Wheelright," for which he was banished from the Province in November, 1637. He with seventeen others fled to Providence, and, being advised by Roger Williams, they purchased of the Indians the island of Aquidneck, to which place Mr. Wildbore removed his family in 1638. These eighteen persons formed a colony by solemn compact March 7, 1638. Mr. Wildbore returned to Boston probably in 1645, that being the date of his wife Elizabeth's admission into the church at Boston. Mr. Wildbore had a home in Boston and also one in Taunton. He with some associates built and put in operation an iron furnace in Taunton (now Raynham), the first that was built in New England. The writer of this first ancestor of the Wilbur family in this country goes on to say that Mr. Wildbore was a man of wealth for his time, and evidently of very respectable standing in society, exerting a wide influence in each of the places where he dwelt. He died Sept. 29, 1656.

Of the sons of Samuel Wildbore, Samuel and William settled in Portsmouth, R. I., Joseph located on land in Taunton, and Shadrach settled in that part of Taunton which became Raynham.

(II) William Wilbor, son of Samuel, supposed to have been born in England in 1630, settled in Portsmouth, R. I., on lands of his father. The records show that he received in 1654 a deed of ten acres from Samuel Wilbur, Sr., of Taunton. He was deputy in 1678. He died in 1710. His ten children were: Mary, John, Joseph, Thomas, William, Martha, Samuel, Daniel, John and Benjamin.

(III) Samuel Wilbor (2), son of William, married Mary Potter, daughter of Nathaniel and Elizabeth Potter, and was of Little Compton, R. I. Mr. Wilbor died in 1740. Their children were: Martha, born Oct. 22, 1690; Samuel, Nov. 7, 1692; William, Jan. 6, 1695; Mary, Oct. 9, 1697; Joanna, June 8, 1700; Thankful, June 8, 1700; Elizabeth, Dec. 23, 1702; Thomas, Dec. 2, 1704; Abial, May 27, 1707; Hannah, Feb. 9, 1709; and Isaac, Aug. 24, 1712.

(IV) William Wilbor (2), son of Samuel (2), born Jan. 6, 1695, married June 20, 1717, Esther Richmond Burgess, born in 1696. Mr. Wilbor died in September, 1774. Their children of Little Compton town record were: Thomas, born May 1, 1718; Mary, Sept. 7, 1719; Esther, May 8, 1721; Lydia, April 16, 1723; Samuel, Dec. 10, 1725; William, July 24, 1727; Daniel, June 1, 1729; Charles, Aug. 22, 1732; Esther (2), Nov. 18, 1733 (died March 17, 1810); Lydia (2), Nov. 2, 1735; Deborah, Aug. 29, 1738; and Clarke, Nov. 1, 1742.

(V) Samuel Wilbor (3), son of William (2), born Dec. 10, 1725, was a private in the Revolutionary war, serving in Col. Archibald Crary's regiment. On Dec. 15, 1748, he married Elizabeth Shaw, born Jan. 10, 1728, daughter of Anthony Shaw, and she died in January, 1804. He died in May, 1791. Their children of Little Compton town record were: Sylvanus, born Aug. 18, 1749; Clarke, May 30, 1752 (who died April 26, 1822); and Anthony, July 24, 1759.

(VI) Anthony Wilbur, son of Samuel (3), born July 24, 1759, married Nov. 8, 1778, Grace Shaw, born Dec. 25, 1759, daughter of Peter and Sarah Shaw. Their children were born as follows: Content, Oct. 8, 1780; Arnold, Feb. 12, 1784; Nancy, June 14, 1786; Emma, Dec. 29, 1788; Samuel, July 8, 1791; Betsey, Aug. 23, 1793; Matilda, May 16, 1798; Edwin, March 10, 1802.

(VII) Edwin Wilbur, born March 10, 1802, son of Anthony, made his home in Portsmouth, where he died Nov. 28, 1864. However, he had also resided in Newport, where he was prominent in business circles as president of the First National Bank of Newport, and where he served as collector of the port. He was also Brigadier-General of the State militia of Rhode Island, his commission as such being signed by Governor John Brown Francis on May 6, 1833. On Dec. 20, 1830, he married Ann Maria Lyon, who was born June 19, 1806, and survived him almost two years, dying Aug. 28, 1866. They had two children, George Van Schellyne and Eliza, the latter, born June 20, 1844, dying in infancy.

(VIII) George Van Schellyne Wilbur, born at Newport, April 25, 1832, received his education there, and in fact passed practically all of his life in his native place. He was engaged in the real estate business in Newport and also owned land in Portsmouth, the farm now owned and operated by his son, Augustus, having formerly been his property. He died May 7, 1891, in Newport, and is buried there.

On April 29, 1861, George V. Wilbur was married to Mary Douch LeMont, a native of Bath, Maine, who survives him, making her home in Newport. She is a member of St. George's Episcopal Church, and an intelligent woman, one who has made many warm friends. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur, namely: Edwin, Augustus L., and three who died in infancy. The eldest son, born Jan. 14, 1867, is an architect, and resides in New York City. He married Alice Busse, and they have had one child, Edwin Courtney, born Sept. 11, 1898.

(IX) AUGUSTUS LITTLEFIELD WILBUR, son of George V., was born March 14, 1868, in Newport, and was reared and educated there. Preferring outdoor life he chose farming for his life occupation, and since commencing for himself he has for several years engaged in general agriculture on the Wapping road, in Portsmouth, his forty-acre tract being located in the southern part of the town. He has a fine piece of property, on which he has made many improvements, and upon which he resides. He is a man of enterprise and good executive ability, which he puts to excellent use in the cultivation of his farm, as a result meeting with unusual success. He is intelligent and well educated, and is regarded as one of the best citizens of his town, though he takes little part in public activities, devoting all his time and attention to his business and his family. He is independent in his political opinion.

On Sept. 6, 1893, Mr. Wilbur married Miss Annie Houghton Smith, a native of Newport, daughter of the late Howard Smith and granddaughter of Alfred Smith, the well-known real estate man of Newport, full mention of whom is made elsewhere in these volumes. Of the two children born to this union the eldest, a son, died in infancy, and Mary Mumford was born May 3, 1898. Mrs. Wilbur is a woman of many admirable traits, and as much liked for her kind and genial manners as she is known for her beauty of person.

HOWARD SMITH, father of Mrs. Wilbur, was born in Newport, Feb. 6, 1844, and was the only son of the late Alfred Smith. He was reared and educated in Newport, and was there engaged in the real estate business in company with his father for a number of years. His death occurred March 29, 1901, at Palm Beach, Fla. On Aug. 14, 1866, he married Mary Mumford Chace, who was born Aug. 17, 1844, daughter of Henry Collins and Mary Ann (Lyon) Chace, and four children came to this union, namely: (1) Charles Talbot passed away in Newport at the age of twenty-nine years. In 1890 he married Edith E. Briggs, and they had one child, Charles Talbot, Jr. (2) Marion McAllister married Ella Kingsbury Stedman, and she died in New York, leaving one son, Howard McAllister, born April 15, 1891. (3) Annie Houghton is the wife of Augustus L. Wilbur. (4) Mary Howard, a woman of talent, and well known as a writer, is now traveling in the old world, being at present at Florence, Italy.

The mother of this family, Mrs. Mary Mumford (Chace) Smith, was noted for her beauty and graces of person and character, was refined, cultured and intelligent, and devoted to her home and family. She died Dec. 2, 1891, and was buried in Newport, where she was very well known; she was a member of Channing Memorial (Unitarian) Church, of Newport.

CHACE. The Chace family, to which Mrs. Mary M. (Chace) Smith belonged, is one of the oldest in Rhode Island, and is descended from William Chace, the first of the name in New England. The name is often spelled Chase, but the branch of the family to which Mrs. Smith belonged adheres to Chace. William Chace (2), son of the first ancestor in America, is the next in this line, which is continued through his son, William (3).

Isaac Chace, son of William (3), married Elisabeth Blithen, Dec. 10, 1704. Their children were as follows: James, born Feb. 19, 1706, married March 11, 1727, Alice Anthony; Waight Still, born April 24, 1708, married Lydia Marston Tripp; Isaac, born May 18, 1710, married Sept. 19, 1729, Amy Anthony; William, born Oct. 31, 1712, married Jan. 5, 1737, Isabel Perry; Elisabeth, born May 6, 1715, married May 24, 1738, Peleg Sherman. By his second wife, Mary Fowler, Isaac Chace had: Ezekiel, married Sept. 18, 1744, Elisabeth Buffington; Robert, born Jan. 29, 1726, married Feb. 10, 1774, Ruth Marke, and died April 23, 1794; David, the next in the family, married Oct. 11, 1753, Elisabeth Astin, and on Dec. 22, 1791, Mary Chase; Lydia married Feb. 11, 1749, Judah Chase; Mary married Dec. 13, 1750, Jonathan Hathaway; Susannah married Feb. 14, 1757, Benjamin Astin; Benjamin died in infancy.

James Chace, born Feb. 19, 1706, was married March 11, 1727, to Alice Anthony. She died March 3, 1762, he on April 20, 1782. They had children as follows: Elisabeth, born March 24, 1728, married John Hathaway Oct. 17, 1741. James, born Oct. 27, 1729, married (first) in May, 1749, Huldah Winslow, and (second) July 31, 1771, Sarah Wood. The next child, Alice, born May 4, 1731, died in April, 1732. Alice (2), born Oct. 8, 1732, married Thomas Gould. Aaron, born March 15, 1734, married Nov. 17, 1754, Elisabeth Perry. Paul, born Feb. 7, 1735, married Esther (or Sarah) Pierce. Zaccheus, born Nov. 4, 1737, married March 8, 1759, Elisabeth Gould. Mary, born July 6, 1739, married Edward Sisson. Daniel, born in 1740, married Virtue Huling, and died Sept. 14, 1813. Peter, born in 1743, married Hepzibah Mitchell. Martha probably died young. The mother of these dying, Mr. Chace married Mrs. Lydia (Goddard) Thurston, who died June 16, 1784, surviving him over two years. One child came to the second union, Isaac, born June 10, 1765, who died Jan. 2, 1804, in Charleston, South Carolina.

Peter Chace, son of James, born in 1743, died Sept. 1, 1782. He married Hepzibah Mitchell, and they had six children, viz.: Gilbert, born Aug. 10, 1770, married Mary Folger; Anna, born May 12, 1772, married Feb. 3, 1791, Jonathan Fowler; Richard, born May 29, 1774, died Oct. 6, 1778; William, born May 29, 1776, died in June, 1778; James, born March 22, 1779, married Eliza (Southwick) Woodman; Alice, born May 19, 1781, married in November, 1800, Amasa Southwick.

Capt. James Chace, son of Peter, born March 22, 1779, died Nov. 5, 1872. He married Mrs. Eliza (Southwick) Woodman, and they became the parents of the following named children: Peter, born July 31, 1804, married Alice J. Blackburn. Hepzibah M., born May 15, 1806, married Samuel Heath Feb. 23, 1832. Henry Collins, born Dec. 9, 1809, married Mary Ann Lyon June 9, 1834. James, born in 1811, died young.

Henry Collins Chace, son of Capt. James, was born Dec. 9, 1809, was married June 9, 1834, to Mary Ann Lyon, and they had a large family, namely: James, born March 6, 1835, was married March 3, 1860, to Fannie A. Gray, by whom he had two children, one of whom, a married daughter, survives; by his second wife, Eva Wallace, he had three children, Wallace D., Eudora M. and Mary M. Sarah E., born March 24, 1837, died Sept. 24, 1838. Elisabeth S., born May 10, 1839, was married Nov. 29, 1865, to John M. Taylor, of Newport. Mary A., born April 6, 1841, died May 9, 1841. Henry Lyon, born March 7, 1843, married Ann E. Coggeshall March 26, 1866, and is now living in Hoopston, Ill.; they have no children. Mary Mumford has been previously mentioned as the wife of Howard Smith. Emily Bush, born May 17, 1846, died April 1, 1902. Joseph Lyon, born Feb. 19, 1849, married Lydia B. Smith Feb. 11, 1872; they have no living children, three having died in infancy. David B., born Jan. 29, 1851, married Laura Smith Feb. 19, 1873, and they had two children, Elizabeth T. (wife of C. H. Child, of Newport), and Henry C. (of Hoopeston, Ill.). Helen Eudora, born Feb. 13, 1854, married Philip Stevens, of Newport, and died Aug. 25, 1903; she left no children.

WILLIAM RUSSELL DUTEMPLE, prominently connected with matters educational, and one of the leading business men of Cranston, R. I., was born Aug. 6, 1842, in the town of Scituate, R. I., where his parents were temporarily living. His father was Nathan Dutemple, who married Annis Thankful Joslyn, daughter of Deacon Russell and Mary (Hill) Joslyn.

Deacon Russell Joslyn and his brother, Henry Vaughn Joslyn, were wheelwrights by trade, and constructed water wheels for many of the early mills throughout the Pawtuxet Valley and elsewhere. Deacon Russell Joslyn married Mary Hill, and these children were born to the union: Almira, who married (first) Ann Mathewson, (second) Thomas Carey; Thomas R., who married Eunice Dutemple; Mary, who married Jeremiah Allen; Walker; Annis T., who married Nathan Dutemple; Lucinda, who married William H. Collins; John C., who married (first) Ann Mathewson, (second) Sarah (surname not known), and (third) Ella Hendrick; Pardon T., married Harriet Mathewson, sister of Ann; Charles H., who married Susan D. Trip; and Levi K., who married Phebe Sayles.

The children born to Nathan and Annis T. (Joslyn) Dutemple were: William Russell; and Edward P., who married Mary L. Vaughn (sketch elsewhere).

William Russell Dutemple received his preliminary education in the public schools of Exeter, R. I., and later took up the study of algebra and geometry. He also became a student of natural philosophy for his own advantage. In his early life he took naturally to study, especially mathematics. When seventeen years of age he came to Providence, and apprenticed himself to his uncle, Levi K. Joslyn, with whom he remained two years, learning the trade of jeweler. Levi K. Joslyn was himself an operative, and when he left his employment his nephew went with him. For the six or seven years following, Mr. Dutemple engaged in watch repairing. He then re-engaged in the jewelry business, first at the bench, and then as foreman for the firm of Hopkins & Burdon. This firm dissolved partnership, and Mr. Dutemple formed a new one with Mr. Hopkins, which continued for four or five years. At the end of this time he formed a co-partnership with Mr. George C. Case, of New York, the members of this new firm being G. C. Case, William R. Dutemple, and Mr. Case's son, the firm name being George C. Case & Company. Mr. Case bought out his son's interests, and was later himself bought out by Mr. Dutemple. With his son, William Nathan, who is the New York salesman, and head of the New York house, Mr. Dutemple now manufactures and puts on the market a large line of ladies' and gentlemen's jewelry, and in this business has had a good degree of success. Mr. Dutemple is a self-made man. He has taken an active part in public matters in Cranston, having been a member of the school committee for twelve years. He was one of the original members, when the town system of schools was adopted, and succeeded the late Hugh B. Bain as chairman in 1902. He was chairman of the high school building committee, and one of the committeemen on the Pawtuxet and Oak Lawn school building. In politics he is a Republican. Mr. Dutemple is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the A. F. & A. M., being past grand master of the Grand Lodge of the State, and past grand representative, serving from 1886 until 1892. He is also a member of the committee on appeals. The Baptist Church is the place of worship of the family, Mr. Dutemple's father having been a deacon therein.

Mr. Dutemple was married, in 1863, to Mercy T. Gardiner, and they have two children: William Nathan, who married Elizabeth Phillips; and Annie D., who married George Lewis Williams.

ALFRED COLLINS, one of the most highly respected and well-to-do citizens of the town of Charlestown, R. I., and now living retired at Cross' Mills in that town, comes from an old New England family.

Nathan Collins, his father, was born in the town of Hopkinton, R. I., where he died May 30, 1856, in his seventy-fourth year. He carried on farming and also did a great deal of teaming, doing considerable work in that line for what is now the Nichols & Langworthy Machine Company, at Hope Valley, R. I. He used a four-ox team, hauling goods to and from Providence, as was customary at that time, and receiving twenty-five cents per hundredweight. He took a keen interest in town affairs, and in political circles was always known as a hard worker for the success of his party's candidate or issue. Nathan Collins married Dorcas Popple, the daughter of a Revolutionary soldier who was wounded on the battlefield. Nathan and Dorcas (Popple) Collins had children as follows: Deborah never married; Hanna T. became the wife of George Burlingame, of Warwick, R. I.; Welcome served two terms as member of the Rhode Island Legislature; Cynthia died in childhood; Christopher F. died in Westerly; George T. was for nearly twenty years a member of the town council of Hopkinton, R. I.; Alfred is mentioned below; Willard W. died in Hopkinton, R. I.; Gideon T. was for twenty years a member of the town council of Westerly, where he lives. Of the above children, seven lived to the age of seventy or older.

Alfred Collins was born Oct. 29, 1821, in the town of Hopkinton, where he lived until 1864.

Alfred Collins

For twenty-one years he worked for his father on the farm, his few leisure hours being devoted to attending the district school, though his educational advantages were inferior even for his day. In 1845 he leased a farm for one year from his father, in 1856 purchasing the old homestead, where two years later he located. In 1864 he moved to Charlestown, where, with Stanton S. Green, he leased a farm for four years. He then moved to Westerly and had charge of a meat market for six years. After giving up the meat market he farmed for two years in the town of Westerly, then moved to Charlestown, and in 1877 purchased the farm where he now lives. While engaged in agricultural pursuits he also dealt in stock to a considerable extent. With William C. Crandall he used to go out into York State or up to Vermont, sometimes even to Canada, purchasing stock which were driven to Rhode Island and disposed of for various purposes, for beef, work oxen, dairying and to be fed for slaughter. In conjunction with his brother-in-law, Benjamin B. Green, Mr. Collins also carried on a gristmill and store, in which he is yet interested.

On June 21, 1858, Mr. Collins married Susan Green, who was born Oct. 2, 1824, daughter of Sheffield and Elizabeth Green, of Charlestown. Mr. Collins has no children to share the benefits of the good name he has justly acquired for himself, and the sincere esteem in which he is held by his fellowmen. He and his wife are both members of the Pawcatuck Seventh Day Baptist Church of Westerly.

Mr. Collins was at one time a member of the Law and Order party, and also belonged to the old Know-nothing party, but at the birth of the Republican party he became one of its most ardent supporters, and has remained loyal in its ranks until this day. He is a great temperance worker, and is known in his town as a man of sterling integrity, honest worth and spotless character. He is a man who has always considered the welfare of the community above his own personal interests. Generous to almost any worthy movement, even the recipients of his philanthropy are often ignorant of the identity of the donor. His life has been well spent, and has been filled with much good for his fellowmen. He was one of the principal workers in the Grange movement while it flourished at Cross' Mills, and was one of the charter members of Grange No. 6, which was established at Charlestown. In town affairs Mr. Collins, while not seeking office, takes a rather conspicuous part, and his endorsement or opposition of any measure carries no little weight. In such cases it is strictly a matter of principle and merit, politics are not considered. Firm in his belief when he thinks he is right, and ever ready and willing to be convinced of his error, he is a man of recognized high principles, conscientious in everything he undertakes, and nevertheless unassuming in manner and habits.

THOMAS DURFEE, late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, was a member of a family whose representatives have been prominent in the civil and legal administration of the State from earliest Colonial days. He was a descendant of Thomas Durfee, from whom his line is traced through a succession of men who in able service to the community and untarnished lives have proved themselves worthy of the name they bear.

(I) Thomas Durfee, born in England in 1643, came thence to Rhode Island at an early day, settling here while the Warwick charter of 1643 was still in force. He was married in Portsmouth about 1664, and had the following children born in Portsmouth: Robert (born March 10, 1605), Richard, Thomas, William, Ann and Benjamin. He died in Portsmouth in July, 1712.

(II) Thomas Durfee, son of Thomas and his first wife, was born in Portsmouth and died there Feb. 24, 1729. He was a member of the General Assembly of the Colony of Rhode Island in 1707, 1709 and 1713. He married in Portsmouth, Ann Freeborn, who was born there March 28, 1669, daughter of Gideon and Sarah (Brownell) Freeborn, and died in 1729. Her children were: Ann, born Aug. 25, 1691; Sarah, March 1, 1693; Freeborn, Dec. 15, 1695; Patience, June 12, 1697; Mary, Jan. 22, 1701; Martha, Feb. 20, 1702; Gideon, Jan. 15, 1704; Thomas, June 6, 1706; Susanna; Job, 1710; and Elizabeth.

(III) Job Durfee, son of Thomas and Ann (Freeborn) Durfee, born in Portsmouth in 1710, died in Tiverton, R. I., in April, 1774. He became a freeman of Portsmouth in May, 1731, and was chosen deputy to the General Assembly of Rhode Island in 1761, 1762 and 1764. His first marriage, on Sept. 17, 1730, was to Elizabeth Chase, of Tiverton, R. I., who was born in Portsmouth, June 15, 1701, daughter of Benjamin and Amy (Borden) Chase, and died in Portsmouth in 1734. By this union there was one child, Thomas, born March 25, 1732, who was probably lost at sea when a young man. For his second wife Mr. Durfee married, in Portsmouth, Mary Earle, who was born there Feb. 19, 1703, daughter of John and Mary (Wait) Earle, and they had children as follows: Elizabeth, born July 12, 1735; John, Aug. 31, 1736; Gideon, Feb. 6, 1738; Earle, Sept. 16, 1740; and Job, Aug. 26, 1744. On April 8, 1762, Mr. Durfee married (third) in Freetown, Mass., Sarah Brayton, of that place. There were no children by this marriage.

(IV) John Durfee, son of Job and Mary (Earle) Durfee, of Portsmouth and Tiverton, was born Aug. 31, 1736, in Tiverton, and died Aug. 31, 1812. He was married in Tiverton, Dec. 15, 1757, to Phebe Gray, of that place, who was born in Tiverton, Nov. 14, 1740, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Bennett)

Gray, and died there Feb. 12, 1819. Their children were: Thomas, born Nov. 4, 1759; Abner, Sept. 18, 1761; Williams, 1763; Mary, 1765; Priscilla, 1767; Silva, 1769; John, 1771; Phebe; and Sarah.

(V) Thomas Durfee, son of John and Phebe (Gray) Durfee, of Tiverton, was born there Nov. 4, 1759, and died there Jan. 17, 1829. His distinguished public services may be said to have commenced with his military life in the camp of the Colonists, in 1776, as a patriot. He was connected with the Revolutionary army as an enlisted soldier, and after the battle of Rhode Island was promoted to be ensign of his company. During the war he resided in Tiverton, and it appears that between 1776 and 1780 he rendered short tours of guard duty as occasion demanded, under different officers, among whom were Capt. Benjamin and Richard Durfee and Col. John Cook. After the war Mr. Durfee was chosen by his fellow townsmen to fill various town offices, and he was a member of the General Assembly of Rhode Island from 1787 to 1798, being on the committee which canvassed the vote of the State on the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. He was appointed notary public for Tiverton June 23, 1801, and was chosen town clerk in 1814, retaining that office the remainder of his life. From 1820 to 1829 he was Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas of Newport county, and from 1822 to 1829 he was surveyor of customs at Tiverton, his son Charles succeeding him in the last named office, which he held for about ten years from the time of his father's death. Judge Thomas Durfee, grandson of the Judge Thomas whose name introduces this paragraph, in 1881 (at the request of the New England Historic and Genealogical Society) published a memoir of his father in which he speaks of his grandfather as follows: "He seems to have acquired without any special advantages a very good education and after some desultory study of the law he established himself in Tiverton as a lawyer. Though not a man of learning he had some good books in law and literature which he carefully read and digested. He was grave, dignified and thoughtful."

On Sept. 13, 1779, Thomas Durfee married, in Newport, R. I., Mary Lowden, of Newport, who was born there (probably) Aug. 13, 1753, daughter of Richard and Priscilla (Stafford) Lowden, and died Nov. 29, 1842, in Tiverton. Five children were born to this marriage: Goodwin Halverson, born July 10, 1780, who died July 30, 1796, on the passage from St. Mark's to Jamaica; Elizabeth, born Oct. 28, 1781; Lucena, born May 18, 1784, who was drowned Sept. 29, 1809; Job, born Sept. 20, 1790, and Charles, born Feb. 26, 1793.

(VI) HON. JOB DURFEE, son of Hon. Thomas and Mary (Lowden) Durfee, was born in Tiverton, R. I., Sept. 20, 1790. He was thoroughly educated both at home and in the public schools, being also an eager and intelligent reader. After being fitted for college at Bristol, R. I., in 1809 he entered

Brown University, graduating with high honors in the class of 1813; among his classmates were Hon. Zachariah Allen, LL. D., Rev. Romeo Elton, D. D., Rev. Joel Hawes, D. D., Rev. Enoch Pond, D. D., and Rev. Thomas Shepard, D. D. In the year of his graduation he delivered a fourth of July oration, and a poem—"The Vision of Petrarch"—before the United Brothers Society of the University. Although he had early developed a rare poetic talent, he pursued the study of law under his father's instruction. In 1816 he commenced a service of four years in the General Assembly from his native town, distinguishing himself as a sound and ready debater. From 1820 to 1825 he made a substantial record in Congress; was returned to the General Assembly in 1826-1829, serving as Speaker of the House from October, 1827, until May, 1829, after which he declined a renomination to the legislature. In 1833 he was elected associate judge of the Supreme Court of the State, and in June, 1835, was elevated to the Chief Justiceship, a position which he held, with peculiar honor to himself and the State, through the trying period of the Dorr Rebellion and until his death. His memorable charge on treason, delivered to the grand jury during the height of the public excitement, was afterward printed and widely circulated. From 1837 to 1847 he served as a trustee of Brown University.

Judge Durfee also earned a broad and solid literary reputation. The first edition of his poem, "What Cheer," was brought out in 1832. The work had an enthusiastic reception in England, winning golden opinions from even such critics as John Foster in the famous Eclectic Review. In January, 1836, he delivered before the R. I. Historical Society two able lectures on "Aboriginal History," and later before the Massachusetts Historical Society, an address on the "Idea of the Supernatural among the Aborigines"; also, in 1843, an eloquent oration, before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Brown University, on the "Progress of Ideas, or Human Progress." His largest and most elaborate work, "Pan-idea," first appeared in 1846, under the pseudonym of Theoptes. It was profoundly metaphysical and evinced great intellectual power, and, perhaps for these reasons, failed to attract wide attention. Before his death the writer also delivered an able discourse on the "Rhode Island Idea of Government." A life so full of activity and usefulness justly won a noble and enduring niche in Rhode Island history. The pure and solid character of the student, judge and author was manifest in all his deeds, and stands conspicuous in his writings.

Judge Durfee died July 26, 1847, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. He requested that his tomb should be engraved with the Rhode Island coat of arms and the words "His trust was and is in God."

Judge Durfee was married Nov. 16, 1820, to Judith Borden, daughter of Simeon Borden, and their children were as follows: Lucy, born July 1, 1821; Amy Borden, Jan. 18, 1824; Thomas, Feb.

6, 1826; Mary, Oct. 23, 1827; Simeon Borden, Sept. 2, 1829; Sarah Anne, July 10, 1831; and Julia Maria, May 24, 1834.

(VII) THOMAS DURFEE, the elder son and third child of Job and Judith, enjoyed a complete and honorable career in Providence and the State of Rhode Island, very similar to that of his distinguished father. He was also a native of Tiverton, R. I., where he was born Feb. 6, 1826, being prepared for college at East Greenwich, R. I., under the tutelage of Rev. James Richardson and Rev. Nathan Williams. After graduating from Brown University in the class of 1846 he studied law under Charles F. Tillinghast and Hon. Charles S. Bradley. Admitted to the Bar in 1848, he served as reporter of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island from 1849 to 1853; judge of the Court of Magistrates, Providence, 1855-60, being one year assistant, and five years presiding judge; speaker of the State House of Representatives, 1863-65; member of the State Senate, 1865; associate justice of the State Supreme court, 1865-75, and Chief Justice, 1875-91. On March 14, 1891, he retired from the Bench, having earned a name as one of the foremost judges and legal authorities of New England, as a thoughtful and eloquent orator, a profound historical scholar, a graceful poet and a devout pure man.

One of Judge Durfee's earliest works of a literary nature, which was also a labor of filial love, was the "Complete Works of Job Durfee, with a Memoir of his Life," published in 1849. Later he became the author of the following: "Reporter of Cases in Supreme Court of Rhode Island," 1851-53; "Oration at Providence, July 4, 1853"; "Treatise on the Law of Highways," begun by Joseph K. Angell, in 1857, but more than half being written by Judge Durfee and remaining a standard to this day; "The Village Picnic and Other Poems," 1872; "Oration at the Dedication of the Providence County Court House," 1877; "Gleanings from the Judicial History of Rhode Island," 1883; "Some Thoughts on the Constitution of Rhode Island," 1884, and "Historical Discourse on the Planting of Providence," 1887. As associate and chief justice of the State Supreme Court, Judge Durfee wrote the opinions in an immense number of cases, and high critics conceded them to be not only legally close and sound, but masterpieces of pure English diction. "Other judges," says one such authority, "have excelled him in one quality or another, but very few have so combined the qualities which make a great judge. His decisions have settled the law of the many difficult points they touch upon, enabled lawyers to advise with confidence, insured the stability of property and personal rights, and upheld the dignity and wisdom of the common law."

Like his father Judge Durfee was devoted to his alma mater, and his learning received proper recognition from Brown University. In 1875 it conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws, and he served as a trustee of that institution from 1875 to 1888, being its chancellor from 1879 to 1888, and a Fellow from the latter year until the date of his death. For many years he rendered valuable service as a member of the advisory and executive committee of the university corporation, and to the last was its loyal and enthusiastic supporter. On Feb. 10, 1888, he became a member of the board of trustees of the Providence public library, and served as its president from May 13, 1892, to the time of his death, June 6, 1901.

Judge Durfee died in the city which had known and honored him so many years, his reputation, however, extending over and beyond New England. He left a wife and one son, as immediate relatives. His widow, to whom he was married in October, 1857, was Sarah Jane Slater, daughter of John Slater (2), of Providence. The son, Samuel S. Durfee, Providence lawyer of wide attainments and a gentleman of fine tastes, is the fourth in line to honor the profession.

(VIII) SAMUEL SLATER DURFEE, son of Thomas and Sarah, was born in Providence, Sept. 23, 1858. He was prepared for college in the private school of Rev. Charles H. Wheeler, of that city; entered Brown University and was graduated in the class of 1880, with the degree of A. B., to which later was added that of A. M. In 1881-82 he studied law in the office of Thomas C. Greene, and during 1882-83 was a student in the Boston University Law School. On Jan. 29, 1884, having passed the regular State examination, he was admitted to the Bar and has since been engaged in practice. Mr. Durfee is a master in chancery, his professional work has been largely that which devolves upon a judicial referee, and he has evinced many of those substantial qualities which have already made famous two generations of his immediate ancestors.

In national politics Mr. Durfee is a Republican, but is independent on local issues and has taken no active part in public matters. He is a member of Psi Upsilon Sigma Chapter (the college fraternity) and a member of the Hope and Agawam Hunt Clubs.

On March 1, 1892, Mr. Durfee was united in marriage to Eliza Barns Weeden, daughter of William B. Weeden, of Providence. They are the parents of two children: Dorothy, born Aug. 9, 1895; and Thomas, June 3, 1899.

ALFRED A. WILLIAMS is so well known to the citizens of Johnston and vicinity that introduction is scarcely necessary. He is a representative member of one of the oldest families of New England and a direct descendant of Roger Williams, whose history is that of early Rhode Island itself. We will give only the line of descent of Alfred A. Williams here.

(I) Roger Williams.

(II) Daniel Williams.

(III) Joseph Williams.

(IV) William Williams was born July 27, 1749, and died Sept. 27, 1825. He married Dorcas Shippee, who died July 18, 1817, and they resided in Foster, R. I., where Mr. Williams was for many years a well-known farmer and prominent citizen. Their children were: Otis, Stephen, Elijah, Thomas and Larned.

(V) Larned Williams was born in Foster Feb. 14, 1810, and was reared in his native place. At about the age of twenty he left Foster and sought mechanical work, and being apt his progress was rapid. For thirty years he was an overseer of weaving in the Christopher Rhodes mill at Natick, Sprague Mills and the Waterman Mills, and he was a valued factor in the establishment with which he was connected, bearing a reputation of which his descendants may well be proud. Further mention of him will be found elsewhere.

Mr. Williams married Sarah Ann Cranston, born Nov. 22, 1809, who died April 7, 1872. They had seven children, Emily C., Abby Ann, Alfred A., George W., Francisco C., Sarah Amanda and William L. Mrs. Williams was a daughter of Caleb Cranston, and a descendant of a family ancient in Old and New England. Caleb Cranston traced his ancestry from one William, who was Lord of Cranston, of Scotland, created and titled by James VI., King of Scotland, Nov. 19, 1609. From him the line is through his son James; his son John, "Esquire of Boll, England"; his son James, "Chaplain to King Charles I."; his son Gov. John; his son Gov. Samuel; and the latter's son John, born Oct. 15, 1745, who was the father of Caleb Cranston.

(VI) Alfred A. Williams was born in Providence Nov. 7, 1834, and during his youth attended the city schools. When approaching manhood he entered the employ of the firm of Burdick & Barrett, on Canal street, in Providence, remaining there for five or six years. On April 15, 1855, he married Sarah Hendrick, who was born in 1837, daughter of Olney Hendrick, and they at once took up their residence on Marshall street, in Providence, where they remained for some time. Mr. Williams then became connected with the mill operated by his father-in-law, Mr. Hendrick, at Simmonsville, and continued there until 1860. In March of that year he purchased the old Gov. Nehemiah Knight estate in Johnston and immediately removed thither, and there he now resides. When Mr. Williams came into possession of his present estate it was in a generally depleted condition, and he has demonstrated what can be done with Rhode Island farm lands. By an inestimable amount of hard labor, intelligently directed, and careful husbanding and investing of his capital, he has established one of the largest and most complete farm and gardening plants in his section of the State. He has land under glass, and in his greenhouses are grown early vegetables and plants which he markets profitably. There are large pens for the shelter and care of live stock, in which Mr. Williams takes an especial interest; fields of various sizes are devoted to the growing of endless varieties of profitable vegetables, and nowhere is care, cleanliness and the maintenance of the utmost order neglected. It is a representative farm of the New England type, and in itself speaks most eloquently of the thrift and progressiveness of its proprietor.

Mr. Williams has not confined his activities entirely to the management of his own interests, but has found time to assist in the administration of the public affairs of the town of Johnston in various capacities, having filled many offices and in numerous other ways proved his worth as a citizen. He has several times been elected by the Republicans to the General Assembly, where he has acquitted himself with much credit and to the satisfaction of his fellow townsmen. He is unusually energetic for one of his years, a fact which he attributes to his long maintained regularity of habits and temperate living.

To Mr. and Mrs. Williams have been born the following named children: Alfred H., who resides in Scituate, R. I., married Eva Babcock, and has three daughters, Lillian, Grace and Ethel. Sarah A. married Leonard N. Austin, a well known gentleman of Providence, connected with the city administration. Hattie C. married William Thornton and resides in Scituate, R. I.; their children are Edna, Alice, Ruth, William, Frank, Emma, Albert and Sarah. Olney H., a prominent citizen of Johnston, where he assists his father in the management of his business, married Minnie C. Walch, and they have had ten children—Minnie, Beatrice, Alfred, Lloyd, Sarah, Roger, Blanche, Mary (deceased), Olney and Roy. Larned, the youngest, resides at home, and is engaged with his father and brother; he married Hattie Knight, and has three children—Bertha, Ralph and Mabel.

ERNEST W. TINKHAM, treasurer and general manager of the firm of William Tinkham & Co., manufacturers of fancy worsteds at Harrisville, is one of the best known and most capable men identified with the woolen industry in New England. Mr. Tinkham was born Sept. 25, 1857, at Harrisville, son of Hon. William and Caroline M. (Smith) Tinkham, a full history of whom is given in another part of this work.

Ernest W. Tinkham was nine years of age when his parents removed from Harrisville to Providence, and his education was secured in the schools of these places, the Bryant & Stratton Business College and Dansville Seminary, Dansville, N. Y. After leaving school he became a clerk in the office of the Providence & Springfield railroad, of which his father was the projector and first president, and here he subsequently became treasurer and general passenger agent, continuing to act in these capacities until the road was purchased by the New York, New Haven &

Emm.

On September 17, 1872, he married Miss Mary Ann Williams, daughter of John Williams, of Johnston, and she bore him three children, namely: Alfred A., born May 22, 1873; Roy, born May 22, 1875; and Lillian, born May 22, 1877. Mr. Williams is a member of the Baptist Church, and is a very successful farmer. He has a large farm of about 100 acres, and is very successful in the raising of live stock, and in the growing of various crops. He is a very successful business man, and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Johnston Manufacturing Company. Ernest W. Tinkham

Hartford Railroad. In 1878 Mr. Tinkham became a partner in the woolen manufacturing firm of Tinkham & Farwell, of which his father was senior partner, at Harrisville, and in 1884, when Mr. Farwell's interest was purchased by the Messrs. Tinkham, the firm name became William Tinkham & Co., and has so continued ever since. In 1899 the firm was incorporated with William Tinkham, president, and Ernest W. Tinkham, treasurer and general manager. The aggressive spirit of Mr. Tinkham has been much in evidence since his identification with the business, which has been developed into one of the most valuable mill properties in the State. For many years he has taken a most prominent part in the management of the business affairs, and his knowledge of the minutest details of the business enables him to act solely on his own judgment. A student of trade conditions and market tendencies, Mr. Tinkham has few equals. Since his connection with the firm, the original mill was burned in 1894, and the year following a new one was erected. Subsequently requirements of an increasing business necessitated the erection of two large buildings, the last one being completed in 1905. Mr. Tinkham has other manufacturing interests, being treasurer and general manager of the Royal Worsted Mills at Harrisville, organized in 1902, and is president of the Alva Manufacturing Company, engaged in the same business there. Mr. Tinkham has been prominently identified with Providence banking circles for some time, being vice-president of the Atlantic National Bank, and was in former years a director in the Old National Bank, and the United National Bank.

Mr. Tinkham has found time from his business duties to engage in public affairs, not as a politician but as a good citizen, and has served for a number of years as a member of the town council, being president thereof for some time. He was president of the Burrillville Public Library Association, and was a member of the committee of five that had charge of the erection of the Jesse M. Smith Free Public Library Building at Harrisville, completed in 1906. He is a member of the Central Club at Providence.

On Jan. 12, 1879, Mr. Tinkham was married to Margaret McCartney, daughter of Hugh McCartney, of Dansville, N. Y., and to this union there has been born one daughter, Miriam E.

WILLIAM H. LUTHER, of Providence, R. I., whose lineage is presented in this record, is a successful manufacturer and leading capitalist, chairman of the board of police commissioners, and a very prominent citizen. He is the son of the late Edward Luther, grandson of Martin Luther, and great-grandson of James Luther, a soldier of the Revolution.

(I) Capt. John Luther, the first ancestor in America of this branch of the Luther family, was a native of Dorset, England, came to America in 1636, and in 1639 became one of the purchasers of Taunton, Massachusetts. Some authorities have him the captain of a vessel from Boston, trading to the vicinity of the Delaware river in 1644, and killed by the Indians on that river. He is made the father of Elder Samuel and Hezekiah Luther. Elder Samuel Luther was the second Baptist minister of Swansea, Mass., and was ordained July 22, 1685.

(II) Hezekiah Luther, son of Capt. John, was born in 1640, and died July 23, 1723. His wife, Sarah, died Aug. 22, 1722. Their children were: John, born in 1663; Nathaniel, in 1664; Joseph, Feb. 12, 1669; Elizabeth, Dec. 29, 1671; Edward, April 27, 1674; Hezekiah, Aug. 27, 1676; and Hannah.

(III) Lieut. Hezekiah Luther, born Aug. 27, 1676, was married in March, 1704, to Martha Gardner, and died Oct. 27, 1763, survived by his wife only until Nov. 2, 1763. Their children, all born in Swansea, were: Robert, born Dec. 13, 1704; Levi, born Aug. 4, 1706; Esek, Dec. 6, 1708; Constant, Oct. 4, 1711; Lydia, Sept. 19, 1714; Simeon, May 19, 1717; Edward, Feb. 15, 1719; Martha, Nov. 28, 1721; Sarah, Aug. 2, 1724; Avis, Dec. 17, 1726; Hezekiah, Feb. 19, 1728; and Calvin, Aug. 9, 1731.

(IV) Edward Luther, born Feb. 15, 1719, married March 13, 1745, Sarah Sweet, of Providence, and died March 7, 1776. Their children, all born in Swansea, were: James, born Feb. 19, 1747; Sarah, May 10, 1748; Abner, June 27, 1750; Martha, Oct. 21, 1752; Edward, Nov. 10, 1754; Gardner, Elizabeth and Sweet, triplets, Feb. 19, 1757; Peleg, Jan. 2, 1760; Freeloove, March 15, 1762; Samuel, April 26, 1764; and Elizabeth, April 15, 1766.

(V) James Luther, born Feb. 19, 1747, was a resident of Scituate, R. I., from which place he enlisted for service in the Revolutionary war. Cowell's "Spirit of '76," gives a James Luther as a private in Capt. Baley's Company, Col. Littitz's regiment, on the pay-roll of September, 1776. It is claimed he enlisted three times for service in that war, and in 1833 was granted a pension, being then in his eighty-seventh year. He married Sarah Bowen, a relative, and all of their children, excepting the eldest, were born at East Greenwich, R. I., namely: Chloe, born in Swansea, Mass., married (first) John Whidden, and (second) William Andrews; Martin is mentioned farther on; Lydia married Charles Vale; Sarah married Peleg Sherman; Betsey married David Collins; Peleg married Olive Tourtelotte.

(VI) Martin Luther, son of James, was a resident of Scituate, R. I., where in his early life, he operated a large tannery, and was also an extensive land holder. This tannery was located near what was known as the old red weaving shop, on the Hartford turn-pike, near the Four Corners, in the town of Scituate. At one time he was one of the most substantial men of the town, but later in life met with financial reverses. He lived to a good old age, and died at the home of his son, Harley P., in North Scituate. He was known as a man of great force of character, one of his chief characteristics being firmness. He married Lucy Bowen, and their children were as follows: Harley P., a farmer and large land owner in North Scituate, married Abbie Bowen, and a sketch of his life and the record of his family will be found elsewhere; Edward is mentioned farther on; Gardner, who married Mary Childs, was a block printer, and for many years was in the employ of the Spragues and resided in Cranston; Albert went South in young manhood, and as a soldier in the United States Army participated in the Seminole war, later locating in the State of Oregon, but finally returned to Rhode Island, and died at the home of his brother in North Scituate, unmarried; William followed the trade of carpenter, never married, and died in North Scituate, where he was known as a man of very devout religious principles; Isaac was a seafaring man and died in young manhood, unmarried; Sarah, also unmarried, died in Providence.

(VII) Edward Luther, born April 9, 1807, in Johnston, R. I., learned the business of block printing, and for many years was in the employ of the Spragues at Cranston. Leaving there he went to Dover, N. H., and for six years was employed in the Cochecho Print Works. Returning to Providence he engaged for a time with his brother-in-law, Albert D. Sprague, in the planing-mill business, but later disposed of his interests there and embarked in the tea, coffee and spice business with a Mr. Wightman, under the firm name of the New England Coffee & Spice Company, their establishment being located on Dorrance street. Later Mr. Wightman sold his interest to Thomas W. Sprague, and they did an extensive business under the firm name of Sprague & Luther, continuing until Mr. Luther's death which occurred Aug. 27, 1861. He was buried in Locust Grove Cemetery in Providence. Mr. Luther held a commission in the Rhode Island militia during the Dorr war. He attended the Universalist Church, and was a man much esteemed for his many good qualities.

On Nov. 3, 1831, Mr. Luther was married to Hannah Sprague, who was born July 7, 1808, at Cranston, daughter of Ebenezer and Dinah (Williams) Sprague, the latter a lineal descendant of Roger Williams, she being a daughter of William Williams, son of Daniel, son of Peleg, son of Daniel, who was a son of Roger Williams. Mrs. Hannah (Sprague) Luther survived her husband until Oct. 13, 1895, and was buried beside him. Their children were: Edward A., born Oct. 19, 1832, was married Oct. 13, 1855, to Mary S. Darling, and resided in Providence, where he was in the jewelry business, and where he died Oct. 18, 1904, leaving two children, Lucy E. (wife of William O. Fennor, of Providence) and Edward D. (who married Hattie Louise Fuller, and resides in Providence); Adeline, born May 16, 1836, died Aug. 4, 1837; Lucy A., born April 10, 1841, is mentioned farther on; William Henry, born April 21, 1844, is mentioned farther on; George A. and James H., twins, were born April 14, 1847.

(VIII) LUCY A. LUTHER was married Jan. 27, 1864, to Dr. George W. Snow, a native of Chelsea, Mass., son of Zenas and Temperance (Smith) Snow, and a descendant of the old Snow family of Cape Cod, who descended from Nicholas Snow, of the "Mayflower Compact" and who came in the ship "Ann." Dr. Snow also descended from Constance Hopkins, of the "Mayflower." He received his medical instruction at the Jefferson Medical School, and at the outbreak of the Civil war became assistant surgeon in the 28th Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, and later was promoted to be surgeon in the 35th Regiment, 9th Army Corps. Subsequently he was on staff duty under General Griffin, and so continued for two years, until the close of the war. Dr. Snow settled for practice in Newburyport, in 1865, and there continued until his death May 20, 1893. The children of Dr. and Mrs. Snow were: Allan Boone, born March 14, 1866, died May 1, 1877; Ida Sprague, born Oct. 20, 1868, was married Jan. 27, 1890, to Charles H. Herrick, and died July 8, 1891, leaving one son, Allan Snow, born June 28, 1891; Edward Luther, born Nov. 3, 1875, died Jan. 12, 1877; Frank Whipple, born July 9, 1878, graduated from Harvard Medical School in 1902, and is now in active practice in Newburyport. Mrs. Snow is a resident of that city and is a member of Old Newbury Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

(VIII) George A. Luther was married Dec. 7, 1870, to Clara Waterman Dexter, and resides at Pawtucket. They have one son, Dexter S.

(VIII) James H. Luther was married July 4, 1870, to Anna Blackington, and resides in Providence, where he is a jeweler. He has two children, Herbert and Mabel.

(VIII) WILLIAM HENRY LUTHER was born April 21, 1844, at Dover, N. H., and was four years old when his parents moved to Providence. He received his earlier education in the public schools of Providence, and supplemented it at the private school kept by Samuel Austin. Soon after leaving school he learned the trade of a lapidary with his brother Edward A., who was then engaged in business at Attleboro, Mass. After a short period in partnership with a cousin, John W. Luther, in this business in Providence, in 1864 he engaged as a lapidary on his own account, and was located at different points in Providence, moving from one to another to meet the demands of his growing business. In 1873 he admitted his brother, Edward A.

Luther, as a partner, the firm becoming Luther Brothers, manufacturing jewelers, which style continued until 1884, when Edward A. withdrew.

In January, 1877, Mr. Luther removed his business to its present location on Oxford street, in South Providence. The company consists of Mr. Luther and his son, Frederick, who was admitted as partner in 1888, and is conducted under the firm style of William H. Luther & Son. They have one of the finest and best equipped jewelry manufacturing establishments in Rhode Island, and as manufacturers of high grade electroplated jewelry, including cuff-buttons, brooches, waist-sets, rings, belt-pins, etc., they have won national reputation. Their "high-grade, low priced" jewelry articles are made serviceable enough to give complete satisfaction to the consumer, and consequently the trade has come to consider them among the best line of goods to be handled. The product of this company finds a ready market not only in the United States and in Canada, but in foreign countries as well. The business is constantly on the increase, and at times employment is given to 250 hands.

In political faith Mr. Luther is a zealous Republican, and on many occasions has been elected to fill important positions by his party. On Aug. 6, 1889, he was appointed license commissioner, and served until April, 1890. On Feb. 27, 1895, he was appointed a commissioner of the fire department, thus becoming a member of the first board of this nature ever created in the city. He held this position until Dec. 19, 1901, when he resigned, having been appointed a member of the board of police commissioners on Nov. 26, 1901. This latter appointment was made by Gov. William Gregory. The board was the first created after the act providing for it had passed the General Assembly. After the death of Col. Frank F. Olney, who died in office in October, 1903, Mr. Luther became chairman of the board of police commissioners.

The incumbent of the chairmanship of the board of police commissioners is subject to a great deal of criticism, and it is scarcely possible for any incumbent to satisfy every individual. It happened that Mr. Luther assumed the office amid much opposition, as it was recognized by his opponents that he was a man who could not be coerced, and as one who had no political debts to pay. As time has gone on his thorough, straight-forward and eminently fair administration has dissolved the opposition, and all of his fellow citizens have come to recognize that his methods are "a square deal for all, nothing more." Personally Mr. Luther is a man of affable, genial manner, and he receives every citizen on an equal footing. He has gained the confidence of the people in a remarkable way, and his advice and judgment are solicited and depended upon in all important movements. In January, 1906, when the question of a successor to Mr. Luther was being talked of, the Providence Journal of Jan. 8th had the following editorial, under the head line "Service Worth Retaining":

"There seems no good reason why there should be any question as to the best way of filling the vacancy soon to occur in the Police Commission of the City. Mr. William H. Luther, the present chairman, whose term is about to expire, has given himself to the work with conspicuous assiduity and earnestness from the first organization of the commission, and a great part of the success that has attended this new method of managing the police force is due to his efforts. He is a man of honesty, independence and pertinacity, constitutionally averse to being a mere figurehead or to taking action of any kind dictated by other influences than his own carefully formed judgment. While his practical good sense saves him from attempting the impossible he has been courageous and uncompromising in the enforcement of the laws entrusted to his charge to the limit of their practicability. Another man might be found who would do equally well in the trying position; it is not probable that one could be found who would do better. The office has few attractions for men who are really qualified to fill it. If Mr. Luther, therefore, with his experience and good record, is willing to continue to give his services to the city it would be unwise indeed to deprive the city of them."

As Mr. Luther was continued in the office, the opinion seemed to be widely shared in Providence.

Mr. Luther was married Jan. 2, 1865, to Mary Emily Blandin, of Norton, Mass., daughter of Sumner and Louise (Messinger) Blandin. They have one son, Frederick B., who was born Sept. 12, 1866, in Providence. He completed his education at the Mowry & Goff English and Classical School, and in 1888 became associated with his father, at present being the active manager of the business. He is also the proprietor of the Atlantic Greenhouses, having developed a large business in that line in the city. He was married in Providence to Nettie Bell Simmons.

William H. Luther is a man socially inclined, and has served as president of the Pomham and West Side Clubs, in whose organization he was active, and he was the main organizer and founder of the Central Club. He always shows much interest in the welfare of these concerns. He is also a member of the Providence Board of Trade; the Rhode Island Yacht Club; the Rhode Island Business Men's Association; the New England Manufacturers' Association, and for many years has been a member of Adelphoi Lodge, No. 23, A. F. & A. M. Mr. Luther is an attendant and liberal supporter of the Woodbury Memorial Church (Unitarian), and for several years, until the press of private business prevented, he served as president of the board of trustees.

JOHN J. MCINERNEY is of Scotch extraction, and was born in Stephentown, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., July 28, 1855, son of Thomas and Katherine (Hewett) McInerney.

Thomas McInerney was a farmer, owning a tract of 130 acres, and followed that occupation all of his life. Although a staunch Democrat he never took an active interest in public matters. He and his wife Katherine Hewett had eight children: Jane, who married Thomas Devere; Angeline M., teacher and later a telegraph operator; Anna L., who married Daniel C. Kenyon, editor of the Pcn- dulum; Margaret H.; Thomas, deceased; James A., a carpenter at Waterbury, Conn.; William, deceased; and John J.

John J. McInerney was educated in the common schools of his native town, and in the Maplewood Seminary there, the latter of which was conducted by Rev. Eber Rollo, a Presbyterian minister and a highly educated man, whose two daughters were his assistants. This seminary Mr. McInerney attended for one year, and at the age of sixteen years left school. His father dying soon after, young McInerney undertook the management of the farm for a year or two, after which he took the agency of the station at Lippitt, R. I.; and while there learned telegraphy. The road was leased to the Hartford, Providence & Fishkill Railroad, and Mr. McInerney's station closed, and he returned home, where he remained two years. After clerking for a time he secured a position under W. E. Chamberlin, of the Worcester, Mass., division at Blackstone Junction. Here he had a position as clerk and remained until October, 1881, when he was promoted to the position of station agent at Millville, Mass. He remained there from 1881 until 1891, when he located in Auburn, R. I., as the agent of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, taking the position of freight agent at that place, and here he has since remained. The duties of this office have increased materially on account of the increase in population at that point, Mr. McInerney having seen the town of Auburn grow from a village of a few houses to what it is today. He has been very successful in his line of work, being one of the self-made men of the town.

Mr. McInerney has taken an active interest in the welfare of Cranston. He has always been a Republican, as were his brothers, and served in the common council in 1904-05-06-07, being chairman of the committee on claims. He is a charter member of the United Workmen, was the lodge's first warden, and is now treasurer; he is a member of the New England Order of Protection, Park Lodge No. 27; of Doric Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Auburn, and has attained the thirty-second degree in Scottish Rite Masonry; and also belongs to Park Hill Lodge, No. 44, I. O. O. F., of which he was at one time assistant vice grand.

Mr. McInerney married Nellie C. Blanchard, daughter of Mathew W. Blanchard, postmaster of Millville, Mass., and two children have been born to them: Anna Louise, who graduated from the high school in 1905; and Alice Hope, who attends a musical college.

DR. LUCY H. A. BROWN, who passed away Feb. 14, 1908, was the daughter of the late Dr. Asa W. Brown, and was of good old Puritan stock, descending from one of the oldest and most prominent families of New England.

(I) John Brown, the emigrant progenitor of the family, with his wife Dorothy and children John and James, came from Leyden to Plymouth, Mass., in 1626. Their daughter Mary, who was born in Plymouth, married Thomas Willett, Mayor of New York. John Brown was a joint grantee with Edward Winslow in the deed of Rehoboth, given by the Indian chief Massasoit. For sixteen years he was assistant governor and several times was commissioner for making treaties with the Indians. In 1636 he removed to Duxbury, and in 1643 to Taunton, and he died at Swansea, April 10, 1662.

(II) John Brown (2), son of John, died in March, 1662. His wife was the daughter of William Buckland.

(III) John Brown (3), son of John (2), born in September, 1650, was a captain during King Philip's war. On Nov. 8, 1672, he married Ann Mason.

(IV) John Brown (4), son of John (3), born April 28, 1675, married July 2, 1696, Abigail Cole.

(V) James Brown, son of John (4), born in 1706, died in 1777. His wife's name was Ruth.

(VI) James Brown (2), son of James, was born Sept. 14, 1731, at Taunton, Mass. He married in 1753, at Providence, R. I., Mary Anthony, born Dec. 22, 1737, in that city. Their children were: Amasa, born in 1754; Alice, 1756; Anthony, 1758; Stephen, 1761; Ruth, 1763; Jonathan, 1765; and David, 1769. James Brown about 1800 went to Hartford, Washington county, N. Y., and there died Feb. 2, 1805, and is buried in the old graveyard adjacent to the Baptist Church in the North Village. His wife died Feb. 24, 1810, and is buried by his side.

(VII) Anthony Brown, son of James (2), was born Oct. 1, 1758, and married in 1780, Esther Bailey, their children being: Daniel, born in 1781; William, 1783; Mary, 1784; Samuel, 1787; and Rebecca, 1789.

(VIII) Daniel Brown, son of Anthony, born in 1781, married in 1805 Alice Whitford, and their children were: James, born in 1807; Asa W., 1813; David, 1823; Susan, 1809; and Margaret in 1816. Daniel Brown was a farmer in Sterling and South Killingly, Conn., and was a member of the Baptist Church.

(IX) Asa W. Brown, M. D., was born Sept. 28, 1813, in Sterling, Conn., son of Daniel Brown, but when he was three years of age the family removed to Killingly. There he attended the common schools of the time, and at the age of eighteen years began teaching, receiving after his twenty-first year an academic education, for which he paid out of the small earnings of his school teaching. Having a fixed desire to enter the medical profession, he labored against unfavorable circumstances for many years, but finally, in the spring of 1853, graduated from the Homeopathic College of Cleveland, Ohio. He soon afterward commenced practice in Centerville, R. I., but, his health being poor, he removed to Mystic Bridge, Conn., in the hope that the change might benefit him. There he remained until 1872, when he was obliged to give himself rest for a time on account of his health. He spent two years at Danielson, and in 1874 located in Providence, where he soon acquired a large practice and for more than twenty years enjoyed unusual success in his profession.

Dr. Brown was married (first) in 1837 to Lucy M. Pray, by whom he had one daughter, Dr. Lucy H. A. Brown. He married (second) in April, 1842, Maria Burlingame Kies, and to this union on May 24, 1847, was born one son, Stephen B., who is now secretary of Crescent Park, Providence. Dr. Brown married (third) July 5, 1882, Mrs. Lucy A. Briggs. Dr. Brown died at his summer home (where he had spent the heated term for many years) at Cottage City, Nantucket, June 1, 1903, and was buried at Swan Point cemetery, Providence.

(X) Lucy H. A. Brown was born in Killingly, Conn., June 8, 1841. The mother died when Lucy was but two months old, but just before her death had given her babe to her sister in Killingly, who proved to be a kind mother to her infant charge. She lived in Killingly until fifteen years of age, and then went to Voluntown, where she attended school. On reaching the years of helpfulness to herself Miss Brown learned telegraphy in Mystic, and followed that occupation for two years at Kingston, afterward engaging as a bookkeeper and as cashier in business houses in Providence for Thomas Pray, Jr. In 1877, at the suggestion of a phrenologist, and in the face of discouragement from friends, she decided to take up the study of medicine, and, after studying with Dr. Jewett, of Catskill, N. Y., for one year, she entered the Homeopathic Hospital College of Cleveland, Ohio, in the fall of 1880. She graduated from that institute with an honorable record of standing (over ninety per cent.) March 8, 1882. Dr. Brown then came to Providence, and on May 9th of the same year opened an office on Chestnut street. With health somewhat depleted by close application to her studies, the work of her practice soon began to show its effect upon her; and after two years she was so far broken down that a change was necessary. She therefore left this field and located at Normal Park, Ill., where she procured a license and practised for two years. At the end of this time, with health restored, Dr. Brown returned to Providence, at first occupying the office with her father. Her practice soon grew to such an extent that she opened an office of her own in Wesleyan Avenue, remaining there for one and one-half years, and at the end of that time moving to No. 336 Willard avenue, thence to Broad and Lockwood streets, and from there to No. 420 Westminster street, where she remained for three years. From February, 1903, until her death she was located at No. 68 Jackson street, where she enjoyed a large patronage.

Dr. Brown was a member of the American Institute of Homeopathy, the Rhode Island Homeopathic Society, and the Electro-Therapeutic Society. She was a skilled physician, and won the confidence of the community to such an extent that her large and lucrative practice was assured.

COL. AUGUSTUS W. COLWELL, during his lifetime a well-known and honorable citizen of Rhode Island, was born in 1837 in Greystone, Rhode Island, and was a descendant of one of the oldest families of the State. Rhode Island has been the continuous abiding place of the Colwells for approximately two hundred and fifty years, since the coming thither of one Robert Colwell, the progenitor of the Rhode Island family, not far from the middle of the seventeenth century. He is of record in Providence in 1654, on April 28th of which year he purchased a house and house-lot of John Fenner "lying betwixt Edward Inman and John Smith." He took the oath of allegiance in May, 1666. He removed to Long Island, New York, previous to Dec. 31, 1670. His wife was Margaret (White), and their children were Robert and Elizabeth Colwell, the latter born July 1, 1664.

Robert Colwell (2), son of Robert and Margaret, through whom the name here in Rhode Island has been perpetuated, was born Jan. 9, 1662, and died in June, 1748. He married Amy Downing, and their children, their births all being of record at Bristol, were: Margaret, Mary, Robert, Amey, Richard, Elizabeth, John, William, Sarah and Ruth. The father may have subsequently removed to the town of Glocester, R. I., where some of his children settled, and here in Glocester and neighboring towns, including Providence, mainly the name has continued. It is from this family descended the late Dr. Francis Colwell, long prominent in his profession—that of medicine—in Providence, where has lived and just died the Doctor's son, the late Hon. Francis Colwell, a prominent lawyer, of long and honorable public service in the city of his adoption, for a period Judge of the old Court of Magistrates, several times City Solicitor, State Senator, etc.; and, too, from this stock descended the late Rev. John W. Colwell, years ago known to the residents of this locality; and from this State also came the veteran soldier and officer of the Civil war, whose bravery and gallant deeds are a matter of history, the late Col. Augustus W. Colwell, of Woonsocket. The latter is survived by both of his children, one of whom is Mr. Frederick A. Colwell, of Woonsocket, where he is occupied in the manufacture of paper boxes and in the printing business, while another is Miss Lottie M. Colwell, a teacher in the Woonsocket public schools.

Again one branch of the Glocester Colwell family is in a sense historic, one of its members having though indirect alliance become connected with the ancient Roger Williams family. This was Robert Colwell, of Glocester, who was married in 1728 to Martha Winsor, whose father, Samuel Winsor, of Providence, was the son of Samuel Winsor and his wife Mercy (Williams), she a daughter of the "Apostle of Liberty"—Roger Williams.

Arnold Colwell, the grandfather of Colonel Colwell, was born in Connecticut, and died in Brooklyn, that State. He carried on farming in Brooklyn. He married Hannah Wilmouth of Scituate, R. I., and eight children were born to them, viz.: Lavinia married George Rhodes; Mary married Amasa Smith; Lucy married Nedebiah Angell; Nancy married Jonah Titus; Abby married James Aldrich; William Arnold is mentioned below; John, who married Hannah Wing, was a Baptist minister, and he died while on the passage to California, in 1849; Timothy lived in Baton Rouge, La., where he had a plantation, and where he married.

William Arnold Colwell was born in Foster, R. I., and died Sept. 16, 1870, in Providence, aged sixty-four years. In early life he was a machinist, having learned the trade in North Providence, and he rose to the responsible position of mill superintendent. He served as such in the Harkness & Stead mills, at Hebronville, Mass., for twenty-five or thirty years, at the end of that period going to Manville, R. I., where he was superintendent of the mills of the same firm for seven or eight years. His next move was to Scituate, R. I., where he took up farming, following that occupation for several years, after which he again became a mill superintendent, this time in the Lapham mills, at Centreville, R. I. However, he remained there only a few years, his health failing, and he removed to Providence, where he lived retired until his death. Mr. Colwell was industrious and thrifty, and acquired a fair competence. He never took any active part in public affairs, though he was a stalwart advocate of the principles of the Republican party. He was a regular attendant of the Congregational Church.

Mr. Colwell was married in Scituate, R. I., to Mahala Winsor, born in Smithfield, daughter of Augustus and Huldah Winsor. She died in Providence May 9, 1888, at the age of seventy-eight years. Eleven children were born to them, three dying in infancy. We have the following record of the eight who reached maturity: (1) William H., a resident of Pawtucket, is bookkeeper for J. O. Draper & Co., soap manufacturers. He married Eunice Carpenter. (2) Huldah W. married Milton Franch, of Attleboro, Mass., and died in Pawtucket. (3) Hannah W. married Alpheus Borden, of Fall River, Mass., a pattern-maker, who died in Pawtucket, where she now resides. (4) Augustus W. is mentioned below. (5) Lucy lives in Providence, unmarried. (6) Rev. James lived in Greenville, R.

I., in which village he was pastor of the Episcopal Church until his death. He married Sarah Saunders, of North Scituate. (7) Richard, a resident of Granville, Ohio, is professor of Greek in Dennison University. He married (first) Emily Hartsborn, of Providence, and (second) Abby Kerr, of Granville, Ohio. (8) Walter, now of Washington, D. C., is a member of the B. P. Clapp Ammonia Company. He has been twice married, first to Laura Pendleton, of Boston, and second to Mabel Robinson, of Washington, D. C.

Augustus W. Colwell was educated in the public schools of Woonsocket and the Bushee Academy. On the breaking out of the Civil war, in the spring of 1861, at which time he was a resident of Pawtucket or vicinity, he was one of the thousands of the youth of our land who, on the call of the President for troops, rushed to the country's defense. From that early period in the conflict until the close of hostilities in 1865—from start to finish—he followed the flag wherever it led, and as gallantly defended it. He was enrolled at Pawtucket, April 17, 1861, and mustered in as sergeant, May 2, 1861, of Company E, 1st Rhode Island Detached Militia, under Colonel Burnside, serving for three months. This regiment, composed of the choicest material, achieved a national reputation, and in the fiery ordeal of the conflict at Bull Run was highly commended for bravery and fortitude in the day of battle.

Late in the summer and fall of 1861 was organized the 3d Regiment, Rhode Island Heavy Artillery, with which young Colwell cast his lot, enlisting Oct. 7th, and was mustered in Nov. 28, 1861. The period of the regiment's service extended from August, 1861, to September, 1865, during which time its several companies were scattered over a wide territory and many States, serving now as infantry, now as heavy artillery, now as light artillery, and at times detachments and different companies serving for longer or shorter periods upon armed transports, as coast guard or on special service. The principal field of its activities was in the Department of the South, which embraced South Carolina, Georgia and Florida, under the command successively of General Thomas W. Sherman, David Hunter, Ormsby M. Mitchell, Quincy A. Gillmore and John G. Foster, against whom commanded in succession Generals Robert E. Lee, John C. Pemberton and G. T. Beauregard. The following sieges and battles were officially ordered inscribed upon the colors of the regiment: Fort Pulaski, Secessionville, Pocatigo, Morris Island, Fort Sumter, Fort Wagner, Olustee, Drury's Bluff, Laurel Hill, Honey Hill, Vevoux Neck, Fort Burnham and Petersburg.

With this regiment from start to finish young Colwell shared the fortunes of war, and by the force of his make-up and his superior service rose from the ranks to high position. His record in brief as given in the Adjutant General's report, "The Register of Rhode Island Volunteers, 1861-65," is as follows: Capt. Co. B; residence, Pawtucket, R. I.; Oct. 7, 1861, enrolled; Nov. 28, 1861, mustered in; Aug. 27, 1861, commissioned first lieutenant Co. F; Jan. 4, 1862, ordered to Fort Seward; May, 1862, ordered from Tybee Island; July 17, 1862, ordered on recruiting service in Rhode Island, and so borne until Feb. 21, 1863; Nov. 28, 1862, commissioned captain and mustered in as such to date Nov. 28, 1862. Transferred to Co. H, by order dated Jan. 5, 1863; Oct. 6, 1864, transferred to Co. B. Borne as in command of battalion from Dec. 1, 1864, until March, 1865; March, 1865, chief of artillery, Northern District, Department of the South, and so borne until June 18, 1865, when he was granted leave of absence for thirty days; April 21, 1865, commissioned major (never mustered). July, 1865, chief of artillery, Charleston District; Aug. 23, 1865, commissioned lieutenant-colonel (never mustered). Aug. 27, 1865, mustered out. Rev. Frederic Denison, in his History of the Third Rhode Island Heavy Artillery, says that Col. Colwell fired more shot and shell than any other one man during the Civil war.

Colonel Colwell earned the reputation of being a brave and gallant soldier and a true patriot. At the close of the war he again took up his residence at Pawtucket, where for a brief period he was overseer of the department of weaving in one of the mills at that point. Subsequently he accepted a similar position in a mill at Forestdale, R. I., and sustained such relation with the concern for approximately twenty years. Still later he made his home in Woonsocket, having resided there for some six or more years just prior to his death. Latterly his constitution gradually gave way with advancing years, the decline in a measure being due to his military service. His hearing was for a long time prior to his death defective and latterly he became almost entirely deaf, brought about largely by the almost constant artillery fire to which he was subjected for the two years of his service before Charleston.

The Colonel was wedded to Woonsocket and vicinity, for it was here a part at least of his boyhood and school days was passed; and he seemed to think much of the Grand Army headquarters there of Smith Post, for here he tarried, seemingly loving the associations its surroundings imparted.

Colonel Colwell, besides being a member of Smith Post, G. A. R., at Woonsocket, was identified with local bodies in different branches of the Masonic order. During his military service at Charleston, S. C., he became a member of Washington Lodge, No. 8, of that city. After the close of the war and his return North he became a member of Providence Royal Arch Chapter, No. 1, in that city. Still later he was made a Sir Knight of Woonsocket Commandery, No. 23, K. T. He was also a member of Slater Lodge, A. O. U. W., at Slatersville, Rhode Island.

Colonel Colwell married Louisa M. Arnold, daughter of Eber and Charlotte Arnold. Mrs. Colwell passed away Dec. 15, 1896, at the age of sixty-three years, and the Colonel survived her less than a year, dying at his home in Woonsocket Oct. 2, 1897, when sixty years old. They were the parents of two children, Frederick Augustus and Charlotte Mahala, the last named a school teacher and resident of Woonsocket.

FREDERICK AUGUSTUS COLWELL, son of the late Col. Augustus W. Colwell, was born Sept. 9, 1858, in Manville, R. I. He received his early education in the public schools, later taking a commercial course in the business college of Mowry & Goff, at Providence, after which he entered the employ of S. S. Foss, as bookkeeper, remaining with him three years. Following this experience he became bookkeeper for Frederick W. Jenks, who carried on a tailoring business, continuing with him for two years. He then started in business on his own account in Woonsocket, as a manufacturer of paper boxes, buying out the interest of Palmer Brown in 1881. The business was established in 1870. Mr. Colwell has continued in this line up to the present, and his factory is now one of the largest of the kind in the State. In 1894 he added to the original business a job printing plant, having purchased the business of C. C. Wheelock, and for the past fourteen years he has been steadily developing this branch, until he is now one of the most extensive job printers in northern Rhode Island. The enterprise of Mr. Colwell has shown in enlarging both the scope and extent of his business proves him to be a most progressive man, full of modern ideas and possessing energy for their successful execution. He is broad-minded and liberal in his views of all questions, and though he takes the deepest interest in his business he is in sympathy with the most up-to-date movements, especially those affecting the moral and mental advancement of the race. His tastes are domestic, and he leads an unostentatious life in spite of the fact that he is at the head of one of the important industries of his section.

Mr. Colwell married Miss Adeline Kingsley Horton, daughter of Otis H. Horton and sister of Charles H. Horton, of Woonsocket, a full history of whose family will be found elsewhere. Mrs. Colwell is a woman of intelligence and culture, and the home reflects the disposition of the family. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Colwell, namely: (1) Walter H.; (2) Arthur F., who died young; (3) Louise E., deceased; and (4) Ralph W. Mr. Colwell is a thirty-second degree Mason, an active member of Morning Star Lodge, Union Chapter, Woonsocket Council, Woonsocket Commandery, and Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine.

CHARLES D. ROBINSON, superintendent of the Crompton Mills, and one of the best known of the mill men of the Pawtuxet Valley, is a native of Maine, born in Denmark, Feb. 7, 1852, son of Nathan Robinson, also a native of that State.

Nathan Robinson was a large land owner, and throughout his life engaged in agricultural pursuits. His death occurred on his farm in his seventy-third year. He married Adaline J. Pingree, a native of the same section, a descendant of one of the oldest New England families, and a woman of many Christian virtues. Mr. and Mrs. Robinson were members of the Congregational Church. They were the parents of five children: Sarah P., Clara, Emma and Ella (twins), and Charles D.

Charles D. Robinson was born on the home farm, and received his education in the local district school and in the Fryburg Academy. He remained on the homestead until seventeen years of age, and then removed to Waltham, Mass., where he became engaged as a milk dealer, and where three years were spent. In 1872 he came to Rhode Island and found employment with the Lonsdale Company, engaging as a water carrier, and here he remained some time, learning much about the mill business. In 1878 he went to Manchester, N. H., accepting the position of overseer of spinning and dressing at the Amory mills and the Langdon Corporation, where he continued for a period of fifteen years. His present position, which he accepted in 1893, is that of superintendent of the Crompton mills, where about seven hundred hands are employed, all of whom have the greatest respect for Mr. Robinson. He is an able and efficient workman himself, and a man of much executive ability. He makes his home in Crompton and has been active in public matters, taking a deep interest in all educational movements. He served as a member of the board of school trustees, and was chairman of the building committee that erected the fine $25,000 school buildings in Crompton, the erection of which is greatly due to Mr. Robinson's enterprise and public spirit. He is a stanch Republican in political matters, although he has never cared for public office. Devoted to his home and family, he is very domestic in his tastes, and belongs to no societies. He and his wife are members of St. Philip's Episcopal Church, in which he is junior warden, and he has taken an active part in church work, as has also Mrs. Robinson.

Mr. Robinson was married at Lonsdale, to Miss Ida A. Chase, born at Worcester, Mass., daughter of the late Horace P. Chase, and a descendant of one of Rhode Island's oldest and most highly honored families. To this union have been born: a child who died in infancy; and Everett F., a student, residing at home.

SAMUEL S. AND STEPHEN D. BROWN, highly respected citizens and successful farmers of the town of Smithfield, are descendants of a family that has long been settled in Rhode Island.

Joshua Brown, their grandfather, was a son of Phenix Brown, and was a farmer by occupation.

He resided nearly all of his life in the town of North Kingstown, a few years before his death removing to the town of Exeter, where he died at the advanced age of ninety-five years. The maiden name of his wife was Vaughn, and they had the following children: Daniel, Charles, Martha, Lizzie and Henry.

Daniel Brown, father of Samuel S. and Stephen D. Brown, was born in North Kingstown, and there resided until 1841, when he removed to Newport, where he remained three years, at the end of that time returning to the place of his nativity. For many years he conducted a store at Wickford, but through misplaced confidence met with business reverses. He died Jan. 2, 1853, aged sixty-six years, and was buried in the town of Exeter. He represented the town of Kingstown in the Legislature. Daniel Brown married Dorcas Arnold, of North Kingstown, daughter of Edmund Arnold, and she survived her husband for many years, dying at the home of her sons in Smithfield, Jan. 28, 1887, aged ninety years; she was buried in a private yard on their farm. The following children were born to Daniel and Dorcas Brown: Harriet, born Nov. 29, 1818, married Daniel Spink, and died in North Kingstown; Edmund Arnold, born May 19, 1820, was a merchant, resided at Wickford, later at East Greenwich, and died in Cranston; Betsey Ann, born Nov. 30, 1823, married Thomas Franklin, and died in North Kingstown; Mary Ellen, born Dec. 27, 1825, married Rhodes Franklin, and died in Cumberland; Amy Ann, born Oct. 3, 1830, married Samuel Greene and died in Lincoln; Samuel S. was born Jan. 7, 1833, and Stephen D., Jan. 1, 1835.

Samuel S. Brown was born in North Kingstown, and received his education in the district schools of Wickford and Newport, and at the Providence Conference Seminary, now East Greenwich Academy, at East Greenwich. Soon after leaving school he taught for one term at North Kingstown. He remained in his native town until 1854, when, in company with his brother Stephen D. and their uncle, he removed to Attleboro, Mass., to the Caleb M. Payne farm, which they rented. Their capital at this time was a small sum of borrowed money. On this farm they remained for four years, two years of which time they conducted a milk route in Valley Falls. They were successful in their business, and by hard work and frugality got money to make a payment on the Robert Harris farm, in Smithfield, going heavily into debt for the balance. To that place they removed in 1858, and by the exercise of hard work and economy discharged their indebtedness, and successfully conducted the farm until 1899, when, because of their advancing years, they retired from the more active farm work, and leased the place. On this farm there is a cranberry bog which in past years has been quite profitable, and they for years had a milk route in the village of Georgiaville.

Samuel S. Brown

AT AGE OF TWENTY-ONE

Stephen D Brown

In 1870, Samuel S. Brown was married to Mrs. Ann W. Thompson, of Boston, Mass., who died May 1, 1903, aged seventy-five years. Mr. Brown is a Democrat in political faith, and has served as assessor of taxes in Smithfield. He has often been the choice of his party for public office, but as the opposition party is much in the majority he has met with defeat, his opponents winning, however, with much reduced majorities.

Stephen D. Brown received his education in the district schools of Newport and Wickford. He has always been associated with his brother in business operations, and about the time the brothers leased the farm, in 1899, he purchased a farm adjoining, known as the William Suthurst place, where they now live. Stephen D. Brown has never married.

The Brown brothers are self-made men, have never been hard-working, and are strictly temperate, never having used tobacco or liquor in any form. They are well to do, and command the respect of all in the community. While not members of any religious organization, they are Christian gentlemen and contribute to the cause.

COFFIN. The name Coffin is at once ancient and honorable in Old England and in New England. The family is of Norman origin, as the first of the name known in England was Sir Richard Coffin, Knight, who accompanied William the Conqueror in his invasion of Britain in 1066.

Peter Coffin, a descendant of Sir Richard, married Joan or Joanna Thember (or Thimbre), and died in 1628 in England. His widow with son Tristram and daughters, Mary and Eunice, came to New England in 1642, stopping in Salisbury. From that point they moved to Haverhill and Newbury, and the Widow Coffin died at Nantucket in May, 1661.

(I) Tristram Coffin was of Butlers Parish, Brixton, Devonshire, England. He accompanied his widowed mother to New England. He married Dionis, daughter of Robert Stevens. He was one of the Salisbury men who purchased of Thomas Mayhew nineteen-twentieths of the Island of Nantucket, whither he removed in 1660, with his wife and some of his children, and where he died. Through his sons, James and Steven, have descended the Nantucket branch of the New England Coffins. Of the sons, James, James (2), Nathaniel, John, Joseph, Jonathan were all born in Nantucket, and there all who reached mature years married and lived. Hon. Peter Coffin, son of Tristram, who for a period was a resident of Nantucket, later removed to New Hampshire, and rose to be chief justice of the Superior court of that State. The distinguished loyalist, Gen. John Coffin, and Admiral Sir Isaac Coffin, Baronet, descended from Tristram (2) through James, Nathaniel, William and Nathaniel (Harvard University, 1744), of New York. Dr. Nathaniel Coffin, a distinguished physician of Portland, Maine, and his son of the same name and even greater distinction, sprang from the same stock. Here in Rhode Island near the old home town of the Nantucket Coffins, and from there to the town of Johnston, came the branch of the family of which the late Edward B. Coffin was the head, and it is now represented (as heads of families) by his sons, Charles H. and James E. Coffin, leading and substantial citizens. Edward B. Coffin descended from the American ancestor, Tristram Coffin, through

(II) James and Mary (Swain).

(III) Nathaniel and Demeris (Gayer).

(IV) Benjamin and Jeddiah (Hussey).

(V) Micajah and Abigail (Coleman).

(VI) Gilbert and Phebe (Barnard).

(VII) Paul Coffin, son of Gilbert, married May 29, 1806, Priscilla Gardner, born Dec. 22, 1785, on the Island of Nantucket, daughter of Nathan, and granddaughter of Abel Gardner and his wife Priscilla (Coffin) Gardner. She was a direct descendant of Tristram Coffin through James and James, Jr. To Paul and Priscilla Coffin were born nine children: (1) Edward Bunker. (2) Lydia, born April 12, 1809, died June 23, 1810. (3) Lydia (2), born April 10, 1811, died unmarried in March, 1889. (4) William G., born Dec. 14, 1812, died March 19, 1886, in Johnston, R. I., where he was for some years a resident and associated with his brother Edward B. in farming. (5) Ann, born Feb. 11, 1814, married Edward C. Swain, mentioned elsewhere. (6) Mary, born Dec. 4, 1815, married James Nichols, and had children, Josephine (who married Abel K. Brower, and resided at St. Paul, Nebr.), James C. (who died a soldier in the war of the Rebellion), Charles A. (a resident of Nebraska), Mary C. (who married Sylvester Brower) and Sarah. (7) Phebe, born May 20, 1821, died July 30, 1877. (8) Sarah R., born Oct. 4, 1823, died Oct. 18, 1851. (9) Elizabeth became the wife of Capt. Ezra Gifford. Paul Coffin, the father, died in Providence Sept. 15, 1863, aged seventy-nine years, and his wife Priscilla died Aug. 2, 1873. He was a farmer and about the year 1814 removed from Nantucket to Rhode Island, and with the exception of a few years had his home there the rest of his life. He was a man of thrift and much enterprise.

(VIII) EDWARD BUNKER COFFIN, born in Nantucket March 31, 1807, in his youth attended such schools as the various communities in which the family resided afforded. With the family he came to Rhode Island and settled first in Coventry, later locating at Franklin, Mass., where he was employed at boatbuilding. Returning to Rhode Island the family located at Cranston (now a part of Providence) and a short time later removed to the State of Vermont. In 1850 Mr. Coffin bought the property in Johnston where he passed the remainder of his career. The tract of land consisted of seventy-five acres of as bleak a wilderness as existed in all Rhode Island. Stone, underbrush and briars abounded, and with the determination characteristic of the man he, with his faithful wife, began the work of not only creating a home, but laid the foundation for that which is to-day one of the most productive, valuable and beautiful farms in Rhode Island. No written account can give any conception of the toil, perseverance and tenacious effort necessary to the accomplishment of the results attained in the development of this farm, especially since the greater portion of the clearing and cultivation was performed before the advent of modern methods which reduce the labor of the farm. Mr. Coffin's reputation was not confined to that of the model farmer, for he was everywhere highly regarded, his honesty and integrity never questioned, and his judgment in affairs much sought and valued. While not a man of much literary training, his education being largely self-acquired and therefore the more deeply rooted, he was always abreast of the times, and was sincerely though quietly interested in matters which affected his community, State and country. The old stone house on the farm was erected by him in 1852, soon after his purchase of land in Johnston, and it stands a monument to his thrift and stability. He died after a long life of activity, April 20, 1890. His wife, Mary (daughter of Thomas and Phebe (Thompson) Greene, of Smithfield, R. I.), to whom a large share of credit for their success is due, died June 28, 1874, aged fifty-six years, four months, five days. They were the parents of two sons, Charles Henry and James Edward.

(IX) CHARLES HENRY COFFIN, eldest son of Edward B. Coffin, is one of the best known and most highly respected citizens of the town of Johnston. He is, with his brother James E. Coffin, a proprietor of the well-known Coffin farm immediately west of the city of Providence. Mr. Coffin was born in Cranston Aug. 11, 1843. Early in his boyhood his father removed to Vermont for a short period, and with that exception his entire life has been spent in Rhode Island, and nearly or quite all of it in Johnston, to which town his father removed when the son was but a lad. He attended the schools of Johnston and finished at that well-known institution conducted by Jencks Mowry. He learned farming under the able tutorage of his father, and has made it a profession. He assisted in the clearing and creation of the model farm on which he now resides, and enjoys the results of his labor and learning.

Charles H. Coffin married Nov. 22, 1876, Eliza Greene, daughter of Job and Frances (Perkins) Greene. To Mr. and Mrs. Coffin were born two children: Charles Ernest, born Aug. 28, 1877, married Edith May Waterman, daughter of Stephen B. Waterman, of Johnston, and has one son, Harold Edward, born Nov. 14, 1904; and Ethel May, born April 28, 1879, is a graduate of the Johnston common school, Providence high school and Bryant & Stratton's Business College.

In political matters Mr. Coffin is a Republican.

though his preference is usually given to the men regardless of party. He has held himself aloof from partisan entanglements and obligations, and has always exercised his right of franchise for the man whom he considered best entitled to the office. He was elected and served four years on the Johnston town council, and his public career is a clean and honorable one. Both he and Mrs. Coffin are members of the Plainfield Street Free Baptist Church, in which he is president of both the board of trustees and the association.

(IX) JAMES EDWARD COFFIN, second son of Edward Bunker Coffin, and like his brother a well-known and highly respected citizen, was born April 20, 1855, at the homestead farm in Johnston. His education was acquired in the district schools and at the Jencks Mowry Academy. His youth was one of labor, in assisting his father and brother with the clearing and cultivation of the farm, and he early learned that any success comes as the result of hard labor. He married Feb. 6, 1877, Mary E. Greene, daughter of Rowland R. and Harriet (Parmenter) Greene. To Mr. and Mrs. Coffin have been born two children: Hattie M., who died young; and Lillian M., a graduate of Providence high school and Brown University (class of 1904). Mr. Coffin and family are members of the Plainfield Street Free Baptist Church, and have been active in church work, Mr. Coffin being one of the deacons and president of the Sabbath-school. He is independent in his stand on local political questions, with a leaning toward Republican principles in national elections. He is associated with his brother, Charles H., in a general farming and dairy business, and their enterprise is accounted one of the best conducted of the many of its kind in New England. It is scarcely necessary to state that the Coffin brothers bear the good-will, esteem and respect of a wide acquaintance, and are regarded as safe and conservative in business matters, while their private lives are clean and above reproach.

WHITE. When the little band of emigrants on the "Mayflower" assembled in the ship's cabin on that eventful November day to draw up the compact under which they proposed to live together in their new home, the eleventh name signed to the document was that of William White, and his descendants are to this time numbered among the substantial and influential residents of New England.

(I) William White, the emigrant ancestor, was twice married, first to Anna Fuller, and second to Susanna Tilley. The family history in epitome is expressed in the names of the children, for the eldest, Resolved, was so christened in token of the determination of his parents to leave England for a new home in the wilderness. The boy was presumably about six years of age when he was taken onto the "Mayflower." In the latter part of November, 1620, when the colonists were still lingering on the vessel prior to the final disembarking, a second son was born, the first birth to English parents in New England, and because of their long voyage he was named Peregrine.

(II) Resolved White was born in England about 1614. He married Judith, daughter of William Vassal, of Scituate, Mass., and settled first in that town on land granted him there. In 1662 he removed to Marshfield, where he owned two farms, one on North and one on South river brook; while in 1679-80, he was a freeman of Salem. Children were born to William and Judith White as follows: William, 1642; John, 1644; Samuel, 1646; Resolved; and Anna, 1649.

(III) Samuel White settled in Dorchester, Mass., where he reared a family.

(IV) William White, born in 1690, in Dorchester, Mass., located in Dartmouth, in that same State. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John and Hannah (Hathaway) Cadman, of Dartmouth, and ten children were born to them: Sarah, William, George, Roger, Christopher, Elizabeth, Oliver, Abner, Thomas and Susanna.

(V) Christopher White married in 1739, Elizabeth Thurston, daughter of Edward, born Sept. 29, 1719. Their issue, of Little Compton town record, was: Sarah, born Sept. 28, 1740; Thurston, Oct. 28, 1741; William, May 26, 1743; Mary, May 26, 1744; Noah, March 26, 1745; Peregrine, Nov. 19, 1748 (who died in September, 1832); Susanna, Aug. 11, 1751; Elizabeth, Feb. 27, 1753; Pardon, 1755 (deceased in July, 1789); Thomas, 1757 (who died Dec. 7, 1841); and Ruth.

(VI) Noah White, was married March 16, 1776, to Rhoda Shaw, daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth Shaw. The town records of Little Compton give their two eldest children as William, born July 15, 1777, and Elizabeth, March 28, 1779; while in addition there appear in the Newport records the following: Susanna, Feb. 9, 1782; Simeon, March 16, 1785; Nicholas, Oct. 7, 1786; Pardon, Feb. 17, 1788; and Roby, June 21, 1795.

(VII) William White, eldest son of Noah, was a blacksmith by trade and conducted a shop in Newport for many years. He died in that city Feb. 22, 1855. Twice married, the name of his first wife is not known, but their children were: Adelaide, who died in Providence, unmarried; Edmund, who was lost on his return trip from Cuba, and was supposed to have been captured by pirates. William White married second Sarah, daughter of Robert Lawton. She was born in Newport in 1776, and died there five years after her husband, March 15, 1860. Their issue was: William J. C.; George L., who married a Miss Hall; Albert, who married a Miss Barker; Mary, who married a Mr. Chapell; and Fanny, who became Mrs. Huddy.

(VIII) William James Clarke White was born in Newport in 1805. He took up his father's occupation and under the latter's tutelage became a very skillful and capable worker in various mechanical lines. With his brothers, George and Albert, he ran a shop in Newport, for many years, during a large part of which time he followed a custom then common for mechanics, and in the winter went south, work being more easily obtained there at that season. His southern location was in Mobile, Ala., and his death occurred there in 1842. Mr. White married Miss Emily Thurston, daughter of William Carter and Patience (Young) Thurston, and the granddaughter of Samuel Young, who fought in the Revolution. Mrs. White outlived her husband, and passed away in Newport June 5, 1900, leaving the following children: Emily A., of Newport, widow of the late Edwin Anthony, of Somerset, Mass.; Edmund, mentioned below; Amanda, wife of George H. Lovejoy, a cabinet maker of Newport; and Charles C., mentioned below.

(IX) EDMUND WHITE was born in Newport, Dec. 5, 1834. Up to the age of fourteen he went to school and received as good an education as the public schools of that city then afforded. In 1848 he took a position as clerk in the well-known tailoring establishment of D. J. & N. H. Gould, which was originally founded by their grandfather, and in which was made the uniform worn by Gen. Nathanael Greene when he joined Washington's army. With this firm Mr. White remained ten years and acquired a good knowledge of the business, but in 1858 he abandoned old scenes and occupations alike and going to California spent three years there engaged in mining. On returning to the east in 1861, he went to New York City, secured a position as salesman with the prominent firm of H. B. Claflin & Co., who were located at the junction of Church, Worth and West Broadway, and remained with them for over thirty-eight years. But in 1901 Mr. White determined to seek release from the business responsibilities he had been carrying on for so many years, and retiring from his position with the Claflin Company returned to Newport to reside, and there he is now living in retirement.

Mr. White has never married. In his political views he has always held to the teachings of the old school Democrats, but he has had neither time nor inclination to play any active part in practical politics. In religion he affiliates with the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Newport, but is not a communicant.

(IX) CHARLES C. WHITE was born in Newport Feb. 8, 1838, and passed his boyhood days in his native place. His early advantages for education were limited, but he has made the most of the broader opportunities afforded by experience, and he takes an active interest in men and affairs which places him among the well-informed and intelligent men of the day. He learned the trade of upholsterer J. L. and G. A. Hazard on Church street, Newport, and after finishing his apprenticeship engaged as a journeyman, being employed in the fitting up of steamboats and similar work with the Old Colony Steamboat Company. Later he took up carpentering and joining, which he continued to follow for some time, and finally commenced to build cottages for himself, along the west shore of Narragansett Bay at Middletown. He also built a home at Newport. In 1892 Mr. White accepted the position of station agent of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company at Middletown, and for thirteen years he faithfully performed the duties of that incumbency, giving universal satisfaction. He resigned in 1905, and has since lived retired, giving all his attention to his summer cottages near the station. Mr. White is a man of very genial disposition, and he is popular as well as respected by all who know him, his high moral character having won him the confidence and esteem of friends and business associates alike. He is passing his declining years in comfort at his home in Middletown, and being a man of domestic tastes enjoys the fruits of his industry in former years in quiet contentment. Mr. White is a Republican in political sentiment, but has never been active in such matters.

On Aug. 13, 1863, at Newport, Mr. White was united in marriage with Ruth A. Barker, daughter of Darius and Julia J. Barker, and a descendant of the old Barker family of Middletown, mentioned elsewhere in these volumes. Mrs. White is a devout Christian woman, a member of Emmanuel Episcopal Church of Newport. To this union have been born the following named children: Etta M., died when three years old. Benjamin T. is mentioned below. Charles Frederick, an electrician of Newport, married Lula Chase, of Middletown. George E., who is in the government employ as clerk at the torpedo station at Newport, married Sarah Brown, of Portsmouth. Etta M. (2), married James E. Kesson, and they live in Newport.

(X) BENJAMIN TILLEY WHITE, son of Charles C. and Ruth A. (Barker) White, born March 30, 1876, in Newport, received his early educational training in the public schools of that place, Somerset, Mass., and Middletown, R. I. Leaving school at the age of seventeen years, he spent the following year at work on the home farm in Middletown, and then became apprenticed to the mason's trade, under Henry W. Wilson, in whose employ he remained for about seven years. In 1894, in partnership with Herbert Wilson, the son of his former employer, under the firm name of White & Wilson, he engaged in the mason business, and this firm continued for about four years, when Mr. White branched out for himself, and has continued alone ever since, meeting with well deserved success. Prominent among the buildings constructed by Mr. White may be mentioned the J. Alton Barker block on Thames street. Mr. White is energetic and progressive, and employs the assistance of an average of ten men. Fraternally, he is connected with St. Paul's Lodge, No. 14, A. F. & A. M., and the Weenat Shassit Tribe, No. 6, I. O. R. M., of Newport. In political faith Mr. White is a Republican, but finds little time to devote to political matters. He and his wife are members of Holy Cross Episcopal Church, of Middletown, in which he has served as a member of the board of vestrymen.

On June 27, 1889, Mr. White was united in marriage to Miss Mabel Coggeshall, daughter of William E. and Susan (Huddy) Coggeshall, of Middletown (a record of which family appears elsewhere in this work). Mr. White erected his present modern home on Whitehall street, Newport, and there the many friends of himself and wife are always welcome.

EVERETT B. SHERMAN. About one mile north of the village of Harrisville, town of Burrillville, is located the Sherman stock farm, conducted by the gentleman whose name heads this sketch. This estate, one of the largest as well as one of the most pleasantly situated farm properties in this section of Rhode Island, was established by the late Sumner Sherman, and has been continued with the same degree of enterprise and success by his son.

Everett B. Sherman descends from one of the early settled families of his native State, tracing his ancestry to Hon. Phillip Sherman, who was one of the purchasers of Aquidneck, now Rhode Island, in 1638, the generations being as follows:

(I) Hon. Phillip Sherman.

(II) Edmund Sherman, son of Hon. Phillip, was born about 1641, and resided at Dartmouth, Mass., he being a large landholder in that town and at Portsmouth, R. I. He died about 1719. His wife, Dorcas, bore him children as follows: Elkanah, Nathaniel, Nathan, David, Lydia, Samuel, Elnathan and Joseph.

(III) Elkanah Sherman, son of Edmund, born at Dartmouth, Mass., May 7, 1674, married (first) Elizabeth Manchester, and (second) Margaret Pitts. He resided at Dartmouth, and later removed to South Kingstown, R. I., where he died. His children by the first marriage were: Elkanah, John, George, Ruth, Content, Peter and Elizabeth.

(IV) Elkanah Sherman (2), son of Elkanah, was born in South Kingstown, and was a farmer by occupation. He married Margaret Suel, or Sewall, in Smithfield, and settled on a farm in what is now Burrillville, located in the northern part of the town, near the Massachusetts line. There he resided the rest of his life. His children were: Daniel, Asahel, Elkanah, George, Phebe, Catherine, and Alpha.

(V) Asahel Sherman, son of Elkanah (2), and great-grandfather of Everett B., was born March 12, 1758, and followed the occupation of farmer on the homestead in Burrillville. He died June 21, 1830. He married Rowena Ballou, born June 23, 1773, and died Oct. 17, 1859, daughter of Eleazer and Phebe (Lapham) Ballou of Glocester, now Burrillville, and the children born to this union were as follows: Phebe, born Dec. 1, 1788, married George Emerson, a farmer, and removed to Saylesville, Guernsey Co., Ohio, where she died March 13, 1874; Dutce, born Nov. 27, 1790, who married Nancy Emerson, located first at Saylesville, Ohio, later removing to Isabel, Edgar Co., Ill., where he died Feb. 22, 1873; Wilbur, born Jan. 12, 1793, died Feb. 17, 1817; Prusia, born Feb. 27, 1795, married William Chase and resided at South Douglas, Mass., where she died May 25, 1882; Katherine, born Oct. 8, 1796, married John Emerson, a farmer, and they removed to Saylesville, Ohio, where she died July 25, 1876; Alpha, born Feb. 23, 1799, married Benjamin Whiting, a farmer, and died in Douglas, Mass., May 6, 1881; Syria, born Dec. 21 (or 23), 1801; Asahel, born May 2, 1804, married Eunice Walker, and resided at Douglas, Mass., where he followed the trade of a carpenter; Rowena, born Nov. 25, 1806, married Norris Yates, a merchant, and resided at East Douglas, Mass., and there died; Jesse B., born Dec., 1809, who married Mary Jane Kelton, was a stone mason by trade, and died in Douglas, Mass., Oct. 1, 1893; Judson, born Feb. 27, 1812, married Bathsheba Thayer, and was a farmer of Burrillville, where he died Oct. 1, 1881; Smith, born Feb. 26, 1815, married (first) Elsa Southwick, (second) Wealthy Robbins, and resided nearly all of his life at Douglas, Mass., engaged in agricultural pursuits, although at the time of his death he was living at Fall River, Mass.; and Stephen L., born April 10, 1818, married Abby W. Olney, and was a clothing and carpet merchant, at Providence, where he died Feb. 20, 1874.

Sumner Sherman

Everett B. Shuman.

(VI) Capt. Syria Sherman, son of Asahel, was born Dec. 23 (or 21), 1801, on the farm above mentioned, and when a young man learned the trade of mason. He engaged in the mason contracting business, carrying on extensive operations in his line for that day. He had a number of large contracts, including the erection of several mills in Burrillville, and the first hospital erected in the city of Worcester, Mass. In 1849 he and his brother Stephen L., erected the first mill at Graniteville, they building it for the purpose of renting. Syria Sherman did the labor with a few assistants, his brother assisting with capital. In 1852 it was destroyed by fire, but another mill was immediately built, and the rest of Syria Sherman's life was spent in the management of the mill property and his private interests. His death occurred May 5, 1867, he being buried in the cemetery at Harrisville. The mill property was again destroyed by fire in 1879, and the ruins remained in possession of the family until 1882, when they were sold to William A. Inman. Syria Sherman was first a Whig, and later a Republican, but never cared for public office. He attended the Free Baptist Church, and was a liberal contributor to its support. His title of captain was given him because of his holding that office in the local militia. He was a director in the First National Bank of Smithfield, at Slatersville, for many years previous to his death. Mr. Sherman accumulated a large property and ranked among the substantial and influential men of the town. He and his brother Jesse erected, in 1839, the stone house, the present home of Leander Sherman.

Syria Sherman was married Feb. 14, 1828, to Maria, born Feb. 13, 1809, daughter of Captain John and Roba (Smith) Wood; she died April 2, 1864, the mother of the following children: (1) Sumner was born April 17, 1830. (2) Laura, born Dec., 1834, died April 14, 1838. (3) Leander and (4) Maria Lamanda, twins, were born Sept. 20, 1840. Leander is a resident of Burrillville, being retired from active business. He married (first) Abby Dean, a native of Woonsocket, and after her death, Mary L. Taft, of Burrillville. The children born to the first marriage were: Fred and Addison, who both died in infancy; Emma, the wife of James Sykes, of Harrisville, who has one child, Gladys; Viola, who married William E. Fitz, and has two children, Ernest and Harold; and Eva, the widow of Cassius Eddy, residing in Providence. Maria Lamanda Sherman, twin of Leander, married Smith B. Mowry, of Burrillville, and they have two children: Stella Louise, wife of Reuben Sykes, of Manton, R. I.; and Clarence Eugene, who married Helena A. Allison, and resides in Burrillville.

(VII) Sumner Sherman, eldest child of Captain Syria, was born April 17, 1830, in Burrillville, and acquired the trade of mason and stone cutter by working with his father. He received only a district school education and for a time after leaving school was employed as a clerk in the clothing store of his uncle, Stephen L., at Providence. He resided at home until his marriage, after which he purchased the Othniel Young farm of 200 acres near Harrisville, and there resided the rest of his life. From time to time he acquired other land in the town, by purchasing wood lots and cutting off the timber, and at the time of his death was the largest landholder in the town, owning about 1,200 acres. He erected all the buildings on his farm, part of the large barn being erected in 1876, and later the addition much larger than the original structure. Sumner Sherman carried on an extensive farming business and was also largely engaged in slaughtering cattle for the local markets. Some years previous to his death he turned the active management of the farm over to his son, Everett B., the father from that time on devoting his attention to the management of his extensive private affairs.

Sumner Sherman was a stanch Republican in politics, and, although he never sought public office, he served for some time as school trustee, and for twenty-five years as highway commissioner, being much interested in the keeping of the roads in good repair. The highways in this section under his management were kept in splendid condition, he expending much of his private means for the purpose. He was reckoned a shrewd, careful business man, one who was plain and outspoken, strong in his likes and dislikes, thoroughly detesting shams of any kind, and a man whose word was as good as his bond. He was one of the most successful citizens of his community, and at the time of his death, Sept. 24, 1899, he left a large estate which has been greatly improved and increased by the judicious management of his son. Sumner Sherman was buried at Harrisville.

Mr. Sherman was married April 27, 1856, in Thompson, Conn., to Lucinda Mary Mowry, born Jan. 21, 1833, in Burrillville, daughter of Col. Ezekiel and Julianna (Wheelock) Mowry. Mrs. Sherman resides at the homestead with her son. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sherman: Lillian Maria, Oct. 22, 1858, died March 26, 1874; and Everett Burnside Sherman, Jan. 17, 1862.

(VIII) Everett Burnside Sherman, son of Sumner, was born Jan. 17, 1862, on the farm on which he now resides, and attended the public schools of Burrillville and the Mowry & Goff English and Classical school at Providence, graduating from the latter in 1880. In the course of time he relieved his father of the management of the farm, which he has since so successfully conducted. Mr. Sherman was one of the first to introduce Ayrshire cattle in Burrillville, and he has ever since been a dealer in that strain of stock. In former years, he bred and dealt in the Hambletonian breed of horses. For over twenty-five years he operated a retail milk route in Harrisville and Pascoag, but for several years has engaged in wholesaling this product, keeping for the purpose an average of seventy-five head of blooded cattle. In his political belief he is a Republican, and succeeded his father as school trustee, also serving as member of the town council. He is one of the charter members of Burrillville Grange, No. 4, and is serving as master thereof at the present time. He is a member of the Ayrshire Breeders Association of America, and a member of the executive committee of that organization. Several years ago Mr. Sherman entered his herd in a competitive test conducted by the officials of the various experiment stations in the United States for purity and quality of milk, and with his herd won first prize. Mr. Sherman is also a member of the corporation of the Woonsocket Agricultural Society and the Uxbridge Agricultural Society. Like his father he is a straightforward business man, strictly honest in all his dealings with his fellow men.

Mr. Everett Burnside Sherman was married, in 1886, to Miss Alice M. White, born May 7, 1865, in Uxbridge, Mass., daughter of Charles White, and she died Dec. 10, 1892, leaving these children: Lillian Maria, born Jan. 12, 1887, a graduate of the Burrillville schools, is a student at the Rhode Island Normal school; Waldo Leonard, born Jan. 16, 1889, a graduate of the Burrillville schools, is now a student at the Worcester Academy; and Evelyn Louise, born June 22, 1891.

HON. PHILIP HERBERT WILBOUR, State Senator and one of Little Compton's best known business men and farmers, is a native of that town, born on the old Wilbour homestead Aug. 27, 1856.

The Wilbour (Wilbor and Wilbur) family in this country begins with the history of Samuel Wildbore, of Boston, Mass. He and his wife Ann were admitted to the church there Dec. 1, 1633, the date of the first record of him. His wife was the daughter of Thomas Bradford, of Dorchester, in the southern part of the County of York, England. He had a second wife, Elizabeth, prior to Nov. 29, 1645. It is evident, said one writer, that Mr. Wildbore had four sons: Samuel, William, Joseph and Shadrach, and probably a daughter, Sarah.

Mr. Wildbore was made a freeman of Boston in 1634. He bought largely in the town of Taunton, Mass., and removed thither with his family. While in Taunton he, with seventeen others, embraced what was called "the dangerous doctrines of Cotton and Wheelright," for which he was banished from the province in November, 1637. He with seventeen others fled to Providence, and, being advised by Roger Williams, they purchased of the Indians the Island of Aquidneck, to which place Mr. Wildbore removed his family in 1638. These eighteen persons formed a colony by solemn compact March 7, 1638. Mr. Wildbore returned to Boston probably in 1645, that being the date of his wife Elizabeth's admission into the church at Boston. Mr. Wildbore had a home in Boston and also one in Taunton. He with some associates built and put in operation an iron furnace in Taunton (now Raynham), the first that was built in New England. He was a man of wealth for his time, and evidently of a very respectable standing in society, exerting a wide influence in each of the places where he dwelt. He died Sept. 29, 1656. Of his sons, Samuel and William settled in Portsmouth, R. I., Joseph located on land in Taunton, and Shadrach settled in that part of Taunton which became Raynham.

(II) William Wilbor, son of the first settler, located in Portsmouth, R. I., on lands of his father. The records show that he received in 1654 a deed of ten acres from Samuel Wilbur, Sr., of Taunton. He was deputy in 1678. He died in 1710. His children were: Mary; John; Joseph; Thomas; William; Martha; Samuel; Daniel; John, and Benjamin.

(III) Samuel Wilbor, son of William, married Mary Potter, daughter of Nathaniel and Elizabeth Potter, and was of Little Compton, R. I. Mr. Wilbor died in 1740. Their children were: Martha, born Oct. 22, 1690; Samuel, Nov. 7, 1692; William, Jan. 6, 1695; Mary, Oct. 9, 1697; Joanna, June 8, 1700; Thankful, June 8, 1700; Elizabeth, Dec. 23, 1702; Thomas, Dec. 2, 1704; Abial, May 27, 1707; Hannah, Feb. 9, 1709; and Isaac, Aug. 24, 1712.

(IV) William Wilbour, son of Samuel, born Jan. 6, 1695, married Esther Burgess, born in 1696. He was a landowner and made farming his occupation. He died at Little Compton in September, 1774. Their children of Little Compton record were: Thomas, born May 1, 1718; Mary, Sept. 7, 1719; Esther, May 8, 1721; Lydia, April 16, 1723; Samuel, Dec. 10, 1725; William, July 24, 1727; Daniel, June 1, 1729; Charles, Aug. 22, 1732; Esther (2), Nov. 18, 1733 (died March 17, 1810); Lydia (2), Nov. 2, 1735; Deborah, Aug. 29, 1738; and Clarke, Nov. 1, 1742.

(V) Charles Wilbour, son of William and Esther, was born in Little Compton Aug. 22, 1732, and in his native place he made his home all his life. He followed farming near the Sakonnet river; where he had a large tract of land which is still in the possession of the family. He married (first) in 1757, Hannah Borden, and (second) March 23, 1780, Hannah Sisson. To the first marriage children as follows were born: Ruth, Aug. 30, 1757; Borden, Dec. 12, 1759; Hannah, Dec. 2, 1761; Isaac, April 25, 1763; Phebe, Dec. 28, 1764; Charles, Aug. 22, 1766; Lydia, Oct. 3, 1768; Edith, March 2, 1771 (died Sept. 30, 1839); Rachel, Nov. 29, 1772; Elizabeth, Aug. 2, 1774; and Innocent, Nov. 22, 1777, (died March 12, 1856). To the second marriage was born but one child, Mary, Sept. 8, 1781.

(VI) Hon. Isaac Wilbour, son of Charles and Hannah (Borden), born April 25, 1763, was, during his lifetime, one of the town's most influential and honorable citizens. He resided on the farm where his great-grandson, Philip H. Wilbour, now makes his home. He filled many important offices in the town and State. He was a member of Congress from 1807 to 1809, and the following year was elected lieutenant governor of the State. He died on his home farm in 1837, and was buried in the Sakonnet cemetery on the West Main Road. At Dartmouth, Mass., May 11, 1786, by William Davis, justice of the peace, Isaac Wilbour was married to Hannah Taber, daughter of Capt. Philip Taber. She was born in 1767 and died in 1836. Their children were: Taber, born May 12, 1788; Eliphalet, March 12, 1790; Hannah Borden, Feb. 4, 1793; Philip, July 12, 1795; Patience Taber, May 27, 1798; and Sarah Sowle, May 9, 1804.

(VII) Philip Wilbour, son of Hon. Isaac, was born on the home farm July 12, 1795. He made farming his life-long occupation, cultivating a tract of 125 acres of land which is still in the possession of the family. He died Jan. 29, 1848. On Dec. 8, 1823, he was married by the Rev. Stephen Gano, to Eliza Penelope Champlin, daughter of Daniel Champlin, of Exeter, R. I. She was born in 1802, and died in 1848, and was buried in the family plot in the Sakonnet cemetery. Two children were born of this union: Caroline Elizabeth, born May 8, 1825, who married Reuben Corey, and died in New Bedford; Isaac Champlin, born May 11, 1831.

(VIII) Isaac Champlin Wilbour, son of Philip, was born May 11, 1831, and he obtained his education in the local schools of his native town. He grew up on the home farm, and by the purchase of adjoining tracts of land, at one time had 260 acres. He was the pioneer in this section to engage in the poultry business, and during his active life was the largest poultry farmer in America, if not in the world. He kept upwards of 5,000 hens, and shipped eggs all over the United States and Canada, as well as Europe and even to Australia for breeding purposes. His yearly shipments of eggs averaged 150,000 dozen. He was a man of progressive ideas, and with the energy to put them into practice. His business was very successful, and he made many improvements on the farm and in the house. With the co-operation of his cousin, Charles Edwin Wilbour, he built in what is known as the Sakonnet cemetery, a beautiful chapel with a chime of bells imported from Belgium—a memorial to the Wilbour family. Within may be seen marble tablets bearing the names and dates of birth and death of many members of the family from Hon. Isaac Wilbour down to the present. In politics Mr. Wilbour was first a Whig and later a Republican, but he cared nothing for the holding of public office. He died in September, 1899, and was laid to rest in the Sakonnet cemetery. His wife, Deborah Josephine Wilbour, was born July 13, 1834, daughter of Benjamin and Abby M. (Taylor) Wilbour and granddaughter of Daniel Wilbour and Simeon Taylor. She died in 1865, beloved by all who knew her. Their children were: Philip Herbert, born Aug. 27, 1856; Caroline Corey, who died young; Elizabeth Champlin, who died young; and Deborah Josephine, who married Frederick Marcy Patten, of Brookline, Mass., where they reside. Mr. Wilbour married (second) Amelia French, of Nantucket, Mass., who survives and resides on the home place with her stepson. To this union was born one child, William French, a lawyer in New York.

(IX) Philip Herbert Wilbour, only son of Isaac Champlin and Deborah Josephine Wilbour, was born on the home farm, and there grew to manhood. He attended the district schools and also the Friends' School in Providence. He engaged with his father in the poultry business, and on the latter's death took entire charge of the homestead, which he has continued to operate and improve. He has remodeled the house and made it one of the most attractive places in town, with beautiful grounds, wide walks and a fine conservatory. He has added sheep raising, and also keeps some twenty-five cows. His genial disposition has won him many friends. He is a Republican, and is a strong supporter of the principles of that party. He served one term in the town council, and in 1900 he was elected to the State Legislature, serving three years in the House, during which time he was chairman of the Committee on Special Legislation. In 1903 he was elected to the State Senate, and is still serving as a member of that body, having been re-elected in 1907, and is chairman of the committee on Incorporations. He was appointed by the late Governor Dyer a member of the Shell-fish Commission, and for the past fifteen years he has continued a member of same, having for the past ten years been president of this commission.

Mr. Wilbour is prominent in the work of Eureka Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of Portsmouth, R. I. In the Grange at Little Compton, he was one of the charter members, and he also belongs to Pomona Grange, the State Grange, and the National body. His wife also belongs to the Grange. Mr. Wilbour is a director of the Tiverton and Little Compton Mutual Fire Insurance Company. He has served as town treasurer of Little Compton for several years.

On May 28, 1885, in Brooklyn, N. Y., Mr. Wilbour was married to Miss Grace Frances Ropes, who was born in Salem, Mass., daughter of Ripley Ropes. Three children have blessed this union, namely: Lincoln Ropes, born March 6, 1886, was educated in the district schools, in Brookline, Mass., and Dean Academy, and is now with the American Machinery Company, Providence, R. I.; Elizabeth Champlin died young; and Dorothy was born Jan. 1, 1893. Mrs. Wilbour is a member of the Unitarian Church, of Brooklyn, New York.

HERBERT HARRIS, of Lime Rock, town of Lincoln, is the largest manufacturer of lime in the State and a representative business man of his section. He is a native of Rhode Island and a descendant of one of the best known families of the State.

Thomas and William Harris, brothers, came to Boston from Bristol, England, in 1630, in company with Roger Williams. William Harris was one of the six persons who arrived in 1636 as first settlers at Providence before July of the year named, they having spent the preceding winter at Seekonk. William Harris was also one of the twelve persons to whom Roger Williams deeded land that he had bought from the Indians; and he was one of the twelve original members of the First Baptist Church in 1639. Thomas Harris was one of the thirteen signers of the compact of 1637 incident to their inhabiting the town—Providence, and he and William were among the thirty-nine signers of an agreement, 1640, for a form of government. Thomas Harris was for years commissioner, deputy, member of the town council, assistant, etc. These brothers were the progenitors of the numerous Rhode Island Harris family, and from Thomas, through his grandson, Richard Harris, son of Thomas (2), have descended many of the Harrises who have lived in and about what constituted the town of Old Smithfield, in a region of country where have lived the forefathers of the late Jeremiah Harris, whose father, William Harris, says family tradition, was a patriot of the Revolution.

Jeremiah Harris, son of William, and grandfather of Herbert Harris, was a native of the town of Burrillville, R. I., and there learned the trade of shoemaker. He made his home first in the vicinity of Herring Pond, where he followed his trade, and there also owned a small tract of land. Later he moved with his family to Slatersville, where he was engaged at his trade for a time and also worked in the Slater mills. From Slaterville he moved with some of his family to Cape Cod, Mass., where he owned a small farm house, but he continued his residence in Smithfield, and frequently walked from Cape Cod to Smithfield, a distance each way of about seventy miles to cast his vote. During his stay there he continued to work at his trade. Returning to Rhode Island he located first at North Scituate, but in the early seventies he went to Chepachet, in the town of Glocester, where he passed the remainder of his life, in the pursuit of his chosen calling. He died there in 1874, at the ripe age of eighty-six years, and was buried in Acotes Hill cemetery. He contracted the sickness that caused his death while engaged in building the foundation for a shop which he intended to occupy. Mr. Harris was a man of exemplary habits and unblemished character, possessed of a wonderful amount of energy, a good citizen, and an active member of the Free-will Baptist Church. He was a staunch Democrat in political faith.

For his first wife Jeremiah Harris married Rhoda Young, who was born in Burrillville, daughter of Othniel Young, a soldier of the Revolutionary war. A full history of the Young family may be found elsewhere. Mrs. Harris died at Cape Cod, and was buried in the Acotes Hill cemetery. For his second wife Mr. Harris married Mary Adams, widow of Bena Daniels, and she died at Chepachet and was buried in the same cemetery. There were no children by this union, but a large family was born to Mr. Harris's first marriage, viz.: Ira is mentioned below; Eliza, widow of Allen Bishop, resides at North Scituate, R. I., and is now eighty-nine years old (she has read the Bible through three times); William died while serving in the Civil war; Sarah, married John Barker, of East Providence, and both are deceased; Henry died in Montana; Jeremiah, who met his death by drowning, was a soldier in the Civil war; Abby married Talcott Curtis, and both are deceased; Lucy married George Buxton, and both are deceased; Rhoda married Amasa Esten, and she died in Providence; Thomas died young; Orin resides at Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts.

Ira Harris, eldest son of Jeremiah, was the

the State Legislature, serving three years in each session, during which time he was chairman of the committee on Social Legislation. In 1903 he was elected to the State senate, and is still serving in that office. He has also been re-elected in 1907 and is chairman of the committee on Social Legislation. He was appointed by the late Governor H. H. Brown, chairman of the Social Commission, and for the past nine years he has continued his membership in said commission. In the past ten years he has been president of the commission.

Mr. Wilbour is interested in the work of the United Labor, Y. L. & N. A. M. of Portsmouth, R. I. In the summer of 1904, in Compton, he was one of the charter members of the Grange, and also belongs to Portsmouth Grange, the New Grange, and the National Grange. He is also a member of the Grange. Mr. Wilbour is a member of the Tiverton and Little Compton Marine and Insurance Company. He has served as vice-treasurer of Little Compton for several years.

On May 26, 1884, in Brooklyn, N. Y., Mr. Wilbour was married to Miss Grace Frances Ropes, who was born in Salem, Mass., daughter of Ripley Ropes. Three children have blessed this union. The first, Landon Ropes, born March 6, 1886, was educated in the district schools, in Brookline, Mass., and is now in New York, and is now with the American Machinery Company, Providence, R. I.; Elizabeth Elizabeth Ropes, born young; and Dorothy was born Jan. 1, 1891. Mrs. Wilbour is a member of the United Labor Club of Brooklyn, New York.

Ira Harris, eldest son of Jeremiah Harris, father of Mr. Herbert Harris. He was born at Burrillville, where he grew to manhood, and he moved with his family to Slatersville, where he found employment in the mill of the Slaters and also worked on their farm. Thence he removed to what was then the town of Smithfield, located at Lime Rock, and there learned the wheelwright's trade, at which he worked as a journeyman with John Burckett. Later he engaged in business for himself, continuing thus for several years, until he accepted a position as farmer with the late Judge Charles Bradley, with whom he spent one year. He then changed to the employ of the Dexter Lime Rock Company, for which firm he worked several years, when he went to California, locating in Modesto, Stanislaus county. There he embarked in the carriage-making business with his son Ira, and spent nine years in that location. Returning to the East he located in the town of Lincoln, making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Frank Gassett, with whom he spent the remainder of his days. He died there in his eighty-sixth year, and was buried in the Moshassuck cemetery at Pawtucket. Mr. Harris was very liberal in his views on religious matters, and he was a Democrat in political opinion. He was married at Slatersville to Fanny Clarke, who died at Dexter Lime Rock and lies buried in the same cemetery as her husband. She was a devoted Christian mother and much beloved in the home circle. To Mr. and Mrs. Harris were born the following named children: Thomas E. died in Lincoln at the age of sixty years; Carolina died young; Fanny J. married Frank O. Gassett, of Lincoln; Ira, a blacksmith, resides at Centredale, R. I.; Herbert is mentioned below; Edward F., a blacksmith, resides at Cape Cod, Mass.; George W., a wheelwright, is a resident of Centredale, Rhode Island.

Herbert Harris

Herbert Harris was born Feb. 18, 1851, in the town of Burrillville, R. I., and was only three years old when the family moved to Lime Rock, now included in the town of Lincoln. There he attended school, and at the age of seventeen started to learn the trade of wheelwright with Andrew Whipple, at Greenville. He only continued at that trade a year, however, and for the next two years was engaged at teaming for the Dexter Lime Rock Company, at the age of nineteen starting in business on his own account in that line. He bought a team, going into debt for several hundred dollars, and for over a year did teaming between Providence and Harrisville, hauling for John O. Wood, who operated a gristmill at Harrisville. He then began to team for the Lonsdale Company, between Lonsdale and Providence, and later was engaged by the Dexter Lime Rock Company, with whom he continued for ten years, running five teams in their service. Going thence to Centredale he took a contract to haul some of the stone for the new depot, the retaining river wall at Providence and the Fruit

Hill reservoir. On the completion of that contract Mr. Harris settled on the Orin Hutchinson farm, a tract of thirty acres near Lime Rock, which is now his present home. In 1890 he began the manufacture of lime, having leased the Harris Lime Rock, which he worked for eleven years, and upon the expiration of his lease he bought the property. He also acquired the control of the Dexter Lime Rock, since when he has been the most extensive manufacturer of lime in the State, his annual output amounting to 55,000 barrels. The product is shipped to all sections. Employment is given to over forty men, and a number of teams are required. He also bought large tracts of woodland for lime burning purposes in and around the town of Lincoln. Mr. Harris applies himself closely to his business, in the conduct of which he has displayed enterprise of an unusual order, and he is progressive and energetic in the prosecution of anything he undertakes. His honesty and straightforwardness are proverbial, and his sterling character and honorable impulses are apparent to all who have had dealings with him. Self-made and self-educated, he has won his way to a position which is all the more creditable to him as having been attained solely by his own efforts. He is modest in demeanor, but very genial, and is courteous and approachable to all.

Mr. Harris married Mary D. Keene, daughter of Philip Keene, and she died Jan. 1, 1881, leaving two children. (1) Sarah J., a graduate of the State Normal School, taught school seven years in Providence and Lincoln, prior to her marriage to Eugene A. Knight, of Lime Rock, where they reside. They have one child Irma Idella. (2) Georgianna graduated from the Bryant & Stratton business college; she married Albert P. Holley, and they reside in Lincoln. For his second wife Mr. Harris married Lena Kiilz, a native of Germany, and to this union have come three children: Carrie, who died when three years old; and Burton K., and Gertrude A., both students at the Rhode Island Agricultural College.

Mr. Harris has made many improvements on his farm, upon which he has erected some fine buildings. He is quite an enthusiastic automobilist, owning several machines, and being a thorough mechanic and familiar with machinery in general enjoys their operation immensely. However, he also appreciates a good horse, and in fact likes all the domestic animals. Home pleasures are his special delight, and he is not particularly active even in local public affairs, although he has served four terms in the town council of Lincoln. He is a Democrat in political sentiment and liberal in religious matters. Mr. Harris and his wife are members of Lime Rock Grange, No. 22, Patrons of Husbandry, of which he is master, and he also belongs to the Pomona and the State Grange. He occupies an important position in the town which he has adopted as his home and the center of his business activities, and commands the respect of his neighbors and associates generally.

CHARLES H. WOODBURY, of Woodbury & Kenyon, proprietors of the Wyoming Flock Company, at Barberville, also the Wyoming Yarn Company, at Wyoming, R. I., died April 27, 1907. He was one of the enterprising and progressive textile manufacturers in that section of Rhode Island and came from an old New England family. He was born at Amesbury, Mass., Dec. 29, 1868, son of John Ruggles and Annie F. (Heritage) Woodbury.

John Ruggles Woodbury was engaged in the carriage business at Amesbury. One of his ancestors on his mother's side was Brig.-Gen. Ruggles, the first Speaker of the first Congress convened at New York about ten years before the breaking out of the Revolutionary war. Mr. Woodbury married Annie F. Heritage, and to them were born children as follows: Elizabeth, deceased; Charles H.; and Mary, who married Percy Hawkins, of Boston, Massachusetts.

Charles H. Woodbury attended the public schools at Amesbury until he was thirteen years of age, when he went to work in the mill at Warren, Mass. He learned the business thoroughly, and afterward became assistant superintendent and designer in the mill at Franklin, Mass., and for two and one-half years was superintendent and designer of the Union Montgomery Company, at Norwalk, Conn. There he joined Our Brothers Lodge, No. 10, I. O. O. F., of which he continued a member all his life. He was also a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

In July, 1896, Mr. Woodbury came to Hope Valley, R. I., and for three months was associated with Sabin Owen in the mill, and subsequently for a year was a member of the Hope Valley Woolen Company. Mr. Woodbury was a thoroughly practical man in his line of business, and the type of a citizen whose value to a community is difficult to estimate. In a locality, where the thrift or activity of a mill property measures wholly the prosperity of that community, the transformation of such properties from idleness to activity means much, and the benefit is by no means the mill owner's alone. The mill properties with which Mr. Woodbury was connected underwent in recent years just such changes, and he left them among the flourishing industries of that section.

In December, 1902, an idle mill property at Wyoming was purchased by this enterprising firm, and the Wyoming Yarn Company was organized for the manufacture of woolen yarn. Success came to them from the first, and the business was highly prosperous. The same might be said of the Wyoming Flock Company, at Barberville, which the firm purchased in October, 1899, and which became an excellent example of what push and up-to-date business methods will accomplish.

On Oct. 3, 1893, Mr. Woodbury married Miss Ada Estella Smith, daughter of John Smith, of South Walpole, Mass. To this union was born one daughter, Marion Guild, born May 5, 1903. In politics Mr. Woodbury was a Republican.

EUGENE MELVIN SAWIN, Vice-President and Treasurer of the John M. Dean Company, house furnishers, Providence, and one of the best known business men of that city, was born there April 2, 1856, son of Silas Westcott and Mary A. (Duckworth) Sawin, and grandson of Silas W. and Sarah Sawin.

Silas Westcott Sawin was born in Boston, Mass., in 1823, and he died in Providence, R. I., Dec. 24, 1896. By trade he was a jeweler and as a journeyman followed that occupation for a time in Providence, and then for some time prior to 1857 engaged in the manufacture of jewelry in that city. The panic of 1857 ruined many and Mr. Sawin suffered considerable loss. For many years thereafter he worked for Hunt & Owen. He married Mary A. Duckworth, daughter of Rowland Duckworth, and six children were born to them, namely: Cornelia A., who married Lewis L. Brown, of Providence; William A., a journeyman jeweler; Eugene Melvin; Arthur D., a stock broker; Eva A., who married Edward C. Mudge; and Augusta E., who married Irvin E. Cook.

Rowland Duckworth, father of Mrs. Mary A. (Duckworth) Sawin, was born in Manchester, England, Aug. 12, 1791, son of William and Elizabeth (Traver) Duckworth. He came to New York City soon after his marriage. On Aug. 5, 1815, he wedded, in St. Mary's Church, Manchester, England, Alice Breeze, who was born in Manchester, England, May 20, 1797, daughter of Christopher Breeze. The children of this union now living are: James, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Margaret, who is Mrs. Joseph R. Place; Ellen D., wife of P. R. Covert; and Mary A., who married Silas W. Sawin. Those deceased are George D., Christopher D., Rowland, William, John, Sarah (who married William Dodge), and Elizabeth (who married Cyrus Aldrich).

Eugene Melvin Sawin received his education in the public schools of Providence, and was graduated from the high school there in 1875. Upon leaving school he entered the employ of William B. Blanding as bookkeeper, and remained there for nine years in the capacity of bookkeeper, and for the last four years was in full charge of the office. On May 8, 1884, Mr. Sawin severed his connection with that firm, having on May 1st of that year, purchased a part of the interest of Christopher A. Cady, of the firm of Cady & Dean, Mr. John M. Dean taking the other part of Mr. Cady's interest. The business was carried on under the name of John M. Dean & Co., and so continued until 1892, when three of the clerks were admitted as partners, and a stock company was formed under the name of the John M. Dean Company. Since its incorporation Mr. Dean has been President, and Mr. Sawin vice-president and treasurer. For the last few years the general oversight of the business has fallen upon Mr. Sawin owing to Mr. Dean's interests elsewhere demanding his personal attention. The business has been one of phenomenal growth and is, today, one of very large proportions. Mr. Sawin has seen it grow from $50,000 per year to $400,000.

In his politics Mr. Sawin is a Republican, and from 1897 to 1899 was a member of the city council from the Sixth ward. He is a member of What Cheer Lodge, A. F. & A. M., Providence, Royal Arch Chapter, Calvary Commandery, Providence Council and Palestine Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He also belongs to the Pomham Club, and is a member and secretary of the Rhode Island Automobile Club.

Mr. Sawin married Helena B. Dawley, daughter of Horace B. and Georgianna (Burgess) Dawley, and they have one son, Melvin Eugene, born Oct. 30, 1890.

ALMY. One of the best known names of eastern Rhode Island is that of Almy, which has been borne by successive generations of agriculturists from the earliest days of the Colony.

(I) William Almy, born in 1601, came to New England and was at Lynn, Mass., perhaps as early as 1631. He returned to England, but again came to New England, this time in the "Abigail," in 1635, his age being then given as thirty-four years; his wife, Audry, aged thirty-two years, and their two children accompanied him. The elder child, Annie, was aged eight years, and Christopher, three years. Mr. Almy removed to Sandwich, Mass., in 1637, and later to Portsmouth, R. I., where he was a freeman in 1655. He had had granted him land at Wading river in Portsmouth in 1644. He was a juryman in 1656, and commissioner in 1656, 1657 and 1663. He died in 1676. His children were: Ann, born in 1627; Christopher, in 1632; John and Job.

(II) Job Almy, son of William, married Mary Unthank, and they were of Portsmouth, Warwick and Portsmouth, respectively. Mr. Almy was deputy from Warwick in 1670, and 1672, and assistant in 1673, 1674 and 1675. His death occurred in 1684. His children were: William and Christopher, born in 1664; William (2), 1665; Susanna, 1667; Audry, 1669; Deborah, 1671; Catherine, 1674; John, 1676; Mary, 1678; and Job, 1681.

(III) Job Almy (2), born March 2, 1681, son of Job, married Dec. 6, 1705, Bridget Sanford, daughter of Peleg and Mary (Coddington) Sanford, and resided in Tiverton, R. I., where he died Jan. 25, 1767. Their children were: Job, born March 4, 1707; Peleg, Oct. 25, 1709; Mary, Jan. 20, 1711; Eliphal, Aug. 3, 1713; Bridget, May 16, 1716; Ann, Jan. 28, 1718; John, April 18, 1720; Job, May 16, 1722; and Deborah, March 21, 1724.

(IV) John Almy, son of Job (2), born April 18, 1720, married Hannah Cook, daughter of John Cook, and their children of Tiverton town record were: Sanford, born Aug. 28, 1759; Peleg, Jan. 8, 1761; Bridget, Sept. 21, 1762; John, April 16, 1764; and Cook, Sept. 24, 1765. The mother of these children died Oct. 25, 1765.

(V) Peleg Almy, son of John, born Jan. 8, 1761, married Oct. 23, 1784, Hannah Cory, daughter of Philip and Comfort Cory, and their children of Portsmouth town record were: Philip, born March 6, 1786; Anne, Nov. 3, 1787; Hannah, Nov. 13, 1789; Bridget, Feb. 7, 1791; Peleg, Oct. 10, 1792; David, Nov. 13, 1794; Sarah, April 24, 1796; Charles, Feb. 11, 1799; Mary, Feb. 14, 1801; Elizabeth, April 23, 1803; a daughter who was born and died in March, 1805; Emeline, April 29, 1806; Edward, April 14, 1808; John, May 28, 1810; and Harriet, July 30, 1812. Mr. Peleg Almy lived to be ninety-two years of age, dying April 5, 1853. His widow Hannah passed away Oct. 15, 1853.

(VI) Peleg Almy (2), son of Peleg, born Oct. 10, 1792, married Feb. 13, 1817, Hannah Manchester, of Middletown, and their children of Portsmouth town record were: Charles, born Nov. 10, 1817; John W., April 20, 1819; Mary C., Aug. 20, 1820; Edward; Sally, March 20, 1822; Emeline, March 9, 1826; Philip, Aug. 22, 1831; and Della, Jan. 2, 1843. Of these the daughter Sally married the late Peleg T. Sherman, of Middletown, and still resides there, unusually smart and active for her years.

(VI) Edward Almy, son of Peleg, was born April 14, 1808, and was educated in the town schools. He adopted agriculture as his calling and operated a tract of 100 acres on Union street, Portsmouth, on which he made extensive improvements. Of this land he sold twenty acres lying on the south side of the road and including a part of St. Mary's Lake, to the Newport water works. His entire life was spent on the farm, carrying on not only general farming, but poultry raising and market gardening. He died Jan. 7, 1883, and was buried in the family burying-ground on the farm. He was a good citizen and a good man, upright and honest in his dealings, and with all the qualities which insure a happy home life. In politics he was a Democrat.

Edward Almy was thrice married. His first wife, Maria L. Sullings, was born April 14, 1816, daughter of Harvey and Rachel Sullings. She died Sept. 22, 1838, and was buried in the family lot. Her two children were Harvey S., who died in New York; and Julia Maria, who married Benjamin Howland, of Middletown, and both are now deceased. On Dec. 2, 1839, Mr. Almy married Rebecca G. Weaver, born Nov. 16, 1818, daughter of Benjamin Weaver, of Middletown. She died Nov. 25, 1857, leaving three children, namely: Mary Catherine, born Sept. 7, 1841, who married Edmund Fayles, of Middletown, both now deceased; Edward, Jr., born May 21, 1844; and George W., born Jan. 3, 1846, living in New York. Mr. Almy married for his third wife, on Nov. 19, 1862, at Newport, Elizabeth A. Matthews. She was born in 1836, and is still living on the old homestead with her sons. Mrs. Almy is a member of St. Mary's Episcopal Church. She was the mother of three children: William; Henry; and Elizabeth, born Jan. 31, 1872, who died Dec. 9, 1873.

(VII) EDWARD ALMY, one of Portsmouth's progressive and successful agriculturists, was born in that town May 21, 1844. He had no opportunity of attending any but the district schools, and from an early age he worked on the home farm with his father, learning all the details of farm life. In 1872 he left home, and going to Newtown, in the town of Portsmouth, carried on the Philip Almy place for several years. He then acquired thirty-five acres of the old homestead farm and upon this land settled down permanently. He has since added extensive improvements to his farm, built a good house and barns, all fitted with modern appliances, and has since devoted his attention to general farming and stock raising. He has made a special success of his dealings in live stock, and is well-known throughout the State. He is also engaged in the dairy business, and is recognized as one of the most enterprising, up-to-date and prosperous farmers of the region.

In 1872 Mr. Almy was married to Miss Frances Rogers Coggeshall, daughter of the late Noel Coggeshall, of Middletown, whose family history is given elsewhere in this work. Mr. and Mrs. Almy are both domestic in their tastes and devoted to their home and children. They have two daughters: Anna Rebecca, at home, a graduate of the Friends' School in Providence; and Katie Fayles, who married George Thurston, of Middletown, and has one daughter, Frances Weaver. The family are all members of the Holy Cross Episcopal Church, of Middletown. Mr. Almy is a good Democrat, and is always loyal to his party. He is deeply interested in all questions of local improvements, and for four years served as a member of the town council. He has also for a number of years been overseer of the town poor. Not only a prosperous man, but also well read, broad-minded and intelligent, he is liked and respected by all.

(VII) WILLIAM ALMY, oldest son of Edward Almy (I) by his third wife, Elizabeth Matthews, was born on the old homestead, Sept. 12, 1864, and he received his education in the town schools. He was only nineteen years of age when his father died, but he had already had considerable experience in the conduct of a farm, and was well qualified to undertake the responsibility of carrying on the homestead. Since the time of his father's death he and his brother Henry have been associated in its management. The farm comprises about forty-five acres, and there they are engaged not only in general farming but also in poultry raising and market gardening.

William Almy has always been enthusiastic over out-door sports, particularly fishing and shooting, and is one of the best shots in the State. He belongs to several rifle associations, and has taken medals in each, so that his reputation is much more than local. As a member of the Massachusetts Rifle Association, he won a gold medal offered for the best shot; he was the winner of a silver medal, offered for competition among its members by the Providence Revolver Association; and he has also taken gold and bronze medals offered by the United States Revolver Association.

(VII) HENRY ALMY, younger brother of William, born July 7, 1866, enjoyed the same educational opportunities as his brother. He also was brought up to farm work, and makes it his regular calling. He is an enterprising, progressive and industrious young man, and the partnership between himself and his brother has been very successful. Both are men of good habits and upright character, and they are devoted sons, looking carefully after their mother's welfare. All who know them have only good words for them and they are deservedly very popular. In politics they are both stanch Democrats.

ALBERT G. GROFF. The name of Groff in Newport is synonymous with honesty, uprightness and fair dealing, traits characteristic of a family which has now been identified with Newport for several generations, although it originally centered around Fall River and New Bedford, Mass. In whatever community the Groffs have always been substantial people of good standing.

The first of the name to settle in Newport was John M. Groff, son of John and Sarah (Anthony) Groff, born in New Bedford in 1801. As a young man he learned the trade of a tanner, and was engaged in that industry the greater part of his life. In later years, however, he turned his attention to fishing instead and followed that to the end of his active career. His wife was Sarah Easton Bacheller, daughter of John Bacheller, of Newport. She survived her husband for many years, her death occurring March 5, 1886, at the age of eighty-one years, while he had passed away in Newport, Jan. 8, 1861, when only fifty-nine years old. They had a large family, as follows: James, deceased, a contractor for masonry in Newport, who married Rachel B. Lewis; Hannah, residing in Newport, widow of the late Benjamin Cornell, of that city; John B., deceased, a carpenter in Newport, who married Abby Simmons; William B., deceased, for many years a boat builder in Newport, who married (first) Hannah Bayton, and (second) Hannah C. Eldred, both of South Kingstown, R. I.; Henry G.,

Albert G. Groff

of Cleveland, Ohio, March 1, 1857. In 1875 and 1876 he took a postgraduate course of Clinical Surgery in Vienna, Austria. In 1857 he established himself in Centredale, R. I., and remained there until 1867, when he removed to Providence, continuing to practice his profession there with marked success until his death, which occurred Feb. 1, 1906. He was assistant surgeon in the Rhode Island Militia under the Militia Law enacted during the war of the Rebellion. In 1886 he was appointed visiting surgeon of the Rhode Island Homeopathic Dispensary, a relation he sustained during the remainder of his life.

Dr. Sawin was a member of the Rhode Island Homeopathic Medical Society, and a Senior of the American Institute of Homeopathy. He was a member of the Sons of Temperance, and the "Rechabites"—a secret temperance society founded in 1840.

Dr. Sawin's most noticeable characteristics of mind were probably his extraordinary quickness of perception, his readiness in analysis, his strong memory and sound judgment. As a general practitioner of medicine he wielded a strong influence in his community. He was in love with his profession, which he always endeavored to honor. The nearly half-century that he practiced medicine covered a period marking greater progress and advancement in his profession than had taken place during the two centuries preceding, and Dr. Sawin kept abreast of that progress, necessitating radical changes in methods and administration. He was of a speculative and reflective type, turning over things in his own mind, not especially seeking originality, but a safe conclusion by the way of sound common sense. His character was symmetrical and well rounded, and as a citizen he had high ideals and lived up to them. While not a politician, he took an interest in political matters to the extent of supporting with his ballot and influence any movement having for its object the support or the advancement of the city's best interests.

On Jan. 1, 1849, Dr. Sawin married Miss Olive S. Budlong, of the old and prominent Budlong family, a daughter of Samuel (3) and Rachel (Martin) Budlong, and a sister of Dr. John Clarke Budlong, of Providence. Mrs. Sawin is a representative of the seventh generation from Francis Budlong, of Warwick, her line being through John, Moses, Samuel, Samuel (2) and Samuel Budlong (3). Three children were born to Dr. and Mrs. Sawin: Adaline Frances, deceased; Olive Ervina, of Long Meadow, R. I., who married Kelsey Dow, and has one child, Olive S.; and Ida Estelle. The family home of Dr. Sawin is at No. 582 Broadway, Providence, where his death occurred and where his widow and daughter, Ida Estelle, now reside.

Miss Ida Estelle Sawin is a member of Gaspee Chapter, D. A. R., Providence, her eligibility including fourteen ancestors who fought in the Revolution. Mrs. Dow is also a member of the same chapter.

Miss Olive S. Dow, the only grandchild of Dr. Sawin, is a member of the Children of the American Revolution, she having, of course, the same lines of eligibility as her mother, together with almost as many on her father's side (her paternal line goes back to Governor Winthrop, of Massachusetts).

CHARLES L. KENYON. The name Kenyon is an old one in Rhode Island, and has many representatives. Austin, the genealogist and authority on families in Rhode Island, assumes that John, James and Roger Kenyon, early inhabitants of southern Rhode Island, were brothers, and that their father's name was John, the first known ancestor here of the family.

Of these sons, John and James resided in Kingstown and Westerly, and Roger lived in New Shoreham. Out of the town of Westerly, later on, came the town of Charlestown, and Hopkinton, and still later from Charlestown came the town of Richmond. All through this section have lived and flourished generation after generation of Kenyons, through a period approximating 250 years. From this race have sprung many of the Kenyons of today of the section named, among whom is Charles L. Kenyon, of the town of Richmond, a member of the firm of Woodbury & Kenyon, manufacturers of woolen goods, at the village of Wyoming.

Tracing the Kenyon lineage of the present Charles L. Kenyon, just alluded to, he is the great-grandson of Thomas Kenyon, the great-grandson of David Kenyon, the grandson of Whitman Kenyon, and the son of the late Captain David R. Kenyon, a veteran of the Civil war, who was long occupied in the manufacture of woolen goods and was prominent in business circles and in public life.

Whitman Kenyon, son of David, was born and reared in the town of Charlestown, R. I. In connection with Wanton and Edward Lillibridge, in about 1832, he built the old mill at Hillsdale. He married Abbie, sister of Wanton and Edward Lillibridge, descendants of another early family of that section. To this union were born children as follows: Nelson married Mary Crandall; Angelina married George Sanford, of Providence; John married Esther Hoxsie, of Exeter; Amos died unmarried; David R.; Fannie married George S. James; and Alfred married Susan Hoxsie.

Capt. David R. Kenyon, son of Whitman, was born in 1833, in Richmond, R. I., and there acquired a public school education. On the organization of the Seventh Rhode Island Volunteers, in the summer of 1862, Mr. Kenyon cast his lot with it, and in September, 1862, accompanied it to Washington, where it became a part of the Army of the Potomac. It soon began its gallant career, starting in October on the memorable Fredericksburg campaign. Later on it was sent to the South to Kentucky, and with the Ninth Army Corps was under General Burnside, who had been assigned to the Department of the Ohio. Still later the Seventh joined the Army of the Tennessee, in front of Vicksburg, and after the surrender of the latter point it went in pursuit of General Johnston. Not attempting to follow this regiment in detail, it again became a part of the Eastern Army, and its general course is indicated by the names of the following battles, in which the regiment had borne a meritorious part, and which by general orders were directed to be inscribed on its colors: Fredericksburg, siege of Vicksburg, Jackson, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Springs, and Hatcher's Run. The Seventh regiment took a most creditable part in the campaigns and engagements above named, and with it sharing the fortunes of war, was the late Captain Kenyon, who was enrolled Sept. 4, 1862, mustered into the United States service on the same date, and who served first as first lieutenant, and was then promoted to a captaincy. In the hard-fought battle of Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862, the Seventh suffered severely, thirty-one members being killed, and 122 wounded. Its lieutenant-colonel, the late Welcome B. Sayles, was instantly killed by the fragment of a shell, and Maj. Jacob Babbitt fell mortally wounded, dying later. Adjutant Charles F. Page, Capt. Rowland G. Rodman, James H. Remington and Lewis Leavens, Lieutenants George A. Wilber and the late David R. Kenyon, and also Sergeant-Major Joseph H. Manchester, were all severely wounded. Suffice it to say that the Seventh Regiment was one of gallant deeds on through to the close of the war, and so long as the late Captain Kenyon was permitted to share its fortunes his was an honorable record. He was transferred, after being wounded, to Company I, of which he was made captain, and on March 2, 1863, he resigned from the service.

Returning to his home in Richmond, R. I., Captain Kenyon, some time later, in association with his brother, became interested in the woolen mill at Hillsdale. For a time, in 1880, he was connected with a similar mill in the town of South Kingstown. In 1885, together with his son, Charles L. Kenyon, he bought the Willow Valley mill, and for a period they were engaged in the manufacture of coarse carpet yarns and for a time also manufactured satinets. In this line of manufacture, Captain Kenyon was engaged principally through his active business life. He died July 6, 1898.

Captain Kenyon was a capable business man and one well fitted for public stations. He was a man of high sense of honor, sincerely appreciated by his many friends and acquaintances, who held him in high esteem and regard. His political affiliations were with the Republican party, and he was a number of times called to public office by his fellow townsmen, serving as a member of the town council, as assessor, moderator of town meeting, constable, etc. He was a member of Mechanics Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F., and Franklin Lodge of Masons. In connection with his military record it should also be mentioned that he organized the Eighth Regiment, Rhode Island State Militia.

Captain Kenyon was married, in 1862, to Sarah, daughter of Thomas Warden, of Richmond, and their children were: Charles L., born Sept. 10, 1863; and Estella F., born Aug. 10, 1865, married John C. Sheldon, of Hopkinton, now a merchant of Hill's Grove, R. I., and has one child, Elsie K., born June 26, 1895.

Charles L. Kenyon was born in Richmond, R. I., and enjoyed excellent educational advantages, graduating from the public schools of his native town into the East Greenwich Academy, and thence to the New Hampton Institute, New Hampton, N. H. In 1885 he became associated with his late father, and he has since been successfully engaged as a manufacturer. After his father's death Charles L. Kenyon continued as a manufacturer, and was for a short time in the grocery business. In October, 1899, he became associated with Charles H. Woodbury, in the Wyoming Flock Company, at Barberville, and in December, 1902, they purchased the mill at Wyoming, and organized the Wyoming Yarn Company, for the making of woolen yarns, both properties now being operated. Their success has been much more than usual and these concerns are among the most successful in this section.

On September 6, 1885, Mr. Charles L. Kenyon married Alice E. Sheldon, of Hopkinton, daughter of Albert G. and Mary E. (Jordan) Sheldon, and they have three children: Albert G., born Oct. 15, 1887; Lulu E., May 4, 1890; and Doris S., Dec. 27, 1903. Mr. Kenyon is a Republican and has served efficiently as assessor and constable.

ALFRED E. TENNEY, one of the well-known manufacturers and a most highly respected citizen of Providence in his day, belonged to an old New England family. The Tenney family originated in England, and is of Norman descent. The founder of the family in America came from the town of Rowley, Yorkshire, England, and settled in Rowley, Mass., in 1638.

Samuel Tenney, grandfather of Alfred E., was born at Temple, N. H., May 16, 1793, and he died at Pepperell, Mass., Dec. 7, 1825. He was a finisher of hand-made woolen cloth, and was known as a clothier.

Earl Tenney, son of Samuel, was born March 11, 1808, and died April 29, 1839, at Pepperell, Mass., where he carried on the business of a woolen cloth finisher. He married Mary P. Wheeler.

Alfred E. Tenney, the only child of Earl and Mary P. (Wheeler) Tenney, was born at Pepperell, Mass., March 10, 1834. He attended the public schools of Townsend, Mass., until his sixteenth year, after which he learned the machinist's trade in Winchester, Mass. In 1861 he came to Providence, and was connected with the Providence Tool Company in the manufacture of firearms and sewing machines for twenty years. He began his busi-

of Cleveland, Ohio, March 1, 1857. In 1875 and 1876 he took a postgraduate course of Clinical Surgery in Vienna, Austria. In 1857 he established himself in Centredale, R. the Ohio. Still later the Seventh joined the Army of the Tennessee, in front of Vicksburg, and after the surrender of the latter point it went in pursuit of General Johnston. Not attempting to follow this regiment in detail, it again became a part of the Eastern Army, and its general course is indicated by the names of the following battles, in which the regiment had borne a meritorious part, and which by general orders were directed to be inscribed on its colors: Fredericksburg, siege of Vicksburg, Jackson, Spottsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Springs, and Hatcher's Run. The Seventh regiment took a most creditable part in the campaigns and engagements above named, and with it sharing the fortunes of war, was the late Captain Kenyon, who was enrolled Sept. 4, 1862, mustered into the United States service on the same date, and who served first as first lieutenant, and was then promoted to a captaincy. In the hard-fought battle of Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862, the Seventh suffered severely, thirty-one members being killed, and 122 wounded. Its lieutenant-colonel, the late Welcome B. Sayles, was instantly killed by the fragment of a shell, and Maj. Jacob Babbitt fell mortally wounded, dying later. Adjutant Charles F. Page, Capt. Rowland G. Rodman, James H. Remington and Lewis Leavens, Lieutenants George A. Wilber and the late David R. Kenyon, and also Sergeant-Major Joseph H. Manchester, were all severely wounded. Suffice it to say that the Seventh Regiment was one of gallant deeds on through to the close of the war, and so long as the late Captain Kenyon was permitted to share its fortunes his was an honorable record. He was transferred, after being wounded, to Company I, of which he was made captain, and on March 2, 1863, he resigned from the service.

Returning to his home in Richmond, R. I., Captain Kenyon, some time later, in association with his brother, became interested in the woolen mill at Hillsdale. For a time, in 1880, he was connected with a similar mill in the town of South Kingstown. In 1885, together with his son, Charles L. Kenyon, he bought the Willow Valley mill, and for a period they were engaged in the manufacture of coarse carpet yarns and for a time also manufactured satinets. In this line of manufacture, Captain Kenyon was engaged principally through his active business life. He died July 6, 1898.

Captain Kenyon was a capable business man and one well fitted for public stations. He was a man of high sense of honor, sincerely appreciated by his many friends and acquaintances, who held him in high esteem and regard. His political affiliations were with the Republican party, and he was a number of times called to public office by his fellow townsmen, serving as a member of the town council, as assessor, moderator of town meeting, constable, etc. He was a member of Mechanics Lodge, No. 14, I. O. O. F., and Franklin Lodge of Masons. In connection with his military record it should also be mentioned that he organized the Eighth Regiment, Rhode Island State Militia.

Captain Kenyon was married, in 1862, to Sarah, daughter of Thomas Warden, of Richmond, and their children were: Charles L., born Sept. 10, 1863; and Estella F., born Aug. 10, 1865, married John C. Sheldon, of Hopkinton, now a merchant of Hill's Grove, R. I., and has one child, Elsie K., born June 26, 1895.

Charles L. Kenyon was born in Richmond, R. I., and enjoyed excellent educational advantages, graduating from the public schools of his native town into the East Greenwich Academy, and thence to the New Hampton Institute, New Hampton, N. H. In 1885 he became associated with his late father, and he has since been successfully engaged as a manufacturer. After his father's death Charles L. Kenyon continued as a manufacturer, and was for a short time in the grocery business. In October, 1899, he became associated with Charles H. Woodbury, in the Wyoming Flock Company, at Barberville, and in December, 1902, they purchased the mill at Wyoming, and organized the Wyoming Yarn Company, for the making of woolen yarns, both properties now being operated. Their success has been much more than usual and these concerns are among the most successful in this section.

On September 6, 1885, Mr. Charles L. Kenyon married Alice E. Sheldon, of Hopkinton, daughter of Albert G. and Mary E. (Jordan) Sheldon, and they have three children: Albert G., born Oct. 15, 1887; Lulu E., May 4, 1890; and Doris S., Dec. 27, 1903. Mr. Kenyon is a Republican and has served efficiently as assessor and constable.

ALFRED E. TENNEY, one of the well-known manufacturers and a most highly respected citizen of Providence in his day, belonged to an old New England family. The Tenney family originated in England, and is of Norman descent. The founder of the family in America came from the town of Rowley, Yorkshire, England, and settled in Rowley, Mass., in 1638.

Samuel Tenney, grandfather of Alfred E., was born at Temple, N. H., May 16, 1793, and he died at Pepperell, Mass., Dec. 7, 1825. He was a finisher of hand-made woolen cloth, and was known as a clothier.

Earl Tenney, son of Samuel, was born March 11, 1808, and died April 29, 1839, at Pepperell, Mass., where he carried on the business of a woolen cloth finisher. He married Mary P. Wheeler.

Alfred E. Tenney, the only child of Earl and Mary P. (Wheeler) Tenney, was born at Pepperell, Mass., March 10, 1834. He attended the public schools of Townsend, Mass., until his sixteenth year, after which he learned the machinist's trade in Winchester, Mass. In 1861 he came to Providence, and was connected with the Providence Tool Company in the manufacture of firearms and sewing machines for twenty years. He began his business career with William Jeffers, of Pawtucket, in the manufacture of hand engines, and continued in that industry until the death of Mr. Jeffers, March 16, 1879. As there was no demand for hand engines, four years later the firm became the A. E. Tenney Manufacturing Company, and engaged in the manufacture of general and special machinery. The concern was organized under its present name in 1885, Mr. Tenney continuing as manager of the company.

In politics Mr. Tenney was a Republican. He was a member of the Pilgrim Congregational Church of Providence, and a deacon therein, and for eighteen years preceding his death he taught the Bible class in the Sabbath-school. During the Civil war he served as a private in the Providence Home Guards. Outside of business, Mr. Tenney's interests clustered around his home and his church, other affairs—clubs, politics, etc.—never appealing to him. As a citizen he was patriotic, as a business man straightforward, honorable and successful.

Mr. Tenney was married (first) to Marietta Jewett, of Pepperell, Mass., who died in 1869, leaving children: Frederick, of Providence, who married Alice E. Harrington, daughter of Henry Harrington; and Miss Delia E., also of Providence.

Mr. Tenney was married (second), Nov. 23, 1870, to Jane Frances Munroe, of Providence, born Feb. 8, 1841, at the corner of Transit and Brook streets, Providence. Three children were born to this union: Alfred E., Jr., of Galveston, Texas; Anna G., of Providence; and Hattie Frances, who died at the age of four months. Mr. Tenney died July 23, 1902, at Falmouth, Mass., where he was spending a few weeks' vacation from business.

Alfred E. Tenney, Jr., was educated in Providence, and is a marine engineer, running from Galveston, Texas. He married (first) Clara L. Lewis, by whom he had two children, Lillian Frances and Rena Louise. He married (second) Flora Head.

WILLIAM ARNOLD MUNROE, father of Mrs. A. E. Tenney, was born in Bristol, R. I., but from the age of two years lived in Providence. For forty-two years he conducted a grocery store at the corner of Transit and Brook streets, and died in 1882. His wife was Harriet Newell Ladd, daughter of Gen. Caleb Ladd, of Warwick, R. I., and she died Aug. 25, 1904, aged eighty-seven years. Mr. and Mrs. Munroe had these children: Harriet Newell, deceased; Jane Frances, Mrs. Tenney; Sarah Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Edward Payson and Minerva Grant, deceased; and William Arnold.

ROBERT E. NORTHAM, one of the well known and successful citizens of Providence, died at his home on Young Orchard avenue, July 15, 1902, after a decline of health covering two years. He was born in Portsmouth, R. I., Aug. 24, 1840, son of Rev. Robert E. and Katherine E. (Burdick) Northam.

Rev. Robert E. Northam was an Episcopal clergyman, and was located at Portsmouth, where he died in 1840, aged twenty-eight years, a few weeks after the birth of his son and namesake. Mrs. Katherine E. (Burdick) Northam was a daughter of Isaac Burdick, of Newport, and a descendant of one of the old families of that section. Two children were born to Rev. and Mrs. Northam, as follows: William B., who died at the age of eighteen years; and Robert E. After the death of the husband and father, Mrs. Northam made her home with her father, who became likewise a father to the young children.

When Robert E. Northam was about eight years of age, his mother removed to Providence, which place was her home during the rest of her life. He attended the public schools, going from the old Grammar school on Fountain street to the old high school, where he completed his education. At the age of sixteen years he left school, and entered the office of the old Atlantic Delaine Company, then at the corner of Dyer and Westminster streets, as office boy. His careful attention to his duties, and his display of marked ability, soon caused his promotion, and he continued to advance until he had attained a position of considerable trust, acquired the esteem of his employers and a thorough knowledge of the business. The Atlantic Delaine Company at that time was largely owned by A. & W. Sprague, and their goods were handled almost entirely by the New York commission house of Hoyt, Sprague & Co. Mr. Northam remained with the company until the Spragues failed in 1873. The affairs of the company were very much involved, and Mr. Northam was appointed trustee in bankruptcy to straighten matters up. The final settlement was not made until nearly six years afterward, the delay being largely due to a pendency of a suit of Gen. Charles T. James against the company. This suit was carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in order to do everything possible to carry out his trust, Mr. Northam engaged such council as William M. Evarts, Abram Paine and Wingate Hayes.

After the affairs of the Atlantic Delaine Company were settled and Mr. Northam discharged from his duties as trustee, he did not engage in any further business beyond attending to his own private affairs, and was sometimes called upon to settle estates because of his business ability and integrity. He occupied a prominent place as a financier, and for twenty-five years was a director in the Weybosset National Bank, and in the Merchants' Insurance Company until the latter concern was merged with a larger company. For many years previous to his death he was a director and a member of the finance committee of the Equitable Fire & Marine Insurance Company. In his political views he was a staunch Republican, and while he never cared for public office, yet he was interested in the success of his party. Mr. North-am was not much of a club man, preferring the comforts of his own home to those of a club, although for many years was connected with the Squantum Club. He was a member of Grace Church, of which for many years he was a vestryman, and for a time served as librarian of the Sunday-school. He was deeply interested in charitable work in a very unostentatious manner, for, although he gave freely, he would never allow his name to be made public as contributor to any such fund, or in regard to any financial assistance he might render to private individuals.

On Nov. 13, 1867, at Grace Church in Providence, Mr. Robert E. Northam and Miss Louisa J. Phetteplace, of Providence, were united in marriage, the Rev. D. Otis Kellogg officiating. Mrs. Northam was the daughter of James S. and Louisa (Appleby) Phetteplace, the former a manufacturer, banker and prominent citizen, an extended sketch of whom will be found elsewhere.

Mr. Northam was a self-made man of high Christian character, faithful to every relation, and his memory is treasured by a wide circle of friends.

LEVI BARNEY DARLING, deceased, was, during his long and useful life, a well-known manufacturer of Providence. He was born Jan. 8, 1827, in Cumberland, R. I., and was a descendant in the seventh generation of one of the oldest families in New England.

(I) John and Dennis Darling appeared at Braintree, Mass., approximately 250 years ago. To the latter is traced the lineage of the eight sons of the late Samuel Darling, of Bellingham, Mass., the fourth of that Christian name in direct line, whose standing in his community was such that all differences of neighbors which could not be amicably adjusted between them were referred to him for adjustment; and such, too, was his character, and that of his good wives, as to rear his eight sons to become as a family distinguished—conspicuous in the business life of the community in which they nearly all settled, reflecting credit and honor to both their native and adopted States. John Darling was at Braintree, Mass., as early as 1660. He married in 1664, Elizabeth Dowman, and Dennis married in 1662, Hannah Francis, both families having children.

(II) Capt. John Darling, son of Dennis and Hannah (Francis) Darling, born Sept. 2, 1664, in Braintree, Mass., married there (first) Elizabeth Thompson. She died in 1687, and he married (second), in 1690, Anne, and (third) Elizabeth Morse. Capt. Darling settled in Bellingham, Mass. He is reputed to have been a great business man and owner of considerable land. He is said to have headed the petition for the setting off of the town of Bellingham, which was incorporated in 1719. He died in 1753-54, in Bellingham, aged eighty-nine years. His children born to the third marriage were: Elizabeth, Samuel, Ruth, Hannah, Margaret, Ebenezer, Mary, Martha, Abigail and Deborah.

(III) Capt. Samuel Darling, son of Capt. John, born March 18, 1693-94, married (first) Dec. 15, 1716, Mary Thompson, of Mendon, Mass., and their children were: Samuel, Michael, Elizabeth, Ruth, Abigail, John, Rachel, Penelope, and Joshua. The father died Feb. 17, 1774.

(IV) John Darling, son of Capt. Samuel Darling, was the next in direct line.

(V) John Darling, Jr., presumably son of John and grandson of Capt. Samuel, married, and his wife Martha bore him children as follows: Pamela, born Oct. 5, 1766; Martha, Sept. 14, 1768; John, Aug. 2, 1770; Lurania, Jan. 2, 1772; James, Aug. 20, 1773; Gideon, Nov. 5, 1777; Joshua, March 5, 1871; and Jacob, Feb. 14, 1785.

(VI) John Darling, son of John, Jr., and Martha, born Aug. 2, 1770, married Mary Weeden, of East Greenwich, and their eight children were: Laurretta, who married Lorenzo Miller; John Weeden; George Washington; Mary, who married a Mr. Harris, of Cumberland; William; Hannah, who married (first) a Mr. Davis, and (second) a Mr. Hunt; Levi Barney; and Susan, who married John Austin.

(VII) Levi Barney Darling, son of John, born Jan. 8, 1827, married (first), in 1850, Martha B., daughter of Rev. Edmund Burt, then of Maine. To this union was born one daughter, Martha Burt, who married Thomas H. Pope. He married (second) Martha E. Colby, daughter of Dr. Charles Calvin Colby, of Franconia, N. H., and they had a son, Charles Colby. His third wife was Mathilda B. Irion, of New York. The only child of this union was Mary Alice Weeden. Levi B. Darling was but six years of age when his father died, and he was put out to live with the family of Dr. Lamb, of Cumberland Hill, for three years. He then went to live with Oliver Harris, where he remained for six years, or until he was fifteen years old. While with Mr. Harris he was given the advantage of three months' school for each of the five winters. This completed his school training, though in later years he realized his lack of education, and bent his energies to remedy the defect. Coming to Providence he apprenticed himself to Emerson Tower to learn blacksmithing, at the same time putting himself under teachers, and fitting for college, although he never entered as a student in the regular course. When he was twenty-two years of age he began the manufacture of jewelry on Peck's Wharf, and in 1850 removed his business to the Almy building, where he remained until 1853, when he commenced the refining of gold and silver for his own use. About this time he began taking in outside work, and he was the first assayer and refiner in New England. This business he has carried on for fifty years in Providence, and while he has been engaged in other lines to some extent, this has been his princial interest. For the past ten years he has been acting as expert mine examiner and as a mining engineer. For about fifteen years he was engaged in the manufacture of stoves in Central Vermont, turning out 1,000 per year, and employing fifty men; he had a capital of $50,000 invested in the enterprise. He was also interested for some years in the importation of art work, principally steel mezzo tints from Germany and Paris. For eleven years he was located on Westminster street. In the panic of 1873 he became involved, and his whole fortune of about $150,000 was swept away. Looking disaster in the face and wholly undaunted, he went to work, and again secured a competency. He was at his death carrying on his refining business at No. 79 Sabin street. To perfect himself for his chosen calling, in 1857 and 1858 he took a special course in analytical chemistry and metallurgy in Brown University, devoting two hours per day from his business to this study. He was an inventor and took out a number of patents, the first important one being in 1855—a chemical patent—and the next one in 1860—a mechanical invention. In the last few years of his life he took out three patents on improvements for working ores. At one time for a period of five years, he carried on a wholesale and retail business in photographic goods in Cincinnati. In his refining business he did business with all the old manufacturing men of Providence, some two hundred of whom on his list have passed away. Mr. Darling studied much along scientific lines, his chief interest being along the line of astronomy and geology, and he read papers before both the Franklin and Providence Historical Societies. In 1853 he united with the Evangelical Free Church of Providence, and for seven years was the superintendent of its Sunday-school. In 1878 he organized the New England Mining Bureau and was always active in and at the head of it. He was a man of broad views, wide reading, and of very retentive memory. He possessed a vitality and mental alertness unusual in a man of his years, and he played a very important part in the many changes in his own locality. He died Dec. 31, 1906, and was buried in Swan Point cemetery. Mrs. Darling, since the death of her husband, makes her home at Shawmut Beach, R. I. She was much devoted to her husband, and did much to help him in his undertakings. She was a daughter of John and Mary (Most) Irion, the former a native of France, and the latter of Germany, a daughter of John Most, who was a general in the German army, and of noble birth. Mrs. Darling is a lady of talent, and has written a number of poems, some of which she has read in public. She is a member of the Rhode Island Veteran Historical Society, and for ten years was a Sunday-school teacher at Grace Episcopal Church. She is now a member of All Saints' Episcopal Church of Providence.

Mary Alice Weeden Darling, the only daughter of the late Levi B. and Mathilda B. (Irion) Darling, was born in Providence, where she was educated. She is a lady of natural ability and high attainments, and, like her mother, is a poetess of ability and has written several poems of merit. She is also an accomplished musician, and has written several dramas of recognized merit. She is much interested in art, drama, music and poetry, and is a member of the Rhode Island Veteran Historical Association. She is devoted to her mother and with her attends All Saints' Episcopal Church.

WILBAR. All of the members of the Wilbar family, however differently they spell their names, representatives of which may be found in nearly every State in the Union, are undoubtedly all descended from (I) Samuel Wilbore (Wildbore), who came from England about 1630, and settled near Boston, Mass. He was driven from the colony by the religious persecution of the Puritans, and with his family accepted an invitation from Roger Williams and came to Rhode Island, purchasing land on the Island of Aquidneck, becoming one of the prominent factors in the development of that island, upon which to this day live many of his descendants.

(II) Shadrach Wilbor (some descendants retained the final "e" in the spelling of the name), son of Samuel, inherited from his father at the latter's death in 1656, his real estate in Taunton with other property, settling in that part of Taunton which afterward became Raynham, on lands also of his father, which he eventually received by bequest. He was a man of wealth and influence in his time. He held several important trusts, represented his town in the Provincial Government, and served as town clerk thirty-five successive years. He died late in 1696 or early in 1697. The Christian name of his wife, named in his will, was Hannah, and his children were: Mary, born March 18, 1662 (died when in her thirteenth year); Samuel, April 1, 1663; Rebecca, Jan. 18, 1665; Hannah, Feb. 24, 1668 (died at the age of seven years); Joseph, July 27, 1670; Shadrach, Dec. 5, 1672; John, March 7, 1675; Eleazer, July 1, 1677; and Benjamin, July 23, 1683.

(III) Shadrach Wilbor (2), son of Shadrach, born Dec. 5, 1672, married and settled in Raynham, Mass. His five sons were: Shadrach, Meshach, Joseph, Jacob and Abijah.

(IV) Meshach Wilbor, son of Shadrach (2), married and settled in Raynham, Mass., probably on his father's homestead, where he lived through life. His sons were: Meshach, Lemuel, Simeon, Ephraim and George. In Raynham Center cemetery is a stone with the following memorial: "In memory of Mrs. Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Meshach Wilbore, died Nov. ye 30th, A. D. 1776, in ye seventieth year of her age."

(V) George Wilbur, son of Meshach, settled in Titicut parish, town of Bridgewater, Mass. The Christian name of his wife was Lydia, and their children, the first two or three of whom were born in Raynham, were: George, born in 1757; Isaac, in 1759; Gideon, in 1763; Seabury, in 1771; Bethana, in 1771; Bayrak, in 1773; Lovinia, in 1778; and Nicholas, in 1781.

(VI) George Wilbar (2), son of George, was born in 1757, in Raynham, Mass., removed with the family to Bridgewater, and in 1786 located in the town of Easton, Mass. He there built what in more recent years was known as the "Peter McDermott house." He died June 11, 1813, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. His first wife, Mrs. Bessy Wilbar, died May 3, 1807, when forty-nine years old, and Mr. Wilbar married (second) Mary Frances, a widow, and they had children as follows: Francis, mentioned below; and Sanford, who was engaged in farming in Bridgewater, where he lived to an advanced age, leaving several children at his death.

(VII) FRANCIS WILBAR, son of George (2), was born Feb. 4, 1809, in Easton, Mass. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed in Boston, Taunton, Bridgewater and other places, finally locating in Newport in 1852. After settling in this city he followed his trade for some time, and then purchased the planing mill situated at the corner of Spring and Sherman streets, which he conducted with success for many years, finally taking into partnership his sons. Several years prior to his death Mr. Wilbar retired from active business, and so lived until his death, which occurred April 19, 1888, in Newport. He was a quiet, unassuming man, but held the respect and esteem of all who knew him. A devout and consistent member of the Congregational Church, he served as deacon thereof for a number of years prior to his death. Deacon Wilbar was known as a conscientious, honest and straightforward man in all of his dealings.

On March 22, 1832, Deacon Wilbar was married to Charlotte King, born Aug. 21, 1812, daughter of Job King, of Taunton, Mass.; she died in Newport, April 12, 1902. There were born to this union children as follows: (1) Francis King, born Dec. 22, 1832, in Bridgewater, Mass., died in Newport, Oct. 21, 1895. He learned the carpenter's trade in his youth, and was later associated with his father and brothers in the planing mill, continuing therein until his death. He married, Oct. 4, 1855, Sarah Nicholai Wilkey, of Newport, and had children: Sarah Emma, who married Henry G. Hammett, of Newport, and she died in August, 1890, leaving two sons, Louis Wilbar and George Howland; Mary King, wife of J. Everett Kline, a prosperous agriculturist of Middletown, R. I.; and Esther Maud, at home. (2) Mary Jane, born Feb. 14, 1835, married, Jan. 15, 1857, Bradford Gay, formerly of Canton, Mass., but now of Newport, who was for many years successfully engaged in the painting business, but is now living retired. (3) George Henry and (4) Joseph Brainard are both mentioned below.

(5) Sarah Emma died aged two and one-half years.

(VIII) GEORGE HENRY WILBAR, son of Francis, was born Dec. 11, 1842, in Roxbury, Mass., and attended the common schools of his native town until ten years old, when his parents removed to Newport, in which latter city he attended school until seventeen years of age. After leaving school his time was divided between working on his father's farm in Newport and learning the carpenter's trade. After finishing the latter trade under his father's tuition, he was engaged at that occupation for several years, being employed by various contractors and builders, among them the late Benjamin Easton, in whose employ he continued for some time. In July, 1866, when his father engaged in the planing mill business, Mr. Wilbar became employed therein, and remained as an employe until about 1882, when, with his brothers, he purchased the business from his father, and continued to conduct it successfully until December, 1902. The brothers then retired from the business, leasing the mill to M. A. McCormick. Since retiring from this line Mr. Wilbar has been engaged in looking after his other business interests.

In politics Mr. Wilbar is a stalwart Republican, and has served his adopted city for a number of years as common councilman from the Third ward, also being, for several years, overseer of the poor. Socially Mr. Wilbar is a member of Exoelsior Lodge No. 49, I. O. O. F., and of Aquidneck Encampment, No. 5, I. O. O. F., and of Esther Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah. He is also a member of Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum; Powel Council, No. 65, Home Circle; Ocean Lodge, No. 7, A. O. U. W., and has taken an active interest in all of these societies, having passed through the chairs of a number of them. He was formerly a member of the Independent Order of Red Men, and of the United American Mechanics. Both Mr. Wilbar and his wife belong to the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Newport, to which they give their liberal support.

On Jan. 21, 1866, Mr. Wilbar was married (first) to Phebe A. Crowell, daughter of Benjamin Crowell, of Newport, where she died Nov. 19, 1894. To this union were born children as follows: Charlotte K., who died in infancy; Francis G., who married Minnie E. Fox, of Newport, where they reside; George H., Jr., who married Florence Sheldon, of Worcester, Mass., and they resided in Newport until his death, July 4, 1907, in the thirtieth year of his age. On Feb. 3, 1898, Mr. Wilbar was married (second) to Amelia M. Fry, who was born in England, daughter of Thomas and Ann Maria (Blake) Fry, of Newport. The only child of Mr. Wilbar's second marriage, Mary Bradford, born Sept. 16, 1901, in Newport, died there Feb. 15, 1907, aged five years and five months. Mr. Wilbar is one of the trustees of the Island Cemetery Association of Newport. He takes an active interest in all public affairs, and is a man who commands the respect and esteem of all who know him.

(VIII) JOSEPH BRAINARD WILBAR, son of the late Francis and Charlotte (King) Wilbar, was born Dec. 6, 1844, in Roxbury, Mass. He attended the schools of his native town until his parents removed to Newport, and in the latter city his education was completed in the Coddington Grammar school, where he finished when fifteen years of age. After leaving school Mr. Wilbar remained on his father's farm for a time, engaged in work thereon, and finally took up the carpenter's trade under his father. In 1866, when the latter purchased the planing mill on the corner of Spring and Sherman streets, young Wilbar went to work therein, and in 1882 was one of the brothers to purchase it from the father. He continued to be a partner until the sale of the planing mill in December, 1902, since which time he has lived retired.

Mr. Wilbar is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Republican party. His fraternal connections are with Excelsior Lodge, No. 49, and Aquidneck Encampment, No. 5, I. O. O. F.; with Ocean Lodge, No. 7, A. O. U. W.; Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum; Weenat Shassit Tribe, No. 6, Improved Order of Red Men, and the Jr. O. U. A. M. Mr. Wilbar and his family attend the United Congregational Church.

On July 25, 1865, Mr. Wilbar married Esther Ann Oman, daughter of John and Lucy (Grinnell) Oman, of Newport, and two children have been born to this union: John Henry, a mason by trade, who married Martha Sharples, of Newport, and has one daughter, Ethel Gay; and Charlotte King, who is secretary and assistant to Dr. H. W. Gillett, of New York and Newport. Mr. Wilbar and his family reside in a beautiful modern home on Ayrault street, which he designed and built in 1903.

EDWIN CLARK SAYLES, a venerable and highly esteemed citizen of Pascoag, now living retired after an active, honorable and successful business career covering many years, is a descendant in the seventh generation from John Sayles, who came from England in 1645 and soon after settled in Providence. He married Mary, daughter of Roger Williams, and became a prominent man in the Colony. As a more detailed account of this branch of the family is given on other pages of this publication we will here present only in outline the line of descent from John Sayles to Nicholas, the father of Edwin C., the Roman numerals indicating the generations.

(I) John Sayles married Mary Williams.

(II) John Sayles (2), son of John, married Elizabeth Olney.

(III) Richard Sayles, son of John (2), married Mercy Phillips.

(IV) Israel Sales, son of Richard, married Marsa Whipple.

(V) Ahab Sayles, son of Israel, married Lillis Steere.

(VI) Nicholas Sayles, son of Ahab, born Sept. 18, 1794, on the homestead farm in what is now Burrillville, very near the Glocester town line, early in life went to Pawtucket, where he was in the employ of his brother Clark, a well-known master builder. Nicholas Sayles after a few years returned to his native town and settled at Pascoag, where he conducted a blacksmith shop that stood on a part of the ground now occupied by the Granite Mill. Later on he engaged in shoemaking, which was his occupation until his retirement, when he removed to Dayville, Conn., some of his sons being located at that place, and there died Aug. 16, 1866. He was buried at Pascoag.

Mr. Sayles married Asenath Cook, born Nov. 20, 1795, and she died Sept. 8, 1865. Their children were: (1) Harris C., born June 17, 1817, was a well-known manufacturer of woolen goods at Dayville and Mechanicsville, Conn., at the former place being associated with his brother, Sabin L., under the firm name of H. C. & S. L. Sayles. He spent the latter years of his life at Providence, and there died Dec. 21, 1893. (2) Edwin C., was born Sept. 23, 1819. (3) Melissa F., born Nov. 25, 1821, is the widow of Warren Potter, and resides at Norwich, Conn. (4) Clovis S., born Jan. 20, 1824, died Sept. 19, 1889. When a young man he was a miner in the West, but later returned to New England, becoming a boss farmer for his brothers at Dayville, Conn. (5) Sabin L., born Feb. 18, 1827, was a woolen manufacturer at Dayville and one of the leading and prominent men of that place, being active in public life and serving at one time on the staff of Governor Jewell, with the rank of colonel. One of his daughters became the wife of the late Hon. Charles A. Russell, for many years a member of Congress from Connecticut. (6) Sarah L., twin of Sabin L., is the widow of Thomas D. Sayles, who was also a woolen goods manufacturer, and she resides at Norwich, Conn. (7) Leander, born Aug. 22, 1829, died Aug. 17, 1882. He went to California at an early day, and made a fortune, returning to Dayville, Conn., where the remainder of his life was spent. (8) Marietta, born June 1, 1833, died Aug. 11, 1853. (9) Maranda, born May 22, 1837, is the widow of Dr. Samuel O. Griffin, and resides in New York.

(VII) Edwin C. Sayles was born Sept. 23, 1819, at Pascoag, and received but limited educational advantages, going to work with his father at an early age as a teamster. Later he purchased the team and for thirty years was engaged in that business, hauling freight from the factory villages of Pascoag and Harrisville to Providence. He built up a large patronage in this line, having at one time as many as twenty horses in the work, and continued the business until the building of the Providence & Springfield Railroad, when he turned his attention to farming and the development of real estate. He opened High street through his farm and sold nearly all the lots on each side of the street, completing his present residence thereon in 1886. For a short period Mr. Sayles was associated with Job A. Walden in the manufacture of woolen goods at Bridgeton, and later Mr. Sayles disposed of this property to the present owner; Mr. Prendergast. He was also for a time connected with his son, Sabin L., in the coal business at Pascoag, under the firm name of E. C. Sayles & Son.

Edwin C. Sayles married Nancy Jane Tenney, who was born March 28, 1819, in Uxbridge, Mass., and died Aug. 29, 1894. To them were born these children: (1) Mary A., born Dec. 25, 1843, married Addison C. Sayles and resides at Pascoag. She has two children, Marion B. and Earl O. The former married Gorham Pomroy, and is the mother of one son, Gorham. (2) Henry F., born Dec. 19, 1845, a member of the firm of Sayles & Prendergast, resides at Woonsocket. He married Helen Walden, and they have had three children, Warren A. (who died young), Jennie N. and Helen Florence. (3) Maria J., born Oct. 27, 1847, died Sept. 14, 1848. (4) Sabin L., born May 27, 1850, married Marion W. Manchester. In early youth he began to assist his father in his business operations, and for some years was associated with his father in the coal business at Pascoag, later purchasing his father's interests, after which he continued the business alone as sole owner for many years, finally disposing of it. He always resided at the homestead in Pascoag, for some years having had the management thereof. (5) Edwin H., born June 25, 1854, died July 25, 1855. (6) Lenora E., born March 19, 1857, is the wife of Charles F. Potter, postmaster at Bridgeton, and bookkeeper for the Hopkins Machine works. They have had two children, Edwin J., a student at Brown University, and Mabel T. (7) Evelyn A., born Sept. 8, 1862, married James H. Hunter, an artist, and resides in Taunton, Massachusetts.

Mr. Sayles in his political views is a Republican, but he has never cared for office. For many years, until it went out of existence, he was a director in the Pascoag National Bank. He has always been a hard-working man, beginning without capital; in fact, he had to borrow the money with which to buy the team from his father. His energy, aggressiveness and business ability have, however, won for him a comfortable competency. He has ever been an honest and upright man, fair in his business dealings, and well merits the esteem in which he is held by his fellow-townsmen.

COL. HENRY P. WILLIAMS, who, during his lifetime, was one of the very highly respected citizens of Woonsocket, R. I., was born at Manchaug, Mass., April 6, 1842, and he died March 20, 1902.

The Williams family is an old settled one in Vermont, and there Albigence Williams, father of the late Col. Williams, was born and grew to manhood. He early learned the trade of woodworker, and when he reached maturity he left Fairfield, Vt., and went to the neighborhood of Sutton, Mass., where he became a master mechanic. He erected machinery in various mills, and worked at his trade all through Southbridge, Sutton, Blackstone and other places. In 1846 he came to Rhode Island and established his family at Woonsocket, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was looked upon as one of the leading men of the time and place in his line of work. He erected a dwelling on Willow street which is still owned by the family. He died there March 28, 1879, and was buried in Oak Hill cemetery. Mr. Williams had become one of Woonsocket's best known citizens. He was one of the directors of the old Union Bank, and took a deep interest in its business advancement. In politics he was identified with the Democratic party. He married Acosta Hall, born at Sutton, Mass. She died in the faith of the Universalist Church, May 27, 1881, at the age of eighty-five years, and was buried by the side of her husband, where a beautiful monument marks their last resting place. There were three children born to this marriage, viz.: Abbie, Charlotte W. and Henry Pierce. Of these,

The eldest daughter, Abbie, is the widow of the late Ezra M. Stockwell, of Woonsocket, and she resides in a pleasant home on Willow street. She has one daughter, Ida, who became the wife of Albert E. Ballou, of Cumberland, R. I., and they have one son, Maurice E., who graduated from the Worcester Academy in 1907. Mrs. Ballou makes her home with her mother, Mrs. Stockwell, and both are active members of the Universalist Church. Mrs. Ballou belongs also to a number of social organizations, and is a lady of culture and accomplishments.

The second daughter of Albigence Williams, Charlotte W., married George W. Dyer, and resides on Hamlet avenue, Woonsocket.

Henry Pierce Williams came to Woonsocket with his parents when he was four or five years old, and all of his business life was passed there. He was educated in the public schools, attending high school; and he later took a commercial course in the Bryant & Stratton Business College at Providence. He was considered one of the finest bookkeepers and penmen in the city, and he held many very responsible positions.

When the Civil war opened, however, he put aside all thought of personal advancement, and made preparations to enter the United States service. On Nov. 19, 1861, he was enrolled in Company D, 5th Rhode Island Heavy Artillery. He was soon promoted, being made first sergeant in October, 1862, and in February, 1863, he was acting second lieutenant. He was commissioned as first lieutenant, mustered in as such and assigned to Company H, in February, 1863. He was granted a 20-days' leave of absence, Aug. 21, 1863, and on Jan. 24, 1864, he was on detached service at Hill's Point. He was assigned to and commanding Company B, in September, 1864, and was mustered out of the service with his regiment, Dec. 22, 1864. Col. Williams was present and participated in nearly every battle in which his regiment took part, these including Roanoke Island, Newbern, siege of Fort Macon, siege of Little Washington, the first Confederate attack on Newbern, Goldsboro, and the second attack on Newbern. He served for more than three years in the Civil war, wearing the Union blue with honor to himself and with the greatest credit to his country.

Upon his return to a life of peace, Col. Williams entered the employ of C. C. Joslin, plumber, and remained there until he learned the trade, working with him for almost three years. He later became agent for the Earle & Prew Express Company which position he held nearly twenty years, at the end of that time becoming manager for Andrew N. Jenckes, who conducted a teaming business. He later became identified with the International Express Company, and its successors, the United States Express Company and New England Despatch, being connected with the latter when he retired from business a few years before his death.

Col. Williams was very prominent in G. A. R. circles, being a charter member of Smith Post, No. 9; was second commander of the Post, and held the office for two terms. He was always interested in military life, and was one of the reorganizers of the old Woonsocket Guards, and was elected colonel of that body. He was a valued member of the Rhode Island Veteran Association. At all times Col. Williams was a zealous Republican and at the time of his death he was a member of the license committee, being the first chairman of the board, a position in which he had served almost ten years. He was a member of several fraternal societies; was a charter member of Eureka Lodge, No. 28, I. O. O. F.; of Washington Lodge, Knights of Honor; and for twenty-eight years was a member of Minerva Lodge, Daughters of Rebekah.

On April 4, 1867, Col. Williams was married to Mrs. Catherine E. (Carey) Pratt, widow of Rodney Harper Pratt, a resident of Boston, and daughter of Francis Carey. Mrs. Williams died Sept. 3, 1906. She had one son, Walter R. (Pratt) Williams. The latter was reared and educated at Woonsocket, and learned the trade of machinist. He also worked in the express business with his late father and subsequently assisted in the construction of the Alice mills, and still later became bookkeeper and assistant paymaster, a position he still fills. Like his father, he has always been fond of military life, and is a member of the Sons of Veterans Camp, in which he holds the rank of captain; and he is past division commander, with rank of colonel, of the Rhode Island Division, Sons of Veterans. He is a member of Blackstone River Lodge, A. F. & A. M.; Royal Arch Chapter, No. 5; Woonsocket Council, Royal and Select Masters; and Woonsocket Commandery, Knights Templar. Walter R. Williams married Minnie Norvel Brown, and they have three children, viz.: Ethel Aldrich, Charlotte Hall, and Ruth. In politics Mr. Williams is a Republican.

In closing this all too brief record of the life and services of one of Woonsocket's leading and esteemed citizens, we append the full account of his funeral obsequies which appeared in one of the city's prominent journals at the time:

"There was a very large attendance at the funeral of Col. Henry P. Williams, at his late home, 42 Willow street, the many friends of the deceased coming in large numbers to pay their respects. Besides this were delegations from Smith Post, No. 9, G. A. R.; Eureka Lodge, No. 28, I. O. O. F.; Palestine Encampment, No. 3, I. O. O. F.; the Fifth R. I. Heavy Artillery Assn.; Smith's Womans Relief Corps, No. 14; Washington Lodge, No. 1269, Knights of Honor; Charles F. Gordon Camp, No. 10, Sons of Veterans; Minerva Lodge, No. 4, Daughters of Rebekah, and the license commissioners. There were forty-five members of Smith Post who met at G. A. R. hall on Main street, and marched to the house. Thirty members of Eureka Lodge marched from their hall on Bernon street to the house, and the members of the license commission, of which Col. Williams was chairman, attended.

"Rev. Charles J. White, D. D., pastor of the Universalist Church, conducted the funeral services, and spoke of the deceased as one of the prominent men of the city, and one who was identified with the important interests of the community. The impressiveness of the service was much increased by the singing of the Business Men's quartet. There was a profusion of floral gifts from friends, relatives, societies and other organizations. Beautiful set pieces were sent by a number of the organizations to which Col. Williams belonged. Interment was in Oak Hill cemetery. The services at the grave were in charge of the Grand Army and appropriate exercises were carried out. The delegation from the Fifth Rhode Island Heavy Artillery was a representative one. All these organizations were striving to show their deep respect for a brave comrade, a true friend and honorable and upright citizen."

SWAN (Newport family). Since early in the eighteenth century, for now nearly two hundred years, the Swans of Newport have been a continuous family there and identified with its growth and progress, and, perhaps, no man during his time was more fully a Newporter than one member of this family, the late James C. Swan, long one of the city's leading and useful citizens, closely allied in various ways to its people, for fifty years connected with its banking interests and president of one of its financial institutions, a man of means and popular in his community, where his memory will be the more cherished as the years pass.

The vital records of Newport reveal the births of two Swan children, twins, as occurring Feb. 23, 1710-11, the name of only one, Hannah, being given, who died July 12 of that same year. There follows the record of the children of William and Anna (Gifford) Swan, whose marriage occurred Jan. 26, 1716, which is: Elizabeth, born Sept. 19, 1717; William, May 10, 1719; Richard, Aug. 1, 1721; Henry, Sept. 17, 1723; and Ann, Oct. 7, 1727.

The children of Alexander and Elizabeth (Pitman) Swan, whose marriage occurred Nov. 24, 1742, were: John, born Aug. 25, 1743; Gustavus, baptized June 23, 1745; Catherine, baptized Sept. 6, 1747; and Alexander, born Aug. 9, 1749.

These early Swan families of Newport we have not connected with earlier settlers of the name in New England, but Judge Wheeler, in his Stonington, Conn., genealogies, says the ancestor of the Connecticut and Rhode Island Swans was Richard Swan, and here follows the genealogy of the family to the Stonington settler. We have not found the connection between Richard Swan, the New England immigrant, and the early family of Newport cited in the foregoing.

(I) Richard Swan is of record in this country first at Boston, where he united with the church Jan. 6, 1639. Later he removed to Rowley, where he remained during his life, becoming a prominent citizen of that place, representing the town in the General Court of Massachusetts in 1666, and many years after. He served in King Philip's war, and in an expedition to Canada. He was twice married, his first wife dying in England before he came to this country. He married (second) March 1, 1658, Mrs. Ann Trumbull. Mr. Swan died May 14, 1678. His children, all born to the first marriage, were: Richard, Frances, Robert, Jonathan, Susan, Sarah and John.

(II) Robert Swan, born in 1628, married Elizabeth Acie, both at that time being of Rowley. Soon thereafter they moved to Andover, and as early as 1650 removed to that part of Haverhill which became Methuen. Mr. Swan was a soldier, and at the great Swamp fight which occurred in Rhode Island during King Philip's war. Mrs. Swan died in 1689, and he married (second), in 1690, Hannah Russ. He died Feb. 11, 1698. His children, born to the first marriage, were: Elizabeth, born Sept. 30, 1653; Sarah, Aug. 10, 1655; Robert, May 30, 1657; Ann, March 2, 1658; Richard, Feb. 24, 1660; Timothy, March 20, 1663; Dorothy, Nov. 8, 1666; John, Aug. 1, 1668; Samuel, April 11, 1670; Samuel (2), Oct. 24, 1672; Joshua, Sept. 13, 1674; Caleb, June 18, 1676.

Of these children, John Swan married, in 1699, Mrs. Susanna Wood, daughter of Philip Eastman, and with his family in 1707, removed to the town of North Stonington, Conn., where the rest of his children were born.

Richard Swan, son of William and Anna (Gifford) Swan, of Newport, born Aug. 1, 1721, married, Aug. 21, 1742, Rachel Ann Phillips.

Richard Swan, born Nov. 26, 1775, in Newport, R. I., married, Oct. 29, 1803, Elizabeth Brown, of North Kingstown, R. I., born there April 6, 1778, and their ten children, all of Newport record, were as follows: (1) Marian, born Sept. 14, 1804, died unmarried. (2) William Brown, born Dec. 18, 1805, was a tailor residing in Newport, where he died Nov. 22, 1880. At one time he was colonel of the Newport Artillery Company. He married Vianna Chase, who died Feb. 20, 1890, leaving no children. (3) Elizabeth Brown, born Nov. 14, 1807, married Job A. Peckham, of Newport. They were the parents of nine children: Anna, who married Charles B. Burrington, of Providence, and left one son, Arthur; Henry S., deceased; Edward, deceased; Job A., Jr., who married (first) Abby Westcott, and (second) Jennie Barker; Jane S., deceased; Alexander, residing in Newport, unmarried; Alfred, who married Eloise Davis, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Elizabeth, residing in Newport, unmarried; and James, deceased. (4) Richard, born Feb. 22, 1809, a music teacher of Newport, died May 8, 1880. He married Mary Cannon, of New Bedford, Mass., and to them were born three children, James, Bessie and Richard, all deceased. (5) James Center, born March 6, 1811, is mentioned below. (6) Edwin Julius, born May 27, 1812, was a tailor of Newport, and died there Aug. 22, 1878. He married Catherine C. Lawton, of Portsmouth, R. I., and they had two sons, Edward P. and George L. (7) Henry, born June 5, 1814, died Oct. 18, 1819. (8) Sallie Center, born Dec. 21, 1815, is unmarried. (9) Jane Wilson, born Jan. 21, 1817, married William B. Rider, of Newport, and was the mother of one son, Henry, who died Sept. 19, 1889, at the age of fifty years. (10) Caroline Louise, born Feb. 6, 1819, married Thomas R. Taber, of New Bedford, Mass., and is now deceased. He was a ship-pump and block manufacturer. The children born to them were: Isabella C., Richard Swan and James C. S.

JAMES C. SWAN, son of Richard and Elizabeth (Brown) Swan, was born March 6, 1811, in Newport, R. I., where his boyhood was passed in a manner common to the general run of boys. After his school days were over, in time he engaged in the business of making neck stocks. He had a taste and talent for music, which as the years passed by, he cultivated, and soon made the teaching of piano and organ music and that of a performer a profession. He became a proficient musician, and not only that but took up the profession of a tuner of those instruments, becoming an expert in that line. He was for a period organist at Trinity, and also at the Unitarian Church, the United Congregational Church and St. Mary's Church, Newport, Rhode Island.

Mr. Swan was a man of a kind, generous nature, having at all times a pleasant word and greeting for all. He was well informed, a good conversationalist, and had the happy faculty of being a good entertainer. Having always lived in Newport and being a close observer of events, he became thoroughly familiar with the history of his native place, and being a writer of no mean ability, he frequently contributed to the press reminiscences that were instructive and interesting. To him Newport and her people—past and present—were most dear. He loved to live in the reveries of the past.

Mr. Swan was a careful manager of his business affairs and he accumulated a fortune. For nearly fifty years he was closely identified with the financial institutions of Newport, and it goes without saying that he was also closely allied with other business enterprises and as well prominently and officially. He was a man of affairs and his opinions and advice in financial and business matters were weighty and often sought. He was made a director of the New England Commercial Bank in 1858, and so remained until the time of his death. He succeeded in 1880 in the presidency of this institution the late George Bowen, and he was re-elected to that position each year thereafter up to the time of his death. He was one of the incorporators of the Savings Bank of Newport in 1866, and in 1878 he was chosen a director in that institution. He was made one of the investment committee of that bank in 1879, and from 1879 to 1888 served it as vice-president. In 1888 he succeeded Richard Cornell to the presidency of the institution, a relation he sustained to it from that time until his death. He was elected, in 1879, a member of the board of trustees of Long Wharf, and from 1886 until the time of his death he served as president of the board. He was a member of the Board of Directors of the Newport Gas Light Company. In his early manhood Mr. Swan was a member of the Newport Artillery Company, and at the time of the "Dorr war," in 1842, and with it went to Providence on the call of the Governor. At this time his brother, the late Col. William B. Swan, was in command of the company.

Mr. Swan made his home with his sister, Miss Sallie C. Swan, of Newport. His death occurred Oct. 20, 1898.

STODDARD. (I) John Stodder or Stoddard, the planter, and ancestor of the family of that name, of Hingham and vicinity, had a grant of land there in 1638. He was made a freeman in 1642, then referred to as of Hull. The Christian name of his wife, whom he probably married in England, was Anna or Hannah. Mr. Stoddard died Dec. 19, 1661. His children were: John, born in England; Hannah, born in England; Elizabeth, born in England; Daniel, born in 1633, in England; and Samuel, born June 14, 1640, in Hingham, Massachusetts.

(II) Samuel Stoddard, son of John, was married (first) Jan. 6, 1666-67, to Elizabeth Gill, daughter of Thomas and Hannah (Otis) Gill. She was baptized in Hingham in June, 1647, and died May 8, 1693. Mr. Stoddard married (second) Jan. 12, 1698-99, Mrs. Martha (Beal) Chubbuck, widow of John Chubbuck, and daughter of Nathaniel and Martha Beal. She was born Aug. 7, 1646, in Hingham, Mass. Mr. Stoddard died Sept. 16, 1731. He had been made a freeman in 1677, was selectman in 1691, and was known as "Sergeant." He resided on Main street, near the corner of Elm. Mr. Stoddard's children, all born in Hingham, were: Elizabeth and Tabitha, twins, born Dec. 1, 1667; Samuel, Aug. 11, 1670; Mary, Aug. 30, 1672; Stephen, Sept. 18, 1674; Thomas, Dec. 19, 1676; Simon, Feb. 17, 1678-79; Rachel, March 9, 1680; Jeremiah, Nov. 3, 1683; Jonathan, May 1, 1685-86; David, July 9, 1688; and David (2), March 19, 1692-93.

(III) Jonathan Stoddard, son of Samuel, born May 1, 1685-86, married in 1724 Mary Dring, their marriage being of Little Compton town record, as were also the births of their children, viz.: Elijah, born Sept. 24, 1725 (died Sept. 17, 1732); Hannah Dring, born May 15, 1727; Salisbury, born June 17, 1730; Mary, born Aug. 31, 1732 (died Oct. 4, 1732); Ruth, born Oct. 1, 1733; David, born May 13, 1736 (died Jan. 23, 1818); Mary Crandall, born in June, 1739; and Jonathan, born May 4, 1741.

(IV) Salisbury Stoddard, son of Jonathan, was born June 17, 1730, and married Sept. 20, 1750, Hannah Dring, who was born in 1731. Their children of Middletown record were: Thomas, born June 13, 1751; Rachel, born Feb. 4, 1754; Isaac, born March 26, 1757; Hannah, born June 1, 1760; Ruth, born Nov. 11, 1765; Salisbury (2); and Samuel, born April 19, 1769.

(V) Salisbury Stoddard (2), son of Salisbury, was born May 20, 1767, and married Nov. 20, 1787, Huldah Jacobs, and to this union there were born children as follows: Martha, born Feb. 20, 1789, married a Mr. Carpenter, of Providence; Thomas Dring, born Oct. 3, 1792, is mentioned further on; Isaac, born April 3, 1794, died aged twenty-six years, in Savannah, Ga.; John H., born March 3, 1796, married a Miss Franklin; Salisbury, Jr., born Feb. 22, 1798, died at sea when aged twenty-two years; Hannah, born Feb. 12, 1801, married John Potter; Bela Allen, born Oct. 31, 1804, married Phebe Gibbs, a widow, of Portsmouth, R. I.; Eloise was born Jan. 11, 1806; Benjamin, born Jan. 1, 1808, married Ann Stoddard; Jacob, born July 29, 1811, married Abby Macomber; and Allen, born June 23, 1814, married Mary Pierce.

(VI) Thomas Dring Stoddard, son of Salisbury (2), was born in Middletown, R. I., Oct. 3, 1792. He followed the sea all his life, being mate on various ocean-going vessels, and died in 1832 at Savannah, Ga., where he had left one ship and was awaiting another, on which he was to have sailed. Thomas Dring Stoddard was married (first) to Rhoda Head and (second) to Miss Hannah Caswell, daughter of William and Mercy (Buloid) Caswell, of Kingston, R. I. To this latter union were born children as follows: John C., Thomas D., Jr., Isaac Newton, Mercy Buloid, and Hannah. The last named died in Newport, Feb. 3, 1907, unmarried.

(VII) JOHN CASWELL STODDARD, the eldest son of the late Thomas Dring and Hannah (Caswell) Stoddard, was born June 11, 1819, in Newport, where his long and useful life was spent. After receiving a rather meager schooling, in young manhood he went to New York City, where he learned the painter's trade. After acquiring a thorough knowledge thereof he returned to Newport, where he followed that business until his death, for a period at first being in business alone, but later associated with others. For fifteen years and more prior to his death he was the senior member of the well-known firm of J. C. Stoddard & Co., painting and decorating contractors, dealers in paints, varnishes, supplies, etc., their place of business being located on Long Wharf. By industry, thrift and close application to business Mr. Stoddard became prosperous, and at the time of his death had accumulated a comfortable competency.

Mr. Stoddard was a man of high honor and integrity, and early in life won the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens. As the years passed, and his successful management of his own business affairs became recognized, he was called upon to assist in looking after the business of the city in various ways. He was often chosen to public office, filling positions of trust and honor with the rare good judgment and fidelity ever characteristic of the man. In political faith he was a stalwart Republican, and as such was chosen to serve his native city for several years as a member of the common council and of the board of aldermen. He was vice-president of the Island Savings Bank, holding the latter position until a short time before his death. Mr. Stoddard was a man of kindly nature and big heart, ever ready to do his fellow-man a kindness. He was genial and companionable at all times, giving his counsel and advice to all who sought it. He was quite a fraternal man, being a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; Newport Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M.; Washington Commandery, No. 2, K. T., of Newport; he was also a member of Rhode Island Lodge No. 12, and of Aquidneck Encampment, No. 5, I. O. O. F., of Newport. Although not a member, Mr. Stoddard attended the First Methodist Episcopal Church, to which his wife belonged, and to which they gave their liberal support.

On Nov. 1, 1845, Mr. Stoddard was united in marriage with Margaret A. Taylor, daughter of Charles Taylor, of Newport, who was connected with the United States navy at that time, and she died Jan. 30, 1905. Mr. Stoddard breathed his last July 3, 1890. Mr. and Mrs. Stoddard became the parents of the following children: Elizabeth T., who resides in Newport, unmarried; Sarah A., widow of the late George S. Hazard, of Newport, an extended review of whose family will be found elsewhere in this work; John H., who is a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y., where he is successfully engaged in the real estate and brokerage business (he married Lucy Wheeler, of Brooklyn, who died leaving one son, Caswell Wheeler Stoddard); Deborah, who also resides in Newport, unmarried; and Hannah, the wife of William S. Hazard, of Newport, whose family record will be found in another part of this publication.

John C. Stoddard loved the city of his birth, and its interests and the welfare of its people seemed his own; and so long as health and strength were with him he labored for and did much to advance the city's interests. While not a man who sought political preferment he at various times accepted positions of trust and responsibility tendered him by his fellow-citizens, and invariably discharged their duties with fidelity and capability. He was charitable and kind-hearted, and none were ever turned from his door without the feeling that in him they had a friend who sympathized with them, although he was the kind that kept his left hand from knowing what his right hand was doing. In the death of Mr. Stoddard, Newport lost one of its most estimable citizens, one who had endeared himself to many friends.

(VII) THOMAS DRING STODDARD, JR., the second son of Thomas Dring and Hannah (Caswell) Stoddard, was born Feb. 22, 1822, in Newport, where he died July 12, 1896. He was a boat builder by occupation, and was successfully engaged in that business for many years, being located on Long Wharf, where he had an extensive establishment, in which many of the old-time whaling vessels were built. He and his family were lifelong members of the First Baptist Church of Newport, and he was a religious man, taking an active part in church work. In political faith he was a staunch Republican, and served his native city as a member of the common council and of the board of aldermen. Mr. Stoddard was a careful, conservative business man, and bore the esteem of the entire community.

Mr. Stoddard was married Sept. 21, 1848, to Deborah Potter, who passed away March 19, 1856, and for his second wife he married Charlotte Cox, whose death occurred in Newport, July 11, 1892. To the first union were born children as follows: (1) Thomas Jefferson, died Sept. 29, 1903, in Newport. He had followed the trade of boat-builder with his father for a number of years, and then engaged in the grocery business, in which he continued for about four years. He married Lillie D. Somes, of Boston, and one daughter was born to this union, Millie L., who is the wife of Benjamin B. Coggeshall, of Newport; they have two children, Ivan Stoddard and Chester Peabody Coggeshall. (2) Mary Louisa, who remained at home and cared for her parents in their old age, lives in Newport, unmarried. (3) William died unmarried.

To the second marriage of Thomas D. Stoddard were born two children; (1) John H. Cox died in infancy. (2) George Saunders, born July 10, 1866, is a contractor and builder of Newport. He married Mary Rogers Clarke, of Newport, and has one daughter, Charlotte Rogers Stoddard.

(VII) ISAAC NEWTON STODDARD, the third child of Thomas Dring and Hannah (Caswell) Stoddard, was born April 7, 1824, in Newport, and in early life learned the trade of blacksmith and later that of wood turner, under Robert Knight, of South Scituate, R. I. He was engaged in the making of spools and bobbins for thirty years, and then entered the employ of the Blackstone Manufacturing Company, having charge of the spool and bobbin department of that firm for about five years, at the end of which time he engaged with the Spool & Bobbin Manufacturing Company, of Fall River, Mass., for about a year and a half. In 1880 Mr. Stoddard returned to Newport and opened a cabinet-makers' and builders' turning establishment, which he conducted for about one and a half years, after which time until his death he was engaged in manufacturing dental supplies.

Mr. Stoddard was a member of Hamilton Lodge, A. F. & A. M., of South Scituate, and of the Masonic Mutual Relief Association, of Springfield, Mass. Although not a member, he was identified with the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Newport, which his wife also attended. On Feb. 28, 1849, Mr. Stoddard was married (first) to Sarah W., daughter of Robert Knight, of South Scituate, and she passed away in Newport, July 20, 1895. By this union there were children as follows: Robert Knight, born Sept. 17, 1850, is unmarried, and resides in Newport; William Caswell was born March 20, 1858, in South Scituate. On July 22, 1897, Isaac N. Stoddard married (second) Helen Hall Wright, who survives him. Mr. Stoddard died in Newport, Nov. 19, 1905.

(VIII) WILLIAM CASWELL STODDARD, D. D. S., son of the late Isaac N. and Sarah W. (Knight) Stoddard, was born March 20, 1858, in South Scituate, R. I., and began his early educational training in his native town, going to the district school then taught by Dexter B. Potter, now of Providence. After leaving the district schools of South Scituate he attended school in North Smithfield and Waterford, Mass., later returning to North Smithfield, where he went to a school taught by Frank Thayer. From there he went to the Dean Academy, at Franklin, Mass., in 1871-72, and then took the regular course of study at Bryant & Stratton's Business College, Providence. Having graduated from the business college, Mr. Stoddard became bookkeeper for Wilbur & Tingley, flour merchants, of Pawtucket, R. I., in whose employ he remained until 1876. Being of an ambitious nature, and having determined upon the profession of dentistry for his lifework, on April 16, 1877, he entered the office of Dr. W. B. Stevens, of Fall River, Mass., in whose office he was a student for eighteen months. He next became a student and assistant in the office of J. C. Walton, of Providence, remaining with the latter doctor for six months. Having acquired a practical knowledge of the profession, Dr. Stoddard on May 1, 1879, opened an office in Newport, at the corner of Thames and Touro streets, later removing to Washington Square, and in 1906 to his present quarters, on Division street. During the years 1883, 1884 and 1885, although actively engaged in the practice of his chosen profession, the Doctor attended the Boston Dental College (now Tufts), from which he graduated April 1st of the latter year, with the degree of D. D. S.

Dr. Stoddard is well known in the fraternities, being a member of St. Paul's Lodge, No. 14; A. F. & A. M., of which he is junior deacon and musical director; of Newport Chapter No. 2, R. A. M.; De Blois Council, No. 5, R. & S. M.; Washington Commandery, No. 4, K. T., of Newport; and is a charter member of Palestine Temple, Order of the Mystic Shrine, of Providence. He is a director of the Newport Co-operative Association for Savings and Building, and a member of the Newport Natural History Society, of which he is curator. The Doctor is connected with the First Presbyterian Church, to which his wife and children also belong, and to which he gives his liberal support. He is the kind of man whose active mind is not satisfied with present conditions in his profession. He is constantly studying, keeping himself well in touch with the discoveries and theories of the day, and has shown himself a careful, skillful practitioner, deserving of the confidence of the people among whom he is enjoying a large and lucrative practice. He and his family are much esteemed in Newport, where so many of the members of this old family have made their homes.

On April 30, 1885, Dr. William Caswell Stoddard and Miss Ida Burnside Winsor were united in marriage. She was born in Greenville, R. I., daughter of William W. Winsor, of South Scituate. Two children have been born to Dr. and Mrs. Stoddard, namely: Jennie Winsor and Helen Lincoln Stoddard.

Dr. Stoddard is a direct descendant in the eleventh generation from John Alden and Priscilla Mullens, tracing his line back through Isaac N. Stoddard and Sarah W. Knight (X); Thomas D. Stoddard and Hannah Caswell (IX); Salisbury Stoddard and Huldah Jacobs (VIII); Salisbury Stoddard and Hannah Dring (VII); Jonathan Stoddard and Mary Dring (VI); Thomas Dring and Sarah Searle (V); Nathaniel Searle and Sarah Rogers (IV); John Rogers and Elizabeth Pabodie (III); William Pabodie and Elizabeth Alden (II); to John Alden and Priscilla Mullens (I) of the "Mayflower," whose courtship Longfellow made famous by his poem.

(VII) MERCY BULOM (STODDARD) ROWAND, the fourth of the children born to the late Thomas Dring and Hannah (Caswell) Stoddard, was born in Newport, R. I. She was married (first) in 1847 in that city to George Saunders, of Providence, who was extensively engaged in business in Providence as an oyster planter and grower, owning large oyster beds in Narragansett bay. He died in Providence in 1864. No children were born to this union. In 1872 Mrs. Saunders was married (second) to Thomas R. Rowand, of Pomfret, Conn., who was a painter by trade, and for several years prior to his death a member of the well-known firm of J. C. Stoddard & Co. Mr. Rowand's death occurred Aug. 10, 1902, in Newport. He was of a very retiring, unassuming nature, and was very domestic in his habits. He attended the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of which Mrs. Rowand is a member.

HAYWARD-LEONARD (Providence family). Early in the nineteenth century there came to Providence the family of Benjamin and Philibert (Leonard) Hayward, and not many years thereafter the husband and father died, leaving to his widow the care of five children. One of these children was the late George W. Hayward, long one of the prominent business men of Providence, who for a decade and a half was a member of the extensive baking establishment of Rice, Hayward & Co., having been its founder, and for a number of years was a member of the common council. Two of the sons of Mr. Hayward have perpetuated the name here in Providence, namely: Joseph B. Hayward, a well-known citizen of Pawtuxet who at one time was postmaster of that place, and George W. Hayward.

Benjamin Hayward and Philibert (Leonard) were married in 1807, she being of Middleboro, Mass., daughter of Capt. Zedock and Deborah (Keith) Leonard, whose marriage is of record in Bridgewater, Mass., as occurring in 1765, and who were both of patriotic stock, their fathers being soldiers of the Revolution. For many years prior to his removal to Providence Mr. Benjamin Hayward had been engaged in the furnace business at Bridgewater, Massachusetts.

The progenitor of the Haywards of Bridgewater was Thomas Hayward of Avlesford, England, who, with his wife Susanna and five children, came to New England in March, 1634, settling at Cambridge, where he was a proprietor, 1635-36. Removing to Duxbury, he was a proprietor and purchaser there Nov. 5, 1638, and a freeman in 1646. He then went to Bridgewater, Mass., of which place he was among the earliest and oldest settlers. He died in 1681, and his wife died prior to the making of his will in 1678. Their children were: Thomas, Nathaniel, John, Joseph, Elisha, Mary and Martha.

The Raynham Leonards from which the Leonards referred to in the foregoing trace their descent were James and Margaret Leonard, who settled in Taunton, Mass., in 1652. James was the son of Thomas Leonard of Pontypool, Wales, who claimed descent from Leonard Lord Dacre, one of the most distinguished families of the nobility of the United Kingdom; and descended in two lines from Edward III, through two of his sons, John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, and Thomas Plantaganet, Duke of Gloucester (see History of Gloucester, Mass. (1859), by George Faber Clark). These Taunton-Raynham Leonards were from generation to generation identified with the iron industry there, the early family being credited with having built the first iron forge in America.

The late GEORGE W. HAYWARD of Providence, son of Benjamin of Bridgewater, Mass., and Providence, R. I., was born Nov. 23, 1812, in Middleboro, Mass. His father's death left the mother with five children, and with but little for their support. These conditions left young George W. to early care for himself—to be self-reliant—and with only limited educational advantages; these, however, he improved. Until fifteen years of age his boyhood was passed at work in the factories of his locality, saving a few months each year which were given to his books in the neighborhood schools. When fifteen years of age, or thereabouts, the youth began an apprenticeship at the baker's trade with Deacon Wardwell, of Providence, furthered it with Mr. Arnold Russell, of the same place, and finally completed the trade at Medfield, Mass., with Mr. W. P. Balch, and there passed a three-months' term at school. Later on, having completed his trade and worked as a journeyman for several years young Hayward spent some three years as a clerk in the hardware and lumber establishment of Joseph Burrows & Son, at Providence.

While at Medfield Mr. Hayward had become acquainted with the late Mr. Fitz James Rice, of Providence, who at the time was also an apprentice at the same trade with him and under the same man—Mr. Balch. In 1849 these two former Medfield apprentices associated themselves together at Providence in the baking business, and their conduct of the business continued through a period of some fourteen years, during which time by their good management, honest effort and industry they built up a large and lucrative trade. At the time of the retirement of George W. from the business in 1863, their establishment was one of the largest and most complete of its kind in the country.

From the time of his retirement from active business in 1863 until the time of his death, Mr. Hayward gave his attention to the management of his own property. He figured some little in the public affairs of the city; was elected a member of the common council in 1863, and continued a member of that body, rendering efficient service for four years. He was chosen one of the first board of directors, at the organization of the Citizens' Savings Bank of Providence, and for many years served as such. In 1859 he united with St. John's Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons and continued membership with it throughout life. He was also a member of Calvary Commandery, Knights Templar, from 1860 until the time of his death. He held the esteem and respect of the community at large. His religious connection was with the Second Baptist Church at Providence, he having united with that body in 1858.

On Nov. 9, 1840, Mr. Hayward was married to Julia A. G. Burrows, daughter of the late Hon. Joseph Burrows, a well-known and highly esteemed citizen of Providence, and to the union came children as follows: Maria Burrows, who died Aug. 6, 1842, in Providence; Annie Leonard, who died March 3, 1857, also in Providence; Joseph Burrows, who married (first) Phebe H. Ralph, of Pawtuxet, and (second) Clara E. Brown; and George W. Mr. George W. Hayward, the father, died at his home in Providence, Dec. 18, 1888.

JOSEPH B. HAYWARD was born on Spring street, Providence, May 24, 1845, son of George W. and Julia A. G. (Burrows) Hayward. He attended the Summer Street school, Providence, and the private schools of James Stone, of Foxboro, Mass., Merrick Lyon and Sam Austin, the latter's place being in the octagonal building in the rear of what is now the Boston Store. He left school when sixteen years of age. In 1862 he enlisted in Company E, 10th Regiment, R. I. V., Capt. H. B. Cady, and served for three months. After the expiration of his term of service, he became money deliverer for the Adams Express Company, handling from $100,000 to $250,000 per day. He continued in that position for five years, and during all of that time not a single dollar went wrong or was misdelivered. He then went to work as foreman for S. W. Baker, blanket manufacturer, and continued with him for three years. At the expiration of this service Mr. Hayward became proprietor of the Old Washington Stable which was then located where the Bani-gan Building now is. After about six months he disposed of his interests in this business, and became a traveling salesman, which occupation he followed most successfully for sixteen years and became one of the well known and popular salesman through the territory in which he traveled. He left the road in 1903, and is now living in retirement. He was appointed postmaster at Pawtuxet by President Cleveland in 1885, and held the office for four years. Mr. Hayward is and has been independent in politics. The only orders, fraternal or otherwise, to which he belongs are the Travelers Protective Association of America and Prescott Post, No. 1, G. A. R., of Providence. He is a member of the Episcopal Church of Pawtuxet.

As noted above Mr. Hayward was married (first) to Phebe H. Ralph, of Pawtuxet, and the children born to this union were: Louis Rhodes, born in 1872, traveling salesman and living at home; and Emma Leonard, born in 1873, married to Dr. Harry W. Kimball, of Providence. Mr. Hayward's second wife was Clara E. Brown, daughter of Frederick E. Brown, of Brown & Earle, whom he married in 1897.

NATHAN B. HORTON. The Horton family, while not an old one in the State of Rhode Island, has furnished to the city of Providence two of her best known men in their line in the persons of the late Nathan B. Horton, who established the business out of which has grown the firm of Horton & Hemenway, one of the best known firms of contractors and builders in New England, and of which his son, Fred B., is the senior member.

The published lineage of members of the Massachusetts family sets forth that John Horton with two brothers came from England to New England as early as 1640, John settling in Rehoboth, Mass., where he married Mehetable Gamzey, and had eight children. The descendants of John Horton are, and have been, very numerous in Rehoboth and surrounding towns. The lineage of the late Nathan B. Horton, of Providence, is through Solomon Horton, supposedly a grandson of John of Rehoboth. Solomon Horton, of Rehoboth, married Mary —, and their children of record there are: Charles, born March 18, 1739; Constant, Oct. 29, 1740; Solomon, Jan. 15, 1742; Mary, Aug. 10, 1745; Abiel, Oct. 14, 1747; Daniel, Jan. 30 (or 20), 1749; and Aaron, March 21, 1752.

Daniel Horton, son of Solomon, was born Jan. 20 (or 30), 1749, and resided in Rehoboth, a farmer by occupation. In 1779, he married Mary Goff. Their children, all born in Rehoboth, were: Nancy, born Oct. 15, 1780, resided at Rehoboth where she died in middle age unmarried; Sylvanus, born Sept. 20, 1782, married Hannah Slade, and resided at Rehoboth; Simeon, born Sept. 27, 1784, married Malvina M. Wheeler, and died in Rehoboth, a farmer; Rachel, born Jan. 18, 1787, married John Slade, and died in Somerset, Mass.; Polly, born Aug. 6, 1789, married Isaiah Simmons, and died in Bristol, R. I.; Lettie, born Dec. 22, 1791, married George Case, and resided at Rehoboth; and Royal, born Nov. 18, 1795.

Royal Horton, father of the late Nathan B. Horton, was born at Rehoboth, Mass., Nov. 18, 1795. He followed the occupation of farming, and with the exception of a few years' residence on Bristol Neck, he spent his entire life in the town where he was born, and there he died in early manhood. He married Eunice Lee, who survived him, and later became the wife of Benjamin Childs, who survived her. By her second marriage she had one son, Benjamin Childs, Jr., who married Emma Arnold, and died in Providence. The children of Royal and Eunice (Lee) Horton were: (1) Daniel, married (first) Harriet Amanda Tanner, and (second) Mrs. Cornelia Rich. By his first marriage he had one daughter, Isabell, who married Moses W. Horton, of Providence. Daniel Horton in early life was a carpenter, later engaging in the real estate business in Providence, where his death occurred. (2) Stephen was a resident of Rehoboth, but died at the home of his brother, Nathan B., in Providence. (3) Nathan B. was next in order of birth. (4) Nancy Maria married (first) John W. Cole, and (second) Stephen Garland, and resided in Providence, where she died in 1904. By her first marriage, she had a son, John W., who is a resident of Providence. (5) Royal, a retired jeweler, married Helen M. Brown, and resides at Barrington, R. I. He has one living daughter, Martha, now Mrs. Charles F. Boyden; another daughter, Jennie, married Fred Smith and is deceased.

C. B. Horton

Nathan B. Horton was born March 8, 1828, in Rehoboth, Mass., and he received his education in the district school, which he attended a few months each winter, the summer seasons being spent in hard labor, as was the custom with boys at that time. At the age of sixteen, he left home to make his place in the world, coming to Providence, where for a short time he drove a milk wagon. Desiring to learn a trade, he apprenticed himself to Brown & Horton (the latter being his cousin, Daniel Horton), well known masons and contractors at Providence, and at the age of nineteen he was a full-fledged mason, and as such worked several years for the men of whom he learned the trade. He was careful and economical with his savings, so that when he reached the age of twenty-five years he had sufficient capital to go into business for himself, soon after taking a partner, the late Amos Lee, with whom he was associated a short term of years. Ill health obliged him to dissolve the partnership, and for one year he relinquished business cares. To improve his health he engaged in the stable business, occupying the establishment at the corner of Union and Worcester streets, associating himself with Ray Green. One year elapsed, and this partnership was dissolved, Mr. Green continuing the Union street business and Mr. Horton starting a stable on Walker street. Here he was engaged for several years until after the Civil war, when he decided to return to his trade. After a brief period he became associated with Joshua O. Brown, and this co-partnership lasted only a year, and then Mr. Horton engaged in business on his own account. For twelve years he continued in the contracting and building vocation single handed, finally taking his son, Fred B., into partnership, under the firm name of N. B. Horton & Son. On Jan. 1, 1896, Mr. H. L. Hemenway was taken into the concern, and from that time the firm has been known as Horton & Hemenway, and is one of the leading concerns of its kind in New England.

During his long term of business activity Nathan B. Horton was closely identified with the architectural growth of Providence and was always the friend of advancement. Many of the largest and most prominent buildings were erected by him, including the new railroad station, both of the Masonic temples, both of the Dorrance buildings, the building occupied by Hall & Lyon on Westminster street, the Studley building, Eddy & Rose building, Wilcox building, Conrad building, School of Design, State Normal school, Pembroke hall, First Universalist church and the Pilgrim Congregational church.

A review of the life of Mr. Horton would be incomplete without mentioning his rare love for horses. In his time he owned many of the fastest trotters and pacers, and it is said of him that he never was without an animal that could not show any company a clean pair of heels. In the latter years of his life, owing to his declining health, his familiar figure was less seen on the driveways, where, in former years, his presence was always to be noted whenever two or three speeders were gathered together. One of his favorite animals was Lamont, now twenty-three years old, and one of the carriage horses of Mrs. Horton.

Mr. Horton possessed a warm and kindly nature, and was a man much esteemed by his associates, and one who thoroughly detested shams of all kinds. Mr. Horton was a keen, foresighted man, and in his prime was capable of doing a large amount of work, personally superintending all of his work, of which he knew every detail. Fraternally he was a member of Franklin Lodge, No. 23, I. O. O. F., of Providence. In politics he was a Democrat, but he was not strictly partisan, voting for the man he thought best fitted for the office, regardless of party ties. Beginning life a poor boy with no capital save his native ability, energy and determination, starting at the lowest rung of the commercial ladder, and working his way to the top, he reached before his death a point of eminence in the calling of his choice, and ranked among the best known contractors and builders in New England. Mr. Horton died after a long illness, Feb. 18, 1899, and was buried in Riverside cemetery at Providence.

On Aug. 12, 1850, Nathan B. Horton was married, in Providence, to Miss Frances A. Brown, a native of Northfield, N. H., daughter of Samuel and Mary (Reynolds) Brown. Mrs. Horton has been a resident of Providence since the age of fifteen. Two children were born to them: (1) Electa Frances is the wife of John Stott, of Providence, and their only child is Anna Electa, who was married, Oct. 31, 1904, to Harold Earl Weaver, of Providence. (2) Fred Bradford was born in Providence, and attended the public schools until the age of nineteen years, when he entered his father's office. In time, as his father's health failed, he relieved him of the entire management of the business, and at his death became his successor. Mr. Horton was married (first) to Hattie Morton; he married (second) Algo W. Stahl. Two sons were born to the first marriage, Frank and Clarence, both of them dying in childhood.

DYER (Cranston family). The Dyer family is one of historic interest in the annals of the Commonwealth and earlier Colony of Rhode Island; and it has been one of wealth and influence as well, prominent in public affairs and in the State's industrial and mercantile life. Its history begins with that of the Colony, the progenitor of the race, William Dyer, then a milliner of London, England, coming to New England in 1635. A member of the Society of Friends, he was banished from Massachusetts, came to Rhode Island, was a signer of the Portsmouth compact in 1638, and one of the founders of Newport and long prominent in public life; was attorney-general, commissioner, deputy, etc.; and one of his sons, Hon. William Dyer (2), was collector of customs for America, and a member of the Governor's council; then, a grandson, Hon. Nathaniel Dyer, was for a number of years attorney-general of Rhode Island. In more recent generations among those of prominence of the name, especially in and above Providence, have been Dr. Benjamin Dyer, long of the medical profession, a druggist of Providence, associated with his brother Charles, both sons of Charles and grandsons of Charles Dyer, who had married into the Roger Williams family, the Doctor also being a manufacturer of note, one of the founders of the Providence Dyeing, Bleaching and Calendering Company and of the Phenix Iron Foundry, etc.; the several Elisha Dyers, the elder of whom was a leading merchant, manufacturer of Providence, along in the early half of the century just closed, one of the largest owners of real estate in Providence of his day, bank president, founder of several industries, etc.; Hon. Elisha Dyer (2), former governor, an extensive cotton manufacturer, etc.; Hon. Elisha Dyer (3), also former Governor, Legislator, Senator, etc.; the late Deacon Daniel P. Dyer, of Cranston, long one of the substantial citizens and leading business men of his town, extensively engaged in the nursery business; the latter's son, the late Capt. William Henry Dyer, of that same town (Cranston), a farmer and later nurseryman, carrying the extensive business founded by his father to still greater proportions, a man long prominent as an official of Cranston, etc.; and the late Hon. Rodney Fenner Dyer, who in his earlier life was an agriculturist of intelligence and later extensively and successfully engaged in the meat business, a resident alternately of Cranston and Johnston, which latter town he at one time represented efficiently in the State Senate, etc. Then there were the sons of Rodney Fenner Dyer, the late Hon. John and Hon. Rodney Fenner Dyer (2), both Senators from Johnston, and long business men of ability who prosecuted their undertakings to success. These, with many others of the Dyer name, evidence the character and worth of the Rhode Island family.

Different branches of this ancient Dyer family are treated at length in separate articles, this one being especially devoted to the Cranston family in the line of the late Reuben Dyer. The genealogy and family history which follows is chronologically arranged, beginning with the immigrant settler, William Dyer:

(1) William Dyer, the ancestor of all the Dyers of Rhode Island, was of London, England, Boston, Mass., and Newport, R. I. While in England he was said to be a milliner by occupation. He arrived in Boston in December, 1635. On account of religious differences with the authorities in Boston he removed to Portsmouth, R. I., and on March 7, 1638, signed a compact for a form of Government. On April 28, 1639, he with eight others signed a compact for the settlement of Newport, himself signing as clerk of the compact and William Coddington as judge. On June 5, 1639, he and three others were apportioned land. He was secretary for the towns of Portsmouth and Newport, for the years 1640-41-42-43-44-45-46-47; general recorder in 1648; attorney-general in 1650-51-52-53. He returned from England early in the year 1653, having gone there with John Clarke and Roger Williams to obtain a revocation of Governor Coddington's power. In May, 1653, he received a commission from the Assembly to act against the Dutch, Capt. John Underhill, commander-in-chief upon land, and Capt. William Dyer, commander-in-chief upon sea. His wife Mary went to England, and returned in 1657, after a stay of five years, having become a Quakeress. On disembarkation at Boston, she was put into prison by the authorities, but was released at the intercession of her husband, and leave was granted him to take her home to Rhode Island. She spent some time at Newport after this, but in 1659 she returned to Boston, and was tried and condemned to death with Marmaduke Stephenson and William Robinson; but was reprieved on the very scaffold, with the rope already about her neck. She was sent by the magistrates to Rhode Island, and thence went to Long Island. She returned to Boston May 12, 1660. She was brought before Governor Endicott, and because she still owned herself to be a Quaker, he sentenced her to be hanged June 1, 1660. William Dyer was commissioner in 1661-62, deputy 1664-66, general solicitor 1665-66-68. William Dyer married (first) Mary Dyer, who died June 1, 1660, as noted above. He married (second) Catharine, who died in 1687. He died in 1677. His children by the first marriage were: (1) Samuel, born in 1635, died in 1678; married Ann Hutchinson, who was born Nov. 17, 1643, died Jan. 10, 1717; he was of Newport and Kingstown, R. I. (2) Mary. (3)

William, who became the collector of customs for America, at New York, received his appointment from the Duke of York in 1674. He was a member of the Governor's Council in 1675-76. In 1681 he was indicted for high treason on charge of collecting unlawful duties and was sent to England for trial. In 1682 he returned to New York with more ample powers, no one having appeared to prosecute him. He went to Delaware from New York. (4) Maher-shallahoshbaz (short Maher) married Martha Pearce. She was born Sept. 13, 1645, and died Feb. 24, 1744. He died in 1670. (5) Henry, born in 1657, died February, 1690; he married Elizabeth Sanford. (6) Charles, born in 1650, died May 15, 1709. (7) Elizabeth.

(II) Charles Dyer, son of William and Mary, married (first) Mary, and (second) Martha Wait (widow of Jeremiah) and daughter of Thomas and Ann Brownell. She was born in May, 1643, and died Feb. 15, 1744. He had children as follows: (1) James. (2) William, died April 21, 1719; he married Hannah Briggs, born May 1, 1676, and died Feb. 13, 1719. (3) Elizabeth, married, Feb. 9, 1699, Tristram Hull, and died in 1719. (4) Charles (2), died Jan. 7, 1727. (5) Samuel, born in 1686, died Sept. 15, 1767, married, Jan. 19, 1710, Desire Slocum, born March 12, 1688, died Sept. 3, 1760, daughter of Ebenezer and Mary (Thurston) Slocum.

(III) Charles Dyer (2), son of Charles and Mary Dyer, died Jan. 7, 1727. He married Aug. 26, 1709, Mary Latham, who was born Oct. 5, 1686, daughter of John and Mary (Mann) Latham. She married for her second husband on Nov. 21, 1734, John Colvin. Charles Dyer and his wife Mary had issue as follows: Mary, Elizabeth, Charles, Samuel, John, William and Thomas. Charles Dyer (2) was of Newport, R. I., Dartmouth, Mass., and Providence, R. I. He bought in 1718, for 600 pounds, a house and 113 acres of land, in Providence, three miles west of salt-water and several other parcels of land in Providence. In 1735 land was deeded by his widow Mary Colvin to his son John Dyer, sixty acres and dwelling house, in Anshautatuck Neck, where her husband Charles lived. He was a blacksmith by trade.

(IV) Deacon John Dyer, son of Charles (2), born in 1719, died Jan. 3, 1801. On Nov. 23, 1738, he married Freelove Williams, born in 1719, died in April, 1775. Their children were: Freelove, born July 5, 1748, married Elisha Harris; John, born Sept. 30, 1739; Anthony, born June 23, 1743, married Sarah Bishop; and Lydia, born Dec. 20, 1758, married Andrew Brown.

(V) John Dyer, son of Deacon John, born Sept. 30, 1739, married March 11, 1762 (first) Ruby Randall, born in 1743, daughter of John Randall; she died in 1793, and Mr. Dyer married (second), May 11, 1793, Mary Lockwood, born May 20, 1756, daughter of Amos, who died April 30, 1833. The children born to the first marriage were: Abigail (married Peter Briggs), Reuben and Rufus. Mr. Dyer was a resident of Cranston and Warwick, Rhode Island.

(VI) Reuben Dyer, son of John, born in 1772, married Celinda Fenner, born in 1767, and among their children were Rodney Fenner; and Lydia Battey, who married Sylvanus Henry, and died in 1836. The father died in 1821, and the mother in 1819.

(VII) RODNEY FENNER DYER, son of Reuben, born Jan. 29, 1810, married Nov. 16, 1831, in Cumberland, R. I., Barbara A. Jillson, born Nov. 17, 1813, daughter of Wila Jillson, and they died, he on Sept. 30, 1892, and she Oct. 29, 1890. Mr. Dyer received his education chiefly in Dr. Fiske's academy at South Scituate, Mass.; this was one of the best schools of the State, and he was a student there for several years.

Mr. Dyer was born in Cranston, and was reared to agricultural pursuits. Thus passed his early manhood. Later on, and when in the prime of life, he for years was engaged in the meat business, and so conducted it that it became extensive and profitable, enabling him to amass quite a fortune. He was a man of good judgment and fine business ability, and these qualities along with his close application to business, the careful management of his affairs and his strict integrity gave him high reputation in business circles and led to the success he attained. His long life of eighty or more years was passed in the towns of Cranston and Johnston, residing alternately in the two towns, in the latter for about five years. He was a fine conversationalist and raconteur, and his conversation was full of wit. For a number of years he represented Johnston in the State Senate. He was a man of vigorous physique and health, and to the very close of life seemed but lightly affected by the length of his years, attending to the care of large property interests until the time of his decease. He held the esteem and respect as well as the confidence of his fellow townsmen, and of all who came in business touch with him.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Dyer were: Sarah E., born April 16, 1834; Lydia B., born Feb. 19, 1836, married Andrew J. Barnes; John, born May 30, 1833, married June 29, 1868, Elizabeth H. Atwood; Rodney Fenner; Byron W., born Dec. 14, 1843, served as a soldier in the Civil war in the 4th Rhode Island regiment, was wounded at Petersburg, Va., and died July 31, 1864; Mary P. married George S. Ladd, and (second) William Allen Aldrich; Elisha married Clara Mason; George A., born Jan. 22, 1853, died Sept. 23, 1863.

CHARLES TISDALL, who is one of Newport's leading meat and provision dealers, as well as one of its enterprising and progressive young business men, was born in that city, July 14, 1866, son of Oliver and Caroline (Edwards) Tisdall.

Oliver Tisdall was a native of the north of Ireland, where he remained during his boyhood. America seemed to offer him wider opportunities for bettering himself, and so he crossed the Atlantic, leaving his home while still hardly more than a youth. He located in Newport and became a butler in the home of Astor Carey, a position which he held for a long term of years. He was a consistent member of the Emmanuel Episcopal Church, of Newport, and a liberal supporter of it. He passed away in Newport in 1895, three years before his wife. Their domestic life was a happy one, for Mr. Tisdall was an affectionate and indulgent husband and father. Their four children were: (1) Oliver, Jr., is engaged with his brother, Charles, in the meat and provision business; he married Mary Crawford, now deceased, and they had two children, Charles Henry and Bessie. (2) Bessie is now Mrs. William J. Shaw, of Mt. Vernon, N. Y. (3) Emma married Allen Shaw, of Newport, and has one daughter, Caroline. (4) Charles is mentioned below.

Charles Tisdall received his education in the public schools of Newport, attending same till he was fifteen years of age. He then secured a place as clerk in the meat market conducted by J. Truman Burdick. Three years later Mr. Burdick sold his business to Kaul & Anthony, but the change of owners made little difference in the position of Mr. Tisdall, and he continued in the same capacity with the new firm, remaining with them fourteen years longer. During this long period, he became thoroughly conversant with the details of conducting a meat market, and as he was both ambitious and possessed of courage and energy he decided to embark in a business of his own. In October, 1898, he opened a store on Broadway, where he carried on not only a meat market but a grocery and provision store also. He succeeded from the first, and his patronage increased so rapidly that he soon required more room. In 1901 he built his present three-story block at No. 130 Broadway. His brother Oliver has become a partner in the business under the firm name of Charles Tisdall & Company.

On May 8, 1891, Mr. Tisdall was married to Miss Jeannette McIntosh, daughter of Robert and Sarah A. McIntosh, of Newport. Mrs. Tisdall is a member of Emmanuel Episcopal Church, which her husband also attends. Mr. Tisdall is a prominent member of the Masonic order, and belongs to St. Paul's Lodge, No. 14, A. F. & A. M., in which he is a past master; Newport Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M.; Washington Commandery, No. 4, K. T., in which he has been warden; and Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine, of Providence. He also belongs to Weenat Shassit Tribe, No. 6, I. O. R. M.; and to Newport Lodge, No. 104, B. P. O. E. He is a member of the Lawrence and the Miantonomi Clubs, both of Newport. In a business way he is associated with the Newport Realty Company, in which he is a director, and in politics he affiliates with the Republicans. Mr. Tisdall's success in his business has been well deserved, and still greater prosperity seems promised for the future. His store, which is large and unusually well adapted to its purpose, is one of the best stocked and equipped in the New England States, while his personal dealings have always been characterized by a fairness of treatment and an honesty which have won him an enviable reputation.

BUCKLAND. The family bearing this name in Woonsocket, the head of which was the late Alphonzo Watson Buckland, D. D. S., who for a third of a century was professionally engaged in the place of his adoption, and who latterly became a man of substance—one officially identified with various enterprises, including several of the financial institutions, and in fact a leading citizen of the community—is a branch of one of the Massachusetts-Connecticut Buckland families.

Ancient Windsor, the boyhood home of the late Dr. Alphonzo W. Buckland of Woonsocket, was the home of two presumably different families of Bucklands. One Thomas Buckland, a freeman of Massachusetts, 1635, was an early and highly respectable settler at Windsor, Conn., as early as 1638; had been granted land in 1637; juror in 1644; collector in 1649; way warden in 1655. He was in the Pequot fight in 1637. He married Temperance, daughter of Nicholas Denslow. He died May 28, 1662, and his widow passed away July 26, 1681. Their children were: Timothy, Elizabeth, Temperance, Mary, Nicholas, Sarah, Thomas, Hannah, John and Thomas (2).

The other Connecticut settler of that region was William Buckland, of Hingham, Mass., 1635, in which year he had a land grant, and also owned land there in and after 1650, but was at Rehoboth, 1658, and of East Hartford, Conn., 1679.

It is set forth in the history of Ancient Windsor, Conn., by Dr. Stiles, that Mr. Edward G. Buckland, who had aided Mr. W. Tracy Eustis in tracing the posterity of Thomas Buckland, concluded, in 1891, that the male line of this Thomas became extinct, and that later Windsor Bucklands were descendants of William Buckland of Hingham (see Ancient Windsor, Vol. II, p. 123).

From this (I) William Buckland it appears from the work cited that the lineage of the Woonsocket family is through William Buckland (2), William Buckland (3), Jonathan, Alexander, Capt. Erastus and Lorenzo Montgomery Buckland.

(II) William Buckland (2), of East Hartford, died in Windsor, Conn., May 13, 1691.

(III) William Buckland (3), was of East Hartford, Conn., 1687; his wife was Elizabeth Hills.

(IV) Jonathan Buckland, born about 1716, married Sybil Burnham, and possibly (second) Sarah Anderson. His children were: Alexander, Jonathan, Polly, Timothy and Sybil.

(V) Alexander Buckland, born about 1739.

A W Buckland

married Sarah Smith, of New Haven, Conn., born about 1738. Mr. Buckland settled on the west side of the Great Marsh in Ellington. He died in 1815, and she passed away July 19, 1823, aged eighty-five years. Their children were: Alexander, born July 24, 1761; Epaphras, born July 25, 1763; Sarah, born Aug. 27, 1764; Leverett, born Nov. 22, 1767; Walter, born Dec. 12, 1769; Ashbel, born Nov. 14, 1771; Erastus, born April 2, 1774; John, born June 1, 1776; Electa, born Dec. 18, 1778; and Sarah, born Feb. 15, 1781.

(VI) Capt. Erastus Buckland, born April 2, 1774, married Sarah, born April 19, 1775, daughter of Stephen and Polly (Osborn) Heath, of East Windsor, Conn. Capt. Buckland died in November, 1820, aged forty-six years. His widow died Oct. 21, 1850, aged seventy-five years. Their children were: Erastus, born in June, 1799; Emily, Aug. 11, 1800 (married Charles Kingsbury); Harleigh, June 9, 1802; Sarah, March 28, 1804; Harleigh Heath, Oct. 25, 1805; Lorenzo Montgomery, Feb. 7, 1810; Almanzo, Nov. 3, 1811; Almirah, July 13, 1813; Harriet (died in infancy); and Marilla, July 1, 1815.

(VII) Lorenzo Montgomery Buckland, born Feb. 7, 1810, married Jan. 1, 1835, Julia Hull, born Aug. 3, 1811, of East Windsor, Conn. Mr. Buckland died July 3, 1875, aged sixty-five years. Their children, all born at Broad Brook, East Windsor, Conn., were: (1) Latham Lorenzo married Harriet Ames, and died at Providence, R. I., the father of Charles, Fred and Grace. (2) Sarah Marilla married Charles Reynolds of Norwalk, Conn., and had one daughter, Mary Margaret. (3) Julia Isadore married Almanzo Buckland, of Springfield, Mass. (4) Alphonzo Watson is mentioned below. (5) Louisa married (first) Edward Sexton, of Windsor, and (second) George Addison Bingham, of Hartford, Conn. (6) Wilbur F.

(VIII) DR. ALPHONZO WATSON BUCKLAND, son of Lorenzo Montgomery and Julia (Hull) Buckland, was born June 19, 1843, in Van Buren county, Iowa, and in early childhood came with the family to Broad Brook, Conn., where his youth was passed. He attended the district schools of his neighborhood and later furthered his studies at the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., and at the Providence Conference Seminary at East Greenwich, R. I. Meanwhile he had at intervals added to his slender means by teaching school. He next passed nearly three years in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, and soon after his return to New England was married. After the latter event, determining upon the practice of dentistry as a profession, he removed to the city of Philadelphia for its preparation. He there began its study under the preceptorship of his cousin, Dr. Charles A. Kingsbury, and was graduated from the Philadelphia Dental College in 1871. He had previously located at Woonsocket, this State, to which point he returned, and there established himself in his profession. He speedily acquired a reputation for skill as an operator, and with it an extended practice. He continued in the active and successful practice of his profession the rest of his lifetime. He enjoyed among his professional confreres in Rhode Island an enviable position, and his clinics before the classes in various New England Colleges were highly valued.

Dr. Buckland was a member of the American Academy of Dental Science, of the New England Dental Society, of the Rhode Island Dental Society, and of the Rhode Island Board of Registration in Dentistry. Dr. Buckland, too, was prominent in and officially identified with a number of enterprises in Woonsocket. At one time he was president of the Woonsocket Electric Machine and Power Company, and of the Woonsocket Spool and Bobbin Company, and a director of both the Producers' and the People's Savings Banks, having been president of the latter. He was a man of most excellent judgment and was much consulted by his friends. He was a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Woonsocket, was a trustee of the church and also a member of the board of stewards. He was a member of Washington Lodge, No. 70, A. F. & A. M., of Windsor, Conn.; of Union Chapter, No. 5; and of Woonsocket Commandery, No. 23, of Woonsocket, of which he was past commander, and he had attained the 32d degree. He was also a member of Washington Lodge, No. 1269, Knights of Honor, and of various other social and protective organizations.

On Oct. 10, 1866, Dr. Buckland was married to Helen Augusta Marble, daughter of Joel Waters Marble, and his wife, Mary Ann Harding, of Southbridge, Mass., and the union was blessed with three children, namely: Florence Myrtle, Alice Maud and Bessie May, all of whom are married, and are respectively Mrs. Edgar Lakey, of Providence; Mrs. George F. S. Singleton, of Franklin, Mass., and Mrs. Robert L. Davis, of Woonsocket. Mrs. Buckland resides at Woonsocket.

Dr. Buckland died at his home on Blackstone street, Woonsocket, R. I., Aug. 24, 1900. His funeral from his late residence was largely attended. The members of Woonsocket Commandery, K. T., in charge of Eminent Commander Stephen Magown, attended in a body. An appropriate eulogy was delivered by the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Woonsocket, the Rev. Lewis B. Coddington, in which the prominence of the deceased was referred to, and as well his uprightness of character and the many excellent qualities he possessed. His remains were interred in the Union Cemetery at Woonsocket.

GEORGE CANNING SOULE, M. D., one of the most prominent and successful physicians of Washington county, R. I., is a direct descendant of one of the Pilgrim Fathers. His American forefather was not only one of the immortal crew forced to the Massachusetts shores by religious persecution, but was a founder of several of her historic old towns, and assisted in the establishment of popular government in the old Bay State. Both family history and individual achievement in professional work make a presentation of his name in this work appropriate and desirable.

Dr. Soule was born at Hampton Hill, Conn., Sept. 19, 1853, a son of Dr. William and Harriet A. (Hall) Soule, his father being an able and venerable citizen and physician at the time of his death, ex-army surgeon, and, in the prime of his life, an active man of affairs. A detailed biography of the lamented Dr. William Soule, with an account of the life and services of the Mayflower Pilgrim, who planted the family in America, will in some measure explain the characteristics of Dr. George C. Soule.

William Soule, M. D., the father of the Doctor, entered into rest May 15, 1900, in Jewett City, after an active life filled with good deeds. With respect to age he was the oldest physician in the city, while the years of his practice were more than a quarter of a century in excess of any other practitioner here. He was essentially one of that fast disappearing class—the family physician. For generations he administered to the needs of his patients, from grandparents to grandchildren—all who knew him employed him and believed in him. He was the confidant of all the troubles—physical, mental or financial—that beset the families in his clientele. Patient, gentle and sympathetic, he was always the same courtly gentleman, whose own trials were put aside while he so constantly ministered to others.

Born Aug. 24, 1827, in Chaplin, Conn., son of Ivory and Marilla (Bingham) Soule, he was a descendant of George Soule, who came to America in the "Mayflower" and was the thirty-fifth signer of the Cape Cod Compact, in November, 1620. He was at Plymouth and afterward (1643) settled Duxbury. He had a grant of one acre at Plymouth, which he sold to R. Hicks and Thomas Southworth. He was among those taxed in 1633. He was a representative in 1645, and some years later was among the proprietors of Bridgewater, Mass., as, in 1653, he had been among the purchasers of Dartmouth. Mr. Soule married Mary Becket, and their children were: John; George inherited one-half of his father's lands in Dartmouth; Benjamin was killed by the Indians in the spring of 1675; Zachariah lived at Powder Point and died in 1663; Nathaniel inherited land in Dartmouth; Elizabeth married Francis Walker, of Middleboro, Mass.; Susannah; and Mary married John Patterson.

George Soule, the Pilgrim, was one of the petitioners for a church in Duxbury. He died in 1680, very old, and his wife passed away in 1677. There followed the name in New England a long line of sea captains—men always to the front in maritime affairs.

William Soule passed his early years in a typical New England home. Taught habits of industry and frugality by his father, who at one time conducted a large boot and shoe factory, his Christian mother instilled in his mind those stern principles of morality that characterized the early Puritans. His nature was gentle, and his disposition studious. His preparatory studies were pursued in Woodstock Academy, and he became proficient in the ordinary literary branches taught in the schools of the day, and early engaged in teaching. Determined to enter the professional world, he began the study of medicine, and graduated from Yale in 1851. After receiving his degree in medicine he first located for practice in Pascoag, R. I., and then went to Hampton, Conn. In October, 1854, he located at Jewett City, where he made his home until his death. For many years he conducted a drug store in connection with his practice. When the Civil war broke out he was appointed assistant surgeon, with the rank of captain, of the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and at the end of a year he was promoted to surgeon of the 21st Conn. V. I., and with the latter regiment was present at the battle of Fredericksburg.

Dr. Soule was twice married. His first wife, Harriet A. Hall, daughter of Jeremiah Hall, of Chaplin, died in 1857. Three children of that union survive: Mary, a teacher in the Jewett City schools; George C., a physician in Wickford, R. I.; and Delia, wife of George Robinson, of Jewett City. For his second wife Dr. Soule married Martha P. Chapman, of Voluntown, who bore him two children: Carrie, who married E. D. Cady, of Oxford, Mass.; and William O., at home. The family home was erected by Dr. Soule in 1857. In his political faith the Doctor was a Republican, and in his busy life always found time to keep abreast of the times. For twelve years he was a member of the board of education, and for twenty-five years was justice of the peace, during twenty of which he was principal trial justice of the town. His religious connection was with the Congregational Church, of which for several years he was senior deacon, and for twenty-eight years was superintendent of the Sunday-school. Fraternally he affiliated with the K. P., holding membership in Undaunted Lodge, in which he passed all the chairs, and he belonged to the Grand Lodge of Connecticut, and was Supreme Representative of the Grand Lodge of the World for four years. The Doctor's mind was well stored, and he possessed the gift of easy, fluent speaking, never being at a loss for something to say. He was a prominent figure at public meetings, and his genial presence has been greatly missed. In his death Jewett City lost a friend.

Dr. George C. Soule, born Sept. 19, 1853, was only a year old when his father located in Jewett

City. He was educated in the public schools of the place, and as a youth was employed in his father's drug store and later became its manager. During this period of his life he also commenced the study of medicine under paternal instruction. In 1878 he graduated from the Medical Department of the Boston University with the professional degree, and on July 9th of that year located for practice at Wickford, R. I., where he has achieved signal success in his chosen calling. In September, 1898, he removed to East Greenwich, R. I., that his children might better enjoy educational advantages, and continued to reside there until October, 1904. He then returned to Wickford, during that period retaining his practice in North Kingstown.

In October, 1879, about a year after locating for practice at Wickford, Dr. Soule was united in marriage to Miss Annie Celia Nelson, daughter of Eli and Eliza (Anthony) Nelson, and to them have been born these six children: (1) George Canning, Jr., born Sept. 25, 1880, is engaged with the Providence Dry Salter Company, at East Greenwich; he married Eleanor E. Fry, daughter of Thomas Fry, and they have one son, Thomas Fry, born Sept. 12, 1906. (2) Ralph, born Sept. 25, 1881, is assistant manager of the New York & New Jersey Telephone Company, at Brooklyn, N. Y. (3) Edith May was born Aug. 25, 1883. (4) Daniel Anthony was born Feb. 15, 1886. (5) Henry Eli was born Feb. 18, 1889. (6) Edward Ivory, born Dec. 11, 1890, died Sept. 10, 1904.

Dr. Soule has broad and prominent fraternal connections, being a member of Undaunted Lodge, K. P., at Jewett City; and since 1878, has been associated with Beacon Lodge, I. O. O. F. He has served as grand high priest in the Encampment; and is the representative from Rhode Island in the national council of the O. U. A. M. While at Jewett City the Doctor was identified with the Congregational Church, but after locating at Wickford he joined the M. E. Church, of which he is now a leading member.

WILLIAM TAYLOR, of Lonsdale, in the town of Cumberland, R. I., is one of the successful, enterprising and progressive business men of that place. His father, William Taylor, was born in Lancashire, England, and in his native country learned the weaver's trade, which he followed during his entire life. About 1856 he came to America, locating at River Point, R. I., where he followed his trade until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted in Company I, 12th R. I. Vol. Inf., and served as a Union private for about twelve months. Returning from the war, he resumed work at his trade at River Point, where he remained several years. After working in various mills for different periods he finally went to Newport, becoming a weaver in the Coddington Mill, where he remained about three years. He then returned to Ashton, and was engaged as a weaver in the Ashton Mill, with which he was connected until his death, in 1884, when he was in his sixty-seventh year. He was married in England to Miss Martha Goddard, who died in her native country during his absence in America. Their children were: Esther married (first) William Smith and (second) John Smith, of Newport, where she died; Mary Ann married John Mills, of Ashton, where she died; George married Elizabeth Gibson, of Newport, where he is engaged in gardening; William is mentioned further on; Alfred is a landscape gardener of Central Falls, R. I. The father married for his second wife a Miss Thompson, of Cumberland, R. I., but by this union there were no children.

William Taylor was born July 8, 1852, in Lancashire, England, and when six years of age came to America, joining his father at River Point. The beginning of his education was there received in the common schools, which he only attended, however, until his seventh year, at which time he went to work in the Harris Mill, being there employed for about three years. During this time he furthered his educational training by attending night school. After working several months in Woonsocket he went to Newport with his father, and while there was employed in the Coddington Mill. Later, returning to Ashton, he became a mule spinner in the Ashton Mills, in which capacity he remained until eighteen years of age. He then returned to Newport and was engaged at gardening on the estate of Charles Russell, continuing thereon for about one and one-half years. For the next three years he was employed by the late George Hardwick, in the latter's greenhouses, after which he became engaged in the greenhouses of Carl Jurgens, in whose employ he remained about six years, until he became assistant gardener on the estate of the late Gardner Brewer; in this capacity he was retained about three years.

In 1884 Mr. Taylor left Newport and located at Lonsdale, in the town of Cumberland, where he has since been successfully doing business on his own account. Upon locating at Lonsdale he engaged in teaming in all its branches, in connection with which he also conducted market gardening, having also installed greenhouses on his estate, in which he is engaged in raising and cultivating hot-house plants and flowers. Mr. Taylor is a member of St. John's Episcopal Church of Ashton, of which his wife is also a member, and to which they give their liberal support. In political views he is a staunch Republican, but in town affairs he takes an independent stand. He has served the town of Cumberland as constable for several years, as well as in other minor offices.

Mr. Taylor married Miss Sarah Hardwick, the eldest daughter of the late George and Martha (Stoakes) Hardwick, the latter of Newport, and children as follows have been born to the union: Violet Mary; Alice, who married Edward Shaw and has one son, Josiah; Martha; Louise; Gladys; William, Jr., and Ruth.

Mr. Taylor is an enterprising, industrious and successful business man, whose success is due to his pluck and energy. He commands the respect of the entire community in which he resides.

GEORGE CLINTON CALEF, for many years one of the well known and highly successful business men of Providence, senior member of the firm of Calef Brothers, and in every respect a self-made man, died Feb. 15, 1897.

Cutting F. Calef, the father of George C., was a resident of Washington, Vt., where he died in 1844, at the age of forty-seven years. He married Martha H. Paine, a member of one of the first families of Barre, Vt., who was born in 1801, and who died in 1885. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Calef were as follows: Ezra P., who located in Illinois; Warren H., who was a resident of Washington, Vt.; Alden D., who located at Boston and died there; Ira C., who became a member of the firm of Calef Brothers, and is now a resident of Washington, Vt.; Quincy O., who died in Washington, Vt.; Miraetta A., who married Heman A. White, and died in Washington, Vt.; Elmer Norton, who died in Oregon in 1890, leaving a large family; Cutting S., who resided for many years in Providence, but died in Washington, Vt.; George Clinton; Martha, who died young; Miss Lucy A., at Washington, Vt.; and John F., also a resident of Washington, Vermont.

George Clinton Calef was born in Washington, Vt., June 19, 1837, and was reared to the hard work of the farm. He received a sound common-school education in the district schools, following this with a few terms at an academy. He remained at home and assisted in the tilling of the home farm until twenty-one years old, when he came to Providence and began working for Abney Gay, Jr., engaged in the market business on the corner of North Main and Thomas streets. In 1859, in company with his brothers, Ira C. and Cutting S., Mr. Calef purchased the business of Mr. Gay, the firm becoming Calef Brothers, and since that time has continued at the same stand, under the same name, although it has been some years since any of the name have been connected with it. The firm enjoyed prosperity from the start, and had a steady and rapid growth, becoming at length the largest family market in the city. Subsequently they established a branch store at Lonsdale, their annual business amounting to more than $200,000. They also did a large Western business in Chicago. Mr. Ira Calef in time retired from the firm, and was succeeded by Charles H. Jefferds. After the death of Cutting S., and the retirement of Mr. Jefferds, Clarence Kingsbury and Louis A. Glad-ding were admitted to the firm. Mr. Calef also owned a large livery stable on Battey street. He retired from business in 1896 because of ill health, and died Feb. 15, 1897, being buried in the North Burying Ground.

Some years after his marriage Mr. Calef removed to the village of Manton, and became one of the leading and influential citizens of the town. He took a great interest in educational work, and for many years served as trustee of the Manton school district. Through his efforts, largely, the first high school was established in Johnston. He served as a member of the town council, was prominent in the Butchers and Marketmen's Association, an active member and one of the executive committee of the Sons of Vermont, president of the Manton Building & Improvement Association, president of the Olneyville Free Library Association, chairman of the building committee and took a great interest in the erection of the present library building. To him Manton is largely indebted for its rapid growth, and the introduction of street lights, telephones, graded streets, water and car service. Mr. Calef was largely interested in real estate in the section in which he lived, and in 1874 he erected the handsome residence on Greenville avenue, which was his home until his death. He was a man who learned much by observation, and was very fond of travel, having visited nearly all of the large cities of the United States.

On Sept. 13, 1866, Mr. Calef was united in marriage with Emma S. Sanders, born in Providence, daughter of Richard and Almira M. (Hall) Sanders, a sketch of the Sanders family appearing elsewhere. The children born to this union were as follows: Almira S. died in 1871, at the age of two years; Irene L., born Dec. 14, 1870, married Thomas B. Nichols, a gold refiner, at Attleboro, Mass., and has one child, Ira Calef; Herbert C., born Dec. 19, 1871, who married Annie M. Smith, and has one son, George Clinton, resides at Manton, but is engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Providence, and is also prominent in the town affairs of Johnston, having for several years past served as town treasurer; Mabel S., born Oct. 29, 1873, married Charles R. Allen, Jr., a graduate of Tufts College, formerly superintendent of water works and city engineer of the city of Barre, Vt., and they have one child, Stanley Calef; Frank T., born Nov. 26, 1875, a graduate in medicine at the Boston University, and engaged in the practice of medicine in East Providence, of which town he is overseer of the poor, married Abby Angell Bradford; Edith, born April 24, 1877, married John K. Fenner, and resides at Auburn, R. I., Mr. Fenner being a teacher in the high school, and they have one child, Helen Woodel; and Helen B., born Dec. 12, 1881, resides at home.

Mr. Calef, while not a member of any religious denomination, was a regular attendant and liberal supporter of the First Universalist Church, of which Mrs. Calef and three of her daughters are members. Mr. Calef served as trustee for some years. He was not a member of any secret organization, being a great lover of his home and much devoted to his family. As a business man he was very successful and his standing in business circles was high.

Mrs. Calef resided in Manton until about one year after the death of her husband, when she removed to Providence. She has proved herself to be a woman of unusual business qualifications, is a liberal donor to charity, and her Christian life and character is reflected in her children, who would be a credit to any parentage.

HON. GEORGE T. CRANSTON, State Senator, Department Commander of the G. A. R., and in his life time the holder of many positions of honor and trust, was born in North Kingstown, July 9, 1844, and was educated in the common schools. When he was thirteen years old his father died and for several years afterward he was employed in a factory, and on the farm.

On July 5, 1861, he enlisted in Company E, 3d Rhode Island Heavy Artillery, and after serving one year he was transferred to Battery B, 1st United States Artillery, known as General V. Henry's flying battery, where he served the remaining three years of his enlistment. He re-enlisted in the 10th Massachusetts, known as the Sleepless Battery, with which he was engaged at the battle of Petersburg within twenty days from the date of his discharge. He was in twenty-five engagements, including Fort Pulaski, James Island, siege of Charleston, Baldwin, Saunderstown, St. Mary's Ford, Cedar Creek, Onester, Gainesville, Barker's Creek, Spottsylvania, Cold Harbor, Mechanicsville, Weldon Railroad, Ream's Station, Staunton Bridge, Petersburg, Hatcher's Run (first and second battles), Boydton Plank Road, Bermuda Hundred and Drury's Bluff. He was wounded at Onester and Cedar Creek, and was captured at Ream's Station. Mr. Cranston was present at Lee's surrender, and was mustered out of service at Gallup's Island July 10, 1865. During his service he was promoted to corporal of United States Battery.

Mr. Cranston continually represented his native town in the General Assembly from 1881 until his death, having been seven years in the House of Representatives, and a Senator from 1888. As a legislator his fitness for positions relating to State measures for relief of worthy veterans, was recognized, and he was made a member of the board of managers of the Soldiers' Home and of the State Board of Soldiers' Relief. He was an enthusiastic Grand Army man and was one of the charter members of C. C. Baker Post, No. 16, of Wickford, of which he was the first commander, serving ten terms. His first office in the Rhode Island Department was Junior Vice Department Commander, and in 1893 he was chosen Department Commander, which office he resigned. About 1878 he became the proprietor of a general store at West Wickford, in which he conducted a flourishing business.

After the war Mr. Cranston returned home, and in the seventies married Miss Elizabeth Patience Gardiner, daughter of Amos Gardiner, of Exeter, by whom he had five children: Lola and Annie L. died in infancy; Minnie M., died aged eight years; Lottie L., and George Cyrus.

Mr. Cranston was prostrated by his last illness early in October, 1894, his death occurring on the 25th of the month, and he was attended by Dr. Maryott of Wickford. As it became evident that his sickness was of a serious nature Drs. Eggleston of this city and Langmaid of East Greenwich were also called. Rheumatism in the region of the heart was complicated by an attack of pneumonia. The danger from this latter disease was, however, considered passed, when an acute attack of rheumatism in one of the patient's legs caused the family to send for Dr. Langmaid, who arrived at 12:30 that night. The physician spoke to Mr. Cranston, who appeared as strong as on the previous day, but who said he was suffering from a terrible pain in his leg. Dr. Langmaid turned away from the bedside to prepare a remedy. He was almost startled to hear a gasp from the sick man, and on hastening to his side found that the end had come. The immediate cause of death was metastasis, or the transferring of the rheumatic trouble from the leg to the heart.

A bred-in-the-bone Yankee, as big of heart as he was of physique, courageous, unselfish, sincere in every element of his nature, loyal to the men and the principles he believed in, Mr. Cranston's death was felt by an extraordinarily wide circle of friends. He was especially beloved in Grand Army circles, and was always relied upon when devoted work was wanted in behalf of the old soldier, who could ever command his interest and support.

One of the State papers gives this extended description of his funeral: "Down in the little picturesque Advent Church, in the village of La-Fayette, the funeral of the late Senator George T. Cranston took place yesterday. The exercises were largely martial in their nature, because the dead man had been a brave soldier, and because his most intimate friendships had been formed through army associations.

"Not since the day when the long funeral procession followed the remains of Burnside to the grave, has there been anything like the outpouring of yesterday. In the tribute of the thousands who gathered at the house, at the church, and at the cemetery, there was an absence of that formal sentiment which might have characterized the funeral of a public nature in the city. Here it seemed the kindly individual remembrance of each, for every city and town in the State was represented, and the personal evidences of sorrow were extremely affecting.

"Almost every man of prominence in the northern part of the State was upon the special train of nine cars which left the Union depot at 10 o'clock yesterday morning for Wickford Junction. Upon the train were also a large number of Grand Army posts, and one car contained almost 100 inmates of the Soldiers' Home at Bristol, under the charge of Commandant B. L. Hall. Each of these old fellows had some kindly remembrance of the late Senator, who was a member of the board in charge of their institution. Perhaps he never made them a speech, but all knew him as a personal friend, so all day long they trudged uncomplainingly in the country roads, the bowed figures in their ranks offering a strong tribute to the man whom they were there to honor. Among the general officers of the State on the train were Governor Brown, Secretary of State Bennett, and Attorney-general DuBois. Lieutenant-governor Allen came up with the delegation from the southern part of the State, and the city of Providence was represented by Mayor Olney, City Solicitor Colwell, and dozens of others. Almost the entire Rhode Island Legislature attended with its officers and attendants, including the Hon. S. W. K. Allen, Speaker of the House, and Judge Eugene F. Warner and Col. Hunter C. White, personal friends of the deceased.

"Ex-Governor Davis, Ex-Lieutenant Governor Wardwell, and Ex-Speaker Owen were there, and a chartered steamer conveyed a large delegation from Newport and the surrounding territory. This included Senator-Elect George Peabody Wetmore, Ex-Lieut.-Gov. Melville Bull, State Auditor A. C. Landers, Col. John Hare Powel, and the senators and representatives from the city and near-by towns. Nearly all the town officers of Bristol were present, Judge Lee and the Assembly delegation came down from Woonsocket, and there were scores of prominent citizens from every place for miles around. It was a remarkable assemblage which gathered in the quaint country village. Besides the men of prominence there were the hundreds of Grand Army men and Sons of Veterans, and the personal friends of the deceased. Rev. J. J. Wooley, of Pawtuxet, had left his pulpit to assist in the obsequies of his friend, and Rev. Hopkins B. Cady came from Newport to perform a similar service. The Hon. David S. Baker, a life-long intimate and neighbor of the deceased, Justice Tillinghast of the Supreme Court, the town council of North Kingstown, and—but why continue? The list might go on and on almost indefinitely.

"The train arrived at Wickford Junction at 11 o'clock, and a line was formed with Tower Post Veteran Fife and Drum Corps at its head. A mile away to the west was the residence of the dead Senator, the path winding around through clearing and woods, and under arching trees, whose foliage was beautiful as the day itself. Now and again there came from the forests the gentle notes of some trilling bird, as if led by the music of the bands to offer its own sweet requiem to the man who had passed away.

"Very tenderly did the bearers lift out the silk-lined casket with its shroud of the American flag, and with its ornament of honor, the Army sword of the dead soldier. None knew him better than these men, for the late Senator had chosen to be informed when there was no hope for his recovery, and had selected those whom he chose to perform this last duty. In the main they were old soldiers: Gen. Charles R. Brayton, whose habitual immobility of countenance offered to no outsider the index of his feelings at the death of the man whom he regarded as men sometimes do regard each other; Melville Bull, his old political friend and brother; Capt. Charles C. Gray, and Col. Charles A. Williams, his soldier companions and Grand Army comrades; Henry C. Luther, Philip S. Chase, Col. Daniel R. Ballou, Gideon Spencer, Edmund F. Prentiss, and Philip Money. These made up the list. They had been more than his friends.

"In the meanwhile, in the village of LaFayette, a mile from the depot in the opposite direction, a great crowd had gathered. There were thousands before the arrival of the funeral cortege, and they included men, women and children. Inside the edifice the air was redolent with the fragrance of flowers, for the chancel was one huge bank of exotics. In the center was a large portrait of Senator Cranston, heavily draped and flanked with the national ensign, and the colors of the Department of Rhode Island, Grand Army of the Republic."

GEORGE CYRUS CRANSTON, son of the late Senator, was born at Wickford Junction, R. I., June 25, 1877. His schooldays were spent in the village school of LaFayette and at East Greenwich Academy. He was associated in business with his father as long as he lived, and from 1894 to February, 1896, was in partnership with John H. Remington, and since that time has continued business alone. In addition to a large undertaking business he is extensively engaged in farming, teaming and coal business. One would expect the son of such a father to be public-spirited, and it is not at all surprising that he has served as general overseer of the poor since he was twenty-one years old. In 1902 he was honored by his townsmen with an election to the House of Representatives in the State Assembly, and is still serving in that capacity. He has been a member of the committees on Education, and Accounts and Claims, and has also been chairman of the committees on Elections and on Education.

Socially popular Mr. Cranston is a member of Washington Lodge, No. 5, A. F. & A. M., of which he is past master; Newport Chapter, No. 2; Washington Commandery, No. 4; Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine; Beacon Lodge, I. O. O. F.; and the Redmen, of which he is past Sachem.

Mr. Cranston married Miss Margaret L. Blanchard, of Adams, Mass., and they have two children: Margaret Louise, born March 10, 1903; and George Cyrus, Jr., Aug. 11, 1905.

SYLVESTER BOWEN HISCOX, a successful retired business man and former city official of Central Falls, descends in direct line from one of the early inhabitants of Newport, and represents a family continuously resident in Rhode Island for nearly two and a half centuries.

(I) William Hiscox, born in 1638, appears first in Newport records in 1671, when he was made a freeman of that Colony. In 1702 he was a proprietor in the common lands and in 1703-04 was general treasurer. He was pastor of the Third or Seventh Day Baptist Church, formed Dec. 23, 1671, when he, Stephen Mumford, Samuel Hubbard, Roger Baster, Sister Hubbard, Sister Mumford and Sister Rachel Langworthy, with others, entered into a church covenant together. William Hiscox and his wife Rebecca had two children, Elizabeth and Thomas. His death occurred May 24, 1704, and he was buried in Newport.

(II) Thomas Hiscox was born in 1686. As a young man he was a cordwainer and worked as such in Newport and then in Westerly, R. I. Uniting with the church in 1706, he served as deacon and as church clerk in 1716, was chosen elder in 1719, confirmed in 1727, and in 1750 was called to assist Joseph Maxson in his pastorate. He was prominent in public affairs, and after he became a freeman of Westerly, in 1709, served as town treasurer from 1712 to 1722. He was deputy in 1714, 1718, 1720, 1726, 1727, 1734, 1736, 1739, 1740 and 1741. Thomas Hiscox married twice. His first wife, Bethiah, the daughter of Joseph and Bethiah (Hubbard) Clarke, to whom he was married Oct. 31, 1703, was born April 11, 1678, and died in 1756. His second wife was Patience, daughter of Samuel Beebe. The children, all by the first marriage, were born as follows: William, May 31, 1705; Ephraim, June 2, 1707; Edith, Sept. 6, 1709; Bethiah; Mary, July 12, 1713; Thomas, May 7, 1715; Joseph, April 22, 1717; and Hannah, June 22, 1720.

(III) Ephraim Hiscox was married Oct. 29, 1733, to Abigail Saunders.

(IV) Ephraim Hiscox (2) was married Oct. 21, 1772, to Mary Sisson. Their children, of Westerly town record, according to Arnold, were: Amey, who was born Feb. 26, 1774, and died March 5th, of that year; Abigail and Mary, born Nov. 10, 1775; Ephraim, April 7, 1778; Amey (2), Dec. 19, 1780; Pardon, April 15, 1783; John, June 31, 1786; and Summer, May 11, 1789.

(V) Pardon Hiscox was born April 15, 1783, in Westerly. He was a boat-builder and for years was engaged in the construction of whaling vessels. He died in Warren, R. I., March 18, 1860, aged seventy-seven, and his wife died there Nov. 5, 1864, aged more than eighty-two years. Her maiden name was Sarah Gibbs, and she was born in Newport, Oct. 5, 1782, the daughter of Elisha and Sarah Gibbs. The children of Pardon and Sarah Hiscox were: Pardon, Jr., Elisha G., Martin, William, Edwin and Sarah Ann, all now deceased.

(VI) Elisha G. Hiscox was born in Newport in 1809, and died in Central Falls, in 1879. In early life he learned coopering and for a long time was located in Warren, R. I., where he conducted on a large scale a shop for fitting out whaling vessels with casks for holding the sperm oil. His last years were spent in Central Falls, where he was associated with his son in a baking business. He was a pronounced Democrat of the old school and took a keen interest in public affairs, but without any desire for office. In religious matters he was a member of the Episcopal Church, and he was an earnest advocate of temperance. He married Hannah, daughter of Capt. Sylvester Bowen, of Warren, a master of vessels who made his home in Warren. Mrs. Hiscox died in that town in 1889, aged seventy-three. Her children were as follows: Sarah A., who married Thomas J. Barton, a carpenter and contractor of Warren; Sylvester B.; Charles F., who died aged twelve; and Clarence D., a baker of Central Falls, who married Mary E. Dawley, lately deceased.

(VII) Sylvester Bowen Hiscox was born in Warren April 30, 1838, and was educated in the grammar and high schools of that town. When he was seventeen he left school and entered upon a four years' apprenticeship at the baker's trade under Edwin Saunders, in Warren, R. I., and afterward followed that line of work till the war broke out, being employed first in Newport, then at Fall River, Mass., and later in Hartford, Conn. He enlisted, Aug. 21, 1862, in Company A, 5th Rhode Island Heavy Artillery, and remained in the service till he was mustered out at the close of the war, in October, 1865. At Newbern, N. C., May 5, 1864, Mr. Hiscox was taken prisoner, and confined successively in Andersonville, Florence, and five other Southern prisons.

After his discharge from the army Mr. Hiscox returned to New England so broken in health that he was incapacitated for active physical labor for some time. He remained at his home in Warren, doing no regular active work until 1867, when he went to Central Falls, and after spending two years in the employ of David Bagley, a baker there, he opened a shop for himself at the corner of High and Cross streets. This was his permanent location, and thanks to his industrious habits and keen business acumen he built up a large and lucrative patronage. In September, 1901, he sold out to Herbert F. Patt and has since been living retired. He is known in Central Falls not only as a successful business man, but also as a conscientious public official, having been chosen in 1905 by the Republicans as a member of the city council. As a man he has pronounced likes and dislikes, thinks independently, and is outspoken and fearless in his defense of whatever he believes to be right. Fraternally he is a prominent member of the Masonic organization, belonging to Jenks Lodge, No. 24, A. F. & A. M., of Central Falls; Pawtucket Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M.; and Holy Sepulchre Commandery, No. 8, K. T., of Pawtucket. He is also a member of Superior Lodge, No. 35, I. O. O. F., and of Ballou Post, No. 3, G. A. R.

The first wife of Mr. Hiscox, to whom he was married March 9, 1859, passed away during his absence in the army. She was Miss Fannie Hoar, daughter of Lewis Hoar, of Warren, and became the mother of one son. This son, Edward M. Hiscox, resides at Riverside, R. I., where he has a position as foreman in a meat and provision market. married Miss Kate Chase, of Bristol, R. I., and they have three children, Arthur, Lila and Marion. The second union of Sylvester B. Hiscox occurred May 9, 1867, when he married Mahala A., daughter of John Grant, of South Seekonk, Mass. They have had two children: Clara G., the elder, married (first) Maurice E. Wells, of Providence, by whom she had one son, Maurice Clifton, and (second) Charles S. Dawson, also of Providence. The younger daughter, Grace L. Hiscox, is now Mrs. Amos E. Barrett, of Providence; she has two daughters, Marion L. and Hazel Grant.

Mrs. Hiscox is a member of the Embury M. E. Church, while Mr. Hiscox is a regular attendant upon its services and has served faithfully for several years as a member of its board of trustees. He has during his life traveled extensively over his own country and has collected many curious and valuable objects of interest.

SANDERS (Providence family). This name, written with and without the "u," is an old one in both Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Martin Sanders with wife Rachel, two children and servants, came to America in the ship "Planter" in 1635, settling in Braintree, and in the fall of that year the parents were admitted to the church at Boston. John Saunders was a proprietor at Ipswich in 1635. A John Saunders was a proprietor at Salem in 1636, was at Marblehead in 1639, and Deputy in 1642. Another John Sanders, husbandman, coming from Lanford, Wilts, England, with wife Sarah and servants, in the "Confidence," in the spring of 1638, was one of three allowed to begin the plantation at "Merrimack" (Salisbury) in the summer of that year. Then, there came to the Windsor settlement on the Connecticut river, prior to 1671, and there appeared at Taunton, Mass., Tobias Saunders, who removed to Newport, R. I., in 1643, was a freeman there in 1655, and later was of Westerly, R. I., where he left a numerous posterity.

Here at Providence have resided through the past century several generations of the posterity of one John Sanders. In a family Bible in the possession of a descendant of John Sanders is the entry of Gates Sanders as dying Sept. 23, 1808. This likely connects the family of John of Providence with that of Jesse Sanders of Rehoboth, Mass., where appears a record of James, born to Jesse and Molly, Oct. 8, 1767 (likely born at Cape Ann); and to a second wife of Jesse, Robey: Molly, born June 6, 1776; Horatio Gates, born June 1, 1778, and John, born June 14, 1780, the latter likely in Swansea.

John Sanders was a resident of Providence, where he followed mechanical pursuits. He was at one time a member of the old town watch which was then the style of the police force, and he died Oct. 28, 1828. He married Sarah Marble, who died Dec. 24, 1840, and they had a family of nine children, all of whom lived to be over sixty years of age, as follows: John, who married Eliza Cole, was a ship builder and resided in Providence, where he died; Richard; Benjamin, a tailor and music teacher, and Joseph, a patternmaker, were twins, and the latter married Sarah Burlingame; Jamse W. was twice married, and his second wife, Phebe B. Wardwell, survives him and resides on Friendship street, Providence, where he for forty-eight years was a member of the police force, and its captain for many years; Abby married Henry Luther; Mary married William Swarts; Sarah Ann married Capt. Benjamin Chaffee, a sea-faring man who was lost at sea off the coast of Florida, and she married (second) Dexter Hopkins; and Robey married John Perkins, a carpenter, who survives her and resides in Providence at an advanced age.

RICHARD SANDERS, who was one of the well known and leading men of Providence in his day, was born in that city May 3, 1810, and there his entire life was spent. Early in life he engaged in the tobacco business, and later was associated with William A. Howard in the wholesale and retail tobacco business on High street, the firm later becoming Sanders, Grant & Co.; the junior member of the firm was Henry Grant, a son-in-law of Mr. Howard, while the firm also included Nathaniel Cheney. They continued in business for some years, after which Mr. Sanders retired from the business, which was continued by the partners. For a time previous to his death Mr. Sanders was a foreman for the firm of W. S. Huntoon & Sons, who carried on a cigar manufacturing business. Mr. Sanders was a successful business man and acquired a handsome competency. He was a self-made man, his sole capital at the start being his native ability, his energy and a determination to succeed. He was one of the most highly esteemed citizens of his locality and was a contemporary of such well known men of half a century ago as "Squire" Robert Knight, Duty Greene, Major James Dean and others. He was a director in the High Street Bank, and well known in financial circles of the city. His religious connection was with the Universalist Church, and he was a liberal contributor to its support. At time of his death he was a member of the building committee that erected the present church edifice. He was a representative from Providence to the General Assembly in 1859, 1866, 1867, and was a member at the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 28, 1868. On the death of Mr. Sanders the Providence Journal said editorially: " * * * Mr. Sanders was a Representative in the General Assembly, from this city. He was an estimable man in every relation of life, and his sudden departure will be mourned by all who knew him. It is understood that his death will be announced with appropriate remarks in the House of Representatives tomorrow."

On the convening of the House just referred to, in relation to the death of Mr. Sanders, appropriate resolutions were presented and passed, and suitable speeches were made by various members. The resolutions and extracts from the speeches of some of the members, including the Speaker of the House, follow:

"Resolved, That in the death of our late associate, we mourn the decease of a sound, prudent and useful legislator, an honorable and upright man, a genial and constant friend, and that by his decease the councils of the State, as well as the circle of his friends, and his own household, have sustained a great and painful bereavement."

"Resolved, That we tender to the family of the deceased our heartfelt condolence in their affliction, and that the clerk of the House is hereby directed to transmit to them a copy of these resolutions."

Mr. Gardiner: "The resolutions, it seems to me, are eminently fitted to express what ought to be said on this occasion, and it seems to me that we ought, as a body, to take proper notice of it. The deceased was not, in the popular sense, a talking man; but as a legislator he was one that enjoyed the confidence of his constituents and whose counsels were eagerly sought by his colleagues. As a man he had the esteem of the community and of a large circle of warm and true-hearted friends; and as a father and protector of a domestic household, none who knew him can doubt that he was anything that any parent could be."

Mr. Calwell, Jr.: "I did not know Mr. Sanders intimately, my acquaintance with him in this House was only brief, but, sir, I have known him from my boyhood as one of our citizens, who had taken a more or less active part in the duties and responsibilities that are imposed upon us. He was not a man who sought the battle of business. He rather preferred a secluded life. He was a quiet, unobtrusive man. But, Mr. Speaker, he was well known as a man, who when called upon, always discharged the duties devolving upon him faithfully and satisfactorily, and it is a trifling circumstance, but one that has great significance, that in the choice of those who shall represent the people of the State in our Assembly, his name stood foremost. I have looked upon him as one of the men who after all, by the blamelessness which they maintain, and by the force of their character, constitute the real and substantial worth of every community. To say a man who has nearly attained the ripe age of three score years, that he has borne an unsullied reputation among the people with whom he has lived all his days, is to say that through all the vicissitudes and temptations of life, he has so built up his character, that when we come to pass judgment upon it, we must pronounce it good. This, to my mind, is the achieving of a greatness above all other greatness. There are men among us of great talent and endowments, of great acumen and great endowments, but these may all exist without solid worth of character. Character is something which is a part of one's own soul, and cannot be separated from him here or hereafter. Such qualities as Mr. Sanders possessed are the real jewels of this life, and I believe also of the life to come."

Mr. Speaker Van Zandt: "Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: Before these resolutions are adopted, it is decorous and proper that I should add a few words to what has already been said relative to our departed friend. I have known him long. Years ago, when I was clerk of this body, he was a member. Ten years ago, when I occupied the seat I now fill, he was again a member. I knew him as an honest man, with a sound mind and a sound body, with excellent practical common sense, and unprejudiced judgment. We miss him to-day—we shall miss him for a long time to come; his seat is vacant forever. It appears to me that the few truthful words of appreciation and praise to which we have listened, have been uttered in compliance with what is a sad but beautiful custom. It is like strewing flowers over the ground that covers the dead. They last, indeed, but for a little time. The frost withers them and the night winds blow them away. But, briefly as they remain, it is right and proper that this tribute should be paid. It has always appeared to me, gentlemen, when we are thus assembled, as we were but one family. Very kindly and tender relations spring up among us during these long January sessions; and when one member is taken away it is as though one of the family were gone. It is something more than a public bereavement—it becomes almost a personal one."

Hon. Richard Sanders married Almira M., daughter of James S. and Eleanor Ryder (Snow) Hall; she died Oct. 22, 1862, aged forty-one years. Their children were: (1) James H., born Dec. 5, 1837, died Oct. 9, 1838. (2) Richard Marble, born May 9, 1839, in Providence, graduated at the High school at the age of fifteen years, and immediately thereafter entered the Bank of North America as a clerk, rising to the position of teller, which he held until about one year previous to his death, Dec. 18, 1890, when on account of poor health he resigned. He married Susan G. Wilbur, who survives him, and they had one son, Arthur W., who married Clara C. Burroughs, and has one son, Richard A., a student at Brown University. (3) Albert Lippitt was born April 7, 1841. (4) Anna G., born May 27, 1843, married Cutting S. Calef, a member of the firm of Calef Bros., who died Sept. 12, 1882, aged forty-six years; she passed away in Providence, where they had resided, in 1877. (5) Emma, born Sept. 26, 1846, married George C. Calef, of the firm of Calef Bros., who died Feb. 15, 1897, aged fifty-nine years, his widow surviving him and residing in Providence. (6) Rebecca Gage, born Aug. 27, 1849, is unmarried and resides in Providence.

ALBERT LIPPITT SANDERS, son of Hon Richard and Almira M., was born April 7, 1841, in Providence, and graduated from the Providence High school. Soon thereafter he became a clerk in the Bank of North America, where he remained for about five years, and then, in company with Silas Beatty Whitford, under the firm name of Whitford & Sanders, engaged in the wholesale grocery business on Exchange street. This style of firm name continued until William E. Whitford, a son of Silas B., was admitted, when the firm became Whitford, Sanders & Co. Subsequently Asel P. Bartlett became a partner, and the firm name was changed to Sanders, Whitford & Bartlett, and so continued until Mr. Sanders withdrew from the firm because of poor health. He then spent several years in travel throughout the United States and Europe, spending much time in France. He was greatly interested in the French language, which he studied and mastered. Mr. Sanders died May 21, 1893. He was a director for many years of the Westminster Bank, and was socially connected with the West Side Club. He was identified with Grace Episcopal Church. On Sept. 5, 1864, he married Lucie A. Brownell, of Providence, daughter of Josiah and Mary (Brownell) Brownell, and she resides in Providence. Mr. and Mrs. Sanders were the parents of three children: Albert B., born June 13, 1866, died Aug. 22, 1884; Richard Calef, born Jan. 6, 1868; and Almira, born June 7, 1875, died Aug. 18, 1876.

RICHARD CALEF SANDERS, son of Albert L. and Lucie A., was born in Providence, R. I., and received his education in the public schools which he left at an early age, taking up a mercantile career by entering the establishment of which his father was a partner. He remained there eight years, and then spent some time in travel with his parents. After his return to Providence he was for a time connected with William H. Hall, the well known insurance and real estate broker, who was an uncle of his father. From boyhood Mr. Sanders displayed an aptitude and talent for drawing, and by study he became a skilled architect, which has been his business for a number of years, he also dealing in real estate.

Mr. Sanders married Mary C. Rogers, a native of Utica, N. Y., daughter of Charles D. Rogers, and they have had two children: Marguerite Rogers, born Jan. 24, 1890; and Charles Deak Rogers, born Jan. 21, 1893, died May 25, 1895. Mr. Sanders is a member of Rising Sun Lodge, No. 30, A. F. & A. M., at East Providence; and Providence Chapter, No. 1, R. A. M.

NICHOLAS BROWN YOUNG, a son of the late Edward R. Young and Amanda Kinnicutt (Coggeshall) Young, and a very well-known merchant in Providence years ago, was born May 28, 1839, and died June 27, 1902.

In his early manhood Mr. Young was employed as a salesman by Young & Lyon, wholesale grocers on North Main street, leaving their employ to go into partnership with his brother, George F. Young, upon the retirement of Mr. Olney from the firm of Young & Olney, tobacco dealers. This occurred in 1872, after which time the firm was known as George F. Young & Co., until 1876, when it became George F. Young & Brother. Mr. Young was a prominent member of the Pomham and West Side Clubs, and was held in high regard by all who knew him, especially by his clerks and those who associated with him. He was a veteran of the Civil war, having served as a member of the 1st R. I. V. I. In political matters Mr. Young was a Republican. He was married (first) to Charlotte Amelia Sherman, daughter of George and Lydia (Sawyer) Sherman, of Newport, R. I., and to them came one son, Rogers Gano, born July 18, 1865. Mrs. Young died March 3, 1892, and on Oct. 14, 1896, Mr. Young married (second) Ella F. Briggs, daughter of Jeremiah and Desire Jane (Gardiner) Briggs.

The firm of George F. Young & Brother, the principal establishment in Providence, and the oldest and largest in New England, engaged in the wholesale and retail handling of cigars, tobaccos and smokers' goods in general, is located at Nos. 127 and 129 Westminster street. This house has been in existence for nearly a half century, and commands a trade extending to all sections of the United States. The enterprise was founded in 1858 by Mr. J. Curtis, who was succeeded by Mr. L. Kingsley. Later on the firm of Kingsley & Smith was organized, and was followed by Smith & Young, Young & Olney, George F. Young & Co., and in 1876 by the co-partners George F. Young & Brother, consisting of George F. and Nicholas B. Young, and now succeeded by the only son of the latter, Rogers Gano Young. The business premises occupied comprise a store and basement, the largest business room in Butler Exchange. The salesroom is tastefully and systematically arranged and contains a large stock of the choicest cigars, tobaccos, pipes, snuffs and smokers' articles of every variety, both of foreign and domestic manufacture. A corps of thirteen salesmen in the home store, and five traveling salesmen, are employed. The long-established influential connections of the house are such that it is enabled to offer special inducements in prices, and all orders are promptly filled in a manner guaranteed to insure satisfaction.

ROGERS GANO YOUNG, son of the late Nicholas Brown and Charlotte Amelia (Sherman) Young, was born July 18, 1865. He attended Miss Susan Sawyer's private school, the Thayer Street grammar school, the high school and the Merrick and Emery Lyon private school, which subsequently became the University School in Providence. In 1883, when eighteen years of age, he entered the business of George F. Young & Brother, and upon the death of his uncle, George F. Young, Rogers G. and his father, Nicholas B., succeeded to the business. In 1902, when the latter died, Rogers G. was left the only surviving member of the firm.

Mr. Young is a thirty-second-degree Mason, being a member of What Cheer Lodge, Providence Chapter, Providence Council, Calvary Commandery (of which he is past commander), and Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Pomham Club, of the "D. O." Club, and of Providence Lodge, B. P. O. E.

In April, 1894, Mr. Young married Miss Harriet Jenckes Goff, daughter of James C. and Carrie (Lyon) Goff, and four children have been born to this union: Caroline Hobert, Rogers Gano, Jr., Nicholas Brown and James Carleton. Mr. and Mrs. Young are members of the Union Baptist Church, of which he has been treasurer. The family home, at No. 73 Manning street, corner of Governor, was erected by Nicholas B. Young.

CROMBE. One of the early settlers of Westerly, R. I., was Daniel Crumb. Tradition says he came from Scotland and settled on Crumb's Neck, in Westerly. Another tradition is that his family can be traced back to Cromwell's time; and still another, that a Crump, in Cromwell's army, was the progenitor, and that the Crumps and Crumbs were one race. The name has been and still is variously spelled—Crumbie, Crumble, Crume and Crumb; and in New York State, where Dutch spelling prevails—Krom, Krum, Krumme, etc. At the present time the Wickford, R. I., branch spell the name Crombe; southern Rhode Island and Connecticut branches, Crumb; and the western branches Crum and Krom.

The earliest record of Daniel Crumb yet found is in the Rhode Island Colonial Records, Oct. 28, 1668, giving "The names of such as inhabit Misquamicut, who have formerly presented their names to be made free of this Colony, doe now again present them to this Assembly and are admitted." Daniel Crumb's name stands sixth in the list. He must have been a landholder at that time, and in 1669 he drew lot 23 at the town meeting in Westerly. On May 17, 1671, with twenty-four others he took the oath of allegiance to the King and the Colony of Rhode Island. On April 6, 1675, he was married by Thomas Harris, to Sarah Harris, who died Nov. 7, 1676. He married (second) Rachel Roberts, who died about 1682, leaving three children: William; a daughter that married Edward Austin; and Daniel. In 1683 he married (third) Alice, widow of Richard Haughton. Daniel Crumb was one of the Connecticut volunteers in King Philip's war, his name being the 103d on the roll of enlistment; and as a reward for his services he received from the Colony of Connecticut about thirty-five acres in Voluntown, drawing lot 111. On Dec. 2, 1699, Governor Cranston issued a warrant for the arrest of fourteen inhabitants of Westerly, among them Daniel Crumb, "for remonstrating under their hands against the choosing of rate makers according to an Assembly Act at Warwick, Oct. 25, 1699." This was said to be high contempt against His Majesty's authority in the Colony. Whether the men were ever arrested or not the records do not show. On April 13, 1713, the town council of Westerly met at Isaac Thompson's. It was reported to them that Daniel Crumb had died intestate, and the council, according to Colonial law, proceeded to make a will for him, with his son William as executor. The estate inventoried £35 9s 6d.

William Crumb, son of Daniel, was born between August, 1677, and March, 1688. He was made a freeman of the Colony at a town meeting held at Roger Larkin's house March 4, 1699. His first wife, Mercy, was living in 1724, when a deed was signed by her. She was an original member of the First Seventh Day Baptist Church at Hopkinton, being recorded there in 1712 and 1718. She had died before the next record was made in 1740. The will of William Crumb, made on July 6, 1741, mentions the following children by the first wife: Joseph, Rachel, William, Mercy, Jemima and Elizabeth. In 1710 or 1711 he was a purchaser in the Lewis and Maxson purchase in Hopkinton; the first purchase giving each one about 150 acres, and the second about 225 acres. He married (second) Hannah, youngest daughter of Daniel Lewis. She was born about 1703, and was a member of the First Seventh Day Baptist Church in 1740. Her sons were: Daniel, born Aug. 19, 1737; and Samuel, Nov. 9, 1740. Hannah (Lewis) Crumb married for her second husband, Stephen Hall.

William Crumb, Jr., born early in 1700, was admitted a freeman April 30, 1751. He married (first) Jerusha Edwards, daughter of Thomas Edwards.

Simeon Crumb, son of William, married, Jan. 23, 1783, Harriet, daughter of Samuel Pendleton. Their children were: Nancy, born Sept. 15, 1783; Fanny, born Dec. 25, 1784; Elsie (or Alice), born Aug. 24, 1786, married, May 11, 1811, Joshua Sisson; Simeon, born March 22, 1788; Rhoda, born April 11, 1790, married a Thompson; Prudence, born Feb. 25, 1792; Betsey, born April 13, 1795;

Phineas, born Feb. 17, 1797, married (first) a Houston, and (second) Nancy Chapman, and Charles, born Nov. 12, 1798.

Charles Crumb, son of Simeon, born Nov. 12, 1798, engaged in farming at Westerly, R. I., and died there about 1838. On April 25, 1822, he married Susannah Hiscox, Elder Jesse Babcock performing the ceremony. The children born of this union were: Charles T., born Jan. 12, 1824; Alonzo F., in November, 1826; Edwin M., July 23, 1829 (married Sarah Thurston); and Eliza M. (twin to Edwin M.), July 23, 1829 (married Capt. George H. T. Cole).

CHARLES T. CROMBE, son of Charles, was born Jan. 12, 1824, and died April 18, 1903. He was the first to spell the name Crombe. At the early age of sixteen years he began a sea-faring life at Boston, on whaling vessels, and before he was nineteen had been in all quarters of the globe. He was on the schooner "Lucy Emeline," a packet running to Providence, and was on vessels engaged in the West Indian trade. In 1849, like many others, he had the "gold fever," and went to California by way of the Isthmus, and for nineteen months engaged in boating at San Francisco. Returning to Rhode Island, for ten years he devoted his time to the care of his uncle, Daniel Hiscox, who resided at Hamilton, R. I. For several years, also, he was agent at the railroad station at Wickford. In his political principles he was a Democrat, and as such was active in public matters. He served as councilman, president of the town council, and as representative in the State Legislature from North Kingstown. For the long period of eleven years he was the town clerk of North Kingstown, and was a faithful and efficient officer of the town. He was a charter member of Washington Lodge, No. 5, A. F. & A. M.

On Oct. 28, 1850, at French town, East Greenwich, R. I., Mr. Crombe was married to Clariet N. Bailey, who was born March 19, 1830. To bless this union came two children: Carrie L., born Oct. 7, 1858; and Mary E., born April 18, 1862, who was married, Oct. 24, 1892, to Joseph Freeborn Sealy, and has one daughter, Charlotte Freeborn, born May 29, 1902.

ALONZO F. CRUMB, second son of Charles and Susannah (Hiscox) Crumb, was born in November, 1826. He married, Feb. 7, 1856, Lucinda Whelchel, and they had six children: Ellen Melissa, born Aug. 31, 1857 (died Nov. 25, 1887); Susan Ida, July 8, 1859; Alonzo F., Oct. 15, 1863 (deceased); Lular Georgia, July 7, 1865; Adah Frances, Feb. 11, 1868 (died Oct. 2, 1905); and Charles Edwin, Oct. 25, 1876.

Eliza M. Crumb, daughter of Charles and Susannah (Hiscox) Crumb, born July 23, 1829, married Sept. 18, 1848, Capt. George H. T. Cole, of Wickford. Their children were: (1) Hutchinson Alonzo, born Jan. 4, 1852, died Aug. 8, 1852. (2) Walter Leslie, born Dec. 28, 1856, is an engineer on the government boat "Cora," and resides at Bristol, R. I. He married Jeannette L. Warner, and has one child, Marion Shirley. (3) A son, born June 10, 1862, died June 11, 1862. (4) Ernest Lincoln, born Oct. 18, 1865, is assistant superintendent of construction of the Fore River Engine Company, and resides at East Braintree, Mass. He married Minnie Van Wagner, and has four children: Stanley Hiscox, Leslie Arthur, Raymond and George. (5) Charles Edwin, born March 6, 1868, died March 2, 1870. (6) Arthur Elmer, born Aug. 21, 1870, is a marine engineer. He married Mary Lynch, and had one daughter, Gladys M., now deceased.

BENJAMIN F. TANNER, one of Newport's representative business men, a leading contractor and builder of that city, is a member of one of New England's oldest settled families. He was born May 11, 1851, in Newport, son of Francis E. and Lucy A. (Dawley) Tanner.

(I) William Tanner, the first of the Tanner family of whom any data can be had, first appears on the Rhode Island records in 1682, and was probably born between 1660-1665, and died after 1735. He was one of the constituent members of the original Seventh Day Baptist Church of Westerly, now Hopkinton, and the records show that he paid Governor Andre's tax in 1687, bought land in 1693, on which he was buried, and was a man of influence and deep religious convictions. He is thought to have come from the west of England, and to have been a "yeoman" or "planter." He was admitted a freeman in South Kingstown. By his third wife, Elizabeth Cottrell, he had a son.

(II) Francis Tanner, born in South Kingstown, R. I., July 3, 1708, who died Jan. 3, 1777. Francis Tanner married (first) Feb. 6, 1728, Mary Tosh, of Newport, who died Nov. 10, 1745. His second marriage was to Elizabeth Sheldon, daughter of Isaac Sheldon, of South Kingstown. She was born Nov. 8, 1713, and died in 1801, her will being proved April 6th of that year. Francis Tanner was admitted a freeman in South Kingstown in 1753, was a justice in 1762-65, purchased 1,225 acres in Hopkinton, and held a commission as justice from Governor Wanton in 1770. His family consisted of seven children.

(III) Josias Tanner, one of the children of Francis Tanner by his first wife, was born June 10, 1734, in South Kingstown, R. I. He married (first) Dec. 5, 1754, Anne Blackman, who died May 17, 1768. Mr. Tanner's second marriage was to Phebe Brownell, born July 17, 1769, daughter of Thomas Brownell. Thomas Brownell was a son of George and Mary (Thurston) Brownell, grandson of Thomas and Mary (Pearce) Brownell, and great-grandson of Thomas and Anna Brownell. It is thought that the Brownells first lived on the "Island of Rhode Island." Josias Tanner was a farmer of South Kingstown, R. I., of which he was admitted a freeman in 1757; was ensign, under

Benj F Tanner

Capt. Nicholas Gardner in the 2d Continental Company; served as private in the 1st Battalion, Rhode Island troops, Colonel Green commanding, United States service, June 1st to July 1st, 1778, Colonel Arnold's detachment. [Records of Rhode Island Revolutionary Soldiers, Historical Society, Providence and Newport.] Josias Tanner had these children by his first wife: Elizabeth, born Sept. 15, 1755; Hannah, born April 29, 1758; and Josias, Jr., born May 30, 1763. The children born to Josias Tanner and his second wife were: Anne, born Aug. 3, 1770; Mary, March 23, 1772; Phebe, May 11, 1775; Dorcas, March 18, 1778; Thomas Brownell, May 28, 1780; Susanna, Jan. 27, 1783; Francis W., July 7, 1785; Amy, Dec. 22, 1788; Lucy, March 19, 1792; and Joseph Blackman, Sept. 24, 1794.

(IV) Thomas Brownell Tanner, born May 28, 1780, in South Kingstown, R. I., died March 18, 1854, in Narragansett. He followed farming all of his life. About 1800 he married Hannah Boss, daughter of Peter Boss, Sr., and Hannah Boss, the latter a daughter of Jeremiah and Martha (Spencer) Boss. They had these children: John B., born Feb. 28, 1801; Edmund Johnson, born Aug. 28, 1802, who died Sept. 6, 1828; Francis E., born April 21, 1805; Desire Boss, born Feb. 20, 1807; and Mary Hubbard, born Oct. 17, 1808.

(V) Francis Ezekiel Tanner, the father of Benjamin F. Tanner, was born April 21, 1805, in South Kingstown, R. I., and died Sept. 2, 1854, in Newport. He was a drayman and teamster, and also followed farming. Coming to Newport when about twenty years of age, he resided there the rest of his life. In political sentiment he was a Whig and a Republican. In religious matters he was connected with the Baptist Church. He married, in 1827, Lucy A. Dawley, of Newport, daughter of Sprague and Lucy (Whitman) Dawley, and she died in Newport in 1887, aged seventy-eight years. They had the following named children: Phebe Frances married Isaac Austin, a carpenter and builder of Holdrege, Neb., of which city he has been mayor; Desire Boss married Benjamin Nichols, now a retired steamboat officer of Newport; Mary Hubbard married Mindred Ingraham, of Bristol, R. I., and both are deceased; Sarah married (first) Henry Lindol, of Providence, and (second) James Brownell, of Adamsville, Mass.; Amelia J., unmarried, is a resident of Newport; Thomas B., who was killed at the battle of Antietam, was a corporal, and had enlisted from Newport in the 4th Rhode Island Infantry; Edward J., a resident of Newport, who is connected with the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, married Abbie Barker, of Newport; Gert-rude W. died at the age of sixteen years; Benjamin F. is mentioned further on; Frederick A., carpenter foreman for Benjamin F. and a resident of Newport, married Jennie Barker, who is now deceased.

(VI) Benjamin F. Tanner received a common school education and also attended Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College, at Providence, graduating in 1868. He then became bookkeeper for William Sherman & Co., in the dry goods business, and after several years' employment as such served an apprenticeship to the carpenter's trade with Cranston & Burdick, with whom he remained about thirteen years in all. In 1880 he established himself in the contracting and building business, and among the many buildings constructed by him may be mentioned: "Belmead," George S. Scott's residence on Bellevue avenue; Oliver G. Jennings's, on the same avenue; Richard M. Matteson's, on Bath road; William M. Franklin's, on Cliff avenue; W. A. Neilson's, on Ocean Drive; William B. Scott's block, on Broadway. Mr. Tanner has been very successful in his chosen work. In 1895 he erected his present home at No. 38 Rhode Island avenue.

Mr. Tanner is a director of the Newport Realty Company, of which he was an original incorporator; a director of the Builders' and Merchants' Association; president of the Builders' Association, of Newport; a member of the Newport Horticultural Society, the Newport Historical Society, and the Natural History Society; is connected with the Gen. G. K. Warren Post Associates, and was a member of the Business Men's Association during its existence. Mr. Tanner is vice-president and a member of the executive committee of the Citizens' Association of Newport. In religious connection he is a member of the First Baptist Church, served on the church committee, and was assistant superintendent of the Sunday-school for several years. In politics a Republican, he has always taken an active part in city affairs and has ever shown a willingness to assist in all matters pertaining to the welfare of Newport. He has served as councilman and alderman; was chairman of the Fire, Finance and Highway committees, and a member of the Executive committee, and in 1906, at the first election held under the new charter granted the city of Newport, was elected a member of the representative council for the two-year term from the Second ward. Mr. Tanner was a member of the volunteer fire department, was foreman of Hercules Engine Company and of the Phoenix Hook and Ladder Company, and later a member of the board of engineers. For many years he was a member of the Newport Artillery Company.

Benjamin F. Tanner was married Aug. 7, 1873, to Fannie B. Sanford, daughter of Clarke Sanford, of Newport, and to them have been born children as follows: Thomas B., a carpenter in the employ of his father, married Elizabeth Hazard, of Newport, and they have one son, Thomas B., Jr.; Frances E. died at the age of nine months; Marjorie Whitman married Francis Neil Fullerton, of Newport, and they have one daughter, Frances E. Fullerton; Sarah C. married Harold M. Sherman, of Newport, and they have one son, Harold M. Sherman, Jr.

Mrs. Tanner, our subject's wife, is a direct lineal descendant of Peleg Sanford, who was associated with John Clarke, Henry Bull and others in purchasing the first lands of Newport from the Indians.

FOSTER. The Foster family, one of the oldest in New England, is worthily represented in Pawtucket, R. I., by Joseph Henry and Charles Samuel Foster, father and son, men of prominence in the business, fraternal and financial circles of the city, who are in the ninth and tenth generations, respectively, from the pioneer of the family in America. Herewith is given a genealogical history of what is known as the Dorchester branch of the Foster family, the Roman numerals indicating generations.

(I) Sergt. Thomas Foster, born in England about 1600, was a son of Rev. Thomas and Abigail (Wimes) Foster (she a daughter of Mathew Wimes, of Ipswich, and he a resident of Bidden-den and Ipswich, England), whose other children were: Richard, William, Sarah, Elizabeth and Jane. Sergt. Thomas Foster came to America with his brother William, in 1634, in the ship "Hercules." On Sept. 30, 1639, he was granted twenty-four acres of land, for six heads, at Mount Wollaston, Mass., now Braintree or Quincy, and he was called "Governor of the Castle Island." [See Boston records of land grants in Pattee's History of Braintree, page 28.] He was called "Commander at the Castle" on Castle Island, Boston Harbor, Mass. [See Book of Possessions of Boston.] He was the gunner at the "Castle." He married, probably in 1638, and in 1640 he was residing in Weymouth, where his first child was born. He owned land in Weymouth in 1642, and disposed of his remaining land in Boston limits in 1647. While residing in Boston, in 1642, he was admitted a freeman, and on his removal to Billerica was admitted there in 1647. The following year he removed to Braintree, and before 1659 was residing in Billerica. The first list of town officers, 1659-60, names Thomas Foster as one of the selectmen of Billerica, and there he died April 20, 1682, his widow surviving until Jan. 29, 1694-5. Their children were: Thomas (2), born Aug. 18, 1640; John, born Oct. 7, 1642; Increase, born about 1644; Elizabeth, born about 1646; Hopestill, born March 26, 1648; and Joseph, born March 28, 1650.

(II) Dr. Thomas Foster (2), son of Sergeant Thomas, born Aug. 18, 1640, in Weymouth, married Oct. 15, 1662, Sarah, born in April, 1640, daughter of Robert Parker, of Cambridge. Mr. Foster removed to Roxbury about 1662 and to Cambridge about 1672. He was a butcher in Boston and Roxbury and is styled in the court files physician. He died Sept. 16, 1679, according to the town records, or Oct. 28, 1679, as inscribed on his headstone, aged thirty-nine years. His widow remarried and died April 18, 1718. Their children were: Thomas, born Aug. 1, 1663; Thomas (3), born June 4, 1665; Sarah, born June 3, 1667; Hannah, born July 23, 1669; Jonathan, born Sept. 21, 1671; and Elizabeth, born Sept. 26, 1677.

(III) Thomas Foster (3), born June 4, 1665, in Cambridge, Mass., married there Nov. 30, 1686, Experience Parker. Mr. Foster seems to have disappeared from Cambridge in 1715. Experience married (second) before 1719 Benjamin Geary, and in that year resided in Voluntown, Conn. In 1719 young Thomas is at Voluntown with his mother. Mr. Foster resided in Cambridge and Stow. He died before 1719. His only child was Thomas (4), born Sept. 18, 1687.

(IV) Thomas Foster (4), son of Thomas (3), born Sept. 18, 1687, in Cambridge, Mass., resided in Preston and Voluntown, Conn., and Scituate, R. I., and died in Scituate Aug. 20, 1746. He went from Cambridge to Preston and thence to Voluntown, Conn., with his mother Experience Foster. By deed dated Plainfield, Conn., July 27, 1737, he transferred the last of his land in Voluntown, Conn., to William Trumbell, and went to Scituate, R. I., where he bought 150 acres of James Brown, of Newport, R. I. This land was lot No. 42, of the second division of the Westconad lands, and the date was Oct. 17, 1738. On the 18th day of February, 1739, he deeded this land to his only son, Stephen Foster. On July 3, 1711, he was married in Preston, Conn., to Mercy Gates, and they had three children: Silas, born March 7, 1721, in Voluntown, Conn., who died Dec. 8, 1721; Stephen, born April 20, 1712, in Preston; and Sarah, born July 31, 1717. By Sarah in Haverhill 1721.

(V) Stephen Foster, son of Thomas (4), was born April 20, 1712, in Preston, Conn., and married Lydia Blanchard. In May, 1739, he was admitted a freeman in Scituate, R. I., to which town he had previously removed. He was a prominent man in town affairs, serving in various town offices. He served as administrator of the estates of his father and father-in-law, and was a considerable land owner. On Sept. 18, 1789, he deeded thirty-three acres for love and affection, to his son, Lemuel Foster. His children were: Sarah, born July 26, 1744; Stephen, Jr., born Aug. 4, 1746; Samuel, twin of Stephen, Jr., who died March 2, 1816, in his seventieth year; Lemuel, born in 1764, who died May 11, 1821; Thomas; and William.

(VI) Lemuel Foster, born in 1764, in Scituate, R. I., died May 11, 1821, in Foster, R. I. He served as a drummer boy in the Revolutionary war, and it is a tradition in the family that he was in the battle of Rhode Island, was taken prisoner at Newport, and placed on a British vessel. The land in Scituate, R. I., that he received from his father he sold to William Blanchard and then went to Sharon, Vt., some time about 1798. He lived there about five years and one of his children, Mercy, was born at Sharon. Then he returned to Scituate, and he died May 11, 1821. He is buried in the old Foster yard at Moosup Valley, R. I. He married Freelove Cahone, of Foster, R. I., and their children were: Thomas; Lemuel, who married Waity Letson; Mercy, who married Thomas Spencer; Lydia, who married Nathan Walker; Polly, who married George Harwood; and Jefferson, who was drowned at Anthony, Rhode Island.

(VII) Thomas Foster, son of Lemuel, died some time in the thirties in Scituate, R. I. He married Betsey Butler, daughter of Rebecca, who came from Cape Cod, Mass. She died in 1826. Mr. Foster was a stone mason and cutter by trade and was employed on the construction of the Arcade building, in Providence, in 1828. He was a very proficient and skilled workman, as the tombstone in the Moosup Valley cemetery, which he erected to the memory of his father, will indicate. The children of Thomas and Betsey (Butler) Foster were: (1) James B., who followed the sea the greater portion of his life, married Lucy Ann Ballou, of Cumberland, R. I. (2) Samuel is mentioned further on. (3) Freelove F. married William S. Salisbury, of East Greenwich, R. I., and both died in New York City. (4) Zachariah died July 30, 1851, aged twenty-six years, in Pawtucket, Mass., unmarried.

(VIII) Samuel Foster, born July 14, 1819, in Sterling, Conn., died May 17, 1883, in Pawtucket, R. I. In early life he was a mule spinner, but with the advent of the modern machinery he learned the machinist's trade, which he followed for a number of years. When a young man he came to Pawtucket and followed his trade, working in various shops, among them that of the William H. Haskell Co. Responding to his country's call for troops to defend the flag, Mr. Foster enlisted Sept. 3, 1862, in Company F, 11th R. I. V. I., as a private, and served until July 13, 1863, when he was mustered out, the greater part of his service having been guard duty in and around Washington, D. C. On his return from the war Mr. Foster for some time continued to follow his trade, which he finally gave up to engage in the advertising and bill-posting business, in which he continued for the remainder of his active business life. He was a capable and industrious man, and throughout his business career was noted for his honesty and integrity. He was an honored member of Tower Post, G. A. R., and of Eureka Lodge, No. 5, Knights of Pythias, of Pawtucket.

On April 23, 1843, Mr. Foster was united in marriage with Angeline Arnold, daughter of Deacon Olney and Eunice (Miller) Arnold, of Smithfield, and granddaughter of Capt. Israel and Deborah (Olney) Arnold. Israel Arnold was captain of the Pawtucket Rangers during the Revolutionary war. The lineage of Angeline (Arnold) Foster from Thomas Arnold, son of Richard, a native of Chesilbourne, in the County of Dorset, England (who came to New England in 1635 in the ship "Plain Joan," bringing his family with him and settling first at Watertown, thence removing to Providence, R. I.), is through Eleazer Arnold and his wife, Eleanor (Smith); Joseph and Mercy (Stafford) Arnold; Joshua and Amy (Bucklin) Arnold; Israel and Deborah (Olney) Arnold, and Olney and Eunice (Miller) Arnold. Mrs. Foster was born Jan. 29, 1809, in Smithfield, and died March 23, 1889, in Pawtucket. To Mr. and Mrs. Foster came children as follows: Samuel, Jr., born Jan. 29, 1844, in Smithfield, R. I., died in Pawtucket, Mass., March 19, 1850; Joseph H. is mentioned further on; Mary Ann, born May 30, 1849, in Pawtucket, Mass., died in Pawtucket, R. I., Nov. 15, 1901; she married Charles Boughey, of Central Falls, R. I., and by this union there was one daughter, Mary Louise Boughey, born Nov. 22, 1876, who married Everett Ferrant, of Pawtucket, and died Aug. 25, 1896.

(IX) JOSEPH HENRY FOSTER, son of Samuel, was born Aug. 29, 1846, in Pawtucket, Mass., and in the public schools of his native city had his educational training. After leaving school he entered the machine shop of the late William H. Haskell, where he was employed until 1868, during which time he acquired a thorough knowledge of the machinist's trade. In June, 1868, Mr. Foster entered the employ of the Fales & Jenks Machine Company, of Pawtucket, as a tool-maker, and before he had rounded out a year's service with this company he was given the contract in the spindle department of the Fales & Jenks Machine Company, in which important connection he has since continued, through nearly forty years. At times he has given employment to as many as ninety skilled mechanics, the general average being from thirty to fifty hands. In 1888 Mr. Foster took into partnership with him on the contract his son, Charles S. Foster, who has since been actively associated with his father.

Joseph H. Foster is prominent in Masonic circles, having been a member of the fraternity since 1872. Formerly a member of Jenks Lodge, No. 24, of Central Falls, of which he is a past master, he is now holding membership in Union Lodge, No. 10, A. F. & A. M., of Pawtucket; Pawtucket Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M.; Pawtucket Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; Holy Sepulchre Commandery, No. 8, K. T.; Massachusetts Consistory, of Boston, thirty-second degree, and Aleppo Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Boston. He is also a member of the Masonic Veterans' Association, which requires twenty-one years' membership in the order. He was vice president of the Masonic Temple Company, Pawtucket, from 1897 to 1900. Mr. Foster is also connected with Good Samaritan Lodge, No. 8, and Manchester Encampment, No. 4, I. O. O. F., of Pawtucket. He is a member of the Rhode Island Historical Society, the Rhode Island Citizens' Historical Association of Providence, the To Kalon Club of Pawtucket, and for a number of years was connected with the Pawtucket Business Men's Association. In political matters he is a Republican, but he has never cared for public office. He attends the Baptist Church.

On July 31, 1866, Mr. Foster was married to Ellen Smith Parker, born Oct. 11, 1844, in Perth, Scotland, who died July 2, 1889, in Pawtucket, R. I., daughter of John and Elizabeth (Roy) Parker. By this union there were children as follows: Charles Samuel, born Oct. 12, 1867, in Pawtucket, is mentioned further on; Cora Belle, born July 14, 1870, in Central Falls, died April 25, 1877, in Pawtucket; Mary Angeline, born Jan. 18, 1872, in Central Falls, married Nov. 22, 1891, George Oliver Everett, of Pawtucket, and they have had three children, Ellen Frances (born April 5, 1893, died in infancy), Mildred Austin (born May 28, 1894) and Gertrude Arnold (born in Boston, Mass., Sept. 2, 1898); James Wheaton, born Oct. 20, 1873, in Central Falls, died at Pawtucket, Nov. 12, 1875; Levi Arnold, born Aug. 5, 1875, in Pawtucket, a machinist by trade, married Feb. 18, 1896, Lydia B. P. Vose, daughter of Alonzo W. Vose, of Cumberland, R. I., and they have had two children, Joseph Alonzo (born Dec. 31, 1896, in Pawtucket), and Ida May (born Dec. 31, 1898, in Providence); Lester Parker, born Oct. 31, 1877, in Pawtucket, died in that city Aug. 10, 1878; Ida Maude, born Jan. 17, 1879, in Pawtucket, married Dec. 11, 1901, Ralph Smith Potter, of Pawtucket, son of Henry Angell and Hannah Louise (Smith) Potter, of Burrillville, R. I., and to this union have come three children: Margery F. (born July 7, 1903, died in infancy), Anna (born Jan. 6, 1905), and Eleanor (born May 9, 1906, in Pawtucket).

Joseph Henry Foster was married (second) Aug. 28, 1890, to Mary Reardon, born in Enfield, Conn., daughter of John and Mary (Kelly) Reardon.

(X) CHARLES SAMUEL FOSTER, son of Joseph Henry, was born Oct. 12, 1867, in Pawtucket, R. I. He received his education in the public schools of his native city and the University Grammar School of Providence, leaving the latter when he was eighteen years of age. He then went to work at the Fales & Jenks Machine Company, in the spindle department, under his father, and for three years was also a student at the Rhode Island School of Design of Providence, where he studied mechanical drafting. In 1888 Mr. Foster was made a partner of his father, and has since been so engaged.

Like his father, Mr. Foster is prominent in Masonic circles, holding membership in Union Lodge, No. 10, A. F. & A. M., of which he is a past master, and of which he has been treasurer since 1900; Pawtucket Chapter, No. 4, R. A. M., of which he has been treasurer since 1898; Pawtucket Council, No. 2, R. & S. M.; Holy Sepulchre Commandery, No. 8, K. T., of which he is a past eminent commander; Rhode Island Consistory, thirty-second degree Masonry; and Palestine Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Providence. He is also a member of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Association of Knights Templar Commanders, and a member of the board of managers of the Masonic Temple Company of Pawtucket, having served in this position since 1901. Mr. Foster is a member of the Tokalon Club of Pawtucket, of the Rhode Island Historical Society of Providence; and of Pawtucket Council, No. 537, Royal Arcanum. He attends the Central Falls Congregational Church, to which he gives a liberal support. In political matters Mr. Foster is a staunch Republican, and served as a member of the common council of Central Falls in 1903 and 1904, being president of that body in the latter year. In 1905 he was elected a trustee of the public library for three years, and he is also one of the three trustees of the Stephen L. Adams Library Fund.

On June 5, 1890, Mr. Foster was married in Marlboro, Mass., to Mary Alice Curtis, daughter of Francis C. and Caroline A. W. (Brigham) Curtis, and a direct descendant in the eighth generation of Zacheus Curtis, of Reading, Mass., an early settler of the New England States, who was of Gloucester, Mass., in 1659, and died in Boxford, Mass., in 1682. Mr. and Mrs. Foster have had the following children: Chester Curtis, born Sept. 16, 1891, in Central Falls; Ellen, born Dec. 24, 1893, in Pawtucket; and Caroline Brigham, born Oct. 22, 1898, in Central Falls.

LEANDER C. BELCHER, treasurer of Belcher & Loomis Hardware Company, one of the best known and one of the old and successful business men of Providence, descends from a family that has resided in Rhode Island for several generations.

Joseph Belcher, great-grandfather of Leander C., came from England with his brothers, Pardon and William, and settled at Jamestown, R. I. During the Revolutionary war his land was confiscated.

Joseph Belcher (2), son of Joseph, resided at South Kingstown, and at one time was a sea-faring man. He married Sarah Bentley, who died Aug. 25, 1825, aged sixty-one years. They had eight children, as follows: Arnold removed to Lanesboro, Mass., where he died and left descendants; Elizabeth married Moses Barber, and resided at South Kingstown; Pardon T. died in 1822, unmarried; Mary (or Polly) married Stephen Locke, and settled at North Adams, Mass.; Sarah (or Sally) married Gardiner Smith, and resided at Newport; William married Phebe Rider, and resided in Providence, where he was engaged as a tinsmith; Joseph is mentioned below; Gideon married Eunice Geer, and resided for a time on the homestead at South Kingstown, later at Harrisville, where he died. Joseph Belcher (2) died Jan. 27, 1827, aged sixty-seven years. He and his wife were both buried in South Kingstown.

Joseph Belcher (3), son of Joseph (2), and

Leander C. Belcher

Joseph Belcher

founder of the widely known establishment now conducted as Belcher & Loomis Hardware Company, at Providence, was born at South Kingstown July 29, 1801, and while a boy entered the employ of a farmer at Newport. His education was acquired in the district school, his advantages being somewhat limited. Realizing that farm life at that time did not offer many inducements for a young man of his energy and ambitions, he came to Providence, with no capital save his energy, and found employment as a clerk in the hardware store of Brown & Barker, at Turk's Head, in whose employ he remained until 1826. His wages were small, but he was economical, and in that year, with his savings he began in the hardware business in partnership with Benjamin Allen. The firm of Allen & Belcher had their store on the site of the "Narragansett Hotel," later moving opposite on the north side of Weybosset street, and continued there until 1847, when Mr. Belcher moved to the corner of Weybosset and Eddy streets. During this time Mr. Allen withdrew from the firm, and Henry R. Greene was admitted, the firm becoming Greene & Belcher. Later Mr. Greene retired from the firm, and Mr. Belcher conducted the business alone until 1857, when he was succeeded therein by his sons, Joseph H. and Leander C.

In about 1850 Mr. Belcher became interested in the manufacture of a machine-made horseshoe nail, made in Providence by the American Horse Nail Company, and the famous Belcher Nail made by them and named for him was the first machine-made horseshoe nail made in the world. This business had such a rapid growth that Mr. Belcher for a number of years devoted his entire attention to it. For a time he was president of the old Mt. Vernon Bank. He spent the latter years of his life in the management of his real estate interests, remaining active until the last. He died on Sept. 9, 1877, and was buried at Swan Point.

Mr. Belcher's business life covered a period of over forty years of honorable success, and he preserved an unsullied reputation during a long career as a good Christian, a patriotic citizen and an upright man. He was one of the original members of the Providence Horse Guards, and when peril threatened the State at the time of the Dorr troubles he was prompt in action for her defense. He was a member of Mt. Vernon Lodge, No. 4, A. F. & A. M., and St. John's Commandery, No. 1, K. T., and had attained the honor of Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter. On July 2, 1829, he was received as a member of the old Second Baptist Church, which later became the Pine Street Church, and is now the Central Baptist Church. Mr. Belcher remained an active member of that church until his death.

Mr. Belcher was married (first) Nov. 7, 1822, to Harriet E. Witter, of Connecticut, who died March 27, 1836, in her thirty-fourth year. Their children were: (1) Emily Ann, born Sept. 27, 1823, married Feb. 23, 1853, William Lee Reynolds, and died in Providence Dec. 4, 1890. (2) Harriet Sarah, born Dec. 19, 1825, married May 27, 1852, William Wakefield (now deceased) and resides in St. Paul, Minn. (3) Julia Maria, born Dec. 19, 1827, married May 27, 1852, John Cotton Mather, and died in Providence Nov. 25, 1865. (4) Joseph Dyer, born Nov. 23, 1829, died Oct. 6, 1830. (5) Charlotte Elizabeth, born Sept. 17, 1831, died unmarried Nov. 25, 1877. (6) Mary Rosella, born Sept. 23, 1832, died Jan. 15, 1834. (7) Joseph Henry, born Sept. 5, 1833, attended the old Elm street school, and when quite young entered his father's store. He remained there as clerk until 1857, when, with his brother, Leander C., he succeeded to the business under the name of Belcher Brothers. Later he withdrew from the firm and engaged in business on Cranston street, where he continued until about 1899, when he gave up active business. He died Sept. 3, 1903. His widow, Helen Mar Pinkham, of Nantucket, is a resident of Providence. (8) Susan Jane, born March 7, 1836, died April 5, 1836.

Joseph Belcher, for his second wife, married on Nov. 29, 1836, Hannah Crandall, who was born in Exeter, R. I., July 8, 1809, daughter of Col. Robert and Margaret (Gardner) Crandall. Mrs. Belcher died May 11, 1895, in Providence, the mother of four children, viz.: (1) Leander Crandall, born Sept. 30, 1837, is mentioned below. (2) Newell Warren, born Nov. 21, 1842, after completing the high school course in the public schools entered the hardware business with his brothers, becoming a member of the firm of Belcher Brothers and also that firm's successor, being a member of the Belcher & Loomis Hardware Company corporation, but he never took an active part in the management of that corporation. He died Sept. 30, 1898. He married Henrietta W. Sherrod, who survives him and resides in Providence. (3) Josephine Adelaide, born Jan. 3, 1845, died Sept. 3, 1850. (4) George Albert, born July 22, 1848, died March 7, 1850.

Col. Robert Crandall, father of Mrs. Hannah Belcher, was born Dec. 31, 1769. His father, Robert H. Crandall (born Feb. 21, 1735), served in the Revolutionary war and was wounded at Newport. He died at Wickford, R. I. He married Mary Havens. Colonel Crandall was a descendant of Elder John Crandall, a Baptist minister of Newport and Westerly, R. I., who came to Boston from Wales in 1634-35. Colonel Crandall married Margaret Gardner, who was born Aug. 27, 1767, daughter of John and Amy Gardner. John Gardner was a son of John and Mary (Hill) Gardner, grandson of William and Abigail (Remington) Gardner. William Gardner was a son of Benoni and Mary; Benoni was son of Joseph, and Joseph was son of George, of Newport, the ancestor of the family in America.

Leander Crandall Belcher was born Sept. 30,

1837, in Providence, and his education was received at the Elm street grammar school and the Providence high school, from which he graduated. He entered his father's store in 1855, and in 1857, in company with his brother, Joseph H., succeeded to the business. As previously stated the firm became Belcher Brothers, and later Newell W. Belcher was admitted. The business was conducted for many years opposite the postoffice, in Weybosset street. When Edward A. Loomis was admitted as partner the firm became Belcher Bros. & Co., which was the style until 1884, when it became Belcher & Loomis. In 1889 the firm moved into its present location, the northeast corner of Orange and Weybosset streets, and in 1897 was incorporated as Belcher & Loomis Hardware Company, Leander C. Belcher becoming treasurer, in which capacity he has since served. Mr. Belcher has been in active business for the past fifty years, and is one of the oldest and as well successful merchants in the city. Through his wise and skillful management the business has grown from modest proportions to be the largest of its kind in Rhode Island, and one of the largest in New England.

Mr. Belcher is a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; Providence Chapter, R. A. M.; Providence Council, R. & S. M.; and St. John's Commandery, No. 1, K. T. He is also a member of Palestine Temple, Mystic Shrine. He and his wife are members of the Central Baptist Church. Mr. Belcher served as president of the Rhode Island Business Men's Association for about four years, and was for many years, until it was absorbed by the Industrial Trust Company, a member of the corporation of the Mechanics Savings Bank. In his political views he is a Republican, but he has never cared for public office, though he has high ideals of a citizen's duty, and enlisted May 26, 1862, for ninety days in Company A, 10th Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, in which he held the commission of second lieutenant. The regiment served its term in the protection of Washington. Mr. Belcher is a member of the First Light Infantry Veterans, of which organization he served as major for several years.

On Nov. 9, 1863, Mr. Belcher was married in Providence to Mary Eliza Swarts, who was born in Providence, March 4, 1845, daughter of Gardner Taber and Eliza (Wood) Swarts. Three children have been born to this union, namely: (1) Harriet Josephine, born May 28, 1869, married Dr. Lewis A. O'Brian, of New Rochelle, N. Y., and has the following children, Lewis Etienne, Elsbeth Belcher, Harold Leander, Mary Madoline, Dorothea and Ruth Adelaide. These six children were all born in Europe, excepting Ruth Adelaide, and all are living except Mary Madoline, who died in infancy. Dr. O'Brian practiced his profession of dentistry in Paris and Dresden, prior to locating in New York, where he now practices. (2) Joseph Swarts, born July 14, 1870, died Nov. 8, 1870. (3) Josephine Gardner, born Nov. 27, 1873, married Silas W. C. Jones, and resides at South Orange, N. J. They have two children, William Addeman Belcher and Mary Swarts.

ISAAC BORDEN MACOMBER, a well-known resident of Portsmouth, whose beautiful home is situated at the head of Quaker Hill, is one of the leading men of his community. He was born Jan. 8, 1852, in the town of Portsmouth, and belongs to one of the old established families of New England.

The Macomber family is supposed to be of Scotch origin, the name being formerly spelled MacCumber. John, William and Thomas MacCumber were among the very early settlers of New England, coming to the shores soon after the landing of the Pilgrims in 1620. Conditions and circumstances indicate that they were brothers, and family tradition has it that they were Scotch officers. William MacCumber was at Duxbury in 1632, and later at Marshfield and still later at Dartmouth. A member of the family who has made researches says it is probable that the Maccombers were of the clan of the Campbells and were Macs from the Komber, or perhaps from the Humber, streams which rise in Scotland and which are the fruitful source of native names.

William, son of William MacCumber, had a son, John, who married a Miss Denell, and their son, Wesson Macomber, resided in Marshfield. There he married Mary Mosher. Joseph Macomber, son of Wesson, located at Grand Isle, Vt., and married Elizabeth Weeks. Joseph Elwood Macomber, son of Joseph and Elizabeth, was born in 1822 in Vermont, and completed his education in the Friends' School on the Hudson, N. Y., paying his way through the latter institution of learning by teaching public school at Portsmouth. He also taught for two years at the Friends' Monthly Meeting School at Farmington, N. Y., and continued teaching for two winters after this at Portsmouth. Then he took up farming at Portsmouth, working first for Bateman Monroe for eight years, after which he located near the Sakonnet river, where he engaged in the growing of fruit, being a pioneer in strawberry culture. Subsequently he became one of the largest strawberry raisers in Newport county, shipping his produce to Newport, Fall River and Providence. He also grew other small fruits and became one of the leading horticulturists of that section of the State. In 1890 he retired from business, making his home for a time with his son Elwood G., and later with his son Isaac B., dying at the home of the latter Feb. 7, 1906. He was a member of the Society of Friends, was clerk of the Rhode Island Monthly Meeting for years, and held other confidential relations with this religious body.

Mr. Macomber married Finis Gassett (Maynard) Borden, born at Waltham, Mass., daughter of Isaac and Finis (Maynard) Borden and a granddaughter of Catherine Gassett. The father of Mrs. Macomber was a master machinist, engaged in manufacturing and installing cotton-mill machinery at Waltham, Mass., and Lowell, Mass., and he was a successful business man and well-known citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Macomber had seven children: Cyrus, who died in childhood; Isaac Borden, mentioned below; William P., who graduated from Yale in 1877, and died in 1885, at Portsmouth; Elwood Gassett, a resident of Boston, associated with the Ames Plow Company; Elizabeth, married to Edward Smiley, of Ellenville, N. Y.; Anna Borden, who is unmarried and residing in New York; and Richard, a farmer at Portsmouth, who married Mary W. Chase, daughter of Mason Chase. The mother of this family died July 21, 1905, and rests by the side of her husband in the cemetery at Portsmouth.

Isaac Borden Macomber was educated in the public schools of Portsmouth and the Friends' School at Providence and later the Mowry and Goff school, where he completed his English and classical studies. He then engaged in farming for himself on his present property, which consists of thirty-two and one-half acres, located on the East Main road, near the Sakonnet river, on which he has built the beautiful home mentioned. In addition to agricultural pursuits for several years he has been interested in a real estate business at Fall River. Mr. Macomber is a member of the Society of Friends, and has been an elder and record keeper for the past quarter of a century. In politics he is a Prohibitionist. He is a man of sterling character and exemplary life.

On June 3, 1879, Mr. Macomber was married at Middleboro, Mass., to Abby A. Cushman, daughter of Samuel Cushman. She died Dec. 8, 1892, a consistent member of the Society of Friends. Mrs. Macomber was a "Mayflower" descendant through her Cushman ancestry. Besides her bereaved husband and wide circle of personal friends she left three children, as follows: Carleton H., Maurice and Gertrude, all still at home. These children have had fine educational and social advantages, and they are favorably known all through the locality. Mr. Macomber is a worthy representative of his old and honorable family, personally being highly esteemed and very popular with all classes.

THOMAS HENRY McNALLY, M. D., of Central Falls, R. I., is one who has made his influence felt in the community both professionally and politically, and who has by sheer force of character won his present assured position. Dr. McNally comes of a line of sturdy Irish ancestry and the family coat of arms shows his early forefathers to have been great warriors and scholars. By some writers on heraldry royal blood is claimed for the McNally family in early days.

Patrick McNally, grandfather of the Doctor, was born in the North of Ireland, where he lived and died. He followed the occupation of a farmer and horseman. He married Miss Rosie Short, and both of them lived to an advanced old age. Three children were born to them, namely: James, a farmer who died in Michigan; Margaret, Mrs. Patrick Hanney, who died in Montana; and Patrick.

Patrick McNally was born March 17, 1818, in County Monaghan, and remained in his native land until he was sixteen years of age. The family had relatives in America, and in 1834 the youth was sent over to begin working for one of them, who was engaged in the horse business in New York City. Very shortly after entering upon this career he was sent to Rhode Island in charge of some horses that were being shipped to the Spragues, then large manufacturers of the State. They offered the young man a position in their stables in Cranston, and until 1858 he remained with them, in charge of those stables. In that year he left the Spragues for a while, going to Wisconsin and taking up a section of land there, but after establishing his right to this property he returned to his former employers. In 1865 he left them again for a period of six years, during which time he took his family to Wisconsin and engaged in farming on his property there. On returning to Rhode Island he worked for the Spragues again for a time, but in 1874 bought ninety acres of land in Rehoboth, Mass., and resumed farming. He finally retired, built a house in Providence, and spent his last years there. He was very successful as a farmer, maintained his land in a good state of cultivation, and always had the finest herd of cattle in his vicinity.

Mr. McNally was united in marriage to Miss Maria Deigman, daughter of the John Deigman, who was so loyal a friend and supporter of Daniel O'Connell. Mrs. McNally died in Providence, in June, 1889, but her husband lived until April 17, 1900, passing away at the ripe old age of eighty-two. They were members of St. Theresa's Roman Catholic Church, in Providence. To them were born children as follows: Ann Maria, who died shortly after graduating from a convent with the highest honors of her class; Thomas H.; Margaret J., of Providence, unmarried; John, who married a Miss Smith, of Boston, and died in New Hampshire; Rosellen, of Providence, unmarried; Frank, who died in Providence, a bachelor; and Katherine Elizabeth, of Providence, a graduate of the Broad Street Convent there.

Dr. Thomas Henry McNally was the second male members of his family born in America, the date of his birth being March 7, 1855. His education was begun in the public schools of his native town, Cranston, but during the years the family lived in Wisconsin his studies were interrupted. However, he was of a scholarly temperament, and as soon as they returned to Rhode Island he took up school work again, this time in the Johnston public schools. From there he was sent to the Christian Brothers

LaSalle Academy, at Providence, and was graduated there in 1874, at the head of his class, taking the first prize two years. Two years later he began the study of medicine under Drs. T. G. and W. H. Potter of Providence, and then entered the Detroit Medical School, from which he received his degree in 1880.

Dr. McNally at once established himself in Willimantic, Conn., and remained there seven years, during which period he served as surgeon for the New York & New England Railroad Company, and also for a part of the time was town physician. In 1887, however, a better prospect seemed to offer in Central Falls, R. I., and removing thither he has ever since been an important factor in that city's life. As a physician he has been highly successful and has a large and lucrative practice. He is enthusiastic in his profession and in close touch with its progress throughout the country, for he belongs not only to the City and State Medical Societies, but also to the American Medical Association. He has also done much to promote the growth and improvement of the hospitals in his locality and was a promoter and one of the original incorporators of the Pawtucket Hospital, of which he acts as medical director, besides being secretary of its board of trustees and also of the hospital corporation. He is likewise interested in St. Joseph's Hospital, of Providence, of which he is a trustee.

With all his professional work Dr. McNally has had time for sharing in the political life of his city. Although his father was always a strong supporter of Abraham Lincoln, Dr. McNally believes in the principles upheld by the Democrats, and is active in their ranks. He was elected a member of the Rhode Island General Assembly, from the old town of Lincoln, even before he had actually become a citizen of that place, and represented that district for three years, in the course of his service being appointed chairman of the committee on Special Legislation. After locating in Central Falls he continued in his political work, and in 1904 was elected mayor, and re-elected in 1905. The Doctor is also affiliated with various organizations, primarily the Knights of Columbus, in which he was the first examining physician in the State. He joined the order while residing in Willimantic, and is one of the oldest members of the Connecticut branches, while he organized the first branch in Rhode Island, and in point of service is the oldest member in the State. He is also a member and medical examiner of both the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Irish Foresters of America (affiliating with Court Daniel O'Connell), and is enrolled, too, in the membership of the B. P. O. E. and the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

Christmas Day, 1879, witnessed the union of Dr. McNally to Anna Statia, daughter of Philip and Elizabeth (Kenyon) Reavey, of Cranston, and a niece of Samuel Kenyon, the noted English actor.

The issue of this union is as follows: Maybelle F., a graduate of Bay View Seminary in classics, of the Emerson School of Oratory and the Boston School of Expression, private teacher of elocution and possessed of considerable dramatic talent, was married Feb. 16, 1907, to Francis J. Powers, of Pawtucket; Thomas H., Jr., died aged nineteen months; Alice Lugoria is a graduate in music, elocution and art from the Broad Street Convent, Providence, and from Bay View Seminary, Riverside; Thomas H., Jr. (2), a student in Central Falls high school, and now a student at LaSalle Academy, Providence, has marked musical talent, playing various instruments; Anna Roselia, who is in school, also possesses musical ability. On the occasion of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of their parents' marriage, the feature of the evening was the rendering of music by the four children, who formed an orchestra among themselves, and gave a number of selections most pleasingly. The family are all popular socially, and fill an enviable place in the community.

BENJAMIN F. CORNELL. The State of Rhode Island numbers among its inhabitants a larger proportion of those who are directly descended from the earliest settlers in the Colony than most States, this being especially true as regards the agricultural element, the real strength of any commonwealth. Among the many substantial farmers residing near Portsmouth was the late Benjamin F. Cornell, whose family name is found in some of the oldest Colonial records.

(I) Thomas Cornell was born in County Essex, England, and there married Rachel Briggs, sister of John Briggs. Accompanied by his wife and children he came to the New World in 1638, settling first in Boston, where he remained some time, and where he held a license to keep an inn. Later he moved to Portsmouth, and there died about 1655. His wife Rachel died Feb. 8, 1673, aged seventy-three years.

(II) Thomas Cornell (2), oldest son of the emigrant, was born in County Essex, and was still a boy when his parents brought him to America. He made his home in Portsmouth. Twice married, the name of his first wife is unknown, but the second was Sarah Earle, who after the death of her first husband married David Lake. Thomas and Sarah Cornell were the parents of four sons and three daughters.

(III) Thomas Cornell (3), eldest son of Thomas (2), was born in 1653, and passed his entire life in his native town of Portsmouth. He became a farmer and landowner of some consequence. His death occurred Oct. 14, 1714, at the age of sixty-one. By his wife, Susan Lawton, he had three children, namely: Thomas, born Nov. 30, 1674, who married Martha Freelove, and died April 18, 1728; George; and Elizabeth, born in Herbert F. Hall.

Herbert F. Hall.

1690, who married Samuel Cranston, and died Feb. 19, 1750.

(IV) George Cornell was born in 1676, and became a farmer and landowner like his father. He was a lifelong resident of Portsmouth, and there died Nov. 3, 1753, and was laid to rest in the burying-ground belonging to the Society of Friends. He married, Jan. 19, 1695, at Newport, Philadelphia Eastis (or Eustis), of Salem, Mass.; she died, and he chose for his second wife Deliverance Clark, daughter of Gov. Walter and Hannah Scott (Jeremy) Clark. The union took place Nov. 11, 1696, in the Friends' Meeting house in Newport. Mrs. Deliverance Cornell, who was born Jan. 14, 1678, died Oct. 2, 1732, and her husband married a third time on March 8th of the following year. His bride was Abigail, daughter of John Sisson. Of the sixteen children born to George Cornell ten were sons.

(V) George Cornell (2), second son of George, was born May 25, 1705. He spent his life in Portsmouth engaged in farming, and there died. On March 18, 1839, he married Rebecca Hicks, who was born in Tiverton, July 5, 1705, and nine children were born to them.

(VI) Samuel Cornell, second youngest son of George (2), was born Feb. 24, 1754, and like his father and grandfather made his home in Portsmouth, where he died May 15, 1834. He married Ruth Stoddard, and they had six children, namely: Jean, who married on June 1, 1814, Joseph Coggeshall; Hicks, mentioned below; Lydia, born in 1802, who died June 24, 1869; Rebecca, who married, March 31, 1742, Henry B. Clark, of North Kingstown, R. I.; Susan, who married Thomas Coggeshall, and became the mother of Thomas and William Coggeshall, of Middletown; Ruth, who died young; and William.

(VII) Hicks Cornell was born April 7, 1793, and devoted his life to farming at Portsmouth, where he died June 27, 1880, aged eighty-seven years. He was buried in the Friends' Cemetery. On Jan. 28, 1819, he married, in Middletown, Elizabeth Coggeshall, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Daniel Webb. Mrs. Cornell, who was a daughter of William and Deborah (Horswell) Coggeshall, of Middletown, died Aug. 18, 1865, at the age of seventy-one years. The seven children of Hicks and Elizabeth Cornell were as follows: George, born Nov. 11, 1819, who married Abbie C. Haines; Peleg, born March 2, 1824, who died Jan. 4, 1890; Deborah, born Nov. 12, 1821; Elizabeth Sherman, born Oct. 24, 1826; Hannah, born Aug. 8, 1828; Ruth, born Jan. 10, 1832; and Benjamin Franklin.

(VIII) Benjamin Franklin Cornell was born in Portsmouth, Nov. 22, 1834, and was educated in the public schools of that town. Reared as a farmer's son, he chose that calling for himself, and made his home on a farm on Union street, not far from the residence of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe. He died there in December, 1902. In religious faith he was a member of the Society of Friends. His widow, who bore the maiden name of Emily Maria Manchester, is still living and resides on the homestead. She is the mother of three children: Charles and Alvin, both unmarried, at home; and Addie Barker, who married the late Herbert F. Hall. Benjamin F. Cornell was an industrious and progressive citizen, and although of a rather quiet, unostentatious manner, was a man who commanded and enjoyed the esteem of the community in which his long and useful life was spent. He was a kind and indulgent husband and father. In political faith he was a Republican, but never cared for public preferment.

HERBERT FRANCIS HALL, whose death occurred July 5, 1900, was born in Portsmouth March 9, 1868, son of the late Benjamin and Eliza V. (Chase) Hall. Herbert F. Hall was sent to the district schools, and also helped his father on the farm until he was seventeen years of age. Then he rented a farm and started out for himself. This place was located on the West Main road and he operated it successfully for thirteen years. At the end of that time he bought the Abram T. Peckham farm on Union street, a tract of 100 acres, on which he made his home for the remainder of his life. He was a hard worker, and was very successful in his operations. He added to his property until at the end of his life he owned 152 acres of well-cultivated land. For a number of years also, he was engaged in the butchering business, and succeeded well in that, too, winning a name all over the island for honesty and fair dealing. He was married Nov. 25, 1890, to Addie B. Cornell, and two children were born to them, Marion Priscilla and Herbert Francis, Jr.

On July 5, 1900, while out boating on St. Mary's Lake, with his brother and son, the boat was upset, and Mr. Hall was drowned. He was an expert swimmer and the accident occurred in comparatively shallow water, but the circumstances were such that Mr. Hall was unable to save himself. His body was recovered and interred in the Friends' Cemetery at Portsmouth. Mr. Hall was a man of noble Christian character and of admirable habits, and so universally liked that his untimely death cast a gloom over the whole island. Domestic in his tastes, his home life was a very happy one, and Mrs. Hall was a true helpmate. A woman of strong character, she has taken up, since her husband's death, the management of the farm, and has proved herself a good business woman, although never allowing her various responsibilities outside of the home to interfere with her devoting the necessary attention to training her children. She is a member of the Friends' Church, to which Mr. Hall also belonged. In politics Mr. Hall was a Republican, but never cared for the holding of public office.

BURRILL HERBERT DAVIS, senior member of the firm of Davis & Slocum, and a prominent business man of North Kingstown, was born in Exeter, R. I., Dec. 28, 1853, son of Philip Bates Davis, and grandson of John Davis.

John Davis was a prosperous farmer in Exeter, and marketed a great deal of his produce, particularly fruits and vegetables, in Newport. He married (first) Miranda Bates, and (second) Miss Sarah Havens. His two sons were: Philip Bates and Daniel B.

Philip Bates Davis was born in Exeter and spent his school days there. He followed the mason's trade all of his life, and was prominent in the public affairs of his native place, being overseer of the poor, and auctioneer. In politics he was a Democrat. He married Almira Kettle, of West Greenwich. Of their family of eleven children, four lived to years of maturity, and we have record of: John Mary W., who married John T. Arnold, and has three children—Lola S., Leonora M. and Nellie M.; Carrie, who married Walter E. Jackson; Abby A., deceased, who married (first) Clark Madison, had two children—Ida M. and George A.—and (second) Pardon T. Cranston, by whom she had seven children—James, Byron, Daisy, Burrill, Minnie, Evie and Charles; and Burrill Herbert.

Burrill Herbert Davis spent his early schooldays in Exeter, R. I., and in 1873 began clerking for Ambrose C. Taylor, in the general merchandise store at LaFayette, becoming that gentleman's partner in 1887. In 1891, on Mr. Taylor's retirement from the business, Mr. Davis took into partnership Herbert Daniel Slocum, and since that time the firm has continued under the name of Davis & Slocum. Mr. Davis is a Republican in politics, and is filling the position of postmaster at LaFayette. He is an active member of the Advent Church, of which he is deacon and clerk.

Mr. Davis married Emma Frances Brown, daughter of John F. Brown, of East Greenwich, R. I. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have no children of their own living, but have reared Mrs. Davis' sister since she was one week old.

HORACE M. BARNES. In the death of Mr. Barnes, which occurred at his home in Bristol Dec. 24, 1896, when he was in the seventy-fourth year of his age, the town lost one of its remarkably successful business men and able financiers, and as well the State of Rhode Island and its adjacent territory, for his holdings in corporations were not few nor confined to the State in which he lived; and in the conduct of these corporations his advice was often sought and judgment followed.

Born in February, 1823, at Bucksport, Maine, a seaport on the Penobscot river, Mr. Barnes was the son of Capt. William and Sophronia (Bowles) Barnes, of Bucksport, and later of Belfast. His grandparents were Timothy (born in 1756) and Betsy (Mudgett) Barnes, and his great-grandparents were Abraham and Sarah (Wentworth) Barnes, who were married in 1752. Abraham Barnes came from Litchfield county, Conn., probably from Litchfield.

Horace M. Barnes received his schooling in Maine and at Havana, Cuba, where his father lived for some time just prior to 1840. Young Barnes started when yet in his teens to gain a livelihood. He was adventurous, and at nineteen years of age came to Bristol, R. I., for the purpose, it is said, of following the sea, as in his younger days he had a great liking for the water. He sailed from Bristol in 1842 on the barque "Emigrant," owned by the firm of A. T. & T. J. Usher, of Bristol, on a whaling voyage to the South Pacific ocean. Like other prosperous merchants who followed the sea, he shipped as a seaman before the mast. He returned to Bristol in the same vessel in which he shipped. Soon after his return from the sea he accepted a clerkship with the firm mentioned and soon was promoted to be head clerk. In the late forties he associated himself with Samuel Norris and C. R. Dimond, also of Bristol, and the firm Norris & Barnes built and started the Bristol Sugar Refinery, a large brick structure near the harbor in Bristol. The firm carried on a commercial business with Cuba and other West Indian islands for years, importing sugar, molasses and other West Indian products. When the firm dissolved partnership some years later Mr. Barnes associated himself with Judge J. Russell Bullock, also of Bristol, and for some years they carried on a banking, real-estate and brokerage business in Chicago.

Beginning his business career on exceedingly small capital, Mr. Barnes by close application and shrewd business ability succeeded year by year until he accumulated a large competency. His tastes, it is said, were simple, and he was never given to extravagance. He kept track of much of the details of his business and had a general supervision over it. He was careful in contracting bills, and was equally careful in seeing that when contracted they were promptly paid.

Mr. Barnes was a stockholder and director in many of the Fall River cotton-mills, and at the time of his death was president of the Globe Yarn Mills. He was a stockholder in the Fall River & Providence Line of boats, and was one of the prime movers in incorporating the Providence & Bristol Railroad Company years ago. He was a shareholder in the Industrial Trust Company at Providence, being one of its directors up to the time of his death. It has been stated that a short time before his death, when the latter company was a little pushed on account of a great scarcity of money, he came forward, and by his advice the interests of the company were protected beyond all fears.

Mr. Barnes was also identified with various commercial interests in New York and at one time resided in that city. "He was possessed of a most retentive memory and his years of acquaintance with financial matters, coupled with his shrewdness and far-seeing ability, made him a man whose advice in regard to money matters was much sought after by prominent people in the business world, his judgment in these respects being considered excellent."

Mr. Barns had a decidedly legal cast of mind and took naturally to the study of law, of which he was always very fond. Although he never became a lawyer he was unusually well read in legal matters, as a result of study and also from long business association with Judge Bullock, by which he profited greatly, having a retentive memory which served him especially well in the acquisition of such knowledge. Mr. Barns was a strong Republican in his political views, in his interest in such matters following the lead of his father, for Capt. William Barns was a power in politics in his locality during the forties.

During his later years Mr. Barns made a number of trips to Europe. He was twice married, marrying first, Aug. 4, 1852, Miss Harriet Byron Norris, daughter of Capt. John Norris, of Bristol. She died in the early sixties, at Brooklyn, N. Y., the family at the time residing there. On July 21, 1866, Mr. Barns married (second) Mrs. Sarah T. Snow, of Bristol, who, with two daughters, Isoline N. and Harriet B., both born to the first marriage, survived him. In all its relations his life was the highest expression of good citizenship. As husband and father, as private citizen, as business man, and as counsellor and friend, he was ever mindful of the duty thereby imposed and sought to discharge it with the utmost fidelity.

GALEN DAVIS, a lifelong resident of Newport, and one of its representative and respected citizens, belongs to one of New England's time-honored families, whose American history runs back to the first half century of the Colony.

The earliest mention of the name Davis occurs in the records of Newport in 1673, when one Aaron Davis, on Feb. 25th of that year, sold property there. In the fall of 1694 his name was among the proprietors of Dartmouth, Mass., and four years later he was ordained as pastor of the First Baptist Church at that place, succeeding Hugh Mosier. This church was one organized in 1684 and embraced in its membership people living in Dartmouth, Mass., Tiverton and Little Compton. Aaron Davis was a member of the Masonic fraternity. In 1707 occurs another record of the transfer of property by him, when he deeded to his son Aaron, of Little Compton, land in West Quabnaig, R. I. While the records of his family are incomplete, it is supposed that he and his wife Mary were the parents of four other sons, viz.: (1) William, of Newport and East Greenwich, who by his wife Frances had three children, William, Henry and Frances; (2) Joshua, of the same towns, who married Mary Scott and became the father of William, Aaron, John, Rebecca and Katherine; (3) Samuel, of Kingstown; and (4) John, of North Kingstown. For generations the posterity of Aaron and Mary were of Little Compton record, while through Jeffrey Davis descends the particular branch of the family which has been for generations connected with the Quidnick Manufacturing Company, of Quidnick, R. I. and which founded Davisville, in North Kingstown.

There exists in North Kingstown, according to Arnold, a fragmentary record of the births of the children of Henry and Deliverance Davis: Henry was born March 11, 1729; a second son was born Jan. 26, 1731; a daughter, March 15, 1733; Deliverance, June 15, 1735; and another son, June 25, 1737. One of these unnamed sons is supposed to have been Benjamin Davis, as a record of his children follows directly after the other. These children, born to him and his wife Phoebe, were: William, born Oct. 29, 1756; Ruth, July 26, 1759; Mary, March 2, 1761; Jeffrey, Dec. 17, 1762; Mary, Aug. 17, 1764; Benjamin, March 10, 1766; Phoebe, May 1, 1767; Elizabeth, Jan. 16, 1770; Sarah and Hannah, twins, July 14, 1774; Waity, Oct. 27, 1776; John Warner, April 22, 1780 (this youngest son was the paternal grandfather of Galen Davis); and Anna, May 10, 1782 (who died in infancy).

John Warner Davis was born in Newport April 22, 1780, and died there Aug. 18, 1848. His business was that of a dealer in meats, provisions and groceries. He married Elizabeth Moore, of Newport, and they had seven children, as follows: Phoebe, born May 7, 1799; John Henry, who died in infancy; Eliza, born May 23, 1802; John Warner, Jr., April 21, 1804; Ann Maria, Feb. 12, 1806; Henry Moore, Dec. 6, 1809 (who died in infancy); and Henry Moore, Dec. 6, 1809 (who became an Episcopal minister, and died Sept. 29, 1875).

John Warner Davis, Jr., born April 21, 1804, in Newport, passed the sixty-five years of his earthly pilgrimage in his native city, and there died Dec. 20, 1869. In his younger days a clerk, he later went into business for himself, dealing in groceries, coal and wood. At first a Whig, then a Republican, he was always active in public life, and filled various official positions, acting as city marshal many years, as deputy Sheriff, clerk of the Supreme court and clerk of the court of Common Pleas in Newport county. Fraternally he was a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; always an active worker in the ranks, he attained the thirty-second degree in Masonry. His wife was Sarah Ann Coddington, born May 14, 1803, daughter of John Coddington, and a direct descendant of Governor Coddington, of Rhode Island. She died in Newport Dec. 10, 1891, the mother of nine children. Seven sons grew to maturity: (1) Billings Burdick, a blacksmith, died in Newport. He married Cornelia Bateman, of that city. (2) William, a clerk and bookkeeper, died in Patchogue, L. I. He married Laura Lacey, of Stamford, Conn. (3) Henry Laurens went to California in 1850, engaged in various enterprises, and is now living there as a retired capitalist. He married (first) Miss Susan Spencer and (second) Miss Annie Goffe, both of Newport. (4) Benjamin Warren was a clerk by occupation, married Miss Martha Burdick, of Newport, and died in Brockton, Mass. (5) John married Miss Anna Barker, of Newport, was employed as a bookkeeper in Breckenridge, Colo., and there died. (6) A sketch of Galen, the next son, follows. (7) Salmon Wheaton married Miss Lydia Cranston, of Newport, where for many years he was a grocer, and there died.

Galen Davis was born Aug. 12, 1835, in Newport, and until he was seventeen years of age attended the public schools of that city. He then spent four years at the cabinet-maker's trade under Augustus G. Greene, after which he worked one year at carpentering with John G. Weeden. He was thus employed till 1890, working in turn for Daniel Cook, Thomas Nason, Alexander McIntosh, James Hazard and George Hazard. Since 1890 he has been in business for himself as a carpenter and cabinet-maker, and his long experience has given him a thorough knowledge of his calling in all its details. He has built up a reputation as a skilful workman and has been successful. His time has been given almost exclusively to his own affairs, but one very strong interest of his has been the Newport Artillery Company, the oldest active military organization in the United States, of which Mr. Davis was a member for twenty-one years. In political matters Mr. Davis has always supported the Republican party on national issues, but in the city affairs he takes an independent stand. He has also been a member of the Newport Historical Society for a number of years.

On Nov. 7, 1882, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Miss Mary Seabury Easton, daughter of the late Benjamin and Charlotte (Tew) (Tilley) Easton. The only child born to this union, Henry Laurens, died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Davis attend Trinity Episcopal Church and are prominent there in their work and support. Of cordial manners and most social nature, their home is always hospitably open, particularly to the young people, and they are beloved by a large circle of friends.

GEORGE HENRY MILLER, one of Woonsocket's best known business men, who for many years has been engaged in the ice, coal and wood business, is a veteran of the great Civil war, and a worthy successor of his late uncle, Edwin Ballou Miller. Mr. Miller was born in Franklin, Mass., in 1840, son of Lorenzo Dow Miller.

Lorenzo D. Miller was born in the town of Cumberland, May 2, 1816, son of Jonathan and Polly (Ballou) Miller, and grandson of William Miller, a full history of the Miller family appearing elsewhere in this volume. Lorenzo D. Miller was in early life engaged in boat building, and spent some years at Franklin, Mass., but in later life engaged in the sale of patent medicines. He died Aug. 16, 1858, at the age of forty-two years, well-known and highly esteemed. Mr. Miller was married Jan. 1, 1840, to Loretta M. Darling, born Nov. 22, 1811, who died at the age of ninety-three years, July 31, 1904, at the home of her son, George H., who had cared for her in her declining years. She was buried beside her husband, in the Sheldonville (Mass.) cemetery. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Dow Miller, namely: George H.; Francis E., who died Dec. 20, 1898; Alonzo, connected with the Enterprise Portrait Company, Lawrence, Mass.; Charles W., who died Oct. 15, 1897, at Lawrence, Mass.; Albert A., who died July 15, 1845, and Eugene A., whose death occurred Sept. 3, 1852.

George Henry Miller attended the district schools of his native locality, and was but thirteen years of age when he came to Woonsocket, here attending the Woonsocket High school. After leaving school he engaged with his uncle, Edwin B. Miller, with whom he remained until the outbreak of the Civil war, at which time he offered his services to his country, being accepted as a member of Company D, 1st Rhode Island Cavalry, Oct. 8, 1861, and spent three years in the service, being mustered out Oct. 10, 1864, with the rank of quartermaster sergeant. He was on detached service as private orderly to General Duffie, and was in active service all during his enlistment, going through the Shenandoah Valley with Sheridan, and being with Kilpatrick, Custer and Merritt. Always a gallant soldier, Mr. Miller bears an honorable war record. After returning to his home he again engaged with his uncle in the ice business, to which he succeeded in 1880, and in 1888, added coal and wood to the company's product. For over a quarter of a century he has been the largest ice dealer north of Providence, having made a decided success of his venture.

In politics Mr. Miller is a staunch Republican, and on the formation of the city government in 1888, he was elected alderman from the Fifth ward for two years, and in the second year was president of the board, although he has never been an office seeker nor cared for public preferment. During his term as president the franchise of the street railway was granted. He is a member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M., Woonsocket, of which he is past master; of Union Royal Arch Chapter, No. 5; of Woonsocket Council; Woonsocket Commandery, Knights Templar; of the I. O. O. F. Lodge, No. 10, Woonsocket, and of Smith Post, No. 9, G. A. R., of Woonsocket.

In 1866 Mr. Miller was married to Mary E. Vose, daughter of Albert C. Vose, of Lincoln, R. I., and to this union were born: Mary Alice, who died at nineteen years of age, a member of the graduating class of Woonsocket High school; Emma Louise, who married Waldo P. Rhodes, and resides in Providence, where he is engaged in the insurance business of Starkweather & Shepley; Harriet E., who married George Wells Rickard, a member of the Evening Reporter staff, Woonsocket; George Vose (with his father in business), who married Sâdie DeCosta, daughter of Henry DeCosta, and has one child; and Albert, who died in infancy. Mr. Miller is junior warden of St. James Episcopal Church, to which Mrs. Miller also belongs.

George H. Miller

MILLER (Bristol branch). Since early in the eighteenth century the Millers of Bristol—or perhaps it should be said of Warren and Bristol, for the earlier family was of Warren—have figured prominently in the affairs of the town, and especially conspicuous was Gen. Nathan Miller, of Warren, during the Revolution and the period just following it, Mr. Miller receiving in October, 1775, the appointment, at the hands of the General Assembly, of commissary to the troops, under the command of Brig.-Gen. Esek Hopkins, who were stationed on Rhode Island. In 1779 Mr. Miller was made a brigadier-general and placed in command of the militia of Newport county. He was chosen a delegate in 1786 to represent Rhode Island in the Continental Congress. Nelson Miller, too, saw much active service in the Revolution, serving in all, it has been stated, some six years. He was at Bunker Hill, was at Trenton and Princeton under Washington, at Valley Forge, and also present at the surrender of General Cornwallis, at Yorktown. More recent generations of the family have filled high and honorable public positions in the town and State, and others have no less creditably acquitted themselves on the adjacent Rhode Island water-courses in the maritime service, as commanders and masters of vessels.

The name has been a familiar one in Warren and Bristol through the lives and work of such men as Nelson Miller, Capt. James Miller (a son of Nelson), and, among the latter's sons, Capt. Augustus N. Miller, for many years in the maritime service in various capacities, among them that of pilot of the old steamer "Empire State," a Fall River and New York boat, and captain of the "Old Colony," of Newport, of the Fall River Line of steamers; Hon. William Jones Miller, journalist, former collector of the port of Warren and Bristol, often a delegate to the National conventions and a number of times representative from Bristol in the General Assembly of the State and as well a prominent Odd Fellow; and James Allen Miller, long a substantial business man and leading citizen of Bristol. With these men and their ancestry it is the purpose of this article to deal briefly, and as well with the younger generation, representatives of which are now in active business life in both Bristol and Warren, among them Horace I., of the former town, Charles L., of Warren, and Archibald Munro.

(I) John Millard and his wife Elizabeth are the earliest ancestors of the name of whom we have any knowledge.

(II) Robert Millard married Elizabeth Sabin.

(III) Robert Miller, Jr., married Charity Thurber.

These three generations are buried in a cemetery east of Warren. Their tombstones are together, and the names are spelled differently, as given in the foregoing.

(IV) Benjamin Miller, born in Rehoboth in 1706, was a justice of the peace in 1747. He married Mehitable Thayer, and on her tombstone is engraved: "Mehitable, wife of Benjamin Miller, died February 10, 1775, aged 68 years.

"An Angel's arm can't snatch me from the Grave, Legions of Angels can't confine me There."

Children of Benjamin and Mehitable Miller are of record in the town of Warren, R. I., as early as 1733, on Oct. 20th of which year their son James was born. The record of their younger children is as follows: Patience, born April 1, 1736; Rachel, May 2, 1738; Mehetible, Sept. 2, 1740; Robert, March 1, 1742-43; Mary, March 4, 1744-45; and Sarah, Jan. 19, 1746.

(V) Benjamin Miller (2) (referred to in the records as Benjamin, Jr.), probably a son of Benjamin and Mehitable, married Jan. 10, 1751 (Warrentown records), Hope Cole, and their children were: Mehitable, born June 18, 1753; Elizabeth, June 18, 1753; Nelson, July 26, 1754; and Hope, Nov. 25, 1757.

(VI) Nelson Miller, born July 26, 1754, married Sarah Allen, who was born June 20, 1752, daughter of Capt. James and Sarah Allen. Mr. Miller died March 2, 1840, in his eighty-sixth year, and Mrs. Miller died on June 13, 1838, aged eighty-six years.

Nelson Miller, then of Warren, enlisted in May, 1775, for service in the Revolution as a drummer, for the period of eight months, under Captain Martindale, in Col. Thomas Church's regiment. He re-enlisted in January, 1776, for twelve months, as drum-major under Col. Henry Babcock and Capt. Loring Peck. He again enlisted as a drum-major in January, 1777, for fifteen months, under Colonel Cray and Capt. Caleb Carr. He participated in the battle of White Plains.

(VII) Capt. James Miller, born Oct. 10, 1794, married April 7, 1813, Rebecca Smith Munro, born about 1794, daughter of Sylvester Munro, and their children were: Sarah M., born Oct. 7, 1814; Augustus N., Feb. 9, 1816; William Jones, Jan. 19, (or 20), 1818; Abby Lindsey, April 3, 1820; Rebecca Smith, March 19, 1822; Phebe S., July 28, 1824; James, March 26, 1826; James Allen, June 1, 1827; Isabella A., June 30, 1829; Hope Nelson, Sept. 8, 1831; Mary Louisa, Jan. 16, 1834; Helen Marion, Dec. 6, 1835; and Nelson, May 26, 1838.

Captain Miller was occupied in maritime pursuits, becoming a master of packet sloops that plied in Rhode Island's waters about Bristol, Providence, Fall River and Newport. He died in Bristol Aug. 20, 1846, aged fifty-one years, and his widow passed away Oct. 14, 1869, aged seventy-five years. He was a member of the M. E. Church at Bristol, Rhode Island.

(VIII) JAMES ALLEN MILLER, son of Capt. James and Rebecca Smith (Munro) Miller, was born June 1, 1827, in Bristol; R. I., and there passed his early school days. While in his teens he learned the printer's trade in Providence, and in company with Samuel Millard, George W. Danielson and Clement Webster started a newspaper, The Sentinel, which they ran for six months. From 1844 to 1851, however, Mr. Miller led a mariner's life, first as a hand before the mast, and later as captain of the sloop "Arion," one of the famous packets running between Providence and New York. In 1851 Mr. Miller re-entered the newspaper field, and for the succeeding fifteen years was well known to the people of Providence as the writer of many of the editorials in the Post and Herald.

In 1866 Mr. Miller returned to his native town, Bristol, where he embarked in the grocery and hardware business on Bradford street, and in 1903 he removed to his present business location, No. 557 Hope street.

Outside of his own particular line of business Mr. Miller has been a leading factor in the affairs of Bristol. He has been especially active in financial matters, having served as president of the First National Bank and also of the Bristol Institution of Savings, and he is now a director of the Bristol branch of the Industrial Trust Company. A Democrat in national politics, an independent one in local matters, for many years he served as a member of the town council. Many years ago he joined the Odd Fellows in Bristol.

On April 29, 1850, Mr. Miller was married at Assonet, Mass., to Miss Bathsheba Simmons Hathaway, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Pearce) Hathaway. Mrs. Miller died July 27, 1902. She was the mother of nine children: (1) Mary Rebecca died young. (2) Frances Adelaide died young. (3) Sarah died young. (4) Martha Abby married Charles H. Church, and has one child, Millie Dimond. (5) James Augustus, who died in November, 1904, was a musician of great talent, and at the time of his death was organist and choirmaster of the Bank Street M. E. Church at Fall River, Mass. (6) Nelson died young. (7) Louise Williams married Albertus Augustus Alden. (8) Horace Irving and (9) Archibald Munro are in business with their father in Bristol, Rhode Island.

GEORGE W. CALLAHAN, one of the leading horseshoers of Newport, R. I., is a native of that city, and the son of the late Michael Callahan, who was also for many years one of Newport's leading blacksmiths. Charles Callahan, his grandfather, was born in Ireland, where he spent his life, engaged in farming, and where he died in 1875, at the age of seventy-five years. He married Katherine Burns, by whom he had six children, among them being Michael Callahan, our subject's father.

Michael Callahan was born in September, 1835, in Monaghan, Ireland, and when nineteen years of age, in 1854, came to America. For a short time after his arrival he was engaged in farming in Bristol, R. I., and then served his apprenticeship as a horseshoer and blacksmith at Warren, R. I., under John Cole. In 1858 he came to Newport, and was employed as a horseshoer on Bath Road, for William Kaull, for some time, later entering the employ of George L. White, on Farewell street, with whom he continued for about six years. In January, 1864, Mr. Callahan purchased the shop of Mr. White, and successfully conducted the same until January, 1881, when on account of illness he was compelled to retire from active work, and he sold the place to John E. Leddy. He lived retired until his death in Newport, May 27, 1894. Mr. Callahan was a quiet, unassuming man, very domestic in his habits, and particularly fond of children. In his political views he was a Democrat. He was a consistent member of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. Callahan married Mary T. Dring, daughter of Philip Dring, and a descendant of one of New England's oldest families. To Mr. and Mrs. Callahan were born children as follows: Katherine, the widow of Charles A. Holland, of Newport; George W.; Francis P., who was general manager of a large coal mining company in West Virginia, and died April 23, 1906, in Boomer, W. Va. (he married Margaret Sullivan, of Washington, D. C.); Maria, a clerk in H. L. Dyer's real estate office; Michael C., foreman for John Collon, the contractor and builder (he married Clara I. Stevens, of Newport); Ellen D., a teacher in the Coddington school, of Newport; Emily J., who died at the age of two years; Harriet P., who is also a teacher in the Coddington school; and John L., unmarried, who is a horseshoer in the employ of his brother George.

George W. Callahan was born in Newport April 15, 1865, and, receiving his education in the common schools of his native city, became, at the age of fifteen years, bookkeeper for the late Achilles Stevens, carriage-maker, remaining in his employ one and one-half years. He was employed the next year as a furniture finisher with George E. Vernon & Co. Mr. Callahan then decided to take up the trade of horseshoer, and after serving his apprenticeship, first under Benjamin Bliven and later with A. M. Holm, on Jan. 26, 1886, he purchased of Mr. Leddy the shop on Farewell street, formerly owned by his father. Here he has since continued to do business, and has met with deserving success, having for patrons the owners of some of the best horseflesh in Newport.

Mr. Callahan is socially connected with the Foresters of America, and served as secretary of Court Friendship, No. 31, for several years. He is also a member of Malbone Lodge, No. 93, New England Order of Protection, and of Newport Council, No. 134, Catholic Benevolent Legion. In politics he is independent. In 1906, at the first election held under the new charter granted the city of Newport, Mr. Callahan was elected a member of the representative council from the Third ward, for the two-year term. He is a member of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, and has been closely identified with church work, having served for about ten years as usher.

On Feb. 8, 1899, Mr. Callahan was united in marriage to Mabel Goldie, of Newport, daughter of James Goldie, and she passed away in Newport, March 10, 1904, leaving two children: George W., Jr., born March 11, 1900; and Mildred C., born Feb. 14, 1904, who died Aug. 16, 1904.

Mr. Callahan on the maternal side is descended from several of New England's earliest settled families, among them the Clarke, Dring, Rogers, Babcock and Weeden families.

WILLIAM TRUBEE BURROW, deceased. In the death of William Trubee Burrow, which occurred Jan. 16, 1905, at his home in Saylesville, R. I., the manufacturing world lost a thoroughly proficient man in his line, and one whose example might, if followed, go far toward lessening the prevalent friction between employers and employees. Mr. Burrow was of English birth, born Aug. 5, 1839, in Leeds, son of John and Ann (Butterfield) Burrow.

John Burrow was a man well known in the manufacturing world of England, having held a number of highly responsible positions. In early life he was manager of the dye works of Thomas Haigh & Sons, of Leeds, and from there he went to Halifax, England, where for twenty years he filled a similar position with Moxen Kirk. He left that concern to accept a place as manager for Oates, Ingham & Sons, of Bradford, England, and remained with them till 1873, when he was given an interest in the business of S. & L. Margenison, piece and yarn dyers in Bradford, and also acted as manager of the works. This lasted but a short time, however, as only a few months later he was taken ill and passed from the scene of his labors in October, 1873, aged sixty-four years.

John Burrow married Miss Ann Butterfield, daughter of Joseph Butterfield. She lived only to the age of thirty-four years, and dying in 1853 left her husband with seven children to rear, viz.:

Joseph B., born Dec. 31, 1834, formerly book-keeper of the Glenlyon Dye Works, now living retired in Saylesville, R. I.; William T., our subject; Martha Ann, a widow residing in Halifax, England; Emily, a widow, who lives in Bradford, England; Mary Jane, who became the first wife of Frederick Edgeworth, and died in Bradford, England; Clarice, who was the second wife of Frederick Edgeworth, of Saylesville, where she died; and Henrietta, a widow, living in Bradford.

William Trubee Burrow acquired his early education in the public schools of Leeds, his native town, attending same till he was fourteen years of age, and this he supplemented by such constant reading during the succeeding years that he became a very well-informed man and an independent and forceful thinker. On leaving school he became a clerk in the office of Joseph Moxen Kirk, where he displayed such precocity and mastered the details of the business so thoroughly and rapidly that, when only nineteen, he was promoted by Mr. Kirk to the position of manager of the branch works at Bowling, Bradford. For six years he remained there, and then in 1864 became assistant manager of the main plant operated by the Kirks, one of the largest concerns in England. His next position was as manager of the plant owned by William Dodd & Company, finishers of cotton fabrics, in Manchester. This was of short duration, however, owing to the death of Mr. Dodd.

At this juncture Mr. Burrow's technical knowledge and his experience were sought to assist, in company with Mather and Platt, Mr. James Haywood in perfecting an improved self-acting clip tender. This was completed and brought out, and Mr. Burrow next proceeded to Bradford, where his father was then manager for Oates, Ingham & Sons, and acted as assistant to the latter for about three years. An interval of some two years then followed, during which time he was engaged with John Bottrell & Co., of Leeds, dyers and finishers, but he returned to the former concern and was in charge of the crabbing and singeing department until 1873, when the same offer made to his father by the Margenisons was also extended to him. He entered the employ of that firm, and when his father died succeeded him as manager, holding the position till 1879.

Meantime the growing supremacy of America in the manufacturing world had attracted Mr. Burrow's attention and in May, 1880, he accepted an offer from the New York Dyeing & Printing Company to remove to the United States and for about two years he was manager of the Staten Island Dye Works. In 1882 he went to Lawrence, Mass., to assume charge of the finishing and dyeing department in the Arlington Mills, but after only about one year he accepted in the fall of 1883 an offer from the Glenlyon Dye Works, as Saylesville, as manager of that plant. The works, at that time, owned by W. F. & F. C. Sayles, were then in their infancy, but in the twenty odd years of his most efficient management, ended only by his death, Mr. Burrow developed the plant to a remarkable extent and made of it a most thriving industry. This was essentially his life's work, and in it he displayed in their fullest strength those great executive powers with which he was so amply endowed.

With all his intense devotion to his work Mr. Burrow found time for recreation and one of his favorite avocations was photography. Besides his own work in that line, which was quite extensive and resulted in a number of very valuable views, he was much interested in all amateur photography and for a considerable period was a member of the Camera Club of Providence. He was the second president chosen by the club and served several years. He was a Mason, and belonged to Union Lodge, No. 10, A. F. & A. M., of Pawtucket, and as a young man, before coming to America, he was a member of the Third West Yorkshire Rifle Volunteers. American politics did not appeal to him as a field for action, personally, and he never affiliated with either of the great parties, always taking an independent stand.

On March 25, 1861, Mr. Burrow was joined in wedlock to Miss Janet Gunn, of Sunderland, England, the daughter of John and Eliza (Wood) Gunn. Having no children of their own, they adopted three children, the daughters of relatives, and gave to them true parental care and affection. One, Janet Gunn Burrow, married Fred Edgeworth, of Saylesville, now head finisher of the Solway Mills, at Westerly, R. I.; they have one daughter, Maria Edgeworth. The other two, Clarice and Dora, are at home, residing with Mrs. Burrow until her recent death in Newport, where for a few years before his death Mr. Burrow had maintained a home. Both he and his wife belonged to the Sayles Memorial Chapel (Congregational), in which Mr. Burrow was always one of the most active workers, in this interest having the co-operation of his devoted wife. For twelve years he served as choir-master of both church and Sunday-school. He was naturally of a devout nature, and his genuine Christianity dominated his whole life.

In all the relations of life Mr. Burrow showed himself loyal to the utmost. To his employers he ever gave the most faithful and efficient service, while his employees found him not only just, but kind and thoughtful of their welfare, and their appreciation of this was expressed after his death in the engrossed resolutions presented to his family by the overseers and operatives of the Glenlyon Works. His home life was ideal and he was devoted to his family. His literary tastes, already referred to, were evidenced by the extent and character of his library, while he displayed almost an equal fondness for music and was a musician of no mean quality himself. Seldom is so well-rounded a character developed, and the loss of so valuable a life is correspondingly great.

DARLING. In the death of Mr. Samuel Darling, late of the extensive firm of Brown, Sharpe & Co., of Providence, which occurred suddenly Oct. 12, 1896, in the station of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, at New Haven, the city of Providence lost one of its best known citizens, a man of high sense of honor in all his dealings, esteemed and respected, and a man, too, of means, who used same without stint against compulsory vaccination, believing the practice of it to be wrong.

Born in the town of Groton, Vt., Mr. Darling was a son of Stephen and Nancy (Fisk) Darling, whose forefathers were among the pioneers of Groton. It is a matter of history that Capt. Edmund Morse, of Haverhill, N. H., a son of Thomas, of Reading, Mass., was the first settler of Groton, Vt., locating there about 1783-4, with Israel Bailey, also from Haverhill, Deacon James Abbott and Jonathan James, all four being the first to make a temporary residence in Groton. The next settlers in Groton after Morse and his associates were John Darling and his sons, Roberts, Samuel and Moses, who came from Plaistow, N. H. From this family came the present race of Darlings in Groton.

John Darling married Phebe Roberts, and both died in Groton, Vt., whither they had gone in 1787. Their children were: Roberts, who died in Groton, Jan. 4, 1840; Jonathan, who died in Groton Oct. 9, 1820; Samuel, born in Plaistow, N. H., July 18, 1774, and died in Groton, Vt.; Josiah; Stephen, who married in Kennebunk, Maine, and died in Groton in December, 1819; Moses, born in Hampstead, N. H., and died in Groton, Vt., March 30, 1866; Meribah; Dolly, who was married in 1793, and died in Groton Jan. 17, 1821; Sally, born in Hampstead, N. H., June 14, 1771, and died June 25, 1825; Phebe, who was married in 1802, and died in Groton; and Hannah, born in 1804.

Stephen Darling, son of John and Phebe (Roberts) Darling, married Nancy Fisk, and their children were: John, born in Groton Aug. 16, 1808, died in the West in September, 1892; Atlanta, born May 1, 1810, died in April, 1887; Joanna, born Aug. 27, 1812, died at Boston in September, 1870; Samuel, born April 17, 1815, died in New Haven, Conn., Oct. 12, 1896; Rufus, born in 1817; and Nancy, born in 1819, died July 10, 1902.

John Darling, son of Roberts and grandson of the pioneer settler John, born Oct. 14, 1789, in the town of Groton, was long a prominent citizen there. He was elected to various offices, among them that of town clerk, which office he held from 1822 to 1837. He also was a member of the Legislature in 1834, 1837 and 1838, and for many years was a justice of the peace and selectman. His son, Jonathan Darling, too, was a man of prominence in Groton, serving as assistant judge of Caledonia county, and representing the town in the General Assembly. He was also a State Senator.

Looking still further backward in the annals of New England we find that authorities on early New England settlers have John and Dennis Darling early at Braintree, Mass. John married there in 1664 Elizabeth Dowman; and Dennis married, in 1662, Hannah Francis; both had children and both settled at Old Mendon, Mass., soon after King Philip's war, John taking up lands in what later became Blackstone, and Dennis first locating near the town seat. From this source at least came many of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Darlings, and through Capt. John Darling, son of Dennis, born at Braintree, Sept. 2, 1664, who was one of the petitioners of the town of Bellingham, Mass. (incorporated in 1719), came the Rhode Island Darlings.

SAMUEL DARLING, of Providence, lost his parents when he was a boy, and he was left to make his own way in the world. He received a common-school education in the schools of his native town, took up farming as an occupation in his early manhood in his native State. He had early developed a taste for the finer grade of mechanics, and while tilling the soil found abundant time to study and perfect himself in this trade. He studied especially the construction of tools for measurements, such as gauges, rules, etc., and in 1840, being then about twenty-five years of age, he removed to Bangor, Maine, where he commenced the manufacture of machinist's small tools, such as scales, gauges, and other instruments used for measuring purposes, his partner being a Mr. Swarts, under the firm name of Darling & Swarts, and their work speedily became known as that which was second to none. The firm of Brown & Sharpe of Providence was making a specialty of manufacturing the same tools at this time, and the competition between the two firms was very great. It was finally decided to consolidate, and in 1868 Mr. Darling, having dissolved his partnership with Mr. Swarts in 1866, came to Providence, and to the firm of Brown & Sharpe was added the firm of Darling, Brown & Sharpe. Mr. Darling's interest was, however, confined to the department which manufactured the measuring tools. He continued to be a member of the firm until 1894, when his interest was bought out by the firm of Brown & Sharpe, and he retired from active business life. He was a man of more than usual inventive ability, inventing many of the machines used in the making of the tools in his department. He was fond of mathematics, and a logical reasoner.

Mr. Darling was married in Vermont, in 1840, to a Miss Narcissa Heath, daughter of Daniel Heath, and in 1890 they celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary. For one year Mr. Darling lived on Chestnut street, and then for some years lived on Prospect street, and it was only in the later years of his life that he lived on Wesleyan avenue, where in 1885 he erected a fine residence. His only daughter, Mary Ella, married (first) Jacob Kettner, and (second) Benjamin A. Jackson, of the firm of George L. Claflin Company, wholesale druggists; she has one son by her first marriage, Ralph Darling Kettner. Mr. Darling was very fond of his family, and took particular interest in the home life. He belonged to no societies or fraternal organizations. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of Swedenborg, and was a member of the Church of the New Jerusalem. To his generosity and financial aid the church is indebted for its present position of prosperity.

Among his business associates and all his acquaintances Mr. Darling was known as a man of sterling honesty, and one who believed thoroughly in his convictions. His earnestness and fixity of purpose in pursuing a course which to him was right was evidenced by his crusade against compulsory vaccination.

In the later years of his life Mr. Darling became known by his attacks upon the practice of vaccination. As each successive Legislature was chosen the members would receive pamphlets and books upon the subject forwarded by Mr. Darling. He brought physicians to Providence from out of town to combat the theory, and spent a small fortune in his unsuccessful efforts. At one time he succeeded in interesting some of the prominent leaders of the General Assembly in his bill providing for the abolishment of Compulsory Vaccination. The bill passed one House, and was only beaten by a small majority in the Senate. That was in 1893, and from that time until his death he was untiring in his efforts to secure the legislation which seemed nearer to his heart than any other one thing. He was opposed by the regular physicians of the State and by the medical societies and newspapers, but he continued his work. He spent thousands of dollars in anti-vaccination advertisements in country newspapers and literally died in the harness, having been at work upon his cherished project up to within a few days of his death. Realizing fully the responsibilities and duties of stewardship; acting in his public life, as distinguished from his private and business life, on broad philanthropic lines, Mr. Darling presented to the people of the State and city of his adoption a character of strong militant power and a life which in all its aspects was the highest expression of good citizenship. Mrs. Darling died in March, 1900.

HAZARD. Among the old and representative families of Newport, R. I., is that of Hazard, members of which have been prominently identified with the business and public life of this section of Rhode Island. This article is to deal with the late George S. Hazard, whose widow resides in Newport, and William S. Hazard, for a number of years a prominent business man of that city, they being in the eighth generation from Thomas Hazard, the progenitor of the family, as follows:

(I) Thomas Hazard, born in 1610, appears first of record in America in Boston in 1635; was admitted a freeman there in 1638, and two years later of Portsmouth, R. I. He was one of the founders and first town officers of Newport, along with Codrington, Easton, Coggeshall, Brenton, the Clarkes, Bull and Dyre. Mr. Hazard was made a freeman of Newport in 1639, and in 1640 was appointed a member of the General Court of elections. His first wife, Martha, died in 1669, and he married (second) Martha, widow of Thomas Sheriff. His children were: Robert, born in 1635, in England or Ireland; Elizabeth; Hannah; and Martha.

(II) Robert Hazard, born in 1635, married Mary, born in 1639, daughter of Thomas and Anne Brownell, who lived to be one hundred years old, dying Jan. 28, 1739, her obituary setting forth that "she was accounted a very useful gentlewoman," etc. Robert Hazard was admitted a freeman of Portsmouth, R. I., in 1665, and from that time until 1698 his name often appears in the Colonial records as chosen to fill some important position. In 1671 he bought 500 acres of land in Kings Town and in 1687 he was taxed in that town; and not long thereafter he built his house there. This house was still standing in the early part of the nineteenth century. In 1695 he gave to his son George the larger part of the Kings Town purchase. In 1710, a short time before his death, Robert sold to his son Robert the remaining part of his farm, with "my manor house where I now live," and the latter, in 1718, gave it by will to his son Robert, after his mother's death, making three Roberts who had successively owned and occupied the old house. The last, upon the death of his grandmother, in 1739, sold to his uncle George the remaining part of the farm; it went next by will in 1743 to George's son, Col. Thomas, who in 1748 sold it to John Rose. In 1695 Robert Hazard gave to his son Jeremiah 200 acres of land in Tiverton. Robert Hazard died in 1710. His children were: Thomas, born in 1660; George; Stephen; Martha; Mary; Robert; Jeremiah, born March 26, 1675; and Hannah.

(III) Thomas Hazard (2), born in 1660, married, it is supposed, Susannah Nichols. The land records show his name more often than that of any other of the old planters as purchaser of large tracts of land of the original purchasers and at good prices. Previous to 1746 a shipyard, "Great Pier" and warehouses were on the farm that he gave in 1739 to his son Jonathan. This farm, situated on Boston Neck, is now known as the "Governor Brown farm" and "John J. Watson farm." About 1746, or some time previous, Jonathan Hazard sold to his brother George one-half of the pier and one-half of the warehouses and shipyard. Thomas Hazard was admitted a freeman from Portsmouth in 1684; after this date his name appears only twice in the Colonial records, viz.: In 1696 as freeman from Kings Town, and in 1717 as appellant in a lawsuit. He made the first purchase of land in Narragansett previous to 1698, buying of Samuel Sewell 900 acres for £700. In 1710 he also bought of Mr. Sewell 300 acres for £500, and other land. In 1703 and in 1708 he bought two parcels of land from Benedict Arnold, one containing 160 acres and the other twenty-six acres. This last purchase was what is called "Little Neck Farm," and was afterwards given to his son George. In 1737 he bought of Samuel Vial 660 acres in Boston Neck, and in 1738 800 acres of Francis Brinley, adjoining the above purchase. He also purchased other lands in the town, until he owned something less than 4,000 acres. The greater part of his land he gave to his sons before his death; and as each son attained his majority he was given a farm of several hundred acres. Mr. Hazard died in 1746 and his wife previously. Their children were: Mary, born Oct. 3, 1683; Hannah, April 11, 1685; Sarah, July 5, 1687; Robert, May 23, 1689; Thomas, May 11, 1691; Stephen, June 13, 1693; Jeremiah, June 5, 1697; George, Jan. 18, 1699; Benjamin, Nov. 2, 1702; and Jonathan, Oct. 1, 1704.

(IV) George Hazard, son of Thomas, born Jan. 18, 1699, married Nov. 17, 1721, Mary, born Oct. 16, 1697, daughter of Enoch and Mary (Sweet) Place. In 1721 his father gave him fifty acres of land and in 1738 409 acres, what are known as the Thomas G. Hazard and Thomas M. Potter farms. George gave by his will 209 acres on the Point to his son Enoch. From this George Hazard sprang a long line of honorable men and women. He died in 1746. His children were: Benjamin, born May 2, 1723; Simeon, Aug. 8, 1725; Mary, Nov. 23, 1727; George, April 16, 1730; Susannah, Dec. 18, 1732; Enoch, Dec. 6, 1735; and Thomas, Oct. 11, 1738.

(V) Simeon Hazard, son of George, born Aug. 8, 1725, married Feb. 6, 1745, Abigail Mumford. Mr. Hazard inherited from his father land in Boston Neck, South Kingstown, at the pier, with half the pier, half the warehouses, etc. The pier is what is known as Watson's Pier. Mr. Hazard died in 1790. His children were: Godfrey, Mumford, Hannah, Abigail, George S., Elizabeth and Mary.

(VI) George S. Hazard, son of Simeon, was born May 15, 1773. He was a resident of Middletown, R. I., where he engaged extensively in farming for many years, and later removed to Newport, where he was also engaged successfully in agricultural pursuits. He was an extensive landowner and one of the substantial men of Newport county. In political faith he was a stalwart Democrat of the old school. He was a member of the Baptist Church, which he attended regularly. George S. Hazard married in September, 1800, Content Wilbur, daughter of Judge Wilbur, of Little Compton, R. I., and to this union came children as follows: Mumford, born Feb. 1, 1802, married Sarah Tiley, of Newport; Elizabeth Wilbur, born Jan. 19, 1804, married William Wilbur, of Little Compton; Charles T., born July 31, 1806, married Sarah Cooke, of East Greenwich, R. I.; Arnold, born Oct. 8, 1807, married March 1, 1830, Sarah Ann Stedman; Ann Matilda, born Sept. 30, 1808, married Stephen Stedman; William W., born July 4, 1810, married Sarah M. Armstrong, of Newport; Harriet, born Jan. 23, 1813, married George A. Armstrong, of Newport; Henry B., born Dec. 23, 1815, married Emma Wilbur, of Newport; Simeon, born Jan. 7, 1817, is mentioned below; James L., born Feb. 11, 1818, married Fannie B. Irish, of Newport; and George A., born March 26, 1819, married Abby Card, of Newport.

(VII) Simeon Hazard, son of George S., was born Jan. 7, 1817, in Newport, and after acquiring a common school education became apprenticed to the cabinet-making trade under Adam S. Coe. After having secured a thorough knowledge of this trade he engaged in cabinet-making and upholstering on his own account on Church street, continuing in that business until his death, with much success. He was considered a very skilled workman, and many of the pieces of furniture and bric-a-brac made by him are still in use. After his death Mr. Hazard's brothers continued the business under the firm name of J. L. & G. A. Hazard for a number of years, the same business now being carried on at the original location by the well-known firm of J. W. Horton & Co. Mr. Hazard was honest and straightforward in all of his business dealings, and bore an enviable reputation for integrity. In political faith he was a Democrat. He was a consistent and devout member of the Second Baptist Church, serving as deacon thereof for many years.

On Nov. 15, 1838, Mr. Hazard married Mary Ann Stevens, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Williams) Stevens, of Newport, and by this union there were the following children: Sarah W., born Oct. 2, 1839, married Edwin G. Spooner, of Newport, who was engaged in the meat and butchering business, and they had two children, Sarah C. and George Hazard Spooner; Elizabeth, born Oct. 28, 1841, died in infancy; Elizabeth (2), born Nov. 13, 1843, died young; George S. is mentioned below; Anna W., born June 26, 1849, is the widow of Abram Almy, who was one of Newport's leading business men for many years, and a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in these volumes; and William S. is mentioned below. Simeon Hazard died Aug. 20, 1855, in the prime of life, aged thirty-eight years.

(VIII) GEORGE S. HAZARD, eldest son of Simeon, was born June 4, 1846, in Newport, and received his early educational training in the public schools of his native city. Upon leaving school he entered the employ of the well-known firm of Swinburne & Peckham, lumber dealers and ship chandlers, in whose employ he continued until his death. By close application and strict attention to the duties that devolved upon him he soon rose to the position of bookkeeper of the concern, continuing to act capably in that position until his death, which occurred Oct. 13, 1891. In disposition Mr. Hazard was quiet and unassuming. Domestic in his habits, he was devoted to his home, and was a loving husband and indulgent father. He was in political matters in sympathy with the Republican party. Mr. Hazard held membership in Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum, of Newport. Although not a member he attended St. George's Episcopal Church, of which his widow is a member, and he gave that body a liberal support.

On Oct. 20, 1870, Mr. Hazard was married to Sarah Amanda Stoddard, daughter of the late John C. and Margaret A. (Taylor) Stoddard, of Newport, and to this union were born children as follows: Margaret Stevens married June 14, 1893, Edwin Lucius Rice, of Shrewsbury, Mass., who is engaged in the insurance business in Worcester, Mass., and they have one son, Lucius Hazard Rice. George Ashley, born April 12, 1875, is a clerk for Fred W. Greene, the auctioneer, of Newport. John Gardiner, born July 31, 1879, is a traveling salesman for a Philadelphia house. Simeon Earl, twin of John G., is a clerk in the employ of the Johns-Manville Company, of Boston. Leroy Taylor, born Feb. 8, 1889, is a clerk in the employ of William K. Covell, of Newport.

(VIII) WILLIAM S. HAZARD, youngest son of Simeon, was born Nov. 5, 1853, in Newport. His education was acquired there in the public schools, which he left at the age of fourteen years, when he was obliged to begin work, his father having died when William was very young. He secured work on the farm of the late William G. Peckham, of Newport, continuing at agricultural pursuits for several years, during which time he was employed by Van Buren Wilbur and Amos Peckham, in Middletown. At the age of seventeen years Mr. Hazard became apprenticed to the butcher's trade under Charles Spooner, in whose employ he remained several years, and was also for a time connected with John DeBlois, in the same line of business. In 1885 Mr. Hazard engaged in business on his own account, opening a meat market and provision store at the corner of Broadway and Branch streets, and he continued in that business with success until April, 1905, when he closed out this line to take up poultry raising in Middletown, Rhode Island.

On May 24, 1882, Mr. Hazard was married to Hannah Caswell Stoddard, daughter of the late John C. and Margaret A. (Taylor) Stoddard, of Newport, and to this union have been born two children, William Douglas, and Charles Townsend, the latter dying at the age of two years and two months. William Douglas Hazard, born March 7, 1883, in Newport, was educated in the public schools of his native city, later graduating from the Newport Business College. He was for a time bookkeeper for the Newport Transfer Company, at the Jamestown (R. I.) branch office; later with the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railway Company; in March, 1903, became bookkeeper for J. W. Horton & Co., and in 1905 took up newspaper work on the staff of the Newport Herald.

Mr. Hazard attends St. George's Episcopal Church, of which his wife is a member. He is a staunch supporter of the principles of the Democratic party, but has never cared for nor sought public office.

MASON (Woonsocket family). Many of the Masons of that region of country on either side of the line separating the States of Rhode Island and Massachusetts spring from Sampson Mason, who, it is said, was an officer in Oliver Cromwell's army, and who came to this country not far from 1649, and settled first at Dorchester. He removed to the town of Rehoboth, which then embraced a region of country out of which subsequently came a number of towns in both Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Rehoboth was settled by Rev. Samuel Newman and members of his church, who, after a somewhat stormy stay in the Massachusetts Bay Colony had sought religious peace in the wilderness. Newman, being a man of great force of character, a scholar of marked distinction, exerted an influence which no doubt had its effect on the destinies of the town.

Mr. Mason, in England, was what is termed a Roundhead, a radical in politics, and a Baptist in faith. He subsequently removed from Rehoboth, "for conscience sake," to Swansea. Before this removal, however, he had assisted in building the Baptist Meeting-house in Swansea, for which he was summoned before the authorities of Plymouth Colony, fined, and warned to leave the jurisdiction of the colony.

Of this Mason stock here at Providence and in several of the nearby towns in Rhode Island have lived and flourished many of the name, who have played well their part in the great activities which have made the Commonwealth so conspicuous as an industrial center. Perhaps none was more prominent in this line than the late Earl P. Mason, of Providence, who was long connected with the banking interests of the city; and in the line of manufacturing at Pawtucket was the late Robert D. Mason, long prominently connected with the industrial life of that city; while at Providence in public life figured prominently Hon. Dr. James B. Mason, a graduate of Brown University, who was intimately identified in social and business life for a time with the famous four Brown brothers, merchants, and later for several years was a member of the Lower House of the Rhode Island Assembly and also a member of the United States Congress; he, too, was Speaker of the Rhode Island House.

There have resided in the old town of Cumberland and at Woonsocket, perhaps of this same race of Masons, several generations of the family of Chad and Chloe Mason, several of whom have worthily borne the name in that community, notably the late Olney Mason and his son, the late William Olney Mason, who for many years was prominently identified with both the business and public interests of Woonsocket and vicinity; and the latter's son, William C. Mason of that city, is at this time actively engaged in carrying on the work laid down by his father and grandfather, and is at this time the efficient city clerk.

The family of Chad and Chloe (Tower) Mason, of Cumberland, comprised children as follows, as shown by the Cumberland town records: Otis, born June 5, 1791; Olney, born Dec. 1, 1793; Nancy, born Aug. 23, 1796; Jesse, born Dec. 22, 1798; and Lucina, born Nov. 9, 1801.

Olney Mason, son of Chad and Chloe, born Dec. 1, 1793, in Cumberland, R. I., married Dec. 28, 1817, Pearly, daughter of Levi Cook, and their children of Cumberland town record were: Lucina, born Jan. 4, 1819; Adelia M., born Nov. 1, 1820; Lyman C., born Jan. 2, 1824; William Olney, born Oct. 28, 1826; and Ellen M., born June 4, 1834.

WILLIAM OLNEY MASON, son of Olney and Pearly (Cook) Mason, was born Oct. 28, 1826, in the town of Cumberland, R. I., in that part which is now known as Tower Hill. When he was six years of age his father moved his family to the city of Woonsocket, and here the son's long, busy life was in main passed, and in a manner which has reflected credit and honor upon the family name. The elder Mason on his removal to Woonsocket city or borough engaged in the livery business, leasing ground where now stands the office of the Woonsocket Reporter, of Messrs. Willis and Lyman A. Cook, and erected thereon a stable for the purpose. The son, William Olney, grew up in the business with his father, and when old enough became associated in the business with him. This they conducted until such time as the Cooks wanted the ground, when the business was discontinued. The next venture of William O. Mason was in the hotel business. Associated with Mr. Lysander W. Elliott, he purchased what is now the "Monument House"; this was then on what was known as Tinker's Corner. The two carried on the hotel business for perhaps a year or two, when the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Mason then engaging in the grocery business, in which he continued successfully through the remainder of his active business life for approximately twenty years.

John C. Mason

Mr. Mason came to Woonsocket when it was a place of but a few thousand inhabitants. He lived to see it a city of many thousands, a busy industrial center, and in its development he took no little part. Many are the interesting stories he frequently told relating to the city's history. On his coming to Woonsocket where now is the city hall stood a pine grove, and many were the changes he delighted in relating as one of the pioneers of the city.

In his political affiliations Mr. Mason was a Republican, and as such was called upon to fill a number of offices of trust, honor and responsibility. He was at one time a member of the town council of Cumberland, declining a re-election, though at the time he was slated for president of that body. He served as one of the trustees of the consolidated school district, and for two years he was a collector of taxes in the town of Woonsocket, and in 1872, 1873, and 1874 was a member of the board of assessors.

Mr. Mason was a member and past master of Morning Star Lodge, A. F. & A. M. In political, business, social and private life Mr. Mason was greatly esteemed and respected, his honesty and fealty to duty endearing him to all. Kind and charitable, he was a man missed by the whole community when called to his reward.

Mr. Mason was married to Mary Capron, daughter of Collins Capron, and to them came children as follows: William C., Fred O., Herbert Capron (of Providence), and Mrs. Burton Williams. Mrs. Mason resides with her son, William C.

The death of Mr. Mason occurred at his home on Blackstone street, Woonsocket, R. I., March 1, 1905, and the funeral was held from his late residence. This was attended by many friends and relatives, as well as former business associates of the deceased. The funeral services were simple, the plain Episcopal service being used by the rector of St. James Church—Rev. W. Ashton Thompson. The interment took place at Oak Hill Cemetery; the pall-bearers were Stephen Magown, Fred W. Arnold, George H. Emmott and Walter S. Thayer, all past masters of Morning Star Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M.

WILLIAM COLLINS MASON, son of William Olney, was born in Woonsocket, July 18, 1856, and was educated in the public schools of his native town and in the high school. His first employment was as a clerk in the office of the town clerk of Woonsocket, under Francello G. Jillson, in 1876. At the end of a year he went to Providence, where he remained until the following year, when he returned to his old position in the town clerk's office in Woonsocket, spending sixteen years as deputy clerk, and later as city clerk. Ill health forced him to resign his position in 1886, and he went to Boston, there to sojourn until his strength was restored. In 1891, after the death of his former chief, Mr. Albert E. Greene, he was elected city clerk by the city council, a position he was well qualified to fill, and he has since been the very efficient incumbent of that office, being re-elected annually without opposition. Mr. Mason is well posted in town affairs, and has always been an active worker for the public good. In politics he is a Republican, and he is president of the Reporter Publishing Company. He is a member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 13, A. F. & A. M.; of the Council; of the Chapter, of which he has been secretary for eight years; and of the Commandery. He is a member of the Woonsocket Business Men's Association, and was its first secretary, serving two years in that capacity. Mr. Mason is very popular with all classes, and has long been one of the representative men of the town.

In Woonsocket Mr. Mason married Delia Flanagan, and they have three children: Dorothy, Mary C. and Florence I.

TAYLOR. Among the old and distinguished families of Rhode Island, and particularly of Newport, is that of Taylor, representatives of which have made their home in that city for upward of 250 years. This article is to deal with the descendants of (I) Robert Taylor, the emigrant from England, who appeared in Newport in 1655, giving his occupation as rope-maker. He was appointed prison keeper in 1673. He married Mary Hodges, of Scituate, Mass., in November, 1646, and their children were: Mary, born Aug. 12, 1647; Ann, born Feb. 10, 1649-50; Margaret, born June 30, 1651; Robert, born Oct. 16, 1653; John, born in June, 1657; and Peter, born in July, 1661.

(II) Robert Taylor (2), son of Robert, was born Oct. 16, 1653, in Newport, and died June 12, 1707; he was buried in his orchard in Middletown. He married Deborah Peckham, of Middletown, who like himself was a Quaker, and their children were: John, born Sept. 26, 1687; Margaret, July 7, 1689; Elizabeth, July 26, 1691; Robert, Nov. 22, 1694; Robert, Oct. 13, 1695; Deborah, Jan. 12, 1697; Thomas, Nov. 2, 1699; Peter, March 8, 1701; Mary, Nov. 23, 1703.

(III) Peter Taylor, son of Robert (2), was born March 8, 1701, in Newport, and died there Oct. 4, 1766. He was a Quaker and a prominent member of the Society of Friends, doing preaching at various times. He married Oct. 10, 1728, Thankful Tripp, of Portsmouth, R. I., and to them were born children: Deborah, born July 28, 1729; Elizabeth, Aug. 3, 1731; Ann, March 30, 1733; Robert, Dec. 9, 1735; James, April 21, 1738; Mary, March 27, 1740; Catherine and Norah, twins, Feb. 14, 1742; Abigail, Aug. 12, 1744; Abigail (2), Sept. 3, 1746; Martha, Sept. 2, 1749.

(IV) Robert Taylor (3), son of Peter, was born Dec. 9, 1735, in Newport, and died there Oct. 9, 1810. He was a tanner by occupation and owned a large tannery on Walnut street, west of Railroad bridge. He was at first a Quaker in religion, but was later converted to the Congregational faith. He was prominent in the affairs of his town and served as justice of the peace and in other offices, including that of tax collector. Robert Taylor married (first) Dec. 6, 1759, Mary Pitman, of Newport, and to them were born: Robert, Feb. 14, 1763; Rebecca, Aug. 20, 1765; John, April 15, 1770; James, Nov. 14, 1771; Mary, April 15, 1773; Peter, Jan. 20, 1775; Horatio Gates, Sept. 21, 1778; Deborah, Aug. 7, 1783. Robert Taylor married (second) Nov. 26, 1789, Abigail Pitman, sister to his first wife; there were no children by this union.

(V) James Taylor, son of Robert (3), was born Nov. 14, 1771, in Newport, and died there May 3, 1835. He was an apothecary by profession and conducted a drug store for many years on Thames street, in what was known as the Hunter building. In politics he was first a Whig, and later joined the ranks of the Republican party, and he was called upon to fill many offices of trust and honor. Mr. Taylor married April 7, 1799, Ann Howland, daughter of Capt. William Howland, of Newport, and by this union there were the following children: (1) William H., born Jan. 6, 1800, died Sept. 13, 1880, in New Bedford, Mass. He was an apothecary under his father, became collector of customs in Newport, and was later in the custom house at New Bedford, Mass. He then became secretary of the Mutual Marine Insurance Company, and then president-secretary of the Ocean Insurance Company, of New Bedford. He married Elizabeth Ann Pitman, and they had nine children. (2) Mary Ann, born Feb. 18, 1801, died March 5, 1835, in Newport, unmarried. (3) George Washington, born June 7, 1803, was judge of Probate in Newport, and died in Newport July 28, 1880. He married (first) Julia Ann Brownell and (second) Elizabeth S. Bush. (4) Harriet, born Aug. 7, 1805, died in infancy. (5) John Howland, born Sept. 7, 1808, died May 20, 1874, in Providence, where he had been a druggist for many years. He married Eliza F. Harding. (6) Robert James was born May 29, 1811, in Newport. (7) Harriet Frances, born May 25, 1818, died Nov. 10, 1859, unmarried.

(VI) Robert James Taylor, son of James, was born May 29, 1811, in Newport, and died Dec. 20, 1871. He engaged in the drug business throughout his life. A Whig and later a Republican, Mr. Taylor was prominent in public affairs, being president of the city council for a period of twenty years. He was a director of the Redwood Library, and was himself very fond of literature. For a number of years he served as a director of the Newport National Bank, continuing in that capacity until his death. In religion he was connected with the Unitarian Church, taking an active part in its work, and he was popular in fraternal circles, being a member of the I. O. O. F. During the Dorr war he took an active part, as lieutenant-colonel of the Newport Artillery, of which he was a member for a number of years.

Robert James Taylor was married (first) Nov. 9, 1835, in Philadelphia, to Caroline Meyer, daughter of Henry Meyer, and she died May 19, 1848, in Newport. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Taylor: James Henry, who conducted his father's drug business and was a member of the State Pharmaceutical Board until his death (he married Martha Pierson); William, who died at the age of seven years; John M., mentioned below; and George H., who resides in Newport, an auctioneer by profession (he married Emma West). Mr. Robert James Taylor was married (second) April 26, 1851, in Newport, to Elizabeth Lyon, daughter of Joseph Lyon, of that city. She died March 29, 1885, leaving two children: Grant P., mentioned below; and Caroline E., who married Walter Hodges, of Chicago, purchasing agent of the Santa Fe Railway Company.

(VII) JOHN M. TAYLOR was born in Newport July 4, 1841, and his educational training was acquired in the public schools, with one year at boarding school in Grafton, Mass. Leaving this latter institution at the age of fourteen years he engaged as a clerk with William C. Cozzens & Co., dry-goods merchants, with whom he remained six years, and then was employed for seven or eight years in William J. Swinburne's four-mill as bookkeeper. At the end of this time Mr. Taylor engaged with A. C. Titus & Co., house furnishers, and continued in the capacity of bookkeeper for this firm for upwards of thirty years, leaving them to accept the office of city treasurer. He was elected to this office in 1903, 1904 and 1905 successively, in the latter year being the candidate of both parties, elected unanimously; in January, 1907, at the first meeting of the new representative council, elected under the new charter granted the city of Newport, Mr. Taylor was the unanimous choice of that body for the office of city treasurer, to which he was elected for the ensuing year. His political sentiments make Mr. Taylor a Republican. He is senior warden and treasurer of Emmanuel Episcopal Church, and has also been treasurer of the Newport Convocation in connection therewith. He is treasurer of Rhode Island Lodge, No. 12, I. O. O. F., of Newport, a position which he has held for a number of years, and since 1878 has been collector of Coronet Council, No. 63, Royal Arcanum, having the record of being the oldest continuous collector in that order; he is a charter member of his council. In 1906 Mr. Taylor was elected a member of the board of trustees of the Island Cemetery Company, of Newport.

Mr. John M. Taylor was married (first) Nov. 9, 1865, to Elizabeth Chace, daughter of Henry C. Chace, of Middletown, and she died July 5, 1883, in Newport, the mother of children as follows: Henry Chace, who died aged two years; Caroline Meyer, who died when two years of age; and Emily, who married W. W. Marvel, D. D. S., of Fall River, Mass., and has one son, William Taylor Marvel. Mr. Taylor married (second) Oct. 20, 1886, Susan Anthony, daughter of Gideon, of Middletown, and one son has come to this union, Robert Peet, born Nov. 6, 1896.

(VII) GRANT PERRY TAYLOR, treasurer of the Savings Bank of Newport, is one of the well-known banking men of the city, as well as one of its representative citizens. He was born Dec. 22, 1852, in Newport, son of the late Robert James and Elizabeth (Lyon) Taylor. After acquiring his education in the public schools of his native city, which he left when about eighteen years of age, he entered his father's drug store, located on Thames street, and after serving a clerkship there of about three months he accepted a position as a clerk in the Newport National Bank. Within a short time he was promoted to the position of teller, and as such continued to serve that banking institution until 1888, in which year he became assistant treasurer in the Savings Bank of Newport, under the late William H. Sherman. He continued in that capacity until the death of the latter, which occurred in 1894, when Mr. Taylor was elected treasurer, a position in which he has since continued. For a number of years Mr. Taylor has served as a member of the board of directors of the Newport National Bank, in which financial institution he first acquired a knowledge of the banking business.

On Oct. 8, 1878, Mr. Taylor was united in marriage with Miss Kate Sterne, daughter of the late Samuel Sterne, a prominent and highly esteemed citizen of Newport, and to this union has come one son, Grant Sterne Taylor, born May 22, 1880, in Newport. After acquiring an education in the common schools of his native city he entered the Boston School of Technology, from which he was graduated in 1904. He is now engaged in the practice of mechanical engineering in New York City.

In political faith Grant P. Taylor is a Republican, but in local affairs casts his vote for the man and not the party. Although deeply interested in the growth and welfare of his city he has never allowed his name to be used in connection with public office. For several years he served as a trustee of the Island Cemetery Company, of Newport. Mr. Taylor attends Channing Memorial Church, and Mrs. Taylor is a member of Emmanuel Episcopal Church. Personally Mr. Taylor is affable and courteous, possessing a refined and cultured nature, and his gracious personality has gained for him a wide popularity.

RIDER. The Rider family is one of long and honorable standing in both Massachusetts and Rhode Island, its coming to the former State reaching back to the year 1634, when there came in the ship "Hercules" and settled at Weymouth, removing later to Boston, Thomas Rider. Another of the early immigrants of the name was Samuel Rider, who was a freeman and proprietor of Yarmouth in January, 1638-39, and from whom came a numerous posterity, the name still being considerably scattered among the Cape towns. Samuel Rider married, in 1656, Sarah, daughter of Robert and Mary (Warren) Barttell, and they had children: Samuel, born in 1657, and John, born in 1663. He had had by a former wife Mary and Elizabeth. Samuel Rider (2) married in 1680 Lydia, daughter of Joseph Tilden. He removed to Plymouth, had a large family of children, and died leaving many descendants.

Then from William Rider, of Watertown and Cambridge, who later removed to Sherborn, and his wife Hannah (Lovet) there came many of the Riders of that locality, including Framingham.

Here in Rhode Island and in the nearby Massachusetts town of Dartmouth the Riders have been a continuous family for two hundred years, Newport and vicinity being their early home, and in this locality the name has been representative of the best citizenship. The earliest of the name appearing of vital record in Newport was the family of John and Sarah Rider, whose children were: Thomas, born Jan. 22, 1706; Elizabeth, born Feb. 10, 1708; John, born Aug. 26, 1710; Sarah, born Aug. 8, 1713; and William C., born March 26, 1715. This John Rider and his son John were, presumably, the two Johns of Newport who were admitted freemen of the Colony of Rhode Island in 1714 and 1731, respectively. The further vital records of the Riders through that section are but fragmentary, the next earliest record being in Middletown, and of the families of Joseph and Barbara, beginning with 1742, and later of Joseph and Bathsheba and of William and Abigail. This article deals with a highly respected representative of the Rider family in Rhode Island, the late Philip Rider.

The grandfather of Philip Rider was Philip Rider, who came from the Narragansett section of Rhode Island. He and his wife Phebe had children born as follows: Phebe, Jan. 23, 1764; Philip, July 8, 1768; Sarah, Aug. 19, 1772; Rebecca, Sept. 25, 1774; and William, Oct. 19, 1785.

William Rider, son of Philip, was born Oct. 19, 1785, in Narragansett, R. I., and died in Providence May 20, 1866, while on a visit to that city. In early life he followed the sea, and later became a captain on vessels plying the Atlantic ocean, in the general mercantile trade between American and European ports. He continued thus engaged until about sixty years of age, when he settled in Newport. In political views he was a stanch Democrat of the old school, and was one of the thirteen Newporters to cast their votes for Andrew Jackson for President. He was always active in the affairs of his community, and for several years was high sheriff of Newport county, serving in that capacity with ability and efficiency. Mr. Rider was a consistent and active member of Trinity Episcopal Church for many years, for several years of that time serving as vestryman. He was one of the original organizers of Zion's Episcopal Church, and was serving as a vestryman thereof at the time of his death. He was fraternally connected with the Masonic order, holding membership in St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Newport.

On Aug. 9, 1813, William Rider married Ruth Babcock, born March 25, 1789, in Newport, where she died Dec. 26, 1848, the mother of children as follows: (1) William B., born May 7, 1814, in early life was engaged in the grocery business in Newport and Providence, and in the latter city became a manufacturer of dye stuffs. He married (first) Jane Swan and married (second) Ann Almy, and died July 6, 1899. (2) John Henry, born July 16, 1816, spent his life on the sea, first engaged in whaling and later in the coasting service. He never married, and died in Newport July 3, 1842. (3) Philip is mentioned further on. (4) Sarah Elizabeth, born July 26, 1821, married William A. Sweet, of Newport, where she died April 6, 1900. (5) Phebe Murfey, born Sept. 19, 1823, died Feb. 4, 1825. (6) Ruth Louisa, born Aug. 15, 1825, married Philemon Morey, of Boston, and died June 29, 1878.

PHILIP RIDER, the youngest son of Capt. William Rider, was born Oct. 7, 1818, in Newport, and attended the common schools of his native city until his twelfth year, when he became a clerk for Samuel Barker, who was at that time the oldest grocer in the city. After remaining in the employ of Mr. Barker for about four years he and his brother, William B., formed a partnership and engaged in the grocery business, opening a store on Thames, in what was known as "Colonnade Row," and there they continued in business for about three years. During the troublesome Dorr war times, in 1842, Mr. Rider purchased the grocery store of William S. Vose, located at the corner of Market and Ferry Wharf, where he continued in business for about eleven years, carrying a line of groceries, fruits, varieties, etc., and in this venture he met with deserved success. He then purchased the building at the corner of Pelham and Corne streets, and, after remodeling it and making extensive improvements, fitted it up as a hotel, opening it as the "Aquidneck House." He continued to conduct this well-known hostelry for a period covering eleven years, during which time his house gained a wide-spread reputation. In 1865 he sold the hotel, and for several years lived retired from active business interests, but later purchased what was known as the "Filmore House," on Catherine street, and divided it, making six distinct houses out of it. In 1872 Mr. Rider re-purchased the "Aquidneck Hotel," and continued as its proprietor for eight years, during which time he erected the cottage next to the hotel, and there made his home for the remainder of his life. In 1880 Mr. Rider leased the hotel for a period of ten years, and then for three years conducted the hotel himself, with a manager to look after the details. In 1896 Mr. Rider again leased the hotel, and from that time until his death, Feb. 19, 1906, he was retired from active life.

In 1874 Mr. Rider was elected a director of the First National Bank of Newport, and served in that capacity until the institution was merged into the Newport Trust Company, in 1905. He was a charter member of Rhode Island Lodge and Aquidneck Encampment, I. O. O. F., of Newport. In political faith he was a Democrat of the old school, and for several years served as a member of the school committee. While yet a young man he was the choice of his party for State treasurer, but was defeated. He was always interested in public and municipal affairs, and as a citizen was always ready to lend his hand and voice to all measures tending to promote the public welfare. He was a member of the Redwood Library and Athenaeum and of the Newport Historical Society. He was connected with the Trinity Episcopal Church, of which he served many years as vestryman and treasurer.

On June 6, 1850, Mr. Rider married Abby B. Lovie, daughter of William Lovie, of Newport, and she died Oct. 28, 1874. Mr. Rider married (second) June 30, 1880, Caroline Tisdale, daughter of Henry Tisdale, of Newport, and she died Jan. 4, 1904. In 1888 Mr. Rider's eyesight became impaired and continued to fail gradually until 1896, when he became totally blind. Although so afflicted up to the time of his death he was exceptionally cheerful and light-hearted, and retained his other faculties to a marked degree. In his declining years and unfortunate affliction Mr. Rider had the constant and untiring care of his daughter, Miss Martha Byley Rider, who survives him, and whose life was most cheerfully and unceasingly devoted to his care.

IRA OLNEY, who died in North Providence in 1891, belonged to one of the oldest and most prominent Rhode Island families and was himself a man well-known and highly respected as a citizen, besides being successful financially in a marked degree. Mr. Olney was descended from one of the original settlers of the State, and his line of descent is given below.

(I) Thomas Olney, born in 1600 in Hertford, Hertfordshire, England, came to America in 1635, in the ship "Planter," and landed at Salem, Mass. He was appointed a surveyor in January, 1636, was granted forty acres of land at Jeffrey Creek, now known as Manchester, Mass., and was made a freeman the same year. He was early associated with those who accepted the peculiar views of Roger Williams, and with a number of others he was excluded from the Colony March 12, 1638. He accompanied Williams to the new settlement, and became one of the "Original Thirteen Proprietors of Providence," who purchased their rights from the Indians. In July, 1639, he and his Church for many years, for several years of that time serving as vestryman. He was one of the original organizers of Zion's Episcopal Church, and was serving as a vestryman thereof at the time of his death. He was fraternally connected with the Masonic order, holding membership in St. John's Lodge, No. 1, A. F. & A. M., of Newport.

On Aug. 9, 1813, William Rider married Ruth Babcock, born March 25, 1789, in Newport, where she died Dec. 26, 1848, the mother of children as follows: (1) William B., born May 7, 1814, in early life was engaged in the grocery business in Newport and Providence, and in the latter city became a manufacturer of dye stuffs. He married (first) Jane Swan and married (second) Ann Abbot, and died July 6, 1899. (2) John Henry, born July 16, 1816, spent his life on the sea, first engaged in whaling and later in the coasting service. He never married, and died in Newport July 3, 1842. (3) Philip is mentioned further on. (4) Sarah Elizabeth, born July 26, 1821, married William A. Sweet, of Newport, where she died April 6, 1900. (5) Phebe Murfey, born Sept. 19, 1821, died Feb. 4, 1825. (6) Ruth Louisa, born Aug. 18, 1825, married Philemon Morey, of Boston, and died June 29, 1878.

PHILIP RIDER, the youngest son of Cape William Rider, was born Oct. 7, 1818, in Newport, and attended the common schools of his native city until his twelfth year, when he became a clerk for Samuel Barker, who was at that time the oldest grocer in the city. He continued to conduct this well-known hotel for a period covering eleven years, during which time his house gained a wide-spread reputation. In 1865 he sold the hotel, and for several years lived retired from active business interests, but later purchased what was known as the "Falmere House," on Catherine street, and divided it, making six distinct houses out of it. In 1872 Mr. Rider re-purchased the "Aquidneck Hotel," and continued as its proprietor for eight years, during which time he erected the cottage next to the hotel, and there made his home for the remainder of his life. IRA OLNEY, who died in North Providence in 1891, belonged to one of the oldest and most prominent Rhode Island families and was himself a man well-known and highly respected as a citizen, besides being successful financially in a marked degree. Mr. Olney was descended from one of the original settlers of the State, and his line of descent is given below.

(1) Thomas Olney, born in 1600 in Hertfordshire, England, came to America in 1630 in the ship "Planter," and landed at Salem, Mass. He was appointed a surveyor in January, 1631. He was granted forty acres of land at Jeffrey Creek, now known as Manchester, Mass., and was made a freeman the same year. He accompanied Williams to the new settlement and became one of the "Original Thirteen" proprietors of Providence, who purchased the rights from the Indians. In July, 1639, he and wife and their companions were excluded from the church at Salem, "because they wholly refused to hear the church, denying it, and were re-baptized."

Thomas Olney became one of the most prominent members of the Colony, as shown by the number of positions and duties which fell to his lot. In 1638 he was chosen the first treasurer; in 1647 a commissioner to form a town government; in 1648 an assistant for Providence, an office which he held almost continuously until 1663; in 1645, with Roger Williams and Thomas Harris, he was chosen a judge of the justice court; in 1656 he was chosen to treat with Massachusetts Bay in the matter of the Pawtucket lands; in 1663 his name appears among the grantees of the Royal Charter of Charles II; and in the same year he was chosen an assistant under the new charter. He was one of the founders of the First Baptist Church in Providence, and at one time was the acting pastor or minister. He was a man of stern or decided opinions,

A man resolved, and steady to his trust,
Inflexible to all, and obstinately just.

He was one of the well-to-do men, being in possession of a large real and personal estate, with his homestead on North Main street. He died in 1682, at the age of eighty-two years, and was buried in the family grave-yard in the rear of his dwelling. In 1631 he was married to Marie Small, and they had children as follows: Thomas (2), born 1632; Epenetus, 1634; Nebediah, 1637; Stephen, 1639-40; James; Mary; and Lydia, 1644.

(II) Thomas Olney, son of Thomas, was born in England in 1632, and came to America with his parents when a small child. Quite early he became a leading spirit in the Rhode Island Colony, and was constantly engaged to the time of his death in public affairs. For thirty years he was a member of the town council, and during the years 1669-70 and 1677-79 he acted as assistant. He served in the Colonial Assembly, and for a number of years as town clerk. He was ordained a minister in 1668, and succeeded Rev. Gregory Dexter as pastor of the First Baptist Church, serving until about the years 1710-1715. He was possessed of a large landed property, some of his land forming a portion of North Providence and what is now Lincoln, considerable of it still remaining in the possession of his descendants. He died June 11, 1722. On July 3, 1660, Mr. Olney married Elizabeth March, of Newport, and their children were: Thomas, born May 7, 1661; William, June 25, 1663; Elizabeth, Jan. 30, 1666; Anne, Jan. 13, 1668; and Phebe, Sept. 15, 1675.

(III) Thomas Olney married Lydia Barnes, of Swansea, Mass., July 13, 1687. He died March 1, 1718. His children were: Lydia, born April 30, 1688; Phebe, Oct. 29, 1689; Sarah, Aug. 26, 1693; Thomas (4), Jan. 18, 1696; Elizabeth, Jan.

29, 1698; Anne, March 26, 1700; Mary, Feb. 25, 1702; and Obadiah, Feb. 14, 1710.

(IV) Thomas Olney married Sarah Smith. He inherited from his grandfather the north part of the Wenscott farm, so called, in North Providence. He died Dec. 7, 1758, and was buried in a private graveyard on his farm. His children were five in number: (1) Joseph, born Dec. 12, 1724, married Martha Hawkins. He was a major in the Continental army, and was in the battle of Rhode Island. (2) Thomas, born July 29, 1726, married Siboeth Whipple. (3) Isaac, born in 1728, married Lydia Packard. (4) Ezra was born Nov. 22, 1729. (5) Ithamer, born in 1731, married, and resided at North Providence.

(V) Ezra Olney married first a Miss Langford, and second Lydia Wales, of Coventry, R. I. He was a soldier during the war of the Revolution. He resided at Fruit Hill, in the town of North Providence. His children were as follows: Abel, who never married, and who was a Revolutionary soldier; Sabra; Rosilla, who married William L. Ide; Mary; Sally; and by the second marriage: Samuel, the eldest, who married Phebe Harris; Phebe; Nehemiah; Phebe, who married Solomon Olney; and Cyrus, born in 1785.

(VI) Cyrus Olney followed the occupation of a farmer all his life and resided on Fruit Hill in the town of North Providence, where he died July 19, 1854, leaving considerable property. He was buried first in North Providence, but later his remains were removed to Swan Point. He was an Andrew Jackson Democrat and when "Old Hickory" ran for the Presidency the first time Mr. Olney was one of seven in the town who voted for him.

Mr. Olney was married in 1815 to Patience Mowry, of Smithfield, R. I., daughter of Abial and Tabitha (Wilbur) Mowry, the former a Revolutionary soldier. Mrs. Olney survived her husband a number of years, reaching the age of ninety-six, and died in North Providence. They had nine children, all reaching adult age, and the sons all became more than ordinarily successful men: (1) Miranda, born in 1815, died unmarried, May 28, 1843. (2) Sullivan, born Aug. 13, 1816, died June 18, 1843. (3) Parmelia, born Feb. 25, 1819, married James R. Case, and died in Providence. They had three children: Paul, who died young; Ella A., of Providence; and Charles, who died in Waterbury, Conn. (4) Cyrus, born Nov. 22, 1820, died in Providence, Oct. 19, 1903. He married (first) Sarah Stanton, and (second) Elizabeth Johnson, of Pawtucket. (5) Edward W., born Nov. 1, 1822, is a resident of the Olneyville district of Providence. He married (first) Jane C. Olney, (second) Myra Phillips, and (third) Mrs. Ruth (Eddy) Swan, the last named dying in 1905. (6) Ira was born Aug. 6, 1824. (7) Augustus, born March 12, 1826, went to California during the gold excitement of 1849. He is now a resident of Calaveras county, where he is engaged as a ranchman. He married Carrie Pool, and they have had ten children, James M. (deceased), Edward, Cynthia (deceased), Cyrus, Anne (deceased), George, Augustus, Ella (deceased), Walter and Alexander. (8) Catharine, born Jan. 16, 1828, married Metcalf Comstock, a contractor and builder, now deceased, and resides in the town of North Smithfield. She had one daughter, Kate W., who married Oscar Haskell and died in Texas. Mrs. Haskell had a son Ellsworth, who died a short time previous to his mother. (9) Samuel, born Nov. 21, 1829, married (first) Ellen Benedict, and (second) Anna Johnson. By the first marriage there was one son, Thomas Benedict, born in 1863, who died in 1865. Samuel Olney is a retired school teacher and resides at Pawtucket.

(VII) Ira Olney was born on Fruit Hill, North Providence, in a house that stood on the site of his late home. He received a good education in the common schools, was reared to the hard work of the farm and early learned the lessons of industry. He continued to operate the home farm and there spent his entire life, becoming a skilled farmer. In 1861 he erected the present house, which at that time was one of the best in the town. Mr. Olney was seriously hurt in an accident, sustaining injuries which resulted in his death June 20, 1891. He was buried in Swan Point cemetery. He was one of the leading and most influential citizens of North Providence and was widely known.

A staunch Republican, Mr. Olney was frequently honored by his fellow townsmen by election to positions of honor and trust. In 1878 he was elected to the town council of North Providence and held that office five consecutive years. In 1884 he was elected to the State Senate and served four years, while in that body acting on the more important committees. For two years he held the chairmanship of the committee on elections, appointed by Governor Wetmore. In 1887 he was a member of the Finance committee, one of the most important committees of the Senate, being the choice of Governor Davis, who was of the opposite political party, but recognizing Mr. Olney's unusual ability offered him membership on any committee he (Mr. Olney) cared to select. Mr. Olney retired from the Senate in 1887, and soon after was elected to the town council, and was serving on that body at the time of his death. He served as chairman of the town Republican committee for a number of years.

While not a member of any religious denomination, Mr. Olney was always interested in the cause of religion, and was the prime mover in organizing the Union Chapel on Fruit Hill, to which he was a liberal contributor.

Mr. Olney was a shrewd, far-sighted business man, systematic in all his affairs. He erected many houses in Providence, his investments proving uniformly successful. He acted as administrator of many estates entrusted to him through the confidence of his acquaintances in his ability and integrity. He began life with scarcely anything, and at the time of his death possessed a competence.

In 1861 Mr. Olney married Caroline Thurber, of Providence, daughter of Capt. Samuel and Abigail (Alger) Thurber. Captain Thurber was for many years a sea captain, and later a custom house employee. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Olney: Ira, who died in infancy; and Carrie O., born Dec. 28, 1867, who married George H. Havens, of Mystic, Conn., now a druggist at Providence. Mrs. Havens inherits much of her father's business acumen, and manages the large property left by him. Mrs. Caroline (Thurber) Olney died Nov. 1, 1906.

ALONZO B. SWEET. There are a number of persons bearing the name of Sweet in Exeter and adjoining towns, and doubtless they all spring from the same scion. Augustus Sweet, the grandfather of Alonzo B. Sweet, lived in Exeter, and was the progenitor of a large family. He married Jemimah Smith, who bore him many children, among them being: William, the father of Alonzo B.; Betsy, who married William Arnold; Joshua; Ruth; Elizabeth; Pardon; Nicholas; Henry; Uriah, and Amos. These children were all born in Exeter.

William Sweet was born in the house in which he spent his entire life, and which is now occupied by his son Alonzo B. He married Hannah Adams, a descendant of the famous Capt. Ebenezer Adams, of South Kingstown, and a daughter of Ebenezer Adams, who lived to the great age of ninety-six years, and was a most remarkably well preserved man. William Sweet always followed farming, but for a short time also engaged in conducting a store, which he built near his home. In politics he was a Democrat, but always took more interest in domestic than in public affairs. He had the following children: Willet D. married Frances Damley; Rowland married Harriet Spencer; Mary married Thomas Crandall; Phoebe Ann married John Smith; William Henry married Phoebe Spencer; Deborah, who never married, lived to be about seventy-six years old; Jeremiah S. married Mariah Calvin; Martha A. married Jerome Hoxsie; Clarke L. married Hannah Corey; Robert P. married (first) Dorcas Arnold and (second) Phoebe Arnold; Alonzo Barton is mentioned below; Malissa never married.

Alonzo Barton Sweet was born Aug. 18, 1842, in Coventry, where the family had removed for a short period, later returning to the homestead. His educational advantages were limited, he being obliged to devote most of his time to the farm. On July 6, 1863, Mr. Sweet, then a lad of twenty years, enlisted in Company A, 3rd Rhode Island Cavalry, and was transferred to Louisiana, while there seeing a great deal of service and enduring many hardships. He was in the Banks expedition. Owing to severe exposure and the climatic conditions Mr. Sweet was stricken with fever, and sent back to the barracks hospital at New Orleans. Upon his recovery he joined Company I, 24th Reserve Corps, and was mustered out of the service Oct. 25, 1865, returning home. After this he worked for four years at River Point.

On Aug. 29, 1867, Mr. Sweet married Rebecca M. Abbott, who was born Aug. 3, 1846, daughter of Joel and Mary Ann (Whetman) Abbott, and they had children as follows: Henry A., born Feb. 8, 1869, died in infancy; Carrie Frances, born June 25, 1870, married Charles C. Reynolds; Bertha Evangeline, born Jan. 31, 1873, married June 7, 1894, Robert F. Sherman; Hannah Mary Ann, born March 12, 1877, married Joseph E. Hathaway; and Minnie Gertrude, born March 20, 1879, married July 29, 1898, Martin R. Miner, born Feb. 21, 1878, in North Kingstown.

Mr. Sweet has always been a staunch Republican, and is at present town constable. He still lives on the homestead, and despite his many hardships is to-day as active as most men of half his age.

GARDNER. The Gardners of Bristol county, R. I., trace their lineage from (I) Samuel Gardner, of Newport, who married Elizabeth, widow of James Brown and daughter of Robert Carr, of Newport. In 1687 he removed to Freetown, Mass., and in 1693 he bought in partnership with Ralph Chapman, of Ebenezer Brenton, a farm at Mattapoisset (now South Swansea), where he died Dec. 8, 1696. His wife was then living.

(II) Samuel Gardner, born Oct. 28, 1685, was married in December, 1707, in Rhode Island, to Hannah Smith (born Dec. 20, 1688), by the Hon. Samuel Cranston, Esq., the Governor. They had thirteen children, of whom Edward Gardner was the twelfth child.

(III) Edward Gardner, born April 22, 1731, married, in 1756, Esther Mason, daughter of Christopher and Lydia Mason. They had children: Lydia; Susannah, born Jan. 20, 1759; Martha; Philip, born April 7, 1763; Catherine; Mason; and Edward.

(IV) Capt. Edward Gardner, son of Edward, was born March 29, 1770. He married (first) Betsey Winslow, daughter of Dr. Ebenezer Winslow, of Somerset, Oct. 24, 1793, and she died May 25, 1802. On Feb. 20, 1803, he married (second) Rosabella Child, who was born July 25, 1778, and was a descendant of early and prominent families of the town, being a daughter of John Child, Esq., of Warren, and his wife Rosabella (Cole). By the first marriage there were two children: Nancy, born Oct. 25, 1794, at Somerset, and Philip Smith, born Oct. 17, 1798, in Warren. By the second marriage there were children as follows: John Child, born Nov. 28, 1803; George Tibbetts, born Feb. 10, 1805; Charles, born Jan. 1, 1808; Betsey Winslow, born Nov. 12, 1809; Mary Miller, born Feb. 1, 1811; Betsey Paine, born Dec. 23, 1811; Robert St. Skitts, born March 9, 1814; and Edward, born Aug. 22, 1818.

(V) GEORGE TIBBETTS GARDNER, son of Capt. Edward and grandson of Edward, was born Feb. 10, 1805, in Warren, R. I., and in his youth learned the cooper's trade. Naturally ambitious, he took a trip to Cuba in the brig "Cuba," commanded by one of the sea-faring men of his native town, Capt. William Carr, Jr., and through overwork during the voyage and trip met with conditions injurious to his health which caused a spinal affection taking the form of a partial paralysis of his lower limbs. With this trouble he was practically laid up for several years, and was never afterward robust, but on the contrary of delicate health. But through the force of his will and ambition, he fought against great odds, kept up and doing, achieving success in business, and led a most useful life, to the wonder as well as admiration of those knowing his physical condition, continual sufferer that he was. After the beginning of his affliction, as soon as conditions would permit, young Gardner started in Warren a store in which he carried on a hardware, grocery and ship chandlery business, and in it attained success. As time passed, with his accumulations he branched out, making other ventures in fitting out vessels for voyages in the merchant service, and eventually invested in ships, in which line of enterprise he was favored by fortune. He gradually extended his business, and also acted for others as ship agent.

Mr. Gardner was ever deeply interested in the welfare of Warren and her people, and was active and useful in its social life and public affairs, and as well most prominent. He was a member of the committee which had in charge the building of the high school edifice on Liberty street, and as well that of the Miller Street School. He was president of the town council from 1859 to 1870, declining in the latter year further service. He was at various times a member of the school committee, being always progressive, favoring a high standard of education. He served as a commissioner on the board for the equalization of taxes, and took an active part in the investigation made in the different towns. His advice and council were considered good and reliable. He was one of the original stockholders in the Warren Manufacturing Company, and a large owner of stock at the time of his death. He was chosen president of the Hope Bank in 1859, and on its merging into a National bank continued such relations with it and on until the time of his death. He was a trustee of the Warren Institution for Savings from its organization until the close of his life. For many years he was treasurer of the Philanthropic Society. As an earnest church worker he was made a member of the building committee of the M. E. Church of Warren, and was its chairman during the construction of the church.

On Nov. 21, 1830, Mr. Gardner was married to Abby Child Eddy, who was born Jan. 23, 1807, daughter of Capt. Enos and Betsey Eddy, of Warren, R. I., and died Dec. 20, 1831. There was one child by this union, Abby Child, born Dec. 14, 1831. Mr. Gardner married for his second wife, Feb. 15, 1835, Harriet Byron Viall, daughter of Benjamin and Hannah (Kinnicutt) Viall, of Seekonk. By this marriage there were six children: (1) Robert, born March 6, 1836, died June 21, 1903. (2) George Tibbetts was born Nov. 12, 1839. (3) Harriett Frances, born Jan. 10, 1844, died June 11, 1897. (4) Esther Alice, born May 30, 1846, married Samuel L. Peck, June 23, 1870. (5) Georgiana was born Sept. 1, 1848. (6) Horace Richmond, born Aug. 12, 1851, married Elizabeth Durfee.

George T. Gardner died at his home in Warren, June 27, 1881, in his seventy-seventh year. On this occasion the Warren Gazette said editorially:

"The death of such a man as George T. Gardner, Esq., is an irreparable loss to any community. During the past quarter of a century, no one has gone from among us who has done so much for the good of the town, and it will be many a year before the place he has filled can be well occupied. He was a man of keen judgment, of sound common sense, and of the strictest integrity, and his opinion and his word could be depended upon; therefore he was a careful and competent adviser. For many years he was in very poor health, and persons acquainted with sickness and disease could easily see that he was familiar with pain, but although weak physically, he was strong mentally, and an indomitable will kept him at his post, and when a younger and stronger man would have fallen under the suffering. He was a successful man, for he satisfactorily filled positions of responsibility and trust, and left an ample fortune to his children, and while mindful of the things of time he was not unmindful of that eternity to which all are hastening."

JOSEPH HENRY POTTER, a retired business man of Westerly, who has had a long and honorable, and as well successful, connection with the business and financial life of that city, is one of the foremost living representatives of that old family.

The Potters of Rhode Island, as a family, are as old as the Colonies out of which came the commonwealth, while the origin of the family is lost in the twilight of mediaeval England. Its common descent is traced with the Earls of Leicester. Here in this country the family history covers a period of two and one-half centuries and more, and since the sailing from the mother country of the forerunner of the family in 1634, who with his associates gave to the settlement of Warwick, Rhode Island, its name, men of its successive generations have been conspicuous in commercial, legislative and professional life. This article, however, is to treat only of one branch of the family, that at

Potter Hill in the old town of Westerly, where for generations the Potters have been among the most prominent citizens of their communities. Such men as the two George Potters, father and son, the two Joseph Potters, Col. Nathan, Thomas Wells, Col. Henry, Robert T. and William Potter and their sons and grandsons, some of whom are yet in active business life in the town of their forefathers, have left their impress upon the communities in which their active and useful lives were passed.

In the genealogy and family history which follows, the Roman characters indicate generations from Nathaniel Potter, the settler and American ancestor of this branch of the Potter family.

(I) Nathaniel Potter, of Portsmouth, R. I., was admitted an inhabitant of the island of Aquidneck in 1638, and was one of the twenty-nine signers of the compact for government in 1639. His wife's name was Dorothy. He died in 1644, and she in 1696. Their children were: Nathaniel, born in 1637; and Ichabod.

(II) Ichabod Potter, son of Nathaniel, married Martha Hazard, daughter of Thomas and Martha, and was of Portsmouth, R. I. Their children were: Thomas, John, Robert and Ichabod. Ichabod Potter, Sr., died in 1676. He signed articles relative to Westerly lands in 1661. His widow removed from Portsmouth to Kingstown.

(III) Thomas Potter, son of Ichabod, born about 1663, married (first) Jan. 30, 1687, Susanna, daughter of John and Susanna (Anthony) Tripp, and (second) Dec. 8, 1720, Lydia (Wilcox) Sherman, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (Cook) Wilcox, and was of South Kingstown. The children of Mr. Potter, all born of the first marriage, were: Susanna, born June 28, 1688; Sarah, born July 25, 1690; Ichabod, born Sept. 23, 1692; Thomas, born Feb. 8, 1696; John, born Oct. 2, 1697; Nathaniel, born April 15, 1700; Benjamin, born June 19, 1703; Joseph, born Jan. 30, 1706; Mary, born Aug. 16, 1708; and Martha. Thomas Potter, Sr., died in 1728, and the second Mrs. Potter passed away in 1727.

(IV) Thomas Potter (2), son of Thomas, born Feb. 8, 1695-96, in North Kingstown, married (first) March 19, 1717-18, Mary, daughter of George Babcock, of Westerly, and (second) Judith Rogers. Mrs. Mary Potter died Jan. 8, 1773, and Mrs. Judith Potter passed away in 1805. His children were: Susanna, born Feb. 20, 1718; Thomas, born Sept. 14, 1720; Jonathan, born in 1723; Mary; Elizabeth, born Jan. 29, 1727; George, born Jan. 3, 1731-32; Stephen (all born of the first marriage and in Westerly); and Caleb, born Aug. 19, 1749 (to the second marriage and in Hopkinton).

Thomas Potter's father had lived in that part of Kingstown near Point Judith, and the son removed from Kingstown to that part of Westerly which became Hopkinton, removing thither into the wilderness "because Kingstown was a place noted for want of piety."

and the South. As an earnest church worker he was a member of the building committee of the First Church of Warren, and was its chairman during the construction of the church.

George F. Gardner, Mr. Gardner was married to Abby Child, who was born Jan. 23, 1807, daughter of Capt. Enos and Betsey Eddy, of Warren, and died Dec. 20, 1831. There was one child in the union, Abby Child, born Dec. 14, 1831. She later married for his second wife, Feb. 15, 1838, Parker Byron Viall, daughter of Benjamin Viall, of Seekonk. By this marriage there were six children: (1) Robert, born March 6, 1836, died June 21, 1903. (2) George, born Nov. 12, 1839. (3) Frances, born Jan. 10, 1844, died June 11, 1891. (4) Esther Alice, born May 30, 1846, married Samuel L. Peck, June 23, 1870. (5) Georgiana, born Sept. 1, 1848. (6) Horace Richmond, born Aug. 12, 1851, married Elizabeth Butler.

George F. Gardner died at his home in Warren, June 27, 1881, in his seventy-seventh year. On the occasion the Warren Gazette said editorially:

"The death of such a man as George T. Gardner, Esq., is an irreparable loss to any community. During the past quarter of a century, no one has gone from among us who has done so much for the good of the town, and it will be many a year before the place he has filled can be well supplied. He was a man of keen judgment, of sound common sense, and of the strictest integrity, and his opinion and his word could be depended upon; therefore he was a careful and competent adviser. For many years he was in very poor health, and persons acquainted with sickness and disease could easily see that he was familiar with pain, but although weak physically, he was strong mentally, and an indomitable will kept him at his post, and when a younger and stronger man would have fallen under the suffering. He was a successful man, for he successfully filled positions of responsibility and trust, and left an ample fortune to his children, and while mindful of the things of time he was not unmindful of that eternity to which all are hastening."

JOSEPH HENRY POTTER, a retired business man of Westerly, who has had a long and honorable, and as well successful, connection with the business and financial life of that city, is one of the foremost living representatives of that old family.

The Potters of Rhode Island, as a family, are as old as the Colonies, one of which came the commonwealth, while the origin of the family is lost in the twilight of mediæval England. Its common descent is traced with the Earls of Leicester. Here in this country the family history covers a period of two and one-half centuries and more, and since the sailing from the mother country of the forerunner of the family in 1634, who with his associates gave to the settlement of Warwick, Rhode Island, its name, men of its successive generations have been conspicuous in commercial, legislative and professional life. This article, however, is to treat only of one branch of the family, that at

Potter Hill in the old town of Westerly, where for generations the Potters have been among the most prominent citizens of their communities. Such men as the two George Potters, father and son, the two Joseph Potters, Col. Nathan, Thomas Wells, Col. Henry, Robert T. and William Potter and their sons and grandsons, some of whom are yet in active business life in the town of their forefathers, have left their impress upon the communities in which their active and useful lives were passed.

In the genealogy and family history which follows, the Roman characters indicate generation from Nathaniel Potter, the settler and American ancestor of this branch of the Potter family.

(I) Nathaniel Potter, of Portsmouth, R. I., was admitted an inhabitant of the island of Aquidneck in 1638, and was one of the twenty-nine signers of the compact for government in 1639. His wife's name was Dorothy. He died in 1644, and she in 1696. Their children were: Nathaniel, born in 1637; and Ichabod.

(II) Ichabod Potter, son of Nathaniel, married Martha Hazard, daughter of Thomas and Martha, and was of Portsmouth, R. I. Their children were: Thomas, John, Robert and Ichabod. Ichabod Potter, Sr., died in 1676. He signed articles relative to Westerly lands in 1661. His widow removed from Portsmouth to Kingstown.

(III) Thomas Potter, son of Ichabod, born about 1663, married (first) Jan. 30, 1687, Susanna, daughter of John and Susanna (Anthony) Tripp, and (second) Dec. 8, 1720, Lydia (Wilcox) Sherman, daughter of Daniel and Elizabeth (Cook) Wilcox, and was of South Kingstown. The children of Mr. Potter, all born of the first marriage were: Susanna, born June 28, 1688; Sarah, born July 25, 1690; Ichabod, born Sept. 23, 1692; Thomas, born Feb. 8, 1696; John, born Oct. 1, 1697; Nathaniel, born April 15, 1700; Benjamin, born June 19, 1703; Joseph, born Jan. 30, 1705; Mary, born Aug. 16, 1708; and Martha. Thomas Potter, Sr., died in 1728, and the second Mrs. Potter passed away in 1727.

(IV) Thomas Potter (2), son of Thomas, born Feb. 8, 1695-96, in North Kingstown, married (first) March 19, 1717-18, Mary, daughter of George Babcock, of Westerly, and (second) Judith Rogers. Mrs. Mary Potter died Jan. 8, 1773, and Mrs. Judith Potter passed away in 1805. His children were: Susanna, born Feb. 20, 1718; Thomas, born Sept. 14, 1720; Jonathan, born in 1723; Mary, Elizabeth, born Jan. 29, 1727; George, born Jan. 1731-32; Stephen (all born of the first marriage in Westerly); and Caleb, born Aug. 19, 1740, the second marriage and in Hopkinton).

Thomas Potter's father had lived in that part of Kingstown near Point Judith, and the son moved from Kingstown to that part of Westerly which became Hopkinton, removing thither to the wilderness "because Kingstown was a place noted for want of piety."

(V) George Potter, son of Thomas (2), born Jan. 3, 1731-32, in Westerly, married Sept. 18, 1754, Content Maxson. They died, he Aug. 9, 1794, and she in 1815. Their children, all born in Hopkinton, were: Mary, born May 30, 1755; George, born Feb. 10, 1757; Joseph, born Feb. 6, 1759; Hannah, born March 9, 1761; Susan, born March 18, 1763; Content, born May 25, 1765; Lydia, born Oct. 10, 1766; Nathan, born May 31, 1769; Lucy, born Oct. 10, 1771; and Elizabeth born Sept. 19, 1775.

George Potter, known as "the honest miller," began housekeeping with his father in Hopkinton, and at the death of the father he inherited the homestead. He lived for some two years in the town of Richmond, and in 1764 removed to Westerly, and for seven years hired the farm owned by Hezekiah Babcock. Early in 1762 there was a dam built across the Pawcatuck river near what is now known as the meetinghouse bridge, and a gristmill was located there. As the dam overflowed valuable meadow lands, the landowners assembled and leveled it. The gristmill was then removed to Potter's Hill on the west side of the river and connected with a small sawmill and a fulling mill. These mills, and in addition two houses, George Potter purchased, and there began in mercantile business and ship carpentering, constructing small vessels. After the close of the Revolution, he, with others, was the first to sail from the United States to Green Island in the bay of St. Lawrence. When the party arrived there the inhabitants would not allow them to dry fish on shore. They then went to the Straits of Belle Isle, where they proceeded to dry their fish, the inhabitants being friendly. On the death of Mr. Potter in 1794, the property fell to his three sons, George, Joseph and Nathan, all active, energetic men, who added to the mill and store business that of ship and boat building.

(VI) Capt. George Potter, son of George, born Feb. 10, 1757, in Hopkinton, married April 20, 1780, Mary, daughter of Benjamin Stillman, and their children were: Nancy, born March 12, 1781; George, born April 17, 1783; Benjamin, born June 10, 1785 (all in Westerly); Mary, born July 21, 1787; Ephraim, born May 30, 1789; Sally, born Aug. 11, 1792; John, born in 1795; Content, born Aug. 9, 1797; and Charles, born Sept. 7, 1799. Capt. George Potter, as stated in the foregoing, on the death of his father, with his brothers, came into possession of the property and business of their father and added to it that of ship and boat building. Capt. Potter was also engaged in codfishing. His death occurred in 1801.

(VI) Joseph Potter, son of George, born Feb. 6, 1759, in Hopkinton, R. I., married April 7, 1784, Phebe Wells, daughter of Thomas and Sarah (Thompson) Wells, and their children were: Thomas Wells, born Jan. 26, 1785; Joseph, born Aug. 4, 1787; Henry, born March 12, 1790; Robert

T., born July 31, 1794; and William, born May 8, 1800, the three last named born at Potter Hill.

Joseph Potter began mercantile business in 1786, and on the death of his father in 1794, along with his brothers, Capt. George and Nathan, came into possession of the property and business of the father outlined in the foregoing, and finally the business all fell into his hands. In 1792 he built the house on the hill, and a store attached to the west end of the residence. Mr. Potter became a successful merchant. For a number of years he was engaged in foreign trade, and sent vessels to the West Indies and to Spain. In 1810 he began the first manufacture of cotton in the town of Westerly. His factory, built in 1812, cost $9,000. In company, particularly with his brother Nathan, he built boats for the Green Island fishery. These brothers also constructed sloops, schooners, and at one time a ship, framing them at Potter Hill and putting them together at Westerly. During the War of 1812 they built the sloop-rigged gunboats No. 91 and No. 92, under the superintendence of Capt. Phipps. Mr. Potter was a member of the old Sabatarian Church. He was noted for his industry, integrity, generosity and piety. He died Dec. 14, 1822, his five sons, all men of character, surviving him.

(VI) Col. Nathan Potter, son of George, born May 31, 1769, married Lucy Rogers, daughter of Ezekiel and Hannah, and their children, all born at Potter Hill, were: Hannah, born Jan. 29, 1793; Susan, born March 5, 1795; Cynthia, born Feb. 16, 1797; Amelia, born April 4, 1799; Nathan, born July 12, 1801; David Rogers, born Jan. 3, 1804; Elisha, born Feb. 12, 1806; Lucy A., born Aug. 17, 1808; Albert, born June 12, 1811; and Ezra, born April 14, 1814.

Col. Nathan Potter, as is set forth fully in the foregoing reference to his brothers, Capt. George and Joseph, was identified with them in the extensive business established by their father. Col. Potter died Aug. 25, 1825.

(VII) Thomas Wells Potter, son of Joseph, born Jan. 26, 1785, married Mary Cottrell, born in 1793, daughter of Lebeus and Mary, and their children, all born at Potter Hill, were: Maria L., born March 15, 1815; Harriet, born Oct. 1, 1816; Thomas, born Aug. 16, 1828; and Ann E., born July 1, 1831. The father of these children died July 10, 1854, and his widow passed away in 1860.

(VII) Joseph Potter (2), son of Joseph, born Aug. 4, 1787, married Oct. 28, 1813, Mary, daughter of Peleg and Elizabeth (Wells) Babcock, and their children were: Julia, born Jan. 9, 1815; George, born Jan. 12, 1823; and Lucy, born Nov. 11, 1829.

(VII) Col. Henry Potter, son of Joseph, born March 12, 1790, at Potter Hill, R. I., married Nov. 17, 1812, Anne Babcock, daughter of Deacon Daniel Babcock, and their children were: William H., born Aug. 26, 1816; and Phebe Ann, born in 1823.

(VII) Robert Thompson Potter, son of Joseph, born July 31, 1794, at Potter Hill, R. I., married Dec. 6, 1821, Mary Palmer, born in 1803, on Pendleton Hill in North Stonington, Conn., daughter of Luther and Sally (Kenyon) Palmer, and their only child was Joseph Henry Potter, born Oct. 20, 1823, now living retired in Westerly, R. I., and mentioned below.

(VII) William Potter, son of Joseph, born May 8, 1800, at Potter Hill, R. I., married Dec. 24, 1826, Susan Prosser, born in 1804, daughter of John and Ruth, and their children were: William, born Aug. 1, 1829, married Martha Gavitt; Julia, born April 16, 1828, married William A. Langworthy; Susan J., born July 17, 1831, married R. H. Langworthy; and Thomas Wells, born Aug. 13, 1836.

It is stated in the foregoing that these five brothers of the seventh generation, sons of Joseph Potter, an account of whose families is just given, were men of character. They came into possession of the old Potter business which continued in the family until in 1843, when the mills and privileges were sold to Edwin and Horace Babcock.

Of these brothers Thomas Wells, the eldest, was prepared for mercantile life, and with this object in view went to New York, and had just become fairly established in business, when, owing to the feeble health of his father, he returned to Westerly. In 1814 the business of Joseph Potter & Sons was disposed of, and continued under the name of Thomas W. and Joseph Potter, who continued it until 1843, when they disposed of their manufacturing interests and retired from active business. In the meantime they had enlarged their mills and greatly increased their business. Thomas W. Potter was an active, energetic business man and an influential and prominent citizen. He was one of the incorporators of the Phenix Bank. In 1815 he represented his town in the State Assembly. He was enterprising and progressive and measures that he was instrumental in instituting and which his brother carried to completion, were beneficial to many who were beyond the limits of the village community. His death occurred at Westerly July 10, 1854.

Joseph Potter, the next younger brother, lived to his ninety-third year, his death occurring March 4, 1880, and he was then thought to have been the oldest living inhabitant of the town, for he had lived, with the exception of some time on the water in his business, his ninety-two and more years of his life in the town. He was also one of the best known citizens of Westerly, and as well one of the town's leading business men and prominent citizens. He was active in the business pursuits of his father and grandfather as narrated in the foregoing until his retirement in 1843. He continued to reside at Potter Hill occupying his time in looking after his land, his investments and the well-being of the people around him, for during his lifetime he gave freely his advice, his services, his kind words of encouragement, as well as assistance, to those about him. He even took great interest in what concerned the pecuniary, social and religious welfare of the community and especially the First Seventh Day Baptist Church of Hopkinton, of which he was a member for nearly seventy-five years, and of which he was treasurer for some thirty-six years, rarely absenting himself from a business meeting until the infirmities of age compelled it.

During the War of 1812 at the time when the town of Stonington, Conn., was bombarded by the British, Mr. Potter was captain of a company of militia stationed at Latteryville to prevent the enemy coming up the Pawcatuck river. For a time Capt. Potter was one of the judges of his county and it is believed did much to introduce reforms in the judiciary system of Rhode Island. He was long a director of the Phenix Bank and came regularly to its meetings to the last of his days. His extraordinary mental clearness continued until ten or twelve days before his death. For eight years Capt. Potter represented his town in the General Assembly of Rhode Island, serving in 1828 and 1829, and 1842 and 1850 in the House, and from 1843 to 1846 in the Senate.

Col. Henry Potter, the third brother, who had been instructed in the process of cotton manufacture, superintended the erection of the cotton mill during the War of 1812. He was active in military affairs, and used a portion of the factory building as a sort of military school for army drill. He was promoted to adjutant of the Rhode Island Regiment under Col. Barber. He commanded a battalion which was called out for service at the battle of Stonington. He was subsequently promoted to lieutenant-colonel. He removed to Waterford, Conn., in 1820, where he resided most of his life, dying at Mystic, Conn., in 1864. His son, Hon. William H. Potter, was a prominent man in Connecticut, serving from Groton in both branches of the Connecticut Assembly.

Robert T. Potter, another of the sons of Joseph, was a noble Christian man, loved and respected by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. His business was always that of a manufacturer. He and his wife were members of the First Hopkinton Seventh Day Baptist Church. Mr. Potter died in comparatively early life at thirty-four years of age, leaving but one child, a son, Joseph H. Potter. His death resulted from typhoid fever contracted in caring for others during an epidemic of that disease. He was a strong and forceful character, and was one of the best known of his family.

William Potter, the youngest son of Joseph, died at Potter Hill, May 12, 1880. He, too, was a man of character and an active and substantial business man and useful citizen. He was superintendent of the mills for E. & H. Babcock until 1859, and he made his home at Potter Hill, where he died.

(VIII) Joseph Henry Potter, son of Robert T., born Oct. 20, 1823, at Potter Hill, R. I., married Sept. 14, 1847, Rhoda Ann Langworthy, born Dec. 5, 1825, daughter of Robert and Lois (Sisson) Langworthy, and their children were: Miss Amelia, born Jan. 21, 1851, is at home; Alice, born Jan. 21, 1851, died in infancy; and Henry Robert, born July 25, 1857, died when nearly twelve years old. The first two were born in Stonington, Conn., and the last named in Westerly, Rhode Island.

Joseph H. Potter was but four years of age when he was deprived of his father's care. When thirteen years old he was sent by his guardian to the old Bacon Academy, at Colchester, Conn., then one of the best schools in the country, wherein many prominent men received their early schooling. Later on he entered the mills of the Potters at Potter Hill, and learned the business of manufacturing. Desiring still further to pursue his studies he went to the village of Westerly, and was under the tuition of Solomon Carpenter and his wife, who taught in the old academy on Union street. During his second year in this school, in 1842, he with others, laid aside for a time, their books and joined those who aided in suppressing the "Dorr rebellion." He next turned his attention in the direction of mechanics, learning the machinist's trade with the firm of J. P. Stillman & Co., of Westerly. In the meantime, the Potter Mills having been sold, including his interests, he abandoned that line of industry, and, associated with others, engaged in the foundry business under the firm name of Langworthy, Potter & Co. For this purpose they built, in 1846, the property known as the old iron foundry, which is located on the west side of the river in Westerly, and is now the property of Messrs. C. B. Cottrell & Sons. The firm's first work was the manufacturing of stoves and plows. Mr. Potter was agent for the concern for some two years. He then sold his interests to his partners. He purchased, in 1850, a half interest in the drug business of Henry W. Stillman, and four years later became the sole proprietor of the concern. On July 1, 1855, E. G. Champlin was admitted a partner in the business. They then built a drug store on Main street which at the time was considered the finest store, in that line, in Washington county. Here they conducted an extensive drug and patent medicine business. They sent their goods by team to various parts of the country, supplying country stores. A branch store was conducted at Mystic Bridge, Conn., for some years, under the firm name of Potter & Spicer. In 1864 Mr. Potter disposed of his interests in the Westerly store to Messrs. E. G. Champlin & Co., retaining his interest in the Mystic Bridge store. M. J. Denison Spicer having about this time purchased the Champlin interest at Mystic Bridge, the latter business was carried on by the firm of Potter & Spicer. Not long thereafter Mr. Potter started another store in this same business at Stonington, Conn., having associated with him in the enterprise B. F. Palmer, the business being conducted under the firm name of J. H. Potter & Co. Mr. Potter disposed of his interest in the store at Mystic Bridge in 1865, and in the Stonington store in 1867.

Along with others Mr. Potter built on High street what is now known as the Hammond estate property, and in the south store room of the building engaged in the ready-made clothing and custom tailoring business. Some five years later he, in the meantime having made an addition to the Hammond Block, removed to the middle store room therein, and continued in this line of business, and at the same stand until in 1883, when he sold the business to H. L. Miner. During his seventeen years in the drug business, and fourteen in the clothing business, by good management in their conduct and the energy and industry he put into the enterprises, Mr. Potter prospered and met with unusual success. He has long been one of the substantial men and useful citizens of his community in which he has sustained the high reputation of the old Potter family.

For many years Mr. Potter has been identified with the financial institutions of Westerly. He was a director in the Washington National Bank, and for thirty and more years was a trustee of the Westerly Savings Bank. In their early life both he and his wife were identified with the First Hopkinton Seventh Day Baptist Church. After he became permanently located at Westerly they became connected with the Pawcatuck Seventh Day Baptist Church of Westerly. Mrs. Potter died Feb. 21, 1885.

For a number of years it has been the custom of Mr. Potter to spend his winters in the South, his constant companion being his only daughter, Miss Amelia, whose devotion and interest in her father's comfort, like his pleasure therefrom, is beautiful to witness. He has built a home at Daytona, Fla., and has taken a prominent part in municipal affairs in that city, having served as president of the city council and also as member of that body.

FREDERICK J. CRANDALL, a well known dairyman in Westerly, R. I., is descended from one of the oldest families of the State, early records of which are contained in this work.

Joseph Crandall, grandfather of Fred J., was a son of James Kenyon Crandall, and a grandson of Elijah Crandall. He was a farmer all his life in Hopkinton, R. I. He married Nancy, daughter of Ethan Lewis, of Hopkinton, and they had a family of nine boys and three girls, of whom Benjamin, James H. and Henry are still (1906) living.

James H. Crandall, son of Joseph and father of Fred J., was born Dec. 16, 1826, in Hopkinton, and was there educated. His entire life has been devoted to farming, which he has carried on in Charlestown and Hopkinton, R. I. On Feb. 29, 1852, he was married, in Charlestown, R. I., to Louisa Stannard Burdick, who was born March 10, 1824, and who died March 2, 1901. They became the parents of four children: Harriet Ella, born March 21, 1853, married Charles Edwin Burdick; Georgia Anna, born Sept. 17, 1854, married Simon Peter Nichols; Frederick James, born April 3, 1857; and Eyin Burnside, born June 16, 1862, died at the age of thirty-eight years.

Frederick J. Crandall, son of James H., was born April 3, 1857, in Charlestown, R. I. Most of his boyhood days were passed in Hopkinton, and he remained on the home farm until he was of age. He then engaged in farming for himself for a year on the old homestead, and afterward for four years lived on the farm in Charlestown, subsequently moving to the John Pendleton farm, on the Potter Hill road, in Westerly. A short time later he built his present home near the White School House. Since locating in Westerly he has engaged in dairy farming.

On Oct. 22, 1878, Mr. Crandall married Emma Frances, daughter of Aaron and Delilah Cole (Bishop) Kenyon, of Hopkinton, and they have had two children: Delilah Louise, who married Frank R. Randall, of Stonington, Conn., and has two children, Addie Emma and Fannie Hunting; and Frederick Kenyon. Mr. Crandall is a Prohibitionist in his political belief, and is active in all movements for the welfare of his town.

PECKHAM (Providence County families). The Peckhams of Rhode Island are descended from an ancient English family, the first member presented to history being John de Peckham, who appears as early as 1191. The American ancestors are associated with the founding of the colony and the commonwealth, being traced back to 1638. Prior to 1700 they were among the large land owners of Rhode Island, figuring in the Petaquamscot purchase of 1660, the Westerly purchase of 1661, and the East Greenwich purchase of 1677. Their holdings were in Southern Rhode Island and even extended into Massachusetts, their descendants, passing into the old Bay State, Eastern Connecticut and Central New York, but very many of them locating in Newport and Providence counties, R. I. Not a few of them made their impress as legislators, lawyers and judges, and many were prominent as business men and manufacturers. In the class last named may be mentioned Thomas C. Peckham (deceased), Leander W. Peckham and Luther A. Peckham, all identified with the woolen industries of the State. Their genealogy is presented in detail below.

(I) John Peckham, with William Freeborn, John Coggeshall and others, appears by the records of Newport, R. I., to have had lands allotted to him as among the first settlers of the island of Aquidneck, in 1638, and on May 20th his name is in the list of those who were admitted inhabitants of the burg. In 1641 Mr. Peckham was admitted a freeman; in 1648 he appears as one of the ten male members of the First Baptist Church of Newport. He was married (first) to Mary Clarke and (second) to Eleanor, whose surname is unknown. His children (probably by the first marriage) were John, Thomas and William, and by the second union: Rebecca, Stephen, James, Clement, Deborah, Phebe, Elizabeth, Susannah and Sarah.

(II) Thomas Peckham was a weaver of Newport. He was married twice but the name of his first wife is unknown. His second wife was Hannah, daughter of William Weeden and widow of William Clarke. In 1677 he was one of the original proprietors of East Greenwich, R. I.; was deputy of the General Court in 1708, and he died in the following year. The only child of the first marriage was Philip, born Oct. 27, 1680. The children of the second union were: Daniel, born in 1692; Thomas, Aug. 19, 1693; Uriah, Nov. 20, 1697; a son (unnamed), born in 1700; Hannah, 1701; Sarah, Sept. 29, 1703; and James, Jan. 24, 1707.

(III) Daniel Peckham, born in 1692, married, Feb. 11, 1720, Mary, born May 21, 1700, daughter of William and Hannah Ross, and they lived in Westerly, R. I., where their descendants are numerous. Mr. Peckham was admitted a freeman of Newport, May 5, 1713, and of Westerly, in October, 1733. Their children were: Hannah, born Oct. 23, 1720; Mary, Feb. 22, 1722; Daniel, Sept. 25, 1726; Sarah, Aug. 31, 1729; Abel, Feb. 7, 1732; James, Nov. 14, 1736; and Ann, Sept. 20, 1742.

(IV) Daniel Peckham (2), son of Daniel, born Sept. 25, 1726, married Mary, and resided in Charlestown, R. I. It is said that Mr. Peckham lived to upwards of 100 years, and that he was a pensioner for service in the Revolutionary war. His children were: Mary, born Dec. 19, 1750; Abigail, April 26, 1752; Daniel, Oct. 25, 1754; and Mary, Sept. 9, 1756.

(V) Daniel Peckham (3), son of Daniel (2), born Oct. 25, 1754, married Avis Rogers.

(VI) Judge Samuel Peckham, son of Daniel (3), lived near Charlestown, R. I., where he cultivated a farm and engaged in his trade as a cooper. He married Hannah Stanton, also of Washington county, and to this union were born eleven children.

(VII) Daniel Peckham, the youngest of the eleven children of Samuel and Hannah (Stanton) Peckham, was born Sept. 12, 1796, and married (first) Olive (born Nov. 3, 1804), daughter of Pardon Kenyon, of Hopkinton, Washington county, R. I., and (second) Betsey M. Clarke, born April 26, 1812, daughter of Edward Clarke, of Voluntown, Conn. The children by the first marriage were: Pardon S., born Oct. 2, 1821; Samuel, born March 6, 1828, who had four children, Alice (married Thomas Brightman), Fred, Genevieve and one who died in early infancy; Daniel, Sept. 11, 1832; Olive Ann Frances, Jan. 19, 1834; Thomas Clarke, Dec. 21, 1836, and John Gorton, Nov. 13, 1840. By his second marriage Daniel Peckham had this issue: Leander Warren, born April 26, 1846, and Luther Andrew, Oct. 4, 1848. Thomas C., by the first marriage, and Leander W. and Luther A. Peckham, by the second union, became the prominent woolen manufacturers of Providence county, whose biographies follow.

(VIII) THOMAS C. PECKHAM (deceased), son of Daniel and Olive (Kenyon) Peckham, was largely identified with the manufacturing interests of Coventry, Kent Co., R. I., as well as with its general growth and development. His native town was Westerly, R. I., where he was born Dec. 21, 1836. At the age of fifteen he removed to Coventry Center, after which, until within a few years of his death, his life was one of unceasing and productive industry. He had already enjoyed a profitable training in the country schools, on farms and in saw mills, and was sturdy, self-reliant and independent. In 1851, upon his removal to Coventry Center, he entered the employ of his oldest brother, who was proprietor of a woolen yarn mill, and was assigned to the pickers and cards, receiving for his services seven dollars per month and his board. Two years later he was placed in charge of the carding room, and in 1861 his industry was rewarded by a quarter interest in the business. After a brief partnership he retired, purchased a cotton mill at Spring Lake, in the same town, converted it into a woolen mill, and, establishing the firm of T. C. Peckham & Co., continued the manufacture of yarns. He installed four sets of machinery, made many improvements in the entire property, and formed the nucleus of one of the most important manufacturing combinations in Rhode Island. In 1865 was organized the Peckham Manufacturing Company, its stockholders being Thomas C. Peckham, Pardon S. Peckham, and the firm of Hartwell, Richards & Co., of Providence. Three mills were operated—two at Coventry Center and one at Spring Lake, the latter being purchased by Pardon S. Peckham, in 1870, who during that year withdrew from the corporation. Thomas C. Peckham, who had previously acted as its agent, now assumed the management of the mills at Coventry Center, which manufactured Germantown and stocking yarns, fine underwear and tweeds. Mr. Peckham became the president of the corporation, and Hartwell, Richards & Co. its agents. The head of the business not only brought the products of the mills to the highest standard of excellence, and erected commodious and well-equipped stores and numerous other buildings for the comfort of the employees, but infused the spirit of progress into the little hamlet which had become the headquarters of the great industry. Through his influence a postoffice was established, as also a station on the New York & New England Railroad. Besides being president and active superintendent of the Coventry Center mills, Mr. Peckham was secretary and treasurer of the Oneco (Conn.) Manufacturing Company.

Mr. Peckham was an earnest Republican, a strong Protectionist, and a delegate to the national convention which convened in Chicago in 1884. In 1875, 1876 and 1877 he had represented his town in the Lower House of the State Legislature, and had served in the Senate in 1882, 1883 and 1884, filling among other positions that of chairman of the committee on Accounts and Claims. Locally he was actively interested in all public measures; was a member of the town council, president of the board of assessors and (for fifteen years) a school trustee. He was also a Mason of rank and wide influence.

Some two years before his death the Peckham Manufacturing Company was sold to B. B. & R. Knight, cotton manufacturers, and soon afterward Mr. Peckham removed his family to Providence, where he devoted himself solely to the Oneco (Conn.) Manufacturing Company. He was president and for several years vice-president of the Pawtuxet Valley Agricultural Association; also a member and president of the Pomham Club of Providence. When Thomas C. Peckham died, Oct. 5, 1897, he was acknowledged to be among the most prominent manufacturers of woolen goods in New England. Further he was a genial, whole-souled, unpretentious man, who left a host of friends throughout Pawtuxet Valley to mourn his decease.

On March 7, 1858, Thomas C. Peckham married Mary V., daughter of Daniel and Hannah H. (Gardner) Reynolds, of Washington village, and granddaughter of John G. Reynolds, of East Greenwich. Their children, with the dates of their birth, were as follows: Daniel W., Jan. 26, 1859 (died April 18, 1881); Annie F. (wife of Louis L. Angell), July 23, 1860; Mary E. (Mrs. Sylvester L. Tillinghast), June 15, 1862 (died April 9, 1883); Grace G. (Mrs. Frank W. Tillinghast), March 27, 1864; Hattie V., Dec. 24, 1865; Amy G. (married Jan. 28, 1907, Walter F. Chapman), Nov. 14, 1868; Susie E., March 30, 1870 (died Oct. 23, 1881); Isabelle B., March 21, 1871; Bertha V., Aug. 13, 1872 (died Oct. 16, 1872); Bertha E., March 3, 1874 (died Oct. 3, 1874); and Charles Herbert, Dec. 29, 1875.

(VIII) LEANDER W. PECKHAM, son of Daniel and Betsey (Clarke) Peckham, was born in Westerly, R. I., April 26, 1846. After attending the district schools of Coventry Center, he spent the years 1866 and 1867 at the Bryant & Stratton Business College in Providence. He then entered the mills of the Peckham Manufacturing Company, Coventry Center, then owned and operated by his two half brothers, Pardon S. and Thomas C. After a short term of service as overseer, in the spring of 1868 he became superintendent of the Spring Lake mill, owned by the same company, in which position he continued for about three years. In 1871 he removed to Simmonsville, now Thornton, taking charge of the mill there owned by his brother, John G. Peckham. He retained the position for two years, when he leased the plant, known as the Brown Mill, succeeding his brother as its proprietor, and continuing to operate it for nearly five years. In 1879, after the termination of the lease, he located in North Providence as superintendent of the Graystone Mill. This he operated for three years, and in 1882 returned to Coventry Center to assume the superintendency of the Peckham Manufacturing Co. In 1883 he became superintendent of a mill owned by a Mr. Tyler, at Washington, Kent county, and thus continued until the spring of 1885.

Up to this period in his career Mr. Peckham had served others faithfully and ably, accumulating during these many years a fund of experience which was to prove a substantial capital to him in his career of business independence. In the spring of 1885 he settled at Thornton and leased of Charles Fletcher a mill known as the Bag Mill, operating it until June, 1897, when he purchased the property known as the Morgan Mill (formerly a portion of the Sprague properties). Here he has since conducted the industry, which consists of the processing of wool, noils and waste. For fifteen years the mills have been running night and day. About forty-five men are now employed, twenty-five in the day and twenty in the night shift. His plant is considered one of the most complete in the locality, and among other evidences of his prosperity is his beautiful home located on Morgan avenue.

Having passed the age of three-score years, Mr. Peckham may review the career which he has himself fashioned with pardonable pride. His strict temperance, his honesty, his integrity, his untiring willingness to work and his laudable ambition to succeed by straightforward labor, have made him one of the foremost representatives of his native State. When to these qualities is added his special ability in the handling of men, it is not difficult to account for Mr. Peckham's pronounced success in his chosen field.

Mr. Peckham has been a stanch Republican and a stalwart Protectionist, but although he has been a member of the town council for six terms, he has never aspired to further political preferment. On Nov. 27, 1879, Mr. Peckham was united in marriage to Josephine A. Bennett, daughter of Israel Bennett, of Johnston, Rhode Island.

(VIII) LUTHER A. PECKHAM, son of Daniel and Betsey (Clarke) Peckham, was born in West-erly, R. I., Oct. 4, 1848. His father was a ship carpenter by trade, but for some years was engaged in farming and in operating a sawmill. In 1854, when about six years of age, the boy was taken by his parents to Coventry Center, where for four years he attended the township schools, when he entered the woolen mill of his half brother, Pardon Peckham. At sixteen he commenced to learn the trade of machinist, which he thoroughly mastered in three years, and which greatly assisted him in reaching a high position as mill operator, superintendent and proprietor. During the succeeding three years he was employed, chiefly as a machinist, in Coventry Center, Westerly, Spring Lake and Peeptoad (now Anthony). He finally returned to Pardon Peckham's mill, at Coventry Center, and became a skillful carder and spinner, being employed in the various mills of that place until 1881. In that year he was engaged by Charles Fletcher, to reconstruct and install a lot of machinery, and his mechanical skill proved so invaluable to his employer that at the conclusion of this special work he was induced to remain, and before long given an interest in the business. He superintended the carding, washing, picking and combing of the wool, having under him at first some fifteen hands; but under his energetic and skillful management the department so developed that one hundred people were employed in it. Originally yarn only was produced, but later other mills were built and worsteds were added to the output of the plant. In this expansion of the business Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Peckham worked most harmoniously, the latter's combined knowledge of mechanics, machinery and the manufacturing processes making his services almost indispensable. It is said that Mr. Fletcher had such confidence in his superintendent's abilities that, it mattered not what he wished done, he did not ask him if he could do it, but simply told him to go ahead and do it. Shortly before 1891 Mr. Fletcher purchased the old worsted mills at Fulton, N. Y., formerly operated by the Chapins, and Mr. Peckham transformed them into a yarn and weaving mill. The French system was used and the manufactory handled over 5,000,000 pounds of wool, making it the largest mill of the kind in the United States. Mr. Peckham was superintendent of both the spinning department and the electric plant. He was associated in the management of the mill with John Neary and Arthur Swartz, and witnessed the business so expand that the number of employes increased from 800 to 1,350. In 1896 the three gentlemen named purchased the plant from Mr. Fletcher, and the establishment became known as the Fulton Worsted Mills. They were sold to the American Woolen Company, in 1899, and for one year Mr. Peckham remained with the new proprietors as superintendent of their yarn department. In 1900 he removed to Providence and retired from business, buying property at the corner of Broad street and Norwood avenue, Edgewood, rebuilding the residence and transforming the place into one of the most attractive homesteads in that portion of the city.

Mr. Peckham attributes his present standing, as one of the leading manufacturers of woolen goods and master mechanics in connection with that industry, simply to the genius of hard work, although his friends and admirers have little doubt of his natural talents as well. His great mechanical and executive abilities are shown both by the different manufacturing enterprises which he has assisted to create and develop, and by the numerous patents which he has taken out and introduced. Perhaps the most notable of the latter are his card feed and wool washer. The washer is manufactured at Fulton and Oswego, N. Y., and has come into general use among the Eastern woolen mills, for the very good reason (as given by Mr. Peckham) that it is "a wool washer which washes." In March, 1906, Mr. Peckham was elected commodore of the Rhode Island Club, an honor much esteemed.

Luther A. Peckham was married July 26, 1876, to Georgianna Tew, daughter of James and Phebe Ann (Church) Tew, and granddaughter of Joseph Church and Nancy Collins (née Jacques), a most estimable woman, who traces her ancestry to two of the old and honored families of Rhode Island.

HENRY W. PARTELOW, one of the best-known merchants of Wakefield, R. I., was born in Griswold, Conn., March 17, 1847. His father, Philetus Partelow, was born in Voluntown, Conn., Jan. 1, 1807, was a mason, builder and contractor, and died Dec. 8, 1863. He married Feb. 14, 1830, Rebecca Marilla Fish, who was born Jan. 5, 1808, daughter of Levi Fish, and died Feb. 7, 1899. They had children: Lucy, born Jan. 13, 1831, married James Worthley, and died Jan. 12, 1876; Elizabeth, born Jan. 5, 1833, married Matthew N. Chappell, by whom she had two children, Fred (who died young) and William H. H., and died in March, 1905; Kneeland Philetus was born May 4, 1835; Jane R., born Jan. 9, 1838, died Sept. 22, 1871; Joanna, born Feb. 6, 1841, died Nov. 12, 1863; George R., born March 8, 1843, died May 23, 1843; Henry W. was born March 17, 1847. At the time of her death the mother of the family was the oldest member of the Wakefield Baptist Church.

KNEELAND P. PARTELOW, was born in Griswold, Conn., May 4, 1835, and in 1850 removed to South Kingstown with his parents, and learned the mason's trade with his father. On Dec. 8, 1863, the father died, and Kneeland P. Partelow soon established a business for himself, later becoming associated with his brother, Henry W. This partnership lasted until 1879, when Henry W. closed his interests, Kneeland P. continuing alone until 1888. In that year George H. Bullock, who had been in Mr. Partelow's employ for eleven years, was taken into partnership, and four years later bought Mr. Partelow out. For a number of years following

Mr. Partelow held a government position as inspector of constructions at the Block Island breakwater, and later at the breakwater at Seaconnet.

During his long period of work as a mason and contractor in South Kingstown Mr. Partelow built nearly all of the stone buildings in the town, notably the Episcopal churches at Wakefield and at Narragansett Pier, and the Congregational church at Peace Dale; the "Old Castle" and tower at the Pier, "Druid's Dream," and the Casino, whose arch was said to be the largest single arch in the State; the bridges on the Narragansett Pier railroad, the Grand Army hall, the mill at Wakefield, the new mill at Peace Dale, the "Hazard Memorial" building, and the town hall.

On Nov. 31, 1858, Mr. Partelow married Alice, daughter of the late Thomas A. and Hannah (Sweet) Sheldon. She died Dec. 14, 1905. They had these children: Esther, who married George C. Sherman; Jennie; Clifton P., a resident of Wakefield, who married Lillian Potter; and Lucy Ann.

Mr. Partelow was a member of the Narragansett Library Association, and was a charter member and the first chancellor commander of the old Knights of Pythias Lodge in Wakefield. He was quiet in his tastes, a good neighbor and a model citizen, and was ever ready to respond to an appeal to his charitable impulses. He died Dec. 23, 1900.

Henry W. Partelow was born in Griswold, Conn., and came to Wakefield with his parents in 1850. He attended the public schools of Wakefield and East Greenwich Academy, learning the mason's trade at the same time as his brother Kneeland. In 1879 he became a partner with J. C. Tucker in the general mercantile business at Narragansett Pier and at the "Branch," in Wakefield, and in 1882 sold his interests in the same to Mr. Tucker and built his present store on Columbia Corner, in Wakefield, embarking in a general mercantile business there. For two years he ran a market in the Casino building at Narragansett Pier, and in 1902 built a building at the Pier and established a general store, which he gave to his son in the fall of 1904. Mr. Partelow has been district assessor for seventeen years, and has also served on the town council. He is a charter member of Columbia Lodge, I. O. O. F., a member of Uncas Encampment, and a member of the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island.

On Oct. 15, 1873, Mr. Partelow was married, by Rev. George Harris, to Josephine A. Rhodes, who was born Aug. 19, 1850, daughter of George A. Rhodes, of Providence, R. I. The following children were born to the union: Hope Anthony, born Oct. 14, 1874, married June 14, 1894, Frank Clark, and died Feb. 18, 1896, leaving one child, Hope Rhodes, born June 10, 1895; Henry Louis, born July 21, 1877, married Sept. 24, 1900, Nellie Frances Phinney, and they are the parents of one child, Edward Kneeland, born June 12, 1902; George Rhodes, born Oct. 4, 1881, married Sept. 25, 1904, Mattie Clarke, daughter of Elmer E. Clarke, of Westerly, R. I., and she died in 1905, leaving a son, George E.; Dexter Early was born March 9, 1883, and Josephine Rebecca, July 18, 1887. Mr. Partelow is very well known in Wakefield, and is highly esteemed for his many admirable traits of character. He is a member of the Wakefield Baptist Church, and Mrs. Partelow of the Peace Dale Congregational Church.

LYMAN ARNOLD BUDLONG is a native son of Rhode Island, a representative of the seventh generation of his family in America, and a successful man of business in a line in which several of the name have become known throughout the country. Half a century ago he settled in Cook county, Ill., where as one of the most extensive and scientific market gardeners in the Middle West he has developed an enterprise similar to, if not exceeding in scope and purpose, that established by his brother, Mr. James A. Budlong, near the old family home in Rhode Island. His executive ability, the mechanical ingenuity he has displayed in the invention of various devices which have almost revolutionized the conduct of his business, his progressive disposition, and his almost unique career, have shown him to be a man of uncommon resource and the possessor of qualities which have proved very useful in his busy life.

Mr. Budlong was born in the town of Cranston, R. I., Dec. 22, 1829. As previously intimated he is a descendant in the seventh generation from Francis Budlong, the immigrant ancestor of the family in America, who early came to this country and settled in Rhode Island, where in 1669 he married Mrs. Rebecca (Lippitt) Howard, of the town of Warwick, R. I. They had children, but during King Philip's war Francis Budlong and all his family, save one, were massacred—a boy named John, three or four years old, having been spared. This little one was given a home in the family of Mr. John Lippitt, his uncle, by whom he was reared, and from him have descended the numerous Budlongs now widely scattered throughout the country. Tradition asserts that they are of French origin, probably of Huguenot stock, as a little previous to their appearance in America a great number of Huguenots had fled from France to our shores to seek a place where they could exercise, without hindrance, the privilege of free conscience. Details of the earlier generations will be found on pages 143 and 421.

The paternal grandfather and great-grandfather of Lyman A. Budlong, both named Samuel, gallantly served in the Continental army during the war for independence, the former as a drummer boy and the latter as a private soldier. Mr. Budlong's father, Joseph Stone Budlong, born March 1, 1804, married Mary Ann Arnold, who was born April 20, 1804, and they passed their lives in their native State, Rhode Island. The father died March 14, 1887, and the mother Jan. 5, 1894. On his mother's side, also, Mr. Budlong is of ancient Rhode Island lineage, she having been a descendant in the seventh generation from William Arnold, a native of Cheselbourne, England, who settled in Providence Plantations in the early Colonial days. Her parents were Ephraim and Waity (Warner) Arnold, and her paternal grandparents Simon and Hannah (Chapman) Arnold. Ten children were born to Joseph S. and Mary Ann (Arnold) Budlong, of whom nine grew to maturity and reared families, viz.: James Arnold is deceased; Albert died in childhood; William Henry is a resident of Providence, R. I.; Lyman Arnold is mentioned below; Mary Elizabeth became the wife of William W. Johnston, of Washington, Vt., and died in 1862; Catherine married Daniel F. Burlingame, of Cranston, R. I.; Waity Warner married William Tyler, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Abbie Stone is the widow of Horace Bates, of Bellingham, Mass.; Joseph Albert, an extensive florist of Chicago, Ill., is deceased; Simeon, who resided in Cumberland, R. I., is deceased.

Lyman A. Budlong attended the public schools of his native town, and later a seminary, where he pursued the higher branches. By the time he was eighteen he was competent to teach, and for five years he was successfully engaged as a teacher during the winter months, meantime devoting the rest of the year to farm labor. His first school lasted for a term of four months, and his salary was twelve dollars per month, all of which he gave to his father. After attaining his majority he attended a few terms of school to round out his education, making him highly proficient in the range of his studies, and it is to the thoroughness of his educational training that he owes in large measure his success in life. It is a quality characteristic of everything he does. It was his first ambition to enter professional life, and with that end in view he prepared to enter Brown University. But he cultivated another taste, and it is questionable if he could have attained greater success in any field. From his youth he took an interest in plant culture—no idle interest, but that of a devoted student. Thus he early developed a taste for what has proved to be upon it he was unusually well prepared from a scientific as well as a practical standpoint. During all the years of his active connection with the business he never spared himself, learning the best in the old methods by experiment and study, and out of his own experience developing new methods, many of which have come into general use among gardeners.

be a promising location in Cook county, Ill., and with little capital, but boundless ambition and tireless energy, started in a modest way the business he has since followed. He had to lease land at first, and in order to eke out his income he taught a country school near his home during the winter of 1858-59, and during the two following winters taught in the neighboring county of DuPage. In the season he carried on gardening, taking his produce to the near-by Chicago market. His trade increased slowly at first, but ever steadily, though in the early days it gave no promise of attaining the immense proportions for which it is now famous.

In 1860 Mr. Budlong located on the nucleus of the estate he now occupies, land formerly belonging to the late Dr. Foster. He was the pioneer of the West in the pickle business, of which he made a specialty from the beginning, having started a plant almost immediately after he settled in the West. His first output was four hundred bushels. From that to the present annual product of the factory, over one hundred thousand bushels, is a long step in commercial progress. The business of growing vegetables has increased in even greater degree. An immense tract of the most fertile land, comprising a total of over 800 acres, is under the most scientific modern cultivation, devoted principally to the raising of onions, spinach and potatoes, all of the best varieties. To pack the crop of this vast acreage 200,000 crates, besides tubs and cases, are required. In its production all the most up-to-date contrivances are employed. The seed dropper for planting of onions, used exclusively on these farms, is Mr. Budlong's own invention. It is driven by horse-power, and plants the seed at a regular depth and in exact quantity, thus avoiding waste as well as saving labor—both considerations of great value in an enterprise of such magnitude. Another of his inventions is a hand cultivator which can be operated by women, and which does the work rapidly and perfectly. To expedite the fertilizing of the soil a number of tracks have been built all through the various farms, over which hundreds of carloads of manure are transported for convenient use. Many deep ditches, cut by the most approved machinery, thread the grounds, which, together with a thorough system of tiling, prepares the soil to yield the best of crops. The power for the different machinery is housed in a number of substantial buildings and supplied from engines of twenty-five horse-power, and over, the pumping and irrigation being a very important part of the work done on this vast property. The best drainage methods are in use, with appliances for carrying off the surplus water in wet seasons, when ordinary drainage is insufficient. There are four pumping stations, located on the farm so as to relieve the land of any surplus water—by pumping it off—that may accumulate from heavy rains, each having a capacity of five thousand gallons a minute.

Five immense warehouses, 125x250 feet in dimensions, and connected by a cable operating the various appliances for cleaning the seed, etc., are provided for storing the product, and there hundreds of crates of potatoes, onions and spinach await the demands of the market. In the nature of the business the vast output is constantly on the move, in and out. A complete ice plant is equipped for the manufacture of the best ice, and the cold storage plant is perfection itself. A large space is devoted to the washing and packing of the vegetables, in which work hundreds of women and girls are engaged. With all the labor-saving devices at command a force of 1,500 men, women and boys and girls is necessary during the months of June, July and August, special trains carrying the workers to and from the city, eight miles distant. The wages are good, from one to four dollars a day, and it is a characteristic feature of the business that that wages for each day's work are paid every night.

The whole area of this magnificent property presents a scene of constant activity throughout the planting, growing and harvesting months. Over seventy horses and mules are required in the operation of the field machines and other work not conveniently done by machine power. As far as the eye can reach there are busy laborers with their teams and machinery, under the able supervision of experienced foremen, and all under the general management of Mr. Budlong's son Joseph J. The L. A. Budlong Company was organized in 1900, Mr. Lyman A. Budlong being president; his son, Joseph J. Budlong, vice-president; and his son-in-law, H. H. Chester, secretary. The company has commodious and modern offices, with every convenience for the prompt discharge of business.

Mr. Lyman A. Budlong, after a half century of physical and mental activity probably unequalled in his field of enterprise, is now enjoying comparative freedom from business cares. But he has lost none of his old-time interest in the prosperity of the great industry which he founded and fostered to its remarkable development. He was a pioneer in the science of modern market gardening, both in its evolution and practical application. His name is a standard for the best in his line over a wide extent of territory, for his vast crops have become popular in many markets, his jobbing trade extending throughout the Northwest and even into Canada. A large part of the retail trade in Chicago is also supplied from the Budlong farms. The business as at present conducted, the highly cultivated condition of the gigantic estate, are the cultivated condition of the gigantic estate, is the umphant crown of success due to a creator of an enterprise which for magnitude, or as an exponent of modern scientific agriculture, is probably without a parallel. Beginning fifty-one years ago upon an humble scale, Mr. Budlong had less than forty tillable acres out of a tract of six hundred.

More than a hundred acres was a labyrinth of bog and quagmire, and the balance required the most careful drainage to become capable of tillage. Now every acre of the eight hundred included in this domain is under profitable cultivation, and the land reclaimed from the forest and prairie is a luxuriant garden of unsurpassed fertility. Mr. Budlong has proved himself a master indeed of a science which, with the increasing value of land, is becoming of more and more importance in the economy of the present day. In the promotion of his own interests he has done just as much for others engaged along similar lines, branching out into untried fields and experimenting along little known channels until he gained definite information of the greatest value to the trade generally. His faculty for attending to details, marked executive ability, and power of concentration to whatever he has in hand, have been very vital factors in his success. Moreover, in spite of the incessant cares attendant upon the conduct of a large business, he has retained a pleasant personality, which has won him many friends among those with whom he has had business or social relations. His humblest employe receives the same consideration that he would extend to a friend, and his intercourse with his fellowmen in every walk of life has always been pleasant and kindly. He is thoroughly well read upon questions of current interest, as well as in the line to which his chief energies have been devoted. All his life he has shown the rare combination of the qualities of student and practical man of business which have carried him to the pinnacle of success.

Mr. Budlong was originally a Democrat in politics, but since 1860 he has been an ardent Republican. He has been active in the civil administration of his adopted community and in the promotion of local improvements. Upon the organization of the village of Jefferson he was elected a member of the board of trustees, and has since served several times in that office; he was the first mayor of the village, and served as school director twenty-eight consecutive years, until the village was merged into the city of Chicago. He is a prominent Freemason, a charter member of Providence Lodge, No. 711, A. F. & A. M., of Jefferson, which he served many years as worshipful master; a member of Corinthian Chapter, R. A. M.; Apollo Commandery, K. T., and Oriental Consistory, of Chicago.

On Oct. 6, 1856, Mr. Budlong married Miss Louise L. Newton, of Norwich, Vt., who was born in Norwich, Jan. 1, 1833, daughter of George and Orella (Snow) Newton, also natives of Vermont, and granddaughter of Dr. Israel Newton, who served through the Revolutionary war. To George and Orella (Snow) Newton were born two sons and four daughters, as follows: Cyril C. (now deceased), who married Rebecca McConachie, by whom he had three children, Emily, George and Mary; Louise L., Mrs. Lyman A. Budlong; Lucy Amelia, widow of Mr. Lewis Wilson; Mary A., widow of Orlando Talcott; Ellen E., wife of W. N. Spring, of LeMars, Iowa; and George P., now deceased.

To Mr. and Mrs. Budlong were born five children, namely: (1) Mary L. became the wife of A. L. Jones, of Mokena, Ill., and to them were born three children: Helen L., wife of Paul A. Shares, of New Haven, Conn., who has one child, Pauline; Lyman B., who married Genevieve Lowell, of Chicago, and has two children, Albert L. and Helen L.; and Viola M. (2) Edward L. married Margaret Snow, of Rockford, Ill., and to them were born nine children, Edward H., Estelle M., Evelyn L., James N., Dudley W., Naomi J., Harry S., Lyman A. and Simeon. (3) Lyman A. is deceased. (4) Joseph J. married Louise Klemme, of Joliet, by whom he had two children, Mary L. and Helen H. After her death he married Irene Heaney, of Chicago, and they have also had two children, Joseph L. and Thomas H. (5) Laura W. is the wife of H. H. Chester, of Evanston, Ill., and has had three children, Ruth B., Grace H. and Margaret N. All of Mr. Budlong's children reside near the parental home. Mrs. Budlong passed away March 25, 1905, leaving a large circle of friends, by whom she was much beloved and sadly missed. She was a very active worker in the Bowmanville Congregational Church from the time of its organization.

Mr. Budlong is passing his declining years in the beautiful home where he has been located during his long residence in Cook county, a home which in all its details gives evidence of the tastes of the owner. He carries his years well, and though verging on four-score is vigorous and active, with unabated interest in life and work.

PIERCE. The Pierce family of Rhode Island has long been prominent in business, religious and public affairs. Not the least prominent were the sons of the late Rev. Waterman Pierce, who was himself a representative of the seventh generation of the family in this country, his lineage being from (I) Michael, the emigrant ancestor, through (II) Ephraim, (III) Ephraim (2), (IV) Deacon Mial, (V) Rev. Nathan, (VI) Isaac Pierce.

(VII) Rev. Waterman Pierce, son of Isaac, born Dec. 24, 1801, in Rehoboth, Mass., married June 15, 1820, Betsey Baker, born March 8, 1801, and they resided in East Providence, R. I. Their children were: Bradford B., born Nov. 7, 1821, married Martha K. Brown and Susan Shelley; Sarah F., born July 25, 1826, married Sept. 11, 1853, Gilbert M. Horton; Elisha W., born Jan. 22, 1829, married Elizabeth W. Barney; Mary E., born April 27, 1831; Maria B., born Feb. 1, 1835, married Oct. 2, 1859, Samuel S. Barney; George L., born Sept. 9, 1837; Julia E., born Nov. 16, 1839, married Aug. 6, 1863, Dexter West; Mercy A., born July 14, 1842, married June 17, 1864, Burden Monroe; and Richmond, born July 2, 1847, died March 13, 1848.

(VIII) Bradford B. Pierce, son of Rev. Waterman, born Nov. 7, 1821, married Oct. 7, 1847, Martha K. Brown, born Oct. 6, 1827. She died March 20, 1868, and he married (second) June 8, 1871, Susan M. Shelley, born May 29, 1832. The children of Mr. Pierce, all born to the first marriage, were: Waterman J., born Aug. 29, 1848; Bradford F., born Oct. 17, 1850; Clarence N., born April 28, 1854; and Mattie E., born March 16, 1863.

In "Providence Plantation," 1886, appeared the following: "One of the largest and most reliable wholesale and retail grocery houses in this city is owned and managed by two sons of the Rev. Waterman Pierce, who for nearly half a century was pastor of the Free Will Baptist Church in Barneyville. In 1848 Elisha W. Pierce and his brother, Bradford B. Pierce, purchased the business of Benjamin B. Potter, and established the grocery business of E. W. Pierce & Co., in a small wooden building that stood where the firm now occupies a spacious block at Nos. 19 and 20 Canal street. Bradford B. was already in the employ of Mr. Potter as clerk when the change of proprietors was made, and the new firm inaugurated what has proved a most successful wholesale and retail trade, and their customers have always been drawn largely from the country towns and suburbs of the city. In 1854 the Hon. George L. Pierce, another brother, was admitted to membership in the firm, and since that time the oldest partner, Bradford B., has deceased, leaving his interest in the business to the management of the other two. Each of the surviving brothers has been honored with a seat in the common council, and the younger is now a member of the General Assembly of the State."

(VIII) Elisha W. Pierce, son of Rev. Waterman, born Jan. 22, 1829, in Rehoboth, Mass., married March 3, 1851, Elizabeth W. Barney, born March 17, 1829, and they resided in Providence, R. I. Their children were: Mary E., born Dec. 13, 1851, married Feb. 27, 1870, Charles E. Frost, of Pawtucket, R. I.; Edward E., born Feb. 1, 1856; Benjamin F., born July 20, 1860, is a resident of Newark, N. J.; Florence B., born Jan. 10, 1862, married June 30, 1885, Cyril R. Wood, and they reside in East Providence, R. I.; Ulysses G. B., born July 17, 1865, a clergyman in Washington, D. C., married Florence Lonsbury; and Esther W. resides in East Providence with her mother.

When twenty-one years of age Elisha W. Pierce left his home in Seekonk, Mass., for Providence, to seek his fortune, his possessions being little more than the clothes he wore, but his mind was bent on success. He found employment as a clerk in one of the stores of the city and so served for some three years. He then commenced in a small way business for himself, working hard and conducting his business very carefully. Owing to his cautious, unspeculative manner of business life, he assumed no risks and contracted no debts, unless there was a visible means of meeting his obligations. Gradually the trade at his store increased and with increased patronage came increased success, and what he accomplished was always through hard work, careful management and perseverance.

Mr. Pierce was always a staunch Republican in his political views, and while his life was ever quiet and unassuming, he, at the solicitations of friends, served two terms in the common council of Providence, then tendering his resignation, but thereafter declined to accept other honors. His religious connection was with the old Roger Williams Free Baptist Church at Providence, and of that church his wife and children also were members.

(VIII) GEORGE LUTHER PIERCE, born Sept. 9, 1837, son of Rev. Waterman, was educated in the public schools of his native town, Seekonk, Mass., and at the Fort Edward Institute of Washington county, N. Y. Soon after leaving school he entered the grocery house of E. W. Pierce & Co., at Providence, as a clerk, and the aptness shown in this capacity and the efforts put forth in time were rewarded by his being taken into the firm as a partner, and for more than thirty-five years at the one location he carried on an extensive wholesale and retail grocery business, associated with his brothers, the late Elisha W. and Bradford B. Pierce. The establishment was located, as stated above, on Canal street, and the reputation of the firm for honesty, reliability and fair dealing was second to none in New England. After the death of Elisha W. and Bradford B. Pierce, the remaining member of the firm, George L., in 1895, retired from active business. Mr. Pierce's political affiliation has been with the Republican party, in the councils of which he has been prominent for many years, and as well in the public affairs of Providence and the State. He was for seven years a member of the Republican committee of the City of Providence, beginning in 1886 or 1887. He was for twelve consecutive years, 1886-1898, a member of the Providence city council, nine years of which period, 1886-1895, he was a member of the common council, and 1895-98 a member of the board of aldermen. He has been a commissioner of the North Burying Ground, Providence, since January, 1895. From May, 1886, to May, 1887, he was a member of the General Assembly of Rhode Island from Providence, and he was again chosen a member of the House in the Spring of 1898, and served until 1902 inclusive, and elected again in November, 1904, for the year 1905, by a majority of 3,064, the largest majority given any one of the twelve representatives from the city. For three years he served on the committee on Finance, and for the first two years on the committee on State Charities and Correction and for one year was on the committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. Pierce married Sarah E. Cory, and the following children have been born to them: Archie Le Grand, who died in boyhood; Wilton Cory, who died young; Chauncy Giles, who died in infancy; Grace and Ethel, twins, of whom the former graduated from Brown University with high honors, was president of her class, and was teacher in the grammar grade of the Point Street School, while the latter is a graduate of the Rhode Island School of Design, Providence, was supervisor of drawing in Warwick, and is now a teacher of drawing in the Technical High School in Providence, R. I.; Bertha; and George L., Jr., born in October, 1887.

(IX) DR. EDWARD ELISHA PIERCE, son of Elisha W., was first educated in the public schools of Providence, finishing his work in the Bridgham Street Grammar School. Thinking that he did not care for any more schooling, and expressing that feeling to his father, he was put to work in his father's store, but after an experience of two years, he determined to enter school again. At fifteen he entered Jenckes Mowry's Mt. Pleasant Academy, taking two years of preparatory work. In 1873 at the age of seventeen years he entered Brown University, graduating with the class of 1877, with the degree of A. B. In 1880 the degree of A. M. was conferred upon him by his Alma Mater. While in college he was a member of the Beta Theta Pi Greek fraternity. It was his intention at this time to take up the study of medicine, but on account of the ill health of his father he went into the business as manager for him, expecting to continue in such work only a short time. But the continued indisposition of his father, and the demands of a constantly increasing business, made it impossible for him to sever his connection, until the months had increased into years, and the years into a decade. So it was not until 1887 that Dr. Pierce was able to put into execution his earlier formed purpose to study medicine. In 1887 he entered the Medical Department of Harvard University, and was graduated therefrom in 1890 with high honor. In the subject of the Theory and Practice of Medicine, which came in the last year, he obtained the highest honors, 100 per cent. This was so unusual and notable that he has now a letter received from Prof. Francis Minot, professor in that branch, complimenting him most highly for his work. He began practice on Broadway, Providence, within a quarter of a mile of the home where all of the years, except two, of his life have been spent. With the passing of the years has come the increased confidence of those who knew him first as a boy, later as a student, and then for ten years as a merchant, until his practice has become one of most gratifying dimensions and character.

Dr. Pierce is a member of the Rhode Island Medical Society, the Providence Medical Association, the Medical Improvement Club of Providence, and the American Medical Association. On account of his former business association he has always retained his membership in the Providence Board of Trade. With a business ability intuitive as well as acquired, Dr. Pierce has been almost continuously identified with the management of some of the larger corporations in Providence; and at his summer home at River View, Warwick, the Doctor as President of the River View Improvement Association has inaugurated many noticeable reforms toward the upbuilding of this charming summer resort. Dr. Pierce has always taken an active interest in philosophical and religious work, and upon his graduation he was appointed Medical Examiner for the Providence Y. M. C. A., and has been such for eighteen years. He was president of the Y. M. C. A. from 1893 to 1895, and has been one of its board of directors for a number of years, and but recently retired from that position on account of the press of professional business. Dr. Pierce is also a member of a number of local historical societies. He is a member of the Roger Williams Free Baptist Church, and for over twenty years has been one of its deacons. He was also for several years president of the Roger Williams corporation.

Dr. Pierce was married Nov. 9, 1880, to Emma F. Wood, born May 7, 1859, daughter of John A. and Cynthia Elizabeth (Read) Wood, and they have one daughter, Rowena E., born Aug. 2, 1887; she is a graduate of the Fielden-Chace School, and has been a special student at Pembroke, and has devoted three years to the study of art at the Rhode Island School of Design. The Doctor is a man of kind and genial disposition, ever disposed to look on the bright side of life, and his presence in the sick room is itself a ray of sunshine.

DR. ELISHA PECKHAM CLARKE. Of all the professions the one most useful to mankind is the medical—the divine art of healing. The ideal physician is he who ever thrusts aside his own personal comforts and consecrates his life to the thoughtful and efficient practice of his profession, and who by his own upright and clean life can inspire confidence and respect for himself and hope in the hearts of the afflicted. The town of Hopkinton, R. I., was fortunate in numbering among her citizens an earnest exponent of the highest ideals of lofty devotion to his calling in the person of Dr. Elisha Peckham Clarke.

Dr. Clarke descends from old and honorable ancestry, which in both paternal and maternal lines includes many families prominent in the history of Rhode Island, from its earliest period. He was born at Westerly, R. I., Aug. 17, 1833, son of Robert and Dorcas (Peckham) Clarke. He received his education in the public schools and at De Ruyter Institute, New York, and taught school for several years very successfully before entering upon the practice of medicine, the profession he had chosen. His medical education was obtained at Harvard, and at the Maine Medical School (Bowdoin College), from which latter institution he was graduated with honors in 1863. In the fall of the same year he began the practice of his profession in Milford, Mass., and on Feb. 7, 1864, after taking a competitive examination, was commissioned a surgeon in the 31st Mass. Vol. Inf. He remained in the service, and was mustered out at the close of the war, then settling in Hope Valley, R. I. He was ambitious, energetic, and in love with his profession, which he always endeavored to honor. He soon built up a large practice for that locality. Here Dr. Clarke lived and worked continuously for nearly forty years. This was a period marked by greater progress and advancement in his profession than had taken place during the two centuries preceding. Dr. Clarke kept abreast of that progress, necessitating radical changes in methods and administration. He was the very personification of the complete physician. There was nothing censorious in his nature. To do deeds of kindness unobtrusively was his religion. He helped first, and questioned afterward. He enjoyed the largest practice of any physician in that section of the State. Ever ready to respond to a call, day or night, whether far or near, from the rich or poor, he endeared himself to all, and became not only a medical adviser, but a friend and comforter. When such a physician has lived a life of this character for almost forty years in a community, administering to successive generations, he can but be remembered as a member of each family and grieved for as such. Dr. Clarke's genial disposition, cheerful address, and faithful attention to patients, tended not only to gain their confidence, but also to win their love. His generous treatment of his fellow physicians, his strict observance of the unwritten code of professional ethics, caused him to be held in high esteem by his brethren, who both admired him as a physician and honored him as a man.

While wedded to his profession, and though pressed for time as a result of its exacting duties, Dr. Clarke's public spirit was always evident. He had at heart the best interests of his community and took a keen interest in public affairs, representing his town in the State Senate in 1878-79, and again in 1879 and '80. A prominent Republican, his interest in the success of that party was keen and continuous. For many years he was chairman of the school committee, and was also assessor of taxes for several years. He was medical examiner for the town of Hopkinton at the time of his death. He was elected a fellow of the Rhode Island Medical Society in 1867, and in 1895 became its president, receiving the re-election in 1896. He was a member of the Washington County Medical Society, and was one of its first presidents, and was always prominent in the affairs of that organization. He was a charter member of Charity Lodge,

A. F. & A. M., at Hope Valley, and was elected worshipful master in 1870, and was treasurer at the time of his death. He was also a member of Franklin Chapter, R. A. M., at Hope Valley; and of Hope Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, being the first worthy patron of the latter, and second grand patron of the grand chapter of the State. Up to the time of his death he retained an active interest in these societies. He was a charter member of Lincoln Post, G. A. R., and was its first commander. For a number of years he was a director of the Hopkinton Savings Bank. Dr. Clarke was one of the leading members of the First Baptist Church at Hope Valley, and for a number of years chairman of the pulpit committee thereof. His devotion to religious work was one of his prominent characteristics. His ability to arrange his professional work without the slightest inattention, so as not to conflict with his almost regular attendance upon divine service, was often commented upon. His character was symmetrical and well rounded, and as a citizen he lived up to his high ideals of civic honor and responsibility.

Dr. Clarke was married in May, 1859, to Miss Nancy J. Davis, of Ledyard, Conn., a lady of high moral and social qualities, who died Nov. 20, 1894, leaving two sons: Dr. Elisha Davis, of Woonsocket, R. I., a graduate of Harvard, class of 1892, who married Miss Fendora Sayers, of Waynesburg, Pa., and has two children, Florence Sayers and Constance; and Dr. Elliott M., a graduate of Harvard, class of 1899, formerly located at Mansfield, Mass., but now in Denver, Colo. On June 30, 1897, Dr. E. P. Clarke was married (second) to Miss Hattie M. Tucker, of Hope Valley, daughter of Alvin Perry and Emily Demaris (Larkin) Tucker. He passed away at his late home in Hope Valley, March 17, 1904. His widow survives, occupying the old homestead.

ALVIN PERRY TUCKER, father of Mrs. Clarke, was born in South Kingstown, R. I., and there passed the years of his boyhood. He learned the machinist's trade at Centerville, and followed that line at Carolina, later going to Hope Valley, where he was employed at his trade for thirty years. His death occurred in 1896. He married Emily Demaris Larkin, daughter of Jonathan and Rebecca (Larkin) Larkin, and she died in 1892, the mother of the following children: Albert Howard, deceased; Lucetta, deceased; Annette, of Attleboro, Mass.; Hattie M., the widow of Dr. Clarke; Sarah A., who married Herman T. Regnall, of Attleboro, Mass., and has five children: Ralph T., Irma, Lloyd, Walter and Grace; Marry; Henry, and Emily.

Mr. Tucker was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and was also associated with the I. O. O. F.

JOSEPH ALBERT BUDLONG was engaged in business as a gardener and florist in the suburbs of Chicago, Ill., for a period of forty years before his death. He was a worthy member of a family which has been known in Rhode Island from early Colonial times, but which during the past half century has become known throughout the country in the development by its members of a line of business never before attempted on so vast a scale. The Budlongs were among the first to carry on gardening according to modern ideas and to operate extensively in a business formerly the field of small investors. Joseph A. Budlong as a scientific grower of vegetables, and during the later years of his life of the most beautiful flowers in demand in the market, had few equals anywhere, and many of his most successful methods were original with him, the outgrowth of an experience not shared by many. Like the other members of his family he was a man learned in the scientific lore of his calling as well as a practical florist and a man of business. His career demonstrates the value of broad training and intelligent attention to all branches of an undertaking. He had the faculty of neither neglecting details nor taking undue precautions in matters of no consequence and the course he pursued was fully justified by the results.

Mr. Budlong was born at Cranston, R. I., March 17, 1841, son of Joseph Stone and Mary Ann (Arnold) Budlong. Of his parentage and earlier ancestry extended mention will be found on pages 143 and 421, and in the sketch of his older brother, Lyman Arnold Budlong. He passed his boyhood at the old home, and received a thorough though not a liberal education in the public schools of the locality. The strength and activity of his intellect throughout life amply made up for any incompleteness of his early advantages. His experience in his life work began at an early age, for his father was engaged in market gardening, and the boy helped him from childhood. He was thus employed until after he reached his majority, when he went to Providence, R. I. In 1862 he went out to Illinois, joining his brother Lyman, who had settled there in Cook county five years before, and had started the gardening and pickling business. He worked for his brother on a salary for three years, but the location not agreeing with him at that time he returned East to recuperate. The country was low and almost continuously wet, and this, with other causes, gave rise to conditions which developed in him a serious rheumatic ailment, accompanied by intense suffering. In Brooklyn, N. Y., he secured a clerkship with another brother, who was a merchant, and while thus engaged he became acquainted with Miss Teresa Smith, to whom he was married early in 1866. There for a period of one year he followed the trade of carpenter, but the young couple soon moved out to Cook county, Ill., where, on land leased from his brother, Mr. Budlong began gardening upon his own account. He continued thus successfully for three years, when he entered into a co-partnership with his brother in the gardening industry. From a small beginning they developed in time one of the largest enterprises of its kind in the West, and the business relations between the brothers continued amicably for seventeen years, at the end of which period the partnership was dissolved by mutual consent.

Mr. Joseph A. Budlong had in the meantime bought ten acres of ground, which he had leased to a tenant who built greenhouses for growing vegetables. Upon the expiration of this lease Mr. Budlong assumed personal control of his land and vigorously set about its cultivation. He extended the scope of the business, putting up more greenhouses, and engaged quite extensively in the production of cut flowers. From 1888 he devoted his time and land exclusively to the raising of choice blossoms for the cut flower trade, the output at first being principally roses and carnations. Under his progressive management the business expanded steadily to an extent he could hardly have foreseen at its inception. The growth was natural, all things considered, but when he started his florist business transportation facilities fell far short of their present possibilities, the market was neither so wide nor so steady, and florists had made few of the experiments which within comparatively a few years have made such sweeping changes in the methods of production as well as in the products themselves. The scientific economy which has eliminated unprofitable varieties and developed hardy plants, productive and beautiful as the popular taste demands at the present time, was evolved to its present perfection in the period of his experience, and he not only profited by the experiments of others, but left many new devices to perpetuate his name in the business. His untimely death, in the spring of 1906, caused by a street car accident, cut short a career which held promise of even greater successes, and was regretted by a wide circle of business associates as well as his friends and family.

Some idea of what Mr. Budlong accomplished in his business may be gained by a brief account of the operations carried on now under the management of his son, Mr. Albert H. Budlong, for the estate. He had been associated with his father for fifteen years, and has had the benefit of the most thorough training as well as exhaustive personal familiarity with the work in all its branches and details. The greenhouses cover a space of six acres, 400,000 square feet being under glass. Only roses, carnations and chrysanthemums are grown, twenty-seven houses being devoted to roses alone, with 4,500 to 5,000 plants in every house. Here the American beauty is grown in its greatest perfection. From fifty thousand to fifty-five thousand carnations, unexcelled in size and variety, are kept blooming, occupying nine houses. Twelve thousand chrysanthemums are produced annually. Every device known to the trade is employed to bring all the products to their highest perfection, and the demand for the output of this firm, still doing business under the name of Joseph A. Budlong, is the seal of approval upon the conscientious care bestowed on the raising of the flowers as well as the conduct of the incidentals of the business. The steam vacuum system has been installed throughout the great establishment, requiring an annual consumption of four thousand tons of smokeless coal. A regular force of skilled gardeners and assistants, averaging thirty-five the year round, is employed. A wholesale house in the business district of Chicago (the plant is about eight miles from the center of the city) is maintained, under the direction of Mr. Philip Schupp, for the more convenient disposal of the product, though the market is by no means confined to that city, shipments being made as far north as St. Paul, east to Pittsburgh, south to Fort Worth, Texas, and west to Denver. The very extensive territory covered by the firm is supplied promptly by express service. The sales last season aggregated $110,000. A large supply for the winter trade is carefully looked after and provided for. No establishment of its kind anywhere in the country is better equipped for the demands of business than this one. It is a model in every respect, and reflects the highest credit upon the judgment of the founder as well as upon those who have followed in his footsteps.

Mr. Budlong had a unique personality and a character of rare strength. In many respects he was indeed a wonderful man. Throughout his life he had to contend with obstacles, but he always regarded them as bridges to be crossed, not as barriers in his path. He was a man of great industry in the physical sense, and he was also a tireless brain worker. His inventive genius found expression in a number of important devices for carrying on his work, a bag holder and wagon spring being among the many useful appliances he gave to the public.

His habits were most abstemious, and to them he undoubtedly owed his perfect health and power of endurance. For about ten years before his death he was devoted to athletic exercises. His fame as a bicyclist was national. He completely wore out one bicycle each year. He made trips to New York and Boston. One special trip to Rochester, N. Y., was accomplished in seven days—seven hundred miles. It is estimated that in ten years he had ridden seventy-five thousand miles. His time may be said to have been spent mostly on a bicycle during that period. Not only was he a great bicyclist, but he was also a marvelous long distance endurance skater. In the community where he lived so many years he was held in most popular esteem, among young and old, the children loving him and calling him "Uncle Joe."

Mr. Budlong was a Republican in political sentiment, but he was not active in party affairs, and did not seek office, though he served three times as school director. He was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, being affiliated with Providence Lodge, No. 711, A. F. & A. M., of Jefferson (charter member); Corinthian Chapter, R. A. M.; Apollo Commandery, K. T.; and Oriental Consistory.

On Feb. 1, 1866, Mr. Budlong married Miss Teresa Smith, who was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., daughter of William and Priscilla (Timms) Smith, both of whom were natives of London, England. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Budlong: (1) Frederick G., the eldest, born in 1868, died when two years old. (2) Albert Henry, born in 1870, was married in Chicago, in 1892, to Miss Bertha C. Lehmann, who is of German parentage, and they have had two children—Kenneth J., born April 1, 1893, and Herbert J., born Oct. 31, 1894. This family have a beautiful home, occupying the dwelling erected by Joseph A. Budlong in 1886. (3) Florence May, born in 1874, is the wife of Philip Schupp, who has been identified with the Budlong business for the past four years, in the selling and shipping department. She has two children, Roswell, now (1908) thirteen years old, and Carlie P., now aged eight years.

CHARLES WILSON, of Providence, R. I., was born at Ashford (now Eastford), Conn., Jan. 11, 1840, and received his early education in the schools there. In 1855 he came to Providence, R. I., and for several years clerked in Rice & Hayward's baking establishment, on Broad street, in the meantime attending night school. He was successively employed by the firms of Garfield & Eddy, A. C. Eddy and Eddy & Studley, and for twenty years was with Studley Brothers, in the rubber business. During some of these years he had some experience in a sanitarium conducted by his father-in-law, Dr. Samuel Stowe, who had been since 1836 proprietor of the business until his death, from which time until 1883 it was carried on by his widow.

Since the latter mentioned year the sanitarium, which is located at No. 141 Atwells avenue, Providence, has been in charge of Mr. Wilson. He makes a specialty of the treatment of rheumatism, sciatica, disorganized joints, neuralgia, paralysis and all nervous diseases, his method consisting of medicated hydraulic bath and massage treatment, aided by remedies of his own, discovered after careful research. Mr. Wilson belongs to the class of independent thinkers to whom the world owes about all it can boast of progress—men who are not bound by the prejudice or formulas of any conventional school, but who strike boldly out into new fields and carve their own reputation and success, standing alone on the merits of their own genius or achievements, and not upon the prestige of any diploma or testimonial of an institution whose methods they have learned to imitate. Mr. Wilson has occupied several positions of honor among his fellow-citizens, serving as a member of the school board and chairman of city conventions, and has been a Democratic candidate for the city council.

In 1874 Mr. Wilson was married to Sally Tobey Stowe, daughter of Dr. Samuel Stowe, and to this union there have been born two children, namely: Florence Cutler, whose death occurred in 1905, married (first) Frank Shackford, by whom she had one child, Marguerite Wilson, and (second) Charles W. Jones, of Leominster, Mass.; Samuel Fuller Wilson married Claudia M. Towne.

IRA WESLEY WILBOR, who has been the trustworthy and efficient superintendent of the Newport City Asylum for a number of years, is a native of Newport county, where the greater part of his active life has been spent. He was born in Little Compton, R. I., Sept. 13, 1845, son of William Frank and Mary Ann Richardson (Hildred) Wilbor, and is a worthy representative of one of Rhode Island's earliest settled families, a record of which family is given below, in chronological order.

(I) William Wilbor, of Portsmouth, R. I., as early as 1654, June 10th of which year he received a deed from Samuel Wildbore, Sr., of Taunton, is said, by one of the family who has written of him and his descendants, to be a son of Samuel. The latter he makes of Boston, and as coming not later than 1633, and being first of record when he and his wife Ann, were admitted to the church there Dec. 1 of that year. His wife is made a daughter of Thomas Bradford of Doncaster, in the south part of County York, England. Samuel Wilbor bought largely of land in Taunton, and moved to that point with his family. His son William, of Portsmouth, R. I., was deputy in 1678. His children were: Mary, John, Joseph, Thomas, William, Martha, Samuel, Daniel and Joan.

(II) John Wilbor, born in 1658, married in 1682, Hannah, and their children of Little Compton town birth were: John, born in 1683; and Mary, in 1686.

(III) John Wilbor (2), born in 1683, married June 22, 1710, Sarah Palmer, born Sept. 29, 1689, and their children of Little Compton town record, according to Arnold, were: Mary, born April 13, 1711; Elizabeth, June 1, 1713; Sarah, June 22, 1715; John, May 11, 1717; Gideon, June 8, 1719; Aaron, May 24, 1724; Constant, Dec. 26, 1728; and Isaac, May 6, 1733. The father of these children died in 1747.

(IV) Aaron Wilbor, born May 24, 1724, married (first) March 31, 1748, Mary Church, born Jan. 2, 1725. Their children of Little Compton record, according to Arnold, were: Sarah, born Dec. 25, 1748; Benjamin, Oct. 22, 1750; Aaron, June 22, 1753; Francis, June 4, 1755; Thomas, Sept. 23, 1756; and John, May 4, 1762. The father married (second) in July, 1779, Ruth, born Feb. 3, 1736, daughter of William and Elizabeth Hunt.

One child, Ruth, born Aug. 17, 1780, came to the second marriage. The father died in October, 1802.

(V) Thomas Wilbor, born Sept. 23, 1756, married Dec. 29, 1791, Mrs. Zilpha Hunt, and their children of Little Compton town record, according to Arnold, were: Susannah, born Sept. 29, 1792; James Hammond, Jan. 30, 1794; Elizabeth, Aug. 7, 1795; Zilpa, Dec. 6, 1796; Simon, April 14, 1798; William Frank, June 22, 1799; James Hammond (2), May 11, 1800; Sarah, Dec. 5, 1801; John Bunyan, Jan. 26, 1803; Thomas, June 2, 1804; Angeline, Oct. 28, 1805; and Zilpha, July 20, 1807. The father of these died Sept. 13, 1840.

(VI) William Frank Wilbor, father of Ira Wesley, was born June 22, 1799, and married Jan. 10, 1831, Mary Ann Richardson Hildred, who was born July 30, 1809. Mr. Wilbor was a mason by trade, an occupation which he followed the greater portion of his life. He was a quiet, unostentatious man, who bore the respect of the community in which he resided. In political faith he was first an old-line Whig, and upon the organization of the Republican party joined forces with the latter party. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Church, upon the services of which he was regular in his attendance. Mr. Wilbor died in Little Compton, in 1849, in the fiftieth year of his age, and his wife passed away in 1891, in the eighty-third year of her age. The children born to this union, of Little Compton town record, were: Amanda Maria, born Jan. 21, 1833, married Burden Manchester, and died in Little Compton. William Francis, born Jan. 2, 1836, was a carpenter and builder in Newport, where he died; he married (first) Catherine Manchester, and (second) Ruth Easterbrooks. Horatio Nelson, born Oct. 12, 1838, was a blacksmith by trade, and died in 1906 in Boston, Mass. Julius Wilson, born May 11, 1841, died young. Mary Susan, born March 20, 1843, married Albert Gray, and died in New Bedford, Mass. Ira Wesley is mentioned below. The eldest of these children was born in New Bedford, Massachusetts.

(VII) Ira Wesley Wilbor was born in Little Compton, R. I., Sept. 13, 1845. He received his schooling in the common schools of his native town, which he left at the age of sixteen years, for, his father having died when he was but four years old, he was compelled early in life to seek his own livelihood. After leaving school he went to Boston, Mass., where he became apprenticed to the carpenter's trade, and, after having acquired a thorough knowledge of his chosen trade, he continued to follow that vocation in Boston, being located in that city for about fifteen years. In 1876 Mr. Wilbor came to Newport, and became foreman for his brother, William F., who was then engaged in the building business, and remained in that capacity for about ten years. After leaving the employ of his brother he continued at his trade, following it until 1893, during which time he held various positions. In January of the latter year, 1893, Mr. Wilbor was appointed superintendent of the Newport City Asylum, a position he has since continued to fill most efficiently, being ably assisted in his duties by his wife, who has been matron of that institution during the same period.

Ira W. Ulbricht

In political faith Mr. Wilbor is a stalwart adherent of the principles of the Republican party, although he has never sought nor cared for political preferment. He holds membership in Ocean Lodge, No. 7, Ancient Order of United Workmen, of Newport. He attends the First Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his wife is an active member, and to which they give their support. Mrs. Wilbor served as a Sunday-school teacher for nearly twenty years.

On Aug. 22, 1870, Mr. Wilbor was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth M. Bolton, of Boston, Mass., daughter of Joseph and Sarah (Hancock) Bolton, who both died when Mrs. Wilbor was very young, and this union has been blessed with three children, namely: (1) Ira Wesley, Jr., resides in Newport, where he is engaged in carpentering; he married Miss Ella Berry, of Newport, and has one daughter, Elizabeth. (2) William F. died young. (3) Isabelle Bolton married John V. Hammett, Jr., of Newport, where they reside. Mr. and Mrs. Wilbor enjoy the friendship of a large circle of friends, as well as the respect and esteem of the community, in which they have resided so many years.

COMSTOCK. (I) William Comstock, doubtless the ancestor of all the Comstocks of Connecticut and Rhode Island, is of record in Wethersfield, Conn., in 1641. He probably came at about that time from Watertown, Mass., with a large number of colonists to Wethersfield, Windsor and Hartford, Connecticut. On Jan. 25, 1659, he deeded land in New London, and at a town meeting held there Nov. 10, 1650, voted to co-operate with John Winthrop in establishing a corn mill in New London. It is probable that William Comstock, of Wethersfield and New London, who married for his second wife Elizabeth, had children as follows: John, of Lyme, Conn.; Daniel, of New London (now Montville); Samuel, of Providence; Christopher, of Fairfield and Norwalk, Conn.; and Elizabeth, who married Edward Shipton.

(II) Samuel Comstock, son of William, married Annie, who was living Feb. 10, 1667, and who married for her second husband John Smith. From court records he was undoubtedly living in Hartford in 1648, but on March 1, 1654, he bought a house and lot of John Smith, in Providence. This property comprised four acres and was near the corner of North Main and Abbots streets. His children were: Samuel, born in 1654; and Daniel, born May 12, 1656.

(III) Samuel Comstock (2), son of Samuel, married Nov. 22, 1678, Elizabeth Arnold, born in Watertown, Mass., daughter of Thomas Arnold (of Chesilbourne, Dorset, England) and Phebe Parkhurst. He was a deputy in 1699, 1702-07-08-11, and was appointed May 6, 1702, on a committee, by Assembly to audit the General Treasurer's account and the Colony debts. In April, 1708, he was appointed on a committee to fix the rates of grain and other specie brought to the treasury. He was called Captain at the time of his death. His children were: Samuel, Hozadiah, Thomas, Daniel, Elizabeth, John, Ichabod and Job.

(IV) John Comstock, son of Samuel (2), born March 26, 1693, died Jan. 12, 1749, and was buried in the North Burying ground, Providence. He married (first) Esther Jenckes, daughter of William and Patience (Sprague) Jenckes, and (second) Sarah Dexter, born June 27, 1698, died July 8, 1773. He was a blacksmith and resided in Providence, where he was a large landholder, deeding to his sons at various times considerable tracts of land. His children were: Samuel, born in 1715; Joseph; Jeremiah; John, Jr.; Jonathan; James, born in 1733; Nathan and Ichabod.

(V) Samuel Comstock, son of John, born in 1715, died in 1755. On Jan. 1, 1737-8, he wedded Ann Brown, born in 1710, died Nov. 6, 1776, daughter of James Brown, granddaughter of John, and great-granddaughter of Chad. Samuel Comstock was a blacksmith at Providence. He was made a freeman of the colony in 1736. His children were: Jesse, born in 1740; Jeremiah, in 1742; Martha, in 1744 (married David Bucklin); Benjamin in 1747; Joseph, in 1749; Mary and Samuel.

(VI) Benjamin Comstock, son of Samuel, born March 7, 1747, in Providence, R. I., died Sept. 30, 1828, aged eighty-one years, and is buried with many of his descendants in the North Burying Ground. He married Mary Winsor, born April 2, 1755, died Nov. 7, 1825, daughter of Rev. Joseph Winsor, of Gloucester, R. I. His children were: Jesse, born in 1777; Joseph, Dec. 13, 1778 (died Dec. 22, 1778); Samuel, Dec. 14, 1778 (died the same day); Sally Brown, in 1780; Joseph, in 1783; Ann Brown, in 1784; William, in 1786; Samuel, in 1789; and Benjamin, in 1792.

(VII) William Comstock, son of Benjamin, born Jan. 20, 1786, in Providence, died Oct. 22, 1873, aged eighty-six years. He married (first) Aug. 28, 1808, Bethiah, daughter of Major Jabez Gorham, and she died Sept. 8, 1821. On Sept. 19, 1824, he married (second) Harriet Pearson, born Oct. 16, 1803, and died Aug. 26, 1882, aged seventy-eight years, daughter of Samuel and Judith (Thurston) Pearson, of Providence. His children were: Catherine Graham, born July 9, 1809, married Benjamin Comstock, her cousin; William, born March 15, 1812, died June 16, 1812; Eliza, born June 1, 1814, married William Waite Comstock;

Mary Winsor, born March 28, 1816, married Samuel Almy; Moses Eddy, born July 13, 1818, died Sept. 17, 1818; and Julia, born Feb. 6, 1821, died Sept. 18, 1821. The children of Mr. Comstock's second marriage were: Harriet Ellen, born Dec. 18, 1825, died Feb. 2, 1827; Harriet, born Dec. 18, 1828, married Byron Sprague; William, born June 14, 1831, died April 22, 1859, on the S. S. "Alden" in the Indian Ocean, being a merchant in the China trade; Richard Williams; and Anna Louisa, born April 20, 1836, married Edward A. Balch.

The Providence Journal of Oct. 23, 1873, has this to say editorially of William Comstock: "Our readers will not be surprised to learn of the death of this venerable and universally respected citizen, who died at his residence yesterday in the eighty-seventh year of his age. Captain William Comstock was widely known in this city, where his long and active life was passed, and where he was identified with some of our most important enterprises of business. As long ago as when the communication between this city and New York was by passenger sloops, Captain Comstock commanded one of them and acquired that public confidence and respect which accompanied him when the steam communication was established and he and Captain Bunker commanded the first boats. A skilful and careful navigator, a rigid disciplinarian, an accomplished gentleman, and an honest man, nobody had more friends than Captain Comstock and no man's claim to the good will of his fellow citizens was based on a better foundation. After a long service on the Sound, which brought him into contact with thousands of people and made his name favorably known to them all, he retired from the water and took the presidency of the Merchants' Insurance Company, which he retained until within a few years, and resigned on account of his declining years. He also took the presidency of the Commercial Bank which he had to the time of his death. In all these positions and in many others, Captain Comstock enjoyed the affection of many friends and the respect of the whole community; and his death, even at this ripe age, brings sadness to many hearts without the circle in which the affliction is deepest."

Captain William Comstock was born and reared in North End. His schooling was obtained in the schools of Providence. When sixteen years of age he would often take trunks from Fox Point to North End for a shilling. He engaged on a packet running between Providence and New York as cabin boy, and he became captain of the "Fulton," this being probably his first vessel. He built the "Massachusetts," a side-wheeler, and became her captain, being very proud of this boat, every stick of timber in her having the Captain's initials "W. C." He also built the "Mohegan" and the "Rhode Island," which also ran between Providence and New York, and was captain of the packets "Juno" and "Venus." With one of these packets he ran the British blockade between New York and Providence. Captain Comstock was for many years agent of the New York & New Jersey Steam Navigation Company, at Providence. He was a member of the old Franklin Marine Society. Captain Comstock was president of the Commercial National Bank, located at No. 11 Market Square, Providence. In politics he was a Jacksonian Democrat.

(VIII) Richard Williams Comstock, born March 6, 1834, married Nov. 18, 1874, Cornelia Babcock Pratt. He was secretary of the Perkins Horseshoe Company, of Providence. His children were: William Pratt, born Feb. 17, 1877, married April 10, 1901, Mary B. Cooke; Alice Louise, born May 22, 1879; and Richard Williams, born Dec. 25, 1880.

(VII) Jesse Comstock, son of Benjamin, was born April 4, 1777, in Providence, and died Dec. 19, 1821. He married Ann Weeden, born in 1791, died April 4, 1862, daughter of Isaac and Lydia Weeden. He was captain of a packet running between Providence and New York. His children were: Benjamin Weeden, born Dec. 17, 1808, married Catherine Graham Comstock; Joseph Jesse; William W., born March 29, 1813, married Sarah E. Hodges; Elizabeth Ann, born Jan. 4, 1815, married Charles O. Fenner; and Jesse, born in June, 1820, was lost in the burning of the "Lexington," Jan. 13, 1840.

(VIII) Captain Joseph Jesse Comstock, son of Jesse, was born in Providence, Feb. 12, 1811, and died in New York city, Aug. 16, 1868. He married (first) Ellen Cowin, born Dec. 21, 1815, in Liverpool, England, and died Feb. 23, 1837, in Providence. He married (second) Maria S. Taber, born April 21, 1814, daughter of Capt. John R. Taber, of Fairhaven, Mass. He was the father of the following children: Joseph, born Feb. 7, 1836, died Aug. 22, 1837; Joseph Jesse, who was major of the 14th R. I. Heavy Artillery, died March 14, 1903; Charles Cook, who was captain of the Golden Gate, died at Panama in 1873; Ellen, born in 1842, married Lieut. Commander J. N. Miller, and died Aug. 22, 1863; Adelaide H.; Emma Russell is deceased; Frank; Frederick Hunter is deceased; Amelia Townsend; and Richard Borden, was born Feb. 15, 1854. Capt. Joseph J. Comstock, the father, was a noted steamship captain for many years in the early service of the Sound lines, commanding steamers running between Fall River and New York, and later connecting with the Collins line to Europe, in command of the "Baltic" and afterward of the "Adriatic," which, at the time she was built, was the second largest steamboat in the world. Captain Comstock was in command of the "Baltic" during the war of the Rebellion, when she was employed in the Government transport service, and was present at the capture of Port Royal, New Orleans and Charlestown, and other maritime strongholds of the Confederacy, and his son, Richard Borden, accompanied his father on all the "Baltic's" expeditions while in the service of the government.

(IX) RICHARD BORDEN COMSTOCK, one of the best known lawyers of Providence, R. I., was born in Jersey City, N. J., Feb. 15, 1854, son of Joseph J. and Maria S. (Taber) Comstock, and a descendant of Roger Williams. He received his early education in boarding schools at Ridgefield, Conn., Yonkers, N. Y., and Lawrenceville, N. J. He prepared for college at Mowry & Goff's English and Classical School in Providence, and entered Brown University, from which he was graduated in 1876, with the degree of B. A. He studied law in the office of the Hon. E. C. Mowry, and was admitted to the Rhode Island Bar in 1878, and the United States Courts in 1881. Since 1878 he has been actively engaged in the practice of his profession in Providence and since 1892, has been in partnership with Rathbone Gardner, under the firm name of Comstock & Gardner. Mr. Comstock is a member of the Hope Club. In politics he is a Democrat, and in 1892-93 served as a State senator.

On July 19, 1883, Mr. Comstock married Miss Alice Green, daughter of Professor Samuel S. Green, late of Brown University, and well-known as the author of Green's Grammar. Three daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Comstock, namely: Marjorie Stuart, born May 4, 1884, was graduated from Smith College in 1907; Louise Howard, born Sept. 28, 1886, is attending Smith College; and Alice May, born June 21, 1890, is at home.

SPAULDING. The Spauldings of the old town of Smithfield and towns that have been formed from it, in more recent years largely residents of the towns of Lincoln and Central Falls, descend from the Massachusetts-Connecticut family of the name, the American ancestor of which was Edward Spaulding of Braintree, Mass., a proprietor and freeman there in 1640, who is said by some writers to have come from Lincolnshire, England. He removed to Wenham, and later, in 1655, became one of the founders of Chelmsford, Mass., of which he was a town officer. The Christian name of his wife was Margaret, and she died in 1640. His second wife's name was Rachel. Mr. Spaulding died in 1670. His children were: Grace, who died in 1640; Benjamin; Edward; John; Josiah and Dina. Of these Edward and Benjamin were born in Braintree before 1644. It was said in an obituary notice of the death of Joseph Spaulding of Chelmsford, who died July 30, 1820, aged sixty-four years, that he was a hero of Bunker Hill, and was supposed to have been the man who in that battle killed Major Pitcairn.

Among the thirty-seven freeholders of the town of Plainfield, Conn., in 1702, were John, Joseph, Benjamin and Edward Spaulding, descendants of Edward of Braintree and Chelmsford. Joseph Spaulding, a son of Edward, born about 1647, died in Plainfield, Conn., in 1740, and his wife Mary or Mercy (Jewell) died there in 1728.

A number of this Connecticut branch of Spauldings were patriots of the Revolution. Nathaniel Spaulding of Killingly, who died Feb. 28, 1823, aged eighty years, held a commission through the Revolution, participated in the battle of White Plains, etc.; and here in Rhode Island one Nathaniel Spaulding became a pensioner for service in the Revolution, Nov. 18, 1833, being at the time eighty-three years of age; then for several years during the Revolution Capt. Edward Spaulding was in command of a Providence county company of artillery.

From this Connecticut branch of the Spauldings there came not far from the middle (or a little earlier) of the eighteenth century to the town of Smithfield, one Joseph Spaulding, and it is with some of his descendants that this article is to deal in brief.

Joseph Spaulding, the Smithfield settler of that part of the town which later became the town of Lincoln, married Mehetabel Allen, and their children were: Mary married Capt. John Earl, of Providence; Sarah married Jason Newell, of Cumberland; Chloe married Gideon Sprague; Aholiab married (first) Hopestill, and (second) Anna; and Nathaniel.

Nathaniel Spaulding, son of Joseph, was born July 15, 1751, and married (first) Oct. 27, 1774, Lydia, daughter of Preserved Harris, and (second) Oct. 25, 1798, Thankful Whipple, of Cumberland, R. I. Nathaniel Spaulding was a Revolutionary soldier. The only child born to the first marriage that lived to maturity was Amey, who married Joseph Merry, of Lincoln, R. I. The children born to the second marriage were: Lydia, born April 6, 1799; Mary, born March 16, 1801; married Martin Arnold; Nathaniel, born March 18, 1803, married Sarah Mason; Thankful, born July 6, 1805, married Nicholas Tuell; Hannah, born April 15, 1808, died unmarried; William W., born May 1, 1810, married Miranda Arnold; Sarah, born June 9, 1812, married Jeremiah Olney; John Newell, born May 5, 1815. Of these for some years Hannah alone survived, she occupying the old Spaulding homestead, where she died in April, 1904. She was a real daughter of the American Revolution, and a member of Pawtucket Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

JOHN NEWELL SPAULDING, son of Nathaniel, the Revolutionary soldier, was born May 5, 1815, in what is now Lincoln, and learned the trade of blacksmith, serving an apprenticeship at Attleboro, Mass. About 1842 he located at Woonsocket, where he opened a shop and did a large business in his line of work, at times employing several assistants. When the Providence & Worcester railroad was built his establishment did a great part of the shoeing of the large number of horses engaged in the work.

John N. Spaulding remained in business at Woonsocket for a number of years, but after the death of his brother, William W., in 1850, he located on the homestead farm, then occupied by his mother, and this he successfully conducted for sixteen years. After the death of his mother he removed to Woonsocket, where he lived retired for a number of years, finally removing to Providence, where his only child, Mrs. Albert J. Smith, was residing. There he made his home for the rest of his life and died June 11, 1881, being buried in Swan Point cemetery. Mr. Spaulding was first a Whig and later a Republican, and during his residence in the old town of Smithfield was a member of the town council for a number of years, also serving as highway surveyor. While serving in the latter capacity he assisted in laying out that section now known as Pleasant View at Pawtucket. John N. Spaulding was a successful man, and possessed business qualifications of a high order. His advice was frequently sought in business matters, and he was a man of high honor and integrity, enjoying the esteem and respect of all who knew him. He was a man of pleasing manner and address, a most loving husband and kind and indulgent father. He was not a member of any religious body, but lived an upright, Christian life.

John Newell Spaulding married Sarah C. Vose, a native of Middleboro, Mass., daughter of Seth and Eliza (Shaw) Vose, and she survived her husband until April 29, 1887, dying in Providence at the age of sixty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Spaulding had one daughter, Mary Frances, born in Woonsocket, who married June 26, 1873, in her native place, Albert John Smith.

ALBERT JOHN SMITH was born in September, 1847, in Norwich, Conn., and was quite young when his parents removed to Roxbury, Mass., and they soon afterward removed to North Attleboro, Mass. The eldest child of his parents' family, young Smith was but seven years of age when his father died, and he was apprenticed to Smith & Ginnodo to learn the jeweler's trade. He remained with this firm for several years, and after completing his trade, in 1847 formed a partnership with Harvey Huestis and Herbert G. Mackinney, coming to Providence, where they engaged in business as manufacturing jewelers, their location being No. 34 Potter street. The firm of Smith & Huestis was a success from the start, and three months after its inception was forced to find larger quarters, subsequently moving to the shop and purchasing part of the tools of Chace & Cutler, who had failed. Six months later they removed to the Hope iron foundry building, where they continued until the completion of the Fitzgerald building. They remained at the latter place until 1887, when they removed to the upper floor of No. 53 Clifford street. In July, 1877, Mr. Huestis withdrew from the firm to form a partnership with Mr. Hutchinson, and he was succeeded by Henry Fry, the firm becoming A. J. Smith & Co. In July, 1878, Mr. Fry withdrew, and on the eighth of that month Dutee Wilcox became associated with Mr. Smith, the firm style still being A. J. Smith & Co. In 1880 they removed to No. 54 Page street, and in 1882 the firm name was changed to Mackinney, Smith & Co. Up to July 1, 1885, the house sold to the jobbing trade, but after that catered only to the retail trade. On Feb. 1, 1886, the co-partnership was dissolved by the withdrawal of Mr. Wilcox, and on Jan. 1, 1890, the firm was discontinued, Mr. Smith and Mr. Mackinney winding up the business of the firm in that year. Mr. Smith soon after began to suffer a decline in health, and while on a trip in search of relief, and while apparently deriving much benefit from the change in climate, his death occurred quite suddenly, March 11, 1891, at Santa Barbara, Cal., and his remains were brought to Providence and interred at Swan Point.

Mr. Smith was made a Master Mason at North Attleboro, becoming a member of Bristol Commandery, Knights Templar, at that place. In Providence he affiliated with Calvary Commandery. Mr. Smith was a successful business man, a kind husband and father, and a considerate employer. An obituary published at the time of his death said in part: "Of him naught but words of praise can be said. All his dealings with his fellow men were most honorable, and those who knew him will always have pleasant memories of him."

The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Smith: (1) Charles Earle, born Feb. 19, 1876, graduated from the Classical high school and the Bryant & Stratton Business College, and is treasurer and general manager of the W. H. Coe Manufacturing Company, Providence. He married Emma Linderman, and they have two children—Roby Mirribel, born Dec. 14, 1901; and Earle Spaulding, born June 26, 1906. (2) Isabel Spaulding, born June 17, 1881, married Harry E. Hollingsworth, a civil engineer, of Boston, and resides in Brooklyn. (3) Harold Eugene, born May 11, 1883, is in the United States cavalry service. Mrs. Smith is a member of the Pawtucket Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, being granddaughter of the Revolutionary soldier, Nathaniel Spaulding, and her son, Charles Earle, is connected with the Sons of the American Revolution.

JASON OLNEY. The late Jason Olney, of Burrillville, one of that town's venerable and most highly respected and substantial citizens, was a descendant in the seventh generation from Rev. Thomas Olney, who settled at Providence with Roger Williams. From Thomas Olney the lineage of Jason Olney is traced down through Epenetus, son of Thomas, Epenetus (2), Joseph, John (a Revolutionary soldier) and George.

George Olney was born Jan. 4, 1781, and was a farmer by occupation, residing in the southeastern part of the present town of Burrillville. He died May 18, 1810, in his thirtieth year, and his remains were first buried on his farm, but in later years were removed by his son, Jason, to a private yard on the latter's farm. George Olney married Sarah, daughter of Simeon Smith, of Burrillville, and she survived her husband many years and died at the home of her son Jason. She was the mother of two children: Mary, born March 30, 1807, married Duty Phetteplace, and resided in Smithfield, later removing to Woonsocket, and there died; Jason, born March 18, 1809.

Jason Olney was born in Burrillville, and as he was an infant little more than a year old when his father died, his mother went to live with her father, Simeon Smith, and in that household he grew to manhood. His boyhood was not unlike the average thrifty farmers' sons of those times, he being put to work and early taught lessons of toil and thrift. He attended the district school a few months each year in winter, the summer seasons being spent in hard work on the farm. He remained on the farm with his maternal grandfather assisting him, and from him receiving much practical business training and advice which was of great value to him in the transacting of his own affairs in later years. After the death of his grandfather who was a large land holder, Jason Olney inherited a farm which was his home the rest of his life. He erected several of the buildings, improved the land, and in time took rank among the foremost farmers of the town. In addition to his farming operations he dealt in cattle with much success. Mr. Olney continued active in the management of his farm until after the death of his wife, after which he made his home with his daughters, Mrs. Joslin and Mrs. Sweet, on Sweet's Hill, and there his death occurred Dec. 15, 1891, in the eighty-third year of his age, and he was buried beside his wife in the private yard on his farm. This property was later sold to a relative, Daniel A. Smith.

Mr. Olney was married in 1830 to Rachel Taft Bellows, born in North Providence, Jan. 10, 1807, daughter of William and Martha (Mowry) Bellows. Mrs. Olney died May 20, 1886. Three children were born to them as follows: Caroline H. is the widow of Dr. Benjamin Joslin; Lydia S. is Mrs. Thomas H. Sweet; and Amanda M. is the widow of Henry S. Nichols. These ladies all reside on Sweet's Hill, Burrillville.

In his political faith Jason Olney was a lifelong Democrat. While he never cared for political preferment, he was the type of man eminently fitted for public duties, and was chosen to represent the town in the State Senate one term, served several years as a member of the town council, member of the school committee and in other minor town offices. He was a man of uncommon good business judgment, and his advice was frequently sought in business matters. In all his dealings he maintained a reputation for straightforwardness and the highest integrity. He was a kind husband, father and neighbor, and a valued citizen, faithful in every relation of life. He was the last of his line to bear the name, and he was in every way a worthy representative of the old and honorable family to which he belonged. In his business affairs he was successful, and he left not only a large estate, but the priceless heritage of a name unsullied.

GOULD. The Goulds of Rhode Island spring from one of its first families, the progenitor coming to the Island as early as 1637; and beyond the sea their lineage is traced back through five generations. Covering the two hundred and sixty-five and more years of the family's life here, generation after generation has given ample evidence of substantial manhood and womanhood and useful citizenship. The family has continued largely to be identified with southern Rhode Island, where it has played well its part toward the State's present high position. One of the younger generation representative of this family is William G. Gould, one of the most enterprising and progressive as well as successful business men of his section of the state, for years a merchant at Peace Dale as proprietor of the Peace Dale store.

(I) Jeremiah Gould came to New England in 1637, and perhaps tarried a short time with a brother at Weymouth, Mass. He was admitted an inhabitant of Newport, R. I., after the 1st of May, 1638, and was made a freeman in 1641. He later returned to England, and while there died. He was from Rovington, County of Hertford, England, a son of Richard, who was descended from Thomas Gould through Richard, Thomas and Richard Gould. Jeremiah Gould married Priscilla Grover, and their children were: Mary, Thomas, John, a daughter and Daniel. Priscilla, the mother of these children, died here and was buried on the farm of her son John, in what is now Middletown, Rhode Island.

(II) Daniel Gould, son of Jeremiah and Priscilla, it is said was sixteen years of age when he came to New England with his parents. He married Dec. 18, 1651, Wait, born Sept. 11, 1636, daughter of John Coggeshall, with whom he lived in much love to an advanced age. He settled in that part of Newport which became Middletown, R. I., and on that part of the farm which up to a generation ago was in the possession of his descendants, Samuel and John Gould. He early joined the Society of Friends, and later became a minister and traveled some in the work of that society. He was deputy in 1672-73; assistant in 1673-74-75. He is judged to have been a man of ready wit, deep penetration and sound judgment. He died at his home in Newport March 26, 1716, and his widow Wait passed away May 9, 1718. Their children were: Mary, born March 2, 1653; Thomas, born in 1654; Daniel, Oct. 24, 1656; John, May 4, 1659; Priscilla, June 20, 1661; Jeremiah, May 5, 1664; James, Oct. 13, 1666; Jeremiah (2), Feb. 2, 1669; Content, Aug. 28, 1671; and Wait, May 8, 1676.

(III) Daniel Gould (2), son of Daniel and Wait, born Oct. 24, 1656, married Mary, born Jan. 11, 1661, daughter of Walter and Content (Greenman) Clarke. Mr. Gould was settled by his uncle, Thomas Gould, who had no children, on the latter's estate at Quidnesett Neck, in the Narragansett country (Kingstown), R. I. His children were: Mary, born March 22, 1681; Jeremiah, April 22, 1683; Daniel, Dec. 22, 1686; and Thomas, March 23, 1693.

(III) Thomas Gould, son of Daniel and Wait, born 22d, 2d mo., 1654, married 13th of 1st mo., 1690, Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob and Joanna Mott, of Portsmouth, R. I. On the death of his father Mr. Gould inherited all the homestead estate, containing between two hundred and three hundred acres of good land, well watered, and at that time sufficiently wooded, etc. Mr. Gould lived to advanced years, beloved by his family, and respected not only by his neighbors, but by an extensive acquaintance. He died 11th of 3rd mo., 1734, aged eighty years. His wife was a woman of fine understanding, endowed with every quality requisite in a good wife. She died 22d of 1st mo., 1749, aged seventy-eight years. Their children were: Priscilla, born Dec. 3, 1692; Nancy, Oct. 13, 1694; Daniel, Dec. 18, 1696; Thomas, Oct. 1, 1698; Joanna, Aug. 24, 1700; Jacob, Sept. 21, 1701; Elizabeth, March 4, 1707; John, Dec. 15, 1708; and James, May 5, 1711.

(IV) Daniel Gould, son of Thomas and Elizabeth, born Dec. 18, 1696, married in 1717 Mary, daughter of Capt. John Browne, of Swansea, though she then resided in Newport, R. I. After the birth of their first child they went to live with Mr. Gould's father, after whose death they received by bequest the greater part of the farm. He spent much time in settling differences, as an arbitrator. For a number of years he was one of the justices of the court of Common Pleas for the county of Newport, in the faithful discharge of which trust he gave satisfaction. He died Nov. 23, 1756, in the sixtieth year of his age. His children were: Abigail, born Sept. 19, 1720; Priscilla, June 15, 1722; Daniel, Nov. 20, 1723; Mary, Nov. 1, 1726; Jeremiah, Sept. 1, 1728; Thomas, May 25, 1730; Anne, March 29, 1733; Wait, Nov. 3, 1735; and Bathsheba, May 28, 1738.

(IV) Thomas Gould (2), son of Thomas and Elizabeth, born Oct. 1, 1698, in Newport, R. I., married Oct. 17, 1723, Sarah, daughter of John and Susan Anthony, of Portsmouth, R. I. Mr. Gould was settled by his father on the northerly part of the paternal estate, which comprised upward of 100 acres of excellent land. He became useful both in church and state. He was for years clerk of the monthly meeting of Rhode Island. He died June 13, 1786, in the eighty-eighth year of his age, and was buried in the burying-ground on his farm. His widow continued to live after his death in the family of her son, John. She was a woman of uncommon strength of mind, and energy and resolution characterized her whole life. She died Feb. 20, 1780, in the 101st year of her age. The children of Thomas and Sarah Gould were: Elizabeth, born July 17, 1724; Thomas, May 11, 1728; and John, Aug. 29, 1736.

(IV) Jeremiah Gould, son of Daniel and Mary, born April 22, 1683, married Elizabeth Ward. He inherited the landed estate of his father and from all accounts became a very wealthy citizen. He was chosen to various public positions of honor and trust and "was well accounted for in the world as an officer, statesman, and, as well, neighbor." His children were: Daniel, Sarah, Mary, Catherine, Elizabeth, Wait, Ruth and Hannah.

(V) John Gould, son of Thomas and Sarah, born Aug. 29, 1736, married Oct. 15, 1761, Sarah Coggeshall, daughter of James and Hannah Coggeshall, of Newport. Mr. Gould was a gentleman of both address and appearance, remarkable for the urbanity of his manners and his genuine hospitality. He made himself master of the French, Greek and Hebrew languages, besides acquiring a partial knowledge of several others. For many years he held the office of justice of the peace, and as a person of sound judgment was often consulted on important matters by his friends and neighbors, and was highly respected by all. He was once nominated as candidate for judge, but to the disappointment of many of his friends declined. During the war of the Revolution Mr. Gould, with many others, was subjected to serious losses in every way. His wife was possessed of remarkable firmness and presence of mind, together with an indomitable courage that sustained her at this time through many trials. Mr. Gould died Sept. 2, 1811, aged seventy-five years. He was an esteemed member of the Society of Friends. Mrs. Gould passed away Dec. 3, 1816, in the seventy-ninth year of her age. Their children, all born in Middletown, were: Elizabeth, born Oct. 5, 1762; Susanna, July 23, 1764; Mary, Oct. 24, 1765; Thomas, March 20, 1767; Hannah, Oct. 29, 1768; John and Sarah, Aug. 29, 1770; Walter, Aug. 20, 1771; James, July 6, 1774; Sarah, July 5, 1779; Rebecca, Nov. 12, 1781.

(V) Daniel Gould, son of Jeremiah and Elizabeth, married Mary Fry, and their children were Thomas and Mary.

(V) Thomas Gould, son of Daniel and Mary, born May 25, 1730, married Alice, daughter of James Chase, of Portsmouth, and at the request of his brothers and sisters settled at the old homestead, given to his brother Daniel (there being no development on his part of the farm), where he remained for several years, when, having erected a comfortable house on his share, he with his family removed there. Early in life Mr. Gould engaged as a mechanic and farmer, in which lines he wrought with his father until the latter's death. His children were: Daniel, Thomas, William, Abigail, Jeremiah, James, Mary, Anne, Eliza and Alice.

(VI) William Gould, son of Thomas and Alice, lived at Tower Hill, Narragansett, where he kept a store. He married Susan Carpenter, and their children were: Nancy, Susan, William, Ann, Caroline E., Thomas J. and George A.

(VI) Thomas Gould, son of Daniel, inherited the Quidnesett estate.

(VI) Mary Gould, daughter of Daniel, married an Allen.

(VI) Thomas Gould, son of John and Sarah, born March 20, 1767, married Anne Slocum. He inherited a large portion of his father's estate, and on the latter's death took possession of the homestead farm, and lived there the remainder of his life. His death occurred June 18, 1850, when he was over eighty years of age. His widow lived many years after in the old home in the family of her son, John. She was a faithful wife and mother and lived to a good old age. Their children were: Charles, Samuel, Sarah Ann, Susan Henrietta, Catherine, John, James Coggeshall and Robert.

(VII) Samuel Gould, son of Thomas and Anne, of Middletown, R. I., married Ann, daughter of John Barker, of Middletown. After the death of his father he built a house on his portion of his father's farm, and moved there. He was a man of intelligence and for several years represented his town in the General Assembly of Rhode Island. His children were: Sarah D., born May 1, 1828; Charles, May 28, 1829; and John, Jan. 8, 1831.

(VII) John Gould, son of Thomas and Anne, married Anne, daughter of Mumford Peckham, of Newport, and resided with his parents. His children were: Joseph John, born May 16, 1840; Kate Frances, Sept. 18, 1842; Robert, Jan. 26, 1845; William Parker, Feb. 28, 1847; and Ann Elizabeth, May 28, 1854.

(VII) James C. Gould, son of Thomas and Anne, married Maria, daughter of Nathaniel Littlefield, of Newport. In early life and some years after he married he made several voyages at sea. After he relinquished a seafaring life he settled in Providence, R. I. Mr. Gould died March 30, 1867. To him and his wife were born children as follows: George M. L., born Feb. 16, 1844; Thomas James, May 23, 1849; Mary Briggs, Oct. 31, 1862.

(VII) William Gould, son of William, married Mary A. Caswell, daughter of Gardner T.

Caswell, and died in 1855. She married (second) Giles P. Arnold, and died in 1881. William Gould spent his boyhood days on Tower Hill, and engaged in later years in boating and boat-building. His children were: William Gardner and Henry Albert.

(VII) Thomas J. Gould, son of William, born in 1826, died July 31, 1890, aged sixty-three years, ten months, ten days; his wife, Sarah (H—), died Sept. 11, 1896, aged seventy-one years, two months, twenty-three days. Their children were, according to church record: Idella J. and Mary N., born April 10, 1869; A. Gardiner, Feb. 23, 1873; Sarah Ann, Sept. 4, 187—; and Sarah L., March 26, 1876.

(VIII) WILLIAM G. GOULD, son of William, was born Aug. 29, 1851, in South Kingstown, R. I. At the age of five years he came to Peace Dale to live with his grandmother Caswell, and there he passed his school days. While yet in his teens, in 1867, he became employed as a clerk in the grocery store of John C. Hazard, a merchant of that place. Subsequently he served in the same capacity in the stores of James D. Caswell, at Narragansett Pier, and Thomas F. Holland, at Peace Dale. On Jan. 1, 1882, associated with Thomas R. Connor, Mr. Gould established at Peace Dale his present business, which for three years following was conducted under the firm name of Gould & Connor, when the partnership was dissolved. From that time until his retirement, June 30, 1906, Mr. Gould carried on the business alone, and under the name of the Peace Dale Store. In addition to a general line of goods, including groceries and dry goods, Mr. Gould established a special department, which occupies one floor of the building and is devoted to the handling of the goods made by the Peace Dale Manufacturing Company, whose mill is nearby. To the goods of this company Mr. Gould gave especial attention for some fifteen years, during which period, through his superior methods of advertising and bringing them to the notice of the people of the country, he developed an extensive mail order business. No superior goods in their line are made by any concern in the United States, a fact which Mr. Gould long since impressed upon his customers, which accounts for their extensive sale.

Mr. Gould's activity, enterprise and public spirit, the interest he has constantly had from boyhood in seeing his native town keep abreast of the times, was recognized by his fellow townsmen, who have several times called him to positions of responsibility, trust and honor. He has a number of times been elected a member of the town council and repeatedly presided over that body, in 1906 serving his sixth term as president of the council. He has been a member of the committee on electric light and water, is president of the Health League, served as postmaster for eight years, and as assistant for several years. He is a Democrat in politics. He has passed through the chairs of the I. O. O. F. Further, he is a director of the Wakefield Trust Company, the Wakefield Manufacturing Company and the Wakefield Land & Investment Company.

At Peace Dale, R. I., William G. Gould married Miss Elizabeth Arnold Anthony, daughter of James E. Anthony, of Point Judith, Rhode Island.

(IX) William James Gould, son of William G. and Elizabeth A. (Anthony) Gould, was born at Point Judith, R. I., April 6, 1879. In 1902 he was received into partnership by his father under the firm name of William G. Gould & Son. He married Hattie A., daughter of Charles Arnold Clarke, of Wakefield, Rhode Island.

Mrs. William G. Gould's ancestry is as follows:

(I) James Anthony, born Jan. 6, 1763, died Sept. 27, 1826. On Dec. 23, 1790, he married Mary Mumford, who was born Sept. 13, 1767, and whose death occurred April 18, 1844. Their children were: Peleg Coggeshall, born Dec. 22, 1791, married Abby G. Tillinghast, and died Jan. 13, 1882; Sally Remington, born Jan. 24, 1795, married John Ennis, and died Dec. 11, 1875; James William was born Sept. 23, 1798; Mary Mumford, born Jan. 4, 1803, married William G. Carpenter, and died Nov. 10, 1859; Alice A., born Dec. 5, 1805, married William G. Carpenter as his second wife.

(II) James William Anthony, born Sept. 23, 1798, in the town of South Kingstown, Washington Co., R. I., died Oct. 4, 1887. On Feb. 13, 1823, he married Hannah Kenyon, who was born Sept. 2, 1799, and died March 4, 1885. She was the daughter of Green Kenyon (born Jan. 13, 1763) and Hannah (Armstrong) Kenyon (born April 19, 1775). The children of this union were George N., Mary M., James G. and James E.

(III) George Nelson Anthony, son of James W. and Hannah, born Nov. 17, 1823, died in 1886. He married (first) Abby Stuart, who died March 14, 1876, and (second) Emily Herrick Poole, who died Jan. 28, 1883.

(III) Mary Mumford Anthony, daughter of James W. and Hannah, was born July 31, 1829, and died July 24, 1832.

(III) James Green Anthony, son of James W. and Hannah, born June 10, 1833, died Sept. 3, 1834.

(III) James E. Anthony, son of James W. and Hannah, was born Sept. 16, 1835, at Kingstown Hill, R. I., and there spent his boyhood days. In his early manhood he was a merchant at that place. From the spring of 1857 to 1890 he was actively engaged in farming, at Point Judith, R. I., and in 1897 sold his homestead to a Mr. Kinney and (Dec. 6) located at Wakefield. Mr. Anthony is imposing in appearance, being fully six feet in height. He was married to Miss Mary A. Kenyon, Sept.

17, 1856, and by her is the father of two children, Elizabeth A. and Mary.

(IV) Elizabeth Arnold Anthony, daughter of James and Mary, was born March 10, 1859, and May 20, 1878, married William G. Gould. One child, William James, was born to this union, April 6, 1879.

(IV) Mary Anthony, daughter of James and Mary, born Aug. 9, 1871, died Sept. 3, 1871.

(IV) Francis Wayland Anthony, M. D., of Bradford, Mass., was born Aug. 25, 1858, son of George N. Anthony. He practices his profession in Bradford, Mass. He married Alice Safford, and they are the parents of Charles and Frederick.

(IV) Mary Stuart Anthony, daughter of George N. Anthony, was born Aug. 19, 1861.

(IV) Bessie Robbins Anthony, daughter of George N. Anthony, was born March 17, 1868, and died April 26, 1869.

Green Kenyon, the maternal grandfather of James E. Anthony, was born Jan. 13, 1763, and died July 18, 1831. He was married Sept. 30, 1787, (first) to Sarah Armstrong, who was born May 27, 1771, and died Jan. 26, 1792, and (second) Sept. 29, 1792, to Hannah Armstrong. To the second marriage came a family of twelve children, as follows: Nathaniel A., born Nov. 10, 1793; Sarah, March 10, 1796; Green, Oct. 15, 1797; Hannah, Sept. 2, 1799; Clarissa, Aug. 13, 1801; Matilda, Dec. 25, 1803; James T., April 9, 1805; Lucinda, Dec. 9, 1807; Thomas A., April 20, 1810; Ann, April 15, 1812; George W., Nov. 20, 1814; and Nathan, March 10, 1818.

JOHN MASON, one of Newport's enterprising and successful business men in the contracting and building line, is also a universally esteemed resident of that city. He was born at Greenock, Scotland, March 14, 1840, son of John and Jean (Blackwood) Mason.

Mr. Mason comes of a sturdy Scotch family, and in tracing his ancestry we find that his great-great-grandfather, James Mason, was a farmer in Edinkillie, Scotland, and that he married Ann Leitch.

Hugh Mason, son of James and Ann Mason, was also a farmer of Edinkillie, and he married Helen Graham, of Duchrie Castle, Scotland.

James Mason, son of Hugh and Helen Mason, was a builder and carpenter, at Hilton, Scotland, and he married Elizabeth Barclay. Not only all loyal Scots, but lovers of romance and literature everywhere, have read the absorbing story of the carrying off of the bride in the tale of "Rob Roy," and in Elizabeth Smith, mother of Elizabeth Barclay, it had its prototype. The children of James and Elizabeth Mason were: James, John, Archibald, Ellen, Margaret, Elizabeth and Jean. James Mason lost his property in 1812 on account of the sudden rise in the price of lumber.

John Mason

John Mason, son of James and Elizabeth Mason, died in Scotland, aged sixty-five years. By trade he was a stonemason and for many years during the latter part of his life he was building inspector at Greenock. He was a man of ample fortune and local prominence. He married Jean Blackwood, who died in Scotland, aged sixty-four years, daughter of Andrew Blackwood, who was a master of vessels sailing from Greenock. While on a return voyage from Buenos Ayres his vessel was captured by a French privateer. In turn Capt. Andrew Blackwood and his crew overpowered their captors and recaptured their vessel, and while running her through the British Channel, his vessel was again captured, by another French privateer. Captain Blackwood was made a prisoner, later dying in a French prison. The following children were born to John and Jean Mason: James, who was a grocer, died in Hamilton, Scotland; John is the subject of this sketch; Amelia married Peter Lewis and died in Scotland; Joseph is a retired blacksmith in Strathavon, Scotland; Elizabeth Barclay died in Scotland, unmarried.

John Mason, our subject proper, was born March 14, 1840, in Greenock, Scotland, and was educated in the common schools of his native land, which he attended until twelve years of age. He then began as clerk in a wholesale grocery store owned by Robert Lusk, brother of Sir Andrew Lusk, of London, remaining in that connection for five years, after which he was in the sugar refinery of Blair, Reed & Steel, all of Greenock, for three years. He then started to learn the trade of carpenter with Crawford & Fulton, at Greenock, and was there five years, continuing to work at this trade until 1871, when he started for America. He sailed from his native city on an Anchor line steamship, the old "Caledonia," which, after a voyage of twenty-one days, landed him in New York. There he followed his trade for one year and then went to Fall River for a short time, reaching Newport Jan. 1, 1872. Here he worked for Augustus Call for a time and then for ten years was in the repair shop of the Old Colony railroad, in the steamboat carpenter's department.

After this long and varied experience Mr. Mason felt himself qualified to enter into business for himself and he formed a partnership with Duncan McLean, with whom he was associated until September, 1900. Since that date Mr. Mason has been engaged in building and contracting alone and has become one of the leading men in his line in the city. Among the many buildings which he has erected may be mentioned the magnificent residence and ornate stables on "Sandy Point Farm," a property belonging to Reginald C. Vanderbilt, in the town of Portsmouth. He also put up the building for the Newport Historical Society, on Touro street.

Mr. Mason is a member of the Masonic fraternity, holding membership in St. John's Lodge,

No. 1, A. F. & A. M.; Newport Chapter, No. 2, R. A. M.; De Blois Council, No. 5, R. & S. M.; and Washington Commandery, No. 4, K. T., of Newport. He is also a member of St. Andrew's Society, Scottish Clans, of which he served as president for three terms. In politics Mr. Mason is a Republican, but he is no seeker for public honors.

In September, 1873, Mr. Mason was married to Janet Weir, who died Oct. 14, 1874, in Newport, without issue. He was married (second) June 26, 1890, to Rachel A. Conklin, of Ramsey, N. J. She belongs to an old and substantial family of that State and is a daughter of Albert Conklin, who traces his American ancestry to the Revolutionary war. The children of this marriage are: James, Natalie Havemeyer, John, Jr., Edith and Winnifred.

Mr. Mason is one of the leading members of the United Congregational Church and he has several times been a member of the standing committee. He is a man whose honorable principles, untiring industry and technical knowledge have brought him financial success, while his many sterling traits of character have given him a wide circle of friends, and as a citizen he commands and enjoys the esteem and respect of the entire community.

HOLBROOK (Providence family). The Holbrooks in the mother country, England, says Morse, were an ancient and distinguished family, one of the name as early as the reign of Richard II being advanced to the order of Knighthood and a coat-of-arms assigned him. The family there was one of character and consideration. A number of the name came early to New England. Morse has made the earliest heads of families at Weymouth, Mass., John and Thomas Holbrook, brothers. Through Thomas Holbrook has descended the Providence branch of the Holbrook family, which in brief is reviewed in this article. Reference is made to the family and ancestry of the late Abel Holbrook and as well to some of his descendants, especially to the families of Charles W. and the late Albert Holbrook, long prominent manufacturers of Providence, succeeded by the sons of the latter, Messrs. George A., Albert and Charles W. Holbrook, all now among the leading business men and substantial citizens of Providence.

In the genealogy that follows the order is chronological, the Roman numerals indicating generations:

(I) Thomas Holbrook, born in 1601, left Weymouth, England, in 1635, with his wife Jane, each then aged thirty-four years, and their four children and came to America. He was called of Broadway, which is situated near Weymouth and Dorchester, Dorsetshire, England. He is of record at Weymouth, Mass., in 1640, having settled in that part of the town called Old Spain. It is judged from the records that he was one of the leading settlers of the town. He was selectman in 1641, 1645, 1646, 1651, 1652 and 1654. He was one of the grantees of Rehoboth, Mass., in 1645, but forfeited his share for the reason that he did not go there and settle. He was a member of the committee in 1649 to lay out a highway from Weymouth to Dorchester, Mass. His will was proved April 24, 1677. His children were: John, born about 1620; Thomas, born in 1625; William; Elizabeth, born in 1634; and James.

(II) Capt. John Holbrook, son of Thomas, born about 1620, married (first) Sarah, (second) Elizabeth Stream; she died in 1688, and he married (third) Widow Mary Loring. Capt. Holbrook was a man of considerable prominence, as his fellow townsmen reposed in him much confidence. He seems to have inherited the old homestead in Old Spain. He was made a freeman in 1640. He served as selectman in 1648. He was representative from Weymouth to the General Court in 1651, 1664, 1669, 1671, 1672 and 1673. He was a large landholder and quite a speculator and money lender. He commanded a company in King Philip's war, and rendered to the settlement signal service. His death occurred Nov. 23, 1699. His children were: John; Abiezer; Samuel; and Hannah (born to the first marriage); Sarah; Elizabeth; Mary; Lois, born in 1658; Eunice, born in 1658; Experience, born in 1661; and Ichabod, born in 1662.

(III) Ichabod Holbrook, son of Capt. John, born May 20, 1662, married Sarah Turner, who died a widow Dec. 20, 1739. Ichabod inherited the homestead of his father and grandfather in Old Spain, Weymouth, Mass., where he died Dec. 14, 1718. Their children were: Abiezer, born May 7, 1689; David, born in September, 1690; Sarah, born Jan. 13, 1694; Elisha; and John, born Nov. 28, 1699.

(IV) David Holbrook, son of Ichabod, born in September, 1690, married in 1716, Mary Pittey, and they settled in the town of Weymouth, Mass., thence removed to Braintree, Mass. Their children were: David, born June 26, 1717; Ichabod, born March 12, 1719; Nehemiah, born May 16, 1722; Mary, born Nov. 21, 1726; and Ruth, baptized Dec. 13, 1730.

(V) Ichabod Holbrook (2), son of David, born March 17 (or 12), 1719, married Hannah Hayden, and they were received into the church in Braintree, Mass., in 1756. Their children were: Hannah, born Oct. 19, 1746; Ichabod, born May 26, 1748; Ebenezer, born March 29, 1749-50; Hannah, born Dec. 5, 1751; Thomas, born Oct. 7, 1754; and Nathaniel, baptized Oct. 8, 1758.

(VI) Nathaniel Holbrook, son of Ichabod (2), baptized Oct. 8, 1758, married in 1779, Ruth Mann, born March 9, 1756, daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Niles) Mann, he a descendant of Richard Mann through Thomas and Joseph Mann. Nathaniel Holbrook and family were residents of Braintree, Mass., and later perhaps of Rand, where he died July 6, 1845. Mrs. Holbrook died Dec. 29, 1837. Their children were: Nathaniel; Benjamin; —, a son; and Abel, baptized Oct. 18, 1761.

(VII) Abel Holbrook, son of Nathaniel, baptized Oct. 18, 1761, resided in Braintree, Mass. To him and his wife Betsey were born Calvin, William and Abel.

(VIII) Abel Holbrook (2), son of Abel, born April 5, 1788, married June 13, 1812, Sarah Smith Hopkins, born July 26, 1788, daughter of Uriah and Lucy (Lanksford), of Scituate and Providence, R. I., and a descendant of Thomas Hopkins, one of the early settlers of Rhode Island, through Thomas (2), Amos and Uriah Hopkins.

(IX) ALBERT HOLBROOK, son of Abel and Sally, born Feb. 5, 1813, in Providence, R. I., married Jan. 8, 1838, Abby Olney Angell, born June 23, 1811, daughter of Charles and Susan (Westcott) Angell, and a descendant of Thomas Angell who came with Roger Williams in the ship "Lion" from London to Boston, thence to Salem, where he was with Williams, 1631-36, and was an original proprietor of Providence in 1638, his lineage from Thomas being through John, Hope, Oliver, Hope (2) and Charles Angell.

Mr. Holbrook's early life began under the most inauspicious circumstances, his father dying when he was but six years of age, and he was left motherless before he was twelve years of age. In November, 1824, when in his twelfth year the lad was sent to live with Mr. Benjamin Lewis, of Providence, with the understanding that he was to serve an apprenticeship at the mason's trade with that gentleman, who had married a relative of the family. His term of service had its beginning in the early summer following his twelfth birthday, when he became engaged as a brick-layer on a building which was being erected at the North End in Providence by Mr. William Randall. This was followed up by a continuance in the various branches of the mason trade, which then embraced many features now divided up into separate and special pursuits and vocations. For about ten months in 1827-28 he labored on the Providence Arcade, and, perhaps, at the time of his death was the only one then living who engaged in this department of its construction. Among other prominent buildings in the construction of which he was engaged was the Newport Steam Factory, in the summer of 1831, followed in the autumn of that year by a short service on the No. One Mill of the Lonsdale Company in Smithfield, Rhode Island.

In 1833 at the solicitation of his uncle, Mr. Benjamin Holbrook, who was a member of the firm of J. Cunliff & Co., manufacturers of loom pickers, Mr. Holbrook entered into their employ and so continued until August, 1842, when, associated with his brother, Mr. C. W. Holbrook, he was one of the originators of the present business of A. & C. W.

Holbrook, manufacturers of raw-hide goods, which at first consisted principally of loom pickers. This connection lasted until June, 1868, when Charles retired, and Albert's sons, George A., Albert, Jr., and Charles W. Holbrook (2), joined with their father in the continuance of the business. Advancing age with its infirmities prompted his retirement from active business in the firm after his three sons were established, but his personal interest in the growth of the business and its success remained unabated throughout his long life.

Mr. Holbrook was greatly interested in historical and genealogical matters, and for perhaps more than twenty years prior to his death devoted much time and research to this line of study, embodying many of the results of his labors in publications of various kinds, through the press and periodicals as well as in pamphlet and book form. His efforts in this line of work have been of great public value and wide spread interest, generally taking a broad range, covering a large field, and his services have been ever and freely at the command of any and all inquirers who approached him with general or specific queries relating to his favorite subjects in which they were interested. That such services have been keenly appreciated is evidenced by the many authors whose acknowledgments appear in their publications, and by the multitude of letters of inquiries he received from different persons resident in Rhode Island and abroad. The class of historical matter, outside of the genealogical, to which he especially devoted himself, is mainly confined to details pertaining to the North End, in Providence. A serial of several numbers, entitled "Ancient North End Landmarks, by an Old Resident," covered a large field and showed up the forgotten origin of many old homesteads, with details of the personal history of some of the people connected with them. In the genealogical field, one of the most interesting works was published in 1881, entitled "One Line of the Hopkins Family," covering the line of Governor Stephen Hopkins and his brother, the Commodore, but not the one from which the author descended; although comparatively brief, it embraces nearly every male member belonging to the line that bore the name of Hopkins, and all females born of that line. The line to which the author belonged were more numerous—excessively so; he intended to follow this out, but the task was beyond his strength with his numerous cares, although under the title of "Notes of the Hopkins Family" he contributed several articles to the Narragansett Historical Register. At an early period in his life he was very well acquainted with the famous Commodore's family then living, and was frequently sent to the old homestead on errands briefly alluded to in the genealogical work referred to. As his grandfather, Uriah Hopkins, and the Commodore were second cousins, the association between the author's people and the Commodore's descendants continued until most of the latter had passed away. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Holbrook were: George Abel, born Oct. 4, 1838, married May 18, 1869, Mary Helen Smith; Frank Pinkney, born May 14, 1842, died July 8, 1844; Albert, born Oct. 7, 1845, died Nov. 28, 1904; Charles William was born Sept. 10, 1848; Uriah Hopkins, born Nov. 10, 1850, died May 8, 1884.

These children trace their ancestry back to ten different persons who came to America prior to 1700, namely: On the Holbrook side to Thomas, and to those who settled in Rhode Island; to Thomas Hopkins, William Arnold, William Wickenden and John Smith; and on their mother's side to Thomas Angell, Stukely Westcott, Roger Williams, Thomas Olney and William Dyer.

(X) GEORGE ABEL HOLBROOK, born Oct. 4, 1838, graduated from Brown University in 1861. He was in the United States Mustering office in Providence during 1861-65, and from 1865 to 1868, was in the Union Railroad office. On June 1, 1868, he became a partner in his father's business. On May 18, 1869, he married Mary Helen Smith, in Lincoln, R. I., and they had one child, Helen Westcott.

(X) ALBERT HOLBROOK, born Oct. 7, 1845, died Nov. 28, 1904. He married Nov. 22, 1871, Clara J. Olney, and they had one child, Herbert Olney, born April 2, 1878. He married, March 16, 1904, Fannie Clemmons Borden, daughter of Granville Borden.

(X) CHARLES WILLIAM HOLBROOK, born Sept. 10, 1848, married Sarah D. King. They had no children.

(X) URIAH HOPKINS HOLBROOK, born Nov. 10, 1850, died May 8, 1884. He graduated from Brown University and the Medical Department of Harvard University. He married Anne Augusta Olney, who died Jan. 12, 1879, and one child, Anna Olney, was born to them, Jan. 12, 1879. On Oct. 10, 1900, she married George W. Sweet, and to them have come two children: Richmond Holbrook, born Sept. 29, 1903; and Caroline, born May 7, 1905.

LAURENCE W. COUDRAY, who conducts the Lappin Store, in Newport, R. I., is one of the enterprising and progressive young business men of that city. He is a direct descendant of Miles Standish, who sought the hand of Priscilla Mullins in marriage through his friend, John Alden. On both the paternal and maternal sides Mr. Coudray is descended from several of New England's old and time honored families. He was born in Woodstock, Vt., Dec. 30, 1870, one of the five children of William H. Coudray, who still resides in Hartford, Conn., where he is now living retired, and his wife, Adelaide Butler.

Mr. Coudray received his early educational training in the common schools of his native town, and at Hartford and Wethersfield, Conn. Leaving school at the age of fourteen years, he became a clerk for Amadon & Co., of Wethersfield, in whose employ he remained about one year. He then accepted a position with C. H. Russell, butter and egg commission merchant of Hartford, with whom he remained for several years. In 1892 Mr. Coudray came to Newport, R. I., to establish a branch store for Mr. Russell, and, after conducting the same for about a year he resigned his position and established himself in the butter, egg and provision business, continuing in this line for about one year. He then closed out this business to become associated with the Lappin Store, with which enterprising business house he has since been connected.

Socially Mr. Coudray is a member of Newport Lodge, No. 104, B. P. O. Elks. He and his wife are attendants of the Baptist Church, to which they give their support. On Jan. 1, 1894, Mr. Coudray married Mollie B. Lappin, daughter of Francis and Catherine (Rogers) Lappin, of Baltimore, Md., where for a number of years Mr. Lappin was a shipping merchant. To Mr. and Mrs. Coudray have been born two children: Robert Carter, Dec. 23, 1896; and Laine Marie, April 22, 1900.

The Lappin Store was established in 1891 in a small store-room at No. 149 Thames street, by Mrs. Coudray, and later removed to No. 145 Thames street, where the business was continued until 1903, in which year it was removed to the Lappin building, at No. 147 Thames street, a two-story brick block built to house this enterprising store, which has since been located there. From a small beginning the business has grown steadily until it is now recognized to be one of the leading stores of Newport, carrying a large and complete stock of ladies' and children's furnishings, etc., in all grades, and giving employment to twenty-five clerks. The business-like methods and the courteous manner displayed in the Lappin Store to all customers is one of the secrets of the success of this well-known establishment. Another is the enterprise and energy of Mr. and Mrs. Coudray, who have made themselves and their store well-known examples of industry.

SHELDON. The Rhode Island Sheldons belonging to the old stock descend from the two Johns, John Sheldon of Providence and John Sheldon of Kings Town, the latter here as early as 1679, and the former as early as 1675. The descendants of John of Providence have lived largely in the several towns created out of ancient Providence, while those of John of Kingstown have resided largely at South Kingstown. One branch of the Providence-Cranston family has been prominently represented in Pawtucket, and for perhaps half a century in and about the village of Wakefield in South Kingstown. Among the Sheldons have been both at Providence and in their various communities throughout the State some of their most substantial and useful men and women, many prominent in business life. The Sheldons have been allied by marriage with some of the first families of the Commonwealth, among them the Williams, Arnold, Waterman, Potter, Anthony, Greene and Olney families. The family, too, was well represented in the war of the Revolution, among those participating in that struggle being Daniel, Edward, Ezekiel, Job, Jonathan, Nathan, Pardon, William, Asa, Nathaniel and Roger.

Nicholas Sheldon, great-grandfather of John L. Sheldon, a farmer of Cranston, R. I., married Phebe, daughter of Caleb Potter, of Cranston, R. I., who was a soldier of the Revolution, a private in the Captain General's Company, a corps of cavalry under command of Col. Benjamin Slack, and Col. Manton, which did service during the war of the Revolution in the expedition to Rhode Island, from July 24 to Aug. 31, 1778. Mr. Potter also served in Capt. Charles Holden, Jr.'s, company during the month of November, 1780. The children of Nicholas and Phebe (Potter) Sheldon were: Joseph, who died April 16, 1849; Pardon, who died Dec. 30, 1851; Jeremiah, born Feb. 11, 1791, and died June 26, 1867; and William.

Jeremiah Sheldon, born Feb. 11, 1791, in Cranston, son of Nicholas, was a successful farmer and a popular landlord. He was also prominent in the affairs of his county, and represented his town in the General Assembly. He married Sally A. Wilmarth, born Feb. 5, 1794, daughter of Stephen Wilmarth, of Glocester, R. I. Their issue was: Phebe, born in 1813; George Ware, Feb. 22, 1816; Joseph, in 1818; Jeremiah, in 1821; Nicholas, in 1823; Maranda W., in 1825; Nicholas (2), in 1828; Sarah A., in 1830; Nancy W., in 1825; and Anne S., in 1837.

George Ware Sheldon was born Feb. 22, 1816, in Cranston, R. I. When a lad he removed with his parents to Chepachet, and was educated at the common schools, early developing an independent and self-reliant character, yet ever exhibiting a genial and generous nature, which endeared him to his companions and friends. Until his marriage he remained with his father, assisting him in the conduct of the hotel and the management of his business. Mr. Sheldon then opened a store in the town of Burrillville. A year and a half later he changed his location to Thompson, Conn., and there for seven years transacted a lucrative business. After a brief interval at Chepachet, he made his home at Wakefield, and here established a hardware and furnishing trade, which increased in magnitude as the years went by. He was greatly absorbed in business, and cared little for the distinctions of a political career, though serving his town three times in the Legislature. He was of a retiring nature and preferred the peace and rest of his home to the excitement of official life. He was a director of the Wakefield Institution for Savings, and interested in all movements that tended to the welfare of the town. In 1856 he united with the Baptist Church in Wakefield, and in that faith he died July 8, 1879.

On Feb. 7, 1842, George Ware Sheldon married Ann F., daughter of Hezekiah Cady, of Gloucester, R. I. She died April 9, 1906. Their children were: Elizabeth C., who married Edward T. Allen, of San Francisco; Mary C., widow of Jerome P. Hubbard; Jeremiah C., a resident of Barrington, R. I., who married Lizzie Arenstrong; Emma S., who married William A. Kenyon; Georgianna, who married Albert Langworthy; and John Loveland.

The Sheldon block was built on land to one side of T. A. Gardner's office, the largest building in the town, and Mr. Sheldon first went into business in the small building there. The new building was moved to its present location in 1900, another story put under, and the store widened, making a store of four stories, forty-five feet front, with cellar.

JOHN LOVELAND SHELDON was born in Wakefield, R. I., April 8, 1855. He spent his school days in Wakefield public schools, Lovell's private school in New Haven, and East Greenwich Academy. He learned the tinsmith's trade with his father and brother. Upon the death of his father, he and Jeremiah C., formed the G. W. Sheldon Company, which continued until 1886, when his brother retired, and the firm became J. L. Sheldon.

Mr. Sheldon married in Wakefield, R. I., in September, 1884, Wennona J. Hubbard, of New Haven, daughter of Jerome P. Hubbard, by his first wife. These children have been born to this union: Frank Hubbard, born June 28, 1885; and George Ware, March 29, 1887.

ARNOLD (Pawtucket family). The family of Arnold is of great antiquity, having its origin among the ancient princes of Wales. According to a pedigree recorded in the College of Arms they trace from Yuir, King of Gwentland, who flourished about the middle of the twelfth century, and who was paternally descended from Yuir, the second son of Cadwalader, King of the Britons; which Cadwalader built Abergavenny, in the County of Monmouth, and its castle, which was afterward rebuilt by Hamlet ap Hamlet, ap Sir Druce of Balladon, in France, and portions of the walls still remain.

The first of the family to adopt a surname was Roger Arnold, a descendant in the twelfth generation from Yuir. Roger was of Llanthony, in Monmouthshire, and married Joan, daughter of Sir Thomas Gamage, Knight, Lord of Coytey.

From the foregoing source descended the two Arnold Brothers who came to America and were the progenitors of the numerous and distinguished Arnold family of Rhode Island, various branches of which are given in these volumes. Their lineage from Roger Arnold is through Thomas, Richard,

Richard (2) and Thomas (2). The latter lived for a time at Melcombe Housey, from which place he removed to Cheselbourne, settling himself on an estate previously belonging to his father. He was twice married, first to Alice, daughter of John Guley, of North Over, she being the mother of William Arnold, the immigrant to America; and to his second marriage was born Thomas, the other son who crossed the ocean to the New World. Of these sons, Thomas Arnold settled at Watertown, Mass., as early as 1640, and removed to Providence not far from 1661. Here he was several times deputy and a member of the town council. William Arnold, the other immigrant, sailed from Dartmouth, England, with his family May 1, 1635. He was for a time at Hingham, Mass., but removed to Providence in the spring of 1636. Two years later he removed to Pawtucket. Several of the sons of Thomas became conspicuous public men in Providence, Richard being many times deputy and assistant, speaker of the House of Deputies, etc.; and Thomas and Eleazer were often deputies and members of the town council. Likewise several of the sons of William Arnold were prominent public men. Benedict, who removed to Newport, was many times commissioner and assistant, president of the four towns then established and governor for some ten years, and Stephen was many times deputy and assistant.

Much is said elsewhere of the descendants of Thomas and William Arnold and as well the family genealogy given, it being here the purpose to refer briefly to the family of the late John P. Arnold, who was a resident during the latter years of his life of the town of Exeter, R. I., where both he and his wife died, and where rest their remains. Mr. Arnold in his active years was a skilful mill man, and for years was superintendent of the mills at Natick, and of the Brandt Iron Works at Wyoming, this State. His wife, formerly Miss Honor Williams, bore him the following named children: Olney, Thomas Williams, Preston A. and Philetus.

It is especially desired to note in this article a grandson of the late John P. Arnold, who through the sheer force of his make-up has steadily risen from a boy of humble surroundings to position and wealth, who for twenty-five years has held responsible positions in one of Pawtucket's extensive industries and the largest of its kind in the world, and whose strong personality has been for years constantly felt in many of the large enterprises of Rhode Island, where as president and director his reputation as a successful promoter and business man has long been established. Reference is made to John Albert Arnold, long secretary of the extensive establishment of The J. & P. Coats Company, Limited, and president and treasurer of the Narragansett Machine Company.

The late Thomas Williams Arnold, son of John P. and Honor (Williams) Arnold, and the father of John Albert and Preston A. Arnold, was a native of Richmond, R. I. In due time he was married to Miss Lucy W. Wheeler, and much of their married life was passed in Providence. Mr. Arnold was occupied respectively as a house and carriage painter. Some half dozen years prior to his death he made his home in East Providence, where his death occurred Oct. 15, 1902, when he was aged seventy-five years. Mrs. Arnold passed away in 1867, and both were buried in Locust Grove cemetery, Elmwood, in the city of Providence. They were plain, unassuming people, who made good citizens and kind neighbors, living esteemed and respected by those who knew them. Their children were: John A., of whom more presently; Stephen T., a resident of San Francisco, Cal.; Earl V., a carriage manufacturer of Providence; George W., also a carriage manufacturer, late of Pawtucket, now deceased; Preston A., a successful produce dealer of Providence.

JOHN ALBERT ARNOLD, son of Thomas Williams and Lucy W. (Wheeler) Arnold, was born Jan. 18, 1851, in Providence, R. I., and in the common and grammar schools of the city acquired the foundation of his education. When yet a lad he seized the opportunity opened up to him and began his business training as clerk in the establishment of Daniel Lyman, a dealer in oil. From this position he went to that of an enameler of jewelry, learning the art and working for Mr. John P. Marshall of Providence. This work, however, he was engaged in but a short period, giving it up for one more pleasing to his taste. He soon began a clerkship in the National Bank of North America at Providence, which was followed after an experience of some two years by a similar one in the Merchants' National Bank of the same city. About three years later he was made teller in the Pacific National Bank of Pawtucket, a position he held with acceptability to all concerned for some thirteen years; and it was perhaps this training, this experience and fidelity to trust and several acquaintances going with it through the years as they came and went, which so admirably fitted him for more exalted station, which no doubt those seeking his services were cognizant of. His time now apparently came. In 1883 he was made secretary of what was then the Conant Thread Company of Pawtucket. Suffice it to add that he remained through almost twenty-five succeeding years with the extensive institution with which he practically grew up, aiding materially in its development. This institution, now The J. & P. Coats Company, Limited, is the largest thread manufacturing concern in the world, having, as it does, factories in various parts of this and other countries, in fact all over the civilized world.

Besides the position just alluded to, Mr. Arnold has been variously interested, and officially connected with many enterprises. Since Jan. 1, 1907, he has been giving his personal attention to his extensive private interests. He is president and treasurer, as well as controlling factor, of the Narragansett Machine Company of Pawtucket; director and member of the finance committee of the Slater Trust Company of Pawtucket; director and member of the finance committee of the Pawtucket Institution for Savings; director and member of the executive committee of the Pawtucket Gas Company; director of the William H. Haskell Manufacturing Company of Pawtucket; president and director of the Taunton & Pawtucket Railway Company, and a member of the executive committee of the road; director of the American Hair Cloth Company; director of the New Bedford and Onset Street Railway Company; director of the Dixfield Light and Improvement Company, and member of the executive committee, director of the N. S. Stowell Spool and Wood Turning Company, of Dixfield, Maine, and member of the executive committee, and dominates the policy of both these concerns; and president and director of the Arnold Realty Company of Pawtucket.

Mr. Arnold is a Republican in politics and has served his adopted city as collector of taxes for several years. He is a member of the Sinking Fund Commission of Pawtucket. He attends the Universalist Church, to which he gives his liberal support. Mr. Arnold is a member of Pawtucket Council, No. 537, Royal Arcanum; Hope Lodge, No. 186, Knights of Honor; the Bank Clerks' Association of Providence; and the Pawtucket Business Men's Association.

On March 2, 1870, Mr. Arnold was united in marriage with Miss Emily E. Foster, daughter of Atwell M. and Laura M. (Coman) Foster, of Gloucester, R. I., and to this union one son has been born, Fred A. Arnold.

Fred A. Arnold was born June 28, 1873, in Pawtucket. He is engaged in the banking and brokerage business with Estabrook & Company, of Boston, Mass., and resides in Brookline, Mass. He married Anna Lenz, of Providence, and they have one daughter, Mary L. Arnold, born Aug. 23, 1904.

PRESTON ADDISON ARNOLD was born in Providence June 11, 1861, son of Thomas Williams and Lucy W. (Wheeler) Arnold, and grandson of John P. and Honor (Williams) Arnold. He was educated in the Warren street and Bridgham street schools in Providence, the Potowomut school and the East Greenwich Academy. For a year he clerked in the Potowomut store for Stafford & Co., and for a year for J. C. Balcom, ship chandler on India street, Providence. In 1880 he became a clerk in the well-known Calef Brothers' market on North Main street, and subsequently was with their successors, L. A. and T. C. Gladding. In 1901 Mr. Arnold succeeded them, becoming sole proprietor of Calef Brothers' Market, which was established in 1842. Mr. Arnold is a member of the Providence Board of Trade. Socially he belongs to the B. P. O. E., No. 14, to the West Side Club and the Pomham Club.

On Nov. 19, 1890, Preston A. Arnold was married to Grace E., daughter of George J. and Helen (Potter) Hampson.

CHAMPLIN. The Champlins of Westerly are descended from

(I) Geoffrey, Jeoffrey or Jeffrey Champlin, the emigrant, born in 1621. His children were: Jeffrey, born at Newport in 1650; William, born in 1654, married Mary, daughter of James Babcock; and Christopher, born in 1656, and died at Westerly, April 2, 1732, was twice married, his second wife being Elizabeth, widow of William Davel.

(II) Jeffrey Champlin (2), son of Jeffrey, died at Kingstown in 1715. He had two sons: Jeffrey and William.

(III) Jeffrey Champlin (3), son of Jeffrey (2), married Susannah, daughter of Thomas and Susannah (Cole) Eldred, and they had issue as follows: Emblem, born Jan. 30, 1701; Jeffrey, born Feb. 2, 1703. Jeffrey Champlin (3) married (second) Hannah, and they had three children: Thomas, born Sept. 3, 1708; Steven, born Feb. 16, 1710; and William, born March 3, 1712. His third wife was Susannah, who bore him two children: Hannah, born Jan. 11, 1714; and John, born Feb. 12, 1716. Jeffrey Champlin (3) died in 1717, his will being dated Feb. 14th of that year and proved March 10, 1718.

(IV) John Champlin, son of Jeffrey (3), married Freelope Watson, daughter of John Watson, of South Kingstown, and their children were: John, born July 30, 1744; Samuel, born July 17, 1746; William, born Aug. 15, 1749; Steven, born Aug. 27, 1751; Thomas, born Jan. 23, 1754; Abigail, born June 23, 1756; Elisha, born Nov. 11, 1758; Susannah, born Oct. 31, 1761; Freelope, born June 15, 1767. John Champlin died Sept. 8, 1772, and his wife, who was born in South Kingstown, died in Exeter, May 10, 1773.

(V) Samuel Champlin, son of John, born July 17, 1746, was married Dec. 10, 1782, to Alice B., daughter of Benjamin and Alice (Waite) Reynolds, of Exeter, R. I. Their six children were: John, born March 26, 1784; Benjamin, May 9, 1786; Hannah, Dec. 30, 1788; Waity, March 30, 1791; Russel, July 23, 1793; and Samuel, Aug. 24, 1796. Samuel Champlin died in Exeter, R. I., Nov. 1, 1818. His wife, Alice B., born July 21, 1755, died Oct. 23, 1825.

(VI) Benjamin Champlin, son of Samuel, married Elizabeth Sunderland, daughter of Captain Daniel and Annie (Harrington) Sunderland, of Exeter, R. I. She died April 10, 1816, the mother of five children: Alice, born in 1808, died Sept. 3, 1814; Mary, born in 1810, died March 22, 1816; John Reynolds, born Nov. 11, 1811; Daniel, Feb. 1816, died Sept. 21, 1814; and Elizabeth, born in January, 1816, died May 3, 1816. Benjamin Champlin married (second) Ruth Tefft, daughter of Clark and Mary (Rogers) Tefft, on March 20, 1817, and their children were: Clark Tefft, born Oct. 27, 1818; Benjamin Reynolds, born July 30, 1820; Samuel Anthony, July 28, 1822; George Franklin, June 20, 1824; and Mary Eliza, born June 19, 1827, married George Avery Smith, and died Jan. 29, 1899. Benjamin Champlin died May 18, 1847. His wife Ruth, born Aug. 2, 1789, died March 10, 1837. Both were buried in the Seventh Day Baptist cemetery in Hopkinton.

Benjamin Champlin was born in the eastern part of the town of Exeter, R. I., May 9, 1786. He obtained a good common school education, but not being of a professional turn of mind, gave up his studies and assisted in the management of his father's estate. In the spring of 1830 he bought a farm in the eastern part of the town of Westerly, which, with land subsequently purchased, amounted to 300 acres. It was afterward known as the "Benjamin Champlin Estate."

(VII) John Reynolds Champlin, son of Benjamin, was born Nov. 11, 1811, in Exeter, R. I., and Oct. 13, 1852, married Phoebe Mowry, daughter of Abram and Sila (Vallette) Baker, of Burrillville, R. I. Their children were: Albert Reynolds, born April 12, 1854, died April 7, 1895, in his room at the "Dixon House," Westerly; Phoebe Elizabeth, born March 29, 1857, married Oct. 24, 1877, John Edmund Kendrick, and died Sept. 20, 1892, without issue; John Herbert, born June 18, 1862, died Nov. 29, 1862; and John Herbert (2), born March 28, 1865, married May 6, 1892, Emily Mary, daughter of William Stewart Anthony and Emily Mary (Mason) Cooper, of Chicago, born at Hyeres, France, March 25, 1865, and they had children: John Frederick (born at Chicago, Jan. 25, 1893, and died there April 7, 1893), and Albert Reynolds (born at Westerly, Aug. 6, 1896).

John Reynolds Champlin died Jan. 9, 1892. He spent his boyhood days on the farm, receiving a good common school education, following which he taught school during the winters for some years, following agricultural pursuits in the summers. In 1837, at the age of twenty-six years, he came to Westerly, and established a dry goods and general mercantile business. In 1844 he entered into partnership with the late Stephen Wilcox, establishing a store on the site of that which he occupied at the time of his death. In 1853 Mr. Wilcox retired from the business, and Mr. Champlin continued it in his own name, making a specialty of boots and shoes. This business he carried on in the same place at No. 22 Main street nearly fifty years. He was the oldest merchant in Westerly, there being no one in business at the time of his death who was here when he began. Mr. Champlin was always regarded as one of Westerly's most reliable citizens, his word being above question, and his life that of a consistent Christian.

He always enjoyed exceptional health, having never called in a physician until attacked by pneumonia, which proved his last illness, and from which he died. He was a member of the Seventh Day Baptist Church. The business was carried on by his son Albert R., until his death, April 7, 1895, when it was taken over by John Herbert, who continued it until July, 1903, when he sold the business to Mr. Saunders.

(VIII) JOHN HERBERT CHAMPLIN, son of John Reynolds, born March 28, 1865, was educated in the schools of Westerly and Highland Military Academy, of Worcester, Mass. During three years afterwards he was engaged in a wholesale grocery house in Providence, and then went to Chicago, and was connected with Rand, McNally & Co., magazine publishers, until 1895, when he returned to Westerly. He is very prominent in Masonry, and is a member of Franklin Lodge, Palmer Chapter and Narragansett Commandery, Knights Templar.

(VII) Clark Tefft Champlin, son of Benjamin, married Laura Ann Phillips, daughter of Nathan and Sarah (Carr) Phillips, of Rockville, R. I., Oct. 2, 1842, and they had issue: George Clark, born Aug. 2, 1843; Amos Franklin, July 26, 1846; John Oaks; Helen Alvina, Sept. 18, 1853; Charles Fremont, Sept. 22, 1857, and Lily Bell, Jan. 9, 1864.

(VII) Benjamin Reynolds Champlin, son of Benjamin, born at Potter Hill, R. I., married Mary Ann Babcock, daughter of Captain Paul and Amy (Clark) Babcock, born May 21, 1812, who died March 9, 1884. They had three children: Mary Jane, born June 11, 1847; Ann Eliza, born April 13, 1849, married Dr. William D. Babcock, and died March 8, 1877; and George Franklin, born Oct. 8, 1857.

Benjamin Reynolds Champlin, with the exception of a short time in boyhood, when he lived in Hopkinton, has resided in the southwestern part of Westerly since 1857. For a considerable period he ran a planing machine for Maxson & Co., but the rest of the time he has been engaged in agricultural pursuits, the family settling on the Peleg Babcock farm in April, 1884. He has been a lifelong member of the Seventh Day Baptist Church.

(VIII) GEORGE FRANKLIN CHAMPLIN was born in the house now occupied by Dr. Webster on High street, in Westerly, Oct. 8, 1857. He spent his boyhood days in Westerly, and began farming when a boy, having engaged in that occupation in Westerly ever since. He married in Plainfield, Conn., Feb. 26, 1879, Hettie Edmund, daughter of Andrew Edmund, and sister of John T. Edmund. Their children are: Mary Eliza, born June 24, 1883; and Bessie Edmund, born Sept. 5, 1886.

ORIN BARNES, in his lifetime one of the well-known and highly respected citizens of Smithfield, is a descendant of one of the oldest families of the town.

(I) Thomas Barnes, the first of the family we find on record in America, was in Swansea, Mass., as early as 1669, and in 1689 was among the proprietors of Rehoboth, but not a resident there. In 1693 he was ordained as pastor of the Second Baptist Church, and continued in the pastorate until his death, which occurred June 8, 1706. He was twice married, the name of his first wife being Prudence, and after her death he married, Nov. 12, 1694, Mrs. Elizabeth King. The children, all born to the first marriage, were: Lydia married Thomas Olney, and died in 1722; Thomas, born Nov. 13, 1670, married Sarah Stone, and died Sept. 24, 1706; Sarah, born Aug. 27, 1672, married Benjamin Wight; Elizabeth, born Feb. 14, 1675, married John Bullock; Ann married Thomas Allen; John, born April 9, 1680, married Mercy Allen; Peter was born June 1, 1682; Samuel was born March 17, 1685; Hannah, born Dec. 21, 1689, married John Stone.

(II) Peter Barnes, son of Thomas, was a carpenter by trade, and resided first in Providence, but later located in Smithfield, on land acquired by his father from the Indians, the original deed for which, dated March 27, 1659, is in the possession of the family of Orin Barnes, and is in a perfect state of preservation. Some of this land has continued ever since in the family name, and is now owned by Mrs. A. P. Seville, daughter of Orin Barnes. The old house now standing about a half mile north of the late home of Orin Barnes was supposedly built by Peter Barnes, and remodelled by his son Enoch. Peter Barnes was made a freeman in 1708. He was a large landholder, and his property he divided into three farms, giving one to each of his sons. He continued to reside in Smithfield until his death, which occurred in 1757, and he was buried in a private yard on his farm. Peter Barnes was married Sept. 29, 1716, to Margaret Borden, widow of Joseph Borden, and daughter of Jonathan and Margaret (Angell) Whipple. Their children were: Nathan, born Aug. 29, 1718 (died unmarried); Enoch, Aug. 18, 1721; Lydia, Oct. 29, 1724; and John, Dec. 31, 1726 (removed to Connecticut).

(III) Capt. Enoch Barnes, born Aug. 18, 1721, was known as a very prosperous, active farmer, and owned a very fine orchard. He served as a justice of the peace, and was a foremost man in the community. He took such interest in religious matters that before the erection of any churches in his locality his home was the place where the people gathered for worship. He was married Feb. 23, 1751, to Alice Brown, of Gloucester, and they had one son, Levi, born March 1, 1753.

(IV) Col. Levi Barnes succeeded his father to the old home farm, and in addition to farming conducted a coopering business. He became one of the wealthiest men of the town, and was able to give each of his three sons a farm, already stocked, and to each of his six daughters $500 in cash, which at that time was a large sum of money. Levi Barnes saw service in the Revolutionary war as a private, serving at the defense of Newport, and it is related that his father, then quite old, but very spry and active, was a substitute for the son for a period at Newport. Colonel Barnes received his title as an officer in the militia, having been commissioned by Gov. John Collins, May 12, 1788, major of the 2d Regiment, Providence County Militia. This commission is now in the possession of the family of Orin Barnes. Later he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of the same regiment by Gov. Arthur Fenner, the commission, bearing the date of May 10, 1790, being also in the possession of the family of Orin Barnes. Colonel Barnes, like his father, was a religious man, and his home was frequently thrown open for religious services. When the Powder Mill turnpike was built Colonel Barnes gave one mile of the right of way through his land, with the stipulation that each member of his posterity might go toll-free as long as they owned and occupied the land. He erected a school-house near his home for his children and his neighbor's children, and the same building is now used as a dwelling.

Colonel Barnes was married July 2, 1775, to Hannah Waterman, daughter of Resolved Waterman, of Johnston, and she survived him. They had nine children, as follows: Jonathan, who married Nancy Lovell, and received from his father the farm occupied by the late Orin Barnes; Levi; Nathan, who died unmarried; Nancy, who married Annanias Mowry, and settled in what is now North Smithfield; Deborah, who married William Mowry, and also resided in North Smithfield; Hannah, who married (first) David Warren, and (second) Dennis Ballou, and resided in North Smithfield; Elsa, who married Asa Manning, of Smithfield; Mercy, who married Arnold Mowry, of North Smithfield; and Mary, who married Martin Tefft, and resided in Smithfield.

(V) Levi Barnes, son of Col. Levi, was born May 13, 1792, on the home farm, where he resided all his life, engaged in farming. He died Oct. 23, 1872, and was buried on his farm. In political opinion he was a Democrat, but he never accepted public office. He attended the First Baptist Church at Greenville. He married Joanna Payne, who was born Aug. 22, 1806, in what is now North Smithfield, daughter of Belah and Lydia (Latham) Payne. The Belah Payne farm, on which Mrs. Barnes was born, is now the site of the reservoir that furnishes the water supply for the city of Woonsocket. Mrs. Barnes died Sept. 14, 1859, the mother of children as follows: Smith W., born Sept. 24, 1823, was a farmer, and died at the house of his brother Orin, March 14, 1904, unmarried; Michael died in infancy; George W., born Aug. 8, 1826, was a farmer and died unmarried, Feb. 3, 1895; Orin was born July 5, 1828;

Levi, born April 9, 1833, also a farmer, died unmarried March 6, 1899; and Abbie N., born April 27, 1839, died Feb. 3, 1892, unmarried.

(VI) Orin Barnes, born July 5, 1828, on the homestead farm, was reared a practical farmer, receiving his school advantages during the winter months. He very early displayed superior business talent, and his father, recognizing this, turned over the management of the farm to him. Mr. Barnes continued to cultivate the home farm until 1867, when he purchased the farm where he died, of the heirs of his uncle, Jonathan Barnes, this farm being the same one given by Peter Barnes to his son, Nathan. It was necessary at this time for Mr. Barnes to go heavily into debt, but through industry and good management he was soon able to discharge his obligations. He made many substantial improvements on the farm, and owned one of the most attractive and productive properties in his section.

Mr. Barnes was married in Pawtucket, March 26, 1865, to Susan Estelle Allen, who was born Nov. 14, 1841, in what is now Lincoln, the only child of Ambrose Leonard and Sarah B. (Taylor) Allen. Ambrose L. Allen was born on Prudence Island, and his wife in Thompson, Conn. James Taylor, the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Barnes, was a native of England, and came of a family of wealth and position. He was an educated man, a school teacher and surveyor. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes had one daughter, Sarah Estelle, born May 11, 1874, who is of the sixth generation to reside on the property. She graduated from the Federal street grammar school in 1890, when Joseph Mowry was its principal, later attended the State Normal School for two years, has taken instruction in painting, and being naturally gifted has taught the same; she is a young woman of many accomplishments, thorough education and business comprehension. She was married Nov. 29, 1905, to Arthur P. Sebille.

In political faith Mr. Barnes was a lifelong Democrat. He served as a member of the town council of Smithfield, for many years was a member of the board of tax assessors, served as school trustee for several years, and for twenty-five years was surveyor of the highway. In each position he reflected credit upon himself, as a man of high integrity and noteworthy business judgment, and one whose advice was frequently sought on business matters. On this account he was frequently called upon to serve as administrator of estates and guardian of minor children. With his family Mr. Barnes attended and liberally supported the Universalist Church at Georgiaville. His acts of kindness and deeds of charity were many, and as a kind neighbor his acts of benevolence were numerous and substantial. Of a sympathetic nature and sentimental, his business practices were not always carried on for pecuniary gain. His death occurred

July 11, 1906, and he is buried in the family burying-ground on his farm, where now lie five generations of the family.

BABBITT. For a century—a hundred years—and more the members of the Babbitt family through three generations have been conspicuous in the social and business life of Bristol. About 1790 there came to the town of Bristol a young man who had about reached his majority, poor in purse but rich in energy and determination, who, then and there, practically penniless, began a career which terminated sixty years later, in 1850, when he was aged eighty-one years, in affluence and honor, for he long had been one of the wealthy and prominent men of the community, and one who had obtained his means and position through his own efforts and worth in legitimate business and force of character. This was Jacob Babbitt, whose son Jacob, the gallant Major Babbitt, who fell mortally wounded at Fredericksburg, worthily followed in the footsteps of the father, and in turn the latter's son, the late Edward S. Babbitt, of Providence and Bristol, most worthily bore the name, which with his death and that of a sister ceases in the old Plymouth Colony town.

Jacob Babbitt, the elder, was born Oct. 22, 1769, in Taunton, Mass., and was married to Bathsheba Stoddard, also a native of Taunton, born April 7, 1773. This marriage was blessed with one son, Jacob, born in 1809, and one daughter, Sarah, who married Scott Greene.

Jacob Babbitt, the elder, at the age of twenty-one, came to Bristol with limited education and little or no means, but he resolutely went about doing whatever came in his way to make a living. The years sped on and with them, through his uniform habits of industry, economy and enterprise, he prospered and grew in capacity, force and means until he stood one of the potent forces in Bristol life. He was a silversmith, later a merchant, and still later a manufacturer of cotton goods. He possessed good judgment and was generally successful in all his undertakings. Without possessing peculiar zeal for the public good, Mr. Babbitt was a useful citizen. He took an active interest in all industrial pursuits, and sincerely rejoiced in the prosperity of his neighbors and the community in general. Indeed, Bristol of his day was as much indebted to him as to any one individual, for whatever prosperity it enjoyed. Neither of the two cotton manufactories of that period would have been established without the assistance derived from him. So in the private relations of life, he seldom made professions of friendship, and never professed more than he really felt. Desiring to live on friendly terms with all and uniformly civil in his deportment, he took no pains, if he ever uttered a word, with the design of gaining approbation, of holding himself out to be better than he actually was. "So it always is," said one who had been associated with him in business relations for many years, on an occasion when some question had been settled about compensation for services, "so it always is—no one ever promises less, or is always more ready to be just and liberal with me." He was a sincere friend, remarkably free from envy or malice, and at all times and in all things an honest man in the highest and fullest sense of the word—honest not merely in his dealings, but in his views and sentiments, a lover of right, of truth and justice.

Mr. Babbitt, soon after he had established himself in Bristol, engaged in the Cuban trade, and when the war of 1812 had opened he continued to carry on the trade in spite of embargo and blockade. At that time his vessels sailed under the flag of Denmark, and often when disguised as dilapidated coasters brought heavy and valuable cargoes into the port of Bristol.

Mr. Babbitt was chosen one of the officers of the Bristol Train of Artillery at the first election, held April 7, 1796. In 1830 he served as a representative from Bristol in the General Assembly of the State. He died in Bristol March 8, 1850, and his widow passed away June 28, 1852.

Major Jacob Babbitt, son of Jacob, born in 1809, in Bristol, R. I., married Oct. 7, 1826, Abby Eliza, born in Bristol, R. I., Aug. 10, 1808, daughter of Dr. Lemuel W. Briggs, of Bristol, and granddaughter of Lemuel W. Briggs, of Middleboro, Mass., and to them came children as follows: James Williams, Jacob Williams (2) and Elizabeth Bourne, all of whom died in infancy; Rev. Benjamin Bosworth, D. D.; Edward S.; Sarah S., who married Dr. L. A. Martin, of Bristol; Mary Abby, who married S. Dana Greene, and Julia Emily.

Major Babbitt was educated in the military academy at Middletown, Conn. Having completed his studies he returned to his native town and in due time entered into manufacturing and agricultural pursuits, in which he showed great energy and devotion to business. He soon took his place among the most advanced business men of the community. The esteem in which he was held by his neighbors and the public generally was evinced by his selection to fill various offices of trust and honor, and by the fact of his having been chosen to represent his town in the General Assembly, in which body he served in 1843-1845 and 1846. His course there was such as to meet the general approval of the people, who conferred upon him other offices of trust and honor. To the fire department he devoted much time, greatly adding to its efficiency by the formation of King Philip Engine Company, which with its large list of members, its valuable library and great activity, soon became a credit to the town it served most faithfully. His influence with its members was such that, when President Lincoln called for first recruits, nearly the entire company joined him in tendering their services. He was for many years foreman of the company and acted as fire warden of the town. The system of water supply by pipes and hydrants, in connection with the force pumps of the mills, was largely due to his labor. He was instrumental in the organization of the Bristol Gas Works, of which he was chosen the president. Upon the resignation of his father he became the president of the Commercial Bank, both of which positions he held until his death. As a vestryman of St. Michael's Church he served most acceptably, and took active part as committeeman in building the new stone church, and as trustee of the new Juniper Hill cemetery was very useful in its establishment and adornment. In these and many similar duties he was ever mindful of the wants of his native town, and his fellow citizens in turn showed their appreciation of his abilities by sending him to represent them in the State Legislature, and availing themselves of his services in many honorable positions, both in business circles and in public service. His great love for aquatic pursuits led him to spend much of his time and means in this direction. He had ever a keen interest in the construction of sailing craft with a view to speed.

At the breaking out of the Civil war Mr. Babbitt felt an earnest desire to engage personally in the contest. On the organization of the 10th (three months') Regiment, R. I. V. I., in response to an urgent call from the Secretary of War, Mr. Babbitt accepted the position of major, and served until the time of that regiment had nearly expired, when he accepted the same position in the 7th (three years') Regiment, R. I. V. I., then being organized. Major Babbitt was enrolled in the 10th Regiment June 9, 1862, and mustered in on the same date. He was mustered out Sept. 1, 1862. He was appointed in the 7th Regiment, Sept. 1, 1862, and mustered in Sept. 6, 1862.

Although the military talent of Major Babbitt was acknowledged and undoubted, he declared from the first his determination to take no higher rank than that of major. His first duties were at Washington, where, by direction of the Governor, he took charge of the Rhode Island troops as they reported there for duty. On June 9, 1862, he had returned home and was mustered into active service, and his commission, that of major, bears this date. He was attached to the 10th Rhode Island and at once joined the regiment, near Tennallytown, at Camp Frieze. At once he began to prepare the members of his command for their duties as soldiers, and they soon discovered in him not only the efficient and persistent drillmaster, but also a friend ever solicitous of their comfort, ever ready to enter into their enjoyments when released from duty. He shared with his men the tedious duties of garrison life until ordered to join the 7th Rhode Island Regiment, then in camp near Providence. Major Babbitt's commission for the 7th bears date

Sept. 1, 1862, the day on which this regiment was mustered into service. With his new command he at once closely identified himself, giving to it all his energy, his former connection with the 10th serving to awaken him to his responsibilities. To the drilling and preparing of his new command for the stern duties before it he gave his most earnest efforts, and if ever a body of men proved themselves worthy of the time thus spent, it was the 7th Rhode Island.

The regiment had scarcely left its camp near Washington for the front before it received its first "baptism of blood" before Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862. So severe was the onset that Col. Zenas R. Bliss soon found himself deprived of all his staff except the Major, ammunition all gone, and his men lying upon the ground protected only by a ridge three feet high. The whole plain in front was one sheet of flame belching forth from an entrenched stone wall whilst a regiment less advanced was firing over his prostrate men. It was then that orders came for one more attempt on this entrenchment in their front. In order to render obedience practicable and thus save the honor of the regiment, it was imperatively necessary that a request be sent to stop the fire from the rear. Upon the Major, now the sole surviving member of the staff, devolved the duty of attempting the perilous mission, exposed to the deadly cross fire of the enemy and friends. From the undertaking of this mission not even the earnest dissuasion of his commanding officer availed to turn him. Starting amidst this rain of bullets, he had taken only a few steps when a ball passed in at his shoulder and out under the other arm. His stalwart frame had made too conspicuous a mark in such a fire from the front and the rear. Age and subsequent exposure proved too much for him, and from what at first was deemed not a serious wound he died at the Mansion House Hospital, in Alexandria, Dec. 23, 1862. His last days were made comfortable by the presence of his wife, his eldest son, Rev. Benjamin B. Babbitt, and his son-in-law, Dr. Luther A. Martin.

Thus passed away, early in the war, one endowed with more than ordinary military qualities. Such, joined as they were to the self-sacrificing spirit of the true patriot, would undoubtedly have made him conspicuous in his future career, had his life been prolonged, as a brave soldier and accomplished officer. We may produce here the following tribute to his memory, which appeared in a Providence daily paper at the time of the notice of his death: "He was amongst the foremost in the fight, and report says that when the enemy's balls were flying thickest and there was danger of wavering on the part of our wearied and almost hopeless men, he set an example of courage and fidelity which was of incalculable benefit to the troops, but which frequently exposed him to a fiercer fire than his position required him to face."

Major Babbitt's remains arrived in his native town Dec. 29, 1862, and the funeral obsequies took place Jan. 1, 1863.

Mrs. Abby E. B. Babbitt survived her husband many years, dying Sept. 1, 1882. From youth she had always been a consistent member of St. Michael's Episcopal Church in Bristol. She was a woman greatly beloved by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance, one who always was doing acts of kindness.

EDWARD SPALDING BABBITT, son of Major Babbitt, born July 20, 1829, in Bristol, married Jan. 4, 1853, Arselia, daughter of Daniel N. and Sarah (Lawless) Morice. They had two children: Arselia Morice, born in 1856, who died in 1860; and Sarah Arselia, born in 1866, who died in 1875.

Mr. Babbitt in boyhood attended private schools in his native town, and then entered Brown University at Providence, where he pursued his studies for two years, 1845-47. From that period dates his active business career. In 1850 he went to Boston and engaged in the iron trade, the firm being Page, Briggs & Babbitt, and continued there until the death of his father. Meantime, however, they had had business relations together, rebuilding and operating a cotton mill in Bristol, R. I., under the name of the Pokanoket Steam Mill Company. Mr. Babbitt came back to Bristol in 1863, and there made his home, although maintaining an office and business relations for many years in Providence. In 1863 he became the manager and executive officer of the City Insurance Company, of Providence, continuing in that capacity until 1880, at which time the company retired from business, dividing to its stockholders more than the par value of its stock. From 1880 Mr. Babbitt conducted a successful insurance agency in Providence.

Having maintained his residence in Bristol Mr. Babbitt was identified with that community in citizenship and the varied private and public duties such implies. During his stay in Boston he was active in the Young Men's Christian Association, and on his return to Bristol, along with others, organized the Y. M. C. A. of that town, which has done and is still doing much successful labor among the young men of that community. From an early age Mr. Babbitt was connected with St. Michael's Episcopal Church at Bristol, and on his removal to Boston he became vestryman of the Church of the Messiah and was delegate to the Diocesan Convention. From 1863 he served as vestryman of St. Michael's Church at Bristol, being the oldest vestryman at the time of his death, and also acted as delegate to the Diocesan Convention.

Both the grandfather and father of Mr. Babbitt were of the Democratic school in their political affiliations, and in this belief was the son and grandson educated, yet he was never so bound to the Democratic party as to feel obliged to vote for its candidate, always claiming the right to cast his ballot for, in his judgment, the most reliable man.

In 1865 Mr. Babbitt was elected a trustee of the Juniper Hill cemetery in Bristol, a relation he ever after sustained to it. He was chosen a member of the school committee of the town in March, 1884, and continued to hold such office until March, 1902, when he declined a re-election. He was one of the officials and took a leading part in the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of Bristol, held in that town in September, 1880. During the Civil war Mr. Babbitt was alive to the wants of those at the front, where he himself no doubt would have been but for the enlistment of his father, which made it incumbent upon the son to care for interests at home, and later, upon the death of the father, who fell at the battle of Fredericksburg, his presence at home became doubly necessary.

Edward S. Babbitt died Sept. 14, 1905, esteemed for his public and private virtues. He was one of the "grand old men" of his native place. His life, which spanned a period of more than three-quarters of a century, was contemporaneous with much of the interesting history of Bristol, and was a part and parcel of its civil and religious growth. He readily espoused all movements for the betterment of his fellow citizens and was often a leader in such movements. He was a devoted son, a loving husband, and a citizen whose life was full of usefulness to the community in which it had been spent.

The Taunton branch of the Babbitts descend from Edward Babbitt, the name then written Bobit. Edward Babbitt was of record in Taunton, Mass., in 1643, at which time he was subject to do military duty. On 7th day of 7th month, 1654, he was married to Sarah, daughter of Miles Farne, of Boston. In 1668 Mr. Babbitt was an owner of land in the New Purchase. His children were: Edward, Sarah, Hannah, Damares, Elkana, Dorcas, Esther, Ruth and Deliverance, all born between 1655 and 1673.

Edward Babbitt, the elder, according to "American Ancestry," was an immigrant from Wales and was killed by the Indians in 1676. Through Nathan Babbitt, son of Edward (2) and grandson of Edward Babbitt the settler, descended a branch of the Babbitt family of Norton, Nathan having settled in that town, married Mary Snellum and had eight children. Lieut. Nathan Babbitt and his son Snellum, both of the Revolution, were of this branch.

William Babbitt, of Taunton, Mass., born there in 1817, descended in the seventh generation from Edward, the settler, through Edward (2), Edward (3) of Dighton, Benajah, John and Peter and Martha (Briggs) Babbitt.

WILLIAM F. KING, a prominent and substantial citizen, residing in the Olneyville section of Providence, is a descendant of a family that is of long standing in Rhode Island. The earlier records of the family being given elsewhere, here is presented only the record of the posterity of William Borden King, brother of the Hon. Samuel Ward King, who served as Governor of Rhode Island from 1840 to 1843.

William Borden King, grandfather of William F., was born March 13, 1782, son of William Borden and Welthian (Walton) King. He resided in Johnston, where he was successfully engaged at farming. The farm he occupied is owned by William F. King and has been in the possession of the family for many generations. Mr. King became a man of means and prominence, and July 1, 1805, was appointed lieutenant of the Second Company of Infantry by Gov. Arthur Fenner. Mr. King died March 27, 1854, and his remains lie in the Pocasset cemetery. He married Martha Smith, who survived him, dying Feb. 1, 1866, in the seventy-eighth year of her age. The children born to them were: James S., a sailor, who was drowned from his vessel July 4, 1837, when he was twenty-six years of age; Amy J., born in December, 1814, who never married, but resided on the home farm, and died there in July, 1904, in her ninetieth year; and John Mawney.

John Mawney King, father of William F., was born March 5, 1822, in Johnston and received his education in the district schools and at the Fruit Hill Seminary. He spent his entire life on the farm where he was born, succeeding his father in the management and ownership of the place. There he died Sept. 7, 1893, and he was buried in Pocasset cemetery. Like his father Mr. King was a prosperous farmer and good business man, and at the time of his death ranked among the most successful men of the town. For some years he conducted a retail milk route in addition to his other farming operations. He was a Democrat in his political views, and served as a member of the town council of Johnston, but declined other offices. He was a member of the Fruit Hill Detective Society.

In 1849 Mr. King was married to Emeline Frances Angell, who was born in October, 1825, in North Providence, daughter of William W. and Elsie (Olney) Angell, a history of whom will be found elsewhere in this work. Mrs. King died in 1851, leaving one son, William F. She was buried in Pocasset cemetery.

William F. King was born June 12, 1851, on the home farm in Johnston, and as his mother died when he was an infant, he was brought up by his Grandmother Angell in North Providence, where he resided until the age of twelve years. He received his education in the public schools of North Providence and Johnston, and in the Mt. Pleasant Academy, under Jenckes Mowry, where he prepared for a course in civil engineering, later taking up that study in the office of S. B. Cushing, of Providence, a widely known civil engineer.

Mr. King was engaged at civil engineering until 1883, when he was elected town clerk of Johnston, devoting his entire time and attention to the duties of his office, which were much more arduous than at the present time, as a portion of the town has since been annexed to the city of Providence. Mr. King was first elected on a citizens' ticket, but afterward he had no opposition and served continuously until June, 1893, when one year later he was elected probate judge. He served in that capacity until the portion of the town in which he resided became a part of the annexed district, and he resigned his office. Since that time Mr. King has not been in active business, devoting his time and attention to the management of his private business and real estate interests. Mr. King is a most competent business man, careful and thoroughly honest, and he has frequently been called upon to settle estates, or to act in various fiduciary capacities, wherein he has shown the same zeal and care as has marked the management of his own affairs.

On April 2, 1882, Mr. King was married to Mary Jane Pike, a native of Providence, daughter of Thomas O. and Phebe Brown (Harris) Pike. One son has been born to them, Irving Angell, Dec. 10, 1889, who is attending the Technical High School. Since 1884 Mr. King has resided at his present home, No. 115 Whittier avenue, but he also has a summer home at Shawomet Beach where he and his wife dispense a most generous hospitality. The family is well known and stands high in the estimation of the community. Mr. King's sterling traits of character have won him the position merited by one representing the highest type of citizenship.
